

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

The Future of the Africo-American.

BISHOP GAINES, one of the greatest of the colored bishops of America, boldly attacks the race question upon a statistical basis, holding that the solution of the race problem is in amalgamation. He says there are over a million and a quarter of mulattoes in the South, and that in a population of eight million blacks there are not more than two millions of pure blood. The following is his language:

"I say it to the shame of my people, that colored girls in the South often prefer to be mothers of white children. The white skin and straight hair are possessions to be admired; and instead of being ashamed of the disgrace of which such marks are the evidence, they are proud of them, and boastfully flaunt them to the world and before the eyes of their own race. The girls with straight hair and light skins, too, are preferred by the colored men to the women of pure African descent."

We have advocated the amalgamation of the races as the only solution of the race question, since 1870. In this present article we will define some of the physiological and pathological obstacles in the path of racial infiltration, and also the scientific processes for their removal, together with some predictions of the future of the African race founded upon the physiological laws of ethnic development, and corroborated by the predictions of ancient prophecy.

Abraham was the father of Ishmael by Hagar, the black handmaid of Sarah. He was the white father of a black son. Many proofs of this fact can be offered—we will furnish but two. The first is from the fact that the descendants of Ishmael and Abraham were a black or dark people, and because of their color they were called Arabs; the word arab being derived from oreb, meaning black. It is because of this that they regard the raven as their sacred bird. The Hebrew word for raven is oreb.

The divine purpose operative through Abraham in producing Ishmael and his posterity, was to exalt a black people into the field of racial progress. It is evident that the raven sent out of the ark was the first product of the Noatic age through Abraham. The raven was the Arab people. The dove sent out the first time was Isaac, returning into the ark. The second time was the Lord returning with the Olive Branch, the Messenger of the Covenant. The third time is the coming baptism, to be manifest in the sons of God.

Thirty-two thousand female Midianites, the descendants of Abraham through Ishmael, the dark Arab people, were at one time taken into the Israelite nation by marriage. It was by this method that the black race became mixed with the Jews, and especially with those tribes carried away into Assyria, the ten tribes whose identity was lost through intermarriage with the Medians, Persians, and Assyrians, resulting in the Germanic family, the very heart of which is the Anglo-Saxon. It will thus be seen, by unmistakable Biblical and secular historical record, that the Anglo-Saxon contains the blood of the ancient Ethiopian, and that this is the law of natural ethnic progression.

Our present article has to do more with the race problem of today as it pertains to the Ethiopian of the United States. Studying this question from its pathological bearings, we are at once confronted with the fact that the amalgamation of the white and black races breeds consumption and other forms of disease, especially in generations remote from the first admixture. This is a paramount factor in the discussion of the longevic and physiological interest involved in this ethnic problem. Through what law, and by virtue of what applied principle can the animal volume, superabundant in the negro, be placed on such an equality with the fading viability of the whites, as to insure viability and longevity in the amalgamated product? The Ethiopian comprises the foundation of a greater race than any white people on the face of the earth.

We predicate this statement upon the fact that the construction of the skull of the Ethiopian shows a greater unity and centralization of life-force than any other race.

While the African race is an ancient one, the quality of his osseous fabric shows a comparative youthfulness which marks him as a race of long duration. The black race is in the infancy of its longevity. Both the animal volume and the beauty and youthfulness of the teeth indicate this. Though an ancient race, it is still in its infancy. Its life will constitute the animal basis for the future development of the greatest race living upon the earth. It is destined to become the ruling power of the world. Let us modify this statement by saying that the amalgamated race of white and black will become the great and ruling power of the future world. By the future world, we mean of course the natural, coming kingdom.

We may now consider the secret of the problem of amalgamation. The old circumcision will constitute one of the prime factors of the future union. In order to insure the attractive influx and filtration of the two races, the animal volume of the African must be reduced to a physiological compatibility. This will be accomplished by causing a break in the union of the system of organic life with that of animal life. By the system of organic life, we mean the system presided over by the sympathetic nerve; by the system of animal life, we mean that system presided over by the cerebro-spinal nerve. They unite in the female at the pubic region. This break will be accomplished through the simple process of female circumcision. It will be instituted by the properly ordained authority as a religious observance, and is to be as rigidly maintained as was the circumcision of the Jews.

In addition to the application of the law of female circumcision, there will be introduced the uniting spark—the Indian. The purpose of this is to provide for the inflow of the Indian spirit, which, because it is more natural than the white, will first descend by influx into the new amalgamation. Such an amalgamation will create and constitute the Adamic man of the second order—the natural Adamic race to populate the world upon the natural basis of human prolification.

While the new race is moving in the progress of its order, the laws of propagation will not be of the uncertain, promiscuous, and beastly character as that of the present time. The laws of prolification will govern the procreation of offspring, these operations being subject to astrological knowledge. The career of every individual will be determined by the determination of the time and character of birth, before conception. In the app ication of bio-astrological law, no conception will occur that is not premeditated and regulated by astrobiological science, the highest principles of stirpiculture. The mere gratification of the passions will not be indulged in; procreation will be reduced to the minimum, and a beautiful race will arise to gladden the world and glorify God.

Heroic Journalistic Achievement.

ROM the profoundest depths of philanthropic hearts, our enthusiasm eulogizes the successful enterprise of the New York Journal in the liberation of Evangelina Cisneros from the butcher's dungeon in Havana. The American nation is not a nation of cowards. Our people have demonstrated to the world that they are not afraid of war. Our representatives do not fear any nation on the face of the earth—such a charge cannot righteously be brought against them. What then is the secret of the opposition of the so called government to the determinate wishes and energetic demands of the people of the United States?

Whose interests are subserved in the perpetuation of a more diabolical exhibition of Spanish brutality in Cuba than the worst features of the Spanish inquisition in the reign of terror, under the instigation of a benighted Catholicism? What are the interests arrayed in cogent influence against the commercial interests of a great and heroic people, to such an extent as to sink into obscurity the commercial claims of seventy millions of free Americans? What is the secret of that all-potential factor that will permit innocent hearts to bleed, thousands of heroic souls to fill the graves of martyrs to as sacred a cause as that to which our Revolutionary Fathers sacrificed their devoted heads, and allow defenceless women and children to be mercilessly butchered by that degenerate offspring of the dark ages, the human butcher. Weyler, and what the secret power whose weight is greater in the balance of civilization's progress than the sympathetic heart and commercial prerogatives of a great nation? It is the greed of the corporate money power, whose influence is greater than that of a people.

The dragon's claw of the great degenerate and terrible Leviathan, that old serpent the devil, which determines the policy of nations, is upon the heart of the world, and the United States treasury is in that claw. What right have we, the people of a great nation, to pit our commercial interest against the interest of the corporate money power, holding us in abject bond slavery? Why should we the people lift our heads against Wall and Lombard Streets?

Let us shrink and cringe before the money god, and yield peaceably to the nation's representatives, while they knuckle to the Spanish obligation to the money lender! Wall and Lombard Streets hold the key to the situation.

Since writing the above, and during the delay of the publication of the weekly Flaming Sword and the inauguration of the Liberal Party in Cuba, there is exhibited by Spain a deceitful tendency at reform,—a trap into which the American administration seems likely to fall.

Champion of the Social Theocracy.

THE FLAMING SWORD starts upon a new career with this issue of the paper. It is the only periodical publication which advocates the Social Theocracy. It is the organ of the only system having for its foundation a positive philosophy, the fundamental premise of which is absolutely demonstrated.

The Flaming Sword has had an existence of eight years, with very few breaks in the regular continuity of its issue, and we are ready to confess to the fact that its successful continuation is due to a persistency of effort never before having fallen to the lot of any other opposition to the fallacies and evils of the modern church and nations. The Sword will be the radical advocate of that Sciento-Religious and Social Revolution which will inevitably unfold into the Kingdom of Righteousness in the earth. There will be no social democracy as a ruling factor of this nation, but there will be a scientific, religious, and social change radical enough to usher in the morn of the Golden Age, in which the golden love of good uses to men will supplant the millionaire's lust for all the productions of wage slavery.

Human liberty, wisely directed, with the equitable distribution of all natural and human productions, will very shortly be substituted for the present monopolistic oppression. It is the resurrection of God in humanity, in which will be fulfilled the angelic declaration: "Peace in earth, good will to men," even to the present monopolist, who will be brought to the acknowledgment of the righteousness of equitable distribution.

There is no hope for the world through any social evolution that has not for its foundation the religious unity of God and man, and the recognition of the truth that the spirit of the Almighty must control the heart of a regenerated race.

Destruction of the Money Power.

THE equitable distribution of wealth upon the basis of a classification of natural and artificial production, with a classified industry, will in the near future take the place of the present system of corporate monopoly and its concomitant wage slavery. The war between capital (so called) and labor will never be adjusted upon any other ground than that of absolute justice. Justice demands that the producer shall own the substance he produces, or that he shall share equitably in the products of his industry.

So called money will be destroyed totally. Remove the stamp from gold and it loses its monetary valuation. It would be cheap gold, just as silver with the stamp removed loses its monetary power. It is the purpose of the power which controls the finances of the world to maintain that control at all hazards; and one of its first determinations is to destroy, by legal and other processes, the future possibility of all labor combinations in the interests of labor. Wage slavery is the only hope of the millionaire, and it is the policy of the money power to perpetuate the wage slavery system through combinations powerful enough to purchase Congress and our state Legislatures.

The financial policy of the United States Government has been shaped by the bankers of the world in their own interests; and the bondage under which the people groan, through the bad financial policies of the two great parties having in charge the interests of the people, is tenfold greater than was the bondage of the Israelites to the Egyptians, and the tyrannical money power is tenfold more brutalinits oppression than that of the Pharaohs. Ours is the antitypical bondage, and the day hastens when an obligation forced upon the masses through the treachery of subtle manipulators of the wealth of the people, will be repudiated. As the Israelites canceled their ignominious, enforced, and unjust obligations, so will the enlightened masses arise in their might and throw off their yoke.

There is nothing so simple as the monetary problem; in fact, it is not a problem requiring solution. Regulate the valuation of products in relation to a classified standard of industry, then let the state provide the means of distribution, and the question is settled.

* * * *

SPAIN has tried the course of brutal and uncivilized warfare to force Cuba to terms. Its brutal policy has utterly failed, and it now resorts to a policy of coaxing and fair promises. This should convince both the United States and Cuba, that Spain confesses to the fact that its war record is a failure, and that its only hope now is to deceive the Cubans into the belief that they may enjoy a lovely government under Spain.

Spain has not changed since the inquisition. The Cubans are aware of this, and they cannot be cajoled either by Spain or the administration at Washington. The Cubans know that they have the sympathy of the American people, but they expect nothing from the so called government of the United States.

Works Greater Than Faith.

BY VICTORIA GRATIA.

WITH the exception of those who are hardened in their greed for the treasures of this world, almost every phase of thought is more or less interested in the general observations of the times. The observations which incline men to believe in a coming revolution, are mainly from two diverse points of view; the one from an extremely religious impulse, the other more from the basis of a socialism devoid of religion. The first or religious phase of thought involves two, perhaps three, distinct lines of expectation, all including the one general idea of the Lord's return to this earth.

The view founded upon the general concept of a social evolution, in its character specifically atheistic, is scarcely worth consideration. Those who hold to it are doomed to disappointment. The religious conception that the Lord will drop down from the physical heavens in the old Jerusalem, will meet a greater disappointment. We will not attempt in a short article, to enter into an elaboration of the various phases of thought regarding this all-important subject, nor to add anything in substance to what has been said a thousand times by our great Teacher; we canonly hope, by adding a word, to express in simpler language a repetition of the greatest demand of Koreshanity.

It is needless for us to reiterate that Koresh and Koreshanity hold the only correct views of the Lord's coming, and that the manifestation will be the result of development in the race, as it is declared: "The earth [the church, humanity] bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

The Holy Spirit, proceeding from the Father and the Son, one in the person of the Lord, communicated the virtues of the Lord himself, the greatest of which was charity, resulting in good works. These fruits, including the very life of the Lord, embracing the immortal flesh, must necessarily result now at the end of the dispensation, from the seed that was sown or planted at the beginning of the age.

The science of charity or works, was not known in the beginning as it is designed to apply now, for then the kingdom of righteousness was confined to the germ of righteousness, the seed of the kingdom. The Lord Christin his personality comprised that seed. The kingdom in its greatest form will unfold from that germ, the firstfruits of the resurrection, into the multiplied manifestation of the sons of God. In them the science of righteousness and righteous works will obtain.

As the seed brings forth the tree and its fruit, so the Lord, the seed, unfolding the Theocratic Socialism, will grow into a kingdom in the earth, constituting it a universal organic unity in which all the principles of economic law will be so thoroughly applied as to inaugurate the great day of rest to the world. This condition can only obtain through the perfecting influence of a divine growth in the human soul and life, completely transforming human character. This must include the transformation of the mortal to an immortal life, having its root in the immortal flesh—even the flesh of the Christ.

The Koreshan System of Science.

BY PROF. U. G. MORROW.

KORESHAN SCIENCE is decidedly original, from the simple fact that it differentiates at every point from other schools of thought. It is distinctive, in that it is integral and complete, rational and true, the only system having for its foundation an absolutely demonstrated premise. It has been promulgated for over a quarter of a century. The first intimation of its character subjected its Founder to the severest criticism and persecution. 1870 marked a peculiar period of the world's history—it was too early for the world to consider the problems of the X-rays, the manufacture of gold, telegraphing without wires, co-operative reform, and for the advocacy of these and other wonderful possibilities he was considered by many to be insane.

During the past twenty-five years the world has received a wonderful impetus in lines of remarkable discoveries and inventions. One by one these marvels have been forced upon the attention of the public. The rapidity with which the world has advanced has been without parallel in the history of the world; during all this time the Koreshan System has been advocated, and during the past eleven years vigorously so, through the publications of the System and the daily press, and thousands of progressive minds have come in contact with expositions of its principles. We have abundant evidence of the influence of the Koreshan System upon modern thought and discovery.

This is distinctively an age of imitation. It has been found easy to seize upon the productions of another. The Americans cannot plead freedom from such a charge, for otherwise, copyright and patent laws would exist on the statute books without purpose. Thousands of cases of infringement have existed, and literary thieving is seen everywhere. The spirit of piracy and plagiarism is subtle and persistent, but palpably and unmistakably manifest in the hundreds of instances of appropriation and perversion, on the part of others, of the truths, expositions and predictions put forth in the Koreshan System.

In 1870 the Founder of Koreshanity discovered the process of the creation of gold from a baser substance, and announced the fact; discovered the principles of Alchemy, the substantiality of force, and of the correlation of matter and energy, and has since persistently taught them; formulated the Cellular Cosmogony, involving the principles of the solar cathode rays penetrating the earth's shell; and originated a system of Social Economy, embracing the principles of co-operation, communism, equitable exchange, scientific colonization, and the abolition of the use of money. Files of the publications of the System years ago, show expositions of the processes of the manufacture of gold, telegraphing without wires, the construction of a railroad around the world, deposits of gold at the magnetic centers, the setting up of the gold standard, solution of the problem of aerial navigation, and other possibilities, and very recent and startling developments and so called discoveries.

The world has been startled by announcements of the manufacture of gold from silver, by Dr. Emmons, within the past year; others are creating gold ore from antimony. Chemists had declared that such a thing was impossible, because their theory forbade it. Chemistry has now been overthrown, and the Koreshan Alchemy demonstrated to be true. The idea of the cathode ray was not original with Crookes nor Ræntgen, but today the discovery is credited to them. Various systems of social reform have developed during the past five years, the promulgators of some of which have, in the past, been identified with the Koreshan movement, while others have read the publications of the System for years. The announcements of Edison and Tesla, that it is possible to telegraph without wires, are received from them without question, and when the news of the work of Marconi is flashed over the world, there is no question that it has been accomplished. Astronomer Newcomb, of Washington, has announced his conviction as to the limitation of the universe—he has done so since his meeting the Founder of Koreshanity, in November, 1896. The world does not question these wonderful accomplishments and conclusions, but endeavors to disregard the discoveries of the Founder of the Koreshan System, and the scientific demonstrations of the earth's concavity.

We are summing up how easy it is for people to believe things put forth through popular channels, and how very difficult it is for proper credit to be given to the world's most advanced Scientist and Discoverer. When, after years and years of promulgation of the principles of Koreshan Science, discovered at a time when the world would not credit such marvels, there are seen developing the plans of Bellamy and Debs, the labor exchange, and the many economic projects, scientific discoveries, and marvelous strides in progress of thought and theories, one is forced to the conclusion that these men of progress have found a royal road to discovery through the work and writings of the Founder of Koreshan Science. Modern advanced thought and discovery are incontestably indebted to the existence of the Koreshan System and its propaganda for the marvels of the age, though the original which they but poorly imitate, is kept in the background for a purpose; there are other things there, that they yet desire to copy!

Be Not Misled By Either!

BY REV. ELEANORE M. CASTLE.

N a letter to the New York World, published in the early part of September, W. J. Bryan defined the position of the bimetallists as contending that the opening of our mints to the free and unlimited coinage of sil. ver at the ratio of 16 to 1, would fix a mint price for silver, just as a mint price is now fixed for gold, and that the demand thus created by law would be sufficient to utilize all the silver presented, and thus the bullion value would be raised to the coinage value. Secretary of the Treasury, Lyman J. Gage, made this statement of Mr. Bryan's the occasion of an interview which was given out for publication a few days after the appearance of Mr. Bryan's letter, and the plutocratic pages crowed in unison over what they call his puncture of the free-silver theory. The Secretary assumes to analyze Mr. Bryan's statement and reveal its sophistry, in order that "the unthinking, and even those not specially qualified to analyze and detect his sophistications," be not confused and misled; that is, be not confused and misled by Mr. Bryan, the Secretary evidently preferring that they be confused and misled by himself. He said:

"In the first place, properly speaking, there is no mint price for either gold or silver. All that the mint does with the man who brings to the mint a certain number of grains of uncoined gold, is to give him in return the same number of grains in coined gold less enough to pay for the metal alloy used by the mint in coining it. All that it could do for silver, at whatever so called ratio, would be to give the men bringing uncoined silver to the mint an equal amount in ounces and grains of coined silver, less the cost of the alloy used by the mint in coining it. In neither case is there any demand thus set up. In the one case the man has his gold returned to him in gold dollars. In the other case, he has his silver returned to him in silver dollars.

"Up to this point nothing in the shape of a demand such as Bryan talks about has appeared. Why, then, does he sophisticate about the demand thus created by law, when there is no demand thus created by law? If there is a demand for either gold or silver dollars, it must be outside of the mint, in the commercial world. This commercial demand would express itself in the ratio or price at which things would be offered in exchange for one, as compared with the other. Take the legal-tender quality away from both, and neither Mr. Bryan nor any of his intelligent followers would claim that silver in the form of dollars would bring in exchange for things any substantially higher price than the bullion would bring before being coined."

The demand of the bimetallists as stated by Mr. Bryan is sufficiently frank—that the government by means of its credit, which credit is based upon its material wealth, should by affixing its stamp to silver give silver a value as a monetary commodity above and beyond what it possesses as a commercial commodity, which value would primarily be determined by its use in the arts and manufactures, just as the value of iron, copper, and other metals, is determined, and as the value of gold would be determined if deprived of its valuation as money. This is an unrighteous demand on the part of the bimetallists, but unrighteous for a reason which the monometallists never urge against it, for to do so would at once reveal the unrighteousness of their own contention for a single standard.

If the government stamp on coin means anything, it means that the government will maintain that equivalent be furnished in exchange for the coin to the amount of value stated on the coin. In the last analysis, the government stamp is the government's promise to pay, backed by the national credit based on the nation's resources. If there is a demand in the commercial world for these promises of the government, as a means of exchange, and the government refuses to stamp its promise on other than a certain material, or something which may be used in place of this material as proxy for it, (this last, as under a gold standard would be the case with paper-silver money, being in no sense an additional promise based on the nation's resources, but merely a duplicate of the real promise stamped on gold, and which may be used as the representative, or agent, of the genuine promise, for the sake of convenience, or because the real promise is too valuable to be trusted in circulation,) then however great the wealth and resources of the nation, it can issue only as many promises as it can find a sufficiency of material on which to stamp these promises, and at once there is created a demand for this material.

It is beyond the bounds of reason that anyone should honestly contend that gold in itself is valuable to the degree at which it is today estimated, because of its use in supplying human demands, or indeed for any other reason than because of its power of purchase of the necessaries of existence; which power is conferred upon it by the nations of the world through their government stamps, backed by the resources of the nations in those things which do constitute real wealth. The real value of gold is something quite apart from its present valuation. Therefore, to say that the mint is conducted merely for the purpose of stamping on gold the real value of the metal in the coin, that value being determined by the law of demand, which law itself can naturally be determined only by human needs, is to make an utterly false statement. Yet, from Mr. Gage's words, it would appear that this is the position he takes.

WHILE we lavish our epideictics upon the heroic undertaking of the New York Journal, which we cannot over-do no matter how eloquent our panegyric, in praise of the Journal's achievement, we cannot restrain our ardor in favor of the men who undertook for the Journal what the world would have regarded as a forlorn hope. Those men are heroes, and their names will resound in the pages of journalism and in history, when Cuba shall record the heroic purposes and accomplishments of those who contributed to her liberty; when she shall recount her achievements, and brutal Spain shall have lost her nationality!

He says, "Take the legal-tender quality away from both [gold and silver], and neither Mr. Bryan nor any of his intelligent followers would claim that silver in the form of dollars would bring in exchange for things any substantially higher price than the bullion would bring before being coined." If this were done, then the gold bullion, which today is worth approximately what the gold coin is worth, would at once decrease incalculably in value. But just so long as the governments of the world stand ready to bestow the legal-tender quality on all the gold presented for that purpose, an unnatural demand is created by law for gold, and this alone keeps up the bullion price of gold. Secretary Gage makes an unwise bluff in suggesting the possibility of gold being deprived of its legal-tender quality. He may be the means of starting many who have not yet considered such a possibility, to thinking on the subject along this line; and once the people get their eyes open in this respect, his occupation both as secretary and banker vanishes. But Mr. Bryan is not in a position to call him, for it is only the fact that gold occupies its present usurped position which gives his own demand Why should men exchange a shadow of excuse. the energies of their being for either gold or silver which they do not need, instead of directly for food and clothes and fuel and books and other things which they do need?

However, just so long as it is to the interest of those who control the commercial world to arbitrarily fix a high price for gold, (which is done by placing it in a false position as a purchasing power,) and the government is the agent of this control, and conducts mints for the purpose of binding this power, then to say that there is a mint price for gold implies all the rest. And Mr. Gage's statement—"properly speaking, there is no mint price for either gold or silver"—is the artful dodge of a lawyer, who, when the weakness of his position is disclosed, would by a technicality make it appear that he is not there, in order that his opponent may be disconcerted, and, if possible, induced to expend his force where it may do less damage.

OUR country boasts of the most advanced Christian civilization, but there is not so great a farce on the face of the earth today, as the so called Christianity of America. The Lord Jesus taught the doctrine of the community of interests. If this principle is not applicable to our present needs and time; if this part of his gospel of peace and good will to men is to be expunged by men in as well as out of the church, whose palms itch for the personal accumulation of filthy lucre, then why not declare the whole of his gospel obsolete and impracticable for this world and age, or, for that matter, any other?

An Appeal to the True Nobility of Chicago.

BY REV. BERTHA S. BOOMER.

FOR ten years the disciples of Koresh have been subjected to public persecutions of most injurious character. Our enemies, with tongue and pen, have defamed our reputation for purity of life and righteous intent. Very little effort has been made thus far to answer the charges brought against the members of the Koreshan Unity. They are personally restful in knowing that the truth is mighty and will prevail. Steadfast loyalty to what is known to be true must bring a glorious vindication, when it is triumphant in the lives of multitudes.

Every citizenship has its true nobility. The favor now asked of that saving element of society, is an unprejudiced public hearing. The time is fast approaching for the universal spirit of inquiry to be met with authoritative declarations which must be the final answers of an absolute science to the queries of all who honestly desire to know the truth, that they may apply it to life.

On the Arch of the White City's noble peristyle, which so delighted the eyes of all nations, was this never-to-be-forgotten inscription: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." The disciples of Koresh know that this promise is being fulfilled to them. They know also that, in the order of law which makes manifest the choice of its own Almightiness, and from the standpoint of mortal observation, they are the weak things, and the base things, and the things that are naught, chosen to bring to naught the things that are, by the faithful declaration of the scientific truths upon which the Koreshan System is founded. These truths are being given to the world in due season, and will continue to be given by every means, natural and supernatural, evolved and involved from the life of the Lord Jesus, the Jehovah and Seed of Deity.

This world shall know the truth, and the truth shall make free every man saved by the love of it. The Koreshan System embraces truth in its every relation to every phase of life and death, immortality and incorruptibility. Its foundation premise is so absolutely scientific that it can be made self-evident to the most material mind; this foundation premise has been made manifest from a mechanically adjusted pivot perpendicular to the surface of the habitable earth, to which is related a mechanically extended air line at right angles to it. On the testimony of the facts revealed by such a line, extended and tested by every known device, the truth of the Koreshan System will forever stand.

Koreshans would urge the thinking public to withhold ridicule and condemnation, and aid in making manifest the essential truth concerning the form and functions of the physical universe. The money power is in dominance, and the demonstration necessary to satisfy critical investigators cannot be made without a liberal outlay of effort and money during existing conditions. Nothing could bring more honor and glory to Chicago in the records of the near future, than the act of befriending the scientific Teacher whom the world today ignores. The Lord Jesus embodied the philosophy of this truth in his life. This life was planted as spirit entity in the humanity prepared by the evolution of the Jewish age and prehistoric ages, to receive it. It was planted in them that the harvest of the Christian age might be its science, and a humanity ripened for its application to life in every domain. The light of true science is the glory of God, in which he is revealed to man as man, enlightened, perfected, Deified.

Chicago is to be the center of the world's secular commerce for thousands of years of the Golden Age soon to dawn in the light of Koreshanity. To become this she must be transformed by the power of a love for the divine truth concerning commerce and its true uses to humanity. She must become actuated by a motive the opposite of the greed of gain necessarily the dominating passion as long as our present financial system exists in power. Chicago, the new and greater Chicago, must be animated by the love of equitable distribution according to human needs. The fruits of national industry are for the well-being of the industrious. Chicago must become the center of the establishment of Equitable Exchanges of the products of labor, value for value, rated proportionably to the quality and degree of labor. To be educated in the truths that pertain to the creation of the greater Chicago, attention must be given to the foundation truths which must become her origin, and to their involved promises of a magnificence not entertained in any other system of thought.

The lovers of human redemption from all the degradations of sin, are therefore lovingly urged by the disciples of Koresh to test the foundation premise of the Koreshan System. Having learned the absolute truth of that, one must say: None but an instrument of divine truth could lay so true a foundation for a scientific belief that the Almighty is man-the perfected expression or Word of inherent Deity.

The law of such attainment is universal law, whose science cannot be obtained save from the one Scientist who can demonstrate his knowledge of the form and function of the universe.

It is surely due to the Teacher presenting such a system, that his scientific claims be tested by the crucial method which the premise itself determines. In the promulgation of the Koreshan Cosmogony, the attention of the world will be called to the fact that the truth concerning the form and function of the universe is known, the principles of the perfect system discovered, and the premise of that system demonstrated.

It is the selfish impulse that inclines men to compete with one another.

Battle Hymn of the White Horse Army.

BY REV. ELEANORE M. CASTLE. .

"And I Saw, and Behold a White Horse: and He that Sat on Him had a Bow; and a Crown was given Unto Him: and He went forth Conquering, and to Conquer."

> O man, arise! no longer languish Beneath the curse you may remove! Look up, and see! beyond earth's anguish, God's promised sign in heaven above!

> > Full long have sin and sorrow schooled us; Full long grim Death has urged his claim, While we have worn the robes of shame, And Hate, and Self, and Hell have ruled us, Arise! throw off the curse!

The heavens will lend us force!
Look up! Look up!
God sends His Sign!
The Rider on the Horse!

From Old the prophet tongues declare it— That in this day of sorest need, If only man himself will dare it, The hosts of heaven will intercede!

Then shall we bow to Death despairing? Shall coward fear still hold us slave To that fell power that feeds the grave—Because we shrink from noble daring?

Today at last we read the meaning Of words that tell what man can do! At last the power of Death is waning: O grave, where is thy triumph now?

For man today, through brave endeavor, May spurn the power the ages feared! Earth cried to God, and God has heard, And bonds of hell now bids us sever.

The Mystery of Loyal Discipleship.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

WHAT profound pathos breathes from the simple words of the gospel narrative! The heart melts and tears well from the eyes at the thought of Him, the destined object of adoration to coming ages, the future centre of devotion to an admiring world, alone and deserted in the hour of his utmost need.

"They all forsook him and fled." No, surely not all; of the little band of disciples whom the Master himself chose, whom he loved and admitted to closest fellowship, surely some were faithful to the last. There was John the well-beloved, with his deep spiritual nature and philosophic intellect; there was Peter, noble, impulsive, affectionate, who above all others had vowed to be true, and James, earnest and zealous,—these three who stood nearest to the Lord, could they forsake him in the hands of his enemies? Alas! yes, for thus it is written; not a single exception relieves this sad portrayal of the weakness of human nature. Is it not strange that, when to the clear eyes of divine intuition the hearts of men were as an open book. Jesus did not choose men of very different calibre who would have followed him fearlessly into the presence chamber of Pilate?

There was, indeed, much excuse for them. Jesus at that time was apparently only a man among men; he had accomplished nothing beyond working a few miracles which might be explained on some other principle than his divinity; he had signally failed to inaugurate any popular and successful movement; in the eyes of the world he was a dangerous and seditious fellow; how could the disciples feel sure that after all, he might not turn out an impostor?

Well, suppose he had; suppose Jesus of Nazareth to figure in history only as an exposed and convicted anarchist. There is something in the human heart that admires loyalty and cries out that these men ought to have followed their leader to the death. He had made certain predictions, very wild and extravagant, it is true, but were they not bound to stand firm until the issue proved whether such predictions were verified? Although, contrary to human experience, history records that Jesus did rise again after three days, just as he had foretold.

So it cannot be denied that the disciples were weak in the hour of trial; but some one has said that man's greatest glory is not in never falling, but in rising every time he falls. In the light of subsequent history, it is plain that his choice of followers which might at first thought seem an error of judgment on the part of Jesus, was a forcible illustration of the fact that "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty." These same men who for sook him and fled were the only ones in the world then, sufficiently receptive to the new gospel to be its channel of communication to the world. No doubt they had great faults, but Jesus took them as they were; he saw what the world could not see,—what they could not see in each other,—wonderful possibilities of attainment when the Spirit of Truth should thrill them. "As the sculptor looks at the stone and sees the angel in it, so the soul that is filled with divinity, looks at humantiy and sees in it the divine."

It is easy in historical retrospect to trace the line of conduct demanded by loyalty and truth—not so easy in real life to cling to a despised and persecuted cause. Would it be possible, in the face of the warning contained in this familiar narrative, for the same incident to repeat itself today, with the same sad record: "they all forsook him and fled"?

"How blest is he to whom is given The instinct that can tell That God is on the field When he is most invisible."

Christian Socialism is Communism.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, PH. D.

The socialism Jesus Christ dug from the rock of justice has been long buried beneath Christian hypocrisy and human greed, and the day has at last come for its resurrection. The ashes of political corruption is now seriously agitated to the very bottom, and the phænix will come forth waving the flag of red—the emblem of brotherly love.—"Man without a Soul," in Social Democrat.

THAT the "man without a soul" should so far get his eyes open as to see and admit that Christ struck out a new political economy that is about to supplant and succeed the present hell-born competitive system, is an indication of progress. In his soulless (that is, lifeless) condition it is not wonderful he should not see that it was not socialism but communism which Jesus unearthed from the debris of Judaism. When he comes again according to his promise, he will rescue communism from the thraldom of so called Christian selfishness and greed, and establish it as the beneficent law of human activity for the golden age, upon which suffering humanity will soon enter.

No more wonderful is it that men without a soullife(and this includes all socialists, as well as other people of the present) should not understand what the color red symbolizes. "The life of all flesh is the blood thereof," said Jesus, and the color of blood is red. The color red then, is the emblem, not of brotherly love, but of the new life from above, that men must have in them before real brotherly love will be possible to them. That the phonix, symbol of life from the dead—arising in those who received the seed of the new and higher life in the beginning of the age—will destroy the old man, the old life, with its deeds of corruption, and in the outer world, the power to oppress and rob humanity, is well known The socialism of the present, talks to all Koreshans. much of the great example and life of Jesus, but it makes no effort, has no real purpose to follow that example and live that life, without which, talk amounts to little or nothing.

In the Editorial Perspective.

POR twenty-seven years the Founder of the Koreshan System has taught a theory of optics and physics which is the antithesis of the theories of modern science. It has long been a question as to how we perceive through the sense of visionwhat are the factors that enable us to see objects with their various shapes, colors, and hues? It has been admitted time and again that the usual theory of the motion or vibration of ether is not satisfactory. In 1870 Koresh made the discovery of the substantiality of energy, and that the scientific factor of visual perception is the generation and radiation of an attenuated nerve force from the eye. This reverses the usual theory; and now experiments prove the emanation from the eye, of a substance sufficient to make impressions upon a camera plate. This is in direct substantiation of the Koreshan science of optics. An Englishman has succeeded in looking an image of a coin onto a negative, first intently looking at the coin for a full minute, then steadily, in a room from which sunlight was excluded, for forty-three minutes directing the attention to a negative plate. After development of the negative he found a dim outline of the coin. The experiment was repeated with a postage stamp; for twenty minutes he steadily gazed at the plate—he actually looked a picture of the stamp upon the negative. This plate was reproduced in the London Amateur Photographer, a testimony of the fact that the visual substance generated in the cortical cells of the brain in response to excitement of the expanded optic nerve (the retinal coat) by the light from the object, at once reproduced that object, full size, by alchemic action of the substance upon the sensitive film of the photographic plate.

Co-operation is a gigantic success in the hands of controlling monopoly. The trusts have learned that centralization is a potent factor in amassing wealth—they are now in position to absorb all the lesser concerns, control labor and prices, and utilize every labor-saving invention for their own interests, so that they may get rich cheaper. The facts of the unparalleled success of the trusts are evidences of what the wealth producers could do for themselves if once they could obtain the power! What the oppressed of the world need, is to determine their energies in the proper direction. A pivot of action must first be determined and located, and from thence gather the impetus necessary to overcome the oppression.

Modern chemistry does not admit of the conclusion that there is any real life in the universe, for it teaches that light, heat, color, sensation, force, combustion, thought, vision, and phenomena are really nothing but vibration—mere modes of motion, not substance of any kind, in any degree or quality. Vibration of what, then? Atoms, or perchance, rings of ether; that's all there is, just ether—the great ether god; it is supposed to constitute the power, energy, motion, sensation, and all other qualities, functions, and phenomena of all existence everywhere.

Although reared in wealth and luxury, the twin sons of the late Pullman are absolutely worthless, so much so that in his will the car magnate expressed his disappointment, and acknowledged them utterly unfit for business. He left them a yearly bounty, but willed them neither property nor principal. This is an illustration of the fact that if the world, without change of character, were placed in the enjoyment of luxury, it would result in positive injury. Modern social reform knows how to change neither the environment nor the character of humanity.

Effect is the result of cause. The various forms of government in the world today resided in the original empire in the glory of the past, before the fall of man. The new universal kingdom of righteousness must embrace the principles and laws of the unity of humanity, governing all peoples, not according to one standard, nor upon the basis of equality, but according to the various planes of progression of the several subdivisions of the human race.

The micromotoscope is an invention with the kinetoscope effect, for the photographing of the blood in circulation and the corpuscles in transformation, as well as other activities of cellular life. With this instrument scientists will endeavor to "study the character of disease." They will spend thousands of dollars and years of time at such work, but not a single cent nor a moment's time will they spend in the investigation of Koreshan Science, which solves the very things they pretend to desire to know.

The mills of the gods of the modern criminal courts grind exceedingly slow—especially in the late trial of Leutgert on the charge of wife murder. After the expenditure of nearly $20,000 for lawyers' jangle and war of scientific experts, the case is undecided, and must go through the process of another trial. Justice was only looking on from a distance—she is not present in any of the modern court rooms.

If Jesus taught the principles of communism and the doctrines of a Theocratic Kingdom, what relation exists between modern republicanism and the divine science of government, or between the life of modern politicians and the life of the Theocratic head of humanity? Absolutely none. The hope of the world is not through republicanism nor social democracy.

The worst condition the world can get into is individualism, the legitimate fruit of competism, when every one concludes that he must live for himself alone—that he is able to take care of himself. The commercial and religious world is full of the idea. It is opposed to organic unity; it is a state of chaos, it is anarchy.

The latest in the field of therapeutics is D'Unger's electromusic cure—a treatment of the nerve centers through the sense of hearing by the music, and through the sense of feeling by electricity, the two sensations being produced in unison.

A socialist organ advises everybody to "strike at the ballot box." We think it needs striking at. But strike deeper—the ax is laid at the root of evil, and the blow will be effective, and it will not be by striking by the ballot box nor at it.

The world today pretends to believe in Moses, but disregards the principles of his Theocratic system of government. Koreshanity promulgates the truth of the Mosaic Theocracy and the principles of the Communism of Jesus.

We see a good deal written about alchemy in astrological and metaphysical publications. We would like to have any one of such journals point out a single fundamental principle of the science of alchemy or law of transmutation.

The liberal Presbyterian Princeton College is said to be running a saloon for its students. We presume this belongs to the preparatory course; the students graduate in "higher criticism" and football.

It is better to live under the protection of organized capital than under the despotic spirit of labor unionism. Neither power will be found in the coming Imperio-Regal Theocracy.

If the people are in ignorance of the principles of government and social economy, how can they govern themselves, and what would be the benefit of "direct legislation"?

(1) How are comets produced? (2) What causes the dark side of the sun? What is the cause of meteors?—O. W.

(1) Comets are produced by the rays of the sun refracting through fragments of belts of crystallic energies, producing an effect similar to an elongated focal point of lens refractions. These fragments move in spirals and soon plunge into the sun. (2) The sun is the impressed point of the universe; the surface of the earth is half light and half dark, and so is the central impression. Darkness is the reflex of light; the dark side of the sun is produced by the combustion there, as well as the light side. (3) Meteors are rapid materializations of metallic and ferruginous substances or energies descending from the sun.

Is it not the circular motion of the earth on its axis that holds the seas in balance as a grindstone will hold water as long as it turns around? Your scientists must hunt some other cause for their instrument running into the water, than the earth's concavity.—A. J.

The earth has no circular or rotary motion, as you suggest. Put water on a wheel and turn it rapidly, and see the water fly off quickly! We have proved the earth's concave form, and cannot afford to trump up an hypothesis concerning an absolute fact; it would be like shutting the eyes and endeavoring to see. Study the question further.

H. P., Clayton, Ill.—What have you been reading and mistaking for Koreshanity? We do not advocate that the universe is coming to an end, but that it is eternal. You do not know what are our principles; this we judge by your objections to the religion and astronomy of the Koreshan System. The principles of organic unity in social economy cannot be understood without an understanding of the same laws in the physical universe and in the domains of divine activity. We are not promulgating a system adapted to human caprice or preconceived opinions, but a system that is true.

Mrs. V. T., Pittsburg, Pa.—Thanks for clippings from the Dispatch. We have seen the accounts of the great geodetic project before, and understand its purpose. Measurements of the earth's surface area or lines bounding areas, will never determine whether the earth is convex or concave. Don't you know that the same surface area would be contained within a spherical triangle of a given dimension upon a concave as upon a convex earth 8,000 milesin diametr?

Mrs. O. T., New York—Clipping from the N. Y. Sun duly received; had seen it before—see answer to Mrs. V. T., Pittsburg. When the universe becomes perfect it will be perfectly spherical; now it is prolate, with the southern hemisphere larger than the northern.

I am in thankful receipt of your journal. I am earnestly striving to understand the Koreshan Cosmozony. Please send me your small pamphlets on the subject, that I may be able to give a fair expose to the readers of Trie Ord.—A. Sabro, Christiana, Norway.

I will renew my subscription so as to get the weekly. I cannot afford to miss the paper; it does me so much good. It is a light upon my path to life. I always look forward to its coming with great pleasure.

Please accept my sincere thanks for the September and October issues of your exceedingly valuable and interesting journal. I wish you great success. I shall be glad to receive it weekly.

FLAMING SWORD and circular received; also your cheering letter. Facts are stubborn things; scientists must yield to the Concave Theory when they witness such practical demonstrations.

I am very much interested in your publication; many things I do not fairly com-prehend, but as a whole it commends itself to me. I would not do without it for double its cost.

I send my new subscription to the weekly. We think it is a good idea to publish it weekly. The last issue was fine, and will make the orthodox people squirm.

Please send the paper hereafter as a weekly, instead of the monthly. As soon as it is published I want your book on As-

Thoughts From the Reform Press.

A Lesson From The King Of Siam.

Though tolerant of Christianity, he has a keen eye to the hypocrisy of some of its professors. During one of his visits abroad he stayed for some time in Singapore. While there, an English friend asked him if he would like to see an English church service. The king replied that he would be pleased to, and with the intention of visiting the cathedral he set out in company with the gentleman. On arriving in the cathedral grounds, he found a number of Chinese coolies sitting outside in the broiling sun, pulling the huge punkahs to keep the worshipers cool. He stopped abruptly, and then turning to his guide, remarked: "If you Christians can't worship your God without keeping a number of heathen toiling in the sun, I have seen enough of your church service outside the walls." It seems to us that Christians have as much to learn from such "heathen" as King Chulalongkorn of Siam .- New Age.

Kitchen Run By The City.

A huge kitchen and restaurant, owned and operated by the municipality of Grenoble, France, have been in successful operation for nearly fifty years. The city supplies meals to its customers at their homes or in its restaurant. All of the provisions served are of the best, and the service is excellent. The dining rooms are of several grades, so as to suit the size of every purse. For three cents a man may get bread and soup, or for twelve cents he may procure a full-course dinner. Pure wines are served at eight cents a quart. The city does not make any financial profit from the restaurant, although it serves 15,000 meals a day, for the charges are based upon actual expense, with a slight amount for cost of utensils and repairs of the building .- New Time.

The competitive system means a struggle as to who can secure most profits. All wealth is produced by labor applied to land. The wage system is bad in theory and in practice, and means that labor gets just as little of its products as it can be induced or forced to accept. As labor has to support the whole superstructure of society, it is clear that enormous profits are filched from it, the wages paid bearing but a small proportion to the value of the product.—The Worker, Sydney, Australia.

This work in the form of a story, is having a wide circulation. It presents a vivid picture of the world under the present form of government, and contrasts it with the condition of things after the election of President John Smith, the Nationalist. It is written from the standpoint of a supposed condition of society in 1920, after the peaceful revolution is over. It is along the usual line of socialistic reform through the ballot box, containing the elements of the Social Democ-

Taxation Abolished, by J. O. Murray, Boise, Idaho. Price 25c.

This is a late work on reform, advocating a plan of relief of business and labor. It confesses that the plan would not interfere with existing institutions. but that it would abolish taxation, usury, and crime, and increase the happiness of home and the usefulness of public schools. Sociologic students who are collecting a variety of schemes for reform might add this work to their library.

* * Godey's for November.

Godey's Magazine for November is an Autumn Fiction number. The leading tale in this unique issue, is a bright, vigorously-told Thanksgiving Day story, "The Yielding of Hezekiah Craddock," by Laura S. Porter, superbly illustrated by Jessie S. Willson. Among the other strong and charming stories of this number are the following: "Ælfthryth," an historic tale of King Edgar's theft of his favorite's wife, by Thomas Swift; "The Triumph of the Poor Relation," by Charles Edward Barnes; "Off the Horn," a tale of the South Arctic, by T. Jenkins Hains; 'When the Prunes Came In,' a California tale full of pathos, and a droll skit by Tom Hall, the popular humorist. Mrs. Latas's serial, "The Temptation of David," concludes in this number.

There are several important articles of general interest; among these, "Centennial of The American Navy," by James M. Whiton, is prominent, and deals with the history of our nation's first great warships, pictures of which are given with the text. John R. Musick concludes his interesting series on the Hawaiian Islands and their people. The literary contributions of this number are a critical review of the works of George du Maurier, and an article on the work of a new "Poet of the Civil War." The Editor contributes a terse history of the origin and development of "Our National Thanksgiving Day," based upon the best authorities.

THE FLAMING SWORD FOR THE COMING YEAR.

SUMMARY OF FUTURE PROGRESS.

THE MOST ADVANCED, ORIGINAL, AND DISTINCTIVE SCIENTIFIC JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

At the Head in Claim and Fact.

THE FLAMING SWORD enters upon a new career, after eight years' steady progress and persistent aggressiveness against all the evils and fallacies of modern times. The period of time it has been in existence is sufficient to establish its character, and its success during this time amid all kinds of persecution is a guaranty of its future progress. The demands of every time are always met by those means best adapted to accomplish the desired result. The necessities of the present hour demand the vigorous promulgation of the principles of scientific reformation; and in the claim that THE FLAMING SWORD is the journal that stands in advance in both claim and fact, we are prepared to compare points in proof of superiority. In new dress and new make-up, it visits its friends weekly, with a brighter face and with greater power and influence than ever before.

Under the Auspices of the Founder of the Universal System.

THE FLAMING SWORD is the only journal in the world possessing the distinction of being published under the auspices of the Founder of a Universal System. The founders of all other so called universal systems of religion and of science lived centuries ago, and their causes are now left to be promulgated according to the misconceptions of an apostate following. The strength of THE FLAMING SWORD is in relation to the Founder of the Koreshan Religio-Science. The writings of Koresh appear in our pages as the first uncredited articles. They constitute the vigor of The SWORD, and determine its weight and tone; we claim for these articles that they are superior editorials, and decidedly above criticism. A new and interesting feature for the coming year will be the contributions by VICTORIA GRATIA, Pre-Eminent of the Koreshan Unity. One of her excellent articles appears in this issue

The Editorial Staff and Corps of Contributors,

Under the editorial management of Prof. U. G. Morrow, Editor-in-chief, and Evelyn Bubbett, Associate Manager, consists of a number of excellent writers educated in the principles of Koreshan Science. Our readers are already familiar with the writings and work of Prof.

Morrow in the Astronomical and Geodetic field, and will appreciate his articles, appearing with credit in the department of contributions to The Sword, and as the uncredited paragraphs in the Editorial, Question, News, Review, and other departments. The long experience, faithfulness, and efficiency in eight years' management of The Sword, on the part of the Associate Manager, is an additional guaranty that the pages of The Flaming Sword will be filled with only the best efforts of the editorial representatives of the Koreshan Cult.

Personnel of the Contributing Staff.

Among the Corps of Contributing Editors may be especially mentioned Rev. E. M. Castle, of the Koreshan University System, whose very excellent articles on religious, educational, and other lines are especially forceful and instructive: Prof. O. F. L'Amoreaux, Ph. D., with his bold strokes at the fallacies and corruptions of the religious and political world; Rev. Bertha S. Boomer, President of the Society Arch-Triumphant, whose appeals to the honest truth seeker possess a peculiar interest and influence in our propaganda; Lucie Page Borden, who contributes articles especially desirable because of their extraordinary literary merit. Our readers are always pleased with the apt and caustic criticisms of modern theories and institutions, by Amanda T. Potter, with the Pungent Paragraphs of John S. Sargent, and with the treatment of general topics by Mary Everts Daniels.

The Great Luminary of Religio-Scientific and Reform Journalism.

That is what THE FLAMING SWORD is, and we propose to make it brighter. It will deal heavier and more effective blows against all modern shams, hypocrisies, evils, and fallacies; it has always been the fearless champion of the rights of the oppressed—woman in her bondage, and the laboring man under the weight of capitalism. It is foremost on all lines of science, religion, and reform—astronomy, alchemy, geology natural physics and universal phenomena, the problem of human progression and destiny, the science of life and creation, theology, the science of history, the social problem, the coming revolution, the money question, the science of government, and all kindred subjects.

Our Field Is the World!

THE FLAMING SWORD should be studied by every truth seeker, because its scope embraces a larger field than any other journal. It is devoted to the promulgation of Universology, and this necessarily involves the consideration of all subjects under the sun. There is no other journal devoted to a universal system of thought, but some to reform, some to science, others to religion—and all fallacies, too. THE FLAMING SWORD presents the principles of consummation, and involves the thought of the times—the ne plus ultra of science.

The Social Theocracy the Only Hope of the World.

THE FLAMING SWORD alone, of all the religious and reform journals of the world, advocates the Social Theocratic System. We claim and demonstrate that it is in accordance with natural law, and has no part with the artificial and arbitrary socialism of Bellamy, Debs, and others. The Koreshan Social Theocracy involves the principles of the Primitive Christianity-nothing short of this will satisfy the actual needs of the world. Progressive minds interested in reform should not allow this genuine reform movement to march right into success without proving their interest by investigation and comprehension of its principles.

Koreshan Science has Been Demonstrated

By the most crucial tests—the premise upon which the entire System is constructed, is now proven to be true. We are not on the defensive—our work is aggressive, and here to stay. We have demonstrated that we are right, and we move forward under the force of proof and argument unparalleled in the history of the world!

Now Your Part Is to Investigate Our Claims,

And this you can do through the study of the matter published in The Flam-ING SWORD. We shall greatly improve the publication, and mail it weekly—there is no other scientific weekly published at the rate of $1.00 per annum. Education in the Koreshan System is worth thousands!

The Science of Immortal Life.

MMORTAL LIFE, the resurrection of the dead, or the final reincarnation of the sons of God, is a consummation to be fulfilled through the apprehension and application of the laws of immortality. That the acquisition of immortal life is a question of scientific discovery and application, has been left to the honor of Koreshan investigation and achievement. with any degree of common sense can doubt the fact of present human mortality. Men are either dead in Christ or dead out of Christ. To be made alive in Christ, remains to the possibility of the attainment of incorruption through the transformation of the mortal to the immortal flesh. This that is mortal must be transformed to that which is immortal. This is gospel, and nothing which contradicts it belongs to the gospel of the Lord Christ.

One of the essential factors of immortal life, is the grouping of the people of God. "Gather thyself in troops, O Daughter of troops," is one of the injunctions of life, and pertains to the law of aggregation into those communistic associations of fellowship in which the golden candlestick, filled with the golden oil, may yield its heat and light of life and science to the glory of God and the perfection of the race. The prime object for which The Flaming Sword is wielded, is the development of the Theocratic Kingdom, the formation of the groups which shall comprise the future church and kingdom to be established in earth. This must essentially involve the reduction of labor to the science of industry and economy, made perpetual by the unity of communistic bodies.

It will be argued that all effort toward the development and maintenance of communistic groups have proved futile, and therefore that all future attempts will be equally so. It might with equal force be declared that because the first attempt to lay the Atlantic cable was a failure, that all future attempts would also fail. The formation of communistic societies has not been a failure. The celibate communism of the past hundred years bears the same relation to the coming fruit, that the male blossom on the pumpkin vine bears to the female blossom which matures the pumpkin. The receding communism of the past has generated the spirit which vitalizes the new social order.

Our experience for the last eight years in the effort to organize a community of religious and social union furnishes the greatest encouragement, for it has shown that there are those in the world who will endure persecution and privation for the expectation of the kingdom of righteousness. We are perfectly sanguine of final triumph in the inauguration of the Theocracy. We shall push forward this one of the central and fundamental principles of the union for life, with all the energy we are master of, despite the efforts within and without, to preclude the possibility of a successful issue.

We are gaining ground everywhere. Our members are increasing. Our efforts in Chicago thrive under persecution, for in the very heart of this great city, given over to the money power, monopoly, and the degradation of the wage slave, we more than hold our own. The effort made by the press to drive us out of Chicago, has given our cause an impetus it would not have received had not notoriety been given us by the whited sepulchres who have vilified us. Let our people take heart, for our cause is the cause of God, and nothing can thwart the divine purpose in the birth of Koreshanity.

Labor Unions and Moneyed Corporations are Anti-American.

WE are about entering upon the hour of desolation. It is not our province to sympathize with either party to the great coming struggle. The wage slavery system, which the bondholder hopes to perpetuate, is fostered as much by the slave of wages as by the capitalist slave-driver.

We will not attempt to define processes through which catastrophe may be averted, for there is no escape from the impending social cataclysm. The causes which conspire to the breaking up of the fountains of the great deep may be specified, not for the purpose of diverting the operations of the natural laws of progress, but for the education of the generations to be benefited by the prescient and premonitory record of signals which may be read by those who run.

The struggle for the financial supremacy of the world by the commercial vultures, and the struggle for bread by a rapidly increasing class, multiplied through the corporate and rapacious craving for redundant accumulations, have but one possible culmination. We do not advocate a terrible conflict between the bondsmen and their slaves, but we predict the inevitable termination of a Godless purpose on the part of the millionaire who aspires to become the billionaire, and the soulless and infidel combinations of laboring men forced into the creation of labor unions for self-protection and the right to work and live.

A government should be strong enough to regulate the relation between capital (so called) and labor. Our government, conducted in the interests of politicians and parties, has not the moral courage to confront the greatest danger to the integrity of the Union, for fear of the loss of political prestige. Because of political corruption and the growing aspiration for political honors,—also the emoluments which accrue, not from salaries provided, so much as from the opportunities afforded to dispose of one's honor to the highest bidder, the conflict between capital and labor assumes broader, more dangerous, and national proportions.

The manipulators of party aspiration and effort behold two horns of power, both of which they regard as essential to political sovereignty. It so happens that the two horns are not on the same bull. The interests of the money power and the common voter are not the same, nor can they ever be under the system of competism. These constitute the Scylla and Charybdis of the political ship, and from the peril of these dangers there is a constant desire to escape.

It is the pretense of party servility to the laboring masses for their political support, that renders it possible for a gang of cut-throats, largely composed of an un-Americanized and ignorant rabble controlled by designing leaders, to terrorize independent American citizens and force them into associations from which every impulse for personal liberty revolts. Were it not for the fear of losing political support, it would not be possible for organizations to exist, by which the rights of the individual citizen are constantly menaced, and the lives of individuals jeopardized.

A government has the right to prevent combinations of labor and the combinations of so called capital against the interests of the individual and the mass, but no government has the moral courage to correct their flagrant abuses, therefore we say there is an impending cataclysm. This is one phase of the plague of frogs typically portrayed in the liberation of the Israelites from their Egyptain bondage. We have no sympathy for either the bondholder or the equally tyrannical labor union. All these things are in doomed the coming destruction of the money power.

"Christian Science" a Consummate Humbug.

It is seldom that Chicago has seen such a sight as was yesterday presented at Fortieth St. and Drexel Boulevard. It was the occasion of the dedication of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Chicago. The most remarkable thing about this dedication was the attendance. People came from far off California, New England, and Canada. The number was so great that in order that all might partake, there were three sessions during the day and one in the evening, and all members requested to attend only one session. At each session the building was crowded with enthusiastic, earnest, eager people.

It is for the observer and philosopher to inquire why this was so, and why an obscure company of worshipers, which a very few years ago could not fill Kimball hall, are now dedicating a beautiful church, which, though it cost more than one hundred thousand dollars, was entirely paid for before its doors were open to worshipers. Certainly the crowds were not there because any great preachers or leaders were to be present and thrill them with eloquence or teach them new doctrines, for there was no preaching. There was an epistle from Mrs, Eddy, whom they call the mother of the church; there were two or three other papers read, and this, with prayer, music, and the reading of the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's book, constituted the services.

It must be that something more than all this brought together such a large, eager, and happy throng. The answer was to be seen in their countenances and the touching words that passed from lip to lip. They felt they had found something that had been hidden away from the world—an idea, a great thought—that was to conquer and bring about the reign of righteousness.

Whatever any of the rest of us may think of that idea or of the Christain Scientists' ways, if honest, we must believe that they are in wonderful earnest, and have an abiding faith that has seldom been manifested since the early days that followed those of Pentecost. They believe that truth—love is all powerful and will conquer all. They seek not in the ordinary way to proselyte, but calmly abide in the faith that truth will prevail and all will come to them. Believing thus it is no wonder that they came across the continent to witness a great step in the anticipation of their hopes and expectations.

Seen from this point of view; the event will afford food, not only for thought, but deep study. Perhaps what the world has so long laughed at is only the precursor of wonderful things for sinful and suffering humanity.

THE above froth is an editorial from the Chicago Inter Ocean of Nov. 15. The "Christian Science" body is made up very generally of the most irreligious, infidel, and atheistic people on the face of the earth. A greater fraud, or a worse prostitution of the Old Testament and the gospel of the Lord Jesus, was never perpetrated in this or any other age, than the gigantic fallacy miscalled "Christian Science." It is an emphatic denial of the personal Messiahship of the Lord Jesus, the substitution of an invention of the devil, regarding immortal life, for the pure gospel of Christ, which declares immortality not to be inherent in man, but only possible through the application of certain principles which will insure immortality through a transformation of the mortal body.

So called "Christian Science" is the consummate humbug of the age. We do not deny the possibilities of mental healing under the influence of the various manifestations of pneumic and psychic energy, but whether it be called faith cure, mental science, hypnotism, psychology, suggestion, mesmerism, or "Christian Science," it is all the same general exercise of the mental forces, and may be exhibited with equal facility by the one who, in a maudlin way, believes in the Lord Christ, or by one who may be an avowed atheist. We do not deny the rapidity with which Eddyism is honeycombing and disrupting the modern church, for we know it to be one of the disintegrating factors of the coming dissolution, one of the potential elements of the hydra-headed monstrosity—modern Christianity. That it is a precursor,—a curse going before the final breakdown of old theology, a potential disintegrator,—we hasten to admit; and we congratulate the Inter Ocean upon its happy phraseology, in commenting upon the wonderful possibilities to succeed this precursor. We remember that the assembling of the rabble at the instigation of Judas Iscariot was the precursor of the wonderful things following the death and resurrection of the Lord.

Mental healing is within the province of science, but "Christian Science" so called is emphatically antichrist, the most pronouncedly so of any phase of modern conception; therefore it is not strange that one of the leading monopolistic papers of Chicago should champion this product of the nethermost hell. No "Christian Scientist" has ever made a suggestion of anything that was ever to conquer or bring about the reign of right-eousness. In the last chapter of Revelation, fourteenth verse, it is declared: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

"Christian Science" so called is not Christian Science by any means. The science of the Decalogue, or the knowledge of the principles by which immortality may be acquired, or, in other words, a knowledge of the principles that will enable us to transform this mortal to immortality and this corruptible to incoruption, and thus through metamorphosis to become the sons of God, is the genuine and only Christain Science. The world must look beyond Eddyism for such a consummation.

The Science of Organic Unity.

BY PROF. U. G. MORROW.

NO one having given the subject of the world's condition a moment's thought, will assert that the nations of the world are governed according to the principles of equity and justice. Humanity the world over cries out for something better. There are attempted reforms everywhere, in all lines of human relations—in commerce, in the moral and social world, in religion, and in science; in every domain of human activity there is a growing desire for a change—there is an instinctive hope expressed among all people, that a new era is about to dawn upon us. The evidences that the world is cumbered by the powers of oppression and obstructions to progress, are too numerous for any sane mind to argue that the "present evil world" is righteous.

Humanity is in a state of chaos and inharmony; in such a state there can be no economy of either physical or mental energy. The many forms of government existing today, show conclusively that the science of government is not understood nor applied by those in power. The nations are selfish, and a slight breach of diplomatic etiquette will arouse the wild spirits of jingoism. The thousand religious sects evince the utter lack of comprehension of the laws of life, or human origin and destiny. In the field of social reform there are thousands of plans and schemes proposed, all the way from protective tariff to anarchy—all these are conclusive evidences that the world does not enjoy the fruits of the highest civilization!

There are specific principles of organic unity, which must be understood before the golden era of universal hope is possible. The application of these principles in all spheres of human life and existence, must constitute the prime factor of the great transformation from the present chaotic conditions to the state of unity of humanity. Neither republicanism nor social democracy can define what these principles are. The science of organic unity has been discovered, and specifically defined and formulated by the Founder of the Koreshan System of Religio-Science.

Every circumference of expression is specifically related to the center from which emanate the forms, energies, activities, and functions of the environ. The human body is an organism—a structure built in accordance with the laws of organic unity, the specific relation of every part to the central governing brain cell. Destroy or disturb these relations in any way, and the insanity, sickness, or death of the man results. Every fibre and corpuscle of the human body must be obedient to the government of the structure; all the activities obtaining there must be for the purpose of contributing to the welfare of the entire body. Here we find no independence of action on the part of a single cell of the entire system. When the corpuscle reaches the plane of desire to act alone and move in accordance with its own desires, it is ready to pass into dissolution -it is in the last stages of its existence.

The universe is a great cell. The pivotal point of the physical cosmos is the astral nucleus at the center of the earth. The activities of the great alchemicoorganic structure are regulated by the central sun; all the energies utilized in the great hollow of material existence emanate from the alchemical ruler of the material cosmos. All the atoms of matter of the universe vibrate in unison, in obedience to the laws of perpetuation of the whole. We often hear it said that what is true of nations is also true of the viduals composing the nations. The character of nations is determined by the character of the people. The viduals of a nation can no more disregard the laws of organic unity without endangering their own and other's welfare, than a corpuscle of the human system can act independently of all others without harm.

In the physical universe, in the human body, in every plant—in every living organism, there are manifest the principles of monarchy. In every organic structure there is one supreme governing center; organic unity could not exist without it. In all the realms of the universe, in physical science, cosmogony, or physiology, there cannot be found a single evidence by which to prove the correctness of the so called principles of republicanism; and any attempt to reconstruct human society upon any other basis than that of the demonstrated laws of organic unity obtaining in the physical cosmos in all its forms of life and relations, will result in failure.

Moses was not able to establish a system of government until he understood "the pattern in the mount;" that pattern was the pattern of the human body and the physical universe, and the government he founded was a Theocracy. The Social Theocracy of the Koreshan System is in agreement with and is demonstrated by the most absolutely scientific evidences, and cosmical and physiological laws. We look for and work for the coming Kingdom, the hope of which was instilled into the minds of the early Christian church; and today it should find a response in the heart of every mind entertaining a belief in the teachings of Jesus the Christ. No believer in the teachings of the Lord Christ can argue for any other condition than that of a glorious and practical kingdom, headed and ruled by divine beings—the Gods; and no one from a scientific standpoint can suggest any other form of government than that manifest in all expressions of life on every plane of existence. No advocate of any other system of social reform can present a single scientific or Biblical proof in demonstration of his claims. The teachings of the Koreshan System concerning social economy are scientific and irrefutable.

The Real India and the Real America.

BY REV. ELEANORE M. CASTLE.

In front of a group of the grain sellers, mostly plump, laughing, women, squatted a child, picking up kernels of grain from the dust of the road. The contour of every bone in its body protruded through the harsh, lifeless skin. It looked heedfully on this side, then on that, and picked up grain after grain, slowly and yet eagerly. It put each new acquisition into a fold of its girdle. Ten feet away were the overflowing baskets; but the full-fed, laughing bunniah women offered the dying child nothing; the idea of so doing never entered their minds. what was almost as strange, it never entered the mind of the child either. These Indians (except in the case of blood relations) are totally destitute of all human feeling for one another; they neither feel it nor expect it. Had this child had some coppers with which to buy of the bunniahs, the latter would have taken what advantage they might of its ignorance and helplessness to cheat it out of its fair measure. There is no conception among these three hundred millions of what we understand by humanity; they do not exercise it, they do not ask it, and they cannot comprehend it.

THUS writes Julian Hawthorne, the Cosmopolitan's special commissioner to India, in the September number of that magazine. Righteousness consists in condemning the heathen. And how reprehensible in our Christian eyes is this manifestation by the "Aryan brown" of a very familiar trait of human nature—the ability to endure with equanimity the bad estate of others. Mr. Hawthorne is evidently smitten with a sense-compelling to such indignant expression as may be seemly-of the callousness of those who, plump and merry, think not to share their substance with the lean and miserable. Where in Christian lands he has seen tradesmen giving away goods to the needy without a monetary consideration, -or even forbearing to exact the customary profit, which is merely limited by the merchant sense, taken colilectvely, of what the purchaser will stand,—he fails to indicate. To be sure, often there is bestowal of good in the name of "charity," by our shrewd business men, because a show of generosity pays in the way of advertisement, and advertising is good "business"; but who will contend that business is conducted for other than monetary consideration? The benighted East Indian is not skilled in this fine art of Christian lands, but we should have forbearance for his lack in this regard, remembering that he did not have the opportunity to become leavened with the leaven of the Pharisees, not having been in the line of that development.

And the native simplicity with which Mr. Hawthorne comments on the lack of brotherly love among "these Indians (except in the case of blood relations)," would lead one to imagine that he went to India from a land where conditions of equity obtain, by virtue of the loving-kindness of the inhabitants, and where none revel in luxury while others wallow in misery. As a matter of fact, the fierce contrast between the bunniah women and the starving boy may easily be paralleled any day in any city of the United States. A recently published incident may serve for illustration. A party of gentlemen were dining at a fashionable restaurant in New York. Suddenly the window of the room was thrown open from the outside, and the gaunt, haggard face of a man standing in the alley without appeared. He said, "Last night I pawned my coat to buy a loaf of bread for my wife who is starving." Only this—and disappeared. There was a commotion within, the police were summoned, the window was hastily lowered and secured by the restaurant attendant, and—the banquet proceeded. But one person present had lost his appetite for the dainty fare; and he it was who told the story. The gaunt man did not ask food of the feasters,-did not seem to expect it,—to do so apparently "did not enter his mind.

To condemn man's inhumanity to man in India may increase the self-satisfaction of the Pharisee in America, but it does not explain just "what we understand by humanity," in view of the fact that thirty thousand persons were destitute in Indiana, while mine operators calmly held out against the demand of men for a bare living wage, and unarmed men were shot down in Pennsylvania for presuming to continue a journey along the public highway against the tyrannical command of a bullying sheriff. When it can appear to the satisfaction of those who administer our laws, that for a band of men to march along the roads of the country constitutes rioting, it is time to tear in pieces the Declaration of Independence and burn the Constitution of the United States as so much waste paper, and cease talking of "this favored land" and holding up the bad condition of foreign lands to the pitying gaze of "blessed America."

Considering these conditions and the present social state of America, there is exquisite, although we give Mr. Hawthorne the credit of its being wholly unconscious. irony in the closing sentence of the paragraph quoted: "There is no conception among these three hundred millions of what we understand by humanity; they do not exercise it, they do not ask it, and they cannot comprehend it." There is a large and increasing number of thinkers in enlightened America, who find difficulty in comprehending it. But perhaps the cruelty exercised by the possessors of material wealth—which is power in Christian America—towards the anxious, toiling millions should not be laid to the charge of inhumanity, and may as readily be explained as the conduct of the Irish constable, would they but condescend as did he, to "render a reason." when, after using his weapon unmercifully on the prisoner, he endeavored to vindicate his real tenderness of heart and soothe the wounded feelings of his victim by explaining, "It's not because I hate ye that I bate ye, but because I've the authority to do so."

The Factors of Human Progression.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

Chorus:

Prometheus:

THE sense of justice inherent in the mind of man, demands some adequate solution of the inequalties of human destiny which constitute the real tragedy of existence, whether they find expression in a frenzied popular outbreak like the French Revolution, a heart-breaking story like "Les Miserables," or a modern strike.

Leaving out of consideration mere worldly success and looking beyond material things to mental and moral endowments, the unequal distribution of spiritual gifts offers a no less perplexing problem. How is it possible to explain the apparent cruelty of a Creative Power that brings into existence, as has been computed, three thousand millions of commonplace individuals to one genius like Shakespeare or Beethoven? Glancing backward over the small arc of human progress represented by all known history, it is plain that every age has recognized this source of the world's pain and has pondered the mystery. According to the Greeks, blind chance presides over the destinies of mortals; it is useless to question or repine when, to quote the words which Æschylus puts into the mouth of Prometheus:

"The destined course of things
Fate must accomplish.
Though art be strong, necessity is stronger."
"And who is lord of strong necessity?"
"The triform fates and the sure memoried furies."

Stoicism is the only refuge for humanity, subject to the caprices of the gods who are tyrants modeled after those of antiquity. The Greek theogonists had little conception of the value of the individual life, or of man as the free determining person.

Passing to the present age and comparing the opinions of representative writers on the subject, we find that the tendency is to exalt humanity, to place a just value on individual pain, and to seek not only the highest good of the greatest number, but so far as possible, the highest good of all. But is the problem solved? "That, nobody expects to do," says one writer; still, many have attempted and all desire its solution. Emerson has stated the case very clearly: "Look at those who have less faculty," he writes, "and one feels sad and knows not what to make of it. Almost he shuns their eye; he fears they will upbraid God. What should they do? It seems a great injustice." The compensation which Emerson finds to reduce these mountainous inequalities, rests in the idea that the heart and soul of all men are one, and the men of genius, Jesus and Shakespeare, being fragments of the soul, all men may freely appropriate them through love.

Loving appreciation of greatness in others is, of course, only second to being great oneself; but what of the sordid, brutal masses utterly incapable of appreciating either Jesus or Shakespeare? Emerson's theory is not broad enough to reach the depraved and vicious. No modern writer exceeds George Eliot in her recognition of the transcendent value of human pain. She has somewhere expressed the thought that the misery of one casts so tremendous a shadow as to eclipse the bliss of ninety-nine. The poetry and pathos of the commonplace form her message, and she always refused to adopt the quantative view of human anguish. "Our subtlest analysis of schools and sects," she writes, "must miss the essential truth unless it be lit up by the love that sees in all forms of human thought and work, the life and death-struggles of separate human beings." Her sympathies go out, not to the fittest who survive, but to the unfit who perish in the struggle for moral and spiritual as well as physical existence. Her view of the question under consideration is, that the possibility of moral greatness in the humblest man, quite offsets the matter of genius. Her solution, in the last analysis, is as inadequate as Emerson's, because, far from the possiblity of moral greatness being inherent in every man, there are souls as incapable of attaining it as a star that revolves in some lesser orbit is incapable of breaking away from its own little circle, to sweep around the sun. What of the souls born tainted? What of alcoholized brain cells and kleptomaniacs? The spirits that entered into the herd of swine had been human, but they sought their own level on the animal plane of existence.

Modern society recognizes and compassionates as never before, the sum total of suffering represented by the three thousand millions of insignificant, nameless lives, but is powerless to account for them. The analogy which modern science draws from nature is especially disheartening. Tennyson reflects the zeitgeist in the familiar lines:

The wish that of the living whole No life may fail beyond the grave, Derives it not from what we have—The likest God within the soul?

Are God and nature then at strife, That nature lends such evil dreams? So careful of the type she seems, So careless of the single life;

That I, considering everywhere Her secret meaning in her deeds, And finding that of fifty seeds She often brings but one to bear, I stretch lame hands of faith and grope, And gather dust and chaff and call To what I feel is Lord of all, And faintly trust the larger hope.

Here is the attitude of the world-groping in doubt and perplexity. The Koreshan System claims to present a reasonable solution of the problem. With a new exposition of the laws of involution and evolution, it incorporates the idea of reincarnation as a scientific fact promulgated, but not rightfully presented, by Theosophy. The genius is the involution of the Christ, the one seed out of fifty, that bears fruit. According to Koreshan psychology, the mind of man is an aggregation of spiritual entities, and the genius but gathers into himself the higher spirits from the millions in a lower grade of experience, that he may return them again in a spiritual baptism at the end of the age, thus becoming the Savior, the Deliverer of the race, the firstborn among many brethren. For instance, such an intellectual prodigy as Shakespeare may represent one embodiment of the Christ spirit in its progress toward perfection at the close of the cycle, when it reappears as the God-man. Viewed in this light, the Genius becomes the servant of all. "He that is greatest among you, let him be your servant." Royalty, in the heavenly sense, consists in ability to impart higher truth. As for the millions of obscure and forgotten lives, the souls born tainted, the human wrecks tossing in the sea of humanity, is it not enough to learn that each one is on its way to ultimate perfection, to the very life and intellectual status of God? The inequalities of human condition and endowment arise from the fact that all degrees of mental and moral evolution always have and always will exist side by side. Every man in running his cycle of development, passes through all grades of experience. In each embodiment, after a longer or shorter sojourn of rest in the spirit world, the central ego gathers to itself a different combination of spirits; hence reincarnation is only partial.

Life on every plane is produced from the worn-out elements of the plane above, and is renewed and perpetuated by the appropriation of the better elements of the plane below—the debris of the God-kingdom descends to produce man. After accumulating experience through countless embodiments, man ascends to renew the life of God. This process of the interchange of energies is orderly, constant, and eternal. There is no injustice and no waste in the divine economy. Looking upon the unwritten tragedy of man's suffering, humanity cries out in anguish, why this waste? And divine Wisdom ever answers: "Against the day of my burying is this done." This sordid, commonplace humanity is being prepared as a receptacle for the Christ consciousness; it will one day awake and be satisfied in His likeness.

"There is somewhat divine in the voice of fable," and the old Greek myths embodied, each, some higher truth pertaining to universal life. The story of Prometheus, Forethought, the Provident, he who looks before to provide, who filched divine fire from the gods and taught its use to mortal men, thus incurring the wrath of Jove, points in its deepest sense to the descending Christ spirit, the Provider who comes down into the race to bring divine truth to man. In this descent, he incurs sin with all its fatal consequences, and suffers in the flesh all the ills of sinful humanity, chained to its evils as Prometheus was chained to the rock. Many writers believe that the "Prometheus Bound" of Æschylus was originally the middle play of a trilogy, and that the last showed a reconciliation between Jove and the Titan, as the Christ is finally reconciled to the interior spirit and becomes one with it.

Imperative Need of Genuine Fortitude.

BY MARY EVERTS DANIELS.

THERE are people who have so little intellectual or moral courage that they dare not reason about the things which they are directed by their teachers to believe, much less do they dare to come before an antagonistic world and assert the truth. True courage is born of true principle that enables its possessor to court investigation and meet the keen shafts of criticism, if so be that strength of purpose may be gained, necessary to an activity fruitful of good works.

In times of advanced scientific and religious thought, when the fruitage of the old era is to be garnered and the seed for the new is to be disseminated, a great degree of courage is demanded that new and startling truths may be presented to a skeptical world, truths which demonstrate the correctness of the theory presented, despite all opposition.

Today Koreshanity presents to the world a scientific religion that will overturn all preconceived ideas of either science or religion. The Christian church has grown old; its habits are fixed. Interwoven with its every bone and sinew, permeating the blood and vibrating every nerve, is the prejudice of sect and creed, and it is like drawing the eye from its socket to convince a so called Christian of the fact that there is an error in his creed. He has no conception of religious progress, no idea that his thoughts can expand beyond the stone walls of the edifice he calls his church, therefore he is content to live on the common plane, which becomes barren for lack of cultivation.

Two thousand years ago, the Jew was just as stiffnecked as the Christian of today; but the true Christ religion made its bold stand, and the few triumphed over the many because they were in the right; they dared to be true to their convictions; dared to labor that the new branch might spring forth from the Judaistic tree, bearing the name of Christianity. The old tree was dying; another was ready to fill its place. Christianity too has waxed old; it has mingled its blood with the heathen, and committed adultery with its pagan neighbor. It is time that a saving Branch should "grow up out of his place," in order that the religion of God may not be utterly destroyed.

There is a demand for energetic, determined workers in the field. Hearts full of courage are needed, for the king of this world, standing behind the modern church, "has appointed daily provision of the king's meat and the wine which his subjects may drink." The world needs a Daniel who is determined not to defile himself with that which this king has prepared; one who neither worships nor asks favors except of the God of Israel. Where is the one who will dare to fearlessly go forth, with purpose true, and strike at the root of the tree of evil, that the evil may be transformed, and the new humanity come forth in all its glory?

God works through man, therefore the age needs men of action, strong men who possess opinions and the will to do what is right.

"Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog."

Satan and his hosts are defying the little army which is struggling to maintain this right, but if they "will not defile themselves with a portion of the king's meat, neither with the wine which he drinks," then will new strength be given them, and through the power of Koreshanity they will be enabled to burst the bonds of prejudice and stand forth proclaiming the principles that will lift man from the depths of degradation and place him upon the solid rock. Decision of character is needed, and brave hearts and strong hands that will bear our banner—"The Red, Green, and Gold," on to victory.

It is related that Pizarro, the conqueror of Peru, in one of his reverses was cast on the Island of Gallo with a few of his followers. When his men were in a starving condition, two vessels arrived from Panama containing relief, and he was persuaded to abandon his object. Now came the test of his strength of character, and the determination of his earthly destiny. Drawing his sword, he traced a line with it on the sand, from East to West; then turning toward the South he said: "Friends and comrades; on that side are toil, hunger, nakedness, the drenching storm, desolation, and death; on this side, ease and pleasure. There lies Peru with its riches; here, Panama and its poverty; choose, each man, what becomes a brave Castilian. For my part, I go South." saying, he stepped across the line. He was followed by eleven others, and Peru was conquered.

Koresh has traced a line with his Flaming Sword; he has depicted the true condition of both sides, saying, Choose ye. each one of you, what becomes a brave Koreshan. Who will dare to defy Satan and his legion of emissaries? Who will have the courage to endure toil, hunger, and persecution, and be willing to sacrifice every tie for the truth's sake? Who, in the supreme hour of trial and tribulation, when martyrdom, perchance, confronts him, even as it did the faithful followers of the Lord, will dare to be true to those principles of heroism which render triumphant, through sacrifice, the aspirations of the soul?

In the Editorial Perspective.

SWEDENBORGIANS are taking great interest in the astronomical investigations and nomical investigations of the moon and planets. They are seeking to prove that their interpretations of the writings of Swedenborg are correct. The way they do it is to suppose first that Swedenborg wrote of the inhabitants of the physical moon and planets in his descriptions of the moon people, the Mars people, and other planes of human life in the world, then look about to find some corroboration of the same through the investigations of scientists avowedly atheistic. They think that a moon with very rare atmosphere is exactly adapted to the kind of beings described by Swedenborg as those he saw in the spiritual world. Swedenborg did not say that there were inhabitants on the moon, but in it; inhabitants in Mars, in Jupiter-in the planets, not on them. He saw what corresponded to the moon in the anthropostic spheres of humanity—he saw the spiritual worlds of the various planes of humanity, which may be designated as the inhabitants of the Moon, Martians, Saturnians, etc. The inhabitants of such anthropostic planes or planets are all right here on the concave surface of the physical universe, and not up in the physical heavens, in the reflections from the metallic shells of the firmament. In a state of illumination Swedenborg saw the spiritual sun, surrounded by three heavens or atmospheres, and outside of these, the earth as the environ of all the inner spheres—he saw what corresponds to the physical universe, the great cell of the Koreshan Cellular Cosmogony.

The daily press announces a new scientific marvel, which the scientists think will revolutionize astronomical research, and cause them to see cities and towns and moving objects on the moon and planets. It is an invention of Prof. Gates, of Washington, called the photomicroscope. When applied to the telescope, it is claimed it will increase its power at least twentyfive times, making the power of the best telescopes 6,000 to 10,000 times, enabling them to magnify the apparent size of the moon and planets to an area of from 360,000 to 1,000,000,000 times greater. In the new instrument the difficulty fixing the limit of usual telescopic power, is overcome by the microscopic principle. If they succeed in observing outlines of cities on Mars and the moon, they will at once assume that it is absolute proof that the Copernican theory is the true one. But would it? We deny that it would. They will reach the climax of fallacy, and be temporarily gratified. Planets in the heavens are reflected from mercurial discs in the great shell of the earth; the moon is reflected upon the sea of hydrogen from the uppermost metallic stratum, implanted there as an X-ray picture of all the earth strata resting upon the metallic planes. The surface of the earth with its continental outlines may be observed in the moon, and many terrestrial details will become more and more apparent as the power to observe them is increased.

The editors of the Firebrand, an anarchist-communist publication at Sellwood, Ore., have been arrested on charge of violation of the postal laws—that of publishing and mailing objectionable literature. They are not the first to pass under the ban of criticism; others have run the same gauntlet. This publication has been sent to us for the past year or more, and if anything in violation of the postal laws has been printed in it we have failed to notice it. We are reminded of the case of Moses Harman who was imprisoned on a similar charge. The reform press of the country, and many conservative papers, joined in the protest against the unjust sentence and persecution. Some people in office seem to be growing tired of the freedom of the press; hence the effort to curtail it. Such effort is the result of the modern Christian conception of morals; the morals of the people are considered to be so delicate and susceptible of inflammation that they must be protected by Comstock regulations. The restraint is no doubt good, but in the hands of the wrong parties the law may be misapplied, and the oppression often fall where it does not belong.

Suppose that it actually costs one dollar in labor to mine and produce a one dollar gold coin, to be used as a medium of exchange. Exchange for what? The products of labor, presumably, value for value. Any product of labor can be exchanged value for value only through a medium that costs nothing. If the gold medium of exchange costs as much as the products exchanged, the labor necessary to produce the gold dollar is either thrown away, or it adds to the cost of the products purchased. Gold always produces hard times and high prices, but not high wages.

If the astronomers make their calculations of star distances upon the supposition that the earth's orbit is 180,000,000 miles in diameter, what would be their conclusion if they should find that the earth has no such orbit? They well know the stars would not be so far away. The basis of their calculations is hypothetical, and possesses nothing scientific. Yet thousands of common people think that their measurements are infallible.

The churches are not rational concerning the Bible. They worship the book without an understanding of a single doctrine it teaches. The Bible is scientifically true, but they accept it without proof as the "profoundest book of all times, a marvel of condensed thought, with volumes expressed in a single verse." If they were suddenly to come to believe that the Bible was written by the devil, nothing would be too bad to say against it!

The report that three students of the Baptist University at Waco, Texas, recently assaulted the editor of the Iconoclast for the publication of criticisms of the school, shows great charity on the part of the university. If the editor had lived in Europe three hundred years ago, he would have experienced the tortures of the Inquisition. Better be thankful that he has escaped the horrors of ecclesiastical punishments.

A great deal is said about vegetarianism in journals of reform and hygiene. We presume that some vegetarians pretend to be Christians, but we do not know how they account for Jesus' practice of eating meat, even after his resurrection from Joseph's tomb.

Scientists will fool away millions of dollars in fruitless search for objects of their fancy, but have nothing to expend in investigation or test of the premise of the Koreshan Cosmogony.

The government of the Aztecs in Mexico and of the Incas in Peru in the sixteenth century was vastly superior to the oppressive political bondage of the present time.

The Social Democrat, while it argues for socialism, is endeavoring to reach some ground of definiteness—a few marks of distinction from other branches of socialism.

The basic idea of the gold or the silver standard is erroneous. The money value of gold does not consist wholly in the labor of producing it, but in fiat.

The result of the recent case of cruelty at Ft. Dearborn shows to what extent political influence can cover up and whitewash modern barbarism.

Des Cartes said, "Cogito, ergo sum, I think, therefore I am." Modern so called Christian Science says, "I think, therefore I am not."

Social democrats pretend to believe in Jesus. They pray, "Thy kingdom come," but they work for the institution of social democracy.

The daily press is always on the wrong side of every social, religious, and scientific question. Its influence is a bar to genuine progress.

The needs of the world can only be met by the introduction of a new universal order of life, science, religion, and government.

Labor organizations do not angur peace; they are marshaling forces against plutocracy for the coming revolution.

Even nations are selfish and vain, and their pride is arrogantly asserted behind the power of the bayonet.

They say that "improvement is the order of the age;" we say that order would be the improvement of the age.

There is as little harmony in socialistic reform today as there is in modern Christianity or in modern science.

Republicanism in America after one hundred and twenty years' experiment, is a failure.

Even national reform is too narrow to characterize a system of universal reformation.

What clergyman of the modern church can tell anything about where heaven is?

The world has derived no practical benefit from the modern astronomical theories.

The capitalist and the striker are both coercionists.

The Essence of Socialism.

Christ taught his followers to despise riches—to take no thought of the morrow. To the ruler who inquired how he should inherit eternal life, Christ replied; "Sell all that thou hast and distribute unto the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me." Not only did Christ teach the very essence of socialism, but he and his disciples after him practiced it. And yet there are church members today who tell us that socialism is dangerous; that it would destroy religion and disrupt the family! Funny, isn't it, that Christ should have set so bad an example? The truth is that the church has repudiated Christ, and the great need of the hour is a new John the Baptist to prepare the way for his second coming.—Social Democrat.

The writer of the above seems desirous of attaching a religious sentiment to the theory of the social democracy. Is "socialism" a religious movement? If so, what is its religion? The very essence of the genuine socialism is the positive central truth of being and existence; and its expression in human society consists of a social organization constructed in accordance with the laws of cosmic form. Who knows what the essence of genuine reformation is? The writer of the above acknowledges a great need of the world,—the coming of John the Baptist—as a necessary factor in the establishment of the new order. The best thing the Social Democrat can do is to find the necessary Teacher of social economy, or prove its right to attempt to establish and promulgate the principles of the government of the new age, before it knows what they are. It is necessary to know what constitutes the essence of social organic unity. These principles have been promulgated by the Founder of the Koreshan System since 1870. It is not a wonder that parts of this integral system should be copied by many in the field of reform. This generally results in perversion of the truths they attempt to appropriate, and subjects the copyist to the charge of plagiarism. The effort to establish a system of social economy without the Lord Christ, is an attempt to pervert the truth, for the founding of a hell of social disorder and anarchy.

Theocracy vs. Democracy.

The ethics of Christianity and the ethics of socialism are identical. The teachings of Christ respecting the duties and obligations of man to man are the teachings of socialism.—

Social Democrat.

What kind of socialism did Christ teach? If the practice of the early church counts for anything, it was a communistic social system that was put into operation through the evolution of the central doctrine of organic unity. The germ of the divine kingdom was sown in the early church, and it would be a freak of divine progression if that germ should ultimate in a social democracy put forth separate and apart from the religion of that kingdom. The coming kingdom will not be a democraci institution. Reform attempted on the basis of democracy is unscientific and cannot succeed; the principle is absurd;—may as well say that the earth can rule itself without the sun. The true form of government is Theocratic; its laws must emanate from the divine center, never from the circumference, for how can the ungoverned govern? Jesus taught that the new universal empire would be a kingdom.

The Science of Political Economy.

Political economy is not a set of dogmas. It is the explanation of certain sets of facts. It is the science which, in the sequence of certain phenomena, seeks to trace mutual relations and to identify cause and effect, just as the physical science seeks to do in other sets of phenomena.—Henry George.

The science of social economy is founded upon positive facts. Science is knowledge, beyond the stage of seeking to trace mutual relations of cause and effect, and a social system founded upon the science of organic unity is the only one that involves the remedy for all political and commercial evils. The truths of social economy are the dogmas of the divine science, the positive doctrines of universal economy, expressed in the form and function of the physical universe. A so called system of political economy or social reform formulated just as the modern scientists seek "to do in other sets of phenomena," is just as erroneous and fallacious as are the conclusions of popular astronomy, physics, or other hypotheses.

Pure Religion and Social Reform.

Any attempt to preach a pure religion must go along with attempts at social reforms.— Toynbee.

This is but one half of the truth involved in the thought. Any attempt to institute social reform without the true religion will fail. The genuine social reformation must result from the principles of religio-science. Koreshanity teaches the science of social reconstruction, the science of the divine Theorracy.

Correspondence and Brief Replies.

Having perused your articles in the June and July numbers of THE FLAMING SWORD, I feel impelled to write you for further information concerning the very startling propositions you advance. If you can explain the reason why the line of sight bends upwards instead of downwards, and does not follow the same curve when the telescope is used, I shall be very much pleased to have you do so. Also give a more detailed description of the Rectilineator used by you in your Geodetic work at Naples, Fla. I would like to have the dimensions, materials, and such details of construction, manner of using the same, as would enable me to construct one and repeat the experiments that you have made.—I. D. K., Denver, Colo.

We are glad to note your interest in the Koreshan Cosmogony and the line of work successfully demonstrating the same to be true. If you will procure the files of THE FLAMING SWORD from Aug. 1896 to May 1897, and a copy of the New Geodesy now in press, you will find all the particulars you desire concerning the experiments, apparatus, and method of operation-these will contain cuts of the apparatus. This apparatus is a Koreshan invention, and we would not desire to have it copied and used without the supervision of one of our experts. We are projecting another line of survey on a very extensive scale, when we have sufficiently interested the scientific men to have them commit themselves on the The telescope increases the results. angles of radiation of the lines of the visual energy, and extends the vanishing point. The visual substance is acted upon by both levic and gravic energies. By the telescope the frontal focus is extended beyond the normal point, thereby increasing the power to resist the forces of levity and gravity, and the curve of the visual substance is not so great as when the eye is unaided; the visual substance is projected further in the nearly horizontal direction. Our literature will acquaint you with Koreshan physics and optics and the science of foreshortening, which you should study.

Will you kindly answer what seems to our mind an objection to the System of Koresh? (1) Taking the example of the targets described in your experiments—that of the last target being seen, with its reflection in the water, if that is true, why cannot London be seen when standing on the shore at a long distance, looking in the direction of London, through a good telescope? (2) We have mathematical objections also, but will only ask for the solution of this one, which seems valid to us. (3) If you have any literature giving an account of the survey at Naples, we would be pleased to have it.—W. J. C., La Center, Wash

(1) The horizon is the vanishing point of lateral vision. Factors which form the horizon are explained in the Koreshan optics. A horizon is seen through the telescope, but it is beyond the normal horizon. Anything beyond the horizon or vanishing point of the telescope appears out of sight according to the same laws governing unaided vision. The distance between the horizon of the unaided eye and the horizon seen through the telescope depends upon the power of the telescope and the altitude of observation. If London is beyond the horizon of the telescope of a given power it cannot be seen; but a telescope of a higher power may bring it into view. (2) If you have mathematical objections, we shall be very glad to have you present them to us, and we will remove them for you. (3) See advertisement of The New Geodesy. This pamphlet will tell you all about the Florida survey and experiments.

How do you explain the phenomenon of what is called the earth's shadow on the moon during an eclipse of the moon?—W. L. J., Currant, Colo.

Study the Koreshan Cosmogony, and locate the metallic shells of the universe. The moon is a gravosphere of the earth; it is produced by the levitation of subtle forces generated · in the earth's crust. Dark discs pass between the metallic strata, and partially cut off the energies forming the moon. When they do so there is an eclipse, a cutting off. The discs are circular, and produce a circular obscuration. In the Copernican System, when the moon passes into the umbra of the earth's shadow, the moon should become entirely invisible, as it is claimed that the moon's light is borrowed from the sun. There is no eclipse in the old system. The ecliptic is the clipper; when both the sun and moon are on the ecliptic, the magnetic circuit is broken, and the moon is obscured by the circular eclipsor. The Koreshan explanation is scientific, and in accordance with the meaning of the word and the facts of the phenomenon.

Why do you devote so much space to astronomy and discussions about the earth being concave? Why should the common people become interested in such subjects?

—A. B.

Science is the basis of all truth; it is easier to demonstrate a material premise to most minds than it is to prove a point by processes of reason and analogy. The form of the universe is an infallible index to the laws of life on every plane of existence and being. When the physical universe is understood the laws of the relation of humanity are known, and the demonstration of the principles of divine economy and social reconstruction becomes easy. We want the people to understand an astronomy that is sensible, and a system of human physiology that is true, so they can begin to comprehend the processes of getting out of the present hell of competism and the infernal bondage to sensuality and greed of gold. Learn a few things necessary to know; get a few keys of truth, and think!

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

AAA*AAAAAAAA

In this column we will have something to say to our readers each weeksomething that will be of personal interest to each of you who are interested in THE FLAMING SWORD. We will introduce new and special features as the weeks go by, and here is the place to look for announcements of what is coming. We have some surprises for appreciative readers. Special subjects will be handled in ways that are unique and taking, and short mention of their character will be made in advance, and thus prepare the mind and arouse interest in the striking articles by the Founder of Koreshanity, as well as by the corps of writers of our Staff.

For issue of December 3d, we have a most remarkable article by Koresh, "The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man," exposing the fallacy of the popular conceptions concerning the relations of God and present humanity. Some startling predictions and remarkable statements are made. Be sure to contrast his masterful presentation of the truth with the fallacies of modern liberal creeds and the views of Theosophy. An article on the manufacture of gold will also appear. You are interested in this—do not fail to study it.

We shall present in an early number a striking article showing to what extent the daily press is influenced by the modern scientific fallacies. We have in our possession a letter from a St. Louis astronomer, and one from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, which we shall offer in evidence. Watch for this article—it will let you behind the curtain. We will expose a few things hidden there!

"Prosperity and High Prices" is the subject of a valuable article for next issue by Rev. Bertha S. Boomer—an able dissection of the claims of the plutocratic press for the administration of McKinley under the gold standard. It portrays the enslaved condition of the wage-worker, the greed of capital, and the resultant doom of competism.

You have in your hands the issue of November 26. We call special attention to the articles by Koresh on Labor Unions and Moneyed Corporations and cutting review of the Inter-Ocean's editorial on "Christian Science." Read them and reread them, until you know that you are not able to refute the arguments so ably presented.

Objections, questions, and general correspondence may be found in the Correspondence department. Have you an objection against the Koreshan System? Better have it refuted. Send us your encouraging words, and ask your questions. We will gladly reply briefly, giving key words and suggestions.

Have you noticed the effort we are putting forth to give you the most advanced journal in the world? Do you appreciate it? Formerly the Sword was a monthly -now it is a weekly, for the same price! Pass it around; everybody needs it, butthey cannot want it until they know it exists!

The New Geodesy will be ready shortly; let us have your orders-hundreds of them.

What do you think of the new FLAMING SWORD?

Spanish soldiers were driven to mutiny on board steamer Montserrat; several killed, and steamer returned to Mantanzas with a signal of distress. Gen. Weyler was on board, having started for Spain.

It is reported that Gen. Weyler is to be court-martialed in Spain for treasonable utterances in Havana on day of sailing for Spain after his recall.

Cuba has issued an independence manifesto; it is considered a remarkable document for slumbering statesmen to study.

A colony of negroes has been formed at Langston, Okl., for the purpose of education in industrial pursuits.

A French physician cures disease by having his patients laugh excessively.

The expenditures of the Chicago horse show fall $20,000 behind the receipts.

A method has been discovered for rejuvenating aged and half-dead trees.

Tammany Hall gives $20,000 to the Cuban Junta to aid the revolution.

Spanish merchants object to Sagasta's plan of Cuban autonomy.

Siam apologizes for attacking U. S. Minister at Bankok.

Several million mouse-traps are sold in this country yearly.

Delaware will not admit women to the practice of law.

Thoughts From the Reform Press.

The recall of General Weyler from Cuba opens a new, and, it is to be hoped, a more cheerful chapter in the history of that unfortunate island. Weyler does not go back to Spain in disgrace; but it is nevertheless true that he would not be recalled were his administration a success. General Blanco, who succeeds him, is said to be the softest-hearted soldier in Spain, and his appointment may presage a much more conciliatory policy by the new minister of Spain, Sagasta. It is certainly time. According to a Sun correspondent, General Weyler asserts that 200,000 of the Spanish soldiers have been killed or disabled, by war or disease, since the insurrection began, and that the effective army now numbers but 80,000. In addition to these 200,000 soldiers (if the figures are correct, which is doubtful), the war has cost Spain, according to estimates, about $275,000,000. This added to the debt of Cuba at the beginning of the war ($168,500,000) makes a debt now of $443,500,000—all of it the outgrowth of the last 30 years or so! Spanish pride and Spanish tyranny are a costly luxury. —The Voice.

ho Said Prosperity?

Prosperity for all is here-not a prosperity of mere paper and hope, but actual, tangible, resting on the indisputable and convincing fact of agricultural prosperity, without which general prosperity in this country cannot today exist. The days of croaking are past. There is work to do and money to be made by everybody who is not a loafer or an incompetent. The people of the United States are going to work and to make money. The prophet of disaster will find his occupation gone. The politics of disaster will be made futile by this period of good times which has begun. Prosperity is here!—N. Y. Sun.

They Would Do It Again.

"What was Christ killed for, and who killed him? He tramped all the way from Nazareth to Calvary. He was born in a borrowed barn. Respectable sinners he called "whited sepulchres." He walked into a temple he did not own and drove out some money-changers he was unacquainted with, though he was neither sheriff nor under-sheriff. Right down at the bottom, Christ was killed for his sympathy with the poor, and contempt for the rich and unjust. He was regarded by the respectable classes as an outlaw and a felon, and, if you please, an anarchrist.—Rev. Myron B. Reed.

When I began work in the cause of reform, I thought all that was necessary to reform the world was to tell the truth and all the common people would come to my side. But I soon learned that more was needed. I learned that a good principle unsupported by good policy and good generalship, was a failure; that we had to meet cunning, corruption, and coercion; that a band of organized thieves had possession of the field, and could only be dislodged by organization, diplomacy, and stratagem.—J. R. Sovereign.

Just As He Wants It.

The coal magnate burst hastily into the office of the mine superintendent.

"Did you get those injunctions?" he asked.

"I got six," was the reply.

"I want the right of free speech suppressed."

"It is suppressed already."

"I want it made a crime for a labor leader or working man to walk the highway." "That has been done long ago.

"Good! Now I am sure of another term in the United States Senate."- Twentieth Century.

Where To Look For God.

A parish priest of austerity climbed up in a High church steeple, To be nearer God, so that he might hand

God's word down to the people.

And in sermon text he daily wrote what he Thought was sent from heaven,

And dropped it down on the people's heads
Two times one day in seven.
In his age God said, "Come down and die!"
And he asked from out the steeple,

'Where art thou, Lord?" and the Lord replied, "Down here among my people."

-CLEVELAND RECORDER.

How often we see people whose lives are the strongest types of aristocracy, who boast of being democrats; "liberalists, who are offensively bigoted; "spiritualists," who are governed wholly by material manifestations, and "Protestants," whose very name proclaims them as dissenters, preaching "Peace on earth, good will to men." There is much in the name, based on the ideas which created it; but in practice there is little value except as a title to designate a band of co-workers, bound together to carry out the will of their leaders.—Radix.

The old conflict between darkness and light, between truth and falsehood, has never been characterized by sham battles. When truth demands her own she brings into the world not peace, but a sword. No one can foretell the result. Yet in the long run it must in the future be against plutocracy, as in the past it has been against aristocracy, autocracy, and monarchy. History shows that while truth often loses battles, she always wins wars. Cleveland Recorder.

I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all the wealth is aggregated in a few hands, and the republic destroyed.—Abraham Lincoln.

The present unspeakable system of slavery has well-nigh run its course; its doom is sealed on American soil. It will, it must go, no matter what steps may be necessary to rout it, no matter what consequences may proceed from its overthrow. It lives through a spirit of tolerance that will not much longer endure. -San Barnadino (Cal.) Free Press.

THE FLAMING SWORD FOR THE COMING YEAR.

SUMMARY OF FUTURE PROGRESS.

THE MOST ADVANCED, ORIGINAL, AND DISTINCTIVE SCIENTIFIC JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

At the Head in Claim and Fact.

THE FLAMING SWORD enters upon a new career, after eight years' steady progress and persistent aggressiveness against all the evils and fallacies of modern times. The period of time it has been in existence is sufficient to establish its character, and its success during this time amid all kinds of persecution is a guaranty of its future progress. The demands of every time are always met by those means best adapted to accomplish the desired result. The necessities of the present hour demand the vigorous promulgation of the principles of scientific reformation; and in the claim that THE FLAMING SWORD is the journal that stands in advance in both claim and fact, we are prepared to compare points in proof of superiority. In new dress and make-up, it visits its friends weekly, with a brighter face and with greater power and influence than ever before.

Under the Auspices of the Founder of the Universal System.

THE FLAMING SWORD is the only journal in the world possessing the distinction of being published under the auspices of the Founder of a Universal System. The founders of all other so called universal systems of religion and of science lived centuries ago, and their causes are now left to be promulgated according to the misconceptions of an apostate following. The strength of THE FLAMING SWORD is in relation to the Founder of the Koreshan Religio-Science. The writings of Koresh appear in our pages as the first uncredited articles. They constitute the vigor of THE SWORD, and determine its weight and tone; we claim for these articles that they are superior editorials, and decidedly above criticism. A new and interesting feature for the coming year will be the contributions by VICTORIA GRA-TIA, Pre-Eminent of the Koreshan Unity.

The Editorial Staff and Corps of Contributors.

Under the Editorial management of Prof. U. G. Morrow, Editor - in - chief, and Evelyn Bubbett, Associate Manager, consists of a number of excellent writers educated in the principles of Koreshan Science. Our readers are already familiar with the writings and work of Prof. Morrow in the Astronomical and Geodetic field, and will appreciate his articles, appearing with credit in the department of contributions to The Sword, and as the uncredited paragraphs in the Editorial, Question, News, Review, and other departments. The long experience, faithfulness, and efficiency in eight years' management of The Sword, on the part of the Associate Manager, is an additional guaranty that the pages of The Flaming Sword will be filled with only the best efforts of the editorial representatives of the Koreshan Cult.

Personnel of the Contributing Staff.

Among the Corps of Contributing Editors may be especially mentioned Rev. E. M. Castle, of the Koreshan University System, whose very excellent articles on religious, educational, and other lines are especially forceful and instructive: Prof. O. F. L'Amoreaux, Ph. D., with his bold strokes at the fallacies and corruptions of the religious and political world; Rev. Bertha S. Boomer, President of the Society Arch-Triumphant, whose appeals to the honest truth seeker possess a peculiar interest and influence in our propaganda; Lucie Page Borden, who contributes articles especially desirable because of their extraordinary literary merit. Our readers are always pleased with the apt and caustic criticisms of modern theories and institutions by Amanda Potter, with the Pungent Paragraphs of John S. Sargent, and with the treatment of general topics by Mary Everts Daniels.

The Great Luminary of Religio-Scientific and Reform Journalism.

That is what THE FLAMING SWORD is. and we propose to make it brighter. It will deal heavier and more effective blows against all modern shams, hypocrisies, evils, and fallacies; it has always been the fearless champion of the rights of the oppressed-woman in her bondage, and the laboring man under the weight of capitalism. It is foremost on all lines of science, religion, and reform -astronomy, alchemy, geology, natural physics and universal phenomena. the problem of human progression and destiny, the science of life and creation, theology, the science of history, the social problem, the coming revolution, the money question, the science of government, and all kindred subjects.

Our Field Is the World!

THE FLAMING SWORD should be studied by every truth seeker, because its scope embraces a larger field than any other journal. It is devoted to the promulgation of Universology, and this necessarily involves the consideration of all subjects under the sun. There is no other journal devoted to a universal system of thought, but some to reform, some to science, others to religion—and all fallacies, too. The Flaming Sword presents the principles of consummation, and involves the thought of the times—the ne plus ultra of science.

The Social Theocracy the Only Hope of the World.

THE FLAMING SWORD alone, of all the .. religious and reform journals of the world, advocates the Social Theocratic System. We claim and demonstrate that it is in accordance with natural law, and has no part with the artificial and arbitrary socialism of Bellamy. Debs, and others. The Koreshan Social Theocracy involves the principles of the Primitive Christianity-nothing short of this will satisfy the actual needs of the world. Progressive minds interested in reform should not allow this genuine reform movement to march right into success without proving their interest by investigation and comprehension of its principles.

Koreshan Science has Been Demonstrated

The Flaming Sword

"And He placed at the East of the garden of Eden cherubim and a Flaming Sword, which turned every way to keep the Way of the Tree of Life."

Vol. xii, No. 3.

CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 3, 1897. A. K. 59.

Whole No. 262

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

Fatherhood of God and Brotherhood of Man.

HE Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man belong to the divinely regenerated, hence from the world's point of view, all talk about the "brotherhood of man" is a delusion and a snare. Good and evil are two conditions of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, constituting the eternal and essential factors of being. There is a sphere of good, in which there is separation from and absence of evil; there is also a sphere where there is separation from and absence of good, and between these two spheres there is a commingling of good and evil, in which all traces of good are lost and the consciousness of evil is obliterated. The sphere in which dwell the Sons of God, precipitates the eliminations of its activities into the spheres below, where the processes of regeneration gestate and reproduce the pabulum of the Gods. This is the condition of human existence wherein there is an adulteration of truth and good, and they become fallacy and evil. The present state of the world, not yet emerged from the midnight darkness of the medieval age, is such a condition. All present activities are operative on the basis of the competitive system, originating-as pertaining to the Christian church and worldthrough the adulteration of the Christian church with paganism.

The competitive system is not calculated to foster the conditions of brotherhood. There is no affiliation between the so called capitalist and his wage slave. Wage slavery is calculated to develop and foster all that is low, brutal, vulgar, and ferocious in man, and we have to choose between the tyranny of the corporate thief and the brutal ferocity of the wage slave, when it comes to the question of deciding between these two in the exercise of government. The Christian system, inaugurated by the Lord in the initiation of the church of the Christ and the Christian age, was communistic. All upon whom the Holy Spirit was issued were moved upon to sell their possessions and to bring the price of the things sold and lay it at the Apostles' feet, and they had all things common. So far as the Holy Spirit, the very God, operated in men, there was a common brotherhood; outside of this influence there was no common brotherhood, for the simple reason that all upon whom the Holy Spirit did not operate, possessed the spirit of the devil, which is the spirit of the competitive system, both in and out of the church today.

We predict, by the authority of the Almighty, a speedy change in the affairs and laws of government, not merely in the United States, but throughout the world. The beginning of the divine government will be inaugurated in America. The Government of the United States will be metamorphosed. This will not be accomplished through the overthrow of the present government (which, at the present time, is a practical usurpation, according to the Constitution of the United States) and the substitution of what is denominated socialism—for the present socialism is but the ebulition of a more demoralizing chaos than the existing usurpation.

The Lord was planted in the race, as the archetype and germ of the kingdom of righteousness, at the inception of the age. He will arise in his people through a multiplied resurrection (reincarnation) now, at its termination. God will reign in the hearts of as many people as are subject to the coming baptism, through the impending theocrasis. The people of the world who cannot and will not accept of the divine order of human evolution, will become subject to the government of the divine order. We would not overthrow the present government, but we declare most emphatically that it is not the best form of government for the world, though the conceit of the American people causes them to regard it as such. The coming government will be a kingdom, not like the present kingdoms of this world, but a kingdom—Theocratic, a government of the Gods and by the Gods.

The world is trembling over the volcanic mutterings of an abyss, which is about to deluge the existing church and state with its molten lava of eruption. We are even now within the cycling current of the social vortex, into which we are whirling with an accelerating ratio. We can only give the warning and predict the outcome. Future generations will award us the honor of predicting truthfully.

Government and Administration of Whatsoever Party is Ours.

THE Government of the United States is our government. It is the government of the people and belongs to them until, in their wisdom, they desire a better one. The administration is ours so long as its tenure obtains by the voice of the people. We believe it to be the duty of every citizen to assist the public officials of city, state, and nation to execute the policy of the party in office, until it has either proved a success or a failure.

The present administration was elected on the promise of two or three important questions; namely, protective tariff, bimetallism, and the liberation of Cuba. These were the three salient points of the party platform. If the party is proving faithful to these promises, then they are carrying the principles for which the people voted. If they are violating their pledges, then they are disappointing the people; if they fulfil these promises, and prosperity does not follow their efforts, then the people are disappointing themselves. The Republican party may have been honest in its declaration to promote an international sentiment and agreement for the institution of bimetallism. Of course this remains to be seen. We know that in former days Mr. McKinley was a strenuous supporter of the bimetallic principle. It looks now as if the international agreement would not materialize, and we are a little curious to know what line of deception will next be resorted to.

Prosperity seems to be returning to the people who desire high prices. Grain is on the top shelf in prices, but it did not get there until the grain was in the elevators and in the hands of the bulls. The high prices did not reach the farmers, so we do not, as yet, hear them crying prosperity very vociferously. Prosperity

THE great defect most conspicuous in nearly every reform effort of the present age, resides in the determination to leave the Lord Jesus out of the question. It should be remembered that when the dispensation through which the world has just passed culminates in its fruit (a fruitage involving the divine government), such a fufilment will be the evolution or unfolding of

has not yet reached the hundreds of thousands who live from hand to mouth, and whose wages have not advanced—providing they have any work to perform with the advance of the bull in the market.

It may be fortunate for us and the present administration, that the famine in India occurred just in time to enable us to sell our products at high prices at a foreign market; and possibly we ought to thank God for the necessities induced through the famine abroad, which makes the millionaire so comfortable at home. We are reminded of the story of the parent, his boy, and the stork.

A father took his boy into the fields to exhibit to him the beauties of nature, and to descant upon the goodness of God. While walking along, they chanced to come upon a stork wading in the water, and hunting for food among the inhabitants of the water. The stork lifted its neck with a frog in its mouth, and the father, enthusiastic on the beauties of nature and the providence of God, said:

"Look there, my boy, see how God has provided that bird with long legs to wade in the water, and a long neck and bill to collect the food adapted to his use. God does everything wisely in the provision he makes for the lives of all the objects of his creation."

"Yes," said the boy, "I see that he has fixed the stork all right. His legs are up-to-date, and his neck and bill remind me forcibly of the powers of the monopolies of the present age, which imagine everything is prosperous so long as the people have anything left to be robbed of; but don't you think the frogs would have a little more enjoyment if the stork were in some other territory?"

the Book of Life. This kingdom—this opened Book of Life—was originally embodied in its germ, even in Christ the Lord. The planting of his life was the beginning of the generation of the divine order, proceeding from him as a tree proceeds from its seed. Every effort which rejects the Christ of God in its formulas, will come to naught. He is the first and the last, the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end.

The Manufacture of Gold.

HE Chicago News, under the caption, "Making Gold," quotes Mr. Brice, the man who is manufacturing gold, as saying, "I am not an alchemist, nor a believer in alchemy." We have not interviewed Mr. Brice since the appearance of the article, and therefore are not prepared to say just what he does believe regarding either chemistry or alchemy. "But I have found," the News further quotes him as saying, "how to manufacture gold profitably and practicably." If Mr. Brice has "found how to manufacture gold profitably," or at all, he has certainly found how to upset every principle of chemistry that has been taught for the last two hundred years. We have contended since 1870, that gold can be manufactured, and if it can be, then the so called science of chemistry is one of the most gigantic frauds ever perpetrated. If Mr. Brice has "found how to manufacture gold," then he has found how to manufacture every so called metallic substance; for the same principle applied will produce every one of the metals, and also every mineral substance in existence.

Nothing is scientific that is not positively known. The term science is from scire, to know, and is equivalent to our word knowledge. The one term is Latin, the other is Greek. Nothing predicated upon assumption is science. There are certain practical facts pertaining to the combination of substances, coming within the province of what has falsely been denominated chemistry, that we practically know; this is scientific so far as it goes. Involved in the atomic theory, which no man pretends to believe is more than an assumption, is the belief in the eternal existence and non destructibility of the atom. This is one of the positive tenets of so called chemistry. The scientific (?) chemist has declared gold to be a simple element. It is either this, or it is a compound. Has Mr. Brice changed the character of the atom of antimony and transformed it to the atom of gold, (providing he has accomplished what he claims,) or has he merely combined atoms so as to form the substance by the chemical arrangement of atoms? If the latter, then what evidence is there that every metallic substance is not a compound, since gold, which the scientist has classified with the simple elements, is proven by Mr. Brice not to be a simple element?

The same profound, "scientific" wisdom has been applied to the study of the gold atom as to every other metallic substance. Gold can be manufactured, whether or not Mr. Brice has discovered the secret, not only by volcanic action, but by other and more simple methods, and on lines altogether at variance with and not touched by his invention. If Mr. Brice thinks it will be thirty years before the present standard is broken down, he certainly is not a very critical reader of the signs of the times. The gold power will be destroyed in less than thirty years, and Mr. Brice's manufacture of gold will not be the only factor in the accomplishment of so desirable an end.

Rev. Gregory Perturbs the Chicago Clergy.

From the stand taken in last Sunday's sermon I cannot retreat an inch. In that sermon I charged that the system calling itself Christianity was destructive of virtue, of reason, and of joy; and of the truthfulness of the charge I am still convinced. By the 'system calling itself Christianity,' I meant the historic creeds, Catholic and Protestant, with the teachings collateral thereto; and I intended to convey the idea that the inevitable tendency of the system was to weaken the springs of moral action, to befog and cripple human thinking, and to diminish the sum of human happiness.

In support of that proposition I attempted to show that the nobler manhood had come about only as men had felt the divinity within their own souls; that the world had forged ahead only as it had scorned the dictation of the priests and parsons; and that the world began to be happy only when it began to shake off the ancient dread of the wrathful God and his burning hell. The chief object of the sermon in question was to show that the system calling itself Christianity was Christian only in name, that it was a wretched caricature of the real preaching of the man of Galilee. I then tried to show that what we needed was not creeds, but the Christ; not the metaphysics of the doctors, but the morality of the Master; not the gewgaws of the ritualist, or the gimcracks of the tract monger, but the plain and simple precepts of the man of truth and love.

I undertook to prove that the Christain religion, as interpreted by the average orthodox divine, was a wholy different thing from the religion proclaimed by Jesus in old Galilee. I tried to show that whereas Jesus had made all things subordinate to human culture and development, the theologians had made the church first; to which they had sacrificed human virtue, human reason, and human joy.

Hence, it will be perceived that I was speaking not against Christ, but for him. I was advocating his simple truth and homely love as against the senseless theologizing of the orthodox preachers.—T. B. Gregory.

THE Rev. T. B. Gregory has incited the animus of some of the small fry Doctors of Divinity, by telling what he thinks of modern Chistianity. The ebulition in the orthodox pot is all the more turbulent, from the fact that some of the things he says are true. It cannot be denied that modern so called science is leading the church—the modern church, by the nose, and that the things which the church formerly opposed in the "scientific" world, because regarded as opposed to Christianity, are now accepted by the church.

It seems a little peculiar that inspired people—people filled with the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Truth—should, by the influence of the Holy Spirit, be compelled to resent the encroachments of "science," and then by the same Holy Ghost confess to the correctness of a "science," the teachers of which are principally atheists. It looks peculiar, but it is nevertheless true. The difficulty with the Rev. Gregory is, that he is tatooed with the same paint which the world calls science, and when he talks of the Divinity in man, he refers more especially to that hell in men which has made itself respectable and progressive by its development on moral and intellectual lines that are a delusion and a snare.

The only thing that gives so called Christianity its distinction from paganism is its name; and this is the only thing remaining in the church, of its original character. The knowledge of God and the life of the Christ, as Christian characteristics, are expunged from the catalogue of genuine characteristics. If a man whose life bore the indices of the Lord's character, should walk the earth, it would be enough to bring upon him the anathemas of the modern church and the farcical system which today is called Christianity.

Boom Prosperity a Failure.

THERE is evidently something the matter with the prosperity boom, in the estimation of the masses. It is merely on paper. The recent election in New York and other states, seems to indicate that the McKinley administration is not altogether satisfactory to the people.

In an interview with farmers living not many miles from Chicago, we recently made inquiries regarding the prices received for grain, and learned that, though a great hue and cry had been made by the goldbug papers of Chicago, about the high prices of grain and the sudden financial boom of the prosperous agriculturist, there is really no improvement in that particular line of commerce, behind the granaries in the hands of the monopolist.

The world is too far gone in the direction of corrupt combinations ever to return to conditions advantageous to the common people, through any ordinary course of progress. We are nearing the end of a dispensation, and the fight on hand is but the skirmish line in advance of the great battle. We are coming with accelerated strides to the inevitable consequence of the hell-born system of competism. The competitive system has created, on the one hand, the oppressive corporate thief and legislative corruptionist (and therefore corrupt legislation), and on the other a horde of hungry wolves incorporating themselves into packs, and these are even more rapacious and oppressive and less considerate than the legalized and scientific pirate.

That "there is no remission of sins without the shedding of blood," will be verified with emphasis in the near future; but out of the debris of the coming catastrophe, phœnix-like, will arise the Theocracy ordained of God, germinated in Christ the Lord, and fructified in the manifestation of the immortal Sons of God.

CONTRIBUTORS' AND EDITOR'S DEPARTMENTS.

The Coming Universal Empire.

BY PROF. U. G. MORROW.

HE establishment of a glorious kingdom of righteousness in the earth has been the object of the hope of all people for thousands of years. The seers and prophets of all ages have foretold the coming of a glad day, when all the earth would rejoice in realization of the great jubilee! If we take the descriptions given by those who have foreseen the condition of the world in its time of recreation, we would view the greatest civilization, with magnificent cities peopled with a humanity free from oppression, free from selfishness and the curses of competition; a superior, wise, benevolent, noble humanity, endowed with immortal life. If we take the evidences of the universally implanted instinct, hope and desire of all nations for such a jubilee, we would still view a day of magnificent splendor, where all the energies of life are economized, and the world governed in accordance with a knowledge of the laws of life and unity.

Suppose we were suddenly to come into consciousness and realization of such a condition of the world. What marvels, what remarkable changes, what wonderful transformations would greet us on every hand! The mind could not fail to note the many evidences that the goal of humanity had been reached—a happy people, without crime, in the enjoyment of all that earth, skill, and knowledge could produce. Would we not wonder what had wrought the great revolution and wonderful transformation from the hells of competism to the actual living and divine brotherhood of man?

We may well consider how the world will come to enjoy the splendor of the golden age. We ask if the modern reforms, such as single-tax, labor exchange, socialism, co-operation, and other exclusive lines, are adequate to accomplish the reformation of the world? The reformation must extend into all lines of human relations. The nature of man must be changed; he must reach the plane of actual knowledge of universal law; he must come in touch with newer and more potent mental spheres, and must experience a transformation of his entire structure before desirable societal relations can obtain.

The genuine reform movement must be the inevitable result of universal development. It must be the culmination of all human experience, the bringing down into tangible manifestation the very essence of all cyclic evolutions and involutions of life. The system that undertakes the world's reformation must be at the focus of all progress of the past,—it must be the actual penciling of the lines of light at the end of the grand cycle, the point of concentration of all energies conspiring to express themselves in a world made new. We hold that the creation of such conditions is the greatest work which God or man can perform. The stupendous undertaking involves all the powers of truth and good—all the forces of the heavens!

The revolution is coming; following in the train of the destructive forces now operative in the world, which will ultimate in the complete demolition of all existing institutions, will be the establishment of the divine kingdom. Students of prophecy have long seen that the establishment of a universal empire is vividly portrayed throughout the Bible. The great prophetic chain of Daniel reaches down to the overthrow of all present governments: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." We are advocating the coming of the King of kings and Lord of lords, and claim that the Koreshan System alone, of all other concepts in the world, involves in unity and completeness, the science of reconstruction of human society and the science of human salvation, which will be applied in the most external degree after the present disintegrating elements have performed their work of the destruction of all old systems.

True reform is magnanimous, humanitarian, divine. We are not advocating brutal force, nor marshaling secret societies for the field of contest. We desire the protection of man in his rights, and this involves the throwing out of protective spheres against the tyranny of labor unions as well as against the oppression of monopolies. We make no call to arms. We are not arrayed against the Government of the United States, nor do we defy those in power. We are living under a system of government that for the present, is the best means to an end. We desire to fight no battles that will not bring the reformation fulfilling the predictions of the greatest prophets and teachers of the past. The powers of liberation of the enslaved are not the forces

TRUE charity is not the distribution of alms. There should be no alms, nor any occasion for them. They are but the glaring indications of man's inhumanity to man—exhibitions of a dearth of genuine Christian character and life.

* * *

Greed will be eradicated when through the baptism of fire (divine love) the heart of stone is transformed to

of the rabble, nor of the misguided leaders of so called reform, and freedom can come neither by the use of the bullet nor the ballot.

Mental force is the most potent factor of destruction of the old world. The old institutions and systems are victims of the energies of disintegration; thousands of mental batteries are formed with which to lay in waste the old church and state-all corrupt institutions. While the mental dynamic bombs are being exploded in the pulpit, in the daily press, in the legislative halls, and in the courts of the world, there is being formed a gigantic human battery for the generation and conservation of the energies necessary in the reconstruction of human society and in the establishment of the great universal kingdom in the earth. The positive pole of that battery is the center of the most progressive spheres of human thought involved in the Koreshan System, the nucleus of the coming universal empire, the "stone cut out of the mountain without hands," which shall break in pieces the colossal image of competism. The time is coming when it will be truthfully proclaimed: "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," and the masses will be glad when he has taken unto himself great power and has begun his reign!

The stupendous work of genuine reform is the work of the Almighty-not in a spiritual world, but here in the earth will be expressed the practical, tangible, and saving manifestations of divine power. He alone can make all old things pass away and all things become new. The twentieth-century religion must be true and divine; the economics of the new era must be in harmony with the divine religion, and the laws of the new government must go forth from the anthropostic center, the Theocratic Head of the new Order. The wonderful system of divine economy of the glorious future must regulate all the affairs and relations of humanity. Its establishment will be the inauguration of the great commonwealth, the breathing into man the breath of divine vigor, and the illumination of the world through the science of life. It will be the great Theocratic System, the tying together of church and state, the conjunction of God and man, the manifestation of the Sons of God, the resurrection of the dead. All these things will be the result of the application of the Koreshan scientific principles already discovered; they must obtain here in this visible and tangible world in fulfilment of the desires of humanity and of God. Who could ask for more? Who could be satisfied with less?

the heart of flesh. All human expectations built upon any other foundation will inevitably meet with failure and disappointment.

The Lord Christ briefly enunciated the law of life, but he did not give to the world the formulated process for the achievement of victory over death—that mystery was left for the end of the age to reveal.

Transformation in Human Nature Necessary.

BY REV. ELEANORE M. CASTLE.

A criticism of Bellamy's "Equality" in the Quarterly Bcok Review, Chicago, strikes the key-note of the question of reform, so prominent in all minds at the present time. It is to the effect that to accomplish such a reformation of conditions as Bellamy pictures, requires not merely a change of methods, but a radical change in human nature itself;—following with the statement, "An ideal state requires, as a condition precedent, ideal men."

It is the recognition of this truth which distinguishes the Koreshan movement from all other efforts in the direction of social reconstruction, and it is its knowledge of the possibility of such a change and the means of its accomplishment, which distinguishes its directing thought from the thought which recognizes the necessity of such a change yet denies its possibility.

Koreshanity prophesies a reign of peace and plenty and good will in a world of material wonders transcending those pictured in Bellamy's book—to be realized within the time indicated there; but this will not be brought about without a radical change in human nature. To effect this change is the primary motive of the Koreshan teaching. From humanity has been produced one ideal man—Jesus, the Christ. From his planting in the race, it is possible—nay, inevitable—that other ideal men be produced as the fruit of that planting. That, at some period of the world's development, the selfishness of humanity and the godless competition born of that selfishness, should rapidly, through man's voluntary effort as directed by law, be transformed to loving kindness and united life, is a marvelous thing, but no more incredible than that in accordance with the laws of growth in the vegetable kingdom, the bitter astringency of unripe fruit should suddenly be transformed to the inellow sweetness of maturity.

The directing power is here, and must be recognized. A little more experimentation by Socialists, Nationalists, Single-taxers, and they will have demonstrated their blindness, and will be ready to be guided by the beacon light of all true progress, the law of God as formulated by Moses, exemplified by Jesus, the Christ, and in this age scientifically revealed by Koreshanity.

Prosperity and High Prices.

BY REV. BERTHA S. BOOMER.

THE optimistic Republican party continues to cry prosperity! prosperity! when there is no prosperity, in the sense of common wealth or weal. There are the profits of "high prices" for the monopolist and his minions, but the wage slave, large as the crops are said to have been, does not feel particularly prosperous just after he has paid $6. for a barrel of flour. One year ago, before we were afflicted with the present prosperity, he could have purchased it for $3.50. Prices of certain staples have been forced up by the money power as a discretionary measure, in its own interests, but there has been no corresponding purchasing power forced into the possession of the masses.

The vast resources of this country are becoming more manifest every day. The mechanical appliances for utilizing the physical energies of nature in the service of humanity, multiply with a rapidity that is simply marvelous. If both were not in the control of that supreme devil of mortal selfishness—the love of money, it would be easy to believe the day not far distant when the present desperate struggle to maintain a comfortable animal existence would be unknown to every living creature. During the regime of the ever-enslaving profit system of the competitive world, humanity at large must struggle in vain to be free, in the vortex of a quicksand destined to suck it into the hells of despair and destruction.

The "high prices" variety of prosperity works about this way: Here is a small shoe manufacturer lacking surplus capital. He has certain contracts on hand, made with materials at a given price. Now comes a wave of so called prosperity to the leather trade; its moguls regulate the price, as impulsed by the knowledge that the retailers' stocks are running low. Leather being "up," the small manufacturer with contracts on hand, sees a very contracted hole through which he must crawl, taking his life as a manufacturer in hand. His contracts force him to make the venture; he gets in the "squeeze," it is too much for him—exit manufacturer, enter Neophyte wage slave. Greater leather mogul! Glorious prosperity McKinley!

Nothing deserves the name of prosperity which is not the result of giving the producer the full value of his labor in the products of labor, without money and without price. There is no real prosperity in the world today. Equity in a divine or moral sense, is an unknown quantity in our civilized barbarism. When will the world awake and perceive the real quality of our civilization to be but a degree of refinement of an immoral hell? Gold is the god of this world, and everything held sacred in the sphere of truly divine ideals is sacrificed to it. The day is not distant when this world is to be glutted with gold; it will be found in enormous quantities, and manufactured at a nominal cost... The laws of alchemy will become generally known, through an enforced recognition of the form and functions of the universe. When these laws are known, gold will be -in the literal meaning of the world-price-less, or without value, as value is now reckoned. The gold god's days are numbered, and his worshipers' fate is sure. The knowledge of alchemy is the power that can defy the fixing of the price of gold as the standard of value, on any commodity of use to men, and terminate the enslavement of man to his fellow man, under the curse of labor.

The prosperity of common wealth is a glorious factor of America's future welfare. This kind of prosperity, however, McKinley and the Wall street money power will never devise or originate. Its institution demands a more divine wisdom than they possess.

There is a center of mental potency in this country that is quietly energizing all progressive thought to its ultimate of power. From this center radiate all the suggestive energies of great truths insisting upon Practical experimentation in all the recognition. realms of science is enforced by mental suggestion from a primary center, and the chemist, the electrician, the physician, statesman, and the theologian, will ere long find themselves confronted by facts in which truths will be revealed that are destined to make their hearts fail for fear, because of things coming in the earth.

All people need the coming of true prosperity, and nothing hinders it but that reigning outrage upon universal humanity-the money power. The wide world over, we see humanity's right to broad, free life, happy in the liberty of righteousness, sacrificed to the basest passion of mortal souls, the greed of gain at the cost of another's loss and sorrow. The love of money, and consequently the power of money, must be destroyed in the vidual thought. We must look upon the evils of poverty on the one hand and excessive luxury on the other, and let a hatred of the cause take deep root in the will, in order to compel the will to yield to the impulse of the rational conclusion, that only in the establishment of the equitable distribution of the products of labor, value for value, as estimated on the basis of related quantity and quality of labor, can the nations ever know real prosperity. High prices may be temporarily beneficial to the few, but necessarily they will ultimately be disastrous to all.

The eyes of many are being opened to the real condition of America's social and industrial affairs. Books such as Bellamy's "Equality," serve to agitate the public mind, but Bellamy and all the would-be reformers put together do not possess the requisite focalization of divine mentality to reveal to an awakening humanity, by demonstration, the scientific truths which must be the basis of social equity. A man equal to such a task is the Fruition of the Ages, the Pole Star of all future progress. He is the pivot of age-lasting destinies, and the hiding place of the Almighty.

Stand quietly on the thoroughfare of any of America's crowded industrial centers, and study the homereturning armies of the working masses; study their faces; their carriage, their garb, and their languageand then try honestly to write an article aglow with enthusiasm over national prosperity;—you cannot do it. Don't study the reports of the board of trade and the stock exchanges, to find records of high prices of staple goods, as evidences of prosperity; study rather the records in the faces of your kindred humanity, and bemoan the pitiableness of the true story of human greed and human need. Let us find a God somewhere, who can help us in this day of trouble!

Heaven and Hell: A Parable.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

NCE upon a time I was passing along a rough way, and the road stretched on and on before and after I could not see whence it came nor whither it led, and I did not know how far I must travel to find a resting place. The stones cut my feet and the briers tore my clothes; the sky was dark and lowering, the wind icy cold. I could not tell how I came to be there in the bleakness; I only knew that the path was called life. I saw many travelers coming and going, but they hurried past me with their friends and my heart was lonely.

Then I thought an angel came to me in white raiment and spoke to me very tenderly; he soothed and comforted me with words of cheer; he bound up my bleeding feet, and then he took me in his arms and bore me to the gate of heaven. I saw the light streaming out and I heard strains of soft music. I was very glad. The angel set me down upon the threshold, and I thought he put out his hand to open the gate. "Sorrow is past!" I cried; "henceforth I shall wander through green pastures and linger beside still waters; God will wipe away all my tears."

"Come this way," said the angel, beckoning with his hand. I thought we were going a little further to enter by another gate, and I followed joyfully. The angel guided me to a wide portal; we went in. I looked about me and lo, I was in hell. It was dark and the air was stifling. The angel stood beside me, the light from his face shone out into the gloom and I saw it was the Lord. I fell at his feet.

"Why have you brought me here?" I cried bitterly. for my disappointment was very great.
"To work for me," said the Lord gently.
"But I can't work, Lord, my heart is so weary and my hands are tired."

The Lord said, "Give me your hands."

"But I can't breathe here, the air is so foul and

He said, "You can make it purer."

"But I must have rest, Lord; think how far I have

He said; "My yoke is easy and my burden light." "But I thought you were taking me to heaven."

"What is heaven?" "Lord, I know not."

Then the Lord said: "The joy of the angels in heaven is in no other thing than the performance of use to the neighbor. All the delights of heaven are conjoined with uses.

I did not understand these words and I sat down and wept, for my heart was broken with disappointment. By and by I looked up through my tears and the Lord smiled. Then I understood. Digitized by GOGIC

Education According to Prescription.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, PH. D.

EDUCATION has not been conducted according to the eternal verities, but according to prescription. Such is the pass to which the world has long since come. A bloated millionaire who has acquired his millions not by legitimate means, but by robbery (legal, it is true, but none the less robbery), in order to make permanent his title to his ill-gotten possessions, endows a great university which teaches that the methods by which he accumulated his money are right. The world and the church proclaim him a great benefactor of the race, and a promoter of Christian education. When a professor in this same university broadens his instructions beyond the scope of Wall street views and mammon methods, he is invited to step down and out. A university established and endowed with the hard earnings of the pious poor, had its head taken off by the edict of the same god of this world, because he did not utter, with regard to silver, the shibboleth of the same money god that now relentlessly rules the world. "Truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter," so that it is entirely in keeping with the spirit of the times that silver, the symbol of truth, should be under the ban.

The above are not the only cases of the kind, but usually the devil (the god of this world—age) is more wily in his methods, and the obnoxious teacher is disposed of by other methods than those which appear. It is hard enough for truth to make headway where it has an open field and a fair fight, but where, openly or under false pretenses, its teachers are driven from their places, what, apparently, are the chances for the triumph of right?

We do not mean to say that the present advocates of silver have the truth; far from it. But the principle has a wider application. The power that can reach its hand into the sacred halls of education and strike down one class of teachers, which it thinks inimical to its power, can do so to any other class; and the real truth stands no chance against it. But men can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth. In striking down its supposed advocates, this conscienceless power is only preparing the way to victory for the very truth it hates and would destroy. A partial truth is the most dangerous and deceptive form of lie. When a mightier lie, like the gold standard, strikes down the lesser-silver, bimetallism, it is only preparing the way for its own downfall, and for the triumph of the great truth of communism, of which Jesus the Christ laid the foundation, a substructure which is certain to bear up securely the happy destinies of the human race for ages, when the present mis-rule of mammon will be forgotten, or only cherished as a horrible memory.

In the Editorial Perspective.

WRITER in the Boston Investigator heads an article, "Why I Despise Christ," and at once proceeds to give his concept of the man Iesus who lived nineteen hundred years ago. He simply despises his own conception, and the best thing he could do, so as not to be out of harmony with that which he conceives, would be to originate a conception that he would like. Our conceptions are the product of the will and the intellect, the character being determined by desire, and can be no more magnanimous than our sphere of thought is capable of producing, and no more correct than the intellect of that sphere will admit. Some people like their conceptions of Christ, but that is no proof that such conceptions are correct, any more than are the things other people conceive and despise. The matter must be transferred from the realm of speculation to that of science. The trouble with agnostics is, that they are repelled from the orthodox spheres of thought, and are filled with the orthodox conceptions about the man Jesus, and with the popular interpretations of his doctrines; hence they are in position to only negative and despise the fallacies of modern Christianity. They can only look at the personality and doctrines of Jesus from the old exploded popular standpoint, and despise what they seethey do not see the real thing any more than do the conceited occupants of the modern pulpits. If the writer referred to ever exerts the volume of influence upon the world that Jesus did, he will have to move into more potent and positive spheres of mental activity and genuine scientific comprehension of absolute truth—and this seems to be a long way off to the negative agnos-tic, who is positive in nothing except in the fact that everybody else is wrong. There is no other logical standpoint from which one can determine what is wrong, than the positive pole of knowledge of scientific truth. How does the agnostic (the man who does not know) determine what is fallacious?

Dr. McGlynn concludes that Henry George was an inspired prophet. He says: "He was simply a seer, a prophet sent by God. * * I believe I am not guilty of any profanation of the sacred Scripture when I say that there was a man sent from God, and his name was Henry George." It is remarkable that a prophet should come into the world and not know himself. Popularity and a tinge of sympathy for the single tax are the only things which led Dr. McGlynn to his conclusion, for he is not the man to follow a prophet in obscurity, no matter how true the teachings of the prophet might be. It is far easier to follow a prophet of our own making at the time we choose, than to recognize and follow the genuine Teacher of the age.

The government makes appropriations of millions of dollars yearly for the improvement of rivers and harbors, to assist in the gigantic schemes of politicians and capitalists; but nothing to help the oppressed working man. The men elected to represent the millions of workingmen do not desire to solicit aid for their relief; do not wish to suggest the purchase of machinery and plants for the benefit of those who are now making the wealth of the millionaires. They will introduce no measures for the establishment of co-operative experiments, nor put forth any effort which is not for the interests of the few who control the world by the power of money.

A scientist has made the announcement of the discovery of gold in solution in sea water, and is projecting a plan of obtaining gold from the ocean. This is looked upon as a wonderful discovery, simply because it is announced in regular scientific channels. But let the scientist answer how, according to modern chemistry, can gold reside in solution in water? It has been taught in the Koreshan Alchemy for over a quarter of a century, that the waters of the ocean contain in solution not only gold, but every so called material element in the universe. Chemistry will not admit of such a conclusion; alchemy demonstrates the fact.

Some people want to reform the world by having humanity born right, and hence a "new crusade" on lines of sex reform. The trouble with the world is that they are "born in sin and shapen in iniquity," and are necessarily mortal. Yes, the secret lies in having men born right, but that cannot be accomplished by looking after pre-natal conditions, hygiene, and dress reform, nor by Sunday School stories. The application of scientific principles of the transformation of the mortal flesh to the immortal flesh, right here on the earth's surface, must constitute the prime factor of the new crusade.

The Adventists presume to have found the Christ who has been so long looked for. The Adventists have long thought that he would come in the clouds of the physical heavens, but it seems that their views have been changed. We find the following in the Messiah's Adrocate, Nov. 1st, in "Life Line Notes," by V. H. Hunt, Life Line Evangelist: "I am in Christ at Pacific Grove, Monterey Co., Cal, and Christ is in me;" and among his items further down the column we see, "It's just wonderful how birds of a feather will flock together."

A baker in New York City has proposed to give remnants of the previous day's baking to all who apply at midnight. The applications have increased until the file of applicants is two blocks long. They are not tramps, but citizens—voters without work or means of supplying their families. This is evidence of prosperity in New York, but it is the prosperity of greed and selfishness, which continue to make possible the scenes of dire distress. Those who are disposed to give to the poor will never be able permanently to relieve their distress.

A meteoric stone has fallen near Binghampton, Canada. A few scientists presume to have found hieroglyphics carved upon it, and Prof. Wiggins has declared his belief that this stone carries a message from the inhabitants of one of the planets. Percival Lowell should see it at once, for he would be sure that it came from Mars; he is the champion of Martian irrigation by means of canals 40 to 400 miles in width. The blasted stone perhaps resulted from an explosion of a dynamite charge of Mars' greatest canal contractor.

The Socialist Labor Party, representing but a fragment of social reform effort, appeals to the workingmen of the world to join their ranks. They constitute one of the many elements of modern disintegration to break down and destroy the old structures, but they will never be able to rebuild that which will be demolished. The Socialist Labor movement does not possess a mind that is capable of defining the principles upon which the true social organization is to be founded.

Competition costs millions, not only of dollars, but of lives. $500,000,000 are expended annually in commercial circles for the various forms of advertising, and thousands of millions for buildings in which to conduct the competitive business. Add to these millions the cost of transportation, salaries of clerks, and other expenses, and then look in vain for a single evidence of economy in the production and distribution of the goods of commerce.

Debs is posing as the founder of a new religion—at least he is calling his new social democracy the "New Christianity." It now behooves him to define the principles of the evolution of the "New Christianity" from the primitive, and a corresponding evolution of the life and character of the instigator of the social democracy from the life and character of the Founder of Christianity nineteen hundred years ago.

The "ray filter" for camera lenses, bichromate of potash, would be useless and its name a misnomer, if light were a mere mode of motion and not a substance. Substance can be filtered, reflected, and refracted, but nothing cannot. Koreshan Science teaches the substantiality of force or energy—light, heat, electricity, magnetism, the X-rays, mind, darkness, etc. It is the antithesis of the popular physics and chemistry.

The burdens of the millions of workingmen today are a hundred times heavier than the yoke of England on the colonists of America at the time of the Declaration of Independence. The bondage to gold is worse than the slavery of the Israelites, worse than the monarchy and oppression of George III. The spirit of freedom then was patriotism; now it is considered to be the spirit of rebellion.

Scientists object to every discovery not made by one of their own number. Laymen in the scientific, medical, religious, and social fields are supposed to be incapable of projecting anything worthy of attention. Great discoveries are always made by men outside of the professional ranks.

When a new truth is proclaimed, everybody at once urges that it is absurd, and that nobody but fools believe it. In a few years, when they find it gaining a foothold in influential circles, they say, "He was not the first to teach that," and finally, "Why, I always believed that!"

The usual reforms are projected on too small a scale. Nationalists do not look forward to a universal government. Popular reforms mean only to modify, not to revolutionize, existing institutions. The new system of government will be universal—adapted to all peoples.

After all the study of the Bible on the part of the modern churches, they are no nearer a comprehension of it than when they began. Modern theologians are unable to interpret it, and the tendency is not to acknowledge their inability, but to pronounce the book wrong.

Japan, while being "civilized" after the order of the occident, is being bondaged to gold in the clutches of the Rothschilds. This is one of the results of opening the doors of a nation to the influences of modern Christianity.

Robert T. Lincoln, in his relation to the Pullman Palace Car Co., and other monopolies, assists in the promotion of a system of greater oppression than that from which 4,000,000 slaves were freed by Abraham Lincoln in 1864.

Is the "dreibund" formed by Chile, Peru, and Argentine for the purpose of forcing Bolivia to war so as to compel her to divide territory, evidence of the brotherhood of nations or of humanity?

The so called dignity of American labor is somewhat less ened by the importation of American workmen to take the place of the striking engineers in England.

The Freethinkers want the world to worship Bruno, the Italian reformer, instead of Jesus, the Christ. The agnostics have gods after all, and small ones, too!

Monism is a kind of cosmo-theological concept which holds that there is but one existence, of which the various phenomena are many modes.

Concerning the form of the universe, the Koreshan System presents some inside facts.

* * * Astronomical Martyrs.

The astronomical evolving forces received an impetus in the fifteenth century by earnest, thoughtful, and ambitious men, that has been steadily progressive. The wheel of science has not lost a single revolution, having received momentum from such heroes and martyrs as Giordano, Bruno, and Campanelli. The fallacy of Biblical teaching concerning the contour of this earth and its immobility, as well as its being the only world, was proven by these courageous students. Martyrdom was their penalty. Bruno was burned at the stake in 1600 by Christians. He was the Knight Errant of the new philosophy over Europe, was faithful to the truth, and gave up his life without fear of punishment hereafter. His last words were, turning his face from the crucifix; "Perhaps with greater fear you pass the sentence upon me than I receive it."—Freethought Ideal.

Fallacy can receive an impetus through persecution, as well as truth. It is no fault of the Bible that its worst enemies have been its pretended friends. Its enemies are those who cannot comprehend it, but those who zealously act from the standpoint of its misconceptions constitute no greater bar to progress than the misguided scientists. The truth of the Bible teaching—concerning the contour of the earth and its immobility, as well as its being the only world,—has been proven by geodetic survey; and a single fact of such demonstration is worth more in the train of true conclusion than all the agnostic fallacies the world can produce. The church and the so called freethinkers should be the best of friends. Modern science walks arm-in-arm between modern Christianity and freethought, and is a last hope of each—they cling tenaciously to the scientific fallacies they desire. The false science will finally absorb and unite them in the matured evolution of "higher criticism."

* * * Kill the Heroes, Then Honor Them.

The sensible people, the well-educated, respectable people of the day, are almost sure to be on the wrong side of every great moral question when it first arises. They mean to do right, but they trust to their logical faculties instead of to their instincts; and the consequence is that they are eager to stone those very reformers of whom, in later years, they become the most ardent admirers.—Henry Childs Merwin, in Atlantic.

The above takes it for granted that human instinct is always right and logic wrong. If people are on the wrong side of a moral question, it is simply because there is something wrong with their morals. That is why the world opposed Jesus; and he diagnosed their case exactly, when he said, "Ye are of your father, the devil." The reason that people generally are opposed to the genuine science of reformation, is because they will not or cannot use their reasoning faculties, but follow the instincts of self and the impulses of evil.

Correspondence and Brief Replies.

What is your attitude toward others in the field of reform, and toward other journals advocating socialism, co-operation, etc.?—A. H., Chicago.

We are favorably disposed toward every effort for the benefit of humanity. We are tolerant and liberal, because truth increases the altitude of observation and enables the observer to obtain broader views than the mere fragmentary beliefs entertained by many in the work of so called reform. There are many sincere efforts being put forth to remedy the evil conditions that exist in the world. A great protest is beng expressed against the money power and other evils of competism. Thousands of factors are operative to disintegrate the corrupt systems. We do not advocate them, nor endorse all the measures adopted by those who would like to reform the world. We hold that the true reformer must understand thoroughly what he is about, and must be able to demonstrate that the principles upon which his system or movement is founded, are scientifically true. The time is coming when the masses will demand the application of the principles of the system that is reasonable and capable of guaranteeing, by scientific demonstrations and analysis of universal law, that it will remove the curse now upon the world. All other systems, in the experimental stages, will be discarded as inadequate. We hold that the only system that will stand the final and crucial test of successfull scientific reformation is the Koreshan System of Religio-Science. There can be but one successful system, and that is the true one. Judging from the diversity of economic beliefs, we are forced to the conclusion that the majority of reform leaders are wrong. They cannot prove their claims.

I have received both your letters, but at this time I can write you but briefly, to say that I am still interested in the Koreshan Science, especially concerning astronomy. Your replies to my questions were very satisfactory, as far as I am able to understand them. Your reasoning concerning the thickness of the earth's shell is good, and to me somewhat startling. I had conceived of the probability of getting at it through what you call the simplest pro-cesses of analogical reasoning, but you have made it a great deal plainer to me. Your second process of reasoning, from the specific gravity of the primary metals of the shell, is much more preferable to me; I think it is more positively scientific; for with a knowledge of what the primary metallic substances are, I think it possible to positively demonstrate the actual thickness of the earth's crust. I am surprised that such a conclusion could be logically arrived at, for I had thought it could be only theory, but I belive it can be actually determined. Concerning the question of other universes, your reasoning does not seem to me to be quite so good. * * Give me the best explanation you can. If you are right in regard to this being the only universe, I want to know it. If there is any good, natural basis from which to reason, I think I can reach a positive conclusion.—H. M. P., Hamburg, Iowa.

We thank you for your kind words and expressions of interest, and we are glad that some features of the Koreshan System appeal to you as being positively satisfactory from the basis of demonstrated science. Other features of the System are equally satisfactory when understood, and the proofs are equally conclusive. We will reply to that part of your letter concerning the matter of "other universes," by mail, as the subject would require more space than we can now appropriate for it. In the meantime, we shall be glad to have a word from you again.

In the last Sword you called for lists of names, also persons desiring to act as agents in distributing Koreshan literature, and soliciting subscriptions for the Sword. I enclose a few names and addresses, and if you will kindly inform me about the work you want done in behalf of your paper, we will be glad to act as your agent.

—R. T., Sauk City, Wis.

We are pleased to have the offer of your services to assist in the circulation of THE FLAMING SWORD. We have received a number of hearty responses to the call you refer to, and are arranging a plan of work for our representatives which we will put into operation as soon as possible. In the meantime, with a sample copy of the new SWORD, solict subscriptions and continue to send us names and addresses for sample copies. Millions need to have the SWORD, but to place it before them we need the co-operation of thousands of our readers.

Why does not the Founder of Koreshanity make gold and perform other scientific wonders that he writes about, and thus be able to promulgate the System rapidly?

—J. K.

Simply because he does not wish to contribute to the wealth of those now controlling the products of the world. When the time comes, utilization will be made of thousands of forces of the universe for the welfare of humanity, but that must obtain at a time when invention and improvement are beyond the reach of the imitating, thieving, and plagiarizing ghouls of modern science. The benefits of true science will be realized in the new era when they can be appreciated—not now, in this thankless, heedless, and ungrateful generation!

I am 72 years of age, and have been in ill health since the war. I greatly desire the weekly Sword, but I am not able to forward the cash for it, but I think I can do so by the time the subscription expires.—M. H. Z., Loch Three, Ala.

We are always glad to send the Sword to those who desire it. No doubt our friends will make some sacrifice to send us the amount of subscription, and it would be a good thing would be as conscientious, and sacrifice something that could be done without. In cases where it is impossible for a subscriber to pay, and will make the statement to that effect to us, we will pay their subscriptions from funds set apart We desire such, howfor that purpose. ever, to keep copies loaned out among friends, and in this way help us while we help them.

J. B., Koenig, Mo.—Your favor at hand with remittance. Glad to note your interest. Shall be glad to answer your questions if you will kindly submit them to us. The Koreshan System is complete, and quite capable of satisfying you upon every point. If it does not, the fault is with you.

From Appreciative Readers.

I enclose sufficient means to insure having The Flaming Sword for as long a period in advance as I could, as it is really the most important and interesting paper ever brought before my notice, and so rich in food for thought. As a truth-seeker I should not like to be without it, if I could possibly help it. I cannot explain to you the intense enjoyment I experienced in reading the reports of the practical demonstrations by mechanical means of the fact that we live on a concave surface, and I trust that many apparent mysteries and difficulties in connection with the wonderful universe, will be revealed in due time through the various channels of your publications.—G. R., Aukland, New Zealand.

I am in receipt of a copy of THE FLAMING SWORD, Nov. 19, the contents of which I have read with deep interest. I never heard of the publication before, and know nothing of the doctrines it teaches, or the principles it defends or maintains. I may say I am a young man of twenty, with a strong desire to learn something about this great science. I should be pleased to have my name placed on your subscription list. I want to learn something about Koreshan Science; in which I am deeply interested; there is much in it.—DeW. C. W., Boonville, Mo.

In reading the reports from the experimenting Staff on the Gulf coast, I can but marvel and wonder, and ask, Can it be indeed, that the Cellular Cosmogony is true, and is demonstrated beyond question? If so, what a tremendous revolution it must bring! Friends ask me, "Do you really believe this astonishing theory?" I can only answer, "I do not know; let us give its advocates a respectful and unbaised hearing, and be ready to accept the truth, no matter how many idols it may destroy.—C. B., Salem, Ohio.

Now you have got me stuck by sending me a sample copy of your paper. I am "plumb at sea." I am considered the biggest crank in town, but you have distanced me! What is this Koreshan System? Can't you send me 50 cents' worth of your tracts, so as to enable me to learn what you are striking at? I am knocked plumb out of "the Christmas tree," so to speak, and want you to send me the ABC's of the System.—C. L., Ft. Scott, Kansas.

Will you please send me copies of THE FLAMING SWORD, or give me some information regarding Koresh. I am interested in iconoclastic work, and shall be glad to take the paper; also to have the pleasure of corresponding with some one who can give me the desired information. Hoping to get some light concerning the Koreshan System, I remain, W. L. F., M.D., Member Washington State Legislature.

You certainly would greatly oblige me by continuing THE FLAMING SWORD to my address. If I had it to give, I would be just as willing to send you $5.00 a year as $1.00. I cannot speak too highly of the Sword, and cannot express my feelings for the cause it represents. Let its circulation soon reach the utmost parts of the earth!—E. C. D., Terre Hill, Pa.

Public (Free) Library, St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 22, 1897.—The Board of Directors of the St. Louis Public (Free) Library acknowledges receipt of The Flaming Sword, weekly, Vol. 12, No. 1, for which please accept sincere thanks. Please continue the donation.—F. M. C., Librarian and Secretary.

I am somewhat inclined to believe what you teach. I desire to know and thoroughly understand all your teachings. I know you teach some truths, and with what little knowledge I have, I dare not dispute your claims, lest I lie against the truth.—W. L. J., Currant, Col.

Received a sample copy of THE FLAMING SWORD. I may have some prejudices, but if I am in error in holding to them, I hope that by the light of THE FLAMING SWORD I shall see the truth. Enclosed find money order for $2,—W. A. B., New Madrid, Mo.

I am glad I found the Koreshan light; it shines very bright to me, and I am much pleased. I believe that when woman is freed, and the Koreshan light shines all over the world, that we will be in heaven.
—Mrs. M. N. M., Louisville, Ky.

Accept my thanks for the weekly Flam-ING SWORD, and my sincere wish that your subscription list may rapidly increase, so that the truth of Koreshanity may reach millions that are still in the dark.—N. C. M., Kingston, Texas.

I hereby acknowledge receipt of the weekly Flaming Sword, and find it still on the advance in interest.—W. M., Springfield, Mass.

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

We have friends and readers in all parts of the country, and in many parts of the world. Our work of propaganda is not local-its character does not admit of it. Away in New Zealand, Australia, Norway, Russia, England, San Domingo, and other places, THE FLAMING SWORD is welcomed. We are inaugurating the greatest system of propaganda ever engaging human effort. We desire the co-operation of every one interested in the promulgation of the principles of genuine reform. Take for instance, single subscribers in the remote parts of the country. How were they reached, and how did they come to know of the existence of THE FLAMING SWORD? Through friends, doubtless, or from our having mailed them sample copies. With but little effort, others who have never heard of this great System of scientific reform could be apprised of its existence. Call your friends' attention to the work of the Koreshan System-loan or give them copies of THE FLAMING SWORD and recommend it for their careful reading. Can you obtain one new subscription in one year, in addition to your own? Suppose each one of our subscribers were to obtain one new subscriber per year; this effort alone would double our list yearly! Let us have your best efforts—push the work. Through renewed, persistent, and zealous effort on the part of our friends, we will meet with unbounded success!

The personal experience of Dr. Cyrus R. TEED (KORESH), in the work of colonization and reform during the past ten years, will be of intense interest to all readers of THE FLAMING SWORD. His experience since the beginning of his public career is one of the most remarkable ever recorded in the history of the world, and the portrayal of his constant combat with the stubbornness, prejudice, intolerance, and blindness of the age, constitute one of the most unique chapters in the study of human nature. It will expose the conspiracy of the daily press and clergy of Chicago, and the plots of his enemies. This interesting bit of hitherto unpublished history will shortly appear in THE FLAMING SWOBD, from the pen of Koresh. Digitized by GOOGLE An interesting feature of THE FLAMING SWORD in the near future will be brief reviews of all the colonies and co-operative experiments in the world, the principles upon which they are founded and conducted, and what they expect to accomplish. Our readers can assist in this by giving us the names and addresses of leaders of reform organizations and colonies, as well as newspaper clippings or items of interest concerning them. There are hundreds of them being established in all parts of the world, and THE FLAMING SWORD will lead in collecting reliable data concerning these reform institutions.

In the article by Koresh on the "Father-hood of God and the Brotherhood of Man," in this issue, it is conclusively shown that there is no spirit of brotherhood in competism. The popular idea of the brotherhood of the present humanity is one of the greatest fallacies of modern times. If it were true, the Almighty certainly has the worst lot of children that could be produced! Nineteen hundred years ago Jesus said that the origin of mortal humanity was from beneath; and critical observations seem to confirm the truth of his statements.

A reply by Koresh to the challenges published by Eld. R. C. Brown, editor of Present Truths, Fitchburg, Mass., will appear in an early number of The Flaming Sword. Eld. Brown departs from the usual advent creed in the denial that the Lord is coming again to establish a kingdom of righteousness in the earth, and challenges contradiction. The refutation of his position and the clearing up of the difficulty connected with the question will be of interest to all, and will perhaps attract the attention of the publisher of the challenges.

If you are a student of economics and social reform, or of science, or of religion, you cannot better invest $1.00 than by procuring THE FLAMING SWORD for one year. The particular advantage in reading this publication is that you get expositions of the principles of demonstrated truth. The Koreshan System is the only demonstrated science in existence.

50,000 circulation for THE FLAMING SWORD in one year from this date! The song of Bishop McCabe was "a million a year for foreign missions,"—and he obtained it. We do not want a mere boom; we want genuine success!

Do you want to know wherein the socialists and so called reformers of today are making their greatest mistake? Read the article by Rev. E. M. Castle, "Transformation in Human Nature Necessary," in this issue.

The change of date on the printed tab on your paper is an acknowledgment of receipt of remittance for subscription. If you send money for subscription and find the date unchanged after two weeks, write us. Read carefully statements concerning Sword at top of second page of cover; it would be a convenience to our readers and to us, to heed the specific directions given concerning terms, remittances, etc.

If you change your post-office address, be sure to advise us, for otherwise the Sword will fail to reach you.

Remittances for less than $1.00 may be made in one and two cent stamps.

Fourth Biennial Report, W. C. T. U. Dept. of Peace and Arbitration. Mrs. H. J. Bailey, Supt., Winthrop Center, Me.

This pamphlet gives a brief report of the work done by the missionaries and agents of the W. C. T. U. department of Peace and Arbitration in nearly every nation in the world. The peace work of this society is an attempt to adjust the affairs of the nations on the basis of a belief in modern Christianity. We think that just now they should concentrate their efforts on Spain, which needs civilizing more than any other nation under the sun, not excepting the Island of Borneo.

The Holy Ghost, 16 pages, price 10 cents. By J. C. Marple, Elm Grove, W. Va.

Written from the standpoint of Spiritism, in ignorance of the principles of the origin and work of that divine energy designated as the Holy Sprit. There has never been an energy in the universe that has not been produced by combustion or decomposition of matter, and the kind of matter that was consumed to produce the Holy Spirit was the physical body of the perfect man Jesus, nineteen hundred years ago. Prior to this theocrasis or burning by a process of combustion, there was no Holy Spirit, and there has been no other baptism since the days of the apostles. We find the following in the pamphlet, in reference to the author's directions as to how to obtain "manifestations": "Sit for one hour, twice a week, always at the same hour, by yourself, in a quiet place, with your mind as near vacant as possible, allowing nothing to disturb you. Follow this up until conditions are made, when you will get manifestations in some form." This is putting away from the mind every element of reason and process of rational conclusion. The attempt to substitute for the doctrines of Jesus, a palpable deception in the creation of conditions which subject the mind to influences or influxes from perhaps the lowest mental worlds, is just a little too much to allow it to go unnoticed.

The December Atlantic.

The opening article in the December Atlantic is by Paul Leicester Ford, author of "The Hon. Peter Stirling" and "The Story of an Untold Love," and who now occupies a prominent position among American story writers.

A remarkable paper from the pen of Henry G. Chapman is entitled Belated Feudalism in America. It is an inquiry into the nature of American institutions and an estimate of how far they differ from those of all preceding social and political organizations.

Colonel T. W. Higginson, several chapters of whose reminiscences have already appeared in the Atlantic, contributes the first of another series to the December issue, this one telling of Literary London, Twenty Years Ago.

Two short stories appear in this issue, both of which are of unusual quality. From a Mattress Grave by I. Zangwill is a pathetic story, half fiction and half fact, of the death of poet Heine. The other by Henry B. Fuller, entitled The Greatest of These, is an interesting story the scene of which is laid in Sicily.

Other features of this issue are another installment of the Unpublished Letters of Dean Swift, State Universities and Church Colleges by F. W. Kelsey, further installments of Hopkinson Smith's serial, Caleb West, and Penelope's Progress by Kate Douglas Wiggin; a notable poem by Ellen Glasgow, and brief reviews of the year's most notable novels.

Higher Criticism and Its Foundation a Farce.

WE QUOTE from a text-book on "General Astronomy," by Charles A. Young, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of astronomy in the college of New Jersey (Princeton). Professor Young says:

It is a remarkable fact, first demonstrated by Lane of Washington, in 1870, that a gaseous sphere, losing heat by radiation and contracting under its own gravity, must rise in temperature and actually grow hotter, until it ceases to be a 'perfect gas' either by beginning to liquify, or by reaching a density at which the laws of perfect gases no longer hold. The kinetic energy developed by the shrinkage of a gaseous mass, is more than sufficient to replace the loss of heat which caused the shrinkage.

We will try to state this a little more clearly. Gas shrinks by cooling; cold makes it shrink. Now the remarkable discovery made by "Lane of Washington" is, that the colder gas becomes by losing its heat, the hotter it is. The only difference between the two statements is, that Professor Lane's is the more rhetorical, while ours is the more simple. We have not yet been able to discover the law by which a substance grows hotter by cooling off, but we will give the key to the solution of the problem in another quotation of Professor Young's.

If this shrinkage theory of the solar heat is correct (and there is every reason to accept it), it follows that in time the sun's heat must come to an end, and, looking backwards, we see that there must have been a beginning.

We see in the above statement that which is not quite relative to our subject, but nevertheless worthy of notice in this place—that Professor Young ascribes a property to time that does not have a correspondence in space according to the prevailing theory; namely, that of limitation. This is a little peculiar if not singular. The little if which the learned professor interjects in his reference to the shrinkage, furnishes the unknown quantity for the basis of a profound scientific conclusion. He further states:

But of course this conclusion as to the possible past duration of the solar system, rests upon the assumption that the sun has derived its heat solely in this way; and moreover, that it radiates heat equally in all directions in space,—assumptions which possibly further investigations may not confirm.

Note the fact that Professor Young says that all this stuff about contraction by the loss of heat, in which the mass grows hot by the radiation and loss of heat, must depend upon "assumptions which possibly further investigations may not confirm." The fact is, every so called scientific man who pretends to believe in the Copernican system of astronomy, knows that he has no foundation whatever regarding the source of the solar heat. A man of some notoriety in Chicago, puts forth a theory that the energies of the sun are electro-magnetic in their origin,—a theory partially but not wholly correct.

The remote cause of solar, lunar, planetary, and stellar motion is mental energy, not operative outside of human existence and the human brain, but consciously proceeding from the higher intellect and will of those perfected men who, in various ages of the world, have passed from the outer and natural sphere of existence without the death of the body. Of this class we have many recorded instances,—Enoch, Elijah, and Jesus being prominent examples. The proximate cause of the sun's heat is the constant influx into its vortex, of the electro-magnetic energies generated in the metallic and mineral laminæ or plates of cosmic environment. To comprehend this, the mind must first eliminate the fallacies originating in the vagaries of the Copernican system of astronomy.

The greatest obstacle in the way of correct and stable conclusion in science, is the profound ignorance regarding the substantiality of energy. The combustion operative in the sun, corresponds to that constantly taking place in the lungs and also in the brain cells of animal life. The heat of the lungs proceeds from the union in the lungs of the carbon and other elements carried there through the pulmonic artery, and of the oxygen and nitrogen entering the lungs through respiration. The sun, like the heart and lungs, is the constant recipient not only of energies which are substantial and which rematerialize in the sun, but the solar atmosphere immediately surrounding the sun flows into the sun's vortex and passes through the general metamorphosis of the solar elements. The sun radiates nothing for which it does not receive an equivalent. Its supply and demand are reciprocally and equally adjusted, and there will never come a time when it will not receive and give the material and energetical substances of its lasting perpetuity.

So called science, founded upon and grounded in assumption, is not science, for science is knowledge; assumption is not knowledge, and it is about time that guesswork should cease and something positive in the form of cult be substituted.

The modern "higher criticism" has nothing but assumption for its ground of argument, because its hypothesis is predicated upon "assumptions which possibly further investigations may not confirm." It is a fact that either gaseous, liquid, or solid substances will generate by condensation. It must be remembered, however, that no substance can be caused to condense except by the application of extraneous energy. Gas can be liquified by pressure, but the pressure is proportionate to the combustion of material substance of some kind, for which the energy is obtained to produce the pressure.

The primary obstacle in the way of accounting for the origin of the solar energy, is the ignorance of the so called scientific mind regarding one of the most simple facts,—that energy is nothing else than the product of atomic destruction, and that the atom is the result of the destruction of energy. The energies flowing into the sun are the resource of the solar force. The entire solar system, with the sun at its center, is revolving in an orbit around the sun, the radius of which is the distance of the sun from the central star of the group Pleiades, in the constellation Taurus, according to another assumption of the advocates of the Copernican system of as tronomy. This distance is incalculable.

Now is there any one, consummate idiot enough to believe that the solar system, which includes the sun, moon, planets, the earth, asteroids, and atmospheres cannot only revolve upon an axis, the sun being that axis, but that this entire mass is rushing through space in an orbit around another monstrous sun, the axillary and orbital momentum maintained by a condensation supporting heat through the process of cooling, contrary to any known law?

Professor Young must be a small sized jackass to believe what some other professor puts forth as an absurdity, and which the other professor does not himself pretend to prove, but frankly states is an assumption. Why do not these wise (?) professors give us some idea of the source of the momentum that carries the worlds in their orbits around the sun and revolves them upon their axes, and which carries the thousands of solar systems around the greater sun—the star alcoone, if the Copernican system be true? The fact is, the Copernican system of astronomy is the most preposterous batch of nonsense ever foisted upon a credulous world, and it will go with the whole job lot of modern theology, equally absurd, and with the "higher criticism," which is more nonsensical than either. We have yet to see the first positive and established truth for a belief in the Copernican hypothesis, the doctrines of modern chemistry, and the other so called sciences which comprise the basis of the theological choleraic dejection called the "higher criticism."

Booth-Tucker's Colonization Scheme Exposed.

BOOTH-TUCKER, while saving souls, proposes to give the devil a mortgage on the bodies of his followers. We do not pretend to know anything of the great evangelist's plans so far as the details are concerned, but the daily press informs us that his scheme is "like a ray of sunshine in a dark alley, and that "poor folks eagerly await the culmination of Booth-Tucker's scheme," which gives to members of the colony a "five-acre farm and a home." We are further informed that the "Salvation Army leader now plans a chain of colonies across the continent," which will make a "poor man's paradise," where, "with help and hope, he can step from the abyss of poverty to a prosperous state." All this looks as well on paper as the Klondyke boomerang of the daily press.

We venture to say that The Flaming Sword is the only paper capable of sounding the key-note-warning against the proposed evil of Booth-Tucker. The Salvation Army General offers to borrow $100,000 at five per cent interest, so the Chicago Journal says, payable in ten years. Thirty thousand dollars have already been subscribed. The colonist purchases his house and a five or ten acre lot, covered with a mortgage. Not only is he expected to supply his own stomach and that of his family (if he has one), but more than this—he must feed the eternally hungry and insatiable maw of the conscienceless money-lender.

Bonds and mortgages do not end in Paradise—this is not the highway to holiness. If it is the paradise of the blood-sucking money-broker that the Salvation Army is after, Booth-Tucker is evidently on the right road. His is merely another of the great corporate schemes of a Christian paganism. The scheme has a single virtue, providing it can be made to operate—that is, to thin somewhat the population of the cities and increase the population of the rural districts. There is not a question but that our country should be covered with a sparsely scattered population under the economic direction of the state, in whose possession should obtain the wealth and industry of the nation, when great railroad octopi and other corporate obstructions stand not in the way of social, intellectual, and commercial development, perfection, and happiness.

Some will say that this scheme of the Salvation Army "is one more step toward the final goal of human desire." The withdrawal of the straw from the Israelite brick-makers and the increase of their burdens, were simply steps toward their final deliverance. Why? Because it gave the last and final impulse toward the repudiation of their bondage.

God will avenge the slavery of his people and liquidate human obligation to the bondmaster. We utter this word by authority; we know whereof we speak. The bonded obligation of slave to bondmaster and tyrant will be repudiated by divine anthority and command. The watered stock in gold will be destroyed, and the lender on interest and the borrower will both be swept away.

The Three Phases of the Antichrist.

EVERY knee shall bow to Jesus the Messiah, and every tongue confess that the Lord Christ is the Son of God. Every spirit that denies that the Christ, the Son of God, the bright and Morning Star, the root and the offspring of David, is come in the flesh, is Antichrist. Every spirit denying that the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, is the veritable God and fulness of the Godhead bodily, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, does deny that the Messiah has come in the flesh, and is therefore Antichrist. "Christian Science" so called, modern Spiritism as a whole, and Theosophy all deny that the Lord Jesus is the Saviour of the world, therefore they are Antichrist.

Modern Spiritism, "Christian Science," and Theosophy (so called) are the three unclean spirits, like frogs, that are spoken of in Revelation. If these three are true and are of God, then somewhere out of the depths of the mysteries they profess to hold, there should come a revelation of the true contour of the earth's surface; but they all with one accord hold to the Copernican system of astronomy as the scientific exposition of cosmogonical form and function. Koreshanity has given

THE performance of use to the neighbor is the exercise of man's powers as impelled by the force of love, not exclusively to the neighbor in forgetfulness of self, but as in the interest of the whole body politic, in the assurance that if the entire body is in a state of integrity, every member of the body—including self—will be in the normal state, and therefore in a state of happiness. This principle is the antithesis of that usually actuating men.

Modern Christianity dare not take the premise of the true Christian system and follow its logical sequela to the world the true law of form and function, in the presentment of the Cellular Cosmogony, a fact mechanically demonstrated, and to which we challenge all the so called scientists of the world to present a reasonable refutation.

We do not question the wisdom and power of the Egyptian magicians as exhibited in the presence of Moses and Pharaoh; their operations were prime counterfeits of the divine power as exhibited through the chosen great organizer of Israel. The powers of Jannes and Jambres who contended with Moses for the mastery, have come down to the present age, and with the so called secret doctrine of occultism, sinuously pervade the domain of the divine wisdom, of which it is a deceptive counterfeit.

The wisdom of God is perpetually an open secret. God's truth—the divine serpent—is more naked (revealed) than any other of the animal proclivities, and all that ever stands in the way of its mental comprehension is the darkness of the human mind. The light of truth is ever as open as the light of day. It is not occult, it is not the secret doctrine;—it is an open revelation.

to a positive deduction. Its own profligate life and violation of the law of love to God and the neighbor have rendered it cowardly, and professing Christians dare not go boldly to the throne of grace and appeal for a right to the inheritance—the throne of God and God's dominion.

There is no act of life nor power of attainment inherent in the Lord Jesus, that he did not promise to him who should overcome.

* " *

The process of building the temple of organic life should hasten forward—there is no time to be lost.

Koreshanity Champions Womankind.

BY REV. BERTHA S. BOOMER.

To no class of reformers who seek the establishment of genuine righteousness, should the Koreshan System commend itself with more absolute demand for endorsement and loyal adherence, than the advocates of woman's rights. The Koreshan System is far in advance of all other systems in its location of woman's rightful, eminent position, and in its recognition of all her powers and possibilities, and their relation to the establishment of a kingdom of divine righteousness in earth.

Could popular prejudice be once broken down by the advancing hosts of progressive womankind, they would find themselves in a position to have their eyes opened to a future here in the earth, beyond the present powers of language to describe adequately. The Koreshan System outlines entirely new organizations for every sphere of thought and life, in accordance with laws and principles obtained through an absolute science of the form and functions of the physical universe, and the form and functions of perfected man—the biune being.

The male principle, while vitalizing or impregnative, is also segregative and destructive in its proceedings; the feminine principle is constructive and aggregative for assimilation and perpetuation of form and function. Femininity, when vitalized by divine love, becomes divinely wise to build anew the kingdom of heaven in earth, and will clothe herself with form, revealing all that is divine in the perfected union of true manhood and womanhood.

Man is the destined executive of the divine will expressed through the wisdom of God in the perfected woman. Koreshanity is the clear light of divine science concerning woman's God-begotten rights, and is most explicit in its statements of the laws of their attainment in this present crisis of her development. It is absolutely certain that woman never will nor can attain her rightful inheritance in the universe, save by the knowledge of, and obedience to the laws of her supreme being.

Woman's primary right and pre-eminent duty is to guard as sacred the sex functions of her own body. Any legalized or illegal profanation of these functions to satisfy the lusts of the flesh, means the perpetuity and increase of the mental, moral, and physical degradation of the race, of which the womanhood of each generation is the responsible, universal mother. Too long, under the cloak of a corrupt Christianity, has every form of lustful degeneracy found justification.

The Pauline injunction, "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands," has been made to serve, within and without the pale of the church, as the devil's goad to keep all womankind under the curse pronounced as a sequence of the fall. Weak women and cowardly men have sunk together in the mire of sin's broad road to death and destruction. The equally important command, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church," has been an unknown quantity in the marriage curriculum of church and state. The love of Christ for his Bride, the church, was to the end that she might be washed with clean water,—the science of truth, and presented spotless and blameless as the Mother of the Gods, on the throne of God.

Take your stand any day in the whirlpools of a great city's marts of trade, and seek, in the throngs of human faces, the evidence of man's divine origin. You will be forced to reiterate the words of the Lord Jesus: "Ye are from beneath." Ye are children of your father the devil. Like David, they give every indication of having been conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity.

The day of knowledge is at hand. The foundation of all elaborated sciences—the science of the laws of life and immortality, is being given to humanity in the order of ripeness to receive it. This science leaves no uncertainty in the mind of man or woman, as to woman's legitimate relationship to man in the divine order of the restitution. It leaves no doubt as to her true function in all the conserving and constructive uses of creation. It leaves no doubt as to the absolute necessity of recognizing woman in this age of the world, as a most essential factor in the establishment of that organic unity which shall give birth to the Grand Man, created in the image and likeness of Deity.

Women who desire to become Saviors of their race, to reveal the Divinity of motherhood, and to be primary factors in all that pertains to the attainment of perfect civil and religious government, to establish new industrial and commercial relationships that shall be completely destructive of the existing, hell-begotten money power, must become students of the Koreshan System. The time has come for leading women all along the line, to call a halt on the worship of graven images, which are—in the primates of truth—children conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity. Cherubic and worshipful as these seem to be, they nevertheless are the fruit of a corrupt tree, and are all doomed to corruptible dissolution under the curse of the law,—a statement attend for ages by self-evident facts. There is, however, on record in nature and Scriptural revelation, a promise, and there exists a present possibility of its fulfilment-that this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible inherit incorruption, and that death shall be swallowed up in the victory of life. The knowledge of the laws of such attainment should surely be more desired than much of the fine gold that perisheth. This knowledge is now obtainable, and we urge women everywhere, who are conscious of any degree of hungering and thirsting for righteousness, to take up the critical study of Koreshanity and see if they are not compelled to say, lo, here is Wisdom! here is Understanding!

Primary and Ultimate Fulfilments of Prophecy.

Comments on the 13th Chapter of Mark.

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

T has been said, and truly, "The Scriptures have many fulfillings." The thirteenth chapter of Mark is not peculiar in this respect. When Jerusalem was captured by the Romans, about 70 A.D., the predictions of this chapter were partially realized, and in a natural sense. Vespasian, recalled to Rome by disturbances there, left the conquest of the city to his son Titus. It is recorded that after the circumvallation of the city by the Roman forces, for some reason never understood by historians they were withdrawn for three days, during which time all the Christians escaped from the city and took refuge in a mountain town near by-those in Judea escaped to the mountains. After a siege of untold horror, the temple and city were destroyed. Josephus says: "Cæsar ordered the soldiers to dig up the whole city and temple: but to leave three high turrets standing and a part of the wall, as security to the garrison. But they so entirely dug up and leveled all the rest of the city, that none who saw it would think it had ever been inhabited." Thus was fulfilled in a natural sense the words of Jesus recorded in the second verse of Mark xiii, "Seest thou these great buildings? etc." From the Mount of Olives opposite the temple, where he was sitting when he spoke further to Peter, James, and the others, the whole of Jerusalem was spread before the eye, and what doubt that he foresaw the city's destruction as well as the temple's? In Luke xxi, where this prediction is again recorded, it is, "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." As the power which was to utterly destroy Jerusalem, the Roman army was the abomination which makes desolate, mentioned in Mark.

It is well known that the early Christians looked for the return of the Christ during their own lifetime, and consequently, if not warned, might mistake for the Christ some of the wonder-working magicians of the time, of whom apparently there were many. The fact that two of his disciples on the road to Emmaus, failed to recognize him after his resurrection, shows that there was danger of mistake from lack of clear sight, even among those who were near to him. Undoubtedly, Jesus' warning in this respect had some reference to the earlier days of Christianity. During those opening years of the Christian era, there were also warfare, famine, and divers troubles. These were but, as he declared, the beginnings of the sorrows of the Christian age; and surely sorrows have continued and even increased through the age to its end. Think of History's long night, the dark ages—six centuries of gloom and terror! And who shall say that the past few centuries have not had their full share of pain, or that even our own century, rich as it has been in material achievement, has in any measure ameliorated human sorrow?

But the supreme fulfilment of the words of this chapter, that may be looked for now at the end of the age, is what most concerns us. All that took place successively through the age, is concentrated at the end of the age in what we term the simultaneous order. Moreover, all the occurrences of history are by virtue of the operation of law, which law operating in other domains produces corresponding results there, and the language used to describe the events of history, if truly performing its office, also describes the operation of principles of being in those who are the product of the existence which history records. Those who, in successive embodiments through the Christian age, have passed through the experiences of the age, now at the end of the age, in the final embodiment of the series, while passing through new experiences in their external lives, at the same time repeat all the experiences of the age; but what took place externally during the age, now takes place in another sense. Those who fled to the mountains in the first century of the Christian era, again flee to the mountains now. The objects of the natural world are symbols of the principles of being, and may rightly be used to express those principles. The mountain is the symbol of the good of life, and flight to the mountain is the determination to live a life conformable to the standard of righteousness. The house or temple is the body. The roof-garden of the oriental house, is the symbol of an exalted will, or desire,—the will principle constituting the earth and the intellectual principle the heavens. Those whose wills are exalted through the contemplation of truth, which alone can induce this lifting of the substance of desire above the lower plane, are commanded to allow not the thoughts to descend in lower affections—which is going down into the house, or body-even with the purpose of saving those who are ours by virtue of such ties.

The destructive abomination is that sin which destroys. It corresponds to the Roman army which destroyed Jerusalem. It is standing where it ought not when it is placed in the very center of the human will (which is the holy of holies) and becomes the mainspring of all action. The sin which destroys is that root of all evil, love of money; that is, covetousness—love of self. Never has there been a time in the history of mankind when this sin held more potent sway than it does today. No stronger proof of man's selfishness is needed than his almost universal refusal to listen to the gospel of unselfishness.

It will be noticed that the false Christs, against whom Jesus directed the warning recorded in this chapter, are to show signs and wonders (miracles). Miracle was the sign of Jesus' ministry. It is not the indicator of the way of salvation for this age. Truth in its scientific degree, to be given to the world at this time, reveals the law of wonder-working, thus removing the wonder, for what we understand we no longer wonder at. Jesus said of the miracles which through his knowledge of natural and spiritual law he was able to perform, "Greater works than these shall ye do; because I go to my Father." These greater things were not performed by his immediate disciples, neither have they been performed by his later professed followers. A greater thing than to restore a person to ordinary physical health—to die in future—is to proclaim the law by which many may overcome death utterly—that they may never die. The greatest thing is to so overcome.

Let no one be deceived by the miracles of these days—the manifestations of Spiritualism, the healings of "Christian Science," the occult powers of Theosophy,—even though these things may be done "In His Name," —"For many shall come in my name, saying, I am; and shall deceive many." These works are not evidence of the power of God. The image of the beast has power to perform wonders, to call down fire from heaven in the sight of men, and to deceive men by the miracles which he has power to perform. But the power of God is the law of immortality scientifically applied to life, which alone is the power of obtaining life eternal.

An exhaustive analysis of the chapter cannot be attempted here, nor is such an analysis deemed necessary in order to show that this chapter does not, as some have thought, supply an argument against Koreshanity. On the contrary, it is in beautiful harmony with our teachings.

The Final Unity of the Real and the Ideal in Koreshanity.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THERE exist two representative schools of thought —Idealism and Realism, the one progressive, the other conservative. Plato and Aristotle are often cited as their respective exponents, and every man by the natural tendency of his mental constitution unconsciously ranges himself among the adherents of one or the other philosopher; either he concerns himself mainly with the objects and appearances of the natural world as it presents itself to his observation, and with man as he is, or he prefers to picture to himself as possible of attainment, an ideal world and an ideal humanity,— man not as he is, but as he ought to be. As the one tendency preponderates over the other in any given age, is that age fruitful in material inventions or the discovery of abstract truth.

Since the rise of the Positive school, so termed from its refusal to recognize any basis for knowledge but experience, the chief object of man has been to make himself and, incidentally, a few of his neighbors, comfortable, in a world which so far as history and observation indicate, can never be much better. The very name Idealist has become a reproach and a byword, defining itself to most minds as Louisa Alcott once defined a philosopher—a visionary dreamer trying to soar above the clouds in a balloon while his friends are tugging at the ropes to keep him down to earth, in order that he may provide for his children and keep the family larder well supplied.

Positivism was first elaborated as a system in the beginning of this century by Auguste Comte, and as it excludes all metaphysics and philosophy, all knowledge of the supernatural, of cause and first cause, of mind human and divine, it necessarily lays an interdict on higher questionings, considers the religion of Jesus Christ a myth, and proposes as a substitute for God a "New Supreme Being" in the shape of humanity at large,—a humanity to whose physical needs it would minister, but for the satisfaction of whose soul hunger it furnishes no nutriment.

But as Carlyle says, "There is in man an infinite which with all his strivings, he cannot quite bury under the finite," and "The shoeblack also has a soul quite other than his stomach;"it follows that with all his comforts, man is still restless, and the sociology of Comte having as its basis a utilitarian altruism fails to satisfy him. The age voluntarily assumes the title of "decadent;" it has lost faith in the ultimate regeneration of society. Art in all its forms of expression is subservient to Realism and with its wings clipped, struggles vainly to soar into the upper air. Naturalism in literature paints pictures of vice and depravity that tend to retard human progress; show man how bad he is and you paralyze his efforts; show him how good he may be and you stimulate him to reach undreamed-of heights. Dickens and Zola may be taken as representative types of the idealist and realist in fiction. Both deal with the darker side of life but produce a totally different effect upon the mind. Perhaps the difference between the two authors resides in the fact that whereas Zola seems to look upon vulgarity and crime as necessary concomitants of human nature, Dickens always treats them as. abnormal to humanity; with all his genial kindliness for the criminal, the reader feels that he hates sin, and has a conception of an ideal and morally renovated society.

The best fiction like all true art is rooted in life, but eliminate the ideal and its soul is lost. In view of the prevalent Realism, it is not surprising that a recent work on the "Psychology of the Emotions," should term this an age of pessimism in art resulting from "a general state of depression, enervation, and debility" in the individual. It is significant that the true sense of the word ideal has been lost, one of our later dictionaries defining it as a conception beyond realization. The term is cognate in origin with idea, both being derived from the Greek verb ideir, to see. It is a vision of higher possibilities of attainment; in pursuing his ideal man is not chasing a phantom. To the sad and disheartened, the struggling and the hopeless, Koreshanity comes with its beautiful new hope, its promise that the time draweth near when the real shall become the ideal.

"From harmony, From heavenly harmony, This universal frame began."

When the cycle is complete, the beginning and the end will be one; society now disorganized and chaotic, will become an orderly unity where every man will find and fill the place to which his talents and his taste invite him. The voices of young children crying for bread will be heard no more in our streets; the gaunt spectres of poverty and crime will no longer stalk boldly on our highways, nor lust and disease skulk through our alleys. Nature will not withhold her secrets from the wise nor science baffle him. Beauty and ease and culture will belong, not to the few, but to the many. The knowledge of God will cover the earth, and no Renan will arise to proclaim that if God indeed exist, cognition of him must be forever impossible. This is the ideal which the Koreshan System is presenting to the world as capable of immediate attainment, but unlike other systems which come and go, holding out dazzling but elusive hopes, it rests its promises upon a proven scientific premise. The record of experience supports the statement that social reform not predicated upon a decided change in the hearts of men. is purely visionary. The fulfilment of our noblest hopes, the vision of holiness, the reign of love universal, will never come through the natural evolution of society.

Not Plato but Jesus Christ was the great Idealist. He taught that men should be saved through grace not through evolution. By the grace of the indwelling spirit, he baptized his disciples with divine love, he changed their hearts. We are looking forward to such a baptism as the primary and energizing factor in all social changes. Then will all classes of men unite in unity of spirit and the bond of peace, to realize ideal conditions in earth.

Prescient Poems of Modern Times.

BY AMANDA POTTER.

JUST before the storm looms of war wove the pall which in some degree settled upon every heart in the land, "Over the Western Sea" from the mother country, came words of divination and denunciation from one who deprecated their speaking because of the "foul things done within her gates."

"Because yourselves are standing straight
In the state
Of Freedom's foremost acolyte,
Yet keep calm footing all the time
On writhing bond-slaves,—for this crime—
This is the curse. Write."

Thus spake the advocate of a people who reaped protection from the greed which enslaved them. Gain decreed that they be well sheltered, well clothed, and well fed—boons denied the white wage slave!

The woe of the curse of black slavery blossomed both North and South, in hundreds of thousands of bereft homes, and is seeding in that tremendous impulse to money getting engendered by that very war; and to proclaim the end the muse, which drooped its wings over a fallen Browning, plumes them broad above a risen Stetson.

The foreshadowing in "A Curse for a Nation," that wonderful poem of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, was pale in compare to the dread carnage that followed; and so may the words of the Christ, as he yearned over Jerusalem, be considered vague in the light of the beleaguered city within whose walls delirious starvation sated itself in cannibalism. God descends not always to such diffusion as paints the particular woe of each iniquity, and "We will not play" speaks as much more than an unserved plutocracy, as may be read in the words: "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

In the coming time, "A Curse for a Nation" and the poem printed below, will be read more understandingly than they were penned:

THE LOST GAME. By Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Came the big children to the little ones,
And unto them full pleasantly did say,
"Lo! we have spread for you a merry game,
And ye shall all be winners at the same—
Come now and play!"

Great is the game they enter in—
Rouge et Noir on a giant scale—
Red with blood and black with sin,
Where many must lose and few may win,
And the players never fail!

Said the strong children to the weaker ones, "See, ye are many, and we are but few!
The mass of all the counters ye divide,
But few remain to share upon our side—
Play—as we do!"

Strange is the game they enter in—
Rouge et Noir on a field of pain!
And the silver white and the yellow gold
Pile and pile in the victors' hold,
While the many play in vain!

Said the weak children, to the stronger ones, "See now, howe'er it fall we lose our share! And play we well or ill we always lose—While ye gain always, more than ye can use—Bethink ye—is it fair?"

Strange is the game they enter in—
Rouge et Noir, and the bank is strong!
Play they well or play they wide
The gold is still on the banker's side,
And the game endureth long.

Digitized by Google

Said the strong children each aside to each, "The game is slow—our gains are all too small! Play we together now 'gainst them apart— So shall these dull ones lose it from the start, And we shall gain it all!"

Strange is the game that now they win—Rouge et Noir with a new design!
What can the many players do
Whose wits are weak and counters few,
When the Power and the Gold combine?

Said the weak children to the stronger ones, "We care not for the game!
For play as we may our chance is small.
And play as we may ye have it all—
The end's the same!"

Strange is the game the world doth play—Rouge et Noir, with the counters gold! Red with blood and black with sin; Few and fewer are they that win As the ages pass untold.

Said the strong children to the weaker ones, "Ye lose in laziness! ye lose in sleep!
Play faster now and make the counters spin?
Play well, as we, and ye in time shall win!
Play fast! Play deep!

Strange is the game of Rouge et Noir—
Never a point have the little ones won—
The winners are strong and flushed with gain
The losers are weak with want and pain,—
And still the game goes on.

But those rich players grew so very few,
So many grew the poor ones, that one day
They rose up from that table, side by side,
Calm, countless, terrible—they rose and cried
In one great voice that shook the heavens wide,
"We will not play!"

Where is the game of Rouge et Noir?
Where is the wealth of yesterday?
What availeth the power ye tell,
And the skill in the game ye play so well,
If the players will not play?

Laws made by lawyers for the benefit not of the people, but of lawyers, afford abundant opportunities for evading justice, even were judges and juries always intelligent and corruption proof-which they are very far from being. It must be plain to the dullest mind that any remedy for such a state of injustice must go to the bottom of things, and fundamentally change the wrong conditions out of which the injustice naturally springs.

It must take away from the one man, or combination of men, the incentive to wrong another. Such incentive is now operative in those amassing great wealth by unjust means, and since men are not always hardhearted and selfish enough to accomplish the injustice, soulless, artificial men who never grow old and die, have been invented, that have no conscience to interfere with their practicing the utmost of extortion and robbery. Mammon, by means of these, now rules the world, but his power will soon and certainly be broken. Here is the starting point of the return to a reign of righteousness.

As this reign of injustice is buttressed by and entrenched in the present church and state, both must fall and pass away, and there must come "new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness"—a new church and a new state, of which the true God, who is the Lord Jesus Christ at his coming, is the "blessed and only Potentate" and Sovereign. Such is the promise of Scripture and the assured hope of the Koreshan.

Evils of the Modern Court System.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, PH. D.

I have said, and say again, that for the last time I have appealed to the courts for justice, and shall appeal to them no more.— $E.\ V.\ Debs.$

WHEN a reputable citizen after repeated, long-continued and strenuous efforts to obtain justice for himself and others,—a man who comes into court with clean hands and encounters corrupt men both in the court and out of it, whose hands are full of bribes, who has encountered combinations whose very existence is in defiance of law, as in the case of the Board of Railway managers in the Pullman strike,-deliberately comes to the conclusion above announced, it is time for serious reflection. Such announcement reads very much like the death sentence of the courts. We can not be far from the point indicated by one of Chicago's great lawyers, when he said he sometimes thought that the courts ought to be abolished. If there is any class of persons that cannot obtain justice, whether for want of money, or influence, or for any cause whatsoever, then there is no class of citizens that can certainly obtain it, and courts become a menace to liberty and the rights of the citizen, and ought to be abolished.

It has long been the boast of our country, that all men were equal before the law,—a boast no longer true when the poor man (or any man) encounters a conscienceless corporation that has money enough to enlist in its service the shrewdest legal talent in the country.

EVERY phase of the genuine social system will have its specific counterfeit, and the perfection of this will be so complete that nothing short of the divine wisdom will be able to detect it.

Ours is not the Hermetic philosophy, which when found is like the ignis-fatuus—not there. Find truth and embrace it, and it is yours.

Governments and churches contain within themselves the forces of their own disintegration, and they will crumble to decay through the inherent injustice actuating both.

It is not so difficult to theorize upon the question of a remedy for the moral and social evils of the age, as it is to apply the remedy.

In the Editorial Perspective.

IT IS amusing to see how the editor of the Annular World evades the conditions of his offer of $1,000 for the refutation evades the conditions of his offer of $1,000 for the refutation of his annular theory. It is quite a condescension on his part to acknowledge that he does not understand what we intend to do, or what we expect him to do regarding his challenge and offer. Our readers easily grasp it,—and all are not editors nor founders of hypotheses! The status of the matter is merely this: If the earth is concave and the Cellular Cosmogony true, it follows that the ring theory of world formation is necessarily false. We concluded that the shortest route to the point was to prove the annular system to be fallacious. We proved by geodetic survey that the Koreshan Astronomy is true, and offered to prove it again in the presence of Prof. Vail, in order to show him that his annular theory is false, and that he owes us the $1,000. He does not seem to have mental acumen sufficient to see the point. What is the matter with him?

Labor-saving machinery under the control of the money power is a curse; applied for the benefit of the wealth producers, the inventions of the world would be a blessing. What difference does it make to the shoemaker whether it requires ten hours or one hour to make a pair of shoes, so long as he does not get the benefit of the time saved? It makes all the difference in the world to him now, for by the use of machinery thousands of shoemakers are thrown out of employment. It is estimated that it would require 21,000,000 men to do the work of the labor-saving machinery in the United States, that is now done by 4,000,000 persons. The working man produces wealth he does not enjoy—he receives less than ten per cent of all he actually produces. The remainder goes to the capitalist who does not earn one cent of it!

The Earth (not a globe) Review, of London, is always ready to say hard things about astronomers and publications that are silent concerning Zeteticism, after challenges have been issued by its advocates. In the May, 1897, SWORD, we challenged the editor of the Earth Review to overthrow the facts of the Koreshan geodetic survey on the Florida west coast in demonstration of the earth's concavity; and since that time he has said nothing concerning the Koreshan Cosmogony. What is the trouble? The advocates of Zeteticism have now as much reason to say nothing as have the astronomers of the popular school, and the reason is that they cannot answer! What are the Zetetics going to do about it?

The daily press is responsible for much of the sensation which attaches itself to modern so called scientific discoveries. A number of observations have been made of stars and Mars, by Dr. See, at the Lowell observatory in Arizona. Dr. See visits Boston, and the newspapers announce remarkable discoveries at the Lowell observatory, "of worlds born from cosmos ready for life," discovered "processes of world formation in space," etc. Dr. See has made no such discoveries; he has only evolved an hypothesis concerning stellar and nebular phenomena, and puts forth the same on the basis of mere assumption. Modern astronomers can assume anything; they can prove nothing.

The world is full of curious gods. There are gods of every description—about as many as there are viduals. A late one is the invention of Prof. Felix Adler, president of the Society for Ethical Culture, New York. He is reported as having in view the substitution for the Christian religion, a religion having the state for its deity. He desires to destroy the idea of a personal God, but if the government were our impersonal god, it follows that the head of the government would be the personal deity! We think that the originator of the new idea is addled, and would like to be the world's Ad(d)ler!

Notwithstanding the fact that there are millions of America's poor, hundreds of thousands of men out of employment, tenement houses of the great cities full of the ragged and the filthy, thousands of tramps begging for food, burglars, hold-ups, confidence men, and money sharks everywhere, and the cry for relief from oppression, the administration calls upon its people to be thankful! The thanksgiving proclamations are the veriest twaddle to blind the eyes of the credulous suffering.

Years ago Koresh announced the fact in The Flaming Sword that gold could be manufactured, and suggested a process. The daily press of the country ridiculed the idea as being the wildest speculation. Today, page after page is being published concerning the actual work of making gold. Who was right, who was scientific—the Koreshan Alchemist, or the modern chemists who denied atomic transformation?

J. Pierpont Morgan now controls nearly all of the great American trunk lines, comprising about 50,000 miles of railroad. Even success in competism must be wrought through a center—a magnate. The greatest success is the result of system. The Golden Age will be the result of the greatest monopoly of power the world has ever seen.

The panacea for all human ills and social evils will not be found in arbitrary plans of social reform, but in the actual impartation of the potencies of life and incorruption. The reformation of the world is its recreation. The momentum of genuine reform is a substantial energy, and must proceed from the divine center.

Contemporaneously with the establishment of the new government of the twentieth century, the invigoration of man must obtain. Humanity is impoverished mentally, morally, and physically. When humanity is restored to perfection, the social conditions for which the world has hoped for ages, will follow as a sequence.

Thought is the progenitor of all things. The universe is the outermost clothing of the divine mind, and therefore the expression of the perfect man. Qualities of mental force ultimate in planetary motion. Man is not governed by planetary vibration, but rather, the universe is governed by mental vibration.

The American college institutions are morally on the descending scale. Participants in football are getting beneath the pugilists. Recently, one thousand students were in a state of intoxication in New Haven during a great game.

There is as much difference between modern astrology and the Koreshan Astro-anthroposophy as there is between modern astronomy and the Cellular Cosmogony. Astrology is founded upon the fallacies of the modern astronomical system.

Modern charity is a humbug. It is not philanthropy to steal the products of the poor to endow colleges, asylums, and homes. The true philanthropist will destroy the conditions which necessitate the existence of charitable institutions.

The policy of American protection is the policy of selfishness. There is no such thing at the present time as the protection of American labor; there is a good deal of protection for the millionaire.

The "infallible" Catholic church now accepts as true the system of astronomy that subjected its originator to severe persecution at the hands of the Catholic priesthood, three hundred and fifty years ago.

The Kingdom of God will be established in the earth for the administration of life and justice. There can be no true social reformation until the beginning of its establishment.

All profits in the exchange of the products of labor are paid by the consumer. The profits are kept from the producer and appropriated by those who do not earn them.

Modern Science the Agnostic's Refuge.

The Bible tells us that everything was made for man's benefit, and that the sun, moon, and stars were made for the benefit of the earth. How foolish; how ridiculous! Just think, the earth is a mere grain of sand compared with the sun and stars, some of which are several million times larger. We give the size of a few:

|           | Diameter.      | Circumference.  |
|-----------|----------------|-----------------|
| Earth,    | 8,025 mi.      | 25,000 mi.      |
| Sun,      | 866,000 mi.    | 2,666,000 mi.   |
| Algol,    | 1,116,000 mi.  | 3,427,000 mi.   |
| Arcturus. | 71,000,000 mi. | 224,000,000 mi. |

If it were possible for us to travel in one direction at the rate of a billion miles per second and travel a billion years, we undoubtedly would see as many stars in front of us as we would behind us;—in other words, there is no end to space and the starry heavens. Some of the stars are 400 times hotter than our sum, and it is hot enough. If it were possible to force an icicle 45 miles in diameter and 200 miles long into it, it would melt it in a second. Astronomers and scientists teach these facts. When you hear clergymen tell the foolish little story of creation, as recorded by the ignorant saints, 6,000 years ago, just show them these figures and ask them to teach ignorance and superstition no more, but to teach something that will benefit mankind, if they are capable; if not, they had better feed swine.—Freethought Ideal.

The above is a sample of ideal freethought and credulity, and is characteristic of modern "skepticism." The wonder is not that the world is skeptical of the puerile interpretations of the Bible by the clergy, but that after having sense enough to discard a belief in the impossibilities attached to the Bible by the modern church, that the skeptic should be so credulous about the palpable absurdity of the modern scientific theories. We reject all the fallacious conceptions of modern Christianity as unscientific and unreasonable-we reject the teachings of popular science for the same reason. The Bible does not teach the "foolish little story of creation" referred to in the above, neither does true science teach the absurd propositions of the modern astronomer. The Bible is scientifically true, and must be interpreted from the scientific standpoint. The groundwork of that science is the fact that the universe is a great cell, and is eternal. The fundamental principles of the Cellular Cosmogony are found in the science of Alchemy; the proofs of the latter are seen in every change and transformation of matter and energy, from the maintenance of the physical sun to the generation of human thought. The demonstrations of the earth's cellular form, that the earth is a hollow globe, with life on the inside, are found in all phenomena of the physical world, by scientific observations, research, experiments, and tests everywhere, and by accurate geodetic survey. The Freethought Ideal's scientific spurts are somewhat amusing—no more so, however, than those of the world's recognized astronomers. Both are badly mistaken and unable to prove their cause, and equally incapable of refuting the Koreshan System of science.

Correspondence and Brief Replies.

Enclosed please find 25 cents in stamps for THE FLAMING SWORD, which you will be kind enough to stop. The many lies contained in your article on Christian Science in the Nov. 26 issue, show conclusively that you don't know what you are talking about, and are unfit to head a religious movement such as you pretend yours to be. If the FLAMING SWORD did as much good in the world as Christian Science has done and is doing, it would have a better excuse for being.—A. W. A., Haverhill, Mass.

We note the request contained in the above, to discontinue the publication of THE FLAMING SWORD, but after due consideration, we conclude to go ahead with the work of issuing this publication regularly-at least for the benefit of the thousands who welcome it. We cannot afford to stop publishing the SWORD simply because one subscriber does not like it! Of course, you do not attempt to refute the arguments used in the article by KORESH on "Christian Science," to which you refer. It is easy enough to say that it contains "lies," but quite difficult to prove it! It is quite characteristic of the "Christian Scientist" to say, "You don't know what you are talking about," or "You don't know anything about Christian Science." That is a sorry refuge behind which any mind can as readily find defense. Koreshan Science is all-inclusive—it is a system of universology. If so called Christian Science were true, it would be but a fragment of the whole.

It occurs to me to ask you a question, which can be answered in a few lines in the Sword; I have not read much of the Koreshan literature. Has there been given out any theory as to what is on the outside of the hollow shell of the earth?—J. L. J.

We take the irrefutable ground that everything in existence has form, and that limitation is a property of form. The universe exists, and is limited. There is but one universe, for otherwise this could not be a universe. The shell of the earth has a thickness of about 100 miles, and is composed of metallic, mineral, and geologic strata. The metal having the greatest specific gravity is outermost, the farthest from the sun, the next lighter substance, the next above, etc. The outermost shell is the limit of existence; it environs all; beyond it there is nothing-absolutely The two limits of universal space are center and circumference. Beyond the exterior limit of space there is no space, no life, no light, darkness, heat, cold, phenomena, nor substance. We commend to your further study of the Koreshan literature, with the demonstrations and proofs, not only of the Cellular Cosmogony, but of the Koreshan Theology, Sociology, Economics, and other departments of its science.

O. W. T., Capac, Mich.-While we are thankful for your kind words and for your interest in the Koreshan System, we cannot use the matter you send us, for the reason that it is not correct. In order to reach conclusions that are true, one must take for a premise a demonstrated fact; otherwise the conclusions will be fallacious. We recommend to you a careful study of the Koreshan Theology, which is founded upon the physiology of the human system and the form and function of the physical universe. The spiritual world is in humanity, not out in space nor in the atmosphere near the earth's crust. There are no mental pictures made in space nor in ether, neither are there any "disembodied spirits" floating about outside of humanity.

They Like the New Sword.

I want to thank you for having made the Flaming Sword aweekly. During the interval between the issue of the monthly and the weekly I must confess I was very impatient for my Flaming Sword, and my wife laughed at me often when on coming home in the evening I would inquire the first thing if the Flaming Sword had come. But at last it came, and what a beauty it is! I want to compliment you on its appearance. Typographically, it is clean and wholesome, and almost perfect.—F. E. W., Salem, O.

I would send for a few extra copies, but I have distributed the monthly Swords among the people of the village, and they are so "religious" that they do not read them, for their preachers tell them that it is wicked to do so. I want The FLAMING Sword, monthly, weekly, or daily.—T. E. H., Americus, Ga.

I am well pleased with the FLAMING SWORD; I like each copy better, and so far as I am able to understand its teachings, they are in perfect harmony with the Bible. I enjoy its pages thoroughly, and think it a first-class Christian Journal of the highest standard.—Wm. A., Turbotville, Pa.

I am very much pleased with the Sword as a weekly, and feel that all will appreciate the weekly visits from the masterful pen of our Leader and others. With best wishes to the Sword and the cause it represents, I remain a devoted admirer.—Mrs. B., Kalamazoo, Mich.

Of course we are interested in Koreshanity, and are much pleased with the new dress in which the Sword appears.—O. W. T., Capac, Mich.

First number of the weekly FLAMING SWORD received; contents, paper, and design are first-class.—E. B., Salt Lake City, Utah.

I like the new Sword very much indeed; I think it is quite an improvement.—Mrs. M. G. M., Louisville, Ky.

We desire every reader interested in THE FLAMING SWORD to get into correspondence with us about the work of increasing its circulation. What can you do? A good deal; we have some plans for you. No one is too poor to help us—we have work for you all. There are hundreds of readers willing to assist us in this great work, but they do not know how to get at it, and we do not know who they are. Now is the time, right in the beginning of a new impetus, to manifest your interest. We expect to hear from every reader. You do not need capital, nor much time. Write us today, offering to do what you can in accordance with the plans we have for the various classes, suited to the different circumstances in which our readers are placed. We want to come into closer touch with our sympathizers; be friendly, neighborly, helpful, and appreciative. We publish a beautiful, up-to-date journal, decidedly in advance of all others, and you can feel proud in handing copies to your friends. Sit right down and write us.

Real, natural, scientific prayer, devoid of superstition, is demanded by the necessities of the times. Blind request directed to an unknown and far-off god is getting out of date. We have for the next issue a studied and carefully written article on the subject of scientific aspiration, by Victoria Gratia, Pre-Eminent of the Koreshan Unity. It is worthy of the most careful study. It deals with mental attraction, the source of strength of encouragement, and the science of the fulfilment of all righteous desire of the

We have ready for the SWORD of December 17, an excellent article on the money question by Prof. L'Amoreaux, Ph. D., author of "National Suicide and Its Prevention," who was for thirty-one years Professor of languages in Wheaton (Ill.) College. The article shows up the intrigue of the bankers and the conspiracy of the capitalists, and contains some irrefutable arguments against the financial policy of the gold standard parties.

A masterful expose of some hypotheses of modern astronomy and chemistry is involved in the article by Koresh, "Higher Criticism and Its Foundation a Farce," showing palpable contradictions in the theories of Astronomer Young. Modern skepticism proves itself more credulous in the acceptance of the modern astronomical nonsense, than is charged against the common believer in the modern church's interpretation of the Bible.

The mystery of the kingdom of heaven during the Christian dispensation is revealed through both parable and science. What kingdom was instituted by Jesus nineteen hundred years ago, and where has he been reigning during the past dispensation? For a complete unveiling of the mystery surrounding this question, study the reply by Koresh to Eld. Brown's challenges in the issue of December 17th.

New readers, we want to become acquainted with you. You desire to know more about the Koreshan Science, and we desire to impart a knowledge of it to you. A little friendly correspondence will help you,—we have something of profit to you. Do not be afraid to ask questions—we are always glad to answer.

Do you know where the root of the evils of the modern court system is located? Many people realize that there is something wrong, but do not know just where the difficulty lies. Prof. L'Amoreaux deftly uncovers the power behind the throne in this issue of the Sword.

Students of prophecy will profit by the article on the subject of prophetic fulfilments by Rev. E. M. Castle, Do not fail to read it, for there are points concerning interpretation of prophecy that you may have overlooked.

The Salvation Army is selling out to the money power! Booth-Tucker's great colonization scheme is exposed by Koresh in this issue, showing a palpable perversion of the principles of co-operation—a warning to other ambitious leaders of so called reform.

Idealism and Realism are contrasted by Lucie Page Borden in this number; also the reason given for the failure of Comteism, and what constitutes the elements of success, the energizing factor in all future social changes.

We commend the well-written article by Rev. E. M. Castle, "The Remedy for the Universal Greed of Gold," to your thoughtful consideration and study. The manufacture of gold is creating a great sensation in the world. We say, let the money market be glutted with gold-if gold is a good thing, the more of it the better!

Our readers can help us edit THE FLAM-ING SWORD! We want striking articles and radical expressions of prominent men of the country, which appear in the daily and other papers. We cannot get around to them all; a bunch of clippings in an unsealed envelope will cost only one cent postage.

Has your neighbor or friend seen THE FLAMING SWORD? Show it to him; he may like to look at pictures. Get him to read it; he may want a new idea or two. You wanted something new when you first saw THE FLAMING SWORD.

We are on the road to success!

The Law of Vibrations, Twelve lessons in the "I am Science." By T. J. Shelton, editor of "The Christian," Little Rock, Ark. 104 pages, price 25 cents.

This book is written in a style of originality of expression that peculiarly belongs to its author. He has an apt way of boiling down the greatest fallacy of modern times and giving it positive expression. He is one of the positive centers of some spheres of fallacious concept of not only the universe, but of man and of God. It is a strange battery that has only one pole. According to the plan of the above, there is only one being, there is only light, only life—no darkness, no death—all is just God; there is God, and nothing else. We expected when we took up this work to find some new theory regarding vibrations something endeavoring to explain why and how a substance vibrates, but there is nothing said about it; it does not explain the law of vibration. It takes the Coper-nican system of astronomy as a basis of conclusion. The theory is "Christian Science" Sheltonized.

Facts of Science, by Benjamin Judkins, author of many fugitive sheets. 24 pages. San Diego, Cal.

A little work on astrology, containing also many facts of recent history. Dabbles in fallacious astronomy and mysticism, but is, on the whole, a summing up of some interesting items. The Flaming Sword is mentioned several times, and also advertised on the third page of cover. The author of the pamphlet would be going in the direction of the truth, were he to consider the fundamentals of the Koreshan Cosmogony as the basis of astro-anthroposophy, instead of holding to the worn-out astrology founded upon the fallacies of astron-

Mind Cure . . .

The Greatest Healing Power on Earth.

Lay your prejudice aside long enough to read this sworn testimonial of a cure that seems miraculous:

This is to certify that my upper lip and a large porton of my nose were eaten away with cancer of so pronounced a character that physicians declared the case incurable and me a doomed man. My situation and feelings were beyond description, when I heard of Mrs. Helen Wilmans and her power over every form of disease. After I put myself under her mental treatment the eating of the cancer ceased and new flesh began to grow from the edges of it, which gradually spread over the cheek until the unsightly opening was closed. The nose at this time is about completed, and the lip is nearly filled in. I am able to pronounce her efforts a success. My general health is fully restored, and I have gone to work again with my customary s'rength. This testimonial is given from a thankful heart; and I am glad to add that my faith in her is so great that I believe she can cure any disease under the sun. All this was done without the use of medicines by mental treatment alone. Respectfully, J. M. Exclish.

I am acquainted with Mr. English and can truly say that this case is not only true in every particular, as set forth by Mr. Bingham, our notary, but that the cure spoken of, I must confess. surpasses human comprehension. During more than 40 years of observation and experience I have met nothing like the above case. This contribution is voluntary. Sea Breeze, Fla., March 2, 1897. DR. E. E. DAYTON.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

Social Theocracy Founded on Physiology and Cosmogony.

THOSE interested in the Koreshan System will always be glad to know of the progress and prosperity of our people at Estero, Florida. At the present writing, we are able to say that the little community at Estero is in a prosperous condition, and from last reports, especially happy. One of the sisters has just returned to the Northern Division of the Guiding Star Assembly, from Estero, bringing good reports of the progress made in improving the place destined to become the great center of the world's future development. We here repeat what we have so often reiterated, the opportunity there for a great and beautiful world's capital cannot be surpassed in any location. The climate is perfect, and the facilities adequate for the most extraordinary plans for a great model city, where may flourish religious development, social and moral culture, refined intercourse, and commercial enterprise. The location of a city and the aggregation of a body of people at San Estero, while a part of the great purpose of Koreshanity, do not include more than a mere item of the universal scope of our designs and the future fulfilment of them, as we are enabled to predict through the prescient vision of illumination.

Koreshanity is a kingdom in embryo, the gestative progress of which is culminating after ages of matriculative development. The laws of its government are the correspondent of the laws by which the universe is structured and its activities regulated. A true human government—after the world has passed the stage of social chaos into which the competitive system and the financial insanity of political parties have precipitated it—will be organized upon the structural basis of the human organism. When we say that the individual—the biune man, the Lord Christ being the example—is the microcosm, and that present humanity as a whole, when organically constructed, is the macrocosm, we wish to be understood to mean what we say, and not to be interpreted as employing figurative language. The alchemico-organic world (the physical universe) is in the form of the man unincubated; that is, it is the egg of the man.

When humanity becomes a kingdom, it will be in the form and character of the macrocosm, the grand man. Its head will be the sons of God. Its heart is the commercial system. As the heart of the human body, with its arterial and venous system, collects and distributes equitably all the products of the body as they are developed in every locality of the structure, so the heart and vascular system of the grand organo-socialistic and theocratic man will be its commerce. Its symbol is the lion. The educational system, including religious doctrine and theology, constitutes the lungs. The symbol of this domain is the eagle. The liver of the grand man, or Theocratic social system, includes agriculture and the arts. As the object of this article is not to analyze and synthetize the coming Theocracy, but only to hint at the universal extent of its purposes and predictions, the reader must learn of Koreshanity through the general literature of the Guiding Star Publishing House. The kingdom of righteousness will be established in the earth, not merely through evolution, but through revolution as well; not by a gradual development by virtue of the ordinary and so called civilized processes of the age, but through a sudden and overwhelming baptism, compared to which the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the beginning of the Christian age was but a suggestion. This baptism will come through the centralization of the human mind into the great representative nucleus of truth—the polar point of universal human desire. It will be the result of the recognition and fulfilment of the Messianic law, a recognition in which the first of the ten commandments will have its fruition. We mean the statement, "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me." When the disciples of the Lord confessed him the Son of God, they acknowledged this commandment, knowing that the Lord was God, the source of all light and life, not merely of man regenerated, but that all things were made by him and for him. The church and the world have yet to learn that the perfect man is the Son—offspring of God, and that the Lord was the type of this coming manhood. The sons of God are yet to be born, immortality is yet to be attained, and the kingdom in earth established, but the time is at hand.

Origin of Crime in the Cesspools of Competition.

IN THE Chicago Tribune of January 2, commenting on the criminal phases of our civilization as suggested by the mental quality of Christian Merry, the wife murderer, we find the following:

Now, it is manifest that if society cultivated the will and the conscience as the good man cultivates them, the result would be much the same in the life of society as it is in the life of the individual. But society does not do this. If it did, the environment in which Christian Merry was brought up could never have existed. That environment is possible only where there is a monstrous avoidance of a plain duty on the part of The imperial city of Chicago has no right to permit such conditions to exist within its borders. Look for a moment at the surroundings amid which this wretched young creature was brought up. His own people and their neighbors, and the neighbors of these neighbors, by the thousands, live in crowded and filthy tenement districts. The houses they inhabit are the breeding places of disease and vice and crime. There is an .insufficiency of air and of light, and a superabundance of dampness and of filth. Modern improvements are unknown. in the walls of tumble down shanties or larger barren and barnlike structures, there is not a single thing to please the eye, cultivate the mind, or elevate the soul. There is unavoidable contact with the low, the base, the brutish, and the wicked. The common ambition of the inmates is to satisfy their sensual appetites. In such neighborhoods a saloon is the commonest rendezvous; the commonest form of social pleasure is a drink. The conscience and the will of the people of Chicago are typified in the salaon keeper who sits in the Common Council and helps make laws for the government of the municipality.

There is a certain school of philosophers who reply to this kind of an indictment by repudiating the obligation of society in the premises. This is especially true in the United States, where the word socialism has come to be a veritable bogy. More particularly still, is it true in the rural districts of the United States, where there is a woeful ignorance of urban needs and urban development, or degeneration, rather. During the fight against the notorious street railway bills at Springfield last winter and spring, an honorable, honest, and able member of the Legislature from one of the country districts, who did not wish to favor a railroad steal, was fully as much alarmed at the talk of municipalization as he was at the method of the boodling companies and politicians.

If the Chicago Tribune and other great dailies were as devoted to the public interest as they are to the cultivation and development of the morbid tendency to the sensational in journalism, there might be less reason to complain, even under the influence of the great cesspool of hell—the competitive system. But one thing is responsible for the condition of things that the above editorial so vehemently repudiates in theory.

We know that the competitive system governs the world. This statement does not rest on a hypothetical basis. We know that under this system we have a few millionaires and millions of paupers. These conditions are not exaggerated by the Tribune's statement, in a land of churches and under the civilizing (?) influences of the daily press. So long as the Chicago Tribune devotes its influence to, and exerts its energies for, the bondholders' and bankers' control of the monetary system upon the basis of the single gold standard,—a system which contracts the currency and pauperizes the masses,-it ought not to comment in contrast upon the untried theories of a "certain school of philosophers." If socialism can produce any worse condition than that portrayed in the editorial quoted, a condition we know to obtain under the church steeples of Chicago, and under the benign influence of the great daily from which we quote, it is yet to be verified in practice.

The competitive system is here and is a fact; under its operations these two diverse conditions obtain, and there is not a man living (having any sense) who cannot see that redundant wealth on the one hand and wretched poverty on the other are the sequential results of the competitive struggle, a struggle in which the great skilful plunderer and the soulless corporate pirate are enabled to accumulate and hoard the earnings of the masses who also struggle, not for the millions, but for a bare pittance of the riches they have created, and of which they are plundered.

If the Tribune will look over its file of papers, about the time the legislative boodlers were being sent to make our laws, it will notice that, if it has any influence, it had a good deal of a hand in the creation of the present legislation. We remember that Hanna, the gold-bug, and the Tribune are responsible for the Legislature which that paper now flatly denounces. We have noticed another thing to which we desire to call the Tribune's attention—the press of Chicago was a great power during the campaign which elected Governor Tanner and the boodle Legislature, while it had the gold-bug behind it, but impotent when fighting this same Legislature with the gold-bug arrayed against it.

"On the Trail of Cyrus Teed."

"Preparing to Vanquish the Fakir by Attacking His Concave Theory."

Cyrus Teed-"Koresh," has a woman on his trail, who has devoted her life to the exposure of his infamy and scientific pretensions. Of the vulgar fakir's moral depravity she has already written in the Post, and of the scientific feature of his fraud she will give an accounting in due time. This woman is Mrs. H. F. Wright, a Denver artist, whe spent a summer at Teed's establishment, and seven months at his "Heaven" in a Florida swamp.

"My intention," said Mrs. Wright, "is not only to expose the false life of this audacious schemer, but to have all of his religioscientific fallacies ably refuted, and thus to prevent others from becoming ensuared by this conscienceless fraud. I propose first to prove the absurdity of his concave theory. It is astonishing what a hold this doctrine of his has on his dupes. Before I openly joined his colony my friends in reasoning with me, abused and ridiculed the man, and I said to them, 'prove the falsity of his concave theory and I will hesitate.' None of them could do so, and I fell under his influence, abandoned my home, and gave him every dollar I had in the world.

'After I found out the man's true nature and the falsity of all his pretenses, I set about examining his concave theory, and with the assistance of men of learning was enabled to comprehend the utter ridiculousness of that theory. People often said to me, 'Why, how can or could you believe such nonsense?' When I questioned them they were utterly at a loss to give any valid reason for disbelieving it. Their own ignorance was as dense as the ignorance of those whom Teed had deluded. With the assistance of Rev. Dr. Utter I have prepared a statement refuting his theory; this I hope will have its effect upon those who are unable to answer his arguments.

"The real and avowed foundation of 'Koreshan Science' is what Dr. Teed calls the 'Cellular Cosmogony,' the theory that the earth is a hollow sphere and that we live on the inside and not on the outside of it.

"The wall of this sphere, he says, is about one hundred miles in thickness, consisting of a gold layer outside, other metallic layers inside, arranged according to their specific gravity; then the geological strata, with the mountains, rivers, seas and homes of men finishing the inner concave surface. ing space of sphere is filled with the various atmospheres and the heavenly bodies, sun, moon, and stars. Three atmospheres are described. First, the air we breathe, extending upward, inward, a hundred miles; second, an atmosphere of pure hydrogen; third, an atmosphere of aboron—a word coined for a theory without a fact to support it.

'Most scientific men, most educated people in fact, count this 'Cellular Cosmogony' simply absurd and give it no second Yet, how many people are there who can refute it in a scientific manner, with an array of incontrovertible facts? It is not every person who has sufficient scientific knowledge, or every educated person who has sufficient accurate information to do so.

"For nearly a quarter of a century Teed has been proclaiming himself the Messiah, and to prove his Messiahship he announces that the earth is concave and that we live on the inside of it, and he has demonstrated this astonishing fact by scientific experiments. When a victim with property whom he wishes to inveigle into his clutches, questions this assertion, he rattles off a lot of pseudo-scientific gibberish to which his hearer has no answer available. She-for it is generally a woman-has no education or information with which to answer him, and the result is that she accepts his statement as gospel truth. My aim is to supply the necessary information to men or women who are on the verge of surrendering their all to this depraved monster. He must be met on his own plane and vanquished by the truth. With this object in view I sought Dr. Utter, who very kindly wrote for me a complete exposition of the argument against the concave theory, and this argument I propose to put in the hands of every poor person to whom it may come in time to save them."—Denver Evening Post.

Dr. Teed's Open Letter to the Denver Evening Post, Challenging the Rev. Dr. Utter!

TO THE Editor Denver Evening Post:—We have just noticed a communication from Mrs. H. F. Wright in the January 3 issue of your paper, under the caption, "On the Trail of Cyrus Teed." The article sets · forth in a very general way, some of the facts regarding the Koreshan Cosmogony, for which, to reach as many readers, we have expended many hundreds of dollars. She trails into the article the name of a Rev. Dr. Utter, of whom we never before heard, who it is declared is preparing to vanquish this arch enemy (?) of the human race. Were Dr. Teed the fakir and fraud that the article claims him to be, let him alone and he will vanquish himself; but if his enemies desire publicly to show up the audacity of the so called fakir in question, Dr. Teed will meet in Denver, in public, at any time, in any church or hall that may be designated, the Rev. Dr. Utter, or any reverend gentleman of prominent and regular standing in the orthodox church, or any scientific man in Denver, in America, or in the world.

The Rev. Dr. Utter, we venture to assert, is no more

THE communication of doctrine depends first upon the central discoverer, then upon the few who are in the acme of desire for that doctrine, but who are in the acquisition (through an involution co-ordinate with the manifestation of the central and perfected doctrine) of up in "science" than the professional "scientists" themselves; and all that any of them pretends to claim is, that the Copernican system is founded upon an assumption. We have promulgated our system for nearly thirty years, but the matter has been apparently too insignificant for investigation. We have endeavored to awaken enough interest to induce some one to notice us enough to attempt a refutation of what we teach. If a disgruntled ex-member of our community has gotten up steam enough to stir up the Rev. Dr. Utter to throw down the gauntlet, we are only too ready to place our system publicly by the side of fallacy originating in the dark ages, by atheists, and against which the church has battled for years. It will blaze the brighter in contrast with the sharpest enunciations of the Copernican perversity.

We are greatly obliged to Mrs. Wright for inducing so valuable and prominent a paper as the Denver Evening Post to announce publicly to the world so much in a general way-of the Cellular Cosmogony.-Cyrus R. TEED, Founder of the Koreshan System.

Genuine Discovery vs. Conjectured Probability.

UR attention has been called to a letter written to our office, in which it is stated that neither Koresh nor Helen Wilmans was the first to declare immortal life in the body a possibility, for the writer knew a man fifty eight years ago who declared he would live forever in the body, but that he died—as all others will do, because no man will ever subvert the laws of nature. First, let us remark that there are probably a great many laws of nature that the writer of the letter may not have discovered, and of which he is yet in ignorance. There are many people who think that what they do not know is not worth investigating. We would remark further that we lay no claim to having first discovered the purpose of God to create men immortal. Enoch reached immortality. He walked with God and was not, for God took him. Elijah was translated, by which is meant that he attained to the possibility of overcoming, of dissolving his visible body and entering into life through absorption. The Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, after rising from the tomb and appearing visibly and materially to his disciples, in the presence of many witnesses, dissolved his body, which had attained to immortality, it being converted to Holy Spirit and absorbed by the church baptized with the spiritual energy of his dissolution.

We merely claim that we have discovered the laws by which this change may and will be wrought. This law resides primarily in the dissolving of the pineal gland or conarium of the encephalon, and the formation of an annulus through the connecting fibres of the crura pinealis and the processus e cerebello-adtestes, the fibres extending from the cerebellum and uniting it with the cerebrum through the conarium. The changes to be wrought—by which death will be overcome, and of which the writer referred to knows nothing and probably is too conceited to examine honestly—are known only to the originator and Founder of the Koreshan System, and to such only as will learn from the only Teacher of the science of immortal life. The intimation that immortality is possible, might be made by ten thousand people and yet amount to nothing. The discovery and application of the principles of immortality are quite different. This knowledge we possess; not only so, but we are giving it to the world free. The prime secret is in a knowledge of the Messianic law, a law the principles of which are not known outside of Koreshanity.

A Few Red-Hot Sword Thrusts.

Formation of the Great Biological Battery.

HE readers of The Flaming Sword are aware that it is the advocate of the doctrine and laws of immortality in the body. Man as now existing is not immortal, either in spirit, soul, or body. Immortality is an acquirement, and will obtain through an understanding and application of these laws. The Founder of Koreshanity has advocated these principles for nearly thirty years, and herein reiterates the fact that it is the only system having any knowledge of the science of immortal life, or the science of overcoming death in the body. The central principle of immortal life resides in the Messianic law. This law culminates at a definite time, when the energies of theocrasis focalize in the Messenger of the Covenant. The theocrasis of the Messenger of the Covenant will be followed by a general dematerialization of thousands of men and women. This great electro-magnetic conflagration is the burning of the world so long predicted. Out of this fire will proceed the sons of God. One of the principal offices of the Messenger of the Covenant, is to formulate a biologic battery through the organization of the nucleus of the Social Theocracy. The laws of the structure of this battery are known only to the Founder of the Koreshan System, as the laws for the organization of the battery through which the Lord was theocrasised were known only to him. While there is no mystery withheld by us regarding these principles, it is hard for the human mind to comprehend the truths we utter, because they are so thoroughly in opposition to everything taught in the world, regarding life. It is only through the constant study of our literature that a knowledge of the science can be gained.

* * * Medical College Absorbed by University Trust.

T APPEARS that the Rush Medical College is about to become an adjunct of the Chicago University. Among the conditions imposed, is that of a high standard of scholastic achievement in colleges and universities other than medical, before being allowed to enter and take degrees in the Rush College. This will provide for the development of learned quacks-so much required in these latter days of "scientific" progress. Before Bright's disease of the kidneys was scientifically diagnosed, and the discovery made of albuminuria and renal casts, constituting specific indications of renal consumption, the disease was commonly considered curable by the application of physical treatment. Since the critical signs of diagnosis have been scientifically stated, the disease is regarded as incurable. Now, if it be stated to the patient suffering from this disease, that he has Bright's disease, the mental suggestion precludes in the patient's mind any wholesome response to either drug or mental treatment, and the disease becomes incurable. Bright's disease of the kidneys is not an incurable malady, though so regarded by learned quacks. The best physician the world has ever yet produced had no collegiate, university, or medical training in the common acceptation of these terms. He was murdered for his ability, and were he here today, President Harper of the University of Chicago, and the Rush Medical College would unite in shutting off his opportunity to render consolation and also restoration to health, where learned quackery ever fails to accomplish any good results.

Koreshanity Flourishes Despite Persecution.

WE COURT investigation on every line. The malicious charges against us by the press and disgruntled individuals have invariably benefited us. When the Daily Englewood Printing Housewas opened, the local press slandered us for weeks; but the more they advertised us gratuitously, the more our business prospered. It is almost invariably the case that when a vituperous, lying slanderer launches an avalanche of invectives, some heart is reached who before knew nothing of the presentation of Koreshanity, and is thus directed toward us and an investigation of this wonderful system, the only one in the world having a premise corroborated by the testimony of absolute demonstration. We challenge the world and bid defiance to our enemies, and rejoice when men revile us and persecute us and say all manner of evil against us falsely for truth's sake, for we know that great is our reward in heaven and in the established kingdom in the earth. We are not presenting the truths of Koreshanity for fun nor for money. We are fulfilling an obligation reposed in us by virtue of our especial adaptation to the work in which we are engaged. We thank our enemies for all the free advertising they may incite for us, and we labor continuously in the full assurance of final triumph.

CONTRIBUTORS' AND EDITOR'S DEPARTMENTS.

Apostolic Succession Obtains Through Reincarnation.

BY VICTORIA GRATIA.

THERE can be nothing more definite in the doctrines of the Gospel of the Lord, than that of the Apostolic succession. There is nothing more absurd than the interpretation of the Lord's commission as rendered by the Protestant churches, and no greater perversion than that instituted by the mother of harlots, the Roman Catholic church. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church," means, according to the Protestant churches, that thou art Peter, the rock, but I do not build my church upon the rock, Peter, but upon the rock, Christ. There is something particularly absurd and contradictory in such a definition of the Lord's words.

The Lord transmitted his life and planted it in the church, specifically in John, James, and Peter, the channels through which he disseminated his substance to the church. Peter was the centre of material transmission, hence with him were left the keys of the kingdom of heaven, to be employed by Peter when he should come into his divine authority. He never was given any authority to sublet those keys to any set of rascals who might succeed him, when the church should have declined into the corruption of doctrine and life. Whatsoever Peter should loose in earth, should be loosed in heaven; and whatsoever he should bind in earth, should be bound in heaven. This is merely a statement conferring upon Peter all authority in heaven and in earth. What does this all mean? Merely that as the Lord planted himself in the race through the impregnation or vitalization of the church, and especially in Peter, the specific and central germ of his, the Lord's life, in the reincarnation or resurrection of the dead, Peter should first arise as the Apostolic successor at the end of the dispensation—not necessarily under that name, but with the truth of the Lord Christ involved and resurrected in him.

Instead of the keys being transmitted from pope to pope, Peter becomes, in the reincarnation, the successor of the Lord with all authority in the earth to be transplanted to the central throne and consciousness of Deity, as he is absorbed into the central nucleus of the anthropostic world. Peter then would be the Elijah of the age, the Messiah, and the precursor of the sons of God. What will be his special office when he appears?

A Study From Chicago Life.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

"Liebe mutter, please get me the spinning music! Liebe mutter, Carl wants the spinning music. Oh, bitte, buy it for Carl!"

"Ach! thou'lt break thy mother's heart, mein kind. Leave crying liebling, I'll sing to thee!"

THE poor mother began to croon a lullaby of the fatherland, vainly trying to lift the sobbing boy to her knee, but with the wilful perversity of childhood he slipped from her arms and retreating to the corner, flung himself face down upon the bare floor.

It was just after Christmas, a festival always pathetic in a tenement house, among the unsuccessful in the great struggle for existence, whose unfitness for survival is already determined and their consequent elimination from society, imminent. Nobody knew just how it happened, but this year, by some miracle of fortune, one of the children in "Prowitt's den" as the miserable, neglected building reeking with filth and teeming with vice, was called in the vicinity, had been presented with a musical top. Christmas gifts were rare at Prowitt's.

where dinner was problematical and other meals attended with an element of uncertainty which might be pleasing to a mind naturally indisposed to fixed monotony of habit. The fortunate possessor of this attraction was suddenly raised to the pinnacle of happiness, and his wonderful top became the envy, admiration and despair of all the children in the place. Jim McRudy openly announced his intention of stealing it; several boys were eager to fight the owner for his prize, while little Carl Elsenheimer after standing long in rapt contemplation of the gayly-painted, melodious whirligig, ran clamoring for one like it, to his mother who stood washing, drooping despondently over her task in the small inner room, scarcely more than a closet, lighted only by faint gleams struggling through two panes in the door from a window in the passage, supplemented by the smoky flare of a kerosene lamp.

Nothing that Mrs. Elsenheimer could say, would pacify the child whose pleadings, interrupted by bedtime, were renewed at daybreak, only to wax more pathetic and insistent as the hours passed. The poor woman was in despair; disappointed in receiving pay for her last work, she had not a penny, and there was only a crust of bread picked up in an alley, for their joint rations. Starvation seemed to stare them in the face, and here was Carl fretting himself into a fever over an expensive toy. She crept softly up to him and gently lifted the little fellow to the dilapidated mattress that served as a cot. Exhausted by crying, he had fallen asleep, though every few moments he started convulsively, moaned and drew his breath in a long quivering sigh; a pink flush overspread his cheeks; dark circles showed ominously below the closed lids; his flaxen curls were tangled and matted, his baby hands, dry and burning. Carl was the only joy-spring in the barren, desolate waste of his mother's existence; he was a delicate child, the last of a large family, all anæmic, and of late he had not seemed well. In a favorable environment, the little plant might have thrived in spite of lack of stamina, but in the unhealthy atmosphere of a tenement house, it could only droop and die.

Might not this passionate desire if ungratified, prove fatal to the physical poise of the child's nature? Mrs. Elsenheimer felt that she must secure the toy at all hazards; "Perhaps I can beg it for him," was the unspoken thought inher mind as she donned a rusty shawl and the faded apology for a bonnet that would have gone to the pawnbroker long ago, had it been of the slightest pecuniary value. It was growing dusk, but walking swiftly she soon reached the shops still crowded as in holiday week, with eager bargain hunters. Most of the Christmas goods were offered at reduced prices, and so dense was the throng, so constant the stream of people coming and going, it seemed as if the whole population of the city had poured itself into the streets. Wherever toys were displayed, the poor mother paused

The very fact of a contest between the laborer and the accumulations he has heaped up for his employer, is long and anxiously: So many beautiful things! Enough for all the children in the world, it seemed! Why should her darling be deprived of them? It was cruel, unjust! Presently she found herself in one of the large department stores in front of a collection of the coveted playthings; a dozen happy-faced children approached the counter as she waited, each in turn departing happy with his "spinning music."

Again and again she tried to tell her story and beg the gift that would delight Carl's heart. She thought how his great blue eyes would brighten and his merry laugh ring out at sight of the treasure; perhaps his very life depended on the gratification! Who could tell? But it was all in vain; her trembling lips refused to utter a syllable, and she found she could not beg. A terrible struggle went on in the mind of the unhappy woman as she lingered near the counter; at last in an evil moment, temptation proved too strong and she hastily slipped one of the tops under her shawl. The salesman's back was turned and Mrs. Elsenheimer did not notice the floor-walker at a distance in full view of the theft, but as she hastened toward the door, a policeman grimly interposed and arrested her. Too stunned and bewildered to speak, the wretched mother · was conducted to the station-house where she essayed to tell her pitiful story to the officers, but her guilt was patent, the toy had been found in her possession and they were obliged to detain her for the night; the judge would attend to her case in the morning. Before she could realize what had happened, the iron door clanged, the key grated in the lock. Then an agony of shame, terror, remorse, fell upon her. Could it be that she, Lois Elsenheimer, the daughter of a respectable Lutheran pastor, brought up to fear God and respect the law, was in jail for theft?—worse than all, for theft actually committed! But when she thought of Carl helpless, alone, with no food, anxiety for him almost stifled the bitter consciousness of her surroundings. It was a night of anguish.

The judge next morning was in a hurry. He let the woman off easily, as he thought, but the sentence of ten days was like a death-blow to her. When the time expired, she went back to seek her darling in the tenement house, but little Carl's bright face and childish prattle would never gladden his mother's heart again. The nervous irritability which found expression in fretful pleadings for the toy, proved the premonitory symptoms of fever, to which he succumbed in less than a week. Poor little blossom, so frail and tender, shut away from the free air and the blessed sunshine, withered upon its stem!

And what of the grief-stricken mother? Her tears, alas, cry out for something deeper than pity, stronger than charity, more effective than words,—nothing short of the demolition and reconstruction of the entire social fabric.

Bacchanalian Debauch of Yale University.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

The great Yale-Princeton foot-ball game inaugurated and ended in a monster carouse lasting from Friday afternoon until the dawn of the Sabbath—two nights and a day of maudlin revelry. New Haven's saloons jammed to bursting with drunken, swearing students, shrieking out the merits of the teams and gambling on the results. Harlots swarmed the streets, gathering in the young debauchees. The calaboose packed to its full capacity; excise laws thrown to the winds—and the city wide open.—New York Voice.

HE above clipping contains the head-lines of a long article, setting forth the beautiful working of the modern so called Christian university. Another article tells us that had victory perched upon the other standard, Princeton, with its saloon obtained by the help of the signatures of some of its professors, would have been the scene of a similar debauch. The report declares that there were at least one thousand drunken students. The report from Princeton says that it was estimated that $20,000 were carried out of that town to bet on the game, some students even selling their beds for money to gamble with. There were no killed in this Bacchanalian revel, and but seven wounded. If such things are done in the green tree, what may we expect in the dry? What sort of teachers, preachers, lawyers, and judges will such education naturally produce?

Just such as we see everywhere today; teachers, who having spent the time and energies of their school days in demoralizing games and their attendant vices, have little or no truth to teach, nor acquired mental capacity to learn; preachers who have no sacred regard for God or the interests and rights of their fellow men, and who are ready for a consideration, practically to condone the commitment of any offense against God, or outrage against the rights of men; lawyers who are eager to sell for money their utmost efforts to push any scheme of robbery or fraud, or rescue any criminal that is able to pay a fee, or even to send an innocent man to the gallows for a fee; and judges, who, swearing to dispense equal justice among men, are ready by injunction, or otherwise, often to favor the immoral rich and powerful, at the expense of the virtuous poor and weak.

Such monster exhibitions of human depravity in what are supposed to be the great centers of Christian education, show clearly that our Christianity has become a deception and a sham. While making loud professions of allegiance to Him who said: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you," they do none of his commandments, but teach and practice the very opposite.

In the Editorial Perspective.

M. S. B. NICKUM, of Logansport, Ind., claims to have discovered a few facts that will revolutionize all present recognized science, and overthrow the modern theories of gravitation and chemistry. He has invented a new illuminant, the nature of which is guarded with the strictest secrecy. However, he has divulged a few facts which enable us to form some conclusions. He has invented a "perpetual light," which consists of a ground glass globe, containing chemical compounds. A vacuum, as nearly complete as possible, is created, and the globe sealed. When the sealing is complete, a bright, mellow light, like sunlight, is emitted from the globe. We have no desire to do Mr. Nickum an injustice in divulging his secret, but it is due to Koreshan Science that we announce that it is a complete demonstration of the Cellular Cosmogony. First, notice, that he has taken a globe, only semi-transparent; he announces that it is destructive to the present theory of gravitation and chemistry. Now, what obtains in the globe to produce the light? Exactly what obtains at the center of the great universal cell-a partial materialization at the center of the globe, of the energies generated through alchemical action of the compounds; the material nucleus is in process of combustion, and is held, through attraction and repulsion, at the center of the globe. A vortex is created, and the intense vibration induced corresponds to the vibration of some substances in the central solar sphere. These substances are attracted to the pivotal vortex, and continually supply the perpetual light. The exceedingly refined substances come from without the glass globe—they come from the sun. The inventor claims to have "bottled the sunshine." His invention is a demonstration of not only the form of the universe, but also the science of the function of the sun at the center of the earth.

Koreshan Science involves the science of the destruction of the positive pole of the battery—something hitherto unknown to chemical and electrical science. The central, solar nucleus at the center of the great cell or hollow globe we inhabit, is a demonstration of the principle. Jesus Christ was the positive pole of the great battery of humanity; he is the perpetual Light of the world.

"We must wait and see!" Who says this? Some one who expects great results, the nature of which he possesses no knowledge. The expression is concerning astronomy, uttered by one of the greatest recognized scientists of the world-Lord Kelvin of England. He avows a disbelief in the Newtonian theory of gravitation, and favors the vortex theory of Descartes as being the more reasonable; yet he says that neither has been proven. We quote his own words: "I accept neither theory; I accept no theory of gravitation. Present science has no right to attempt to explain gravitation. We know nothing about it; we simply know nothing about it." Now, what is to become of the Newtonian System of astronomy? The hypothesis of gravitation is its premise, and now that premise is cast aside by one of the world's so called scientific leaders! He throws the Newtonian fallacy out of equilibrium by severing the push-andpull force of the convenient gravic mode of motion, and destroys a cherished belief when he shatters the old idol of the earth filled with liquid, molten matter; he thinks the earth is solid. In view of these admissions on the part of the greatest modern astronomer, we are somewhat curious to know what the Rev. Dr. Utter, of Denver, Colo., will have to say when he begins his puerile attack on the Koreshan Cosmogony if he ever begins

Koreshan Science of Anthropology defines the relation each nation sustains to the great body of humanity. In each of the governments we find functions corresponding to the functions of the human structure. It is a body of the old order, the involution of which constitutes the germinal center or nucleus of the new world, the seed or pivot of all true reformation. The pivot involves the essence of all progress, the science of which is the great magnanimous, universal purview. The old structure is rapidly approaching dissolution. The vitals of the great body perform their functions only through excessive stimulation, while opiates of delusion deaden the pain and dull the sensibilities. The great visceral arch, corresponding to the continental belt of the north temperate zone of the alchemico-organic structure, has its keystone; a few more political convulsions will dislodge it. The structure of the old order, though afflicted with serious functional derangement, stands until the skin or environ is separated. China represents the skin or rind of humanity, where the memory is stored; it is the oldest nation, and it goes farthest back in the annals of known history. Powers are conspiring to make incisions and damaging rents in the great environ. A stupendous collapse is inevitable; the end of the old system and the birth of the new are at hand.

A writer in the Philosophic Journal, a spiritist publication, makes some startling declarations. It has been thought that spiritism teaches the immortality of the soul and many other things, but the writer referred to admits that "spirit phenomena" do not teach anything--that spiritists have never made a statement of their belief; that in fact, what belief there is in the spiritist body is merely private opinion. He says: "It is singular that a people should be so very enthusiastic about that which they do not define." It is strange, isn't it? They do not define a belief nor premise a science, because they do not know anything about the phenomena they witness. We have here an example of a movement of about fifty years, with an admitted absence of principle and scientific conclusion. They know no more about the cause of the phenomena of spiritism than the scientists know about human physiology, the laws of mind, being, and existence, or of the form and function of the physical universe. The above admission means this: If spiritism be called a system, it is a system without the light of positive conclusion.

The great Durrant case has ended with the suspension of the convicted upon the gibbet. He was executed against the manifest protest of the greatest effort ever made to save the sentenced, and in the face of the doubt of thousands of American people. Durrant claimed to have been hounded to his death by the daily press; it is fair to say that the trials and discussions of his case have contributed more to the success of the newspapers than any other man in the world, charged with murder. From firs to last he protested his innocence. Every effort made by him and for him for new trials, and every appeal to superior courts, vigorously voice the belief that the trials of the criminal courts were unfair in the extreme. During his last hours he said: "If I die, I die like a Durrant; it would be weak and childish to say at this late hour that I had not had a fair trial." The daily press contained flaming headlines that he had admitted that he had had a fair trial—an example of how the daily press can jump at a conclusion and make capital out of expressions they covertly disguise. Durrant meant just the opposite.

Editor Flower, of the New Time, arrives at the conclusion that it is necessary to elevate the morals of a nation by awakening and educating its people, developing character, inducing independent and broad thought, and creating ideals of the just and the noble—all this must take place alongside economic and social reform. That is an easy conclusion; anybody can see that! But the question is, How is it to be done? When, how, and where is the New Time going to begin the work of the world's reformation? The true reformer must come as the involved product of the age, not the mere Flower. Fallacious diagnosis is quite another thing from curing the disease!

Citizens of the United States boast of loyalty to law and to the Government. Last week two Indians were burned in the Indian Territory, for a crime. The right of fair trial is guaranteed by the Constitution. The people are losing confidence in the courts, and desire to administer the penalty by their own hands without due course of trial. They are therefore anarchists. Years ago the Indians burned Americans at the stake; they were considered savage and treacherous. What, now, are the citizens who are the disciples of Judges Lynch and Fireandfaggot? As savage and as treacherous as the Indians!

There is not an invention nor a discovery of modern times, outside of the Koreshan System, that is not under the control and in the use of agencies of evil for the promotion and facilitation of schemes of oppression. Inventions are not made by the moneyed capitalists, but through the genius of the workingman. Inventors are but tools of monopoly; more than all other agencies in the world, they contribute to the wealth of the millionaire. They have not enough economic sense to benefit their fellow-workmen by placing their inventions in the hands of the producers of wealth.

Vagrancy laws demand the arrest of every man who has no visible means of support. The real trouble is not so much in those who have no visible means of support, as in those whose support is visible—too visible, too palpably evident that their support is stolen from the producer. It is such visible support that we object to. No man can have visible support if it is taken away from him and given to somebody else!

Americans have had much to say about the multi-million dollar salaries of the kings of Europe, and expressed their disapproval of the income of the crowned aristocracy by fixing the salary of the President of the United States at $50,000 per year. And yet they tolerate greater incomes in America—conditions under which millions of dollars may be stolen from the producers in a single day!

In the great field of modern competition, the chances are a million dollars to one against the workingman, and in favor of the millionaire. We see the weak arrayed against the strong, with an increase of strength for those who have it, with rapid disintegration of the forces of labor. This is the popular reformer's nightmare!

Pus is a secretion from inflamed tissue, and is an indication of corruption. This is especially true of the great newspaper octopus, the result of inflamed tissue of abnormal human society. The Flaming Sword will puncture and cauterize the abscess!

Gotham society is becoming plutocratic; ten New York women have formed a trust to supervise the social register and to bar out all not entitled to social recognition. The standard is not worth of character, but worth in millions.

Walter Vrooman, with the abnormal conditions of society in mind, asks the usual reformer if he will be the surgeon or the corpse. Surgeon, if he knows how, of course; if not, the neighbor will be the corpse.

Compared with other countries, the people of America are the most uncivil, ungentlemanly, inconsiderate and impolite. A Hindoo is often more polite to his enemy than the average American is to his friend.

Quiet Talks with the Editors of our Exchanges.

EVER write advertisements? We want a number of striking advertisements of THE FLAMING SWORD written up. At your distance you can see some striking features of the Koreshan System, and you know what your first impressions of THE FLAMING SWORD were. We need twentyfive forms of advertisements, and of course someone of the twenty-five will be the best. The advertisements must be attractive, striking and tasty in display, and choice in wording, containing some extraordinarily apt, taking, and appropriate catchline. You have the startling scientific claims of the system—the hollow globe, the scientific cure-all for all physiologic and economic ills and national evils, the character of THE FLAMING SWORD, its flames, its originality, and other unique features to choose from. Take one of these features and embody it in some catch phrase for the main or first line, and then draw on your imagination to supply other expressions to fit in an advertisement of 50 or 75 words. We will induce some effort by making the following proposition: We will publish in THE Sword every good form of advertisement of this journal sent to us by editors or advertisement writers, making it a special department, with the name of the editor and his paper above—a sort of special advertisement of you and your work. It will be a kind of serial department, with a single form of advertisement for each chapter. To the writer of the best advertisement we will say that we will insert a form of advertisement of your own paper, in the style you devise for THE FLAMING SWORD, for four consecutive issues, twenty-nine ems pica width, and three inches in length, and we will announce above the advertisement that you are the prize advertisement writer of THE FLAMING SWORD. THE FLAMING SWORD is read by thousands of progressive thinkers and reformers, and by hundreds of editors and printers. Make your own display of the ad. you write for the SWORD, insert once in your paper and send us marked copy. Get it up at once; all forms must be in by March 1, 1898.

Many theories of reform have not yet reached the experimental stage. No reform effort should be an experiment. The nation's ills cannot be cured without a knowledge not only of what the trouble is, but also of the remedy that will effect the cure. In a case of serious illness you would not like to have a quack experiment on you to ascertain what is the matter with you. Every reformer is a socialistic quack if he is not able to take the nation as a patient in his own hands, and actually cure the disease! This would require definite and absolute knowledge of the true social organization, founded on the physiology of the human system and of the laws of construction of the physical universe. The true reformer must have the great panacea, the universal cure-all; and he must not be afraid to announce the fact. Now, who in all the world really possesses the ability to do the work? You say the man that makes such a claim is a fraud? He is not if he can do it. The man that cannot, but attempts to do it, is a quack. The man that is able to do it is either you, somebody else, or nobody. Which is it? We do not want you to be a quack, nor a follower of one. Now, we are going to look at the columns of your paper closely to see if you are able to do the nation any absolute good, according to the above standard. If not, we will have an opinion of you agreeable to the strong inference contained in this paragraph. Isn't that

Here is something of special interest to editors-ahead of anything that we have ever offered you or that you have offered to us. The reform and scientific journals are saying a good deal about us, and we do not want this to be kept up without our doing something in return-it would not be fair. We can make a little competition assist in a little co-operation. We have a full column space for a special write-up of the journal which will publish from the pen of its editor, the best description of THE FLAMING SWORD, its character and the object of its publication. The articles should not exceed 500 words, nor contain less than 200; and they should be studied and well-worded, with much expressed in little. We mean exactly what we say; if you desire to enter the contest, publish the article we request, mark the copy of your paper containing it and send it to us. We will republish all of the articles sent us, with credit and mention; but the best one entitles its writer to the special, full-column write-up.

We find a few editors making the mistake of writing with their scissors and of clipping from The Flaming Sword with their pens. We refer to those who copy, without credit, editorials and original matter published in this journal. We have no copyright on our matter and do not intend to have unless we change our minds; but we would suggest that we entertain an unexpressed opinion regarding the course of the People's Press, Albany, Ore., for publishing about a column and a half of original matter from one of our contributors without the name of the writer or The Flaming Sword appended. What is the concensus of opinion of the editorial fraternity regarding such a course? The People's Press may join in the reply. All we ask is credit for what we originate.

Imitation is the sincerest form of commendation and flattery of the thing imitated, and an evidence of the worth and merit of the original. If we may judge from the appearance of a few publications which have recently been changed in their tone, style, and makeup, The Flaming Sword is original in design, make-up, and expression. We copy after nobody; we are original.

You either have the whole truth, a part of it, or none of it. If you have the whole truth, why don't you say so and prove it? If a part of it, how can you reform the world with a partial truth and some fallacy? And are you sure that you have not distorted what you have so that it will not fit the whole truth when it comes? If none of it, what are you publishing a theory for?

We mention every new publication that comes to our desk. We are going through our entire list of exchanges, giving name of publication, price, subjects discussed, etc. You like to see us friendly—we know you do, for several papers have said so. We like to see you friendly, too.

The time is at hand for empty journalistic boasting to cease. The claims of a journal must now be backed up by facts; such is the policy of THE FLAMING SWORD. We prove our claims; any other course is deception and fraud, however covert it might be.

A man with a good idea is able to convey it in the best forms of expression. The gift of the generation of good ideas and the gift of apt expression always go together. These two things conspire to make The Flaming Sword brilliant and forceful.

Thanks, all of you, for favors, notices, and quotations. The reform press is echoing expressions published in The Flaming Sword as never before. You will lose nothing by it—we are giving you valuable returns; and the gain will be mutual.

As evinced by our advertising pages, our advertising proposition is meeting with a hearty response. We are going to ask our readers to look at your advertisements and to send for sample copies.

No theory is beautiful unless it is practical, because "a thing of beauty is a joy forever." Fallacies are transient theories, and are not enduring.

Dress your paper well if you want it to make an impression when it goes abroad. People rarely ever listen to tramps.

Be brisk and brief. The longer your articles the longer you will be in inducing the people to read your paper.

THE FLAMING SWORD is the "perpetual light" of journalism.

* * * Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Before.

Thanks, my noble duke, we are not receiving things free or running on credit, to any great extent. We never will attempt to usurp the power of The Flammar Sword, which should be in the hands of intelligent persons. Its parries, intierce points and thrusts are too hot for our howitzer, so we will have to do something the Devil would not do for its penpusher, and that is, to try to do better in the future.—Coming Erents, Evansville, Ind.

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

The readers of THE FLAMING SWORD will appreciate the situation when we say that only the rery best articles are acceptable for its pages. We accept articles solely on their merit; we are not desiring to fill up space merely, nor to lumber THE SWORD with dry, uninteresting reading. We desire to induce interest in an article from the very first line, through each paragraph to the end, with the matter interspersed here and there with brilliant points that cannot fail to strike the reader as rational and conclusive! What we want now in this paragraph is to induce the application of the principles of apt expression. We want to stir up our Contributing Staff, by directing the magnetized blade of THE FLAMING SWORD toward ingenious writers hitherto unknown to us, so as to attract others and draw them out! We want to induce manifestation of some ingenuity outside our regular corps of writers. We desire the very best efforts of writers, studied and well-worded articles and stories, with ingenious arguments, apt expressions,-brilliant ideas couched in striking and exceptionally clear and lucid language --articles that are up-to-date, forceful and truthful, and full of points of literary excellency, not exceeding 1,200 words, nor less than 600. We want scores of articles coming as the result of high-tensioned mental activity. Now, who are the writers that will undertake the work? We have excellent and brilliant writers already, but we want a variety. It will be a sort of a contest! To the person sending us the best article or story illustrating some principle of Koreshan Science, Economics or Theology, or something else, previous to March 1, 1898, we will mail THE FLAMING SWORD for a period of fire years without cost; besides, the name of the fortunate contestant will be placed on the list of our regular contributors, with special mention of the writer and article accepted as the best, previous to and at the time of publication. Credit for other articles according to their merit, and the good articles published. Now, here is a golden opportunity for some bright minds-an education in itself. Go to work and see what you can do; but before you undertake it. feel that you can and must succeed!

Our readers have noticed our efforts to make THE FLAMING SWORD the brightest. the best, the unique and unequaled journal of the world. We want it to bristle with surprises week after week, and now we propose to have wide-awake readers share in the work of contributing to its interesting features and departments. You know something of the character and tone of the weekly FLAMING SWORD, and you know what strikes you with peculiar interest in all other papers you read. We desire striking newspaper articles, containing new and startling statements of prominent men, accounts of new discoveries, inventions and events. The daily press of Chicago does not contain all of the interesting things in the world, and we want to know of them all. Now this is what we propose: We will give credit of two years' subscription to THE FLAMING Sword to the reader sending us the best assortment of clippings previous to March 1, 1898, and will give credit for all other assortments according to their merit. Keep a sharp look-out, and scissor out everything you see that is particularly interesting; mail them in a package as third class matter, with your name and address on the wrapper.

A small sized sensation seems to be brewing in a puerile attempt to overthrow the Koreshan System of Astronomy. A woman formerly professing a comprehension of its principles, has visited a Denver preacher, Rev. Dr. Utter, who lives in at least national obscurity, and between them a remarkable discovery has been made that is claimed to eclipse all previous scientific effort to overthrow the science of Koresh. Read it—"On the Trail of Cyrus Teed," and Dr. Teed's challenge through the Denver Erening Post. We conclude beforehand, that the opposition is Utter nonsense!

This is to be read in an undertone:—The regular contributors to THE FLAMING SWORD might glance over the first paragraph in this department, and see what kind of an effect they can imagine it would have on them if they were not on the regular writing staff—the editor included! Several suggestions might arise spontaneously, so that they could still be original. Self-applied spurs are always the best!

Read in the Editorial Perspective the solution of the mystery of the perpetual light accidentally discovered by a Logansport, Ind., chemist and machinist, the secret of which he jealously guards. The Flaming Sword will contain the particulars of the invention and process when the new illuminant is ready for the public.

Do not forget page sixteen of THE FLAM-ING SWORD. Did you see our description of its undescribed features last week? Great transformation scene after a little—and you will like it; but in the meantime, you are going to guess in vain as to what it is!

We call special attention to the star articles by KORESH: "Aportolic Succession Obtains through Reincarnation" by Victoria Gratia, and the "Bacchanalian Debauch of Yale University" by Prof. O. F. L'Amoreaux, Ph. D.

We credit three months' subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD to every person sending us a list of one hundred names and addresses for sample copies.

Circular of Information of the College of Medicine and Surgery, for the year 1898. Wm. H. Cook, M. D., President, 322 W. 18th St., Chicago, Ill.

We find in this catalogue evidences of a system of medicine and of medical instruction superior to the old school, and we give it special commendation. Dr. Cook and his methods are well known to the medical fraternity, and his success is now evinced by the establishment of this new institution of medicine and surgery, with thirty professors and lecturers. The institution is founded for two purposes: First, "To provide instruction in medicine, surgery, obstetrics and their allied sciences," and secondly, "To furnish free medical and surgical assistance to the poor." The first purpose involves greater consideration of physiological laws and greater regard for the consequences of medical treatment, and consequently greater caution is impressed upon the student. The theory is better than the old, and the new school rejects all poisons, whether mineral, vegetable, or animal, on the basis of the conclusion that poisons create disease and endanger the continuance of life. The second purpose is in accordance with the spirit of humanity which should characterize the medical profession; the poor are treated free. Four years are required for graduation, making the standard of attainment for diploma and college recommendataion very high. In connection with the institution are clinics and a hospital, thus allowing the students practical study and observation in lines of physiology and pathology.

Annual Report of the Press Committee, 8 pages. Isabella Tyson, Chairman, 1208 Madison avenue, Baltimore, Md.

The above pamphlet is the report of the committee on the purification of the press, to the Religious Society of Friends, which convened at Baltimore, October 10, 1897, which shows the result of endeavor to elevate the tone of the popular newspaper. Accompanying the report is a circular letter addressed to the editors and journalists of the country—an appeal for a better press, so that it will contain fewer harrowing reports and dispatches, and fewer lies and slanders. We assure this Society that we are not only in sympathy with their work, but are fighting the great newspaper octopus with all the power of THE FLAM-ING SWORD. We welcome to this great work all efforts directed against the corrupting influence of the modern newspaper. It needs thorough renovation, and in many instances, if not the majority, total wiping out of existence by better influences and examples. We do not know just what this society has been recommending to the newspaper world, but we are in this work for all it means and for all it is worth. We publish the real and the ideal journal, and would suggest that we can supply hundreds of thousands of copies to this society to be sent to the journals of the world as a model journal of purity of tone, truth, refinement of expression, and all other points of excellency.

Thoughts From the Reform Press.

The Spirit of Massacre.

Competition, starvation, strike, injunction, and then the massacre! It has been repeated over and over again, and will so continue as long as the present system exists. The miserable tools who committed the murderous deed are not altogether to blame; they, too, are merely incidents—effects—and ought not to be mixed up with the cause that created them. So long as natural monopolies are owned by private interests, the Pinkerton thug, the corrupt Judge, Cœur de Alene, Coal Creek, Homestead and Hazelton will flourish.—

College of Medicine and Surgery.

The College of Medicine and Surgery, only recently chartered and entering its first course of instruction, maintains as a fundamental principle that physiological medication should constitute the basis of all medical treatment of the sick. It differentiates between toxical and therapeutical application, excluding from its catalogue of remedies all poisonous drugs. It is not a new departure in medicine. Prof. Wm. H. Cook, A. M. M. D., the present Dean of the Faculty, was for many years connected with colleges founded upon the principles governing this institution.

The Open Court for January.

The Open Court, edited by Dr. Paul Carus, is a much better magazine than it used to be, because it is gotten up in more attractive form; it is now a monthly magazine of 76 pages instead of a weekly of 8 pages. It is now printed in the same style as the Monist, another publication issued by the Open Court Publication Co., Chicago.. The January number is especially interesting, containing articles on The Solomonic Literature, History of the People of Israel, and continuation of the articles of Death as viewed by the early and Mediæval Christians. The "Dance of the fact that the mediæval period was a period of darkness. This article is illustrated with 43 engravings which convey more than a written volume. A specially good story is entitled "A Vain Search for God," which would interest our readers. The Open Court is only $1.00 per year.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

Gold Standard Proclivities vs. St. Louis Platform.

THE Chicago Tribune, in commenting on Hanna's hard scrabble for the senate of the United States, says:

While the Tribune deplores the fact that there are so many traitors in the Ohio Legislature and outside of it, it congratulates the honest Republicans of the state on the defeat of the schemes of these traitors, who will go down unhonored to their political graves. It congratulates the Ohioans on the election of Mr. Hanna in the face of the basest hostility. In him they will have a senator who will stand on the St. Louis gold standard platform, and not on the cheap-money Chicago platform.

The Tribune is not ignorant of the fact that thousands of silverite Republicans voted for McKinley because they believed in international bimetallism, and considered the Republican party honest enough to carry out its pledge. The masses of the people of the United States desire bimetallism. Lombard street, the governor of Wall street, prefers the bondage of these same masses, hence the struggle of the great goldite dailies to insure what the people do not want, and which, if established, signifies their ruin.

The weakness of this Republic is its inclination to hobnob with the aristocracies of Europe, and to follow the trail of the tail of the great commercial monarchical dragon. We once fought for liberty and gained it. We are now enslaved by the money power. It is a deeper and more subtle bondage, and its influences have reached the heart of the national life and paralyzed it. There remains a hope. It is in the destruction of money and its power for evil. As sure as the Christ entered the domain of the money-changers and overthrew their tables, so sure there awaits the retribution to come; for He whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple—the divine humanity, and the gold god will be dethroned.

The Possibility of Overcoming Death.

HE THAT overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my Son." He that overcometh. Overcometh what? Common sense would dictate that man, through processes of development, should attain to the character of that from which he sprang. The same kind of sense would further suggest that before man could attain sonship, or to the inheritance of the universe, he should reach such an intellectual development as to enable him to discriminate between the operations which cause mortality and those which will conduce to immortality, and thence eternal life. Life and death proceed from the same operations. A certain course of life (and such is the common course of the race) perpetuates the mortal state; a directly opposite course will insure immunity from death and usher in the state of immortality. It is for advocating the latter course and unfolding to the world the principles of life, that we are censured and persecuted.

It is through a comprehension of the laws of life and the application of their principles, that man may overcome and thence become the Son of God, as declared in the above quotation. To be a Son of God is to be the offspring of God, and to become the offspring of God is to be like God, and to be like God is to possess all his attributes. This is a possible, human attainment. It was reached in the person of the Lord Jesus, hence he was not only the Son of God, but he was the Lord God. The sons of God to come, will be the offspring of Jesus, the Christ of God and the seed sown in the race whence the sons of God shall spring.

One of the principal things that a man shall overcome, to insure righteousness, is sensual desire. This means the eradication from the mind and body of every element of unchastity. This must bring a man to the standard attained by the Lord himself. He overcame, and he declared: "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." The destiny of man is to sit upon the throne of creation. Only such, however, as received the Holy Spirit at the beginning of the age can become the fruit of regeneration now at the end of the age. None will be reincarnated (resurrected into immortality) but those in whom the divine seed was sown. This seed was the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Lord, comprising his substance, the substance of his flesh and blood.

The Destiny of the Lost Ten Tribes.

THERE has just come to our table another of "Our Race Series" by the indefatigable Totten, with a request to review page 266. We agree with Professor Totten regarding his chronological method. We also admit—with some modification—that the Anglo-Saxon race is what he claims for it, but we cannot endorse his mistakes. The ten tribes were, as declared of them, not the people of God.

"And I will say to them which were not my people, thou art my people; and they shall say, thou art my God." "Ye are not my people [i. e. Lo-Ammi], then it shall be said unto them, ye are the Sons of the Living God."

Why should it be said of the ten tribes, "Ye are not my people"—Lo-Ammi? For only one reason. They ceased to circumcise, and were therefore cut off. What followed? They were left without a hedge, were carried away and intermarried with the Medians, Persians, and Assyrians, and became the Germanic product of this miscegeneration. The progressive spirit and matter of this racial mixture culminate in the Anglo-Saxons, who are not Ephraim and Manasseh merely, but Ephraim as the House of Israel, having become Gentile. The United States is more Ephraim than England is, because in the progress of the race, the culmination of the Gentile descendant from the ten tribes resides in America. Within the United States the New Jerusalem will descend, not from the physical, but from the spiritual heavens. This includes not only the ten, but also the twelve tribes.

The Anglo-Saxon race is Gentile, Lo-Ammi, and will not become Ammi (my people) until after the descent of the New Jerusalem, when, through the coming baptism, (the Lord Christ involved, became planted in this very people,) the Lo-Ammi will become the Ammi. England will be wiped off the slate. Her weakness is in the territory she has stolen, a territory which she cannot hold with any navy less than ten times the size of her present naval power.

If Professor Totten will turn his attention for a little while from his subject of Biblical chronology, the time of the Lord's coming, the subject which he has so ably exposited, to the character of the Lord's coming, he might do the world a greater service.

Red-Hot Sword Thrusts.

HE ten tribes of Israel, after the revolt of Jeroboam, were denominated Ephraim. The House of Israel was called the House of Ephraim. Ephraim (Israel, the ten tribes) was carried into Media, and the identity of Israel was obliterated. How? Through the intermixing of the Israelites by intermarriage with the Medians, Persians, and Assyrians. From this infiltration of Israel, Ephraim became Gentile (Lo-Ammi), not my people, even the Germanic family. As the Anglo Saxon is the seething pot into which the entire Germanic race is smelted, England, or the Anglo-Saxon, is Ephraim in that general sense of including the ten tribes—the entire house of Israel; but the pot boiled over and the progressive element of the ten tribes—Ephraim, passed on into the United States. When Prof. Totten, or any other man, attempts to define England as Ephraim, and the United States as Manasseh, he exhibits a want of mental acumen not commensurate with the power of thought exhibited on the line of his special forte, namely, Biblical chronology.

It was declared of Ephraim, that he should be "eaten up by the Assyrians." This prophecy does not comport with Professor Totten's statement, that Ephraim escaped. Ephraim became Gentile by intermarriage. It was declared by Jacob, Gen. xlviii: 19, that "his [Ephraim's] seed shall become a multitude of nations,"—the fulness of the Gentiles.

The body of Jesus the Lord, when translated (theocrasised), was converted to spirit. In other words, Christ the Lord was sown in the church. The Holy far.

The law of the cross is the law of transmutation, the central law of existence. It is the law by which the sun senergies are converted to carbon and stored in the carboniferous strata of the earth's crust, and again dissolved and transmuted to energy.

The cross of Christ is the crossing of the character and life of Deity with the sinful life of humanity. This crossing of the principles of God and man was typified by the cross of Christ on Calvary.

Once the wheels of equity begin to move, the rapidity of self-adjustment and universal regulation will be so rapid that even the most radical will be astonished at the progress of equilibrium.

The energies of the sun are derived from the strata of the earth; the strata of the earth are derived from the energies of the sun.

The Battle of the Great Newspaper Trusts.

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

WHETHER or not honest men get their own when thieves fall out, at least the methods of the wicked are revealed on such auspicious occasions. An interesting if not edifying situation exists in the newspaper world of Chicago, and things are being told to "an oppressed and long-suffering public," to use the pitying expression of one of these papers, moved thereto possibly by a spasm of remorse. The Inter-Ocean under its new management, with more cleverness than dignity arraigns the "newspaper trust of Chicago," which means all the Chicago dailies except the Inter-Ocean, nor does it spare the Associated Press. It tells us that to suit the personal and financial interests of the men controlling the Associated Press, "the news of this country has been misrepresented, mangled, and suppressed. In an issue in the early part of December, the *Inter-*Orean makes the following charge.

We have known the Associated Press intimately for many years. We have known it as a great news collector whose arms were stretched out to gather in reports from all parts of the world, and lay them down, true and clear, in the offices of its patrons throughout the United States. We have valued it in the past as the most comprehensive and impartial news gatherer that the old world or the new has seen, and we should value it today as highly as ever had it not been debauched repeatedly by the unscrupulous gang now controlling it.

With malice in their hearts, falsehood in their minds, and venom on their tongues, they have arrogated to themselves a strict censorship of the press such as no officials of the Czar would dream of assuming. They have not confined their activity to politics, as do the censors in despotic Russia, but have presumed to distort all or any news, when such distortion subserved their business interests.

And then follows several interesting instances in support of the charge. In a later issue, the Inter-Ocean is even more severe, speaking of the Chicago papers, excepting itself of course.

Their sole object has been and is personal gain. To serve their personal interests, which they regard above all other things—the meanest motive that actuates the human mind—they would invent or garble an interview; suppress the truth or print a lie; exaggerate a petty offence; manufacture or magnify a scandal; lampoon the dead or libel the living; invade the sanctity of a home; blacken reputation or assassinate character; jeopardize the health, peace, and safety of a community, and turn topsy turvy truth, order, and decency—and this to sell their miserable wares.

Such is the very situation of Chicago today.

From the other side come countercharges. These papers accuse the Inter-Ocean of being the defender of pirates on the community, of being the mouthpiece of monopoly, of being published in the interest of private schemes for public plunder. And certainly, no one has ever charged Mr. Yerkes (who, with others whose names have not been published, now owns a controlling interest in the Inter-Ocean) with neglecting his own interests, which have not always been identical with those of the traveling public of Chicago.

The Governor of the state is interested on the same side as the Inter-Ocean. He says that it is proverbial among the readers of the newspapers belonging to the trust that one cannot believe anything one sees in the newspapers. He also declares his knowledge that it is in the power of a united press to destroy any man public or private. He gives it as his opinion that there is no greater menace to the community's peace than the venal press of Chicago. At the same time this venal press says many hard things of the Governor, and backs them up with circumstantial evidence; too. The Governor says the trust is always for sale to the monopolies. and the trust says the Governor and the state Legislature are already sold to the monopolies. It's a very pretty fight as it stands, and the weapons and ammunition seem about equally divided.

Incidentally, the Inter-Ocean publishes a letter relating how, four or five years ago, a committee from nearly all the leading jobbing-houses in Chicago, by threatening to withdraw their advertisements from his paper, forced the proprietor of the Tribune to cease publishing reports of small-pox in Chicago. Whether or not these reports were false, as the writer claims, does anyone doubt that the method of forcing their discontinuance would prove equally effective to suppress the publication of true reports, were it to the selfish interests of the large jobbers to have them suppressed? Is it wise for a newspaper, even for the laudable purpose of discrediting a rival, to call the attention of the general public to the force of such an argument? Does any one believe that the Inter-Ocean could not be influenced by the same kind of argument?

As a matter of fact, the great daily press of the country is conducted, as are all other enterprises under the competitive system, on the basis of selfishness—"the meanest motive that actuates the human mind." No observing person doubts the venality of the press. But when it breaks up into factions that "tell on" one another, the end is near—the end of a house divided against itself. It is well for the world that selfish combinations possess the elements of their own disruption. Let them fight!—and may their's be the fate of cats of Kilkenny!

Revival of Optimism.

Encouraging Signs of National and Individual Progress.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

PESSIMISM is on the wane. This species of mental epidemic has raged with greater or less virulence in every age since the dawn of history. Among the ancient Greeks it took the form of skepticism as to the reality of knowledge and good. The Brahmans and Buddhists contended that life was illusory and burdensome. Hume took the view that good and evil are so mixed that a beneficent First Cause can not certainly be predicated, while Schopenhauer boldly declared the world the worst possible under the conditions, and advocated total denial and suppression of the will to live. Down to very recent times, the doctrine has flourished and brought forth pessimists of every hue, from soft neutral gray to deep crape color, from Tolstoi, and Thomas Hardy, who harrows the feelings and plays upon the emotive tendencies of his readers by his startling and realistic presentment of infant suicide, to the milk and water dilutions of Howells, who at intervals has seemed vaguely sensible that the world was out of joint.

But no theory of cosmology that regards the world and life or some main constituent thereof, as essentially evil, can resist the wave of progress and prosperity that comes sweeping buoyantly over the American continent in the beginning of this year of grace 1898. The most inveterate tendency to a morose and gloomy view of things must yield to the thousand and one encouraging symptoms that press upon the notice of every reflective and observant mind. It is profitable at this season, while the business world is taking account of stock, to pass in review some of the unmistakable signs of social progress that point convincingly to the glorious fact that life is worth living and the world growing better every day.

In the first place it is encouraging to note the prevalence of that discontent yelept divine by somebody (was it William Morris?) among the masses. What the masses need generally is a leaven of divinity, and if discontent be divine in essence, they are receiving it in large measure.

"Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

The trend of affairs in the great American republic is so notoriously the reverse of that indicated by the poet, one may well be pardoned the indulgence of a little harmless national vanity very natural and creditable under the circumstances. If any think that wealth is accumulating, the idea may be dissipated by a trip to the slums, or daily reading of the Police Gazette. Besides, a Chicago clergyman assures us that the prejudice against wealth is cheap and demagogic. If any ask concerning our great men, the sovereign prop and pillar of the state, we point proudly to Hanna, quoting, in the present tense, the words of Antony, whose name was also Mark:

His life is gentle; and the elements So mix'd in him, that nature might stand up. And say to all the world, this is a man!

It speaks well for the establishment of morality, decency, and public order that daylight robberies are increasing, that one death in one hundred and sixty, is a murder, while forgery, counterfeiting, and defalcation show the best record of the century. The most strenuous advocate of Individualism, as maintaining the liberty of every citizen to stupefy his faculties and shorten his days by intoxication, must be gratified by the recent death from alcoholic poison of a child of five years in Chicago. According to report, the juvenile drunkard had often been intoxicated, but on New Year's night the whisky he imbibed was so largely adulterated with fusil oil and other poisons, it proved fatal. It is a good sign when the right of every citizen, children included, to the pursuit of happiness in his own way, is thus respected.

This is the woman's age, so they tell us; that of the dominion of muscular force is past, and as civilization advances to the higher plane of the rational and moral, woman takes her place by the side of man, not as servant, but as equal. How unanimous and sweeping the movement toward her emancipation is, may be readily determined by a comparison of the wages paid to men and women performing the same duties in various avocations. During the past week two prominent clergymen, one in Brooklyn, the other in Chicago, have contended, the one, that woman is directly responsible for the growth of certain grave forms of heresy that threaten the church,—that her influence on society and religion is so debasing no woman should be ordained or suffered to preach, her spiritual capabilities being so inferior to man's; the other, that women wage-earners are the greatest curse that has ever come to the world of labor, and the primary cause for the great army of unemployed who loaf about the streets on the alert to steal and rob. Such appreciative tributes to woman cannot fail to awaken public sentiment in her behalf.

Science has long and hopefully asserted that the intellectual powers of the race were expanding in conformity to the laws of evolutionary progress. The intellectual acumen of the present day has discovered that politics and religion are divorced for good, and every reactionary attempt to unite them, like the various socialistic experiments, destined to ignominious failure, as in the past. One of our local papers in commenting on the joint ownership by all the members of the community of the instruments and means of production, says this is purely an economic and political problem with which religion has nothing to do, and Christianity is too broad to link itself to a political dogma. The competitive system is right as opposed to communism, because the Christian religion lavs great stress on individual responsibility. Such a clear conception of fundamental relationships is characteristic of modern advancement in thinking, and would have been unattainable in a less keenly intellectual age.

Our charitable schemes and institutions have long furnished a theme for optimistic argument, but in some respects charity is taking a new departure when, through the columns of our dailies, such a cordial invitation as the following is extended to all: "Commence the New Year right. Open a bank account." The public has always been disposed to look upon our banking houses as great humanitarian enterprises, and its opinion will hereby be confirmed. No one who has learned by bitter experience what it means to be destitute of a bank account, will neglect such an unusual opportunity which commends itself especially to the denizens of the slum districts and county houses. It is a matter of regret that no class is so proverbially blind to its own interests, and we venture to predict that notwithstanding the tender solicitude for their welfare manifested by the bankers, very few will accept the invitation. Schopenhauer's father was a banker, and it is one of the unsolvable problems of history why the son of a banker should become the greatest pessimist of the age.

In further proof of the fact that the race is fast approaching a "millennial dawn" of happiness, any pessimist who believes the sum of human misery on the increase, is earnestly exhorted to follow the daily record of the divorce courts! In concluding this brief review, necessarily limited to a few of the encouraging signs of national and individual progress, it would be ungrateful not to render a tribute of praise to that party under whose auspices the long-desired era of "national prosperity" has dawned at last,—that party dear to every true American heart whose proudest boast must ever be that it never violated a principle or proved unfaithful to a pledge!

Voices of the Morning.

BY J. A. EDGERTON, LINCOLN, NEB.

T.

I journeyed in the Valley of Shadow of Grief; And, in the midnight of my sorrow, heard A voice within my soul, which seemed to say, "The people." Then a light broke over me: I saw our present sorrows melt and blend Into a vision as of a New Earth, O'er which the people reigned in love and peace. II.

A voice from out the Spirit-Silence spoke.

"O sing the love of humankind," It said;

"Of freedom born of brotherhood; of faith
In God and man; with sunrise in your heart.
O sing that hope is in the morrow, hope
Is in the morrow; tell of it, and join
The voices of the morning of the world!"

Where Thieves Break Through and Steal.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

DISREGARDING the Scripture, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where * * * * thieves break through and steal," Uncle Sam's financiers—instead of paying his numerous debts with it, as sensible men would in the management of their own business, piled up hundreds of millions of silver dollars (just as good in law as gold) in large steel bins, paying a strong guard to keep it safe. On occasions, all these dollars had to be counted, which was expeditiously done by weighing. On these occasions, the bags in which they were tied up were untied by a trusted servant of the public, the same for many years, to see that the dollars in the mouth of the sacks had not been tampered with. The new treasurer, under the present tax gatherer's administration, more suspicious than his predecessors, discovered that this trusted servant had managed to subtract some of the dollars each time, supplying their places with leaden tablets. Thereupon all these dollars had to be counted, one by one, at great expense for counters and guards. How many even thus, may miss their way into the treasury, landing in the pockets of the counters, remains for future discovery.

It would have been for the good of the people if these dollars had all been stolen. In that case they would have been put in circulation, making money more plenty and times easier, causing fewer bankruptcies and less misery and death. So it comes to pass that theft may be a source of great blessing. If every bank and miser's hoard were looted, and the corraled money put in circulation, for which it was designed, and not to be kept for usury, there would indeed be a revival of business, and all men would be able to earn a living. If, in the eyes of true reason, there is one crime against humanity greater than another, that crime is the preventing of the free circulation of a country's medium of exchange.

At one time Rome passed a law requiring all money lenders to invest a large part, two-thirds we believe, of their money in some kind of property, in order to relieve hard times caused by money lenders hoarding, for usury, the country's money. Such a law would be timely, and would be a step toward justice now, in every country of the world. If a country has any right to legislate for the good of its citizens, it has a perfect right to pass such a law. Money is a creation of government, to enable its citizens to supply their wants; hence it must have power over its own creature, such as it has not over other property that is produced by the labor of its citizens. When the kingdom of heaven is established in earth, according to the Lord's prayer, money will be destroyed and men set free. Such will be the glorious consummation inaugurated by the Koreshan movement. Then, men will have neither incentive nor desire to steal.

In the Editorial Perspective.

E ARE much amused at the feeble efforts being made to overthrow the Koreshan System of Astronomy. A Denver daily inserts a column or so now and then, containing the harangues, contradictory statements, and glaring inconsistencies of the "woman on the trail of Cyrus Teed." Do we think that such attempts will overthrow anything? Our fears are being realized—the fear that the effort would fizzle out without our getting the opportunity of making a broadside refutation! No use to pay any attention to as significant explosions as we now have before us in the Denver Evening Post, of January 10, in which the woman in question attempts to give a description of the Koreshan Geodetic Survey on the west coast of Florida. The truthfulness of her statements may be seen from a single expression: "He (I)r. Teed) referred to a bogus experiment he claims to have made at Estero, Florida, in January, 1897, of which I was a witness, and fortunately not the only witness, who after having become cognizant of the deception, quit the colony." The other "witness" to whom she refers is one Jaffray, of Illinois, a sort of surveyor. The survey of the air line in demonstration of the Koreshan Cosmogony was made between March 18 and May 11, 1897; the woman in question was never at Naples, Fla., the site of the survey, and the surveyor referred to was not in the state of Florida during the whole period of the work of our survey. He never witnessed a single adjustment of our apparatus in the survey of the line made by the Koreshan Geodetic Staff, and knows nothing from personal observation, concerning any of the facts, measurements or adjustments then and there obtained and made. Now, we challenge contradiction of the above statements. It is a good thing to catch people in a real, barefaced lie once in a while; and for once we have one or two excited and nervously unstrung creatures in that kind of a predicament!

In the attempt to overthrow the Koreshan Cosmogony, we find the charge that the Koreshan Geodetic Survey was a bogus experiment; accompanying this charge is the admission that if such a survey could be made, it would determine whether or not the earth is concave. The attempt is to show that an "air line," such as would make the demonstration, is an impossibility. Now, the instigators of this opposition have neither the sense nor the logic to see the predicament this gets the other side into! The survey of an air line would determine it; such a line is impossible, therefore it has never been determined. So much the worse for the convex theory—it has never been proven. Now, what is to be done with the fact that such a survey has been made? It is a case of facts vs. denials. We are in possession of the facts of actual survey; the denials will be relegated to their unworthy source!

The church once opposed the theories of evolution put forth by Darwin and LaPlace, on the ground that they were decidedly atheistic. Today, the so called progressive clergy accept this lot of rubbish, and it is now announced that the Catholic church sanctions it. Dr. Zahm, who stands at the front of Catholic ranks in both their clergy and group of "scientific" minds, has for the past five years advocated that the universe was evolved from nebulous vapor, and man from a tadpole; and he meets with no opposition from the Pope of Rome, but rather promotion. He now claims to harmonize the Bible with that which the church has so long fought as heresy! The Dr. has attempted to do the impossible; a belief in the Bible and in so called modern science cannot be consistently entertained in the same mind.

There are a sufficient number of saloons in America to line a street one hundred miles in length. The keepers must pay the rent, their liquor bills, support their families and meet other expenses. They must have an income from some source. Where does it come from? Mostly from men who labor for daily wages. Millions of people daily consume thousands of gallons of liquid fire and pay for them. One half of the poverty-stricken homes contain victims of the rum power. Poverty and hard times with the working classes are not altogether the result of a poor financial system. It is not sufficient to prohibit the sale of intoxicants; the demand—the appetite—must be exterminated. This is a problem overlooked by scores of reformers—reformers who advocate reform because it pays.

On shipboard it sounds rather comforting to hear the familiar call mornings and evenings, "All's well! all's well!" We know that conditions are favorable for smooth sailing and well being. At a time in the world's history like the present—never before equaled for its injustice and man's inhumanity to man, when countless thousands seek freedom from the thraldom in which the race finds itself, it sounds rather mocking to be greeted with the call, "All's well with the world!" This is the title of a new book; the author of which we conclude is en rapport with some of the greatest fallacies and strongest delusions of the hour.

The so called brain-foods are fakes. Some medical authorities consider it as necessary to feed the brain special preparations, as it is to feed the body. We wonder how men fed their brains before the invention of the modern brain food! This shows the ignorance of the medical fraternity concerning physiological functions. The brain is supplied from the body, and it is only when the energies of the human system are vitiated by the various forms of modern dissipation, that it becomes necessary to stimulate the brain to the excessive and morbid activity which the modern competitive system compels.

"Cuba is lost to spain!" These are the significant words heading editorials in the leading dailies of the world. Accompanying them, are the reports of the inability of Spain to cope with the Cuban forces, and their failure to make their plan of autonomy successful. Spain has now put forth her last effort to regain possession of the island. We are glad of it—Americans will rejoice when the Spanish soldiers evacuate Cuba in chagrin and defeat, even though the sluggishness and inactivity of the politicians in America prevent Columbian assistance of the patriots right at our doors!

Rent, interest, and similar items are not the only things that contribute to the hardship of the workingman. He yearly wastes more than the amount of his rent and taxes; and the gratification of passion and appetites involves the expenditure of a hundred times more vital energy than ten hours' daily labor. The pitiable condition of thousands is due to their own perversities as much as to the crimes of millionaires. Economy would admit of wholesome food during times of prosperity and allow accumulations for self-support during business adversity.

The Industrial World says "fifty-one metals are known to exist, thirty of which have been discovered within the present century. Four hundred years ago, only seven were known." The discovery of so many new metals does not help the "scientist" to a knowledge of the primary seven. There are seven primary colors. The artist can make hundreds of combinations and shades of color, and yet know nothing concerning the laws of the phenomena of color. Koreshan alchemy gives to the world the only true science of metallurgy.

The Government of the United States has done everything possible to destroy the lottery schemes that have existed during the past twenty years, but nothing whatever to prevent the stealing of millions of dollars from the workingman, by the schemes of the gigantic syndicates, trusts, and monopolies. The world's greatest enemy is not the lottery of chance games and wheels of fortune, but the lottery of the banks, stock-exchange and boards of trade, and the plundering cliques of the millionaire and the politicians.

Is America civilized? If percentage of crime be taken as a criterion of judgment, the United States is the least civilized of any nation on the face of the earth. The religious bodies of this country spend millions of dollars for missionary effort in foreign countries, where there is less actual barbarism than here. In 1895 there were 10,000 murders in the United States; and the figures of a statistician show that of all nations of earth, the United States has the highest murder rate, while India has the least.

The greed of lawyers and doctors is illustrated by the exorbitant charges for attorneys' and physicians' services pushed upon a crippled colored woman in Chicago recently, who has sued the city and obtained judgment for $3,000 for injuries. The fees would have left her scarcely a dollar. Friends and the city attorney interposed, and the exorbitant charge will not be paid. However, society will not look upon these professional thieves as thieves.

Long-faced churchianity developed through the decline and apostasy of the primitive Christian system, caused by the dissi-pation and death of the energies of life sown at the begining of the dispensation. Art and literature, architecture and music, wars, plagues, and pestilence of médiæval period, were the result of the great falling away of the church, the explanation of the mysteries of which belongs exclusively to the science of Koresh.

At the time when X-rays enable men to see through opaque objects, when the human stomach can be discarded, the equally wonderful faculty of perception without eyes becomes manifest. A Chicago, man without the orbs of vision since childhood, not only sees how to write, walk and travel without a guide, but is also able to see through doors and curtains, and in the dark as well as in the light.

Rev. Dr. Savage, from the basis of so called modern science, concludes that man is not lost, and that the cosmogony of Moses is a fake. Scores of others are following in his wake; every year witnesses the departure of the more "liberal" minds from the shackles of surperstition, to sink into oblivion in the folds of the great fallacy of modern science.

Police can shoot bullets into freezing and starving boys who break open outside show cases for something to wear and to eat; but the authorities have no censure for thousands who by "business" schemes, fraudulent advertisements and methods, loot the pockets of the men who produce the goods their children are compelled to steal.

Some people object to colonization. It is a success! Every manufacturing establishment is a colony where the products are created and wealth amassed. The workingman has not yet invented a successful method of appropriating the wealth he produces. Hundreds appropriate the wealth of millions.

Microbes are getting so thick—in the minds of the deluded medical fraternity—that it is decided to fumigate the books of libraries frequently in order to prevent disease. Better fumigate the contents of the many thousands of volumes, than their covers!

Rockefeller's wealth is now estimated to be $244,000,000 with an increase of about $1,500,000 per month, $50,000 per day, or about 57 cents per second. This exceeds the income of all the crowned heads of Europe put together!

In times of "prosperity" everything is high except wages. McKinley prosperity was never designed for the poor man, but for those who control the money market and the products of labor.

Freedom and license for the millions who cannot individually control themselves would produce a retrogressive revolution. It would create in humanity hopeless chaos and insanity.

What would you think of a business man who would undertake to run his business after the plan of the spoils system of the Republican administration?

Some people's conception of economic science is to the great world of reform, what the limitation of one horizon is to the area of the earth's surface.

Jules Verne's electric submarine vessel, in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," has now materialized in a French invention.

There can be no such thing as state socialism without a corresponding transformation of the mind and character of the people.

The difficulty with most people is, that they do too much of some things and not enough of some others.

The millionaire does not object to co-operation—in fact, he is in favor of it, and proves his faith in it every time he joins a trust.

There is a new competition among European powers in the process of stealing Chinese territory and the rights of the Chinese.

Some people have a profound fear of hell. It is really strange that a man should be afraid to go where he really is.

American legislators never intend to obey the laws they cause to be placed upon the statute books.

As dangerous a trust as there is in existence, is the trust of the great daily newspaper octopus.

The "Christian nations" assume a very brotherly attitude toward each other.

In some spheres of thought it is treason to reason.

Quiet Talks with the Editors of our Exchanges.

OOK BACK over the history of the development of any reformation, and see what blind prejudice has perpetrated upon pioneers. Entrenched behind popular stubbornness, the world resists the claims of the originators of every new scientific or religious theory or economic innovation. Galileo discovered new phenomena in the physical heavens, and for announcing the same he was persecuted by the clergy; Columbus advocated circumnavigation of the globe, and for years he could not get a hearing; Harvey made the discovery of the circulation of the blood in the human system, and the fraternity of the medical quacks would not investigate his claims nor witness his demonstrations. Fools, wern't they? Anybody is a fool who will not investigate a truth when the opportunity is pressed upon them! We belong to the fraternity of journalists; we desire the members of our profession to be worthy of their position. An editor should be wide-awakewider-awake than any of his readers; and he should possess keener perception and greater reasoning powers, so as to be able to present to the hundreds and the thousands the very best the intellectual market affords, and withal, greater willingness to look into anything that has a semblance of the truth. Men everywhere are pretending to be looking for truth, but are they finding it? Somebody has it, or nobody has it. If somebody has it, look for him! If nobody has it, then so much the worse for everybody's claims. We come to you with the premise and the conclusions of Koreshan Science-it covers all the ground of possible conclusion, and is the direct opposite of all popular thought. Is not that extraordinary? Is it not worthy of your attention, of your investigation, of your acceptance if true, or refutation if false? If nothing else, it is the greatest scientific curiosity extant-and you sometimes pay money for a puzzle, and more for its solution. Protect your readers against fallacy! If the Koreshan System be true, every other theory in the world is false-join in the warfare against deception, fraud, and fallacy! If the Koreshan System be true, it is the greatest truth; if false, it is the greatest fallacy. Which will you choose: Defend fallacy, or reject it? Investigate the truth, or fight it? You must do one or the other; to do otherwise would be to cease saying anything!

Editors are supposed to be thinkers. We take editors at their claims, and appeal to them from the standpoint of regard and respect for them and for the work they are endeavoring to perform. We select this class of minds for some of our propositions, rather than those who may have less influence, and less time and perhaps ability to investigate and comprehend new theories. We desire a word from the editorial fraternity concerning modern science in answer to the following questions: Do you regard the popular astronomical system as having been absolutely proven to be true? Are you in possession of any facts which support the idea of a convex globe, rotating on its axis in twenty-four hours, and moving through space in an orbit about the sun, at the rate of nineteen miles per second? If so, what are they? You believe in progress, in education, and in the promulgation of truth. If the astronomers have the truth, we have not; if we have it, they have not—not a particle of it; in such case the modern astronomers are obtaining money under false pretenses, and you are helping to sustain them!

$1,000 Reward for Editors!

We make a standing offer of $1,000 to the editor of any journal who will publish a scientific refutation of the Koreshan Cosmogony, or what would be its equivalent —a single fact in demonstration of the theory that the earth is convex, and that we live on its exterior surface, or in support of any other theory of the shape of the world than the universe as a cell with its habitable surface concave. This is a bona fide offer, with the promise to quit the business in case of refutation of the scientific claims of the Koreshan Astronomy. Now, if the Koreshan System is as absurd as some people seem to think it is, why, don't you think that it would be a good deal easier to obtain $1,000 in this way, than by doing all the work you have to do to obtain one thousand subscribers to your paper?

Your readers like up to date papers, with up-to-date articles giving particulars of the latest scientific discoveries and achievements, and synopses of new theories. We have some extraordinarily good material for your readers, and will furnish good astronomical and geographical cuts to all editors who will use them in articles concerning the Koreshan System. We can help you to make your paper attractive. Do you want to publish an illustrated paper? Write us for particulars.

The Jeffersonian, Faribault, Minn.; the Gem, Logansville, O.; the Dawning Light, San Antonio, Tex.; the World's Advance-Thought, Portland, Ore.; the Herald, Roseland, La.; the Good Citizen, Gallatin, Mo.; the Voice of Truth, San Diego, Cal., and the New Charter, San Francisco, Cal., have our thanks for mention, comments and quotations.

It is an easy thing for an editor to say a thing and proof it; but the astronomer has not the advantage of type and proofpress when it comes to pressing proof upon us that the earth's surface upon which we live is convex!

When we undertook to survey the west coast of Florida in demonstration of the Koreshan astronomical premise, we undertook to serve a needy world with the truth

THE FLAMING SWORD is a good thing; push it along.

As Editors See Us.

We are in receipt of THE FLAMING SWORD, a neatly-printed, ideal 16-page journal, published at 6308 Wentworth avenue, Chicago, Ill. Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, the Founder of the Koreshan System of science, is the editor. As a scientific production it is first-class, and each number contains startling facts that the thinking public should read and ponder over. Roseland Herald, Roseland, La.

The Flaming Sword.

It takes all kinds of papers to satisfy the craving for new ideas, and The Flaming Sword occupies a field of its own. Much as we may differ with the editor, it is right and proper that he should have a respectful hearing. Accept what seems true and reject that which seems unreasonable.

—Dawning Light, San Antonio, Tex.

Interrogation Points and Encouraging Words.

E. P. H., Brodhead, Wis.-We thank you for your kind letter; we carefully note its contents. We judge from its tone that if you understood the Koreshan System you would not disagree with us; you criticise some of your own conjectures as to what we believe. When you say that the "idea of a personal and localized God existing somewhere in the skies is pernicious and positively productive of evil," and that "scientific reasoning and conclusions utterly dispute such sentimental ideas," we agree with you. We repudiate such conclusions. When you ask us "What positive evidence have you that a personal Deity exists or ever existed?" we answer, that whatever we find in effect originally resided in the cause. We find human form existing today, and we need no other evidence to prove that Deity is personal and human. The process of overcoming death right here in the flesh, is the process of attaining to the Godhood, a process of transformation from the mortal to the immortal condition. The effort to save humanity belongs to the realm of practical human effort, and not to mythical forces billions of miles distant on some star or other, or in infinite space. Concerning the Bible, we do not quote the Bible to prove the Koreshan Cosmogony. We prove the Cellular Cosmogony by actual demonstration. The Koreshan System would be true if there were no Bible, and is demonstrated independently of it. We simply use the Koreshan Cosmogony and other features of Koreshan Science, to prove the Bible. We refer to the Bible as merely corroborative, and as evidence to those who already accept it as true. The Bible was written by human beings, but by men who understood true science, and not the fallacies of modern times. The universe is eternal, and was never evolved from nothing, nor from ether through a "nebular" process. If you desire positive proof of the claims of Koreshan Science, we have it. We commend the System to your investigation, and to the study of every candid truth-seeker.

Are there no planetary systems outside of the earth? (2) Where is the sun, and what causes day and night? (3) How do you know that the earth's shell is only 100 miles thick? (4) Why do we have any short days and nights? (5) What is the source of all the professed knowledge of the Founder of the Koreshan System?—A. H. C., Staples, Minn.

(1) No; there is nothing outside of the earth. The planets are mercurial discs passing between the metallic strata of the earth's shell. We see their reflection in the physical heavens; these reflections are the "planets" the astronomers talk about. (2) The sun is in the center of the earth, the positive pole of the great galvano-magnetic battery. We see its projection on the upper stratum of our atmosphere, about 1,000 miles distant at noon time. (3) We make calculation of the thickness of the earth's shell from the known ratios of the specific gravity of the substances of which the shell is composed. We know the specific gravity of hydrogen, of the atmosphere, of water, and of each of the primary geologic, mineral and metallic strata. Having a knowledge of the depth and weight of the atmosphere, the amount of water in the earth, etc., we establish a relation or ratio, from which we compute the thickness of each stratum of the shell; the aggregate being about 100 miles. (4) The projected sun moves in a spiral, covering a belt of 47° in the heavens above us. The light from the projection covers one half of the earth's concave surface. On June 21, the hemisphere of light reaches 23 1/2° beyond the north pole, and on Dec. 21, 23 ½° beyond the south pole. The long days at the poles and change of seasons thus obtain. (5) The discovery of the basis of all science, the law of transmutation, and the fact of the concavity of the earth's surface—that the earth is a cell, constitutes the premise of all Koreshan conclusion. A correct premise leads to correct conclusions. The Founder of Koreshan Science demonstrates his premise; the correct conclusions are inevitable.

- (1) If Jesus reduced himself to energy and went into his disiples, has he been conscious as an individual from that time to this? (2) When a man dies and his spirit enters the spirit-world which is in the human brain, is he conscious of existence as an individual?—T. B., Mt. Sterling, Ill.
- (1) When a grain of wheat is planted in the ground and dies, it loses that quality of consciousness and desire it possessed in the perfect state. There is dissolution, separation or division of the corpuscles, and the spirit or life of the wheat enters into newer experiences. The animal life of Jesus took on the consciousness of imperfect humanity when he erossed himself with it; his life fell into a lower plane. The ascending life of Jesus was absorbed into the central consciousness of Diety. The Lord Jesus will come into individual consciousness again in his res. urrection in the sons of God. (2) The consciousness of a man after dissolution is no longer the consciousness of individual (or vidual) organism; his spirit takes on the consciousness of the mental spheres which it enters. The mind is in the body as well as in the brain; at dissolution of the body and brain there is a cessation of the functions of the body and brain, and consequently a cessation of the consciousness of the organism. Man at best today is passing through partial re-embodiments. Fulness of life and consciousness, derived from cyclic experiences, will obtain in the resurrection. We do not again take on the consciousness of our present existence: to do so would be to repeat our experiences and to possess again the identical combinations, mental spheres and elements, and to possess exactly the same characteristics.
- J. N., Staples, Minn. We note your inquiry concerning the clipping you sent us from the Boston Investigator regarding Astronomer Newcomb's conclusion that the universe is limited. We take it that the parts of the article you underscore are the points in question with you. Concerning the limitation of the universe, see article October, 1896 FLAMING SWORD, "What is on the outside?" copy of which we sent you. The limit of vision perpendicularly is about 1,000 miles, the depth of our atmosphere. Refraction does not admit of vision of the other side of the concave globe, nor even the interior atmospheres. The distances to the stars, calculated from the convex basis, would be millions of miles; from the demonstrated concave arc, by spherical triangulation and trigonometry, their distance would be only several hundreds of miles. Images of millions of star points can be implanted upon the retina of the eye a surface of two or three square inches. The sphere of the heavens, convex to us, has a diameter of about 6,000 miles, with a surface area of about 113,094,000 square miles. We see about one half of the heavens—90° of arc from the zenith all around, from any part of the earth's surface. Are not 56,047,000 square miles of star area sufficient to contain all the star points visible at any one time in one hemisphere? With one star point per square mile, we would have twice as many stars as are supposed to exist. The stars are points of light; the most powerful telescope in existence is not capable of perceptibly magnifying them. They are kind of electric lights.

To Everybody.—Page sixteen of The Flaming Sword will shortly contain something that will explain hundreds of difficulties standing in the way of comprehension of the Koreshan Cosmogony. Do not fail to look for it—something entirely new! It will be a subject for study, and will contain answers to many of your questions concerning astronomy. Study astronomy—the sublimest subject for contemplation; reasonable, from the standpoint of a demonstrated premise, but a mass of absurdity as taught by pseudoscientists from the basis of assumption.

* * * The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

THE FLAMING SWORD is a most welcome visitor to me, and I am delighted with it as a weekly, and thankful that I am able to appreciate the truth as it appears in its columns from week to week. I trust it may soon enter the home of every seeker for truth. I wish you and your noble helpers unbounded success in this great work, and send you loving thoughts daily. It is my desire to assist in circulating The Sword, and shall gladly receive any suggestions or help you may send me.—M. J. B.

It is customary early in the year to express or send out good wishes. We wish THE FLAMING SWORD a prosperous year; may the truths taught by Koresh and Koreshans be disseminated and embraced a hundred or a thousand fold more than in any year prior to this.—E. B., North Salt Lake City, Utah.

I like THE FLAMING SWORD, and if it is in my power, I will never be without it. I only regret that it is not a daily instead of a weekly. I can scarcely wait until the next issue.—C. E. K., Muscatine, Ia.

THE FLAMING SWORD is the only reform paper published; and for that reason many are not ready to subscribe for it, though it is the cheapest paper.—L. P. C., Los Angeles, Cal.

The weekly FLAMING SWORD has greatly intensified my interest, and I shall do all I can to increase its circulation. With many thanks.—Mrs. M., Detroit, Mich.

This glorious Sword is another source of conviction to me. There is no other paper printed that can touch it in point of interest.—E. M. H., Boston, Mass.

I shall have to accept your theory, the earth a hollow globe.—S. M. C., Pleasant Grove, Cal.

THE FLAMING SWORD is excellent this week (December 31).—J. N., Staples, Minn.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:-You may enjoy from us in the South, a word of appreciation of the weekly FLAMING SWORD, so dexterously wielded by your hand, that the bright, radiant flashes of its twirling flames regularly penetrate our sub-tropical jungle, a welcome and a cherished visitor -so attractive as to draw me irresistibly to join in the mutual expression of our de-light and good will. After acknowledging an unbounded tribute to the writings of the Founder of the Koreshan System, contained therein, always crisp, beautiful, and transcendent in the truths conveyed. I would remark that its artistic make-up and other features create for it a place, which it will gain, in the leading journalism of the times. Every department, sparkling and replete with advanced and telling thought, is a source of interest and profit. I would not be understood as discriminating when, to be brief, I allude to only a few unique features, the "Quiet Talks with Editors," "Interrogation Points and Encouraging Words," and "Chat with Readers," as deserving special mention and approval, because they serve to bring The Sword into closer contact with its readers. Departing from the usual stiff impersonality of journalism, like a genial teacher, it stoops to sympathetic association with its readers, sharing their difficulties in hearty good fellowship .- J. S. SARGENT.

Highly entertaining, instructive, and an up-to-date educator; religiously scientific, in design artistic, in make-up a beauty, are the words with which we commend the weekly Flaming Sword. Its teachings are from the spirit of truth, the essence of the eternal Mind; the humanity to come forth as the sons of God, will awaken to the glad tidings it heralds. We welcome its oft-repeated visits.—C. S. Baldwin, M. D.

The weekly FLAMING SWORD is thoroughly up-to-date, a credit to all concerned in its publication, and worthy of a world-wide circulation as the representative and champion of the cause we so dearly cherish and joyfully uphold.—S. ARMOUR.

I am very well satisfied with the new FLAMING SWORD, which arrived this morning. I find therein much I did not know before. I express my sincere thanks.—
J. HORN.

The aggressive work of the FLAMING SWORD is thinning the ranks of the enemy, and will ultimately win the battle of the hour—the battle of Armageddon.—DAVID STRAIN

In style, certainly up-to-date: while its composition, from a scientific, social or religious standpoint, is ahead of any journal extant.—Geo. W. Hunt.

I rejoice in the decided progress THE FLAMING SWORD is making. May its blade never grow shorter, nor its edges less keen.

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

You have seen papers filled with light reading—you like something more profound. THE FLAMING SWORD is a profound publication, profounder than others, with heights higher, and breadths broader, and subscription lower the any other paper for its size and contents. We dislike light reading as much as you do, if not more, and yet we believe in reading light, instead of darkness. Of course, where there is so much of the usual light reading, there must be some light writing. There is a kind of light writing we do not like, and there is a kind we do like. We believe in light-writing, from photos, light, and grapho. to write. We believe in photographingphotographing thought. THE FLAMING SWORD is full of good photographs of thought. You cannot get good pictures from poor subjects, but from good ones. This is the secret of the success of THE FLAMING SWORD—we have good thoughts to photograph. You have not seen better photographs than we send you weekly. We send them out for people to see. Pass them around to your neighbors, and then send us your photograph of what you think of us and how you like THE FLAMING SWORD; now, we don't want your negative!

All the articles in this issue are good pictures of thought; we have discovered how to photograph thought-we are away ahead of Edison on that! This week we have quite a gallery. From pallette and brush of the Master artist are the pictures entitled, "Gold Standard Proclivities vs. St. Louis Platform," "The Destiny of the Lost Ten Tribes," and "The Possibility of Overcoming Death," with a number of golden plaques set with gems, picturing in striking colors, the various attitudes of the brilliant FLAMING SWORD making effective thrusts. Other artists have painted "The Battle of the Great Newspaper Trusts," "Revival of Optimism," Where Thieves Break Through and Steal," together with a phonographic reproduction of the "Voices of the Morning," recorded especially for THE FLAMING SWORD on a new phonograph. We also have some pictures arranged in a neat frame in the Editorial Perspective—pictures of current topics, with a sort of kinetoscope effect, followed by some water-colors for editors, and sketches for our readers. Our views are in demand—they are better than others; we belong to the new school of the science of art and the art of science.

Do you know what is hindering the publication of THE NEW GEODESY? You will be pleased when we tell you—we are going to make it much larger than we first anticipated—all for the same price. We are at work on more elaboratedrawings and illustrations; it will be the finest work of the kind out—nothing else like it though, unless you all like it. Just wait a little while longer—it is coming!

Can you read your title clear? If not, perhaps you can read ours, on the title-page of THE FLAMING SWORD, by the light of the brilliant rays from the leaping flames. Sometimes your title needs to be made clear—your title to THE FLAMING SWORD; but it takes a dollar to do that!

Did you see our offer concerning articles in The Flaming Sword last week? If not, look it up; if you are a writer, do your best, and send us the results.

Do not forget our offer for good newspaper clippings; we give two years' subscription for the best collection.

Thoughts From the Reform Press.

The Utah Mormons.

When the truth is fully found out in regard to the cause for so strongly opposing the Mormon religion of Utah, the people will learn that it was more on account of their successful co-operation and independence of the money power than their polygamy. The money flends fluding that the Mormons were growing stronger very rapidly, under a new system of finance and co-operation, concluded that if they were not stopped the rest of mankind would soon fall in line. Therefore they enlisted the aid of other churches to help them break up the plan if possible under the guise of immoral conduct. Does not the Constitution of the United States give a protection for any kind of religious faith? Hence what right had anyone to interfere with their Constitutional rights? But as the Mormons were getting wealthy by a new system of finance, notwithstanding the many odds against them while the money gods feared they might suffer, it became necessary to break them down by the law which was in the control of the plutocrats .- Progressive Thought.

A Lesson in Finance.

A banker sauntering home to his dinner, saw a $10 bill lying on the curb-stone. Of course he picked it up and took the number in order to find the owner. While at home his wife remarked that the butcher had sent in a bill for meat, amounting to The only money he had with him was the bill he had found, which he gave to her and she paid the butcher. The butcher paid it to the farmer for a calf, and the farmer paid it to the merchant, who in turn paid it to a washerwoman; and she, owing the banker a note of $10, went to the banker and paid the note. The banker recognized the bill as the one he had found, and which up to that time had settled $50 of debt. On a more careful examination he found the bill was counterfeit. Now, will some of our financial friends tell us what has been lost in this transaction, and by whom, if any? −Union, Albia, Ioẃa.

The Fight Is on Gold.

If the lawless, irresponsible dictators of industry and commerce are successful, then liberty, constitutional government, and personal security are at an end, civilization is derailed into an abyss, and retrogression displaces progress through another age of barbarism. Gold becomes the only god, and bayonets the only prod to duty. The university, the press, and the pulpit will all be made permanent attachments to the one despotic machine which is to control every source of communication and instruction, and stifle all thought and aspiration that do not strengthen the ruling power. On the other hand, the people's victory will end class rule forever, and gradually abolish all special privileges and monopolies by means of which one man holds an unjust advantage over another.—Walter Vrooman in New Democracy.

Usurpation of the Money Power.

Any system under which one person can obtain the wealth created by another without returning a full equivalent is immoral. Such is the character of our present system of financial and commercial exchange. It is essentially dishonest, and will not admit of strictly honest methods of doing business, and hence the most upright business men are even more liable to fail than there conscienceless competitors. system itself offers a premium upon unfair methods. It matters not by what means wealth is obtained, it confers power to dictate conditions for those who do not possess it, and it follows as a logical sequence, that the system stands in the way of the moral illumination and reformation of the masses of mankind. No movement can account itself as truly moral that does not propose to remove this one great incentive to dishonest practices .- New Woman, Snatching the World's Wealth.

Plutocracy is described by a magazine writer "as snatching the wealth of the world from the hands of them that produce it," as the sponge that "sponges up the ocean in order to water Sahara with six drops, one drop being a library, one a college, and a hospital." The first, he says, is "to perpetuate the memory of the sponge; "the second is to "teach the system of political economy by which the sponge sucked up the ocean;" and the third is "to receive the broken bodies of those to whose families the sponge might otherwise have had to pay damages." Are passionate utterances like these likely to do more harm or good to the cause of human growth and wisdom? Are such paragraphs calculated to sow deep prejudices or to lead to clearer conceptions and more earnest work for the general good?—The New Order.

America not the Land of the Free.

The man who is in danger of want, or even the dread of want, is not a free man; and the country which does not guard him against this danger and this dread, or does not assure him the means of a livelihood, is not a free country, though it may be the freest of all the free countries so called. In other words, liberty and poverty are incompatible, and, if the poverty is extreme, liberty is impossible to it. We pretend otherwise, such of us as are not so directly oppressed by the conditions; but those who feel the burden know better. From time to time they express their dissent in their uncomfortable way, but tacitly or explicitly they always dissent from our optimistic pretense.—W.D. Howells in the Forum.

The only conclusion any rational and unbiased thinker can arrive at, is that modern landlordism is the greatest curse that any country can groan under; that it is utterly incompatible with freedom; that it takes away the chief incentive to industry and thrift; that it creates poverty, pauperism, and crime, and checks all real progress in civilization.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

Discovery of the Secret of Not Dying.

HE typical Elijah asserted and confirmed his mission as the prophet of the Most High, when in the presence of many false prophets he called down fire from God out of heaven, which kindled the preparation for the sacrifice which Elijah offered. prophets of Baal and the Grove were gathered on Mount Carmel, to test the claim to authority which each was making of divine appointment and power. The testimony of the true prophet was corroborated in the failure of the pseudo prophets and in the successful achievement of the one divinely authorized. The false prophets were sincere, earnest, and expectant. They believed that they were genuine prophets of their god; but Elijah possessed more than belief,he knew his relation to Divinity, for he was so close to God that the processes of conjunctive unity would complete the transformation which would absorb him into the central throne of the astro-biologic consciousness.

Elijah knew that he was to sit upon the throne of Deity, as his name—God the Lord—implied; therefore he was not mistaken when he augmented and amplified the tests imposed upon the contestants for prophetic fame. As Elijah's mission was confirmed in the descent of fire upon the altar of immolation, so in the antitype the confirmation of authority in the true one among the thousands who will come as false prophets, will be that Elijah the prophet will call down fire from God out of heaven in the sight of men. Malachi predicts of him as follows:

"For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

"But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap."

The true prophet of God, coming as the precursor of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, will inaugurate a biological conflagration. He will perform this by virtue of his knowledge of the laws of that great change to which a portion of the human race aspires and will become subject. It will be the province of the genuine prophet of the Lord to establish a biologic battery, by being enabled to select from among the millions of the human family those who shall constitute an electro-magnetic power, the oscillatory momentum of which shall dissolve, without corruption, the thousands maturing as the first-fruits of the resurrection.

We have declared a scientific biological discovery; namely, that in the near future there will be the translation of a group, at the center of which Elijah the prophet will consume by theocrasis, that is, he will dissolve or dematerialize and thus communicate a fire to others, who by the thousands will pass away without the ordinary death of the body. This will be the conflagration or burning up of the world so long predicted. We not only declare this, but shall proceed to organize (under the auspices and authority of Divinity) the necessary biological grouping for the consumnation of this end. It matters not to us to what extent our determinations are opposed by the weaklings who through the venom of defeated rage vent their malignancy. They make war not on man but on God. We declare further, that some who through hatred think to defeat the progress of our work will find themselves helpless by virtue of the power against which they most foolishly contend. It is not safe to kick against the goads.

Scintillations of Brilliant Star Points.

WE noticed recently in a monthly publication, an item which induced a smile. It stated that people born under the influence of Libra believed themselves to be living in a hollow sphere, and Koresh was instanced as astrologically illustrating the principle. We are just so sufficiently absurd in our methods of thought and the application of the principles of exploiture, as to know that a demonstrated premise is a better foundation for the predication of a logical argument and conclusion, than an assumption. We have no use for assumption as the foundation for science.

The unmistakable emphasis and impulse given to the Koreshan System in the mechanical survey made at Naples by our Geodetic Staff, places us on the solid rock of truth. The theological and social systems, with the Theocratic government of the Koreshan Unity, have their foundation in the Cellular Cosmogony. By the side of the assumptions of the advocates of and believers in the Copernican astronomy, we place the evidence of an unmistakable mechanical survey—the only survey ever made to determine whether the earth was convex, concave, or flat.

Man is mortal. This includes body, soul, and spirit. Mortality—the dying state, is in opposition to imimmortality, the intermediate state between the mortal -broken in continuity, and the eternal-the unbroken state. The mortal state belongs both to the visible and material, and the invisible and spiritual. The outermost spiritual spheres, those immediately related to the visible, are mortal, whose spirits pass through the condition which corresponds to the mortal state in the natural. The spiritual world is as much the mortal world as the outward and natural is mortal. When man attains to immortality, then his spirit, soul, and body are immortal. Jesus the Lord reached immortality, and through it passed into the eternal and invisible higher life. His attainment was an example of what the sons of God will attain before passing through immortality to eternal life. What the Lord attained, the sons of God will also attain.

The conservation of sex energy through mental purification is one of the essential lines of human improvement, morally and physiologically. Sensualism is one of the prevailing sins of the age, and obtains as much within the marital domain as outside of it. The marriage license should not be regarded as a license for the prostitution of energies of brain and body, the husbanding of which can be made to conduce to the physiological perfection of the race. The reproductive energies are for two purposes; namely, propagation, and conservation through the restraints of perfect mental adjustment and poise. Perhaps our readers had better pass over the foregoing, for this is criminal doctrine in the eyes of a lecherous world, and you will be condemned for reading—and more, for believing.

The prosperity boom is the boom for the millionaire, and this depends upon the scarcity of money. The reduction of the monetary basis to the "single standard" enables the great financiers to manipulate not only the price of gold, but the blood of the wage slave. This forcing to the wall of another class of people that are only now beginning to experience the tyrannizing power of the iron heel of monopoly, will add the needed strength to a resisting force which in the near future will insure the climax of the great culminating vortex into which the struggle for human liberty is hastening the race with an accelerating speed.

No man or body of men has the right to say to a single individual of this American government, you shall not work unless you conform to the rules we as an organized body provide. When the Congress of our country has become so weak that it fears to legislate and enforce the laws against organized tyranny because of the influence voters may possess, it is too demoralized for the public good.

The progress of astronomical thought on the hypothesis of the convexity of the earth, is inimical to the idea of the personal Divinity. To deny God's personality is to deny the Messiahship of Jesus and also his Divinity; and to deny these is to deny all the teachings of the Old and the New Testament concerning the Lord Christ and his office in human redemption. This is Antichrist.

Every candid and critical observer knows that the burdens of taxation fall upon the poor, and that the rich in more than athousand ways, escape their obligations. The principal reason for this is, that our laws are made by the affluent, who leave no stone unturned to add to the possibilities for the accumulations which their greed inspires them to foster.

In the conduct of government, the teachings of history must be recognized and every measure that ignores those teachings will be a failure. History, as well as common sense, shows that the danger which threatens the American republic spring from definite causes, and unless such causes are removed, we can expect only a continuation of these dangers.

Good (?) times depend upon the success of combines. Good times for the Standard Oil Company are proportionate to its control of the oil interests and the freezing out of the small concerns. Good times for the railroad monopolists are proportionate to the absorption of competing roads. Therefore all the small concerns should be driven to the wall.

The gold standard means the control of the commerce of the world by the money kings. It means the subjugation of the American nation to England. It means that the United States shall forever be a money-borrowing and interest-paying nation, and that the great mass of the American people shall be perpetual wage slaves.

The extravagance of Congress has become a reproach and a byword, and this may well be when we recall the melancholy fact that Congressional appropriations have increased over one hundred millions since 1890, during which period we have been struggling to keep the Government from financial ruin.

A Prophetic Glimpse of the New Humanity.

TMAKES one tired to read the rubbish that passes the rounds as literature, on the question of socialism. Page after page is devoted to the differentiation of wage, price, worth, cost, profit, etc., terms and subjects which belong to the competitive system, and have nothing whatsoever to do with the great social revolution destined to bury in the antiquated graveyard of oblivion, the effete past. The wage system is to be destroyed. Men are not to be hired in the coming social regime. Industry is to be rewarded on altogether different principles from the past and present. Man shall no longer eat his bread in the sweat of his face, in the coming social government. Price, cost, wage, worth, etc., will cut no figure after the coming regulation of the relations between industry and the distribution of its products. The government will regulate the scale of relative valuations and productions, and distribution will be equitable. The power of money will be destroyed. Gold will be comparatively worthless, and except as a commercial commodity, will not be used.

It will enter into the various arts for what it contains of value, but its monetary power will be destroyed.

There is about to transpire the conflagration predicted of old, and we are near its consummation. Out of this baptism there will spring forth the great encephalon of the new order. A new race of beings will inhabit the earth, the product of creation in one more step in the progress of mental and physical evolution. They will be as far above the present genus homo, as the present genus is above the animal kingdom. The present race, or that portion of it prepared to comprehend the character of the imminent conflagration and to enter the fire of purification, will constitute the basis and material for the creation of the genus Theo-anthropoi, the God-men of the kingdom to come. The sons of God, the firstfruits of the resurrection of the dead, will assume the reins of government, and will constitute the fountain of inspiration for the respiratory affection and affiliation, which will render the brotherhood of man possible.

The Scientific Victory Over Gravity.

BY ASTRO-VIGILUS.

I HAD dreamed that I could fly; through an effort of the will to escape a danger, I rapidly rose to an altitude of a hundred feet, and slowly moved toward the sunset. I experienced a delightful sensation and a feeling of physical buoyancy like the lightness of a happy heart. What a wonder that I could fly! I was realizing all my hopes and the fruit of all my efforts for years! The problem of flying through the air had long engaged my inventive genius, and my efforts had failed; and now to fly without apparatus filled me with a delight that I cannot describe. When I awoke, I was as ponderable and as unable to fly as ever.

To me and to scores of my fellow inventors, aerial navigation was still a problem. The one obstacle which seemed to bid defiance to all ingenuity was gravity itself. My aeroship seemed perfect, but for that one difficulty. Its several apparently successful tests had startled the world, but I could devise no means of supplying it with the enormous amount of electric energy necessary to propel it more than an hour orso. I found myself defeated by forces I had hoped to conquer. In years past, I had seen Keeley despair of success; he was hindered by an unknown law. Maxim and Langley had likewise failed, and now I had seen the door of the nineteenth century close behind me, but with the hope that the beginning of the new century would bring to me my reward. Will my dream be fulfilled?

Flaming headlines in a morning paper arrested my attention: "Physical Levitation Accomplished at Last!" "Great Scientific Achievements in a Chicago Laboratory!" I at once boarded an underground pneumatic car, with the hope of obtaining some clue to a principle that would assist me in perfecting my apparatus, and soon found myself within the doors of the institution.

"I am glad to meet the inventor of Delambre's aeroship," said the gentleman who welcomed me. "We have something better, you will admit upon examination," he said, as we passed into the laboratory.

He advanced toward a table which supported a large glass globe; he touched a button on the globe, and it slowly rose to the center of the room and remained suspended in mid-air. Turning to a mechanical contrivance, he touched a small lever, and it moved in a circle above our heads.

"That," said he, "is a model of our leviship. That I may have opportunity to explain our scientific achievements to you, I invite you to accompany me on a little voyage in the large aerial car."

The leviship arose majestically above the buildings of the great city, and soared away to the south,—a floating car stripped of balloon, wings, and sails, provided with a simple covering. At our feet was a battery, and at the rear of the car I saw a rudder with which the scientist steered the unique vessel stripped by

"The principle is simple," he said, in answer to my questions. "Gravo-levic forces extend perpendicularly; our battery produces a lateral vibration which destroys gravity, and consequently the weight of the car. When this is done it requires but little force to propel it in any direction we desire."

"How is the vibration produced?"

"By electro-magnetic polarization, which results in the destruction of the positive elements of the battery. The helix induces lateral extension of the magnetic rays, the vibrations of which, being more rapid than the vibrations of gravity, disintegrate the gravic force. Rapid vibration is the secret; it is simply a vortex of energies finer in quality than gravity, in which their intensity and direction of vibration and radiation are changed. Here is the point of your failure; there can be no successful aerial navigation without it."

"Is this the first manifestation of the principle here employed?"

"By no means; it has always been manifest in the sun, moon, and stars. These lights are vortices of substances, which partially materialize at the focal point and enter into combustion; but for the intense vibration resulting, the substances which materialize or crystallize would be ponderable. All birds possess the power to disintegrate gravity to the extent of their own weight, and their flight is thus reduced to mere locomotion. Look at those vultures there, about a thousand feet above the earth, flying with scarcely a movement of their wings. The principle of the sails in their wings serves only to change their course. In ascending or descending they move in spirals, you see."

"Years ago," he continued, "Keeley almost succeeded in utilizing this principle of vibration. He failed for the simple reason that he was in ignorance of the science of alchemy and of the laws of vibration. All energy is substance, and radiates in currents or rays. By accident the inventor of the perpetual light was partially successful in applying the principle, but he did more than he knew. A simple illustration of the vortex is seen in the gyroscope used by the so called astronomers of the last century, in their endeavor to prove the fallacy of the earth's rotation. The plane of rotation of the gyroscope is fixed by the creation of an exterior vortex which extends laterally from the rim of the rotating wheel, and any effort to throw it out of that plane is met with resistance. The phenomenon of the gyroscope—that of changing its plane of rotation as the hours go by, is due to the relation the plane of the energies of the vortex sustains to the plane of the sun's diurnal revolution."

"Now, how was this discovery of lateral vibration made?"

"Through discovery of the fact that the universe is a great cell, a gigantic battery, with perpetual destruction of its positive pole, the sun, which is at the center of the earth, or environ of the universe."

"Who made this discovery?"

"Koresh, now recognized as the world's greatest scientist, thirty years before the close of the last century. All our scientific achievements are the result of the application of the principles of Koreshan Science, the system which he founded."

"Do you think that levitation of human beings is possible?"

"Certainly, through application of known laws of mental and physical vibration. This was the secret of Jesus' ability to walk on the water, the result of energies generated through splenic agitation. The ancient races understood these laws which have now been restored to humanity. The construction of the great Pyramid of Gizeh, in old Egypt, is an example of the application of the principles of the destruction of gravity. But for this, the transportation and emplacement of the massive stones would have been impossible."

"What benefits will accrue to humanity through this discovery," I asked, as we alighted from the car, which had returned to the court, after an ascension of some three thousand feet and a voyage of a number of miles.

"It will win all of humanity's battles. Only science can truly win. The progress of ages culminates in the revelation of all mystery, the science of all truth. Mystery is truth enveloped in clouds of darkness, hidden away from all obtrusion until the fabric of destiny is woven. We are in the light of the twentieth century, and the external cobwebs of fallacy have been brushed away. Progressive humanity is rising, and human gravitation to the tomb has been overcome,—the victory of science in its battle against the forces of the grave. The broadway to death has been closed, and the gateway to tangible, immortal life here in the earth, is open!"

The Irony of Fate; A Prophecy.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

L ONG years ago when old Tom Fordham was a thin-faced, sharp-eyed schoolboy, playing at marbles with his fellows and skillfully winning the miscellaneous assortment of treasures that filled their pockets, he had resolved to be rich some day. He was a shrewd lad with an eye to a bargain even in those days, always ready to trade knives and pencils on the remotest possibility of turning a penny, and as he grew up, the child-ish resolve deepened and strengthened.

A strolling fortune-teller, who inveigled Tom out of a ten cent piece in cheap remuneration for a peep behind the curtain of the future, told the boy that fate designed him for a millionaire, founding the assertion, most likely, on his evident reluctance to part with the money. No man becomes a millionaire who does not look twice at a penny, no matter how ardent his desire for its equivalent. Tom accepted the prediction as a decree of heaven, and set himself to verify it with all his might. He had all the money-getting maxims at his tongue's end, "Look out for the pence and the pounds will look out for themselves," "A penny saved, is a penny earned," and many similar precepts of worldly wisdom. He never indulged in the folly of treating his mates, and no vision of black eyes and rosy cheeks could win a tribute of boyish homage in the shape of candy or fruit from him.

And yet, for some inexplicable reason, although

Tom was so industrious and saving—far too saving for a young man-he seemed singularly unsuccessful in what came to be the main object of his life, other ambitions and purposes gradually fading out, absorbed by the ruling passion. Pretty Anice Wheeler, who liked Tom in spite of his penurious ways, grew weary of waiting indefinitely for his income to increase and in sheer disgust with his lukewarm professions, married one of the worst spendthrifts in town, a match which proved notoriously happy, despite Tom's vehement warnings of calamity. With Anice's desertion, the last link that bound Tom to gentle, loving, human interests was broken and his life settled into harder, firmer lines than ever. To besure, an unwearied Providence occasionally thrust in his way, opportunities for unselfish practice, but Tom turned his back resolutely upon every incentive to nobler living.

When his sister's husband died, leaving the poor woman nearly destitute, with a brood of fatherless little ones to support, everyone looked to Tom as her natural protector in the emergency, but Tom was just then on the point of making his fortune in a new electrical appliance. If he could only raise a little more money at the critical moment, the invention would be launched inside a month-two at the most, and then what a generous provision he could make for them all,—educate the boys and give their mother her carriage. So the poor soul, with limitless faith in her brother's capacity, cheerfully proffered five hundred dollars, her children's solitary heritage, to push the enterprise which proved a signal failure. She and the children managed to shift for themselves after that in some fashion, while Tom, miserly as ever and still confident of his future prosperity, put all his energies into a new stock company organized to place on the market a valuable tract of western land. Some money, to be sure, he realized from his various projects, no one knew just how much; Tom kept his own counsel, lived close and allowed himself only the barest necessities. The fact was, fortune seemed determined to thwart his efforts. Having endowed Tom with the nature and instincts of a miser, she capriciously withheld the gratification of his desires, so that the proceeds of one venture were usually swallowed up by the mischances of a second, and Tom was getting old now; his locks and beard were grisled and his gaunt form bent slightly like an oak bowed by the winds; still his faith in his destiny was unchanged. Was he not going to die a millionaire? To what purpose else, had he toiled and saved, closing every avenue of his heart lest gentle pity, soft compassion or tender love creep in to filch away some farthings of his gains?

Then came the Klondike excitement. The newspapers in glowing terms heralded the discovery of a new El Dorado and described the marvels of that far-off northern land, with its mighty glaciers, frozen fields, and long mysterious Arctic night. The fever heightened. The thirst for gold is the easiest to awaken, the fiercest to rage, and the hardest to quench of any craving experienced by humanity. Balzac, who had searched the profoundest depths of the human heart, shows the glazed eyes of a dying man whence every spark of life and emotion had fled, suddenly lighted up by intense gleams of cupidity at sight of the silver chalice containing the sacramental wine presented by the priest.

Danger and hardship only invested the distant gold fields with an element of romance. Tom Fordham read and listened and finally decided this was the last great opportunity of his life. He was now past sixty, but looked older and owing to recent illness, was poorly adapted to the rigors of Alaskan exile. Health, however, had no value as a determinant in the matter. He purchased his outfit, bade adieu to his acquaintances—friends he had none, having long discarded them as expensive luxuries—and at the expiration of several months, arrived at Dawson, the newest metropolis of the western world, the chief objective point of the gold-seekers.

When he saw the shining yellow dust standing in tumblers behind the bar in the saloons and dance halls, Tom's eyes glistened. The wonderful sail up the Stickeen river had left him cold and impassive before the sublime spectacle where range after range of majestic mountains, rising one behind another in solid phalanx, with countless spires, pinnacles and battlements of ice, tower to reach the heavens that come down in cloud and mist to meet them; where foaming torrents pour white from thousands of mighty glaciers,—a new one born every few moments with a thunderous crash and roar that re echoes from peak to peak, like the birth cry of a Titan, setting the elements in wildest upheaval and commotion.

For two years, Tom lived the life of a wild beast or an Indian. Hundreds of stronger men all around him succumbed to the incredible hardships occasioned by the severity of the climate whose rigors exceeded current description, and the scarcity of any kind of nourishing food. It was a terrible life delving among the rocks by the dim light of his candle in the gloom of the long winter, or sifting clay down in the creek or river beds where the placer claims were exploited; but his courage was buoyed up by the conviction that the realization of his life-long hopes was at hand.

At last the day came when the goal was reached. The gipsy fortune-teller's prophecy was fulfilled and Tom Fordham was a millionaire. He knew the value of every nugget in his buckskin sack. Ah! what a price he had paid for them! All the nobler aspirations of his being, all the tender sympathies of his heart, all the gentle ties of human relationship, all the kindly associations of society-to say nothing of the long months of privation and suffering whose history was written in his haggard face and burning eyes. Pale, gaunt, holloweved, with a racking cough, more like a spectre than a living man, yet triumphant in his victory over fortune who for so many years had frustrated his efforts, Tom prepared to guit the frozen wilderness and return to the outer world of civilization. He had lived in such complete isolation from his kind that no whisper from without had reached him these many months. When he arrived at his old home, he found that wonderful events had transpired; the progress of invention had revolutionized society, and the philosopher's stone, the secret of transmutation vainly sought by the old alchemists, had proved at last a veritable reality. Beginning with the discovery of a Chicago scientist who first introduced a method of manufacturing gold out of antimony, the transmutation of other and baser substances had followed, until the cheapness of the process had stimulated the production of the precious metal in such enormous quantities that its value as the medium of exchange was quickly destroyed. The nuggets in Tom's sack were worthless!

The Scientific Panacea Discovered in Life Itself.

The Diseased Condition of Humanity.

Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"

NOWING, as Jesus did, the condition of the health of all men, it is no wonder that he classed them all as dead. A few days, or weeks, or years, at most, of living death, would bring the closing scene in their career and the end of their sufferings, which were generally the result of their own vices. Death was the certain thing before each of them, hence they were in death—dead. He alone of all men did not abide in death.

The only avenue to salvation was to inoculate the dying humanity with this seed of the higher life that would not die. We find in the lower domain (and what is a law in one domain is a law in every domain), that by inserting a bud or graft-germ of one quality of fruit into the circulation of a tree having another quality, we may produce a tree having the higher characteristic. So by inserting the germ of this higher quality of man that has life in Himself, into the dying man, we may, nay, will (in the end of the cycle of the reproduction of that seed which Jesus declared would be the end of the Christian age) produce another just like the seed from whence the germ that will not die, was taken. And as not one but many, received the germ of this immortal life, so many immortals will stand forth and constitute the kingdom of heaven in earth, that has been so long promised. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things have passed away.

The insatiable greed and murderous vice of the present will no longer work death to the human race, but in their stead, love to God and the neighbor will be an ever-rising fountain of life. But for such rejuvenating, humanity would soon die out under the weight of its own vices and crimes.

Fruit and Seed of the Tree of Life.

HE fruit of a tree hangs upon the tree which produces it. This is just as true of the Tree of Life, (or lives, as the Hebrew has it), as of any other tree. Jesus was the origin and Creator, hence the ripened fruit of that tree. The fruit contains the seed, so He was the seed of the tree. According to Scripture: "He saith not, and to seeds as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." The fruits that still hang on the tree are rejected as not yet fit for the higher appropriation for which they were intended, for the reason that they are still under the curse of crudeness and greenness. When they shall have reached the state of perfect ripeness they may hope to have the curse removed, which now bars their entrance to the higher domain and confines them to the domain of death and the narrow range of reproduction in their present form. When they have Christ perfectly formed within them,—"Christ in them, the hope of glory;" when they shall have perfectly "put on Christ," "put on the new man," body, soul, and spirit, as Jesus the divine seed had, then they will be the ripened fruit of the Tree of Lives, ready to be plucked and appropriated by the immortals. They will be no more subject to death, as Jesus the seed from whence they came, was not. The harvest of the seed which Jesus sowed—the resurrection of the dead, coming at the end of the Christian age, is the time of such ripening and appropriation. Such matured and ripened fruit will constitute the new genus, the kingdom of heaven in earth, the 'new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Thoughts Heteroclitical About This and That.

BY W. H. PAVITT.

THE condition of the masses and the general downward tendency sometimes seem too patent for one to waste time in discussing. The cause which led humanity up or down, as one pleases to view it, to such conditions is not generally understood. Very few have been able to diagnose the disease, therefore the patient has been dosed with poisons, soporifics, emetics, purgatives, blisters, and leeches, until the last stage which precedes dissolution has been reached. It does not seem to have occurred to the learned doctors who have been practicing upon the patient, that perchance, if nature had been let alone, a fair chance for recovery might result. But perish such thoughts! In such event what would become of the practitioner? It is no unusual thing to hear men cry for justice, with no conception that justice might put them in the stocks!

"The land is mine," saith the Lord, therefore the use of it belongs not to one man nor class, but to the living. No man made it, and no man has a right to buy or sell or mortgage it. Because a certain few have by chicane and fraud, backed by statutes defending usurpation and robbery, obtained vast tracts of rich agricultural, mining, and timber lands, their rights consist only in a paper title made by a body of ignorant, corrupt, and venal representatives of an equally corrupt, ignorant, and venal people. A more enlightnened people can and will declare such acts null and void—a violation of the inalienable right of every child born in earth, to its just share of the bounties of nature—the free gift of a beneficent father to all of his children, and not to some special person or persons having developed a law-defended dexterity in picking a brother's pocket!

It may be owing to a thickening of the cortical covering of the brain, but we cannot comprehend how the people are going to get rich by taxing themselves, whether by income tax, inheritance tax, single tax, double tax, or a tariff tax. It is a boomerang which returns to kill. The whole world of today is controlled by the competitive system, and especially do the political leaders exhibit a most remarkable aberration of mind on the subject of legal tender. That grim and gruesome superstition is responsible for more crime, misery, and want than any other specie of fanaticism that has oppressed humanity for thousands of years!

We once saw two bipeds in a drunken brawl. One had a club with which he was seeking to crush his op-ponent's skull; the other had a knife and was trying to carve the creature with the club, and finally succeeded in slashing him across the ribs, when lo, the madman of the club suddenly became a law-abiding citizen, and wanted justice! This is only an example of the general disposition of humanity. Punishment for others is desirable, but for self none! This is the rock which lies hidden in the channel, and which has scuttled many a reform craft.

Precedent is a brain-stultifying institution; but where can one go or what can one do to get rid of it? Yet it must go, and with it all the fungi which support it, and upon which it feeds. The precedent of majority rule is a poor one. It is a surprise to many to know that we do not believe in the rule of the majority. Rule of reason, guided by natural law, will eliminate the rule of those who cannot rule themselves, and will establish justice. Humanity must reach the rule of justice through bitter experience.

Individualism must give place to organic unity, and men will find love to God and the brotherhood of man to be one principle. Then men will cease the foolish cry of the greatest good to the greatest number, and will strive each for the greatest good to all. Truth, not majorities, will rule. Until this time arrives, justice cannot obtain; but it will come, dashing to pieces every obstacle to communism!

In the Editorial Perspective.

HE total eclipse of the sun, January 22, was successfully observed by astronomers at Calcutta and other stations along the course of the total shadow. The astronomers express themselves as being well pleased; they took particular pains to consider nothing that would seem to be in conflict with their theories. There are thousands of people who think that because this and other eclipses have been accurately predicted, that the old theory of astronomy must be true. But the daily press has given the snap away, just as we have numbers of times in the past-that all eclipses are calculated from eclipse tables, which define definite eclipse cycles, and that the accuracy of eclipse prediction is not due to any theory of astronomy. In the report of the recent eclipse observations we find the following: "Astronomers ascertain the exact day on which an eclipse of the sun or moon will take place in the following manner: For eclipses of the sun, charts are designed for an observer supposed to be located at the center of the earth at the time of the new moon, i. e., the conjunction of our satellite with the sun, is calculated. * * The moon and sun charts show that on the average, in the course of 18 years and 10 days, 70 eclipses can be observed, of which 29 are moon eclipses, and 41 solar eclipses." This period is termed an eclipse cycle. The length of this period has nothing to do with any theory of astronomy; eclipses were calculated thousands of years before the present popular system was ever dreamed of.

It is a scientific postulate in Koreshan Science that everything in the universe has its opposite. This leads to the conclusion that the light pole of the sun at the center of the earth, has its opposite pole of darkness; consequently every star in the universe has its opposite—a dark point, and every planetary disc in the earth's crust, its antithetical, dark disc, with corresponding reflections in the physical heavens. These conclusions have been recently confirmed at the Lowell observatory in Arizona, by Dr. T. J. See, who has been able to see dark planets among the fixed stars; these dark planets, he concludes, are in the region of the fixed stars. It is held in modern astronomy that Mars, Venus, Jupiter, and other planets are non-luminous. Look at the brilliant orbs of Jupiter and Venus at their brightest, in comparison with dark, non-luminous bodies seen by Dr. See, and conclude whether or not they shine with borrowed light. The dark planets are among the fixed stars; their corresponding light planets are among the fixed stars also. This is not placing the planets at the incalculable stellar distances of modern astronomy, but bringing the stars down to within the measurable distances of the planets themselves. By simple geometrical triangulation the distances to the visible sun-planets and stars do not exceed 1,200 miles.

War clouds are rising in both the eastern and the western horizon. The concert of powers is no longer at the Dardanelles, but in Chinese waters. Russia, France, and Japan have closed the ports of China to the world's commerce, and this conflicts with the interests of Great Britain. Japan is impetuous, and may precipitate war; while England announces that Russian invasion must be prevented! In the west the Cuban question is exercising the minds of diplomats and jingoes. The Blanco-Sagasta autonomy plan is a failure; riots occur in Havana, with threatened attacks upon the American Consul. Spain is becoming enraged at the Senatorial speeches, at the administration's appeal for aid for Cuban sufferers, and at the threatened intervention to stop the Cuban war. A large number of American warships are in readiness to sail at a moment's notice, and several have already sailed from Jacksonville and Key West, Fla., for Havana, to protect Americans and American interests. The Spanish minister at Washington has notified the administration that he fears his people will become enraged and drive Americans from Cuba and Spain. He thus admits the Spanish thirst for blood and the spirit of lawlessness, which relegate the weakening monarchy to barbarism!

Spectral analyses of the sun confirm the conclusions of the Koreshan Cosmogony. There are no so called elements in the sun or in the substances emanating from it, that are foreign to the earth itself. If the substances known to exist in the earth are found in the sun, this fact at once establishes a relation between the sun and the earth—the center and the circumference. We examine spectral analyses of stars also; they are claimed to be giant suns billions of miles distant. The stellar spectra are not the same as those of the sun; they do not contain a greater variety of substances than the sun, but less. If the stars are suns, they should not contain fewer substances. No single star contains its quota of substances that the modern system would compel. The millions of stars are so many diffusions and refocalizations of solar energies, and it would require the entire multitude of stars to represent the fulness of solar activities. The stars are points of light; the most powerful telescopes in existence are not capable of magnifying the points a hair's breadth!

Astronomers are in a pretty predicament concerning Venus. Cassini saw spots on that planet, and calculated that its period of revolution is about 23 hours. Bianchini made it 24 days and 8 hours; Schroter, 23 hours and 22 minutes; De Vico and Polambo, after 10,000 observations, 23 hours, 21 minutes and 21-.9345 seconds: Schiaparelli now causes its rotation in 224 days and 17 hours—in the same time that it revolves about the sun. The combined result of all American observation demolishes completely the Schiaparellian theory, and now Flammarion, of Paris, asserts that no one has ever seen, or ever will see, the surface of Venus, and that astronomers can never know anything about the time of its rotation. A writer sums up all the difficulties in the way of accurate conclusion concerning the planet under the head of, "Why we know so little about Venus." With a greater degree of certainty, Koreshan Science easily demonstrates the reason why astronomers know so little about anything!

Some remarkable claims were made at the recent National Convention of Chemists at Washington. They parade before the world the claim that chemistry has been of incalculable benefit to agriculture, through the discovery that plants derive eighty per cent of their substance from the atmosphere, through the invention of fertilizers, and through the hypothesis that nitrogen-absorbing bacteria are plowed under the soil for the prolific propagation of vegetation! One failure of the convention was, in not showing how it was possible for vegetation to exist and to be cultivated previous to these so called discoveries; and another was, in not divulging what hypothesis the chemists will now adopt in lieu of their exploded premise—the fallacy of the indestructibility of matter.

The exhumation of the remains of Voltaire revives in the public mind the life of a notable historic character. It revives also pictures of the conditions which existed during the reign of Louis XVI, with its corrupt aristocracy and impoverished people.

Voltaire cried out against the evils of the church and government. His death was followed by the vortex of revolution and the crushing of the Roman power in France. Despite the opinions of the church, the work of Voltaire is linked with American independence through the associations of Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Paine. Voltaire was buried on the eve of revolution; he is now untombed amid scenes of greater corruptions, and on the eve of the greatest revolution known in the history of man Gage's currency bill seeks to destroy $200,000,000 in green-backs, and to substitute therefor bank bills based on same amount of gold bonds. This means $200,000,000 more indebt-edness without a dollar's more wealth for either the government or the people, and without a dollar's increase in the circulation of money. It is a plan to destroy the people's money, and to give the bankers the monopoly of paper currency. The banks will be enriched to the extent of the new bondage, and the people enslaved to the same extent. It is a scheme for the bankers, for Gage himself belongs to this class of money thieves, and will legislate for their interests despite the interests of the people.

A number of poker-playing ministerial students in the Presbyterian theological seminary at Allegheny Pa., have aroused the ire of the faculty. Some will be expelled and others suspended. We judge that the old theology is not so interesting to the young bloods as the more modern inventions, and consequently amusements take the place of dry fallacy. We do not blame either side for the courses pursued, under the circumstances; but we have an idea that if we were both students and faculty of that institution we would reform!

What passed as science fifty years ago is rejected at the end of the nineteenth century. The nebular hypothesis is now a theory of the past, and Newton's theory of gravitation is vanishing like a will-o'-the wisp when one chases it for investigation; it will soon disappear altogether. Newton never put forth his theory as science: he claimed it to be no more than remote probability. It temporarily bolstered a conclusion, but it is now crumbling, and the gigantic fallacy of modern astronomy will soon be a heap of ruins!

Modern warfare is likely to be revolutionized! A man has invented a gun which shoots electricity, and announces that it is planned to throw death in a search-light. He claims that his invention will enforce universal peace, for the reason that its use would prove too disastrous in warfare. Better try it in Spain first, and then enforce the peace!

The Chicago Tribune charges Chicago with inadequate laws, which shackle the hands of the police and leave free the hands of the burglars and hold-ups. The Tribune should go further with its suggestions of reform;—shackle the hands of all those engaged in extracting money from the pockets of the wealth producers!

Kirksville, Mo., is an osteopathic town, and means to defend itself against the invasions of boards of health and Allopathic meddlers. It is the home of the founder of osteopathy, Dr. Still, who has established the American College of Osteopathy, with Dr. Smith as the able principal and head.

When superceded by utilization of levic and gravic forces in Koreshan invention, the Roentgen rays will be sure-enough ex. (X)-rays.

If all the ruling powers of the world were just, the conditions would not be just as they are.

There is said to be honor among thieves; the hold-ups are forming a trust.

Quiet Talks with the Editors of our Exchanges.

NTHE world's great journalistic firmament, some paper must shine with the greatest brilliancy, and the brighter it shines the less brilliant will all others appear. We do not mean the journal having the greatest circulation, nor the one which comes nearest pleasing everybody, for the taste of the people may not be just right. It is a poor principle upon which everybody can agree when the majority are wrong. The only true light is the light of the science of truth, the knowledge of that which is true. An idea coming from any other source, only adds to the world's darkness. In the lurid glare of fallacy, wierd conceptions are formed, and these conceptions are the mischievous sprites which afflict and annoy humanity. It is the business of many an editor to guard with unwieldly clubs, a group of mental spooks which never did him any other service than to deceive him! Progressive people do not desire this kind of journalism; they like to see aggressiveness, instead of so much defense. The thing which needs constant defense is an invalid idea in a mental hospital! THE FLAMING Sword is the sun of journalism; it does not radiate moonshine. The solar sphere at the center of the universe is light on one side and dark on the other. The dark side of THE SWORD are the impressions received from the dark hemisphere of humanity, making dark pictures of its social and mental conditions. This journalistic sun stands between the old century and the new; the dark side faces the dying past, and its bright side creates the light of the coming age!

The editor of a paper or the originator of some combination of ideas which he calls a "system," should first count the cost and know what he is going to do before he begins his work. Some people jump at conclusions, purchase a lot of type and fire away at anybody or nobody. They are just random shots, without any definite aim. A boy shoots his new gun just to hear it go off; no other gun is as good as his, even if it is a cheap flobert! The cracks of toy guns in the newspaper world amuse us! We make a study of humanity; we survey the field, and know what we are going to do and what we are already doing. Our work is menticulture; there is a science to it, and we are not "beating the air."

Ever stop to think of the awful chaos in the world of ideas? Judging from the jangling voices of the newspapers of the world, we conclude that the typical editor has very poor premises, or else his train of conclusion is wrecked before it reaches its destination. It is always one or the other, unless your conclusions are absolutely correct. In your case, which is it?

A thing done under cover is not always a bad thing; some good magazines are under pretty covers. The only cover we have been able to see about some newspapers is the effort to cover up the real object of their existence. A paper which "covers" up it smeanness is a poor paper with poor covers!

You either have more truth than we have, or just the same amount, or less. If you have more than we have, it is your duty to teach us; if just an much as we have, you should think just as we do; if less, you should let us teach you. The FLAMING SWORD is teaching the world.

Nearly every newspaper office is supposed to have a "devil." This thing has been kept up so long that the real devil answers the purpose and takes possession; he controls the policy of the majority of papers in existence.

If you want ideas, don't get cheap ones in job lots from the editorial bargain counter. Manufacture your own goods, and leave the "ready prints" for the "editors" who cannot.

THE FLAMING SWORD is the hub of journalism. It is a cause that produces effect; wherever it goes it creates a hubbub Public wants are not always consistent with public rights. Majority rule is not right if the majority are wrong.

Some people insist on expressing their opinions without paying the expressage.

As Editors See Us.

Sell-You-lar Theories.

There is a gentleman in Chicago who styles himself Koresh, and publishes a paper with the lurid title of The Flaming Sword, in which he proclaims, to the contradiction of the present system of astronomy, that the earth is a hollow sphere and that we live on the inside of it, on the concave surface of the shell.

Of course, the gentleman is supposed to be crazy, but he is still outside the lunatic asylum and appears to have method in his madness. He affirms that his theory has been proved and can be proved at any time by actual measurement. This appears reasonable, because the problem to be solved is simply to determine whether the surface of the earth curves upward toward a horizontal line, or downward away from it. The test in this case is the same that I announced in the last number of this paper as the test for all theories and systems, the application of the mathematical principle of the square or sign of the cross. If there is mechanical skill enough in the world to fix an absolutely horizontal line a few miles long, that will settle the question whether the earth's surface is convex or concave. If the scientists cannot give this test, their measurements of the distance and bulk of Arcturus are open to doubt. This is not a question of belief or theory; it is a question of fact and calls for material evidence. Whoever can make this test is a real scientist, a master workman, and is truly entitled to be decorated with the mystic emblems of the compass and the square.

I do not know whether the earth is a hollow cell or not. I am willing to let the scientists settle that among themselves; but I do know positively that the present system of political economy and some more of our systems, religious, social, and pseudo-scientific, are hollow sells, and we are on the inside of them, like Jonah in the whale. But the old whale is getting pretty sick and I expect we will get out before long.—New Dispensation, Corvallis, Vagrancy laws demand the arrest of every man who has no visible means of support. The real trouble is not so much in those who have no visible means of support as in those whose support is visible—too visible, too palpably evident that their support is stolen from the producer. It is such visible support that we object to. No man can have visible support if it is taken away from him and given to somebody else!—The Flaming Sword.

Which is all very true. The invention of machinery, however, has done more to take away the "visible means of support" of the working classes than anything else. Hundreds of able-bodied men are walking the streets of the different cities today, looking for employment, on account of the expert machinery invented; families, halfstarved, are on the increase all over the land, because machinery has taken away the "visible means of support" of the head of the household. Machinery invention has made more tramps, bums, and hobos than everything else known combined. There should be a law enacted prohibiting the manufacture and use of machinery, which in a great measure is the direct cause of so much misery and want throughout the country .- The Herald, Roseland, Louisiana.

From The Flaming Sword we learn that times are good (for the millionaire), and prosperity booming as Gage-d by the secretary of the treasury who is scheming to do away with greenbacks, and issue bonds instead, for our "dear" people, whom the bankers of Lombard and Wall streets love so well and cater to their wants so faithfully. Such is life, in the poor man's mind!—Coming Events, Evansville, Ind.

S. B. Nickum, Logansport, Ind., by including certain chemicals within a ground glass globe, in a vacuum, has invented a new illumiant. He calls it Perpetual Light, or "bottled sunshine."

THE FLAMING SWORD sees in this an independent illustration confirmatory of the Cellular Cosmogony, of which it is an expositor and herald.—The Leaflet, Ironton, O.

THE FLAMING SWORD is a valuable addition to our exchange list. It is published by Cyrus R. Teed, Founder of "Koreshanity," to us a new religious science. THE SWORD is awake to the crying need of the hour. 6308 Wentworth Ave., Chicago.—

Interrogation Points and Encouraging Words.

- (1) What is the "mark of the beast?"
 (2) Do you observe baptism and the Lord's Supper? (3) What was the form of baptism originally—immersion or sprinkling?
 (4) Explain Koreshan Astro-anthroposophy. (5) What is conversion?
- (1) Money is the mark of the beast; without it in the hand, or credit which the banker can recognize in the face, it is not possible to do business. (2) Whatever rites and ceremonies were instituted nineteen hundred years ago served their purpose then, and have no application to the present time; the new age begins with a new order of thought and life. (3) The form of symbol used nineteen hundred years ago was not plunging nor sprinkling. The narratives give it plainly; the persons simply waded into the water, and the baptism was by transfer of mental substance, by a psychic process. The symbol was simply that of bathing the feet, representing the complete cleansing at the extremity of the age. The church was in the form of a man; Jesus was its head, and the ultimates of the man will be at the foundation at the close of the age--the feet will then rest upon the footstool. (4) An explanation of Koreshan Astro-anthroposophy requires the details of not only human physiology, theology, but also the laws of the physical universe and the relation of the cosmos to humanity. (5) Conversion is transformation. When starch is converted into sugar it is no longer starch. When a man is couverted to Christ, he is no longer the man as he was, but Christ; only devils can be converted to gods. True conversion must be complete; it requires an entire age to complete it, but when it is done, the mortal flesh shall have put on the immortal. Only God possesses immortality; when man attains to that state he reaches the Godhood.
- S. H., Grant's Pass, Ore.—We note your question concerning the article, "Who is the Prince of this World," in THE FLAMING SWORD of January 7, that if Jesus was the prince of this world why did he say, "The Prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me "? The words "the prince of this world," were substituted in a reference to John xvi:7, to make explicit and clear the statement of the fact that the "prince of this world" was the Comforter. Jesus went away by dissolution of his body; the result of the combustion was the Holy Spirit, the Comforter. Now, when the Spirit should come to the disciples, as on Pentecost, had it anything in that which was not in existence? Have the energies of the seed anything in the seed-form, after the seed is dissolved? Nothing whatever. Jesus had no reference to the devil in John xiv; he was talking about the Comforter, about his going away, and how that which he should send to them should come, and impressed upon them the fact that he must be destroyed before it could come. When it came it was the "prince of the power of the air, the spirit working in the children of disobedience." The law of the cross demanded the sowing of the spirit of life in the soil of humanity; and the only kind of humanity that could be found was the mortal humanity, "the children of disobedience."

A Champion of Dr. Teed.

DENVER, Jan. 12. To the Editor of The Post:

The Rev. David Utter might find it a difficult task to meet Dr. Teed, the only really scientific man in the world, in open debate. Not all educated people capable of understanding astronomy are able to see the "absurdity of Dr. Teed's theories," but some are quite able to see the absurdities of the Copernican system, and would like to see Dr. Teed meet a few of the wise, socalled, scientific men, and let him have a chance to teach them something they do not know. A Koreshan.

(1) What has Koreshanity to say with reference to Pantheism? (2) Were there ever any people who really worshiped the sun, or images?—M. C., St. Louis, Mo.

(1) Koreshanity is the true Pantheism. The various forms of modern speculation under the name of Pantheism sustain no relation to the original theism of Pan. The difficulty with modern pantheists is that they undertake to connect the existence and life of God directly with alchemical substances, making God the soul of the physical universe. This view excludes the idea of an ultra-cosmical deity, but places him in the mineral kingdom instead of in the human. A pan is a hollow vessel. The word pan means all, the all-environ. Pan was the great hollow god, and the true Pantheism is the science of cellular life, the theism founded on the fact that the earth is a cell, its walls environing all there is. (2) Sun worshipers did not worship the sun in the physical heavens. They pointed to it only as a symbol of the great luminary of the anthropostic world. No people in the world ever worshiped images any more than the church worships the crucifix or pictures of Bible characters. The stories about oriental religions and customs are gotten up to fool the children of the Sunday schools; money for missions is the next thing.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

The new Sword reaches us regularly every week now, but the first number never reached us. Whether the postmaster made a mistake and gave it to some one else, or whether it was not sent, I do not know, but I must have it, as I cannot afford to lose a single number. As Uncle Tom said about Geo. Shelby's letter, the articles should be framed. If the people would listen and give you a respectful hearing and investigate the facts of a science that is founded on a demonstrated truth, and be less prejudiced, they would soon see their error. But in their ignorance they would rather listen to some cunning humdeliberately who steals one's else ideas, and afterwards palms them off as his own. In this electric age when everything progresses with lightning rapidity and accelerated motion, the teachings of Koresh will be accepted in a short time by all thinking people.—Mrs. A. W., Hayti, S. Dak.

Having come in contact with the doctrines of Dr. Cyrus R. Teed (Koresh) through an article in the Chicago Record, setting forth the survey on the Gulf coast of Florida by the Geodetic Staff, and desiring to know more of the science of Koreshan Astronomy, I bought some pamphlets on that question; also subscribed for The Flaming Sword, and find it very interesting, and so different from other papers. It charms the mind and fills it with new ideas.—F. M. R., Monroe, Wis.

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

We know how you feel when you get a good mail—a mail that takes away your discouragements for a time. The anticipations of a day or a week may be centered upon the receipt of a publication you like; if it fails to come you feel a disappointment, as much as if a friend had failed to keep his word. THE FLAMING Sword is your friend, and it visits thousands of homes. We look out over the world as our mail goes out in large sacks, and endeavor to imagine each paper being received in so many homes. It greets all with a pleasant and bright face, and when it comes to you it likes to receive attention and hearty welcome! You cannot be interested in our work of publication without endeavoring to imagine our surroundings; you try to peep into our office to see the busy hands and minds preparing the matter which you read. Many of you may never see us, but you like what we do and what we say. The thoughts we thus send out constitute a tie between your minds and ours. THE FLAMING Sword is concerned in all of humanity's affairs and cares. We have the satisfaction of knowing what effect it has; silently you feel vibrations of sympathy and interest. We feel these silent responses: many of you make more definite expressions in words. We are thankful for these, for they bring you into closer touch with us and us with you. We exchange substance, for such is thought. Even now you feel an impression concerning us you had not before received. Our work goes on in this way; it's a mental conquest; it can be assisted by your mental and other effort; but there is not a power in the world that can stop it.

"The Irony of Fate" is a prophetic reflex from the Klondike gold fields, portraying the fate of riches, by Lucie Page Borden. Our readers will appreciate this story from the pen of this excellent writer, whose articles are welcomed in the homes visited by THE FLAMING SWORD. Klondike and THE FLAMING SWORD are connected in this way. We would suggest another way also, just for pastime: THE FLAMING SWORD is red-hot; it has a warmth about it not felt in every paper. Imagine a copy of THE FLAMING SWORD suspended in a Klondike camp, with a score of miners warming their benumbed fingers in the heat of its burning and flaming steel! Not quite so literal as this in fact; but groups of searchers for golden nuggets of truth welcome, with outstretched hands, its radiant beams as a protection against the effect of a cold, stern, and heartless world!

The time was and is now when men feel no sympathy for any one who does not entertain the same opinions they do. Humanity generally is afflicted with this Phase of inhumanity. It is no credit to you if you like only those who like you. Our love for humanity is broader than that-our circle of sympathy must be as wide as the world and must embrace those who do not like us and who do not agree with what we teach; a few do not like our work; this is because they do not understand it. We have made a study of humanity, and understand its needs. You forget your petty charges against your neighbor when a calamity befalls him. This is the way we feel about the world at large. Are we not, then, in better position to help your enemy than you? Do you not believe that this attitude toward humanity is truly humanitarian?

THE FLAMING SWORD contains a variety of matter this week, and we know you will be pleased with it. Look over the head-lines, and the subjects will be surprising to new readers. Do not fail to read "A Prophetic glimpse of the New Humanity," and the "Discovery of the Secret of Not Dying," by Koresh. "Scintillations of Brilliant Star Points" will be welcomed as light from an effulgent constellation.

"The Scientific Victory Over Gravity" will be read with interest, because of its style, its subject, and startling points. Its scientific features are worthy of study. The writer is Astro-Vigilus, who has promised to contribute other short stories occasionally. Who is Astro-Vigilus?

Compare The Flaming Sword with other journals, and see if they interest you as much as ours. If they do not, they are not worth as much to you as The Sword, no matter what may be their size.

Thoughts From the Reform Press.

How Tramps are Made.

Do you know how tramps are made? The machine has invaded every department. The cheapest commodity in the ment. The cheapest commodity in the world is human flesh and blood. The man loses his job; he cannot secure work; he kisses wife and children goodbye and leaves. The saddest message a man can take to his wife these days is that he has lost his job. This man goes from city to city and fails; he meets countless others like himself; he becomes discouraged; he loses self-respect; he is ashamed to send the same old message home. He is a tramp, and a tramp because he cannot help it. In Chicago last winter there were 50,000 unemployed men and 8,000 families on the verge of starvation. What an indictment verge of starvation. of the system! Millions of others live and work by permission, and at such wages as the corporation sees at to give them. he protests, he is discharged and blacklisted and pursued everywhere he goes, until he goes out the back door of suicide. -EUGENE V. DEBS.

Judicial Discrimination.

We suppose that the purpose of judicial discrimination is to loster a spirit of enterprise to supply an incentive. The chicken thief got six years because he stole so little, the banker got one year because he didn't steal more. If he had stolen a railroad or organized a bond syndicate he would have been called a Napoleon of Finance, received the adulations of the daily press and been sent to the senate of the United States.—

Free Lance, Burnside, Ky.

The disproportionate, unjust, and unreasonable exactions of the saloon system, because forsooth it pays a public revenue, would, to every one who will consider the same and act up to their convictions, be quite sufficient to cause such a tide of righteous indignation as would sweep the hellish business from the faceof the earth.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

The Science of the Solar Vortex and Evolution of Light.

WRITTEN FOR THE DENVER EVENING POST.

THE government of the United States was instituted and is perpetuated by a people who pride themselves upon possessing the spirit of liberty and justice, a justice in which is included the right of the individual to a fair trial before an unbiased court, at whose bar no verdict is rendered until the defense as well as the complaint has had its hearing. In view of this fact, and the further one that the press is considered the guardian of human liberty and the avenger of injustice, we again presume the audacity of trespassing upon your columns.

The Rev. Dr. Utter has taken up the cudgel for a Mrs. Wright, a disgruntled and eliminated member of the Koreshan Home, an aggregation of many scholarly men and women, a number of whom are graduates of various colleges of the United States. It is possible that the philanthropic gentleman prefers a discussion through the press, where thousands may contrast the scientific utterances of his opponent with the puerile attacks of a prejudiced persecutor under the disguise of an ordained shepherd, to an open discussion in a public hall where at best but few might receive a less-enduring impression.

The Rev. Utter, despite his assertion to the contrary, has thrown down the gauntlet. He has made an unwarrantable attack upon an institution of which he knows absolutely nothing, and we will meet that attack providing there is wind enough in the sails of the Denver Post to transport our guns. He will continue to roar through your columns, or we will silence his small ordnance with our greater calibre.

The Rev. Mr. Utter set a lamp in the middle of a roomand placed a book behind it. Lo, and behold, there was light enough in the room to read by, even behind the book, and the rational inclination of the æsthetic lady was overwhelmed and delighted with the discovery. Her aspirations for scientific knowledge were supplied from the superabundant pabulum of the profound reasoner, the higher critic, and the gauzy delusions of "Teed's" followers were dissipated into the thinnest kind of ether. Your readers, Mr. Editor, have been regaled from time to time with fragmentary and prejudicial reports of Koresh and his "pretensions;" will you permit them to contrast our claims, clothed with the authority of the Koreshan stamp?

The world (the universe) is a concave shell.—not empty, however, in contrast with the brains of some of our defamers,—within which are included a number of atmospheres, holding at the center a stellar nucleus. There are three distinct atmospheres, besides the solar sphere immediately surrounding the electro-magnetic center above noticed. This shell is a complex environment composed of seven outer metallic lamina or plates, the outermost of which is a solid gold structure. Superimposed above the metallic plates are five mineral strata, and above this are the geologic strata and the earth-and-water-surface of the earth. Immediately above our atmosphere of oxygen and nitrogen is an atmosphere of hydrogen, and above that, one of aboron.

The astral neuclus, the star center of this system, is purely electro-magnetic. It has a light and a dark side, the light side of which could make no impression of light upon any natural eye, because it is not natural light. It does, however, pass through strata of atmosphere and energy, focalizing upon the point of contiguity of our atmosphere and the sea of hydrogen beyond, producing a natural combustion of these gases. A vortex is thus produced, into which rushes the so called luminous ether of the pseudo-scientists, the free energy resulting from the electro-magnetic correlation of the astral center with the mineral strata of the cosmic whole. The combination of these gases with the energy ("ether," substance) thus described, creates and perpetually feeds the projected sun, whence we derive our natural light. While this projected sun, moving upon the plane of union of our atmosphere with the hydrogen above us, radiates its energies into the space above as well as into and through our atmosphere, it only lights our atmosphere with a vibration suited to the visual possibilities of the natural eye. Were it possible for the natural organs of vision to occupy the sphere of that more subtle radiation, the eye there would be utterly blind, and the person in total darkness because of the want of adaptation of the intense vibration to the gross construction of our optical organs.

The oscillation of our atmosphere is of such a character, that no light is created of sufficient grossness to suscept the eye until within the sphere of the nitrogen which only occupies the lowermost portion of the common air. This fact is demonstrated by experiments made at various altitudes, wherein it has been ascertained that the solar spectra diminish in proportion to the altitude tested. We place this statement of fact in contrast with the hypnotic splendor of the higher critic's luminous experiment with the lamp in the middle of a room, with the book behind it, giving light to all within the room.

While we are not fascinated with the brilliancy of the reverend gentleman's experiment, we are willing to confess it is on a par with the experiments of pseudoscientists for the demonstration of their claims, all of which can be met with equal facility and ease. Allow us also to contrast these positive assertions with some of the statements of so called modern "science." Professor Newcomb, one of the first astronomers of the world, says he does not know the source of the sun's supply, nor the character of its energies. He does not know whether the energies radiating into space continue to radiate or return to the sun. This is not science, but poor guessing. Lord Kelvin, one of the foremost and noted scientists of the age, utterly repudiates the Newtonian theory of gravity, and says it never has been proven, and that he does not know the law by which the motions of the universe are governed. He favors the vortical theory, but he admits his conclusions to be hypothetical. "I accept neither theory; I accept no theory of gravitation. Present science has no right to attempt to explain gravitation. We know nothing about it; we simply know nothing about it." This is not science. Science is knowledge. Guesswork is not knowledge. The "scientific" theories are changing every day, and without improvement. CYRUS R. TEED, Founder of the Koreshan Unity here to remain and rapidly to develop.

Sword Thrusts.

COMMUNISM will become a national and an international element of economy. The millions of wealth accumulated through the corporate piracy of the greedy, as the products of human industry are preyed upon and the laborer is robbed of his hire, will, under the judgment and justice of the wise and merciful Dispenser, find an equitable distribution, not through a riotous revolution, but in the descent of the New Jerusalem, the spiritual power of the Almighty God operating as did the Holy Spirit, when in the inauguration of the Lord's church, thousands were induced to repent and bring their riches into the household of faith.

The modern church teaches, in the face of the mortal condition of men, that the Christian has immortal life. This would be true so far as the Christian is concerned, but there are no Christians. Man is mortal—spirit, soul, and body. Any doctrine contrary to this is in opposition to the Spirit of Truth. For the church to teach that man is immortal while yet in his sins, is a stultification of purpose and possibility. If a man thinks he is saved while yet subject to mortal decay, he can put forth no effort toward salvation.

We are under the accusation of being too severe on the modern church. We confess that we are severe. We know the church. Its teachings are false. Its charges against the Supreme Being in educating the world that God is more inhuman than any diabolic tyrant—sending infants to hell that they may suffer eternal torment, as the modern church has done, is more than any reasonable mind can endure complacently. "Oh," you say. "but the church does not teach that now." It is in the creed. "But," you say, "it cuts no figure in Christian belief now. The church has outgrown that relic of the dark ages." Then why not eliminate it?

Why did not communism continue to flourish in the world as the church augmented in numbers and power? Because the process of regeneration (re-production), by which the Lord and his church should bring forth the fruits of the resurrection at the end of the age, provided that the church should be planted in the pagan world for its regeneration. The declension of the church was one of the Apostolic predictions to be fulfilled before the end, when the earth should be again renewed.

How can men be saved if there be no Christians, and those who succumb to death do not enter heaven? The spirit-world, like this world, has its good and bad entities. Some are striving for righteousness both here and there. There is a line of progress both here and in the world of spirit. The processes of salvation are progressing both in the physical and in the invisible world.

Digitized by GOOGIG

Co-operative communism will never be instituted through processes of evolution irrespective of the operation of the Spirit of Truth. The Lord Jesus was the germ of God's kingdom to be established in the earth. That germ was the kingdom in its least form. The kingdom in its greatest form is merely that germ unfolded in humanity, and every man belonging to the true order will recognize the Godhood of that man.

Koreshanity is an organized system of communism and co-operation. Its purpose is the re-establishment of the divine order, when in the possession of communistic and co-operative wealth, all who belong to the common body shall enjoy the fruits of the economization of industry and its products.

"See thou owest no man," is the injunction of the rich man, as he attaches his commercial leeches where the poverty of "his brother in Christ," whom he degrades, exposes a part where the issue-blood can be absorbed to satiate his implacable and voracious maw.

"Pay your debts," is the cry of the avaricious cormorant of the commercial world; and we find the Shylock of human greed, clothed in the modest garb of the religion of God's Christ, in its unconscious adulteration with Paganism, demanding the pound of flesh.

The church is rotten in its pollution with paganism and its methods, and the cry of the debauched and poverty-stricken within the sheep-fold of the modern self-appointed shepherds who fleece the sheep, will be heard by the Mighty God of Sabaoth.

The modern doctrine, that faith saves a man without a strict conformity to the commandments of God, is a deadly upas. So long as man is subject to mortality, so long is he in bondage to satan, and so long he is not a regenerated man.

Why does the church or any portion of it retain a doctrine at which the common thought revolts? Merely because a large part of the church is deep dyed in the doctrine of infant damnation, as prescribed by its religious expositors.

The Lord instituted communism for his children. As many as received the Holy Ghost went and sold their possessions and brought the price of the things they sold and laid it at the apostles' feet, and they had all things common.

The seed planted in the beginning of the Christain age embodied the element of communism. The fruit culminating at the end of the age will necessarily embrace communism as a fundamental principle of its organic force.

Death and hell pervade the church, and the professed followers of the Lord are as quick to resort to the commercial thumbscrews of injustice as the vilest pagan of "barbaric" or so called civilized times.

Modern Christianity is not the original Christianity instituted by the Lord. It is corrupt through the adoption of paganism. It is corrupt in doctrine, in purpose, and in life.

A name among the followers and in the "household of Christ," is no immunity from the legal resorts of the money-broker and the accumulator of riches in the same household.

Hell is in every sphere of the spirit-world, as it is in every sphere of the material, until truth and good are incorporated in one common bond of immortality.

While men are passing through the experiences of re-embodiment, they are passing through the conditions of the hells.

CONTRIBUTORS' AND EDITOR'S DEPARTMENTS.

Celebration of the Closing of the Century.

BY PROF. U. G. MORROW.

NATIONS celebrate the past; halos of dead heroes encircle present institutions; the result is national illusion. The real spirit of a modern nation is not manifest in the celebration of past events; shadows of things which have been are not as tangible as things that are. When the people join in a celebration they extol their own supposed virtues and forget their vices. When thousands of England's poor forgot their own adversities in the enthusiasm of the Queen's jubilee, who were left to be concerned about their poverty? When the cannon booms on the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, does it voice the real sentiment of millions who have become impoverished through the manipulations of the millionaire? Is the aristocracy of America filled with the spirit of independence?

The past has become the present; if it has rendered to us its tribute, it has also inflicted its penalties. We inherit its virtues and its vices. We owe nothing to the past; in the present we possess its fruitage, by virtue of which we are indebted to the future; to the future alone can we be responsible, and we must pay in coin of actual value. The character of a people cannot be seen in the manner in which they mock the past; it is revealed alone in the conditions of the present. The national mind is summed up in the men who reach the climax of national power.

The old century is nearing its close; its boasted achievements are the expression of the spirit of the age. It is more appropriate to celebrate the great divide between the ages, than the less important events of the past,—more appropriate to endow a man of the present momentous times with the real spirit of competism than to sanctify the dead. Let the popular unmeaning reviews of the past deeds be relegated to the past, and let the world celebrate the close of the old century by an expression of the controlling spirit of all modern life; let the world pay tribute of real self to the character of a man representing the sensual mind and heart of modern times, and thus write upon the scroll of human history the records of the most appropriate celebration of the age!

When the morning of the great Pan-American celebration came, the people rose at the appointed early hour before the dawn, to observe the display of the message of the world's monarch upon the clouds of heaven by a powerful search light. The work of the preparation for this great event had been in progress for months of time, and the sky message this morning was the signal for the beginning of the greatest activities the world has ever seen. The full round disc upon the clouds above, embraced the following words, written in fire:

YORKOPOLIS, December 31, 1900. Year of Plutoeracy, 15.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE WORLD:

The world's great day is here; we end the century with increased activity in all lines of human relations. Years ago we discovered that we possessed no virtues. Greater honor is due to a people who can live in chaos and protect themselves from the dangers of the vicious, than to live in the weakness of innocence. Today the great test of strength is to be applied; we give to all classes of men the opportunity of doing exactly what they desire, without restraint. There is no need of hypocrisy; the race can now become acquainted on the basis of what they really are—and this will be demonstrated before the close of the day. We have learned that the true chaos is a state of individual liberty, and we have reduced the work of creation of such a chaos to a marvelous system, which now goes into effect. Past generations have been too slow; today we reach the point of acceleration. The rewards of the age are for those who survive its ordeals.

Your Royal Monarch, Pluto Americana.

When the great disc of light faded away, a discharge of thousands of rockets filled the air with a beautiful glare as from the falling of a million meteors; this was the people's response to the message of the monarch! Soon was heard the rumbling of the cars, whose speed was doubled, and the people from towns and rural districts poured into the great city by the thousands. Carloads of newspapers were sold on the streets, giving reports of preparation for the great day, from all parts of the world. Humanity everywhere was alive as never before—every man against his neighbor, and who could tell what the end of the day would bring?

When the sun rose, its horizontal rays were reflected from the dome of the golden mansion of the emperor of the world; they also tipped the heads of thousands of the poor upon the streets. The brilliant orb awoke in splendor to look down upon the gulf between serf and master; there should be no clouds today, but those of human creation; and these began to materialize when the surging crowds were greeted with the shouts of the police to "Stand back!" Yes, the corporations must run their cars—but if they run they must run over human beings; thousands were picked up, crushed beneath the wheels of the electric juggernaut!

From the evidences of the beginning, it was to be a day of riot. Amid scenes of turbulence uniformed bodies of the great brotherhoods of labor marched through the streets on the way to convention halls; if they meet today they must face the armed militia; but perhaps the strength of the unions exceeds that of the national guardsmen. Extras of the great dailies map out the movements of the brotherhoods the world over; it is evident that the day is to be a day of battle between capital and labor; it had already begun, and human life was being crushed out on the streets. The poor demanded bread and were refused; in revenge they fired the buildings they entered, and engines dashed through the throngs leaving tracks of blood behind them

When evening came, the streets were strewn with the dead and dying. The great search-light shot up its perpendicular rays from the golden mansion, and threw a disc of light against the hovering smoke of conflagration and explosion, bearing the words, "The Feast of Pluto Americana." Like a great moon in the sky, it reflected its weird light upon the marching masses, as well as upon the great circle of soldiers surrounding the mansion to protect it from the fell power of the destroyer. Under the rim of the great disc were the advancing sections of the great brotherhood; they had overcome the guards during the day, and had met, resolving to overthrow the despotism of the golden mansion.

The city was burning, and the poor were succumbing to the excitement, chaos, and confusion; danger and death stalked the streets. Under the golden dome, in the center of the circle of tumult and war, the great modern Nero dined in peace, with a thousand millionaires. With a sudden flash the disc of light went out, to suddenly reappear with the words "MENE! TEKEL!" great voice rose from half a million throats, for they knew that the underground passage to the center of the mansion had been completed; the search-light operator had been overcome, and a new plate inserted behind the lens. Simultaneously, a great dynamite charge was placed beneath the building. The monarch, with a score of favorites, ascended to the top of the dome to view the lurid glare of the burning city. They chuckled with demoniacal satisfaction; the red flames cast upon their faces the light of death. The building rose and parted with the roar of a tremendous explosion. The dynamite charge had been touched, and Plutocracy was no more! It was the feast of Belshazzar, and Babylon is fallen!

The men who have cornered the gold and who supposed they had the monetary problem about solved to their satisfaction, have run up against another snag. Between the discoveries in the Klondyke and the transmutationists, among whom we designate the modern Tubal Cain (Mr. Brice) of Chicago, the gold owners are becoming alarmed. Already a movement is inaugurated,—so it is reported,—originating in New Jersey, for the regulation of gold coinage. What does this mean? Merely this,—a surplus of gold bullion will render the metal cheap, therefore to maintain the present relation of gold (held by the usurers) to the market, gold is made valuable by the endorsement of the Government. So much of it as the law permits to be stamped can still be held for speculation; that which is not stamped is cheap in proportion to its quantity. Already the gold men observe that the discovery and creation of gold in great quantities endanger the stability of the money standard. The stamp on gold which is the recognition of its monetary valuation, produces the same effect that it does on silver.

The Anti-Semitic Movement.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

URRENT history is affording a striking example of the depth and intensity of race prejudice and the disastrous effects of its indulgence. During the past fortnight, the civilized world has been electrified by an astonishing instance of what the scientists call "reversion to type." Nature is always on the alert to thwart the efforts of man's intelligence, hence the most highly finished and exotic products of cultivation and cross fertilization in the animal and vegetable kingdoms show an exasperating tendency to degenerate and revert to primitive forms, on the slightest relaxation of vigilance. How else account for the amazing spectacle of the august legislative assembly of the most highly polished nation on earth, suddenly transformed into a frenzied mob of howling, shricking lunatics? The suave and dignified deputies with the eyes of the world upon them, forgetful of "noblesse oblige," the demands of French culture and the restraints of "savoir faire," hurled ink bottles and flew at each other's throats like bull-dogs. Truly, it was a noble sight! And when this nineteenth century gladiatorial combat was ended, the chamber was strewn with the torn garments of the antagonists as in ancient times, the floor of the arena was strewn with the limbs of dismembered combatants; the cravats picked up on the scene of action numbered, it is said, no less than one hundred and twenty-five. The suggestion is made, en passant, that the belligerent deputies would do well in future to discard altogether the conventional costume of polite society and adopt some mode of attire better suited to the exigencies of a prize fight.

Inquiry reveals the fact that this startling outbreak of primitive instincts and passions in the famous capitol, long recognized as the modern centre of all that pertains to æsthetic culture, was directly occasioned because one member of a despised and hated race ventured to arraign the government for remissness in the administration of justice toward a compatriot upon whom signal punishment has been inflicted for a crime that subsequent developments go to prove he never committed. In the empire of Lilliput, Gulliver found the image of Justice in their courts of judicature formed with six eyes, two before, as many behind, and on each side one, to signify circumspection; with a bag of gold open in her right hand and a sword sheathed in her left, to show she is more disposed to reward than to punish. It is such a conception of justice with eyes wide open, in place of the blindfolded goddess that M. Zola is courageously endeavoring to set up in the French Republic. A month ago, Emile Zola was known chiefly as an indefatigable and periodically defeated candidate for the French Academy, and the originator of a style of fiction once characterized by Henry James in the following negative fashion: "This (form of naturalism) is not bad; it is not wicked; it is simply nasty." But, by his enthusiastic and disinterested championship of an unpopular cause, Zola, who is soon to be tried for his daring plea in behalf of Dreyfus, is attracting the admiration and attention of the world. In spite of the mad fury of the anti-Semitic party that cries "conspuez Zola" and proposes to kill Dreyfus before he can be re-tried, the great naturalist may yet, by some revulsion of popular sentiment, win a triumphal entry into the sacred precincts of the French Academy and sit down among the forty immortals, crowned with roses like the Patriarch of Ferney.

Although no doubt very well convinced, when the question was raised four months ago, that a mistake was made in the terrible judgment meted out to Dreyfus, powerful motives of interest and policy restrained the French Government from candid acknowledgment and reparation of the error. The condemned man was never popular with the army, and moreover, he was a German Jew by birth. Was it advisable for the sake of tardy justice to a Jew, to discredit a French ministry, affront the army and run the risk of plunging the country into anarchy?

Then came Zola's letter which threw all France into a state of hysterical excitement, and like a lighted torch kindled the inflammable elements of race prejudice, party strife and factional hatred. It seems likely to be the signal for a general uprising against the Jews all over the world. The feeling against them keeps its force in the face of progress and enlightenment. Society is about as ready to spit upon the Jewish gabardine as in mediæval times when Chaucer told the legend of little Hugh of Lincoln, and Jews were currently represented as monsters and assassins lying in wait to shamefully entreat and murder Christian children.

In a certain book called the Bible, whose teachings in the old days prior to the researches of the higher criticism, were supposed to be fraught with truths binding upon the hearts and consciences of men, there is a statement to the effect that God made of one blood all the nations of the earth. In view of the common origin and destiny of mankind, what can be more childish and puerile than race prejudice which burns and destroys the property, loots the homes and takes the lives of innocent and unoffending persons simply because they chance to belong to a certain nationality? The anti-Semitic movement with its cries of "Death to the Jews!" "Spit on Zola!" and the riots in France, Algiers and other places, are a strange exemplification of the spirit of universal brotherhood that we are told is flooding the world prior to the advent of a new social era. No doubt through race infiltration the Anglo-Saxon stock as originally compounded, contained a large admixture of Jewish blood, but parvenus are notoriously anxious to forget their origin, a fact which may explain the apathetic attitude of the Anglo-Saxon nations toward the outrages heaped upon the Semitic population in so many European countries.

But there is another element that conspires at the present time to intensify existing prejudices. The Jews have made themselves the financial masters of the world, and the persecution waged against them is secretly instigated by jealousy and cupidity.

Swift furthermore relates that Gulliver found it customary among the Lilliputians to quadruply recompense an accused person whose innocence had been established, for the loss of his time, the dangers incurred, the hardships of his imprisonment and the charges of his defense, while his accusers were immediately put to death. Justice demands ample recompense and the rehabilitation of Dreyfus so soon as the vindication of his innocence is complete.

The Discovery of Fallacy.

Looking Backward at the Nineteenth Century From the Scientific Standpoint of the Golden Age.

BY ASTRO-VIGILUS.

44T HAVE made the remarkable discovery that there are people living on the outside of the earth, and I am founding the science of a gigantic solar system outside of this cell of ours. I am confident that this discovery will eclipse all other discoveries ever made in the history of man! I am ready to disclose to you how this discovery was made."

This startling announcement was made by the world-renowned scientist, Sanguina. I did not doubt that great ability and skill had been displayed in his work in the past, but I did not believe his declaration. Crossing the room to where he was sitting, I asked for a drop of blood from his arm, which I procured by means of a small hypodermic pump, and placed the drop in the micro-spectroscope, and noted the results.

My work as professor of Corpuscology in the department of Astro-anthroposophy, in the great University of Andromeda, in the city of Arteria, was that of specific analysis of blood corpuscles, and their relation to mental entities, the stars of the mind, of which the corpuscles are forms of expression. It was a specific analy sis of life itself, or that quality of natural life which exists in this, the seventh division of the golden age. The corpuscles of the human system correspond to individuals in humanity, each one having a particular star in the physical heavens, which he controls. Sanguina had long been my associate in the Laboratory of Astrophysiology. He was a man that I very much admired in many ways, but we were of different temperaments. I was disposed to be analytic, prospective, and prophetic, while he was synthetic in his methods of reasoning, reflective and retrospective. This difference in character of mind and consequent methods of investigation, led to the most remarkable phenomena I ever witnessed. Humanity today is perfect; and to see my associate aging in the world of life, led me to analyze the quality of life involved in the cells of his body.

"I see in this group of corpuscles, activities which indicate that there is a war of occult forces with the forces of your rational mind," I said, turning to him after completing my analysis. "I note also by considering the astro-physical bearings, that your star is in a retrogressive constellation, a fact I have never before noticed. The star is associated with a dark star. Light and darkness alternately control your will. What, sir, is the cause of this? Your blood contains the seeds of

He jumped from his chair, exclaiming with wild gesticulations, "What does it matter to you? It is enough for you to know that the power I have involved is sufficient to overthrow the last vestige of truth! You mark my words, the time will come when truth will be unknown, and that what I have discovered will control the world!"

I pressed him into his seat again, and placing my hand across his brow, I assuaged his excitement. "Control yourself," I said, "and tell me all. I am able and willing to help you." He became calm and rational, and I finally succeeded in inducing him to make the following confession:

"A ray of light from a primary center of combustion is white; all the vibrations are in unison and in the same direction. Reflected through a prism, it is resolved into seven primary colors-violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange, and red. By reversing the process, light may be recomposed into the quality of the original ray. Truth as it existed in the original system of Koresh, was synthetical, in a state of absoluteness and unity. Its progress in actual existence has been through the various stages of analysis. Every grand division of time has seven divisions; an age is a spectrum of truth thrown upon the screen of time through the prism of human evolution. The Golden Age is divided into the manifestation of seven qualities of life, each of which has been subjected to the analysis of our scientists through the seven pedimental branches of humanity.

'My desire has been for years to reverse the process -to take the seven analyses and trace them back to a synthesis—to arrive at the original concept as it existed in the past, particularly on lines of the science of astrophysiology. We have looked into the first division of the physical heavens—we have studied the stars and their relation to humanity. We are living at a time in the age which corresponds to the manifestation of the opposite of this truth in the last division of the preceding Iron Age. Why may I not know the past? A curiosity seized me—I must look into the great museum of cycles, even though I pay the penalty and an enormous price of admission! I have watched the progress of your work for years; and I have always seen the reflexed antithesis of all your scientific conclusions. It had occured to me that if I should apply the law of antithesis. I should be able to discover the forms of fallacy that existed prior to the discovery of Truth. Daily I sought mental conditions by observations of the tourmaline, and the great crystal discovered in the Andes. In them I saw the converging lines of truth, reaching back to the focal point, and from thence I reached my conclusions concerning the fallacies of the dark period. By noting the time astrologically and chronologically, I found that I had discovered the mental archives of what was called the 'nineteenth century.' It was at the time of the great Annual Feast of Mercury, one year ago, that I first saw the darkness of the past. It was sensational, and I seemed to revel in excitement. The view first took on the aspect of a storm-cloud; I saw the great revolution at the end of the Iron Age, and the world's social condition under the reign of competism, an imperfect humanity toiling in subjection to the power of a false money system. These views were horrifying to me, and repulsive. Can it be that humanity was ever in such a condition? I was glad when I saw the people rise in their might and throw it off!

"Then further back in my perspective, I saw the science of the dark period-a system that taught that man lived upon the exterior surface of the earth, with the planets and stars millions of miles distant. The sun was a great ball hundreds of thousands of miles in diameter—a giant orb swinging in infinite space. The scientists of that time I found to be in ignorance of any laws by which such a world could be maintained. Could I not find the laws? Shall I not succeed where they failed? The mental vibrations in this age of the world are not of that quality capable of enduring the intense vibrations of truth in its wholeness, and I soon fell into an abnormal mental vortex. When that came there was a whirling of worlds, and the scenes seemed real. It seemed to me to be a most sublime conception! A creation without end as to space, if it were possible, would surpass contemplation! This I at times knew was the opposite of truth, but it had a fascination,—a charm about it that I could not resist. There seemed to be a monotony in the world—the long period of universal day in contrast with the alternations of light and darkness on a whirling globe did not seem as it did formerly. I loved to see the setting sun, the intervening twilight, and the growing shades of night. Did I think it was true? I cannot tell, but I was in its

"The truth that God is man is demonstrated by the actual evolution of life itself. I took its antithet and looked into the crystal and tourmaline. I saw the conception of the dark age, that God was the soul of the gigantic universe, a God that is infinite, omnipresent, omnipotent; he was the power that moved the giant orbs in their courses, a power that filled the worlds among the distant stars of the Milky Way and the nebule beyond. It was magnificent and sublime! Did I believe it was true? I could not doubt the science of Cellular life—I knew it to be true. I turned from the crystal, resolving to forget the views, and for several weeks I engaged my attention more devotedly to my work; but the feeling of monotony would seize me, and I could only find diversion and a stimulus by reviewing the fallacious concepts of the past. I had become intoxicated by fallacy. I was impressed to make the claim to a great discovery. I found that I might harmonize known science with my new concepts! If there were such a universe on the outside, there was such a deity to control it! Was knowledge to increase beyond the science of the cell in which we live? Why should it not be in the order of the evolution of science?

"I was subjected continually to this temptation. When I consider the source of what I saw, I knew there was nothing in the crystal; I knew there were no such conditions of humanity in the world today that I could see, nor no such a universe manifest to my tangible senses, and I knew that we were living in a cell, and that this is the Golden Age, the life of which is evolved from the discovery of Life and Truth at the beginning. What had I seen? I had seen myself subjectively; or rather, there seemed to be two of me! I awoke to the discovery that the darkness, the fallacious concept, was in my own mind. I had reversed the order of thought and of reason, and through it had reached the conclusion that Truth was discovered by the law of antithesis, resulting in the convergence of entities of life in the mind of the discoverer. I had involved the entities of fallacy in accordance with the same law; and these entities have subdued the forces of truth in me. I know what I am! I have analyzed my own blood, and have seen my own star; in the crystal I have seen my own interior as the darkness of the past. You have revealed nothing to me; I have revealed myself to you! There is a war in my mind. Your analysis of my condition is correct. At times I feel impelled to proclaim myself as the greatest discoverer in all the history of the world! and even now I feel that I am being overpowered, as I have scores of times, when I shut myself up in my room, as you know! I am aging and withering, with immortal life and longevity about me! I am paying the penalty for a false ambition, and I have experienced a false satisfaction! But have I? my views may be right! I see the powers of the outside worlds closing around me; it is either to fight me or to be my defense, and I will live, by your help or by—by—usurpation of the throne of life itself!"

"It shall be by my help," I exclaimed, as I sprang

"It shall be by my help," I exclaimed, as I sprang toward him. With a powerful exertion of the will I sent to him a voltage of mental energy that pierced his physical environ. I saw the pitchy darkness closing about his ego. I laid hold on it, and expelled the rapidly contracting and formulating mass. It materialized at our feet, a cringing demon, the concretion of fallacy and of death, writhing in the agonies of defeat! I commanded it to depart; it began to dematerialize, and soon became a nebulous mass, out of which developed the fallacious forms of the ancient astronomy, pressing out and out into space with its revolving orbs, with the reflex impression of the corresponding god of infinite nothingness, until it was no more! Sanguina had begun to live again.

In the Editorial Perspective.

HE climax of modern theology has been reached in the declaration of the belief that all animals have souls and are immortal. This has been announced by Dr. Sprecher, of Cleveland, O., and a dozen Chicago preachers discuss the subject after him, with similar conclusions. They agree with him when he says: "I believe that the soul and life are special creations. I do not believe that God will destroy them. All animals are immortal." We have often heard of "cat heaven," and we think some of these ministers have found it! This conclusion is logical from their standpoint, for Solomon says there is no difference between man and the animal; and according to the recent interpretations they should not fail to perform funeral rites over the dead brother cats, hogs, lions, calves, etc. But wouldn't there be a lot mourning about the butcher-shops, though? If Dr. Sprecher wants to know anything about the animal kingdom, Koreshan Science can satisfy all his inquiries. The animal kingdom is one of the strata of existence through which life must evolve in its progression, as well as in its retrogression.

Neither men nor animals are immortal; "God alone has immortality." Theologians do not know what immortality is. We will give $100 to any orthodox clergyman in the world who will scientifically explain what immortality is, or even its antithetical condition, mortality,—the condition the clergymen are in now.

Spiritists are becoming exercised over the fact that the phenomena they have observed have really not revealed, but rather increased mystery. A writer in an exchange asks, "What are the so called spirits? Are they spirit, matter, ether, mind, force, fluidmas, or what else? The spirits apparently do not know, therefore we must find out ourselves. When we know what water is, or sand, or any other substance, then we also know what the spirits are; therefore, we can make this investigation outside of the seance room. For the present I want to insist on but one point of logic: That whatever the condition, organization, etc., of the 'spirits' may be, their bodies (for such they have) belong to the general worldstuff, whatever that be."

Surely, these are definite conclusions after fifty years of observation! Koreshan Science contains the solution to all mystery of spirit phenomena. The spirit world is in humanity, not outside of it, in the atmosphere or in ether. Every thought is a spiritual entity. Humanity is the pediment of all spiritual being, and constitutes the groundwork of all evolution and progress of spirit life.

The conclusion of Dr. Schlatter, who excised a human stomach at Zurich, is, that the stomach is not a vital organ, and that digestion takes place in other divisions of the alimentary canal. Koreshan Science teaches that there are seven divisions of the alimentary canal, having seven distinct functions of digestion and assimilation. These divisions correspond to the seven planetary divisions in the shell of the earth, where revolve the seven planetary discs. Koreshan Science reveals a complete system of correspondence existing between the human organism and the macrocosmic universe. The Bible frequently contains the expression, "the bowels of the earth." In Koreshan Science this has a scientific meaning; from the standpoint of the old astronomy it would be nonsense.

Would it not be a terrible thing if all the street-cars in the world were open cars during the winter? It would be outrageous! The people would rise in open rebellion and demand closed cars, with heating apparatus and plenty of fuel. Patrons use cars for the purpose of rapid transit, and do not ride on the cars all the time, but while they do they want it comfortable. What do you think of a corporation that will subject its motormen to merciless blasts of storm and sleet sixteen hours per day, in the northern cities? One half of the motormen and conductors in the great city of Chicago have to endure such hardships, while the street-car magnates pocket the millions, and refuse to protect their employees by vestibules.

We do not think much of Schenk's world-startling "secret" of sex, for the reason that his theory is founded on assumption. He knows nothing about the laws of mind, and does not claim to. He assumes that the greater number of blood corpuscles in the male or female has all there is to do with determining the gender of the offspring. He has made some very meagre experiments, and has arrived at some very crude conclusions; he has discovered nothing, and after all that has been said about his "discovery," he cannot scientifically explain a single law of generation, nor put his finger on a single key to the solution of the "mystery."

We see a few writers are endeavoring to explain the nature of Jesus the Christ, and to reveal the mystery of his conception and birth. They are about a quarter of a century behind the times; the problem has been solved. The difference between the genealogies in Matthew and Luke are irreconcilable on the basis of popular conceptions. Joseph was the father of Jesus; two lines of life focalized in Joseph, and another came through John the Baptist. The process of Jesus' conception and birth was that of parthenogenesis. Koreshan Science demonstrates the law by tangible evidences in the natural kingdoms of the world.

Dr. Heber Newton is desiring a new religion for the world but is not able to originate one for them, and yet he would like to dictate what kind of a religion it should be! He thinks it should be a general mixture of every "ism" under the sun. He takes kindly to the signs of the times as indicating that the world is looking for something new. No, it is not that; they are not looking for anything. They are amazed at the preachers, who are just awaking to the fact that they really do not know anything about anything, and are ashamed to confess it—they do not know what to do about it!

Students starved under the shadow of the Chicago University! President Harper says that "of the five deaths in the University during five years, three have been caused by starvation." Ambition, pride, and carelessness have conspired to cause the death of the students referred to, while millions of dollars are spent to maintain the institution. If these students had died in a Koreshan institution, it would have created a wave of sensation all over the country through the daily press. As it is, the faculty simply discuss the best means of preventing their students from graduating in the shroud!

The Illinois legislature has convened for seven weeks now, at an expense of about $60,000, and that august body has done nothing. Of course the voters can say nothing, for they put the members there, and nobody will listen to objections from anybody else, and so what is the use of saying anything about it? The usual cry is, Vote for better men! Where are they to be found? Best way out of it is not to vote for them at all. Some states can get along very well without a legislature—a quiet state of mind, for instance.

The doctors have made such a trouble about typhus germs in drinking water, and have scared whole cities into building filters at enormous expense, to strain out the microbes while they swallowed worse things. It is now decided by medical authority that typhus germs cannot live in water, but in the air. Next thing there will be a law compelling everybody who wants to keep well, to wear an air filter over his face!

It is said that McKinley's speech has strengthened the foreign market. Where is the effect first felt? Admitted to be "in the stock exchange, where it imparted increased buoyancy to all American securities." He has made more definite promises to the money power, that's all. There is nothing he could say of the workingman that would strengthen the markets of the world; his speeches are all for the other class!

It has been estimated that the people of Chicago eat 118 acres of pie every year. It might induce some interest now to make a calculation of the size of the box that would contain all the money wasted on Chicago officials in one year, and the size of the barrel that would go all around the whiskey consumed within the city limits in the same time.

When the heated controversy between astronomers concerning the conclusion of Prof. Young that he had overthrown Lockyer's theory about the composition of the sun, is settled, somebody will be left out in the cold. We can make it warm for anybody, though!

Dr. Smith, Franklin Station, N. J., claims to have dis covered the secret of longevity. He is one hundred and twenty-two years of age, and daily wades Lawrence brook, which he designates as the "fountain of youth."

Police were recently called into a London church to settle a difficulty between the clergyman and members on a subject of ritualism. Other prayers were of no avail; the police force was tangible and immediate!

Wm. K. Vanderbilt is now called the "new king of the railroad world." The wealth of millions pours into the vaults of such men. They are kings indeed; legislatures and senates bow down to them.

Geographers say that Chicago is in the state of Illinois, but on our map it is in the state of chaos!

Quiet Talks with the Editors of our Exchanges.

EVER NOTICE men who take no special interest in anything? It is very evident that such people do not think; they do not seem to have any definite ideas about anything-it is because they do not know how to reach conclusions. If everybody knew kow to reach conclusions—true conclusions, nobody would be ignorant! One of the first prerequisites to conclusions is interest. A man who is interested in a subject is having his attention directed to certain propositions concerning a cause or effect. The greater number of things a man is interested in, the greater his mental activity—the wider awake he is. Editors are always endeavoring to awaken people to the consideration of their ideas. They can clearly see that most people are not thinking as they should, because it is not shown in their daily life, for a man who thinks will always manifest some evidence of his mental activity. The man who is making the most rapid progress in lines of thought is considering the greatest number of things from the correct standpoint; he has consequently formed the greatest number of correct conclusions. Of course, you know what your experience has been in these lines-you are acquainted with your field of observation. You size up your readers from your standpoint. You feel able to criticise the conclusions of those who have given a subject less attention than you have. We are acquainted with our field of observation. Our critical attention is necessarily turned toward the reform press of the world. If it should be admitted that truth has actually been discovered, it would be right to conclude that the discoverer would know wherein he is right, and where others are wrong. It would resolve itself into a rational conclusion that others were left behind! We find difficulties and questions in the way of your theories which you have not answered, and have not claimed to be able to answer, and they are directly related to the subjects you are handling in your paper, too. You think about your conclusions sometimes, and you find yourselves confronted by difficulties you cannot overcome and by problems you cannot solve. It is because you do not know how to reach the correct conclusions. There is a science to it; when the key is discovered, correct conclusions are inevitable. We cover more ground than you do. The Koreshan System involves more than yours, and we can supply your missing links.

You would not think much of a man who would start to construct the largest building in the world without having his plans and specifications complete. Suppose a hundred men were to work on the same building, each having a different plan. What kind of a building would it be? The worst kind of a botch you can imagine! Some reform papers are hammering away without any definite plan—all working at the same thing, they think. Do you think that such workmen can make a good job of it? We will compare our plans with yours—we have the pattern of the universe. The universe is a fact, and everything in it is related to the whole. What is your plan founded on?

There is a great deal of difference between knowing a thing and guessing at it; there is a difference in the feeling of it, also. What would you think of a carpenter who guesses at his measurementscan he make the parts of his structure fit? Take two numbers for multiplication, for instance, and guess at the product. Now apply the principles of multiplication, and you get the correct result. A guess is never correct; only the true process of reasoning from a known premise will ultimate in the true conclusion. Every problem must be worked out just as definitely and absolutely, whether concerning social economy, science or religion.

Moses had to have a pattern by which to construct a tabernacle of skins for his people, and by which to form the code of laws he delivered to Israel. Do you not suppose that some extraordinary intelligence is required to frame the Constitution of the Government of the Golden Age? Are you able to do it?

THE FLAMING SWORD is like a diamond—it reflects light in all directions. Truth is the great diamond, and THE FLAMING SWORD pictures it in its various aspects.

The Flaming Sword and Scientific Reform.

THE FLAMING SWORD, whose publisher has discovered the science of immortality, lies before us. It is about time that some one was making such a discovery, for the subject has certainly been terribly bungled heretofore by almost everybody who has attempted to expound it. Those poor people who through the unhappy experience of starvation have thorougly learned the process of ethereal treatment of substantial appetite, will welcome the discoverer of scientific immortality. He explains the process as follows:

The conarium of the brain (the pineal gland) will be extirpated, thereby changing the circulation of the blood so that the blood will become white, with air circulating in the arteries and water in the veins, and instead of the serum of the ventricles passing down through the glandula vitainto the circular sinus and thence to the heart, there will be a suction of the vascular system from the body through the glandula vita upward.

The hunger-stricken will recognize this as a statement of their condition that they have long suspected, but did not know how to express. If anyone feels able to dispute the above, they are urged to try conclusions with the wielder of THE FLAMING Sword. A few might be disposed to flout the term of 'crank' at his head, but we like him because, aside from his dogmatism on the subject of immortality, he is a friend of scientific living for us here upon earth. It is significant that from all quarters there is coming the demand for reform of the existing wretched conditions of things. aim seems to be shaping in the minds of men of most diversified intellects. By whatever name they recognize this spirit, it is surely conclusive that such a spirit is here and doing its work of preparation for a great nati, O. change .- Self-Reliance, Cincin-

Can't Disprove Koreshan Astronomy.

THE FLAMING SWORD sends a marked article offering $1000, if we will publish a scientific refutation of the Koreshan Cosmogony. We are not a taker; but possibly some of our learned readers would like to pick up the glove and wad. If so, they can have the use of our columns. The Komaintains that our reshan Cosmogony earth is a hollow globe, and that all its inhabitants, with sun, moon, and stars, are on the inside of it; that the refraction of a concave atmosphere causes the sun to appear to sink below the horizon when it sets, and to rise above the horizon when it rises. While we do not subscribe to the theory, we have played solitaire by thinking on both sides of the subject for several years since we became acquainted with the theory, always with the result that the Koreshan advocate within us answered every argument the Copernican man advanced. We are not up in Astronomy. We can make some of the simplest calculations, such as eclipses, etc., but we confess that if Bro. Teed is wrong, we can't prove it. But let him tackle us on any article of our religious faith, and he will find us ready, orally, not through our paper, to give him a reason of the hope that is within us, and maintain At the same time we can extend the right hand of fellowship to Bro. Teed or any other person, whether saint or sinner.

—The Liberator, Norton, Kansas.

Enjoys the Reading of the Sword.

THE FLAMING SWORD is a first-class weekly. We enjoy the reading of it because its editor is a man of convictions, not because we believe in the very strange doctrine he advances. Bro. Teed, either the concare Earth or the Annular Theory is a humbug. What kind of a bug is the new Geodesy? Those who wish to know where they are, in this little universe, and how wofully man has been misled all along the centuries, can find out by sending one dollar to C. R. Teed, 6308 Wentworth ave., Chicago, Ill.—The Annular World, Pasadena, Cal.

Trying to Originate a New Cosmology.

Dr. Teed and Prof. Morrow claim that the earth is a hollow sphere, and that we live inside it on the concave surface. Earth's surface is concave in places. Bro, Ferguson thinks it is rather flat, with dips and swells. So it is longitudinally. Prof. Vail and the astronomers are sure it is a globe. Partly right, gentlemen; it is rounded latitudinally. Oblong, cylindrical, tapers some. Read the next Cyster and see why Earth is a thing of beauty and a joy forever.—The Cyster Deshler, O.

Interrogation Points and Encouraging Words.

A teacher of the people who, in his philosophic and scientific investigations and researches, finds old and sacred things false and erroneous, and persists in using terms and phrases that are looked upon as true and sacred, is doing so at the risk of truth and justice, and at the same time will fail to extricate those whom it was intended to help and succor. Truth needs no Scripture proof nor old effete terms and phrases to explain it. The ignorant and the superstitious will never comprehend nor understand it except in the same old way. If you will drop the Scriptures as a weapon of defense and stand squarely upon the eternal now, it would be better, and result in more lasting good and betterment to the race. As to the Koreshan System of Cosmogony, I do not affirm nor deny; I am more interested in getting people away from the curse of religion, so they can become thinkers, mentally free and independent.

When Lucie Page Borden, in her concluding remarks in last week's SWORD (January 21) says she "Would be ungrateful did she not render a tribute of praise to that party under whose auspices the long-desired era of national prosperity has dawned at last, that party dear to every true American heart, whose proudest boast must ever be that it never violated a principle, nor proved itself unfaithful to a pledge,"—I take it that she means the Republican party. If she means what she says, and these are her honest convictions, she must be as blind as a bat and as deaf as an adder, or is a bundle of steel-ribbed prejudices. Good Lord (if there is one) deliver us from such dense perverseness and bigotry! She ought to write for a plutocratic journal.—E. P. H., Brodhead, Wis.

We note what you say regarding the use of some words in the English language. In the first place, we know that language is legitimate and has developed in accordance with law, and we should feel somewhat bound if we were compelled to limit our vocabulary by the rejection of words that people do not understand, or words that have been in use a few thousand years! It is a fact that there is a sun; it is also a fact that the astronomers of the world do not understand anything about the sun. If we arrive at correct conclusions concerning the sun from a demonstrated premise, shall we abolish the name of the sun, because we have the knowledge of what it is? Shall we change the name of the earth because the scientists of the world entertain fallacious conceptions concerning it? In lines of astronomy, do you want to get away from the universe, because the world does not understand it? We should not endeavor to get away from the facts of our existence nor the facts concerning the cause or purpose of our existence, because fallacies are taught concerning them! Fallacy is fallacy by virtue of the fact that it is the opposite of truth; fallacy is truth perverted, and the battle between truth and fallacy is over the facts of existence. If we have truth and can demonstrate it, it is left for us to determine what methods shall be employed to convey that truth to the world; for how should it chance that those who do not comprehend the truth, should be able to point us to the correct methods? We use words according to their meaning; and their meaning can be determined scientifically. It is not our fault if the people have fallacious concepts concerning the meaning of the simplest words in the English language. We are not responsible for all the ghosts that have originated in the minds of the ignorant concerning the words God, creation, universe, life, death, matter, energy, and other forms of expres-There are hundreds of people who are able to comprehend the Koreshan System from our present methods of presentation. Is it because of your difficulty of comprehension, or that of others, that you make the suggestions as quoted above? (2) We cannot understand how you failed to see the point in Lucie Page Borden's article to which you refer. Please read the same again carefully, and then look at your quotation of it, and see if you have emphasized the proper words. Ever study rhetoric? There are such styles as irony, sarcasm, etc. The entire article to which you refer is full of irony and sarcasm. Had you been wider awake at the time you read it, you would have perceived that our excellent contributor is at least as wide awake as her critic! We think it would be a good thing if you would investigate our System further. After you understand what we are "driving at," can come in with criticisms with a little assurance of hitting the mark. You have made only random shots, so far! We are fair; our remarks are less caustic than your criticisms. Come again.

- (1) If the conjunction of the ecliptic and equator will do away with day and night, summer and winter, will there remain any natural time indicator? (2) Will this world cataclysm appear simultaneously with the coming of the sons of God, or not until the full restitution in a future fruition? (3) If the sun, moon, and stars disappear, on what signs and seasons will the calculation of the times of bio-astrological propagation depend? (4) Will the earth's surface become level, and the sea disappear? (5) To what extent will virginal propagation take place, and when?—M. G. W., Terre Hill, Pa.
- (1) When the ecliptic and equator become coincidental, an annulus of light will appear, and there will be continuous day. The solar annulus or belt in the heavens, will not possess the same degree of light all around, but will have a brilliant portion which will indicate the length of day just the same as the sun does at the present time by its diurnal revolution. Extremes of heat and cold will not accompany the changes of the seasons as now. In the absence of these extremes, the changes will be recognized in the manifestation of other forces of the mineral and vegetable kingdoms. (2) The remarkable changes referred to above, will take place at the same time that the corresponding changes take place in humanity. The solar and lunar spheres will become one at the time of the great Theo-anthropostic conjunction. (3) The stars will not cease to exist because invisible to eyes such as men have today. In the application of the science of astro-biology, the position of the stars, with reference to the solar annulus, will be ascertained through a method of scientific perception. We can see stars at the present time, during the day, by excluding all light except through an aperture;-looking up through the mouth of a well, for instance. Then, it will be through the generation of a higher quality of mental energy, through the activities of a more interior set of brain cells. (4) The earth's surface will not become smooth during any age of the world, and the oceans will continue the same as now. The words, "There shall be no more sea," refer to the sea of humanity. "The waters which though sawest * * are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." The union of oxygen and hydrogen produces waters of the sea; in the anthropostic world, the union of mental substances produces offspring. The process of generation of offspring ceases with those who enter into life, and hence with them "there shall be no more sea"-no more propagation on the natural plane. The sea which shall give up its dead, is the sea of mortal humanity; it yields up its dead in the resurrection or attainment of immortal life. (5) Virginal propagation will take place in the decline of the ages to come. The result of this process of generation will be men on the natural plane—not on the arch-natural. The sons of God will appear on the arch-natural plane. Virginal propagation will belong to that order of humanity between the mortal humanity and the plane of the sons of God. Hundreds of thousands will then be produced by parthenogenesis.

H. E. H., Lancaster, Pa.—Answers to your questions will appear in our issue of February 11, from the pen of the Founder of the System.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

I have seen several copies of your paper, and am much impressed with what I have read concerning the Koreshan System. As I know little or nothing concerning the science of astronomy, I am utterly unable to demonstrate to my mind the truth or falsity of your startling assertions. In fact, I can grasp nothing of what you essay to prove concerning the New Geodesy, the possibility of overcoming death, etc., except that your "Red-Hot Sword Thrusts" strike at the root of all orthodox scientific theories and religious beliefs. But if I cannot comprehend nor appreciate your scientific discoveries, I do admire and appreciate your clear, terse, vigorous English and the original and attractive style in which you clothe your ideas and propositions. One cannot lay your paper aside after a thorough reading, without feeling the exhibitanting effect of the pure "well of English undefiled" with which one's mind has been refreshed.—H. E. H., Lancaster, Pa.

You say, "send us your encouraging words; ask your questions—sit right down and write us." Strange and impossible as it seemed at first, the Koreshan Concave Theory now appears quite reasonable, more so at least, than the convex. I do not understand particulars, but if the earth's surface is actually concave, then of course that settles the matter, and we are all in it—sun, moon, stars, and all. Diagrams are very helpful, very; that on cover of March, 1897, especially so. Give us more. * Your plain but searching words in defense of common justice and common sense in this present life, ring clear, and I sympathize with you in the meagre consolation you seem to get in return. Go on!—G. J. B., Joplin, Mo.

While eagerly watching page 16 of THE FLAMING SWOBD, I form different pictures of the coming treat. I send one of them, which may be a suggestion. I would like to have the grand cycle explained. I would draw it on a large scale, and arrange it on a wall so that it could be made to revolve for observation. THE SWORD is one of the necessities of life to me.—M. G. W., Terre Hill, Pa.

Many thanks for your kindness; am always ready and willing to do anything possible to help along the good work. I must say a word for the weekly Sword; I like it much better, and I think it brings us closer together. I assure you that it is a most welcome visitor in our home. With best wishes for THE FLAMING SWORD and its interests.—Mrs. C. V. H., New Castle, Pa.

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

People sometimes fail to do what they say they will. Earthquakes have been prophesied by people who did not know how to make them; inevitable failure resulted. The great scientific (!) bomb that was to be hurled against the Koreshan Astronomy by the Rev. Dr. Utter, of Denver, proved to be just a "bum," as we said it would! He begins with slander and ends with it, sandwiching in exhibitions of his ignorance of science. A few of his conclusions are reviewed by Koresh in a letter to the Denver Post, which we publish in this issue, under the head of "The Science of the Solar Vortex and Evolution of Light." But for this little squall, thousands of people would have been in ignorance of the existence of the Koreshan System, who are now full of inquiry.

"The Discovery of Fallacy," by Astro-Vigilus, takes the reader forward to the Golden Age, the age of light when fallacy is unknown, and presents a view of the darkness of the Nineteenth Century. It is a bit of fiction illustrative of principles of scientific truth, the laws of synthesis, antithesis, and analysis. The vivid description of the discovery of fallacy by Sanguina, in his confession, will convey to the mind how Truth has been discovered. Study this scientific story; it will arouse a thousand thoughts, and you will appreciate it.

Transformation in page 16 of THE FLAMING SWORD, after a little. Some have tried to guess what it is, and others are thinking about it. You cannot overestimate it—it will do for you all that we have claimed for it, and more! The more you look for it, the greater your curiosity will become, and the more you will appreciate it when the transformation is made. It will be a greater transformation than has been manifest on any other page of THE SWORD.

You like puzzles sometimes for a diversion; you like a mystery occasionally, also. Look carefully for the point of mystery in the article by Lucie Page Borden in next issue; it is written in a style that is easily read, and you will like it. This week the article, "The Anti-Semitic Movement" by the same writer, gives a review of the Dreyfus case, and points out some facts of racial hatred—very consistent with the popular doctrine of the brotherhood of man.

The "Sword Thrusts" by Koresh in this number, puncture the pneumatic tires of a number of cycle hobbies ridden by men who do not know where they are going! The Sword Thrusts will continue to puncture everything that is inflated, and will destroy the world's great air-castles.

Next week's FLAMING SWORD will be full of interest.

Thoughts From the Reform Press.

~~~~~~~~******

A Change is Coming!

This earth produces more than enough to make every human being comfortable and happy. There is ample material to build every family a commodious home; every man, woman, and child could be clothed in the very best of apparel, and the larder stored not only with the necessaries but the luxuries of life. There is no necessity that a single child should be barefooted and ragged, or that women should be forced to sell their honor for bread.

There are establishments in this country that have thousands upon thousands of dollars lying idle on their shelves; there are others that are stocked with unnumberd pairs of boots and shoes, others again loaded down with superabundance of provisions, a large quantity of which will necessarily deteriorate and go to waste. These have all been produced by labor, and the men whose skill has created them cannot afford to have a decent suit of clothes, a decent pair of shoes, or a decent meal. Back of this whole business stand the modern Shylocks who have succeeded in gobbling up everything in sight, and right well have they prospered in their endeavor to make the balance of mankind their slaves.

Reader, if an apologist of the present system seeks to defend such a monstrous inequality as this by the old argument that it is a wise and inscrutable Providence that has caused all, tell him to his face, he lies. It is because a class of robbers have appropriated to themselves that which another class has produced, that poverty is so prevalent and mankind so poor. Does any sane man or woman imagine that Providence created an earth of such boundless resources and unlimited opportunities, simply that a few designing knaves should appropriate it to their use, as a means of living in luxurious idleness, whilst the balance of mankind should toil in injustice and hunger in a debasing struggle for their daily bread? Out upon such logic! There is nothing wrong about our mother earth; she is able to provide amply for each and every one of her children; there is more than enough and to spare. Oh, that men only had brains! Oh, that men only would think!-Industrial Banner, London, Ont.

He Tells The Truth.

There is no such thing as an independent daily press. We are all slaves! You know it, and I know it. There is not one of you that dares express an honest opinion. I am paid $150 per week for keeping honest opinions out of the paper I am connected with. The man who would be so foolish as to write honest opinions would soon be out on the street hunting for another job. The business of a journalist is to distort the truth; to lie outright; to pervert; to vilify; to fawn at the fee of Mammon, and to sell his country and his race for his daily We are the tools and vassals of rich bread. men behind the scenes. We are intellectual prostitutes, and our time, our talents, and our possibilities are all property of other men.—Confession of a New York Journalist.

A Poor Man's Liberty.

The liberties of a poor man are few indeed. He must not beg, he must not loiter, and he may not steal. Indeed, his liberty gives him the right to work if he can get employment, and to starve if he can't.
But let him be very careful how he conducts his untimely dissolution, or he will be punished. He must starve quietly and unobtrusively, and without fuss or hurry. Let him but try to accelerate the process by taking a dose of rat poison, or by a jump in the canal, and the consequences are severe. If his attempt is frustrated, he will be punished in this world; if his attempt is successful, he will be damned in the next .- London Clarion.

If the government can distribute letters, why can it not distribute wealth? If it can issue flat postage stamps, why not flat money? If it can own and manage vessels for war, why not for business? If it can build and attend to 1,312 lighthouses, why can't it build something on the land to prevent thousands of industrial citizens from being shipwrecked on the rocks of monopoly? If Congress can't answer these questions, let it shut up and go home, instead of insulting starving voters with debates on the tariff .- Coming Nation.

The only place we have been able to find prosperity since its advent, has been in the columns of the republican papers.— Tacoma Sun.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

The Destiny of Capital and Labor.

CAPITAL is the wealth accumulated directly, through the industry of the many and controlled by the few, and indirectly, through the rise of property occasioned by the various tendencies to aggregation or clustering of many people into urban districts and townships, including the combination of accumulated property into monopolies. This being a fair general statement of the law of wealth, it is at once observed that the only two sources of wealth are, first, the resources of natural creation; second, the industrial and economical development and employment of these through the various artificial means of their utilization.

A man or a combination of men may possess, by "legal" rights, a thousand acres of fertile land; its resource is unavailable until, through the application of labor, its wealth is artificially developed. The same is true of the richest mining districts. Suppose one thousand men, moved by the same impulse of necessity under the prevailing sentiment of the competitive system, should decide to form a colony and should seek some locality remote from civilization, for the purpose of utilizing a tract of land and its resources through industrial effort. A thousand acres of land are purchased for one dollar an acre, to be paid for from the products of its development by the application of art. These men are mechanics and farmers. They immediately set to work, crudely at first, to reduce the timber to its various uses, and to prepare the land for the production of its crops. They possess the common idea of competism, and they begin to exchange labor for labor. The first thing they institute is a system of labor exchange, by an equitable classification of labor and a corresponding equation of production.

As the colony progresses there is an increase of facility, while improvement supplies the means for improvement. Carpenters, blacksmiths, and machinists supply the mechanical work for the farmers, and receive their pay in the products of the farms. They are not altogether excluded from the outside world; as their facilities for the reduction of nature through art to the public demand increase, they are brought more and more in contact with remote resources, and having by industrial and economical methods produced more substance than they require, they facilitate the means of exchanging their products, not for the necessaries, but for what they conceive to be the greater comforts and luxuries of life. These people are aggregated from the common walks of modern civilization, and the effort is instituted mainly upon the basis of the competitive system of labor. The intensity of the principle of competism is reduced to the minimum, and the exchange is instituted upon the basis of a comparative equality.

The colony grows, and its wealth increases by virtue of industrial effort and economical use. It becomes more civilized and is more in contact with outside influences and facility. It ultimately becomes a wealthy town, its real estate valuable in proportion to its size and its facile relation to the markets of the world. Its original complexion fades away, and it is the ordinary competitive and commercial town of the times. However, its wealth, whatsoever its character, is the product of industry as applied to natural resource. This will be the inevitable result of every effort to exchange the products of labor founded upon the various phases of the competitive system in vogue throughout the world.

Digitized by GOOSIC

It does not require argument to show that "labor," under the competitive system, is the exclusive source of that artificial creation called capital. While it is a readily demonstrable fact that labor is the creator of capital, it is equally remarkable that this creator of capital and its rightful owner, is not its possessor. Observe, if you will take the trouble to do a little thinking, which by the way is as difficult a task for some people as to exercise the muscles in the performance of use, the character of the drudgery performed by the menial in the accumulation of the hoarded millions of the monopolist. Men, women, and children (the children almost infants) compelled, from urgent and grim necessity, while starving and freezing, to earn their bread, while those by whom they are employed are living in luxury and affluence, from the veritable slavery of a tyrannous Christian (?) civilization. This system is endorsed, lauded, fostered, urged, and fought for by a Christianity as monopolistic, morbid, and cadaverous as any of the defunct paganisms of the world's history.

Think of a Christianity and a Christian civilization where millions suffer the degradations of the wage slave, wherein they are made veritable paupers; employee cringing abjectly to the employer, the wealth producer rushing to his field of tyranny, ten, fourteen, and eighteen hours a day, troubled and watchful in his sleep, agonizing in his wakeful solicitude and struggles for the illyprovided pittarce for his impoverished wife and pitiable and famishing children! This is not an imaginative and overdrawn romance. It is the open and unrestricted outlook of the field of common observation, where they who run may read. Behold a Christianityunder the guise of a Pharisaical pretense to an inherit. ance undefiled and that fadeth not away; a Christianity professing to adore the character and doctrines, and to sustain and uphold the life of the Son of God who cursed the competitive and pagan system of the world and overthrew its commercial tables and instituted a communistic church-now encouraging, sustaining, delving in the very system which the Christ of God unmercifully denounced.

The modern church has departed from its first love, and lives in violation of the principles of the Son of God and of his Christianity, then pure in its inauguration, but now prostituted through the avaricious greed of the polluted money worshiper, bondholder, and oppressor of the poor. Labor, under the tyranny of wage slavery, is systematically and legally robbed of its productions. Not only is this true, but, further, in a land of boasted liberty, where men possess the right to make the laws under which they live, these same men elevate to public office mercenary, political prestidigitateurs, who first sell themselves to the devil and then sell the people, their constituents, to the bondholders. There is a remedy for this great evil, and the great salvation from its terrible and ignominious blight is within the reach of the poor in heart and poor in purse, though rich in purpose and fortitude.

Koreshanity offers the only relief. This resides primarily in the baptism of a chosen people into a renewal of the principles which actuated the Lord, his disciples, and the primitive church. This church, in the initiation of human fellowship at the beginning of the dispensation, embodied the principles of united life in a common fellowship, reducing individual possession to a universal and communistic treasury; for all who received the Holy Spirit sold their (individual) possessions and brought the price of the things they sold and laid it at the apostles' feet, and they had all things common. God never authorized any departure from this principle of the church and the purpose of the Almighty. The departure came with the introduction of the infernal and hell-born competitive system, through the union of the church with paganism; through the adultery of the Christian church with the abominable tendencies and methods of a degenerate race.

In the proposition of Koreshanity, which maintains that labor is a curse and should not exist, that all capital is the result of art devoted to the work of extracting from nature her riches, and accumulating, husbanding, and equitably distributing the products of industry, is found the principles which, when applied; will relieve the oppressed. It is the province of Koreshanity to usher in the great Sabbath of rest, to inaugurate the era of righteousness, and to co-ordinate the conspirations of harmony which shall mark the day of jubilee! This, Koreshanity will accomplish despite the futile efforts to thwart the purpose of the Almighty, who has under his watchful guardianship the divinelyappointed Koreshan System. We purpose to push forward the work of propaganda, and the more vehemently as the emissaries of the devil from the infernal pit are let loose to perform their dirty work of spitting in the face of Deity. It is our purpose to convert the poor and the rich, men, women, and children, and to convince them that money is useless except as it is devoted to the exaltation of the race and its liberation from the curse. It is our purpose to show to the world that the aggregation of a people who will apply the principles of industry, sobriety, economy, and united life, in the development of a commercial city, can defy the cormorants and vultures of monopoly. We are not after sluggards who cannot be converted to industrials and economists. We do not want people for their money, nor do we want those who cannot endure as great hardships for the good of humanity in future generations, as for the paltry gold which many seek at the risk of failure. destitution of families left at home, and of life itself.

If you will come to us believing in the pure principles of Koreshauity, with the hope of immortal life assured through your obedience to the science of life as set forth in our doctrines, we want you. We will take some of you to a new country where, under pioneer work and a sacrificing fellowship, there is the greatest opportunity to develop every phase of the purest civilization. We will develop every variety of industry. We will build our ships and establish our commerce. We will create our schools and rear our temples. We will cultivate and develop the love of art, music and Digitized by oratory. We will cause to grow from the barren fields, where now roams the wild beast and dwells the Seminole, the most beautiful and magnificent city the world hasever seen, and which, when reared, will be the habitation of God's righteous, and its property possessed in common. It will be the fulfilment of ancient prediction, and the heart of a system which shall ramify throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Lucid Answers to Pertinent Questions.

(1) If the orthodox science of astronomy is a deceptive fraud and fallacy, as you say it is, how can the eclipses of the sun and moon be foretold with accuracy by these generally accepted though false astronomical theories? (2) How can navigation be reduced to its present scientific accuracy through astronomical calculations that are based on the deception and fallacy of fraudulent theories, as you say of the orthodox science of astronomy? (3) What do you mean when you say, "None will be reincarnated (resurrected into immortality) but those in whom the divine seed was sown'? (4) Do you mean that only a select few will inherit immortality, while the vast majority of human beings will be spiritually annihilated—that there is no future state but for those who accept the propositions of Koreshanity? (5) If Christ was the Son of God, why did he not discover and teach the Koreshan System, if it is the only true system, instead of leaving it to Dr. Cyrus R. Teed to startle the world with the discovery, nearly 1900 years after his (Christ's) advent upon earth? (6) Do you mean to assert seriously that you have discovered the principles of life that will insure to man, while yet in the flesh, immortality; that without tasting physical death, this mortality can put on immortality? and that you and a few others who are in possession of this wonderful secret of immortal life will alone have eternal life while the rest of the human race will suffer eternal death?—H. E. H., Lancaster, Pa.

WE REFER you to the Koreshan literature for elaborate answers to this (1) inquiry, but will here reiterate that the calculation of eclipses and other phenomena does not depend upon any theory of astronomy. The sun, moon, and stars in their relations to one another, relative motions, and in their relations to any point on the earth's surface, are uniform, whether the earth be regarded convex, concave, or flat. Theories have no influence whatsoever upon phenomena and their observations. Astronomers observe facts and record them. They make their calculations from their tabulated records, not upon the basis of theories. If you will read astronomical works, you will find this statement to agree with their own enunciation of facts. Eclipses can be calculated regardless of any theory, for all theories have been hypothetical until the annunciation of Koreshan Astronomy, founded upon and grounded in absolute experiment. The so called Copernican system of astronomy is one of the gigantic frauds of the age, and this is not the worst of it;—the astronomers themselves tremble lest some man should arise to overthrow a superstructure positively known to have its foundation only in the random guess of a pigment disk of the medieval age.

(2) Navigation does not depend upon astronomical theories, but upon the facts of the relations of the heavens to the surface of the earth. The north star sustains a positive relation to every other star, and to any or all points on the surface of the earth. This is true, whether the theory be that of convexity, con-cavity, or an extended plane. The same truth applies to both questions.

(3) Those who received the seed of life at the beginning of the age, come into the condition of the firstfruits at the end of the age. Those who rejected that seed—the Holy Spirit—then, are not passing through the process of regeneration from the Lord Christ, and consequently cannot awake at the termination of the age as the full fruit of the Tree of Life. Those who rejected the Holy Spirit when it was shed upon the world,—this was only done at the beginning of the age,—will be reincarnated in future generations, and will be baptized with another outpouring when they have sufficiently progressed to become receptive to it.

(4) There will be "a select few at the end of the dispensation" who will become the sons of God. This select few will be the product of the planting of the Lord in the race. These are the sons of God, that is, offspring of God, because they are the offspring of the Son of God who planted himself to bring them forth. There will be no spiritual annihilation. Spirits go into the spiritual world, live their career there, and return here to still further work out their experience. Those who were capable of receiving the Holy Spirit in the beginning of the Christian age, reached that possibility through ages of natural and spiritual life and experience. There is a future state for all men, but that state is not altogether in the spiritual world, it is partly in the natural world; but the final state is that of the sons of God, higher than the angels in heaven. The fruition of the age,-the ripening of the sons of God and the gathering of the fruit, will be accomplished through Koreshanity, because it is the ordained way of ushering in the kingdom of righteousness.

(5) The Lord Jesus taught for his age the things that could be comprehended by the people to whom he came as the Shepherd. It has taken this dispensation for the world to grow into the comprehension of the ultimate truth. Abraham, Moses, and the prophets taught for their times. If Moses was God, as he declares in Deuteronomy xxix: 6:"Ye have not eaten bread, neither have ye drunk wine nor strong drink: that ye might know that I am the Lord your God," then why did he leave it for Jesus to declare himself the bread of life, and to baptize the church with the Holy Ghost? If the Copernican system of astronomy be true, Why did not Jesus declare it true in his day, and not leave it for the Ptolemaic theory to last for a thousand years, and for Copernicus to startle the world with his gigantic guess, and also for the "higher critics" to overthrow the claims of Jesus, on the basis of the hypothesis of Copernicus?

(6) The offer of eternal salvation on the basis of Sonship, is proffered to the world. None will desire it genuinely, but those who are prepared for it. "To all that believe in his name gives he power to become the sons of God." Koreshanity teaches how this is to be accomplished, for it is not only a question of the will, but of the intellect. This brings it into the domain and province of science. We are not cramming our doctrine down the throats of people, and we contend that no person is desired on the basis of hypnotism, as is so often charged against us. Hypnotism is sleep; we want people wide awake. No other class of people can grasp this great and marvelous system.

Sword Thrusts.

PROPHETIC declaration and all the signs of the times, with the corroborations of history, point to the unmistakable and inevitable conclusion that the end of the age is upon us. We are whirling into the great vortex of disruption. Kingdoms will be dissipated into nothingness. The old church will pass away with all its fallacies. The great Theocracy, with its God-ordained and crowned head, will extend its dominion throughout the world, and the King of kings and Lord of lords will reign in triumph. This, God hath promised and will speedily fulfil. There will be one state and one church conjoined in the bond of Deific unity. The union of church and state under the reign of the devil's competitive system would constitute an undesirable combination, hence the purpose of individualists to maintain the divorce of church and state. Church and state, wherein good and truth comprise the bond of a divine fellowship, where the church and state are God-ordained and governed by the King and Lord of creation, will become a unity, regardless of the influence of men opposed through ignorance to church and state unity.

Five children are incarcerated in dungeons for picking up the waste coal on the tracks of a millionaire railroad company. We gather the facts from the Pittsburgh Dispatch. The salient feature of this one sided exhibition of justice is that this company, if not guilty of paying the fathers of these children starvation wages, compelling them to gather the coal or their families to freeze to death, is guilty of amassing its immense fortune from the earnings of the men they employ, and through whose industry this wealth is created. This is one more lesson in the direction of what the masses of the people of our country may expect through the creation, regulation, and enforcement of our laws exclusively by the commercial and financial fiends into whose hands we are rapidly consigning our legislation.

A man's ability to accumulate wealth, to gain the greatest end of a financial transaction, depends upon his consummate hoggishness. The ability to torture men in the work-pit and to reduce them to the most meager pittance of what they create, while their earnings promote the opulence of those who tyrannize over them, is no guaranty that when elevated to a public trust the financial cormorant will devote his energies to the public good.

Universities, seminaries, and colleges inaugurated and conducted exclusively for the rich, placed as they are purposely beyond the reach of the common people, are not public benefactions. Institutions of the higher education, in the hands of a just government by the people and for the people, where the poor though intellectual may be cultured at the expense of the government, constitute a demand which will in the near future comprise one of the principal factors of public interest and progress.

Religion is merely a marriage. Every church constitutes the matrix in which the processes of generation progress. The declension of every church is one of the essential factors of progress from one age to another. There never will come a period when, at the end of a dispensation, there will not develop a new church for that age. The world could not exist without it.

Every higher stage of union between God and humanity is accomplished through the religion (tying again) of some principle of the Godhood to a more potentially developed principle of man. It is by successive stages of progression and retrogression that man advances toward and into his final unity with the Godhood of his origin.

Philanthropy in this age of the world implies the systematic and legal robbery of tens of thousands, and their reduction to and retention in poverty, that from the surplus millions, universities and colleges may be endowed for the education of the rich and the creation of other and more skilful public pirates.

No bond holding and banking combination instituted for the purpose of robbing the masses, whatsoever its ability to conduct great financial enterprises for corporate interests, is fit to be trusted with the liberties of a populace.

One of the greatest dangers is the control of our legislation by bondholders whose purpose is to subjugate the masses of the people by reducing them to wage and interest-paying slavery.

Truth Gains Momentum Through Resistance.

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

ROM the days when many of the disciples murmured, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" and walked no more with Jesus, down to the latest manifestation of mugwumpery in the field of American politics, the malcontent has been ever in evidence. With ability not sufficient for command, with egotism too great for compliance, he belongs to that class which Napoleon is credited with desiring to see killed off-which can neither lead nor obey. He possesses energy, but it is destructive, not constructive,—the energy of hate, not the energy of love. His force is employed to injure, if possible, the cause with which he has been identified. Attracted primarily through selfish motives, and finding that his ideal cannot be realized where other than his selfish interests must necessarily be the first consideration, the friendship which interest leads him to profess turns to open enmity—"so soon the false love turns to hate." And yet, though not a beneficent element, he serves a beneficent purpose, demonstrating the strength or weakness of the cause he assails, for which work his experience within the movement peculiarly fits him. Was it not Burke who said, that as they who wrestle with us strengthen our nerves and sharpen our wits, so our enemies are our helpers? There can be no doubt that the cause which can withstand the assaults of its own malcontents, endures, not because of successfully concealed weakness, but because of the germ of true power, developed at every point by the aid even of these very assaults.

As the storms that beat about the forest giant are essential factors in the development of its strength, so opposition develops the powers of the man or the cause that is destined for great achievement. As power is generated through resistance, that which needs resistance is an indespensable agent in the generation of the power essential to achievement. Not only did the long years of opposing circumstance give to the purpose of Columbus a greater firmness of fibre, but even after he set sail from Palos, his discipline continued. He grew keener in perception through the vigilance called forth by the activity of the traitor Matheous in fomenting discontentamong the sailors, and firmer in his positon through his efforts to withstand the repeated accusations of imposture brought against him by the murmuring crews, and stronger for positive leadership through his constant endeavor to encourage his men and counteract the negative influence of their apprehensions. Even the glory of his achievement shines the more brightly for the efforts of the perfidious Pinzon to rob him of it.

In view of this service inadvertently performed, the wise man readily forgives his enemies. Desiring no other development than that which accords with law, and knowing that all things contribute to this development, either directly or through the reflex of their activities, he can love his enemies with that forbearance which seeks not revenge for injurious intention, but desires the true welfare even of them that hate him.

Through a comprehension of law and supreme determination responsive to its direction, Koreshanity is marked by a kind of tolerance which distinguishes it from all other efforts at social reconstruction. This tolerance is not of sin, but of the sinner; not a laxity of principle, but a forbearance toward those who are ignorant of principle, or unable to make true application, even toward those blinded by selfishness. Although uncompromisingly condemnatory of evil, yet in all love would it indicate to the evil doer the way to holiness, and even bestow upon him strength to walk therein. It would destroy the worker of iniquity by transforming him into the doer of righteousness; it would destroy its enemies by converting them into friends. This tolerance is exercised primarily toward those who identify themselves with the cause by becoming members of its communities. It has been said repeatedly that all efforts to found an ideal state have been and must be futile because of the impossibility of finding the quality of humanity essential to the construction of such a society. It is not possible to admit human beings and exclude human nature, and the quality of membership must determine the conditions within the society. If the weakness of other movements be in the failure to recognize this until experiment demonstrates the existence of a problem for which no solution is ready, the strength of Koreshanity lies in this very recognition and the ability to solve the problem. If one propose to build a structure for which a certain quality of material is indispensable, and have not that material nor the possibility of finding it in existence, his proposition is objected to on the ground of impracticability. But if the possibility of transmutation be admitted, that ground for objection vanishes.

The Philosopher's Stone is the rock upon which Koreshanity builds. The Unity is the crucible in which the transmutation of human nature is to be effected. Because of over exalted aspiration the idea sometimes finds lodgment that we delude ourselves with the belief that we are devoid of the characteristics of the ordinary human. Occasionally one has made the mistake of concluding, since our standard is perfection, that already we must have reached that state; and, joining us, has been bitterly disappointed,—for naturally one who could consider himself fitted to adorn a society of perfect beings would feel terribly out of place among mortals struggling to transform the evils which they recognize in themselves. It is this acknowledgment of the real state of humanity—begotten in sin and shapen in iniqual uity—together with the knowledge of the spirit to be infused that this corruptible may be changed to incorruption, and of the essential purifying process preliminary to this infusion of spirit, that distinguishes Koreshanity. Its aim is not the spurious attainment designated by theologians "Christian perfection," but it teaches that man may and shall attain to the absolute integrity of the Godhead, through conjunction and final unity with God,—the atonement. The efforts at "exposure," made by those who, sometime professing faith, have renounced Koreshanity, can result only in a revelation of the sweet reasonableness of its doctrines, the supreme sanity of its methods.

The Destinies of Nations; A Diplomatic Mystery.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

IT WAS a bleak day in midwinter. The river was ice-bound and the east wind cut like a knife. Whirling eddies of snow filled the air, a fringe of icicles hung from the roofs, and the arching branches of the fine old elms that bordered the quadrangle drooped under their frosty burden. A party of students came striding briskly across the college campus in the direction of Alworthy hall. Nearing the dormitory, they broke into a run as a sudden gust drove the blinding snow into their eyes and faces.

"I say, boys," said Thompson, whom the crowd followed, enticed by the agreeable warmth issuing from the door of his apartment as he flung it hospitably open, "this kind of a day's enough to make a man yearn for a tropical climate. Here's Egerton now, sighing for the far away isles of the sunny Pacific. How is it, old fellow, don't you wish you were sitting under a palm tree in your native country? Doesn't the protoplasm of your soul fairly ache from homesickness while these boreal blasts are raging? I'm going to apply for a government position on account of my health, as soon as the annexation treaty is signed."

"It isn't going to be signed," interposed a decided voice, before Egerton of Honolulu could answer. "This government has enough on its hands now, without saddling us with a lot of lepers and blacks to take care of. We are so charitable and so benevolent that we let the seum and offscouring of all the nations of the earth come swarming down upon us like grasshoppers ready to devour every green thing in the land, while decent American citizens starve. Not over 5 per cent of the population of Hawaii are white, and how do you think those half civilized Orientals whose great-grandfathers were cannibals, are going to assimilate our ideas and customs and institutions? Our national vitality is at too low an ebb to run the risk of blood poisoning."

"Come, Gale, don't make an ass of yourself. I'm sorry for your ignorance; it's simply colossal, as the inanity of your arguments testifies," interrupted Egerton, a tall, slender youth with blond hair and moustache, refined features and aristocratic bearing. "If you think the Hawaiians are anxious to leave the finest climate on God's earth for these howling blizzards, you are mightily mistaken. Their land is a good deal greener and more fertile than your New England rocks or your great American desert. As for the capacity of the natives, the property of the islands today is just thirtynine million dollars. Pretty good for half-civilized Orientals! Shows they have some push and enterprise, doesn't it? Why, man, if the United States lets Hawaii slip through her fingers, she loses the most important military and commercial acquisition of the whole Pacific ocean."

"That's a fact, Egerton," chimed in Gay, one of the best read men of the Senior class, who prided himself on his lucid handling of current topics. "The English know a good thing when they see it, and if that treaty isn't ratified, Great Britain will capture Hawaii inside a year. The London Times said long ago: 'Whatever nation holds the Hawaiian Islands, holds the key to the North Pacific.' What does the key to the North Pacific unlock? The door to the commerce of fifty millions of people. Do you want to let England have that? Wouldn't it be the sheerest folly and the most unpardonable national blunder?"

Gale was eager to take the floor again, but was forestalled by Egerton, who launched into a brilliant panegyric upon his native islands, expatiated on the advantages accruing from the possession of such a valuable market for our productions, and ended by declaring in a fine rhetorical flight, that Providence itself had plainly stationed little Hawaii as an ocean sentinel to guard the western coast line of America and protect her flag upon the seas. Egerton was a good orator and a popular man. His remarks were greeted with enthusiasm and cries of "'Rah for Egerton! 'Rah for annexation! 'Rah for everybody!"

Gale, who was a thin, wiry fellow with a keenly intellectual face, dark, restless eyes, and a satirical smile, bided his time until the commotion had subsided and then remarked dryly:

"It's all very well to prate about national interests, a lot of cheap patriotic rant gotten up by the newspapers to impose on the public. Everybody knows that for all practical purposes, the islands are at our disposal for coaling and military stations, so long as the relations between us continue friendly. The fact is, the annexation treaty is an iniquitous scheme on the part of the Sugar Trust to foist its obligations upon the United States government. Self-interest rules the world and decides all great issues. I mean the interests of private individuals and corporations. It lies back of all international dealings. The merits of a question have little bearing upon its decision, and the good of the many must yield to the avarice of the few. Here is your honorable President (turning to Egerton) who has come on a diplomatic errand ostensibly to promote the interests of his people, but it is an open secret that he's bought and sold to the sugar men. He's working for himself, just give him another motive powerful enough to offset the money that annexation means to him, and he'd pull right against the treaty and let the good of his people go to the dogs. The Senate's debating the matter, but it looks a little doubtful for the annexation party. They must have sixty votes, and they find they can only count on fifty-eight, and some of them not dead sure. It's the critical moment, and only needs the force of a strong will backed up by plenty of ducats to turn the scale either way. President Dole's arrival in Washington is expected to settle it. I'd like to give him a counter suggestion, show him that his interests point in another direction—you'd soon see him tack about and change his colors.'

"You couldn't do it," said Egerton warmly. "I know Dole; he and my father were chums. You're way off about the sugar dealers, and such reports of the President are outrageous and insulting."

"I'm arguing on general principles from my knowledge of human nature, and Dole's just like other men," returned Gale coolly. "I'll bet you two to one, if you like to gamble to that extent on your faith in the worthy gentleman, that I'll induce him to alter his tactics within three days."

"Done!" cried Egerton before the words were well out of Gale's lips. "Boys, you hear the bet. Gale has kindly consented to act as the arbiter of my nation's destiny. How it would tremble could it know upon whose all-powerful nod its fate depends!"

A bell rang and the students filed hastily out with groans and shouts of derision at Gale's assurance.

"What a fool you are, Gale!" said Thompson candidly as he closed the door behind that individual. "Egerton is rich, but you've no money to waste in that fashion."

"The destinies of nations are the sport of fools," remarked Gale sententiously. "I am in particular need of money at the present juncture and seize this opportunity to replenish my coffers in the easiest way."

So saying, Gale went off to ruminate. The situation stimulated rather than dismayed him; although keenly alive to the difficulties of his task, he liked to cope with obstacles that wit and intelligence might vanquish; there was glory as well as money involved, and he was determined to win the wager. His first step, of course, was to acquaint himself with the personal history and characteristics of the President; his next to determine upon some motive powerful enough to sway the man diametrically opposite to his avowed principles and supposed interests. Thirdly, having fixed upon a motive, he must decide how it could best be brought to bear upon the subject of this psychological experiment. But the main difficulty was to discover a motive by which he could hope to influence a public official in the full gaze of a critical public, traveling as the guest of a foreign nation, on a delicate diplomatic mission and already thoroughly committed to a definite line of conduct. Such a motive must originate in self interestthat was the only known factor in the problem. After cogitating all night, Gale hit upon a plan that seemed feasible. With only three days for a limit, he deemed it advisable to carry on operations by telegraph. President Dole, then feasted and feted in the metropolis of the northwest, was to leave for Washington late that night after a state banquet. While this function was in progress, the first telegram was brought in. The President was visibly disturbed but controlled his agitation and enlightened no one as to the character of the message. The second telegram was delivered to him on the train four hours later, while the third and last was presented just as he was sitting down to his first breakfast in Washington, and apparently deprived him of all inclination for food. In fact, he ordered a carriage and drove post haste to the residence of a certain demagogue more than suspected of pulling the invisible wires that made the puppets of the sugar magnates dance at their bidding. The interview was long and stormy. Ten days later the Senate failed to ratify the treaty, and the annexation project was abandoned for the nonce.

Gale had won his bet, being able to prove to Egerton's chagrin that the mysterious telegrams had accomplished their purpose. International negotiations had been suspended through the wit of a stripling, and the foolish wager of a couple of students had decided the fate of a whole country! Upon such slender threads hang the destinies of nations. Now what was the motive to which Gale appealed? What was contained in the three telegrams?

In the Editorial Perspective.

REV. DR. UTTER, of Denver, looks longingly at the offer of $1,000 made by the Founder of Koreshanity, for a proof that the earth rotates on its axis every twenty-four hours; he wishes the $1,000 were placed where there were no strings tied to it. Of course, it would not be a good scheme to have too many strings to a fish when it is desirable to land him. Our $1,000 will not bite at the bait of an orthodox clergyman—it has to be obtained in some other way than by hook and line. Pretty soon it will be a case of the fox and the grapes—when he cannot build a wall of facts high enough to reach the reward. At present he is concerned about the rising and setting of the sun in the earth. In the first place, he admits that the world is inhabited, but he labors on the outside as yet; he preaches to people on the outside; we think there is nothing out there! It is remarkable how advanced he is—he wants continual day in the great cell. Wait a little while, and it will obtain. The time is coming when there will be no night, and the whole concave earth will be illumined by the glorious solar annulus. We would like to ask the Rev. Dr., however, from the standpoint of the book he preaches from, how such a condition can ever obtain in the world on the basis of the delusion that we live on a whirliging! He is troubled about the point of the sunrise on September 22.

He does not see how the sun rises and sets due east and west in every part of the world when the sun is on the equator. We cannot help what he cannot see. A great many men we have known have had to begin to learn things they could not understand. Because he does not see how such is the case does not alter the fact; the conditions obtained even before we found out how it is! If the physical universe had to await its orders from the basis of comprehension of its laws by the modern clergy, it would never go, and we would now be in a dead hull. We will explain it all, after a little; in the meantime, we will quit the astronomical business if any man will successfully contradict and overthrow what we have already explained.

Ships do not sail simply because there is a breeze—the money power must be back of that. This is the secret of so many war ships sailing to China. The late commotion about China has been the result of a battle of money lenders. China is in hard straits financially, and somebody must supply the money; it now resolves itself into a question of a stupendous financial transaction for the purpose of gobbling up the Chinese empire, finally. England proposes to lend China $60,000,000 at 4 per cent interest; John Bull is able to bid lower than others. The daily press, commenting on the proposition, says that this amount "can be obtained for 21/2 per cent, and China will be required to pay 4 per cent. This leaves a margin for a sinking fund and makes it a profitable transaction for the government, which can obtain full security for the payment of interest and principal by controlling revenues and other sources of taxation in China." It is said to be as brilliant a stroke of finance as the purchase of the Suez canal; it will certainly be as great a steal!

Government experts have been investigating the cause of poverty in the tenement districts of New York, and have reached the conclusion that the poor spend too much money for food. These experts enter into intricate calculations of how much nutriment is required per stomach, and find the expenditures far in excess of real necessity. The charge of waste is made against those who purchase a few delicacies per week. Now turn the search-light on the aristocratic districts and ascertain how many millions of dollars are wasted in luxuries, and then fix up a few menus for the millionaire! The poverty of the poor is due to the extravagance of the extravagant.

If reports are true, McKinley is about to be inveigled into another trap by Spain. The plan of autonomy having failed in Cuba, the plan of a joint protectorate is proposed. Of course the joint is to be between the United States and Spain. If such a plan were agreed to, this country would have to put a stop to all so called filibustering expeditions for Cuba, and moreover, would be forced to go to Cuba and break up the insurrection—the plan is merely a net in which to catch the great American nation. Sometimes the biggest nations are the biggest fools!

This is not an age of reason; it is an age of bigotry, blind_ness, and bluff. Known premise, correct logic, and true conclusions are things the masses are as afraid of as death; of these factors of reason, scientists themselves are ignorant. They constitute the great tripartite of Koreshan Science, its impregnable defense and fortress of aggression. Want, passion, and ambition generate impulses which control the poor, the sensualist, and the so called scientist, regardless of cause, karma, or consequences.

We have had the funny experience sometimes of having to show what the Copernican system of astronomy teaches before some objectors can comprehend what we are driving at. Of course it is interesting to show them through the old musty trumpery; it is a scientific diversion! But the time will come when we will not have to teach the old astronomy in order to get the opportunity of overthrowing it. It is going out of date now, and then we will have it all our own way.

Astronomers have a new fad now. It is the theory that the sun shrinks from cooling, and that the more it shrinks the hotter it gets! The only evidence that we can find about this shrinkage theory concocted to explain the source of the sun's heat, is the evidence that the real shrinkage is in the amount of common sense possessed by the so called scientific world! There can be nothing more palpably absurd than this new astronomical fad.

Aid for the slave engenders the hatred of their masters, and ultimately makes their condition worse than at first. The so called modern reforms are but so many efforts to aid the wage slave by those who are philanthropically inclined; they would cool the brow of the workingman in his thraldom, or temporarily quench his thirst. All this only enrages the power to whom he is enslaved. Abolish the power—abolish the millionaire!

We would advise all those who wish to disprove Koreshan Astronomy by going off into the sky to hunt for facts, that it would be a good deal safer to remain on solid ground. The earth's surface is solid enough to begin on; that is where we operate to disprove the theory of the earth's convexity. The surface is tangible, and will always tell the same story when put to the test.

The nations of the world are playing a game of chess. Movements are being made by England, Russia, France, Germany, and others. There will be trouble before the game reaches the climax, and the checkerboard will be rudely disturbed. The game cannot be finished scientifically. The game itself cannot settle the issue; only a revolution can do that.

The modern church, while pretending to save the world, simply throws the cloak of false piety about the man engaged in the hellish business of robbing his neighbor through the modern competitive system. The church shields the corrupt institutions of the church and state.

Years ago Germany refused the American hog; now the American apple is excluded on the ground that the fruit is full of vermin. It is simply a question of tariff, that's all—tariff retaliation worms.

We were recently asked, What is the "mark of the beast?" We replied in the correspondence department that it is money, but our reply was incomplete. We should have said, Mark Hanna.

The robber does not like to be photographed; he would muzzle the camera. The millionaire objects to it too; he muzzles the press and charges the editorial camera with false films.

Everything in the universe has its antithet. John saw a "sea of glass mingled with fire." Today, all some men can see of glass mingled with fire is the whisky glass.

If the government of the United States were for the people, there would be no plutocracy; the wealth of the nation would belong to the people.

Quiet Talks with the Editors of our Exchanges.

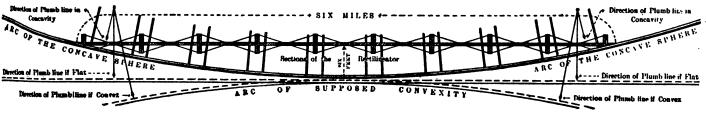

TRUE SCIENCE does not admit of any assumption. In the study of the universe we must take nothing for granted _all guesswork must be excluded. Our investigation will be futile if we do not begin at the right place. We must begin at the bottom, at the foundation of all knowledge and of all science. With a single premise and with logic, we can reach a number of true conclusions. Logic without a correct premise can lead no one to a conclusion that is true. The premise is all important. The foundation of all science is the knowledge of the character of the ultimate, outermost, material, and tangible expression of the intangible mind or cause. We must consider the character of the surface upon which we live before we can reach any conclusion of the shape of the thing we inhabit. If true to analogy, the world is a cell, constructed on the same principle that cells of human life are built; it has its central nucleus like a correct battery cell, like the brain er the form of the earth. There is nothing complex about our proofs. The principle presented here is as simple as abc, and can be comprehended by a glance at the diagram on this page, a sketch of the plan of the greatest geodetic experiment of the nineteenth century. Its results force the conclusion that the earth is concave!

When a man clearly expresses himself he can be understood. His expressions convey to the mind certain impressions which form ideas more or less similar to the ideas conveyed. The physical universe is an expression of cause. The universe is nature, and is true. The purpose of cause and laws of existence are written in the material creation. The universe itself is the clothing of idea—it is the outermost and ultimate expression of its inherent life. It is the pediment of all higher and superior forms of life, and is consequently directly related to all the conditions upon which it depends. The world endorse every word, because we have been clamoring for years to have the members of these fraternities adopt such a course. What do you say about the following? "I would have all professors in colleges, and all teachers in schools of every kind, including those in Sunday schools, agree that they would teach only what they knew, that they would not palm off guesses as demonstrated truth." "I would like to see all the editors of papers and magazines agree to print the truth and nothing but the truth, to avoid all slander, and to let the private affairs of the people alone."

It is said that the next thing to an idea is a question; it is equally true that the next thing to a question is an idea. We place ideas by the side of everybody's questions when the questions are placed by the side of our ideas. As long as there are people who have fallacious ideas, there cannot even be a true idea in the world that has not a question about it!

The only true method of determining the direction and ratio of the Earth's Curvature; Chord of Concave Arc meeting the Water's Surface.

cell, and its vitellus like the egg, with an environ or shell. All life is generated in a cell; this is universally true—there is no exception to the rule. The earth's surface curves if it is not flat; if it is not flat, which way does it curve, and at what ratio? With the eye alone it is impossible to determine—effects of visual perspective and foreshortening and atmospheric refractions make it impossible. We would have to know how we see before we could interpret what we saw. Men have supposed for a long time that we are living on the outside of a ball; if such were the case, its surface would be convex everywhere. If it is not convex, it is some other shape. There is but one method of absolute determination, and that method involves the application of the simplest geometrical principles—the relation of straight lines and curves. A straight line touching the outside of a circle is tangent at one point only; on the inside of the circle it would be a chord of arc. The Founder of Koreshanity was the first to announce the possibility of such a test. All the boasted science of the world has overlooked so simple a problem, and has failed to discov-is tangible. It is the only really infallible expression of the character of the Almighty. If you could read it, you could read the laws of form and of organization; you could, in fact, read the mind of the Creator as unmistakably as you could if you were in that mind yourself. This is the only way by which God can be correctly interpreted to the rational mind; in this way he expresses himself tangibly to man —to whomsoever is able to comprehend the expression. His laws, written in the rocks of ages, in the soil of the world, on the surface of land and water, in the sun and stars, are susceptible of rational investigation, and when found, of demonstration. Modern astronomy does not enable the mind to grasp this. Koreshan Science demonstrates its premise. Tangible evidences of this kind are superior to any other form of revelation.

Ingersoll says some good things once in a while. We find that many of his expressions contain some truth. We have two sentences of his which we have clipped from one of his articles. One is applicable to the so called teachers of the world, and the other to the editors. We There is a definite relation existing between center and circumference; in fact, there can be no circumference without a center. This is true in all domains of being and existence. The true social organization must have a center upon which the circumference depends. It must be fashioned after the pattern of the physical universe.

"Turning the world upside down," is a common expression; in fact, ancients looked for the time to come when such a work would be done. They thought Paul and Barnabas were on such a mission, but the people have had to await the arrival of Koreshan Science; its Founder is the Scientist that makes a success of it.

We give a little scientific talk for your benefit, and others will follow. In some way, you must admit, science is related to all truth, and we do not believe that a man is doing himself or his readers justice if he ignores what is absolutely necessary for him to know!

We offer a reward or $1,000 for a single proof that the earth's surface is convex.

Incontrovertible Evidence of Cellular

THE FLAMING SWORD, Chicago, Ill., is chock full of good things this week, as it usually is. It makes a standing offer of $1,000 to the editor of any journal who will publish a scientific refutation of the Koreshan Cosmogony, or what would be its equiva-lent—a single fact in demonstration of the theory that the earth is convex and that we live on its exterior surface, or support of any other theory of the shape of the world than the universe as a cell with its habitable surface concave. The Sword seems to be in possession of incontrovertible evi-THE SWORD seems to dence of Cellular Cosmogony. Some educator should seek for renown on so generous an offer as that made by THE FLAMING Sword.—Needham Hustler, Needham, Ind.

* * * Not Shaped Like a Dish.

* * But an ignorant, adventuresome sailor knocked this "theory of the learned" [that the earth was flat] into innocuous desuetude, and settled the rotundity of the earth. But up come the Koreshans, who declare that the earth is not round, but concave, or scooped out like a soup dish.—Search Light, Elm Grove, W. Va.

The Koreshan geography is not quite so had as that-better get a more careful view of the hollow globe. The earth is round; we advocate its rotundity, but not its convexity. The earth is about 8,000 miles in diameter, but its habitable surface is on the inside instead of on the outside; the same map would fit both.

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

We work day and night to interest you; we delight in this—we would not be happy if we were not engaged in the great work of helping to publish to the world the greatest System of Truth ever known. Each of you can do something to assist us. Every one has some influence; use it for us -but to make it effective it must be used wisely. It is a good plan to be ready to adapt yourself to circumstances, always; you can be courteous and suave for the benefit of the truth. Clear vision of the great truths of the universe gives you a more liberal view of humanity and of your relation to it—of your own nature and that of others. You can afford to be genteel in the presence of your neighbors and friends, and thereby interest them in what interests you. Every one of our friends should make it his special business to obtain for us as many subscriptions as possible. One new subscriber obtained by every one on our list in one year, would double our circulation; three new subscribers from each, three times our present circulation, and so on. A little effort like this would do more in one year, than thousands of dollars' worth of advertising in various forms, on our part. Do something, and you will feel more liberal; it is a duty you owe to those about you! The obligation falls on you as well as on us; and responsibility is equitably distributed. You like to have friends about you who believe as you do. You can have such a circle by a little diligent work. It will require some experience, of course, and for the most part, you will have to train and educate yourself on lines of approaching and interesting people with something new. We will endeavor to help you from time to time. We would like to have hundreds of trained workers, who are as diligent and active, but not as boring, as the workers for the Salvation Army and missions of the various organizations which propagate fallacy. Fallacy of itself can do nothing; championed by thousands of people saturated with it, it moves. It is the same way with Truth; it is a cause that has to be worked up and pushed; it requires mental energy behind it, lots of tact, shrewdness, and ability to compete with fallacy. Resolve to do something, but do

Florida, the Home of the Koreshan Colony, is Not a Wilderness nor a Dismal Swamp.

Colony, is Not a Wilderness nor a Dismal Swamp.

The price of real estate has advanced here; there is much business stir, and many mechanics have come from distant places. A lofty date palm, planted by General Hancock when in command here, lifts its graceful head on one of the main avenues. The choicest of pinearples and sugar canc are raised here. The former have netted from $600 to $800 an acre.

"It is as easy to pick an apple as a crab." Here grows the glant bamboo, the useful cassava, and the sisal hemp. Lemons are abundant. Two crops of Irish potatoes are raised in one year.

Truck farming is a great industry here. Egg plants, cucumbers, beans, peas, squashes, onlons, beats, lettuce, radishes, celery are sent in midwinter to Northern markets.

The southern end of Florida has practically the climate of Cuba. Hence what grows in Cuba can be raised here at home in peace under our dear old flag. Here is the beautiful winter home of Thomas A. Edison, the electrician. An electric plant has been introduced. The United States census of 1890 officially established the fact that Lee County, supposed to be a reeking swamp, was the healthiest county in the United States. Wonderful are the climate and resources of Florida.

REV. E. P. HERRICK, Ft. Myers, Fla.

not rush into it, and gather people by the collar to jerk them into a conception of truth. Study the situation over, and use some ingenuity and strategy, and begin a mental attack on prejudice. Do not simply try, but lay your plans well, and begin, resolving to succeed!

We desire to have some of you canvass for THE FLAMING SWORD. Of course, if you live in the country you cannot do this very well, but many of you live in towns and cities. Take an hour or so off from your routine of work occasionally. Start out with a copy of THE SWORD, and canvass your neighbors and others, like you see many doing for other publications. Show the paper. Have those you canvass, understand that you want them to have the paper-that it has done you so much good, nothing like it in the world. Do not arouse prejudice by undertaking to explain the System-this is the point where many fail, the point where they spoil their influence for the Truth! You have to be patient with people—they cannot see the universe at a single glance at you, nor by hearing you say things concerning it for an hour or so; let them read! That is what we publish THE SWORD for. Get your neighbor to take it for a year, six months, or three months. If he hasn't the money, we will send it to him three months on trial; then call when the time is up and collect the quarter, and take his subscription for a year. There are eight things you should do: (1) Send all the names and addresses for sample copies, that you can obtain from any source. (2) Send for circulars concerning THE FLAMING SWORD. (3) Send for blanks on which to send us subscriptions. (4) Ask for letter of authority to take subscriptions and make collections. (5) Order 10 or 20 copies of THE SWORD to be sent you free, to be used in canvassing or talking to your friends. (6) Send us three months' trial subscribers. (7) Subscribe one month for your distant friends -we send THE SWORD one month to ten names for $1. (8) Visit your newsdealer and leave copies for exhibition and for sale, and send us his name and address.

The star article in this number is from the pen of the Founder of Koreshanity, "The Destiny of Capital and Labor," the ablest article we have published for some time. It is a truthful, just, masterful and even startling arraignment of the modern church and state-an indictment of both the clergyman and politician for failure to benefit the people they claim to be able to save. Every line of the article is true! This is not the time to throw the mantle of charity over the corruptions of the church; it has entailed thousands of evils upon the world, and the mask must be torn off as ruthlessly as the tables of the bankers were overthrown in the courts of the temple nineteen hundred years ago. There is not a weakness, nor a passion, nor an evil in humanity today that the church does not in some way excuse; there is not a popular fallacy today that the modern church is not wholly saturated with. Justice will avenge the wrongs of the masses of the oppressed, and cries out now in fact, as it did prophetically through John on the Isle of Patmos: "And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth!"

We are preparing the New Geodesy on a much larger scale than we at first anticipated. A synopsis of the Koreshan Astronomical System by the Founder of Koreshanity, will be contained in it, fully illustrated by fine diagrams and engravings. We are at work at it now; it will be ready about April 15. Be patient, and we will surprise you, by giving you twice as much as we would have done had we gotten the work out before this.

Do you want to know how to work for our interests for the interests of truth? Look at the methods employed to propagate fallacy—there are scores of ways. Look about you, and see how many methods you can pick out. Adopt some of them. A good method will help push fallacy, but a bad method will not help propagate the Truth.

Ask yourself if you are not delighted with this number of THE ELAMING SWORD. We have not lowered our standard since we began the weekly, and we never will! We have kept our promises so far, and will continue to send you the best and the most advanced journal in existence.

Norman Rapalce's Nubbins.

If this is prosperity, save us from adversity.

You can't down the trusts by voting as they do.

Human rights are more sacred than property rights.

A national debt is a blessing to the national bankers.

This is a government by the people—the rich people.

The more money there is, the more happiness we have.

These are prosperous times for the men.

who have money.

We are taking the "gold cure" now. How do you like it?

People are still anxiously looking for that promised prosperity.

Government ownership of railroads

Government ownership of railroads would let the water out.

More money! That is a plank upon which every man can stand.

No, bub, a public office is not a public trust. It is a private snap.

That wave of prosperity must be the private property of the bankers.

You can't whine away an evil. Stiffen

You can't whine away an evil. Stiffen your backbone and vote it away.

What we need most is honest statesmen, and then we'll have honest dollars.

Notice to workingmen out of employment ---get off the earth or be shoved off.

"Times are picking up." We notice that tramps are becoming more numerous.

A silver dollar may not be worth but 40 cents, but it will buy five bushels of corn.

Making "honest" dollars consists in taking the debtor's property and conveying it to the creditor.

While the bankers continue to control the currency they will grow richer and the people poorer.

The farmer who sells five bushels of corn for one dollar has the satisfaction of knowing that the dollar is "good."—Ex.

Gems from Morgan's Buzz-Saw.

Ring rule is no better than king rule.

The average American voter is a king of fools.

Labor produces wealth but enjoys but little of it.

Never ask God to do what you can do vourself.

Laws are for the poor to obey and the rich to evade.

Congress has met, but no one seems to know what for.

If men have a right to govern themselves, why don't they do it?

Every labor saving machine is a competitor for several men's jobs.

The almighty dollar is making the mare go mighty cheap nowadays.

What we need is a law to compel the trusts and corporations to obey the laws.

There are more men "crucified on the cross of the machine" than on the "cross of gold."

When the banks control the volume of money they are masters of exchange and of prices.

The government won't redeem its postage stamps in coin or any other kind of money, but they are worth dollar for dollar all the same.

Bread and Butter Journalism.

There are scores of able newspaper men in this country who are writing editorial and descriptive matter pertaining to social and economic subjects, which they know to be absolutely false. Some of them are compelled by the settled policy of their papers and the ignorance or interest of the owners to stoop to such literary duplicity. They excuse themselves on the ground that falsehoods must be written, and that they might as well be drawing the salaries. There are other newspaper writers who are allowed a certain freedom of expression, but who weakly fall into the habit of scratching the back of monopoly. There are others who bluntly refuse to lie either for profit or for pleasure, and they are the men who are drawing the big salaries. Their genius demands and obtains space in which to express at least part of the truth. Bread and butter editorial thought is a part of our present system of society, and will disappear when men and women reap the full benefit of that which they create, whether it be by brain or hand .- New Time, Chicago.

Beg no question, shrink from no conclusion, but follow truth wherever it may lead. If the conclusions that we reach run counter to our prejudices, let us not flinch; if they challenge institutions that have long been deemed wise and natural, let us not turn back.—HENRY GEORGE.

Lesson on Competition.

The capitalists used to compete with each other; they discovered, however, that to compete meant ruination and they then began to combine their interests. Their began to combine their interests. Their object in forming combinations is to obtain greater profits and greater power. The workingmen compete with each other, they have not yet discovered that in union there is strength, hence, instead of forming combinations for their mutual protection, they compete with each other; each one tries to see how cheaply he can exist so that he may get some other poor devil's job. When the capitalists found the mselves tions and stopped competition with each other, they organized trusts and combinations and stopped competing with each other. When the workingmen find themselves hungry, because of the competition between themselves, do they combine? Well, hardly ever. They would much rather compete and starve.—Rights of Man.

A Sad Affair.

The loss of labor in begging for work is sad to contemplate. With four men waiting and watching for one job, and the whole transient population hunting about for odds and ends of employment, it takes about four days' labor to find one day's work. Under the proper contains the property of the contains the property of the contains the property of the contains t work. Under the proper system of exchange, there would be no floating population prowling about in search of bones and crusts thrown from the tables of those who are so fortunate as to have anything left over. All would have homes and be secured in the right to self-employment at fair rates of exchange. It is just as great an indignity for a man to be obliged to ask for bread .- The Commoner.

We cannot get along without capital and we cannot get along without capital and capitalists. On the contrary, we ought to have more of the latter. In fact, there ought to be at least 69,999,999 capitalists out of 70,000,000 people in this country instead of only so many thousands.—W. J. Steigleder in Chicago Tribune.

We have no justice; what we call justice is the foulest injustice. We have no love in any true or universal sense. We love our families; so do wild beasts; and just like them we rob other families for the benefit of our own. This i ness.—New Charter. This is pure animal selfish-

The Destiny of Capital and Labor.

WE DEFINED capital in the last issue of The Sword, as the accumulation of labor. It is created by the laborer, and rightfully belongs to him. This is an easy proposition. We defined labor as a curse, and an unnatural condition caused by human greed. We distinguish between labor (drudgery, the condition of the wage slave), and industry (the condition of the free man), under the proper adjustment of the laws of righteous economics. Labor is the condition imposed through the original curse. The "original" curse is the same as the present, the curse of the money power. Its love, which is the root of all evil, is the old serpent, the devil. By it the world is forever tempted, and through it the fall and degradation of mankind follow as a consequence. This curse will be removed, for it is declared: "There shall be no more curse." The curse of the money power is the first curse. The curse of labor is the third curse. Its conflict is the third woe. This woe is upon us.

Industry, under the correct adjustment of the laws of use, is recreation. The time is at hand when laborsaving machinery will be devoted to the use for which it was legitimately created—the reduction of labor to the condition of industry. While it increases the facility for production, it will diminish the hours and hardships of labor. The time thus economized will be given to the industrial for his mental and physical development.

Do we advocate the destruction of the wealth of the millionaire, the distribution of his property, and also his reduction to the condition of the poor, through methods of violence? By no means. The laborer as well as the capitalist is in the maelstrom of competism. While he is under this curse, he is as much in the delight of his struggle for wealth as the more fortunate and successful manipulator and combiner of labor. Fortunes are made through combination. Under the competitive system one man (or a number of men) controls the combination and steals the property created by thousands. This is done through all departments of activity. Combination is the secret of great success in the accumulation of wealth—the product of labor. Both parties to this struggle are equally accursed; both must succumb to the overpowering greatness of communism.

Every man has the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, provided, however, that he does not trespass upon the rights of others. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's ox" (bullock) means, thou shalt not deprive thy neighbor of his liberty. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's ass" means, thou shalt not deprive thy neighbor of the wealth that his industry has produced. As wealth is the product of the laborer, and as he is the rightful owner of his productions, education will finally impel him to make a rightful and righteous appropriation of accumulations, for the good of all. It never will be accomplished, however, until, by a renewal of the spirit that actuated the church in the beginning of the age, men shall be overwhelmed with remorse at their violation of the principles of righteousness as exhibited in the world of competism, and renounce it as the work of the devil.

The conflict of "capital and labor" is one phase of the battle of Gog and Magog. Koreshanity does not belong to either side of the conflict. The principle of "capital and labor" will destroy both parties to the conflict. Out of the conflict will arise the kingdom of righteousness, God's kingdom in the earth, the foundation of which is love to the neighbor, established in the organic unity of united life.

Sword Thrusts.

The Fools Are Not All Dead.

THERE is a certain class of fools in the world that claim to know that religion is a useless thing, and have undertaken the task of expunging so unimportant an element from the combination which goes to make up the affairs of life. Religion exists as an effect, for the cause of things holds it in itself as a factor of being, and the fact that it now exists is proof that it is a factor of the perpetutity of the ages of ages. If there are any who do not like our religion, they are not compelled to accept it. We know of some papers advocating things we do not endorse. They are welcome to run their affairs in their own way, and if they are fooling away their time on stuff that we know is mere debris of human thought, they are simply fulfilling their mission in the great alchemic laboratory of metamorphosis. Some people like what we teach, even on the religious lines we are operating,—and we write for them.

The time is at hand when the competitive system will be overthrown. The causes of its overthrow are within itself. The greed of the commercial cormorant will overreach itself. Men are opening their eyes both to their rights and their power. Some one will know, by and by, what fiat means. Some men may awaken to the fact that authority to establish principles of law regarding all things concerning the economics of human existence, resides with men themselves. They may make gold the standard of commercial exchange, or potatoes, if they prefer them.

We do not blame men for becoming disgusted with hypocrisy and its spurious religion of the dark ages, culminating with the present religious condition of the church. But when a man denounces, as an essential element of being, the fundamental principle of production and reproduction,—generation and regeneration,— he simply shows his ignorance. We can do no more than pity and try to educate. Men who are too smart must unlearn much.

No man is saved from going to hell. All men are born in hell. The Savior of men saves from hell those who are in it, and who become conscious of the fact and will repent and forsake the causes which make for mortal existence. Those who seek for immortality are promised eternal life.

Hell is in both the natural and the spiritual world. All men are in hell so long as mortality reigns and man corrupts himself. The Saviour of men comes at stated periods of the world's progress, to save men from hell. Hell is eternal, but no being will ever be consigned to eternal torment.

Some people want to expunge the term religion from our vocabulary, and the principle of religion from the nature of man. They may work on it for the next sixteen billion years and get a little discouraged. The very basis of all life is religion.

The rich almost entirely escape the assessors and tax-gatherers demands, meeting the smallest possible share of the public expenses. It will always be thus under the operation of the hell-born and satanic competitive system.

The poor people of the country pay the taxes. This is not done directly, for they do not pay in money; but they do pay in the burdens heaped upon them in the wage slavery by which means all taxes are met.

We are hastening with accelerating strides toward the judgment cataclysm of the great day of vengeance, the wrath of God.

THE FLAMING SWORD is the weapon of Jehovah, ordained of God to restore the world to the Garden of Eden.

Brief Suggestions and Pointers.

THOSE who are interested in the chronological efforts of the various enterprising gentlemen who have attempted to figure out the time of the Lord's coming and the end of the age, cannot do better than to apply to this office for Prof. Totten's chronological chart. This is a chronological chart giving the calculations of fourteen tables under the names of those who have originated calculations of important events of the world's progress. He entitles the chart "A Chronological Discord in B. C. A. D. Years." We regard the estimates of Prof. Totten correct, so far as time is concerned. The great difficulty attending the efforts of the student to reach definite conclusions regarding the important part of this whole business, is the indefiniteness of the occurrences. Something is about to occur; what is it? and where? Prof. Totten frankly admits that he is not a prophet. That puts him outside the pale of the prophecies regarding the false prophet, unless, while he says he is not a prophet, he still includes in his efforts, an attempt to designate times, despite the fact of his disclaimer. He is a remarkable man, and we believe, sincere.

In the winter of 1869-70, one of the most remarkable events of the world's history occurred. At this time also, came the end of the secular power of the papacy. The kingdom of Rome, founded 753 B.C., existing 2623 years, reached the termination of its secular career. Rome as a secular kingdom came to its end at the time when the Pope declared the dogma of infallibility. The Pope, with the entire Roman Catholic world, believed the time had come to strike. The Franco-Prussian war was the result of papal intrigue, and with the declaration of the dogma of the Pope's infallibility came the effort of the papacy to restore its secular prestige throughout the world. Louis Napoleon and the French Empire were overthrown, and with the fall of these the Pope was dethroned. Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, came to grief. What has this to do with the "Eastern question?" What event should we look for to accompany so great a fall? Prof. Totten, you who through indefatigable calculation can record the tables of chronology, what do you say comes with the fall of Babylon?

The second secon

Immortality is an intermediate state between the state of mortality and eternity. Jesus reached the state of immortality. In it was the power of life and death; —life, to ascend into the higher invisible, through the ascending spirit, the spirit of the man (God); death, to descend through the spirit of the animal (beast), into the conditions of humanity, and to take again the mortal state.

Prof. Totten is publishing a monthly called "The Our Race News Leaflet." It is an interesting work for those who look for the Lord's appearing on the basis of chronological tables, and the establishment of the Kingdom of Peace—regardless of tables. The "News Leaflet" is issued monthly, at 25 cents per month, by the "Our Race" Publishing Company, New Haven, Conn.

The immortal state is identical with devachan of the Hindoo. The dissolving of the body through the electromagnetic combustion which dematerialized the bodies of Enoch, Moses, Elijah, and Jesus, and caused their double absorption upward into spiritual life, and downward into mortal and sensual existence, is absorption into the Nirvana of the Hindoo.

The science of immortal life is contained in the science of the Decalogue, which is written in the language of correspondencies. No man can understand the principles of life embraced in the ten commandments without a knowledge of correspondencies, or as they are explained by one who comprehends correspondential language.

Jesus was both the Father and the Son. His personality was planted in the church by the operation of the Holy Spirit. The sons of God are the multiplied product of his own planting, and are the direct offspring of the Lord Christ who, in his personal presence, was Jehovah.

The firstfruits of the resurrection—the sons of God, product of the planting of the Lord in his church—will attain to immortality. This will obtain in this world. They are to be material men now, at the end of the age, Christ the Lord multiplied.

Men live (exist) and die both in the natural and the spiritual world. Spiritual manifestation, the intercommunication of the two spheres, is no proof of immortal life.

The Girl and the Vala.

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

IN A mystic land, at a witching hour, where the shaddows of a lofty cedar glimmered in the depths of a limped stream, the Girl reclined in the soft grass. In her eyes, bent upon her book, was the intense light of insistent question; on her brow, which knew no furrow, was yet that wondrous imprint of waves of thought beating behind it; in her heart was desire unutterable to understand.

To understand what? Had this question confronted her, she could have given no lucid answer. The book puzzled her; its words seemed vague as shadowy ghosts; yet dimly she felt that once they glowed with life, and swift winged their way to ears that understood, and were pondered deep in hearts that cherished their import.

The low sun shed a lambent light over wood and stream; and, thrilling to the sad glory of the autumn afternoon, she raised her eyes, and saw beside her, at the foot of the cedar, one clothed in white. The Girl felt no surprise. She thought not to note the form or features of this one who sat beside her, yet above: but, looking up into the eyes that met hers, she saw there the gray light of wisdom, and placid joy enfolded and possessed her. In a voice simple, assured, and deferential as that of a child, yet possessing withal the mellow resonance of noble womanhood,—a voice that she would not have known for her own had she herself regarded it,—a voice, indeed, that could not have sounded did she regard it,—the Girl spoke.

"You will lead me to understand. You will teach me to solve the riddle. Tell me who you are."

And in a voice hoar with the silver of ages, yet bright with the gold of youth, mournful as the note of the dove and joyous as the song of the skylark, soft as the foam of the billow, majestic as the melody of multitudinous waters, came the answer:

"I am the Vala."

With awe that threw wide every portal to mind and heart, yet with no amazement, the Girl questioned:

"That mysterious wanderer, that marvelous prophetess, who—can we believe the trancing tale of the Northland—was heard countless ages agone in the halls of Valhalla, when all unseen in the heaven of heavens she sung of wonderful Ygdrasil, and terrible Ragnarok, and of the new heavens and earth where Balder—the White, the Bright, the Princess—shall reign?"

Digitized by GOOS

Again in that voice which was the memory of all voices that ever have been, the promise of all voices that ever shall be, came answer, "I am the Vala."

"Today," said the Girl, "I puzzle over his words whom Judah would not call Messiah. What has the singer of Voluspa, to do with Him?" But the question was not a doubt; it was only a question. And the leaves hushed their whispers, the river stilled its murmur, the wind held its breath, to listen to the answer.

"Not only in the days when Valhal stood did I rise from the deep to unveil the past and future for gods and men. Wherever man has risen to heights of glory, whenever man and his edifice have trembled to fall, has voice of mine been heard. And always has it told of what hath been, of what must be; and yet no desire have I to avert, no desire to hasten, the hour of fate;—but ever would I send man to meet that hour with knowledge of its purpose, with courage for his doom. When Troy walls were tottering, my voice was heard, but not obeyed; the Sphinx on Egypt's sands is a memory of me, and her pyramids point my story; with the great lady of the lightnings, I dwelt under the palm tree between Ramah and Bethel, and Israel listened; with Jesus I grieved for Jerusalem, and the voice is mine that plainted, 'How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen her brood under her wings, and ye would not!'—I was with John in the Isle of Patmos; I directed the gaze of the Seer of Stockholm.

"Mine are the eyelids of the morning, and whoever may find them lifted, and gaze into the depths beneath, knows rest that passeth understanding,—the rest of power that may say to life's stormiest ocean, 'Peace, be still!'—and joy that transmutes all pain and sorrow to its own divine delight. To gaze deep into my eyes is to look into Mimer's fountain, and see long forgotten memories of what hath been, taking shape and life, revealing the Ancient of Days, and the glory of eld, and the purpose of woe; to gaze deeper is to look into the River of Water of Life, and see there reflected the Tree whose leaves are for the healing of the nations, and know how and when and where that water becomes a fountain springing into everlasting life,—to know how strong are the pulses of joy, how glorious promise fulfilled.

"When the central tree flamed at the sounding of Gjallarhorn, and Odin spake with Mimer's head, I was there; and even when the Morning Stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted with joy, my voice of divers tones was mingled in the strain. Yet ever do I come in man's extremity; but not many high, not many mighty, never the proud, hear me. As only the meek may inherit the earth, so only the childlike of heart may know my promise and my glory. These may ask, and I may not refuse to answer. These may command my lore, and no will have I to resist the sweet imperiousness of their trust."

Knowing herself to be one of these, knowing it with the restful certainty that asks no reassurance, yet not divining how she knew,—indeed, not realizing, in external self-consciousness that she did know, the Girl said, "You will teach me."

And the Vala said, "You may ask and I shall answer."

"My questionings are those of a child," returned the Girl, "too foolish, mayhap, to be answered of Wisdom."

That voice of many melodies responded, "The questionings of a child they are, but a child that knows what it asks, and such alone may be answered of Wisdom."

And the Girl knew the answer ere it sounded.

The Vala rose. "The day dies;—on the morrow await me here. On many morrows shall I come, and you shall ask and I shall answer."

She moved into the wood, and the Girl watched her floating grace as she receded, until only vagrant gleams of her robe could be seen among the trees. And still the Girl watched until the trunks of the trees lined up like sentinel soldiers and shut in the last gleam.

Then slowly the Girl passed into the twilight.

In Unity of Spirit; an Allegory.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

ONCE upon a time, a pilgrim set out on a quest for truth and after seeking it many days amid sorrows, with divers and bitter disappointments, he came upon a little group gathered in a certain spot upon a hillside, and an angel stood in the midst to teach them. The force of their aspirations had prevailed to draw him down to them. The world-pain had smitten them sore, and in their hearts was a great weariness; but inasmuch as an element of pure desire and compassion for humanity mingled with their grief, they were able to see the angel and hear his voice; so they earnestly besought him that he would show them how to rise above the earth into the holy realm of light divine and love unquenchable. Then the angel instructed them that in order to rise above the earth they need only fix their eyes and thoughts upon him, and looking up into his face, with strong unity of purpose, a mighty energy would be generated to bear them aloft. When the pilgrim heard these words, he determined to join the company of this people, and eagerly pressed into the circle that stood nearest to the angel toward whom all turned their faces and stood thus waiting and expectant, ready to float lightly and joyously away. But alas! their limbs were leaden and they could not soar. Some invisible attraction seemed ever to draw them back, and repeated efforts only enabled them to rise a little, a very little, above the ground, nor could the angel who was in their midst, prevail either to raise himself more than an arm's length above them or to draw them after him.

Now when they had waited long and anxiously and their hearts were heavy, the pilgrim marveled that the words of the angel were not fulfilled. He looked around at the people and saw their eyes were still fastened upon the leader in the centre, but suddenly it was given him to perceive their thoughts and know the inner and the outer were at strife; for while all looked up to heaven, their thoughts dropped down to earth. Here, one was musing on the home she had left, wondering whether her husband missed her, whether her children mourned while she performed this larger service. There, certain others were beginning to be weary and were sighing that it really was too hard to keep the same attitude so long; their heads ached and their eyes felt strained, besides they were hungry and people could not be expected to go to heaven fasting. Perhaps the angel was mistaken, perhaps he was only a medium for a class of visionary ideas, not the unique Messenger from the divine sphere of pure reason. Some were secretly criticising the angel all the while they were gazing into his countenance; the fashion of his garments vexed them, and his wings were a trifle too short; his expression was not celestial enough to suit them, indeed he seemed in many ways too much like an ordinary mortal to be all he claimed; he certainly did not answer to their conception of an angel, and could never fulfil their ideal of such a character.

There were not lacking those whose sensibilities had been wounded by the angel's manner of speech, which sooth to say, was somewhat blunt; neither did they enjoy being crowded and jostled by all sorts of people who kept coming to join the group. Only see how rude and uncultured some of them appeared! So there was a division and a waste of thought, and thought is substance; no levic energy could be generated, for, to that end, perfect unity of spirit was essential.

As the pilgrim read the thoughts and apprehended the mental quality of the group, he began to despair and was tempted to leave them as some were doing on all sides; then lifting up his heart, he cried mightily within himself: "Lord, what can I do to enlighten the understanding and bring into unison the thoughts of this people?" It seemed in his agony that upon him rested the burden, that he alone was chosen to accomplish the work of the Lord.

Then a low voice in the depths of his own soul responded: "Keep thy heart with all diligence."

The pilgrim suddenly remembered that his thoughts were wandering and his eyes bent upon the ground. He looked up and met the glance of the angel fixed upon him in mute reproach. The same low voice again admonished him: "Wouldst thou rise? begin now to throw aside the weight of every material thought."

A Popular Definition of Religion.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN

AST Sunday evening, a clergyman in one of the Presbyterian churches of Englewood, cited as the best definition of religion, that given by a prominent Unitarian before the Liberal Club of Boston, "Religion is the life of God within the soul." Both the speaker and his auditors accepted this definition as the statement of an active, present reality. They believe that the life of God is inresident with man, that the human soul is the temple of the Most High. Are they justified in such a belief?

Since God is love, where God dwells, there love must be found. "Heavenly love," says Swedenborg, "is of such a nature as to desire that whatever is its own, should be another's."

Last week in the rich and populous city of Chicago, a poor girl made a twice-repeated attempt to end her wretched life by sinking down in the snow to freeze to death. Not long ago, a mother with an infant in her arms was found at the point of death from hunger and exposure, having wandered without food, for four days in the streets of the same city. These incidents are known, but what of the unwritten record of poverty and suffering? What of the lists that are never closed, where the names of the tramp, the criminal, and the pauper are daily and hourly inscribed? Statistics show a large proportion of church members in every community. If their souls are indeed subject to the smallest influx of the divine life whose spontaneous expression is that heavenly love desiring that "whatever is its own should be another's," why is the gulf between the rich and the poor constantly widening? Money means strength and power, as the world goes now. Why should not those who claim "religion, the life of God within the soul, pay the debt of the strong to the weak, and at least halve their gains to supply their brother's needs?

"The people is called one," continues Swedenborg, "where each has for an end the general good of society, of the church and of the Lord's kingdom. But where each regards his own private good as his end, the Lord cannot possibly be present."

This is just our verdict: we heartily agree with Swedenborg, that the Lord cannot possibly be present in a competitive system,—either in or out of the churches. The term religion at the present juncture pertains, not to an existent reality but to a future contingency. When man is re-united to God at a specific time and according to divine methods, he may lay claim truthfully to the life of God within the soul, but that time is not yet. When it comes, the competitive system with all its horrors will be utterly destroyed.

Stray Sparks Flying Here and There.

EVERY corporation, every syndicate, every trust, the press, the pulpit, the judicial tribunals, and our so called lawmakers have outraged decency, made a mockery of justice, fostered immorality and wrong, shielded evil doers, and insulted Deity itself. And yet they pronounce condemnation on the victims of their crimes, issue their mandates with an assurance that would shame satan, howl anarchy at reform, and thank God that they are not like other men.

They say there is no end to space; that the god of the modern church is off on a junketing tour in the unknown and not liable to get back soon; that business comes before pleasure; that business is the one thing needful, and to make business profitable we must have stable money. Gold is the stuff, and the competitive system makes it possible for the holders of gold to compel every one to yield their products to them; ergo; Gold is almighty! Gold is god—god almighty! This is the concept of the world.

Claus Spreckles and his lovely daughter, Mrs. Tom Watson, seem to be in great harmony and of one mind. They both have their desires centered upon some $1, 500,000 worth of property, the love of which has created a fever in their breasts, which requires the aid of the courts to cool. "Sweet [to a sugar king] are the uses of adversity!"

It doesn't pay to be radical; you might hurt the feelings of some little apologist for fraud, or offend the dignity of aristocratic arrogance and conceit. No, my son, don't be radical: taffy is much better to use for business, especially if you want to grease the wheels of the machinery.

The Populists will put a play on the boards entitled "The Curse of Gold." An extensive experience with this class convinces us that they are too thoroughly inoculated with the virus of the love of gold to do more than curse their luck because they cannot get all they want of it.

"Murder will out," and "many a truth is told in jest." An exchange made a telling hit as follows: "Ma," said Johnny, "did I come from heaven, like the baby?" "Yes, my son," said the mother. "Then what did pa mean when he called me a little devil?"

The writer has a job lot of political economy, musty science and religion, which has been accumulating for the past thirty years. Since embarking in the cause of Truth, it has lost all value to us and we will dispose of it without money and without price.

The Professors who have been riding the Copernican hobby through endless space, at the rate of 65,000 miles an hour; think it is the Koreshan Cosmogony that is making them dizzy.

The modern conception of religion is to turn earth into a hell, for God's poor, that an imaginary heaven may the more readily be peopled with demons.

The end has come. The occident has met the orient. This completes the cycle of Mazzaroth. It is a little significant that they meet in the Pacific.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE ENERGIES of the editor of Armstrong's Autonomist are turned against what he terms science. We believe he places himself in the dilemma of inconsistency; he does not deny modern science, and yet he hates it because he feels it to be cold and heartless. Personally, he would prefer fable and fiction to truth. We know what is the matter with him: His natural common sense rebels against the stuff put forth in the world as science, but he does not know the way out of the difficulty. He reaches the conclusion that the evils of the world are the fruit of "science;" he knows that science so called is helpless to benefit mankind, and is therefore useless. We can help him out of his trouble. He joins us in the hatred of the cold, heartless, and useless theories palmed off as science; he should now join us in the appreciation of that which is true. The science of Cellular life is simple enough to understand, but profound enough to call forth from the human heart, unbounded admiration of the real and the highest aspiration for the ideal. It is of use to man. The Science of the Cellular Cosmogony is the great desideratum of the ages. It brings the universe to the plane of comprehension, and has no infinite space to craze the mind in attempt at realization of its extent. Truth is awful to those who despise it, but to those who desire it, it is beneficent, sublime. It is not our enemy; it is the common sense elements of liberty, freedom, and of redemption; it is the unity of the real and the ideal, the science of the natural and the spiritual world. The ideal of self-government can never be reached through ignorance nor fallacy, but only through a knowledge of the truth and application of the principles of life and immortality. If the editor of our esteemed contemporary would make his arm strong, he should dispel the nebula of autono-mist. He has his lesson to learn. The truths of good are the elements of life; the truths about evil are but revelations of the elements of death. We must know the truths of good and evil in order to choose life and overcome death.

The daily press announces the discovery by Prof. Schiel, of a valuable tablet in the ruins of the ancient city Sippara. The transcription of the tablet proves it to be a sort of an account of some deluge, and Dr. Wm. Hayes Ward, American Assyriologist, believes it to be genuine, and a corroboration of the Mosaic account of Noah's flood-indeed, that it is Noah's own account of the deluge. The date places it at about 2140 B. C. It is broken in pieces and much of it cannot be read. Biblical scholars hail it with joy as a corroboration of the Bible. This is the best the so called discoverers and theologians can do for it. We would not depend upon a relic; living testimony is better than records dead with age. We would rather rely upon the testimony of the earth itself, which can be understood, than a tablet, which cannot be. The Koreshan Science of Geology and Cosmogony unravels the story of the flood and places it within range of comprehension. The correct science of Cosmogony corroborates the Bible beyond the possibility of refutation. We take this evidence in preference to anything it corroborates. We appeal to the basis of all science rather than to anything true science supports. This does not make the Bible less true; it supplies absolutely scientific corroboration and interpretation.

It is admitted at both Madrid and Havana that the Cuban insurgents cannot be overcome by force of arms, and the shifting of responsibility from Spain to the colonial government at Havana is a virtual surrender of Cuba to the insurgents, and an acknowledgment of Spain's military and financial weakness. The colonial government is reported as making a new offer of autonomy to the insurgents, which if adopted would place Cuba under the control of the insurgents, with an organized Cuban militia, in which all the insurgent generals and officers would be recognized. We do not believe that the Cubans will accept any scheme of autonomy. They began the war with the determination to win and to gain independence, and it would seem that they are now too near the goal of their hope to accept a scheme which involves the shackles of some gigantic money syndicate. Let Cuba become free! The spirit of independence is hard to overcome; England learned this lesson a century ago when it fought the colonies of America, and lost; and now the Island of Cuba has almost succeeded in humiliating proud Spain, who, a century ago, owned one half of the American continent.

The trial of Emile Zola is attracting the attention of the world, and all eyes are turned toward Paris. The people are anxious to know what a so called civilized nation will do when it is confronted by a man of character and backbone. Zola has had the courage to express his opinion of the secret courts of France; he has flaunted the red flag before the bull in the great European amphitheatre, and if he is skilful enough he will win the laurels of a victorious matadore! We admire his courage in attacking the unjust French court system, which had its origin in a century long since a back number-a system which admits of intrigue and foul conspiracy, condemning the innocent and exonerating the rogues. In our opinion, Dreyfus is the victim of a dark conspiracy originated by the evil-minded Esterhazy because of his hatred of everything Semitic. There is not a town in so called heathendom that contains such a prejudiced and lawless rabble against a distinguished fellow man as enlightened (!) Paris contains today, making demonstrations against the champion of the persecuted Dreyfus.

We take great pleasure in answering the questions of all who desire to investigate Koreshan Astronomy; in fact, that is what we are for—it's our business. Long experience has given us the faculty of patience. We have made a study of science, and are "up" in it. We are familiar with all the theories and hypotheses of the world, concerning geology, astronomy, geography, and kindred topics. And we particularly know our business when it comes to exposition and demonstration of the System promulgated by the Founder of Koreshan Science. We are armed with points, arguments, and facts, and it is a great delight of ours always, to leave the smart up-starts standing on their heads. That you may know to what class of minds we refer, we will tell you; they are those who undertake to demolish the entire System of Koreshan Astronomy without having any knowledge of either our System or the one we oppose!

The U. S. battleship Maine, which was sent to Cuban waters a few weeks ago, has been blown up, and the telegraph cable to Cuba has been cut. At present writing there is great excitement in Madrid, Havana, and Washington. The cause of the explosion is not known definitely. But in our opinion the only reasonable explanation of the disaster is the treachery of Spain; that the warship has been destroyed by Spaniards, and the telegraphic cable, cut to cut off the news from the world. Spain is endeavoring to smooth it over and to trick the United States. McKinley has been tricked a number of times now, by the effete excuse for a kingdom, and we would not be surprised if the U. S. War Department should not come to the conclusion that the explosion was caused by some supernatural power, instead of placing the cause where it belongs.

Last summer a colored man employed in the U. S. Treasury department was caught stealing silver dollars. A count was instituted, and has just been completed; it has required five months' work of a large force of men to count the sum of $797,000,000. The deficit was $859; this amount is eclipsed, however, by the expense of $10,000 to find it, making a total loss of $10,859. Of course, this crime was a great one, but to steal millions is to be crowned with honor!

It is supposed that the depth of our atmosphere is about 45 miles. A scientist has said that if it were 700 miles deep, the sun could not shine through it to the earth's surface. Astronomer Lockyer concluded that the air extends upward about 500 miles. It is really 1,000 miles in depth, and the scientist who thinks it does not admit of sunlight now, has not only the facts to contend with, but Lockyer and other astronomers as well.

A government by the people would be a government whose power is vested in the people. The claim to such a government in America is an illusion. The people have not the power and cannot exercise it. The real power of the United States controls the people through representatives; the President, cabinet, and Congress do not represent the people; they represent the millionaires, not only of the United States but of Europe also.

The difference between an age of faith and an age of science, is the difference of quality of mind in the world's progress. Science demonstrates the substance of faith, just as the plant demonstrates what was in the seed. The seed is planted in faith and confidence; the fruit of the plant is the realization of its hope. Knowledge is superior to faith, and succeeds it. The Koreshan System is not a system of faith.

It is estimated that the money of the world amounts to about $12,130,000,000; of which $4,270,000,000 are gold, $4,270,000,000 silver, and $3,500,000,000 paper money. All the gold coin in the world would make a pyramid 38 feet in height, while the silver pyramid would be 115 feet high, with a base 115 feet square; the paper money would make a pile 47 feet high and 30 feet square.

Judging by the noise made, there are some Loud bills in Congress, while others are evidently quiet in accordance with the saying that silence is golden. The Loud bill seeks to destroy publications issued as second-class matter. We venture the assertion that this bill is backed by the millionaire and the daily press, which is clamoring for a monopoly of the business of publication.

The advance agent of prosperity was advertised to be the proprietor of a great employment agency. Like some smaller concerns, no attention is paid to the application after the fees are obtained. The present employment agency is a fraud, and is obtaining money under false pretenses.

The National Spiritualistic Association meets in Chicago this month. This organization repudiates seances, so called cabinet mysteries, slate-writing, and table-rapping—perhaps on the ground that these accompaniments of spiritistic gatherings are becoming monotonous. We think sometimes, that the spirits might find something else to do for a change!

We would say to all those who desire to overthrow the Koreshan System of Astronomy, that they will have to hunt up some new proofs; the old and worn-out proofs of the astronomical text-books and geographies will not be accepted. Scientific effort must keep up with the times. Get us up something forceful and original!

The true reformation is the reformation of the world in fulfilment of the prophecy, "Behold, I make all things new." It is a work of re-creation. The genuine reformer is the world's re-former; he must have the power of knowledge to reconstruct human society. From thence will evolve all the order of the universe.

Every bill introduced in Congress in favor of the people is quickly put out of sight, while those for the benefit of the millionaire and the trusts are paraded before the people with all the pomp of the daily press and dignity of boodle congressmen.

Can the modern church reform the world? It has all the advantages necessity could ask in the way of property, press, and people. With all these the world is not reformed; the church itself is going to pieces.

Jesus the Christ was a friend of the poor. Whoever is not a friend of the poor today does not partake of the character of the Christ, no matter what his pretensions may be.

If the politicians of the country are corrupt, the country's politics is corrupt also. The laws of the country and methods of their execution are no better.

Isn't it strange that people who cannot explain the phenomena of the heavens from the standpoint of the Copernican system, are so quick to conclude what must obtain in the universe if we live inside of it?

If the advance agent of prosperity would go back and follow up the show he has advertised, he would find that it is not going according to program. The circus cannot travel; the elephant's sick.

Rev. Utter says, concerning the little spat on the subject of astronomy, that talk is easy. Of course that is the only possible explanation of how he has uttered so much without saying anything!

The true reformer must reveal two things: the truth and the corruption of the people. The former is his sole protection while he attacks the latter.

If the pious faces of the world were unmasked we would find the devil in the pulpit and the pew, as well as in Congress and the saloon.

If we were compelled to take our choice between intoxication by fallacy and intoxication by alcohol, we would choose the latter.

The real thing that the people call patriotism is nothing more nor less than fidelity to the money power.

According to the meaning of the word, a citizen cannot live in the rural districts; he is a city-zen.

There can be no successful reformation until the business of the millionaire is destroyed.

All of the activities of the world today contribute to the wealth of the millionaire.

The people have no rights; they are always talking about their wrongs.

Theocracy is the only true form of government.

Quiet Talks with the Editors of our Exchanges.

EVER STOP to ask yourself to what extent the popular beliefs of the world would be revolutionized if the Koreshan Astronomy be true? Suppose you think about it for a brief moment while we suggest a few thoughts. We have made a study of the whole matter, and know just where all modern theories are contradicted by the fact that the universe is a cell. Take theology, for instance. You know what you have always believed about God -away off in the sky somewhere, billions of miles distant, or as infinite spirit pervading all space like ether. If the universe is a cell, there could be no such thing as infinity of space, nor such an almighty extending without limit in all directions. On the basis of the Cellular Cosmogony all modern conceptions of God would be changed. The science of theology, therefore, is made to depend upon the science of universal form. No man can know anything about the Creator of the universe if he knows nothing whatever about the Creator's work; we must first understand the Creator by his work, he "being perceived by the things which are made" (Rom. i: 20). Does it seem consistent that men should pose as teachers of theology or science of God, when they are ignorant of even natural laws which govern the physical universe? The science of theology cannot be known until the science of cosmogony is discovered. So you see how important, from a theological standpoint, is the knowledge of the form of the universe. If the universe is a cell, all of the so called science of physics is a fallacy, and chemistry an absurdity; Newton's theory of gravitation has no place in the mind of the true scientist, and the nebular hypothesis would vanish like the mists, and all the stargauging and digging canals on Mars would be nothing but foolishness, because of a fallacious premise, the supposition that we are living on the exterior surface of an earth in a formless, limitless universe.

Is it not perfectly rational to conclude that science, true science, contains the key to the solution of all social questions? You know very well that ignorance could never suggest a true remedy for all the world's evils; science must do it. Fallacious science does not, that is settled; you know it does not; that is, so called science of the world today does not guide the reformer to a correct system of social economy. It cannot, and therefore it is not the true science that involves the key. To save the world from its bondage requires but two things-the knowledge of what to do, and the knowledge of how to do it. What has astronomy or cosmogony to do with the question? It teaches the laws of human origin and destiny, and consequently the laws of human relations and the construction of human society. An infallible guide is better than to hit blindly at random. The universe is the pattern of the true social system; the science of organic unity is revealed in the science of the form and function of the physical cosmos. That science is natural, and susceptible of demonstration; it is premised upon the shape of the world. The pivot of demonstration of the earth's form is in the possibility of determination of the character of the surface that we inhabit. Has that ever been done? Not until the discovery of the principles of the Koreshan System of Cosmogony.

Reformation of the world must begin in the world of thought and of idea. Absolutely correct adjustment must first obtain there, or else fallacy will be manifest, and an inadequate system put forth.

The world has whirled long enough; Koreshan Astronomy now proposes to give it a rest, and from henceforth the earth will be a stationary electro-magnetic battery.

As Editors See Us and as We See Editors.

The Flaming Sword and Koreshan System.

THE FLAMING SWORD of Chicago, of Jan. 21 contained an article entitled "$1,000 for editors who will publish a scientific refutation of the Koreshan Cosmogony, or what would be its equivalent—a single fact in demonstration of the theory that the earth is convex, and that we live on its exterior surface, or in support of any other theory of the shape of the world than the universe as a cell with its habitable surface concave."

We shall refer to the matter at length in a future issue of The Advocate of Common Sense. (1) But before we can put the Koreshan System to a test of common sense, we must understand the process thoroughly, which constitutes the same. Where shall I procure it? We are anxious to learn how it refutes the present accepted science of astronomy and geometry, the rotation of our globe on its axis in 24 hours, moving through space in an orbit about the sun at the rate of 18 miles per second. We should like to see you refute it. (2) Why are we asked to believe that your system is true and every other system and belief false? Why are we asked by THE FLAMING SWORD to believe that there isn't a single, solitary thing outside of the earth in existence; that the planetary system which we see in the horizon and of which astronomers talk about, is nothing more than the reflection of our own gas and electric lights? (4) Why are we asked by you to believe that the sun is not in the horizon, but occupies a little place in the center of our earth in the shape of a galvano-magnetic battery, and that what we claim to be the sun in the horizon is nothing but its reflection?

You talk about the sun and how it occupies a little place in the center of our You, in your efforts, endeavor to prove that it projects or extends its rays of light and heat up into the sky, that it then and there not only lights and warms up the sky, but produces the different seasons here on the earth; produces the growth of vegetation and the cause that kills it. (5) Is this what you call the Koreshan System? You offer $1,000 to any editor who proves your system wrong. (6) If you can see any grains of truth in it why don't you prove them? (7) Why are we asked by you to believe that the exact thickness, circumference, and diameter of the earth are ascertained, not by geometry, but by a calcula-tion of the substance of which the earth is composed?

Why are we asked by you to believe that the dimension, convex, concave, or thickness of the earth or of anything else is never correctly ascertained by geometry, but by a chemical analysis? Suppose you hire a surveyor to ascertain for you the dimension of a piece of land, and instead of running lines by the compass and measuring length with a chain, he would resort to a chemical analysis of the soil and atmosphere, and from the weight of the different substances of which the soil and atmosphere were composed would make his calculation and determine the dimensions, convex, concave or thickness of the earth, what would you think of him? How could you safely rely upon his system?

How you can ascertain the exact thickness, circumference and diameter of a drop of water by its weight or by the substances of which it is composed, when we know that under conditions of heat, it expands to an immense size without increasing its weight or substance, is a question which I would like to have you answer. (8) These few lines may set you to work and may assist you to prove your system to be correct or utterly false.

(9) The cosmogony of the earth is similar to the production of an egg, which contains, develops and hatches billions of different lives. The earth is no more hollow than an egg. Hollow, empty things cannot produce life.—The Advocate of Common Sense, Jacksonville, Fla.

Thanks for the above; evidently our offer of $1,000 is stirring the editors up a little. The reward is easy to get if the Koreshan System can be proven to be false, but difficult if we are right. We desire to get about twenty-five editors competing for the prize. This would increase interest, not only in THE FLAMING SWORD, but in the papers published by those who fight to win the reward. We desire to kindly reply to the above, and have numbered the points: (1) Yes, you must investigate Koreshan Astronomy before attempting to overthrow it. We will supply all contestants with sufficient reading matter free of charge. The New Geodesv will be the work to study-now issuing. (2) We do not ask any one to believe Koreshan Astronomy; we appeal to facts, to a premise of facts. Reason and logic fix the conclusions; there is no "belief" about it. (3) Everything in existence has form; limitation is a factor of form. If the earth is a cell its environ or shell is the limit of existence, because the limit of form, beyond which there can be nothing. (4) The science of the sun and its relation to the earth, the explanation of sunrise and sunset, are not matters of belief, but of scientific demonstration. (5) We would not state our conclusions in this way. (6) The Geodetic Staff of the Koreshan Unity has spent twelve months in the work of survey and specific experimentation on the water's surface in demonstration of the water's concavity. We demonstrate our premise; the Koreshan System is entirely proven. We assume nothing; we kick hypotheses clear off our premises, and ask every reasonable mind to evict such tenants; they have no place in science. (7) You misunderstand some things you have read concerning the matter of ascertaining the thickness of the earth's shell. We determine the size of the earth by Geodetic Survey; it is about 8,000 miles in diameter. We use all the facts of earth-measurement everywhere, and all astronomical and geographical facts known to the world. We employ geometrical principles in determining the earth's size. When it comes to ascertaining the thickness of the great egg-shell, we make calculations from the basis of the specific gravity of the substances comprising the same; it is simple when you once understand it. (8) We have been at work this long while, and by this time we ought to know our lesson well. The Founder of the Koreshan System not only discovered the form of the universe, but also the means of demonstrating its shape; we have applied these means. (9) We do not advocate that the earth is empty, but hollow in contrast with the idea of the solid earth. The earth is like e. brain cell; it is full of substance, and the central nucleus and circumferential environ are reciprocally related. The inhabitants of the earth live inside of it.

Who Can Decide?

On the same subject George P. Pierce, Deshler, Ohio, has this to say:

"Dr. Teed and Professor Morrow claim the earth is a hollow sphere and that we live inside it on the concave surface. Earth's surface is concave in places. Brother Ferguson thinks it is rather flat, with dips and swells. So it is, longitudinally. Prof. Vail and the astronomers are sure it is a globe. Partly right, gentlemen, it is rounded latitudinally. Oblong, cylindrical, tapers some."

Now the readers of the Voice of Truth can and must decide for themselves as to whether this earth is round, square or a hollow tube and rest assured that be it as it may the time is soon coming when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also;" "nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," says "He that sitteth upon the CIRCLE OF THE EARTH, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in." — Voice of Truth, San Diego, Cal.

We maintain that no one can decide what is the shape of the world nor what is the solution of any other question, if he does not start out with a known premise, and we are sure that neither the readers of the Voice of Truth nor its editor can decide the question of the shape of the universe without making some addition to their stock of knowledge of facts. The earth's own surface is tangible enough to settle the question of the earth's shape; we have demonstrated its concavity. The teachings of Solomon concerning the law of repetition of all things that have been in the things that are and will be, agree with the statements that "the earth abideth forever," and "Behold, I make all things new," which imply that the same earth is renewed at definite periods. It does not change its shape from a cell to a rectangle, nor a cone, nor a hollow tube, nor a flat surface. Its environ or shell, the limit of the sphere, the arc of the firmament, is the "circle (Heb. chug, limit, compass, environ, boundary) of the earth" referred to in Isa. x1:22 and Prov. viii:27. The concave earth is the "hollow of his hand," in which the waters are held and the mountains weighed.

Universal Reform.

I like THE FLAMING SWORD—a Chicago journal devoted to Koreshanity. It has a good deal of nonsense about government of the gods, but there are occasional gleams of genuine gold. For instance, it says: "The usual reforms are projected on too small a scale. Nationalists do not look forward to a universal government. Popular reform means only to modify, not to revolutionize existing institutions. The new system of government will be universally adapted to all peoples."—Armstrong's Autonomist, Waco, Texas.

The "nonsense about the government of the gods" referred to above is simply our esteemed Autonomist's misconception of Koreshan Science, but we give him credit for being able to perceive some good in THE FLAMING SWORD. There is more of it there too, that he might see. The coming government of the gods will be the government of actual, tangible men here in the earth. It is but a matter of time when humanity will have progressed to a higher plane of thought and life. We advocate that a new race will develop, and that that race will rule the world; we advocate this in contradistinction with the doctrine of self-government at the present time of ignorance and depravity, when modern fallacy makes man feel like an insect but claim to be a god. The new race will be autonomists in every sense of the term, and will be the only gods that we know anything about. Any nonsense about that?

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

"The more we get the more we want," is just as true with us when it comes to the number of subscribers, as it is with the millionaire and his money. Papers having a large circulation put forth extraordinary efforts to double it. It is not a sign of a small circulation to ask for more readers. Papers like the Ladies' Home Journal, with several hundred thousand circulation, employ every possible means in the world to obtain subscribers. Diligence is a sign of success, prosperity, and encouragement. It is not a sign that the circulation of THE FLAMING SWORD is falling off when we begin a campaign to run our subscription list up to 50,000. The 50,000 mark! Will you help us reach it? We must reach it; but the editorial and managing departments cannot leave the work here to go out in the field to do what others will be glad to do for us. We are going to give you some pointers about work for us-for our benefit and for yours; we can make it pay you. Look at these columns in future numbers for some things that will attract your eye, and appeal to your reason and your sympathy-something that will engage your interests in behalf of our propaganda. In response to our call for workers, we have received many encouraging letters; scores of you have said, "We will help you all we can; tell us what to do." We are beginning to push our work as never before. The central point has been busy, and now we must extend our activities to the circumference of our subscribers.

We have a list of interested persons who are poor, and to whom we gladly send THE SWORD without cash remittance from them. We like to do this, for "the poor have the gospel preached unto them." Are you one of these? Well, then, look at this a minute: We have to obey postal laws. just as you have to obey the laws which ask you not to kill people. You have to renew your subscription every year-if you get it on this basis, you will have to ask for it every twelve months in order to get it. otherwise we shall be obliged to cut you off. We would rather do this than have the inspector cut us off! Another thing: You must do something that we can in some way accept as payment of subscription. Distribute papers and circulars for us, canvass your neighbors, and get two or three subscribers a year. Can't you do this? Write us right away, if you haven't done so within the past twelve months, asking to have THE SWORD continued, and that you will endeavor to get us subscribers.

We know that our readers will appreciate the very excellent contribution by Rev. E. M. Castle, "The Girl and the Vala." This is the first of a series of conversations between these two mystical characters. This is not a continued story; each conversation will be complete in itself, and independent of others. They are destined to become very popular with our large circle of readers. The idea is simply unique. You will look into the face of the mysterious Vala with profound respect. Form the image of the beautiful inquirer in your mind; make her character, her simplicity, and receptivity to impression, your own, and when the Vala visits again you will welcome the face, and learn many things concerning the profound mysteries of life.

The unseen page 16 of THE FLAMING SWORD, concerning which there is so much curiosity, is progressing. We have seen much of it ourselves, and are not tired of it—not so tired of it as you are waiting for it, anyway; but when it appears it will give you a rest by increasing your mental activity. It is a thought-provoker—quite provoking, to be sure, before it appears, and more so afterwards—as you will see. Do not be discouraged—we are not. We look at it with enthusiasm, and enthusiasm is catching.

We supply more reading matter in one year than any monthly magazine published at $1 per year. Take the New Time, for instance: It is a 100-page monthly, and in one year contains about 49,000 square inches of reading matter. The Flaming Sword is a 16-page weekly, and prints about 63,000 square inches of original matter in one year. We will compare space with any others, as well as price, and quality of matter from a literary standpoint, and will make special comparison of the amount of genuine Truth per page!

"The Destiny of Capital and Labor," No. 2, by Koresh, is a continuation of the excellent article under the same head in last week's Flaming Sword. Many of the articles by the Founder of Koreshanity are being reprinted in other journals, and this arraignment of the old church and state is worthy of being published in every paper in America and the world. The short paragraphs, "The Sword Thrusts," are always welcomed by our readers.

Last week's Sword was your valentine, a real, genuine valentine, without any burlesque. This one will do to celebrate Washington's birthday with. So far as we can see, The Flaming Sword is the only representative of George Washington—it cannot tell a lie!

Time was when the pen was "mightier than the sword;" but now THE FLAMING SWORD is mightier than the pen. If you do not believe it, try your pen against it!

THE FLAMING SWORD carves out the destiny of the nations. It is the only paper that makes genuinely cutting remarks.

If the date on your SWORD wrapper is in the past your subscription has expired.

* * * To Whom It May Concern:

JESSE LEE, on J. N. LEE, and his headquarters as Tiffin, Ohio, and who is in correspondence with many sex Liberals, is a member of the U.S. SECRET SERVICE, which is practically under the control of Anthony Comstock, of New York. LOUIS J. LIVINGSTON, Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 11, 1898.

Books and Periodicals Received.

Even as You and I, by Bolton Hall, of New York. F. Tennyson Neely, publisher, New York City.

We have received 160 pages of advanced sheets of this work; we were not long in getting "into the middle of it," enjoying the author's unique style. Hon. Bolton Hall is well known as a reform author, he having written, "Who Pays your Taxes?" and "Stories for Little Citizens," and contributed articles for years to such journals as the Voice, Arena, and the Outlook. This work now before us, contains short, interesting chapters-in the style and form of parables, picturing the economic conditions under the reign of competism. The lessons are simple and forceful, and all our readers would enjoy them, as we have.

A Monstrous Money System, by George I. Wilson. 30 pages, several fine grams, price 10 cts. J. J. Stree Streetor. publisher, 632 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

This pamphlet is worth dollars instead of cents, because in a unique way-by diagrams, the author contrasts the prevailing monstrous money system, with the common sense paper money. It advocates the demonetization of both gold and silver, and would substitute aluminum where hard and convenient money is desired. The pamphlet is written in the style of questions and answers, and is worthy of the study of all our advanced readers, and we commend it to them. There is much in it that is similar to that which we have advocated for years. The author has the correct view concerning flat money, and concerning the evils that grow out of the fallacy that gold possesses intrinsically the value stamped upon it.

Our Race Series, by Prof. C. A. L. Totten, 4th quarter, 1897. Outcome of History, Facts of Destiny. $2 per year. Our Race Publishing Co., New Haven, Conn.

Each number of this series contains about three hundred pages, and is in the form of a book. Many of our readers are already acquainted with this series, and with the work of Prof. Totten as a chronologist. There are a number of interesting articles in this number, especially The Might of an Idea, A Mysterious Disappearance, and the Sign of the Cross. In the Editorial Department there are also some interesting things: Facts in which We are Factors, is an editorial pointing out the supremacy of English blood and language, and the fact that the greatest activity of the world today is in those who speak the English language. This is true, -not especially applicable to England, but to America. The destiny of Israel, not simply that of the lost ten tribes, but the twelve, is linked with the destiny of the English-speaking world. Prof. Totten has succeeded in placing his ethnological views somewhat prominently before the world; just how Israel is connected with England and America there is a difference between him and the facts of ethnology. His work, however, possesses value; we welcome all effort at breaking down old institutions. Prof. Totten's chronology is practically correct.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

Inevitable Visitation of Judgment Upon the Oppressor.

HERE have been periods in the world's history and in the career of nations, when wrongs-encouraged and perpetrated by the power which legal enactments authorize—have been resisted both as a virtue and a duty. More illustrious than any other record of the successful resentment and overthrow of oppression, was the triumph of Israel over the hosts of Pharaoh, when, after years of humiliation, the posterity of Abraham, impulsed by the inspiring breath of Jehovah, were emancipated from their Egyptian thraldom. The murmurings of the Israelitish multitude beat upon the unresponsive ears of their bond-masters, until those murmurings became the thunderous tones of a mighty revolution, establishing the line of demarkation between Egypt's boasted prosperity and the beginning of her declension.

The throne of affluence—reared upon the pedestal of subjection and poverty; a throne for the exalted few who are made prosperous by their skilful manipulation of the impoverished millions—is a throne established only to totter and crumble to decay. When the cup of Egypt's crime was full, the vial of Jehovah's wrath was poured upon the offending nation, and swift and dire were her retribution and calamity.

One of the inexorable laws of human experience and progress, is that of judgment upon those who violate the principles of justice; and the prescient iteration, "Without shedding of blood is no remission" of sins, is verified in all the history of the past, as also authenticated in prophetic declaration. The history of the past is the record of our own experience in the progress we have made to reach the status of our present attainment; and some of us, through judgment inflicted upon us for the wrongs committed in other incarnations, have incorporated the laws of comprehension by which we are enabled to discriminate between good and evil, and to appropriate the one and discard the other.

A broader and more offensive bondage oppresses a greater multitude today, and the mutterings of this discontented host—ruled by a plutocracy whose power to afflict arises from the legislative authority and also the artistic and creative skill of the downtrodden—are but the warnings of an imminent national and international catastrophe of which, volcano-like, the mutterings of this universal discontent are the seethings precursory to the final eruption. The education of a rapidly multiplying mass into the conviction of its legitimate claim to the wealth of its creation, grows more impressively ominous as the engendered fear of the legal pirate causes him to tremble in beholding the mobilization of this Armageddon of a better knowledge of the rights of men.

A corporation like the city of Chicago or any of the municipalities of the world, marches in its growth over the resistance and claims of the thousands who act individually, when what are supposed to be the necessities of the city, demand the subversion of individual rights. What should be the rights of the collective body have come to be the demands of corporations, invariably met through the power of wealth to purchase legislation. A greater necessity than the demands of a city's progress arises when the people—borne down by plutocratic oppression and the subsidy of national, state, and municipal legislation—are robbed and their rights desecrated. The multitude acting as a body has the right of might, and when justice is incorporated in that prerogative, ten thousand-fold is its authorization to amend the existing standards of social and financial bearing.

Not only have the masses, acting in unity, the right to fix the standard of valuation, but the further right to determine the end to which the accumulations of wealth shall be appropriated. We await the solemn hour of the fulness of the cup of iniquity, and the outpouring of the vial of Jehovah's vengeance.

The Conception and Construction of the City of Destiny.

The Significance of the Cuban Struggle.

THE COMING kingdom, in fulfilment of the prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," will be a material Theocracy. The very laws of the physical universe indicate this in signs which are unmistakable. "I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." This New Jerusalem, before descending, is a spiritual city. It is constituted of such as have been gathered out of all conditions in the spiritual world, into the twelve spiritual divisions of the aggregate spiritual order. The spiritual world is the world of mind. Its home is in the brain of man, and it is made up of actual, spiritual entities. Every thought is a spiritual being. The human mind thinks naturally, and all its conclusions are predicated upon observations through the physical senses. It is only when the second stratum of the cortical area becomes active in mental impulse, that the mind can become truly conscious of genuine spiritual states.

To render this subject more lucid, the student must understand that the cortex of the brain is composed of two layers of gray matter, between which there is the most delicate fibrile texture, which constitutes a bond of unity and operation between these two cortical planes. Ordinary mental operations belong to the outer cortex and the subjoined fibrous film. The under cortical area belongs only to animal life, until opened through a higher mental development, when it becomes the material basis of superior mental operations. The interposed film is the realm of spirits as distinct from forms of existence occupying the cells of the cortex. The New Jerusalem is in the sphere of the intermediate film.

The gathering of the twelve tribes of Israel into the New Jerusalem is what is signified by the gathering of the two Houses. The resurrection has already taken place in that domain, and the New Jerusalem is prepared to descend as a bride adorned for her husband. The husband is the coming up or the arising of the sons of God, into whom the New Jerusalem flows. There will never be a gathering of Judah and Israel as such, in the natural, because it is contrary to the laws of order. The real Judah was gathered in the personal Lord and his church. The real house of Israel was scattered through

The sons of God are the offspring of God. No man or woman who denies the Messiahship of the Lord Christ the infiltration of the ten tribes in the people with whom they intermarried. The product of this is the Germanic family. The Lord and his church descended into this people. It is through this descent and union of the Lord and his church, that the houses of Judah and Israel combine, and from this combination that the twelve tribes are gathered into the spiritual Jerusalem in the spiritual world.

The descent of the spiritual Jerusalem will not result in the production of twelve tribes, but in the formation of seven churches. The new material product of the marriage of the Lamb and the Bride, will first be manifest as the sons of God. The Jews throughout the world will not be gathered into the old Palestine. They are not included in the fulfilment of the promises to Judah and Jerusalem. Judah was gathered in the Lord and his Jewish church, which was planted in the descendants of Joseph's posterity, now especially culminating in the Anglo-Saxon.

As John saw the New Jerusalem descending from God out of heaven, she is defined to be four square; that is, a cube. This has no reference to a geometric cube but it does involve the relations of a numerical cube to the essential cube root from which it proceeds. At the point where the struggle for supremacy now wages, the struggle for a new birth, the point toward which the arrow of destiny was projected from the bow of promise, the point which constitutes the key to the continents of America and the Gibraltar of the world, where Columbus (name emblematic of the Holy Spirit, the Christbearer to the new world) headed his armada of discovery, there is being made preparation for the New Jerusalem, whose surface plan for construction will embrace at least five hundred miles. Cuba was the land toward which the fleet of the great discoverer wasdirected by divine prescience, as the opening wedge for the birth of another world, and a special destiny awaits this sacred center of Providential purpose.

The ordeal through which Cuba is now passing is but the reflection in earth of the Cube descending from heaven as John saw her, lying four square, the length, the height, and the breadth being equal. According to the measurement, a dimension of fifteen hundred miles is incorporated as the ground plan of the City of Destiny.

can hope—without repentance, confession, and obedience to law—to become his offspring.

Sword Thrusts.

44 A LAMB stood on the Mount Zion [state of immortality], and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads." These are the sons of God, firstfruits of the resurrection, material beings like Christ the Lord, of the same kind, redeemed from among men. They proceed from the Lord through his own implantation in his church; they are his offspring, perform his will, are kings and priests unto God. These comprise the order of Melchizedek, and rule the world. They have the power to dematerialize and materialize at will, to appear in any place and disappear at will. They are higher than the angels, and will instruct angels and spirits. This fruit of the ages is now about to ripen through processes that can only operate through intellectual perception of truth, taught only through the literature of the Guiding Star Publishing House.

There is no operation of natural law that is not the result either of the application of voluntary exercise, remotely but directly enforced, or of involuntary application, as a reflex action of voluntary energizing, indirectly applied. The term directly, as herein employed, signifies in a direct line of action, and is not to be understood as synonymous with immediate action.

So called natural laws have their primary and remote origin in voluntary and involuntary mental action. Voluntary mental action is what the mind consciously and actively wills to perform. Involuntary mental action is what the mind unconsciously and passively performs at the time and while in the act of volitional or wilful exercise.

"To all that believe in his name gives he power to become the sons of God." The destiny of man is to be born of God. When thus born, man has attained to his immortal state, then he belongs to the family of God; then he is king and priest unto God, then he is the offspring of Deity.

The perfection of the sons of God at the end of the dispensation is the result of the process of re-generation (re-production), and is identical with the resurrection of the dead or reincarnation.

Vibration the Secret of Rest.

The Girl and the Vala (No. 2).

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

THE Girl sat beneath the cedar; the Vala sat beside her, yet above.

As one that feels no need of preface, directly the Girl spoke. "Tell me, O Vala, the secret of that rest promised by Jesus to them that labor and are burdened. These are the words over which I puzzled, and earnestly have I striven to find their meaning, and ever does it elude me. Sometimes it has seemed to me that the meaning, which is the spirit of words, has parted from these; and that, desiring to find this spirit, in vain do I regard the form. But if so beautiful even without the spirit, how wonderful must they have been when instinct with life! And yet—O horror! - as an automaton might be made to walk and talk and simulate life, by means of some dreadful mechanism, so have I seen these paraded grotesquely by those who pretend, in such ways, to minister to man's salvation. Restore for me, O wise one, their spirit."

"Girl," and the Vala's voice was very tender, "you have much to learn; but you are ripe to learn. Know that the characters on the page you read are but the symbols of the words that once were spoken, that once were written. And, as not till man solves the problem symbolized by the sphinx can he realize the fitness of the symbol, so not till man knows the words of life can he read the record of these words aright."

With the sublime patience of little children who wait upon the will of their elders, the Girl asked, "Shall I one day know these words?"

"One day you shall know. More of this anon. Let me tell you now the secret of rest."

"Yea, tell me the secret of rest. But a score of years have I been in this life, yet the burden of the centuries is on me, though I know not why, and I long for rest."

"Many times, Girl, have you been born into this life, that you might experience many varieties of the pleasure such life can give, and the pain which is the shadow of its pleasure, but no repose. Soon you shall find a rest, which means a different life."

Insistently as the child that clings to its desire, yet without impatience, the Girl repeated, "Tell me the secret of rest."

Deeply and impressively the Vala said the word "Vibration."

Long did the Girl gaze into the eyes above her; then slowly spoke. "I have read that through an understanding of the principle of vibration, man might accomplish wonderful feats, such as flying through the air with no more effort than now he makes in walking; and truly, the doing of many things which now tire me would be less fatiguing could I overcome my own weight, and it would often simplify locomotion to fly; yet I feel that not this could give the rest I desire. Neither do I long for inactivity. Often have I sung, 'O had I the wings o a dove!' and ever, albeit but vaguely, I have sensed a deeper meaning, and this meaning would I grasp. Perhaps I have dreamed that one would come into my life, bringing me rest." She spoke the last words lingeringly; then, with sudden change, her bright gaze straining into the eyes above her, asked, "Are you the one?"

The Vala said no word; but smiled with ineffable sweetness. And the Girl was answered.

After a pregnant pause the Vala spoke: "Have you not read in your book of one to come who is the City of God?"

"Nay," said the Girl; "but I have read of him that shall overcome, and that on him shall be written the name of that city, New Jerusalem, and also God's name. But this has seemed deeply strange to me, for why should the name of God be written on a man?"

"For the same reason that the name of your book is written on its cover."

"To identify him as God?" And the Vala confirmed the conclusion.

"Ah! that God should be a man is wonderful! Yet the thought is sweet to me. But how could a man be a city? A city is an aggregation of beings. True, the Book speaks of the New Jerusalem as a woman, a bride descending from heaven; but this has seemed incomprehensible to me."

"You say well, an aggregation of beings; for, as there are natural cities, so are there spiritual cities, not peopled with persons, yet peopled with beings, and such a city a man's brain might hold."

"Ah!" cried the Girl with animation, "I understand! It has been said that poets have a vision denied to others; and our great Tennyson, whom I love, describes the spiritual city, seen by Sir Percivale at Galahad's departure, as one pearl, 'no larger, though the goal of all the saints.' Well might such a city be contained in a man's brain; and well would such a man, if such could be, deserve the name of that Holy City!" The Vala's glance approved; whereupon the Girl concluded, "But no man's name is visible on him, as the name on the cover of a book."

"His character is revealed by his expression of thought and the actions of his life; and the name that is adequate reveals the same. By his thought and his life we may know if this be his name."

"And if it be his name?"

"To those who know what names imply, mine tells that I am she who, on Ladon's bank, was a reed shaken by the wind, and, trembling into sound, became the seven-voiced pipe of Pan, fit instrument to sing the universal story,—she who unveils all mysteries, knows the end from the beginning, and tells of generation, and ruin, and regeneration. So the name, New Jerusalem, identifies its possessor as the center of vibration that brings rest to the world."

With deeply meditative gaze, and slow musing voice, the Girl spoke. "Jesus promised rest, but did not give it then,—for so I understand Paul's words, that rest yet remained to be realized; and when Peter asked, 'Whither goest thou?' Jesus said he went to prepare a place—this place of rest, I take it—and that he would come again to receive them unto himself;—into this place of rest, perhaps. Would such a one, upon whom might be named the name of this city, be Jesus come again?"

"Ay; Jesus come again; and yet not Jesus; as Jesus was Moses and Elias—which arcanum he opened on the Mount—and yet neither Moses nor Elias, but other. And how this could be, you shall one day know."

"I know that Jerusalem means foundation of peace, from which I can reason that it means the establishment of rest; but how does it mean rest through vibration?"

That part of the word which you define foundation means, in its genesis, tremble, or vibrate. A foundation implies a pouring, and only through vibration can matter be reduced to fluent energy to be poured or cast into new form. Man's external existence that is now the foundation of unrest, disease, and death, is to be sublimated into the foundation of peace. So supremely attractive is that city, which your poet likens to a pearl —and it is, indeed, the pearl of price, and one day I shall tell you how, as Cleopatra's pearl dissolved in vinegar, this pearl melts in the upward flow of human desire, precipitating that salvatory essence which becomes the salt of the earth,—so supremely attractive is it, Girl, that it may polarize human energy in the creation of a mighty battery that will vibrate the world, neutralizing the gravic tendency of the old humanity, raising man on high, thence to be cast as the foundation of a pure humanity in earth. This is the true process of sublimation, and thus only may man's life in earth become sublime.'

"But I have thought of a material city, more glorious than old Jerusalem in Solomon's day, or ancient Thebes, or Babylon, or Nineveh, to which the glory of Athens or Rome could not compare, as the New Jerusalem."

"That is to be; but never could such a city be realized in earth were it not first in the brain of man. Every wonderful invention of these days of invention, must first exist in a human brain, before being wrought out in material form. And so that city, which with its inhabitants will be the permanent place of rest in earth, the vibratory center of interest which will overcome the heaviness of existence, and restore buoyancy and youth to the race, first finds habitation in a brain."

"In whose brain?"

"His on whom is written God's new name."

"And you, O Vala?"

"I am one with him."

And the Vala rose, and withdrew within the recesses of the wood. But the Girl sat long beside the stream, pondered deeply, and—comprehended what she had no words to tell.

The Main Chance.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

DICKENS has embodied a large amount of philosophy and sunshine in the character of Mark Tapley who was constantly seeking a situation fraught with difficulties and embarassments,—just the kind that most people are solicitous to avoid—because in unfavorable conditions his virtues might shine the more brilliantly and he rejoice in the consciousness that "it was a credit to him to be jolly under the circumstances."

When Mark found himself stranded in the settlement of New Harmony, consisting of a half dozen wretched cabins on the verge of a malarial southern swamp where the few surviving settlers, enticed hither by the wily misrepresentations of swindling sharpers, were fast dying of chills and fever, his spontaneous cheerfulness was a godsend to the disheartened community. He was cheated and his master was cheated; they had invested their joint capital in the enterprise, and must borrow the money to get away from the dismal spot. But Mark hailed this as the opportunity of his life. The main chance was there—not in the ordinary, vulgar acceptation of the phrase as pertaining to sordid advantages but the chance for development, and he improved it eagerly.

The chance to work toward the ideal in character is, in the higher sense, the main chance of existence, one that is denied to none; for as no type of humanity is so low in the scale of being as to lack some form of inspiration to impel it onward and upward, some vague perception of higher and nobler attainment which still constitutes its ideal, so every situation furnishes material for the statue which may be perfect of its kind, whether of clay, bronze, or the purest and whitest marble. "Thy condition," says Carlyle, "is the stuff out of which thou must carve that same ideal."

The sceptical friends who lament over the hardships endured by the disciples of the new cause, who are endeavoring in the face of manifold obstacles to establish a religion which seems to them supremely beautiful and instinct with power to redeem the world, ought rather

Free Society is the title of a publication the province of which is to elevate lying to a free and easy altitude, judging from the only article of interest in the number to which our attention was called. It says: "Some three years ago, one of its [Koreshanity's] publications came out with wonderful proofs of the earth's being flat." Koreshanity has taught for twenty-eight years that the earth was a concave shell, and that we dwell on the inside, not on the outside; hence it does not look very reasonable that one of our publications should contradict what Koreshanity persistently advocates. We never issued a publication which taught that the world was anything but a concave shell. We maintain further, that it has to do with both society and religion. The man who lies will steal, and in various to rejoice in the sterling qualities developed by such experience in the hearts and minds of those who are willing to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

Koreshans are looking out for the main chance, the chance to reach the stature of the perfect man, the chance to heal and bless a suffering world, the chance to hush the cries of the wretched and the moans of the broken hearted.

To whom does the world hang votive offerings in the temple of fame, if not to the memory of the early Christians, obliged to hide away in the winding passages of the catacombs and rear their children, delicate young girls and tender infants, far from the happy, life-giving sunshine, in the gloomy sepulchres of the dead, while even there they enjoyed no security but lived in hourly fear of being dragged to a cruel death? Our hearts thrill at the brave deeds of the Huguenots and the Waldenses, while the Puritans who sacrificed every comfort to plant the standards of truth and righteousness in a savage wilderness at the cost of incredible hardships, command our respect, our admiration and our tears. And yet, in the eyes of their contemporaries, the Puritans were but a ridiculous set of psalm-singing fanatics opposed to everything sensible and decent. Who expected them with their nasal drawls and cropped heads to inaugurate a movement that would influence the religous destiny of a new continent! In return for their devotion, the early Christians were not only condemned to a living death in their subterranean retreats, but were regarded as inhuman wretches soiled by crimes unmentionable, whose unholy rites were, as generally believed, marked by the sacrifice of young children on the altar of their divinity.

With such examples of heroism, shall those who are looking for the glorious consummation of the faith once delivered to the saints, flinch in the hour of trial, or refuse to make themselves of no reputation in the eyes of a selfish humanity absorbed in looking for what it terms the main chance,—the chance to heap up riches?

ways encroach upon the rights and liberties of others. When men become righteous they will come into freedom.

Our scientific discoveries in Cosmogony comprise the foundation for a revolution in the sphere of scientific thought; this has subjected us to ridicule,—which is no new thing for a discoverer to meet,—while our theological principles and doctrines have subjected us to persecution of the most unjust and bitter kind.

The discoveries of Koreshanity are in advance of the theories and hypotheses of the age, and for this reason we have not been disappointed that the world could not accept them without a struggle.

Every activity, whether of good or evil, results from the operation of law.

Rich Men Coming to Judgment.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

THIS is the time which James had in view when he said: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver are cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days [end of the age—this time]. Behold, the cry of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you."

According to the newspapers, Secretary Gage in a recent speech, deprecated the adverse criticism of bankers, now becoming so rife. He will yet find that the present is only the beginning of sorrows to the money-changer. Men cannot prey upon their fellows for long, without having to come to judgment; and Jesus made no mistake when he scourged Mr. Gage's kind out of the temple, which was a type of what he will soon do for all such, breaking the spell of their cruel power over his temples,—the humanity that will be his offspring,—and entirely wrecking their cruel business, which can have no place in the kingdom of righteousness soon to be established in earth.

When men come to see things in their true light, they will have less respect for the gentlemanly and polite legal robber—the banker of today, than they had for the bold highwayman of the middle ages. The latter put his life in peril when he plied his unlawful calling, but the banker far more certainly robs his miserable victim, and does it in an eminently respectable and legal way. The vile foot-pad often shared freely with the poor what he had violently taken from the rich; but the courteous banker takes the all of multiplied thousands, turning them out to beg or starve, since the results of his practices have made it impossible for them to earn the means of livelihood. The highwayman killed his victim only when he must, to save his own life or secure his plunder; but the ruin and death of thousands are the usual and inevitable results of the modern banker's vocation. Old Shylock inadvertently told a truth peculiarly pertinent to his own trade when he said: "You take my life when you do take the means whereby

Stray Sparks Flying Here and There.

BY W. H. PAVITT

THE SUTURES of our skull must be so firmly united that it is impossible for an idea to percolate through it and reach the brain. We were talking recently, with a contractor who hires carpenters to work for him. He said:

"You agitators are all crazy. I don't have any trouble to get along."

"For instance," we remarked, "you sent John Kay to make repairs on widow Done's house; you pay John twenty cents an hour and charge the widow twenty-five cents an hour for his work; consequently, you steal five cents an hour from that poor widow."

"Don't you dare to call me a thief! The man is a No. 1 workman and earns every cent of the twenty-five cents an hour that I charge the widow for his work."

"Then you steal five cents an hour from John, for you just now said he earned every cent of the twenty-five cents an hour. You did not do a stroke of the work, yet you keep five cents an hour for every hour's work he performs. You have forty men at work, from whom you exact tribute of five cents each, which amounts to two dollars an hour, which you steal."

We believe we stated the case fairly, yet he became exceedingly angry. So we came to the conclusion that we are unable to comprehend modern business methods.

Lyman Gage has been talking prosperity again. He forgets himself and indulges in little bursts of confidence occasionally. He has been felicitating himself and his hearers over the flattering showing made by the Dingly tariff law since Jan. 1, 1898, and predicted by the end of the year, the tariff revenues will pay the running expenses of the Government and leave a surplus of $30. 000,000 in the treasury. Gage is an enthusiast and very forgetful. He figured; Receipts, $37,333,628; expenditures, $36,696,711; apparent surplus, $636,917. Poor Lyman was so tickled that he forgot to subtract $8,-538,401 which came into the treasury, not by tariff schedules, but by the sale of the Union Pacific railroad, which makes a real deficit of $7,901,484. The real facts in the case—taking out this railroad plum—are these; in spite of increased demands and increased tariff, the deficit from July 1, 1897 to Feb. 1, 1898 amounts to $51,-901,823.

We must educate (?) the youth of our land, by all means; and in order to avoid the disasters which have overtaken the civilizations of the past, let us introduce the penny savings-bank system in our public schools. This will serve a double purpose—it will foster the love of money and teach the absolute necessity for its use.

When you study the situation a little, you will discover, if you do not already know, that political parties are the jimmies used by demagogues to pry the lid off the public pie chest.

In the Editorial Perspective.

E TURN our mental telescope on the field of reform occasionally; we have to do this in order to "size up" the situation—to see how many bubbles there are remaining to burst, and how many air castles are yet to be dissipated. We see many movements rise and fall, with plans inadequate and leaders ignorant. Outside of the harbor, where the ship of Truth is anchored, there are many wrecks, while other vessels bearing names of reform are either sailing without chart or compass, or are fighting each other. What is the matter with them? We charge them with incompetency; failure is the inevitable result. The leaders of so called reform today, neither know what to do nor how to do it. This is acknowledged by Governor Rogers, of Washington, who makes severe arraignments in the New Time; he deplores the lack of harmony and the lack of knowledge of what to do! "I believe that the most necessary thing to be done at the present time," he says, "by those interested in the public welfare, is to arrive at a common understanding. So long as these admitted differences exist, there can be no harmony. * * Many of the plans proposed are mere makeshifts. They do not take into account the fundamental facts which underlie all human action. * * These fundamental propositions have to do with the nature of man, and what may be termed natural conditions in the external world which surround him. If it is seen that any plan for the betterment of humanity is in contravention of these fundamental axioms, it should be clear to all rightminded men that the object sought to be effected by it cannot in this way be attained." There can be but one plan of genuine reform, and that plan must be a scientific one, founded on the science of nature itself. This brings us back to the scientific system-to the Koreshan System, of all natural, human, economic, and social adjustment, as the world's great remedy.

Slavery existed forty years ago, and it exists today. There are more slaves now than then, but fewer masters. It requires expenditure of energy to produce the food and clothing used by humanity. Let men be placed in conditions that are desirable, and the work of production is a pleasure and a recreation; but there are conditions in which work is a drudgery, harrowing to the sensibilities and destructive to tissue and cell. The world's producers are in that condition today. They are enslaved by the power of money. A certain class of humanity wields that power, and all others are controlled by it. Years ago the colored man was called a slave; today both white and black are enslaved; they are called laborers, and the work performed by them is called labor. There should be no labor problem. There was no slave problem, except the question as to whether slavery should be abolished. Amelioration of the slave's condition would not answer the demands of the toilers of the South. Today, reform effort is puerile which looks only to modifying and ameliorating the laborer's condition. We do not believe in labor; the meaning of the word implies a condition from which men should desire to be free-painful exertion, irksomeness, and servility. We must abolish labor altogether; reformers should begin by abolishing the term. Then perhaps, the "labor exchange" would have sense enough to adopt a new name; as it is, the name stigmatizes it as inadequate. It deals only with the products of slavery. The organization cannot exist when that slavery is abolished.

Astronomers are puzzling themselves over various phenomena observed, information as to the facts of which leaks out occasionally through the domes of the observatories. Every new fact discovered corroborates the conclusions of Koreshan Astronomy. The sun, moon, planets, and stars are near the junction of our atmosphere with the sea of hydrogen above us, at a distance of about 1,000 miles. Are the sun and moon among the stars? M. du Celliee Muller has observed stars crossing the moon's disc, but his observations have been discredited until Astronomer F. Hopman reported to the British Astronomical Society that he had observed dark stars as large as the spot Tycho on the moon, passing over the moon's disc this side of the moon. He also reports a number passing over the disc of the sun. These new discoveries are not compatible with the former conclusions that the moon is 240,000, the sun 92,000,000, while the nearest star is billions of billions of miles from the earth!

An exchange concludes that it is possible to see the earth's convexity. When we first read the heading, we thought that some one had been making new observations; but it turned out to be the old hoax of a proof afforded through the phenomena of a vanishing ship's hull! A convex surface is not the only kind of a surface on which ships could go out of sight; they would disappear on a flat surface; they do disappear on the concave surface. The hull of all such proofs of the earth's "convexity" quickly vanishes when the telescope is turned on the vanishing ship's hull. We are restorationists; when the ship's hull is "down" beyond the horizon we restore it to view again by means of the telescope, without increasing the altitude of the eye. The only kind of a hull we cannot restore with the telescope, is the hull of the war-vessel Maine in Havana harbor.

Of course, there is no such thing among the nations today as justice; what they call justice is a mere semblance of human rights, and even that is kicked about because it is an unstable thing, and now in France it is strangled. Today, the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence are forgotten. In 1789, France declared the rights of its people to be "liberty, property, security, and the right of resistance to oppression." In the formation of the French National Assembly, it was considered that "ignorance, neglect, and contempt of human rights are the sole causes of all public misfortunes and corruptions of government." Zola is now under the ban for repeating these simple words in defense of Dreyfus. France is judged by her own words!

We are placed under the ridiculous necessity of proving to the world that it is in bondage, while we are endeavoring to promulgate the science of its release and cure. Thousands of people seem to be satisfied with the condition the world is in; many a man is satisfied if only he is in a little better circumstances than his neighbor. We are about ready to quit endeavoring to pump into the public mind that something is necessary to be done in order to create receptivity to the science of how to do it. If a man is sick and does not know it, and does not want to know it, he ought to die; it is not necessary to induce a hungry man to eat wholesome food when it is placed before him. We are going to quit arguing about our bill of fare!

The great rush to the gold fields of Alaska shows to what extent man will face danger and death for the sake of money. He will leave home and family, and face starvation and all forms of privation under the excitement of the gold craze, and the world will think nothing of it; but when a man deliberates to follow Truth and to maintain it with some privation, he is called a fool. In times of war there are no ties too sacred to break, no friends too dear to leave, to fight in defense of country; but if a man has the strength of character to follow his convictions as to the truth involved in the Koreshan System of Science and Life, he has, in the eyes of an unreasoning world, committed the unpardonable sin!

In the little tendency to popularity of "Christian Science," its votaries are lavish with laudations of the character of its inventor. In the official organ of this pseudo-science, we find expressions with reference to Mrs. Eddy such as "our Teacher," 'our Leader," our beloved Mother;" also such paragraphs as "in the year 1866 Reverend Mary Baker Eddy discovered Christian Science, which from the testimony of Jesus and the apostles, we feel sure is the second coming of Christ." That's right; if she has claims to Messiahship, let them be open and aboveboard; but the next thing is to prove the claims, then the world might be Eddy-fied!

The first thing reformers should do is to reform themselves—then they would be able to reform others. Before they can do this they must know what to do and how to do it. The true reform movement is not a patched-up affair—not a botched expression of one idea. It is not for the benefit of a class, nor for a nation, but for the world. It embraces the power to revolutionize all things that are evil—in short, it is the truth of the universe involved, in contrast with which the silver question, the tariff question, the labor exchange, reciprocity, and so called colonization schemes sink into insignificance.

Bankers are objecting to the checks issued by the Labor Exchange and other co-operative movements, on the ground that they are not proper media of exchange. Bankers have the monopoly of money, and no checks will suit them but checks on their banks. The time is here when only those who have the "mark of the beast" (money in the hand, or credit on recognition) can buy or sell. The American Bankers' Association is alarmed, and will endeavor to have a law passed prohibiting the use of any kind of currency that is not issued by the sanction of these institutions of greed and oppression.

The church of Rome celebrates the twenty-eighth anniversary of its declaration of infallibility and the twentieth anniversary of the election of Pope Leo XIII. Millions bow reverently at the name of the pseudo-vicar, and look back over twenty years of papal peace, while closing their eyes to the cruelties of the past under other popes of the same church. Christendom will not be so peaceful during the next twenty years, for it is now upon the verge of ruin and disintegration.

The peace of America and Europe hangs upon the slender thread of the results of the investigation of the cause of the destruction of the war vessel Maine in Havana harbor. To that point the attention of the world is directed. The greatest question in the world today, is not the insurrection in Cuba and the resultant concentration of national powers on the Gulf borders, but that which the Cuban struggle signifies. It as an index to the destiny of humanity in the process of in-cuba-tion.

Competism is unscientific. The spirit of the competitive system is not the substance which contributes to the progress of humanity; it is the substance of the world's disintegration. The human body is an organic structure, every corpuscle of which is governed in accordance with natural laws. There is no competition in health; when competition enters, dissolution ensues.

Three methods seem to be open to adventurers for reaching the North Pole—aerial, surface, and submarine navigation. One of these has been employed without success; Andree's aerial flight is yet to be heard from, and now a Baltimore inventor purposes to reach the pole under water and ice in the submarine boat Argonaut.

Before woman can reform the world, she must enlarge her views of reform; it will require more than voting and endeavoring to abolish the saloon. At the recent National Woman's Convention there was a great waste of energies which should have been conserved and directed scientifically in a more humanitarian system of reform.

Quiet Talks with the Editors of our Exchanges.

As Editors See Us and as We See Editors.

THEN we made the offer of $1,000 to the editor who would publish a scientific refutation of the Koreshan Cosmogony we were not expecting that any paper would join us in proving the System true. It is gratifying at this time to note the progress of Koreshan Science; there are evidences on every hand of its influence upon the minds of thinkers. We say it to the credit of those who see its truth, that while its premise is simple, and its conclusions rational and scientific, there are thousands of people in the world who do not possess mental acumen and reasoning power sufficient to grasp it; but there are a few who, in the order of their progress, have developed sufficiently to comprehend the principles of scientific demonstration of the form of the universe. print below an excellent article from the Leaflet, Ironton, O., of February 17, 1898, by Dr. I. N. Brown. We desire to direct special attention of the editorial fraternity to this article, and to the facts and conclusions presented in favor of the Koreshan Cosmogony. The experiments referred to are in direct corroboration of Koreshan Science of the earth's form, in the demonstration of the fact that growing plants cannot tend toward the periphery of revolution. This is in accordance with the natural order of existence on every plane. Down is away from the center-all descent of force, whether mental or physical, is away from the point of generation. The forces of gravity are generated in the central sun and radiated to the environing shell. The shell is the limit of gravitation, the periphery of materialization, making a surface every-where concave to the point of gravity's origin. Everything on the earth's surface is directly "under the sun" at all times; every plant, weed, shrub, and tree points toward the pivotal center, while the foundation roots extend downward into the soil of the concave sphere.

Why Upward, Why Downward?

In the Literary Digest of Feb. 5, 1898, in an article on "What Makes a Plant Grow Upward?" there is quoted from the Pharmaceutical Era, an illustrated account of experiments bearing on the subject, a part of which we reproduce:

"Beans have been made to germinate when placed on the circumference of an iron or wooden wheel, surrounded with moss so as to maintain the moisture of the seeds, and holding little troughs full of mold open on two sides; the wheel being put in motion in vertical direction by a current of water, and made to describe many revolutions in a minute. In consequence of this rotary movement, producing the particular force known in mechanas centrifugal force, the action of gravitation is as it were annihilated, and the sprouting seed, removed from its influence is subjected to centrifugal force only. See what occurs: the small stems, which, under ordinary circumstances, would be directed upward, that is to say, in a direction opposite to the action of gravitation, now turn themselves in a direction opposite to the direction of the centrifugal force, or toward the center of the wheel. The rootlets, which, under ordinary circumstances, would bury themselves in the earth, and in the direction required by the laws of gravitation, in reality now point in the direction of the force which has taken the place of gravitation

"This curious experiment, carried out for the first time by J. A. Knight, of England, has been repeated and modified in France by the ingenious naturalist, Dutrochet. He replaced the vertical wheel by a horizontal one. The force of gravitation acts constantly on the same points of the germinating seed; but as this seed is exposed at the same time to the action of centrifugal force, produced by the movement of the wheel, the roots follow an intermediate direction between a vertical one, which would be determined by the force of gravitation, and a horizontal one, resulting from centrifugal force. As the movement communicated to the wheel is increased in rapidity, the angle made by the root with the plane of the wheel becomes more acute also. When this angle becomes nothing the root is horizontal. The influence of gravitation in directing the course of the root is put beyond doubt by these curious experiments.

Now, if, in the experiments, centrifugal force takes the place of the force of gravitation and represents it; and if "the influence of gravitation in directing the course of the root is put beyond doubt by these curious experiments," then the experiments plainly teach that growing plants point their stems in a centripetal direction -toward the center, and their roots in a centrifugal direction-from the center. Which is to say: the direction roots grow, that gravity tends, that we call downward, is away from the center; and that the direction stems grow, opposite to that of gravity, that we call upward, is toward the center.

But we find plants do not send their roots conformable to a centrifugal direction and their stems to a centripetal direction of a convex earth inhabited externally! Either the experiments don't suit the earth, or the earth, from some cause or other, doesn't suit the experiments.

Apply the teaching of the above experiments to the earth, and we have the very things the Geodetic Survey on the Florida gulf coast, about a year ago, of a straight line projected horizontally from a given point a few feet above the surface, testifies, viz:-that such line is the chord of the earth's concavity, and NOT, as we have always been taught, the tangent of the earth's convexity. The earth is hollow; we live on the inside of the shell, and every tree and plant is a silent witness indexing the center. The Copernican system is overthrown, and of course the Newtonian law of gravitation goes with it, at least, as commonly explained; and the phenomena heretofore attributed to gravity will all have to be gone over and overhauled! Only with this [the concave] form of earth do the experiments harmonize.

We presume Dr. Teed and Prof. U. G. Morrow will score again for the cellular form of the universe.—The Leeflet, Ironton O Absolutely Nothing.

There are metaphysical reasons in support of the theory that the earth is a hollow cell, and the ultimate atom, a hollow cell. Science knows nothing of the ultimate atom; therefore I reason that it knows nothing of the ultimate structure of the earth. And on its own confession, it knows nothing of spirit or soul. The scientific theory is that the earth is a solid mass of melted matter, cooled off on the outside, but still hot as the orthodox hereafter, in the centre. Thus science, as well as religion, has its real material hell for unbelievers. Both are mere hypotheses or fictions; no one knows anything about either of them. Christian Science is not the only science that lives by assertion.

The Koreshan theory is, that the earth is a hollow cell and that we are inside of it. In answer to a question, what is on the outside of the shell? Koresh replies, NOTHING, ABSOLUTELY NOTHING. And the outside of the shell is solid gold; so the contrast between gold and nothing still pertains. According to this theory, the earth which coutains everything there is, rests on NOTHING in the very centre of NOWHERE. There is NOTHING new about this theory; the infidels have preached it since the beginning. And yet we are still unsatisfied. We are as inquisitive as our lamented mother Eve; and now we want to find out all about NOTHING. Look out for sky-splitting revelations. The gold shell is going to burst!—New Dispensation, Corvallis, Ore.

Going to Overthrow Koreshan Astronomy!

Applies for Terms, and Says He Means Business.

GRAFTON, N. DAK., February 17, 1898. EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:

A friend has sent me a number of copies of THE FLAMING SWORD, containing your assumed offer of $1,000 if some party will publish a refutation of the Koreshan Cosmology. I say an "assumed" offer, because it is not put in such shape that it can be depended on. As it stands now, one might make the refutation clear to all disinterested parties, and still you would deny that the feat has been accomplished, and hold on to the money. If the offer is made in good faith, you will be willing to secure the payment of the money to the party who earns it in the way stipulated. If you will do this, I believe I am the man you are looking for.

I am confident that it will not be a difficult job for me to accomplish, and of course you will see the propriety and necessity of surrendering the decision of the matter to disinterested parties. I am not an editor, but I have no doubt that I can make arrangements for having my strictures published in the Progressive Thinker of your city, or the World's Advance-Thought, Portland, Ore. If the demolition of your theory is put before the world in some well-known and widely circulated paper, you will have your wishes gratified. I shall want to be furnished with all the points that you depend on in support of your theory, and accompanying illustrations, which I am willing to pay for when we get these preliminaries settled that all will perceive are necessary for my security. Please publish this in The Flaming Sword, with such comments as you may see fit to make, and send me a copy containing them, and let us proceed at once to business.

Respectfully, SAMUEL BLODGETT.

Our proposition is made to editors; the writer of the above admits that he is not an editor. Very well, we will include anybody-it is the man we are looking for, and it does not matter to us whether he is an editor, or an astronomer, or anybody else who knows nothing about science. Our offer was to pay something for something. We are not in the habit of buying things without knowing what we are getting; and if we advertise for an article of goods, do you suppose that we are going to have it forced upon us without our accepting it? It is the same with any "proofs" that the earth is convex-before we should purchase "proofs" we should know that they are proofs. We should not feel disposed to leave the question to disinterested parties, for how could parties not interested in astronomy, settle questions of that department of science? We would not leave it to astronomers, any more than you would want to leave the decision as to the cause of the Maine disaster to the Spaniards! We should want to do more than talk the matter over with you. Argument could not decide whether the proofs are proofs or not; they would have to be tested, and tested scientifically. Proofs would have to be submitted to us for test. If they involved facts, there would have to be an investigation of the facts, and not of the text-books, nor what some one has said or thought on the subject. We should have to examine the actual, tangible facts; anybody's eyes could then see them. We will go with you anywhere to help you look at the facts observable, if you will look at some facts we have to show you. We will accept your facts; conclusions, however, are different things. If the editors tackle us, their "proofs" would have to be tested as well as yours; so you see we are not partial. When the other side demands proofs in demonstration of our conclusions, they will not go out of the way to test them themselves, but deny them in toto. We will treat you better than that. So let us have your proofs, and then the investigation can begin. If it turns out as you say, and if we have no facts that will conflict with your conclusions, why, then the $1,000 are yours; and we venture that we can find it easier to secure the payment of the $1,000 than you will to find the proofs!

confess that your ideas of a hollow globe, without any of your evidence, seem perfectly absurd, as does the theory to some (1) But [men that the earth is convex. have stood on the sea shore and watched a receding vessel, and have seen the largest part, the hull, sink out of sight before the mast. (2) I know enough about geometry to know that we can determine the distance to inaccessible objects if the distance is not far in comparison with the base line; and by this method I supposed it had been demonstrated that the sun, for instance, was much farther away than it could possibly be if we are inside a globe.
(3) I had supposed it demonstrated that the earth's inhabitants can see but one side of the moon. But this would hardly be true if it were inside a globe. These are three of the thousand questions which have undoubtedly been asked you before, and which you have doubtless answered satisfactorily.—D. E. S., Santa Ana, Cal.

(1) So have we; and in addition to this we have used telescopes to bring the hull to view again. The ship's-hull-argument of convexity has been exploded long ago, and sensible people should quit using it. Ships vanish in accordance with the laws of perspective foreshortening. The hull is not the largest part; the sails cover more visual area than three or four hulls! (2) Calculations of the sun's distance made on the basis of a supposed convex arc, are erroneous; from the basis of the concave arc, the sun's distance is about 1,000 miles. Try it yourself. (3) When you have investigated the Koreshan Astronomy sufficiently to understand its explanation of the phenomena of the heavens, you will understand that the fact that only one side of the moon is presented to the earth's surface, is a proof of our System. We can demonstrate, if the moon were 240,000 miles from the earth, a ball whirling in the sky, that we would see both sides. Besides, Newton's theory of gravitation is now rejected by astronomers, as well as the conclusion that the moon revolves about the earth. So called scientists have demonstrated nothing about the moon; they quarrel among themselves about what it is, what it is for, and how far away it is.

Please explain why the astral nucleus is not at the center of the universe. It seems as though the resultant of all the forces generated in the shell of the earth would be at the exact center.—O. W. B., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

It the earth were a perfect globe, and all the forces operative were always of the same quality and intensity of vibratlon, the astral nucleus would be at the center. The astral nucleus is eccentric, or out of center, because of the action of the energies of cold and heat in the cruosic and caloric poles of the sun. If these forces were equal they would revolve about a common center; but they are unequal, and give the sun a slightly orbital motion. The cause of motion must have motion itself. The central sun does not simply rotate upon its axis, but has a triplex motion: axilary, orbital, and lateral. It rotates daily as a result of the inflowing and outflowing energies. The caloric pole is expansive, while the cruosic or cold pole is contractile, and these alternations in the sun give it an eccentric or orbital motion, while the magnetic currents induced move the sun laterally north and south to change the relation of the projected sun to the equinoxial. If the sun were at the exact center, no motion in the universe would result. The eccentricity of the sun produces the millions of stars, which are so many deflections of levic rays and their corresponding gravic rays, to as many points as there are stars.

J. P. H., Grand Ridge, Ill.—It is obvious that in order to understand expressions of the Apostle Paul concerning the resurrection, one must possess some knowledge of what the resurrection is. If you had a scientific comprehension of the processes by which a portion of the human race are to be transformed to the plane of immortality at the close of this dispensation, it would not be difficult for you to see what the apostle meant when he said "We who are alive and remain." If you will procure our literature explaining the laws of the resurrection, you can obtain a much better idea of the Koreshan Theology than we can give you in a brief answer in these columns. When you have studied the question further you may write as again. We will argue with you through our pamphlets until you have exhausted their contents; then we can take up new lines.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

I have placed the sample copies of the SWORD in the hands of persons whom I expect to call on and explain some things arouse their interest sufficiently to subscribe for the only full-meated-nut journal, devoid of worm-holes and mustiness. It is a pleasure to crack nuts when every one is sound and fresh. So I have found THE FLAMING SWORD; even the shells are worth preserving. I enjoy THE FLAMING SWORD because its thrusts are at errors and superstitions which have been for ages blanketing truths. The fabric of error and the cord of superstition are being severed, and truth, which needs no covering, will soon stand out fearlessly before the world. The entire contents of THE SWORD are devoured more eagerly than was exciting fiction in early days.-Dr. J. R. P., Chicago.

I hope to have some names in a few days; I want to go about it in a business way. Please send me circulars, blanks, etc., for taking subscriptions, as mentioned in February 11 Sword. I want to interest people in this beautiful science. As for The Flaming Sword, it just sparkles with light. As I read, I ask myself how I ever lived without it. It is food and drink to me; and each week it answers the very questions that are asked me by people with whom I talk.—Mrs. M. B., New Castle, Pa.

Editor's Chat With Our Readers.

It is but a question of time when the sentence of Justice will be executed upon the oppressors of the poor. Visitation of judgment upon all forms of injustice is inevitable. The fatal day for the robbers of the producers of wealth will be the natal day of the new kingdom. The pen of Koresm traces the converging prophetic lines to the culmination of all forces of vengeance upon the powers of evil. The great battery is being formed; the subtle forces of good and evil are being arrayed for the final combat. The nations are nearing a vortex. The processes are written in history and analyzed in science, and it requires but a knowledge of the past to predict the inevitable results in the

How much persuasion on our part did it require to induce you to subscribe for The Flaming Sword? Hundreds have wanted it at first sight—you liked the appearance of it, its tone, its bold, open and frank expressions of our convictions. There may be a few others in your vicinity who would like it; it is simply a matter of hunting them up, and the only way you can ascertain who they are, is to sow the seeds of truth in your vicinity. Go at the work quietly, resolutely, confidently, and see if you cannot interest three or four persons with whom you are acquainted, and induce them to read The Flaming Sword.

A valuable lesson in the science of mind may be learned by careful study of the article by Koresh, "The Conception and Construction of the City of Destiny," the science of the inception and descent of the life and order of the Golden Age. There is a sufficient reference to the significance of the Cuban struggle to set the mind thinking. Koreshanity traces the destiny of nations through ethnic infiltration and progress. It is very significant at the present time that Spain is at the door of conflict with the nation representing the climax of human progression. Cuba is located at the vitellus of the great egg, and the process of incubation will necessarily take place in the western hemisphere.

You will enjoy "The Main Chance" in this number, by Lucie Page Borden—the main chance in the progress and develop ment of character. It reveals the philosophy of courage amid the most adverse and trying circumstances, and robs persecution of many of its hardships. The entire article, portraying the difficulties of the early Christians in the catacombs under the city of Rome, is but an expression of the determination of the Koreshan. That we have courage and backbone, will be proven through the trials of the coming conflict and revolution.

When the world is devoid of truth, the knowledge of a single fact, a single scientific principle, is worth millions. By act ual invoice this number of THE FLAMING SWORD is invaluable, and its worth cannot be estimated; and yet for how small a sum can fifty-two numbers be obtained! THE FLAMING SWORD is strikingly original. The unique feature about it, the feature not possessed by any other journal in existence, is that its contents are expressions of demonstrated truth. It is a case of Truth against the world!

The mysterious Vala appears againbringing this time a beautiful lesson on the law of vibration and the humanity of God. Our excellent contributor, Rev. E. M. Castle, has succeeded in veiling her thoughts just sufficiently to induce thought; it requires but little mental penetration to see the form of Truth stand out clearly revealed. We can promise you rare treats from time to time; expect them, and appreciate them when they appear.

Thoughts From the Reform Press.

^^ Shylock and Antonio.

Shylock is an honest man; he is a lover of justice: he is not a robber or a thief: he does not take anything which does not belong to him. He is a law-abiding man and holds in abhorrence all people who have no reverence for the law. "Do as the law tells you to do and ask no questions," is his motto.

It was not Shylock's fault that Antonio was in need of money and that he agreed to give a pound of flesh in place of the money. If Antonio did not like Shylock's terms, why did he accept them? Did he not know that a contract cannot be legally broken? Having accepted Shylock's terms, what right did he have to make a wry face when Shylock demanded his pound of flesh?

"A pound of flesh!" cried Shylock pointing his knife toward Antonio's body.

"Shylock, have mercy," said Antonio: "do you not see that if you cut a pound of out of my body, that I shall bleed to death?'

"I do not care if you do bleed to death," answered Shylock. "The law gives to me a pound of your flesh, and I shall have it."

Shylock lent money to a Kansas farmer on the condition that if the money is not returned on a certain day, the farmer's land shall belong to Shylock. The farmer was not able to pay his debt at the appointed time, and Shylock cried: "A pound of flesh! The farm is mine.

"Shylock, have mercy," said the farmer; "do you not see that if you take away my farm, that my children and myself will starve to death?"

"This is none of my business," answered Shylock; "the farm is now my legal property, and you must leave it immediately."

Shylock was selected Judge; and he issued an injunction prohibiting working-men from marching on certain streets. But as the workingmen paid no heed to the injunction, Shylock sent the militia to shoot them down.

"Shylock, what are you doing?" said the people. "Do you not know that it is inhuman and monstrous to kill inoffensive, defenceless people who are guilty of no crime?

"A pound of flesh!" answered Shylock. "These workingmen are criminals. They have marched on a certain street in spite of my injunction, and they deserve death."

Shylock became the head of a coal trust, and he raised the price of coal.

"Shylock, have mercy," said the people;
"do you desire us to freeze to death? We cannot afford to buy coal at such an exorbitant price.

"A pound of flesh!" answered Shylock. "The coal is my property; and if you cannot buy it at my price you may for all that I care, freeze to death."

Shylock was elected President of the United States; and he made a deal with Wall Street, by which the robbed of millions of dollars. by which the people were

"Shylock, this is infamous," said the people; "you had no right to do anything of the kind.

"A pound of flesh!" answered Shylock. "Have I done anything contrary to the law? Can you convict me of any crime? If you cannot, then pray make no remarks."

On a Sunday morning Shylock detected a little girl selling flowers on Broadway.

"Policeman!" cried Shylock, "arrest this

"Shylock, this is absurd," said the peo-What harm is this little girl doing? 'A pound of flesh!" answered Shylock. "We have a Sabbath law in this city; and to sell flowers on Sunday is a crime."-Boston Investigator.

Government Caters to Monopolists Against the People

If the government can carry your letter, why can't it carry you? You are less trouble than the letter is. You don't have to be collected and stamped and put in a bag and delivered. You collect yourself and deliver yourself and buy your own ticket; yet full-grown men say the government could not manage the railroads

If the city can own and distribute the water, why not the ice? Why not public ownership go below the freezing point? And, if it can organize and manage the ice business, why not the milk business? And, if milk, why not sugar? And, if sugar, why not bread? And, if bread, why not all the necessaries of life?

When a man is sick, we have a place for him—the hospital. When he is a murderer, we have a place for him—the jail. When he is old and worn out, we have a place for him—the poorhouse. And when he is dead we have a place for him the he is dead, we have a place for him—the potter's field. But in all the length and breadth of this great country we have no place for a young, healthy, honest, living man! If that flaming fact does not make your anti-Socialist prejudice shrivel to ashes, then nothing will regenerate you but the eternal bonfire.

The individual management of business is the failure of the nineteenth century. Millions of living witnesses can prove that capitalists are not fit to control our industry. Suppose that monopolists do possess "superior business ability," what then?

Is such ability a good or bad thing? Should they be rewarded or punished for it? Some of them deserve a twenty years' sentence for their "superior ability."— Coming Nation.

People must not allow the gold cranks to confuse their ideas. Money is a function and not a thing. There is nothing inherent in metallic money in the way of intrinsic value," because the minute it is demonetized its value is determined by the supply of and demand for the metal merchandise. But when it is used for money under law it is worth its face, whether it be silver or gold.—Sullivan (Ind.) Demo-

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

The Great Cosmic Cell the Only Material World.

I cannot see why the universe should be limited to a single cosmic cell. The analogy of cell structure in the human body, with groups co-ordinated in interdependent series, would seem to suggest a plurality of worlds, limited in number and forming, in their serial aggregate, that larger cosmic structure which Swedenborg designated as the "Grand Man." Does the logic of your premise inexorably limit the universe to a single world?

'E ARE frequently met with the above inquiry. The cosmic cell, which we claim includes the universe, focalizes its universal imprint upon myriads of stellar points through the subtension of its pencilings of energy. These focal stellar nuclei are grouped in clusters, according to the geometric action of reflection and refraction. These constellations, fixed in their positions and relations according to the "inexorable" laws of geometrization, correspond to nations and individuals of humanity, and in the lesser form of creation, the microcosm, to the arrangement of cells in the infolded or incubated form of the vidual. Were the ordinary human form opened out or evolved into the form of the cosmic shell, as it is before incubation, it would be in the form of the grand cosmic structure, with its rind or circumference and its stellar groups, though in magnitude the correspondent of the microcosm or the little universe,—the universe in its least form.

Every star in the grand cell (the universe) is the imprint of the whole in proportion to its attitude toward all other stars, and is complete in proportion to its approximation to the astral nucleus. The stellar center is the point at the center of the great camera obscura, where the photograph (light writing) is taken of the great shell and all contained in it. As the astral center is the photograph of the alchemicoorganic (physical) cosmos as an entirety, it is—in the least form-the kinetic nucleus of the energies of the cosmic structure, and therefore the point of both the inception and ex-ception, that is, the point of the limitation of the afferent tendency, and beginning of the efferent flow, that is, of radiation. This astral point is not the Lord God, but it is the point in the alchemicoorganic whole which co-ordinates with and corresponds to the astral nucleus in humanity, that is, to the Lord. The astral nucleus is an eternally fixed point near the center of the alchemico-organic structure, because it is in and related to space. The corresponding stellar nucleus in humanity appears and disappears as the Lord, the Son of God, at stated periods of the world's progress. These changes of state with man, correspond to the varied qualities of stellar nuclei in the space of the alchemico-organic cosmos.

When man attains to the perfection reached by the Lord Jesus, he is so related to all things in the natural and spiritual humanity as to render him as central to this whole, as the astral (alchemico-organic) nucleus is central to the alchemico-organic cosmos. For this reason, when the crucifixion of the Lord obstructed the flow of the authropostic nucleus, the current of the physical cosmos was interrupted, and for this reason the sun was darkened. A principal lesson is found here in the general law of astrology. The central man-the Lord, the bright and Morning Star of the anthropostic cosmos, was so related to the central star of the alchemico-organic world as to interrupt its currents (its vibrations), when the current of his humanity was for the time being obscured. What is true supremely as pertaining to the central man, is true correspondingly with every other man. Digitized by GOOGIC

Lucid Answers to Pertinent Questions.

(1) What does Koreshanity teach about the cause and cure of disease? (2) Is mind the product of evolution, or the primary cause? (3) What is the source of vital force? (4) What causes and what cures disease? (5) Does medicine cure disease? (6) Can disease be cured by mental action alone? (7) By what law did Jesus cure? See Matt. ix:28-30; Mark ix:22-24; v:35-43; Luke xvii:12-19. 8 Why were faith and belief necessary on the part of the patient? (9) Why the injunction that "No man should know it?" (10) What did Jesus mean in John xvi:12, 13; xiv:12, and Mark xvi:17, 18? (11) Can any one knowing the same laws effect the same cures? (12) Are the modern systems of Christian Science, metaphysical healing, mind cure, magnetic healing, hypnotism, clairvoyance, mediumship, telepathy, etc., expositions and demonstrations of the same law or laws that Jesus knew and applied so successfully?

Your deep study and unique interpretation of the Bible have prompted me to ask the above.—J. N., Staples, Minn.

WE ANSWER the above questions as follows: (1) Koreshanity teaches that through obedience to the genuine science of life, this mortal shall put on immortality, thus overcoming death in the body and thence passing out of the material world alive: also that all other cure is but temporary. One of the fundamental principles of immortality is the conservation of the life force through the purification of the sex life.

- (2) It is both the primary cause and the product. It is the first and the last, the beginning and the end, the Alpha and the Omega.
- (3) Everything that is consumed in the organism capable of combustion, and thus capable of generating electro-magnetism, light, heat, etc., which are the energies of material destruction, is the proximate source of vital force. The primary and supreme source of vital (life) force, are the essences of love (heat) and wisdom (light), proceeding through the angelic heavens from the Lord. In other words, the Lord himself is the supreme source of vital energy.
- (4) Nature, behind which is Nature's God. The man who heals most divinely, is one who carries a surplus of dynamic force through the conservation of sex energy. Some people will yield the most readily to the debris of sensual waste carried by those who are sexually the most gross, the same as a beetle will flourish and nourish its young in offal.
- (5) Medicines (drugs) are sometimes aids. The Lord spat upon clay and put it on the eyes of the blind. Clay is a curative drug because of its astringent influence. It is an illustration of the effects of other drugs.
- (6) Yes, when the person to be healed is receptive to mental force.
- (7) By a comprehension of the special state of the body and mind of the sufferer, through a surplus of pure dynamis (virtue) held in reserve, finding a response to its action in the mind of the afflicted. The supreme principle involved in Jesus' power to heal, was his power to direct the entities of the spiritual world within himself, thus transporting a spirit or group of spirits to drive out or transform the spirits of disease within the patient.
- (8) Because the channels of impartation are closed up through unbelief.
 - (9) Jesus was not prepared at that time to meet the opposition to his work that a too great publicity would occasion. What he did, he preferred to perform in a quiet manner until the time should come for his final passion.

(10) There were mysteries regarding immortality, too great for the disciples to comprehend, except through the baptism to be poured out after Jesus' departure. The Holy Spirit-the substance of his own lifethen inspired them into his knowledge. He involved in his declaration a higher principle, namely, that at the end of the age the truth should be manifest in a teacher who should include his life, therefore the Spirit of Truth personally manifest, when the all Truth should be given to those who should come forth in the reincarnation—the resurrection of the dead. He will "Declare to you the coming things," Greek text. He will pronounce the things that will consummate the age and characterize the transposition from the old to the new age. This has reference to Elijah, the Sign of the Lord's coming in his sons.

It will be a greater thing to bring in immortality of the body and teach the world how to dematerialize the form, and thus pass into the spiritual world without corruptible dissolution, than merely to raise a man to physical and mortal life to subsequently die and go to corruption in the grave.

To go to the Father was to reach that point in His career by which (through the operation of the Holy Spirit, which was his own seminal essence) he could impregnate the world (church) and quicken it for the processes through which it (the church) could bring forth his sons in the resurrection—the sons of God. This makes him the Father. A kernel of wheat goes to the father, or becomes the father (parent wheat), when it plants itself, begets, and produces other wheat. It was by this law that the Lord Jesus went to the Father.

"These signs shall follow them that believe," was a prediction intended for that time and no other. The signs did follow. They cast out evil spirits, and those who were baptized, spake "with new tongues." This was all the result of the transmission of the spirits gathered into the Lord and disseminated from him when he was theocrasised. "They shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." All this was fulfilled. Then the church declined. The reason of this declension is, because then the seed was sown. This seed was the Lord disseminated as the Holy Spirit. "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." The seed was sown then, accompanied by the corresponding operations. The Holy Spirit was the seed sown. It therefore had to die; then came the dark ages of the church. Now, the devil arises and thinks to perform the same things. The signs that occurred then, are not the signs to distinguish the Lord's presence now. As the Egyptian magicians withstood Moses and performed nearly the same miracles, so the devil will now attempt to counterfeit the miracles of the Lord and his disciples.

The Lord fasted forty days and forty nights. This is nothing, says the devil; I can aid my henchmen to fast forty days and forty nights; consequently men make the attempt and succeed. There, "didn't I tell you so?" But if you will compare the character of the fast and the conditions, you will see that though the counterfeit be close, there are strong points of difference. After the Lord had fasted he was an hungered. Before Dr. Tanner had completed his fast he became so hungry he was led to exclaim: "My God; will this hour never terminate?" That was the last hour of his fast. During the Lord's fast, he was supplied with internal food, of which he declared: "I have food to eat that ye know not of."

(11) Cures may be performed without knowing the law of cure. "Christian Scientists," mental scientists, spiritualists, hypnotists, etc., perform cures, but none of them possess the science of cure. They are all a set of quacks, empirics. There is a location in the cortex of the brain for every corresponding part of the body. There are certain thoughts which correspond to certain centers. If every center is known, with its mental and corresponding physical function, it can be acted on directly from the mind possessing the knowledge. It may be exalted or depressed at the will of the operator. This possibility, in order to be called science (knowledge), must involve an exact knowledge of every mental function, with its corresponding function, throughout the organism. Nothing short of this can be called mental science, which is the science of the mind. The word science is from scire, to know; hence science is knowledge. What a man knows, he has the science (knowl-What he assumes, he merely guesses at. edge) of. What he guesses at is merely empiricism. A man may know the same laws that Jesus knew, and yet not be able to perform cures, because he is not able to apply them.

The Lord Jesus overcame. One of the principles he subjugated was the sex desire. This enabled him to completely conserve the sex energy. He therefore invariably carried a surplus potency, in Greek called dunamis [dynamis] virtue. He said: "Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue [dunamis] is gone out of me." This was at the time the woman touched him who was healed of an issue. Jesus knew the law, and had the strength to first apply it to his own life, whereby he was enabled to communicate his virtue to those who required it.

(12) No. When Moses threw down his rod it became a serpent through one law. When the magicians threw theirs down, they became serpents through an antithetical law. The devil always counterfeits whatsoever the Lord does. An honest government makes honest money (issues its notes according to its wealth or the demands of its people), and keeps it honest by providing that the man who speculates with it shall be hung, or in some way prevented from violating the monetary principle. The thief counterfeits it. There is not a divine principle in the universe that cannot be counterfeited by the devil. And the worst counterfeits are those which come the nearest to the true bill, because they are the most deceptive. There are certain marks which will distinguish the genuine from the counterfeit, and enable the wise to discriminate.

(1) You say, "Those who received the seed of life at the beginning of the age, come into the condition of the firstfruits at the end of the age." Now, when is the end of the age, and when was the beginning of the age, and what constituted the reception of that seed—the Holy Spirit? Was it simply a belief in the Divinity of Jesus Christ? or was it an expression of the Was it simply a belief Christ spirit in the character of the individual? Is there not a vast difference between believing in Christ and acting Christ? For instance, the modern church professes belief in Christ, but it is far from acting Christ, or it would long ago have condemned the hell-born system of competism under which we live, instead of deriving its chief support from that system, as it is doing today. (2) Is not the Holy Spirit being shed upon the world today, as it was at the beginning of the age? If not, then how can those who are now living in the flesh, either accept or reject the Holy Spirit, and thereby (as I understand you) lose the opportunity of becoming sons of God? (3) You say, "Spirits go into the spiritual world, live their career there, and return here to still further work out their experience." Is not this just what Theosophists teach by their doctrine of re-incarnation? And how does this agree with the doctrine of the resurrection of the physical body? (4) According to Koreshanity, will all men eventually become perfect enough to become sons of God, or enter upon a perfect state of eternal happiness after they have worked out their experience and paid the penalty of Karma through successive reincarnations?—H. E. H., Lancaster, Pa.

IF YOU have been reading THE FLAMING SWORD and other Koreshan literature, you will notice that the ages are marked by the sign on the ecliptic. These movements in the physical heavens correspond to periods in human existence. The Jewish age began with the covenant with Abraham, and ended with the destruction of Jerusalem. (1) The Christian age began with the birth of the Lord and ends at the time the sign passes from the constellation Pisces into that of Aquarius. We are now at the end of the age. The seed of life-planted at the beginning of the age—was the Lord, whose material body was changed to Holy Spirit. The Holy Ghost was the substance of the Lord's body. This Spirit was produced by the dematerialization of the Lord's body, he himself being the seed man, the promised seed. The Holy Spirit was substance. This substance was sown in the church which was receptive to it. It was sown at the beginning of the age. It died just as any seed dies, for "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." It has not been shed upon the world from that time to this; nor will there be any outpouring until at the coming of the Lord, now at the end of the age.

"Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day" (end of the age). This was fulfilled, so far as the appropriation is concerned, when the church received the Holy Spirit, for this spirit was the substance of his body, dissolved and converted to spirit. The expression of the Christ spirit in the church was the result of their having eaten of the life of the Lord, not figuratively, but literally. The process of regeneration (reproduction) began when the seed was planted in and drinketh my blood has a spirit was fulfilled.

the end of the age, when the fruit will appear. The seed planted was the personal Son of God; the fruit will necessarily be the sons of God, the Lord Christ multiplied in the race, bringing forth his offspring as the fruit of reincarnation, which is the resurrection of the dead. The church will "act Christ," when the sons of God are brought forth as the firstfruits of the resurrection, and not before.

(2) The Holy Spirit is being shed upon the world, only as the truth proceeds through the Koreshan System. Those now living cannot reject the Holy Spirit that was poured out at the beginning of the age. The sin against the Holy Spirit was its rejection then. Those who committed that sin could not be forgiven either in that world or the world to come, which meant the age ending with the destruction of Jerusalem, and the succeeding age, ending now. But after these two ages, then there is forgiveness. Those who rejected the Holy Spirit then cannot come into the first fruitage now, for the simple reason that the seed was not planted in them at that time. Such as received the Holy Ghost then will become the sons of God now, because those now living in the flesh are the same as those who lived then and were baptized. The reincarnation is the resurrection.

- (3) This is somewhat similar to the doctrine of Theosophy, as bearing on this subject. The only difference being that Theosophy has merely a vague conception of the principles involved in what they pretend to inculcate. Theosophy has no conception of organic unity as obtaining in the laws and form of creation. Individualism is the rock upon which Theosophy will be ground to powder. The Lord Jesus was declared to be the resurrection and the life. Of what was he the resurrection? He was the resurrection (reincarnation) of the past, and included in his reincarnation the veritable personality of Abraham. He was Abraham resurrected. Abraham went into the spiritual world and returned forty-two times, until in his last embodiment he came forth as the Lord Jesus Christ. Thus Abraham, through experience, was fitted for the throne of God, and hence became heir of the world, as the Son of God.
- (4) All men will eventually become the sons of God (each man in his order) and enter upon a perfect state of eternal happiness.

Sword Thrusts.

HE mind of man had its origin in the mind which perpetually creates and perpetuates the universe. Some man in this age will get there first. It will be the man who knows most, and who knows that he knows most, and who will so apply the law to his own life as to whirl him into the central vortex of human agitation. This man will dissolve himself and be absorbed into the astral nucleus of the anthropostic cosmos. This man is the Christ (the anointed one) of God, the one who, overcoming, sits down on the throne of God, and in thus overcoming inherits all things, and of whom it is declared: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." This man will contest his authority and compare credentials with all others who make pretensions in this age of the world. As Elijah met the prophets of Baal and the prophets of the Grove of Mount Carmel, so this man will meet the claimants of this age, and verify his claims by calling down fire from God out of heaven to consume the sacrifice. Let the Adventists, "Christian Scientists," Theosophists, etc., come to the front,-The Flaming Sword will champion the best man.

Baptism was the symbol of regeneration (re-production). If a man believed, he received the Holy Spirit (the planting of the divine germ), then through regeneration, progressing through the Christian age, he could and would rise in the resurrection (reincarnation) at the end of the age, now at hand. If a man was not open to the influx of the spirit, the germ of course was not planted in him; therefore, during the age the process of regeneration could not progress in that man. It would not follow that in some other age, after sufficient development, he could not be subject to a subsequent outpouring, for these occurrences repeat themselves through the interminable ages.

We have the truth, or we have not. We know that what we teach is diametrically opposed to everything taught in astronomy, in religion, in theology, in sociology, and in political economy, by the world's teachers. If what we teach be true, then what others teach is false. If what we teach be true, then we are the true teacher. Why, then, should we mince matters, and hobnob with the false teachers of the age? We know it all, or we know nothing aright.

In theology, we differ most radically from the orthodox church—a compound adulteration of Catholicism, Episcopalianism, Presbyterianism, Methodism, etc. This difference in theological belief has brought down upon our heads the anethemas of modern Pago-Christianity, and the malicious falsifications emanating from the pulpit and pew of these pseudo-representatives of Diety and the Scriptures, surpass the malignity of the originators of the Inquisition.

The universe is a universe. It is a complete thing, so whole that every part sustains a specific relation to every other thing in it; and no man can truly know a part without knowing the whole, only as he is taught to know the part by some one who knows the whole.

We regard the agnostic as a consummate ass. He says he does not know, and then attempts to compel others to know as little as himself.

The Aspiring Caterpillar; a Parable From Nature.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

IT WAS a memorable day in the caterpillar's life when he first awoke to the blissful consciousness of his future destiny and realized that he should some time cease his miserable, crawling existence to become one of those bright winged, gorgeous creatures that flit about in the sunshine and sip honey from the flowers; whom everyone praises and admires because they seem formed to delight the eye and render the world more cheerful, for whatever is beautiful and innocent contributes to the joy of the universe.

It was not known who first presented the doctrine of metamorphoses to the caterpillar's mind, but it was thought to be the tortoise who figured as an experimental philosopher among the inhabitants of the garden, and was universally respected on account of his age and wisdom. In any case, it was very strange and unusual for such a piece of intelligence to come to the ears of an insect, millions of whose ancestors had been crawling and eating for generations without a glimmering of the truth. Naturally, he was at first inclined to be sceptical, but had finally accepted the idea and was now radiantly happy in the conviction.—if such terms of description may be rightfully applied to a creature so humble as a caterpillar.

This morning as he was climbing up the stalk of a rose, reflecting on his new found hopes, it suddenly occurred to him that if fate designed him for a butterfly, he should begin immediately to adjust his conduct to the part. It would never do for him to make his morning repast off that beautiful rosebud. Butterflies never injured the flowers nor devoured their leaves; they merely paused an instant with their gay wings still fluttering, to drink the nectar that lay hidden in the flower cups. He would breakfast this morning upon nectar. But alas! this proved a sad task, lacking the long, slender, flexible tongue of the butterfly. The caterpillar perceived that his physical limitations did not comport with his aspirations, and he must look for more substantial nutriment in a shape better adapted to his wide mouth and saw teeth.

Espying an apple tree, he toiled up the trunk and had just taken a good mouthful of juicy, young leaves, when he overheard the proprietor of the garden exclaim in tones of great vexation: "These miserable caterpillars are spoiling my apple trees. I shall get no crop this year." The caterpillar stopped aghast. Decidedly, it would be out of character for a consistent insect aspiring to absolute rectitude of conduct, to be instrumental in the failure of the apple crop. He must change his diet;

* *

The great demand of the age is the reduction of labor and the establishment of an equilibrium of labor, recreation, and culture. This can never be accomplished there were the horse chestnuts and the maples, but their leaves had an acrid flavor that disagreed with him; he must look about.

So he crawled down, and roaming around in search of food which he might conscientiously appropriate, by chance encountered the tortoise to whom he confided his difficulties and his scruples, explaining how, in view of the glorious destiny lately revealed to him, he felt constrained to live up to his hopes and conduct himself rather as befitted a butterfly than a poor worm. The tortoise listened attentively and then replied sagely: "One sphere at a time, my humble friend. Restrain your aspirations for the moment, and conform to the exigencies of your present condition. It may not be, as you say, in accordance with the part of absolute rectitude befitting a butterfly to prey upon apple trees and rose bushes, but if nature has rendered it impossible for you to thrive upon other nutriment, are you therefore compelled to starve? Do the duty that lies nearest. In these lower spheres nothing is absolute; all is relative. I advise you to return to the apple tree." So saying the tortoise disappeared round a bend in the path. The caterpillar was scandalized; people are apt to be, upon coming in collision with ideas beyond their intellectual range. To his mind, the tortoise had very loose opinions and his logic was dangerous. He himself could never tolerate such laxity, nor reconcile such advice with his conscience. From his point of view-that of the caterpillar-it would be wrong, subjectively and objectively wrong for him to taste apple leaves again. So he made his way to the garden and was delighted to discover a fine cabbage; suddenly, while preparing to breakfastor rather to dine, for the morning was long past-he heard the gardener lamenting to the cook that the vegetables were so poor this season; what with the droughts and those rascally insects, there really wasn't any use in trying to raise cabbages.

The caterpillar was already weak and languid from fasting, but he crawled wearily away, firmly resolved to maintain the spirit and character of a butterfly, with no base conformity to vulgar needs.

A day or two later, as the tortoise went plodding down the garden walk, philosophizing as usual, he noticed the brown, shriveled body of the caterpillar lying in the path. "Silly creature!" cried the tortoise contemptuously, pausing to brush it aside. "If he had listened to me he might have had wings some day. Why was he not content to work out his destiny as a caterpillar first,—but then, what can you expect? His point of view was so limited!"

Some Real Things Beyond the Power of the Telescope.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

The Yerkes telescope again causes God to retreat farther and farther within the depths of boundless space. It reveals innumerable bodies vastly larger than is our sun and millions of miles beyond; alas, it fails to reveal God. Where is "he?" Is "he" playing hide and seek with humanity? Why does "he" not emerge from "his" hiding place and demonstrate "his" existence to all the world and thus stop all cavil and unbelief?

Is God something or nothing? If something, this forty-inch lens, the grandest achievement of human genius, would now demonstrate and corroborate "his" existence. It fails to do so. "He" cannot be the invisible ether, nor abstract space. "He" must be a tangible reality or a myth. The telescope says, "all search is in vain." Shall we ignore the highest authority of a civilized race, or shall we prostrate our intellects and worship a myth?—The Boston Investigator.

A SINGLE grain of musk shut up in a room for years, will fill it with matter thrown off from itself without any appreciable loss of bulk. No glass, however great its magnifying power, can make a particle of this material substance visible. The writer above quoted ought therefore to deny that it exists; but if he does, his own sense of smell, which he cannot doubt, will prove him a liar. A deer, or even a man with shoes on his feet, passes over the ground. Many hours subsequently, a hound is shown the track and follows it at a rapid speed. At every step, a material substance so refined and subtile that no instrument ever invented by man, or that can be invented, can reveal its presence, is left in the track, yet if a hound scents it he will follow the trail on the run. Obviously, then, taking the infidel materialist on his own ground of materialism, there is plenty of room for God to exist in the world without his blind eyes seeing Him, even though he were not a spiritual being, which he is, but a material being, which he is not. The infidel denies that spiritual substance, which is far more refined and delicate than any form of matter, exists solely because he can not, by any helps man has discovered, see it, when, to be consistent, he must deny that many forms of matter, and in its ultimate particles, all its forms, have any existence. Shallow indeed, must be the mind that can be satisfied with such fallacious reasoning.

"He must be a tangible reality or a myth." Tangible means touchable. Electricity is certainly a reality. It is tangible too, but a man must be careful how he touches it, or he will never touch anything again. Light is a reality, but does not respond to touch; it is not, therefore, a myth. Thought is something real, yet not tangible nor visible by Yerkes' great telescope. The mightiest realities in nature are not only intangible, but escape our senses altogether. Life is certainly a reality, that by the means of moisture and various other material and spiritual substances brings into being incalculable amounts of various products every year, but it can hardly be said to be tangible. Yerkes' telescope never enabled anybody to see it, nor is it appreciable by any of the senses. Idiocy can no more see God, than a blind man can distinguish colors. It is only the "pure in heart" that have the promise of "seeing God," and that will be when they "awake in his likeness."

Stray Sparks Flying Here and There.

BY W. H. PAVITT.

We saw this legend over a holy pile of brick and mortar which some people denominate a church, and we marveled thereat. We have met many who thought themselves lords, and held many human lives in their hands, to be lightly broken or cast into the gutter of despair and degradation. We have seen these lords wring another drop of blood out of quivering hearts, and sanctimoniously dedicate brick and mortar as a temple, holy and pure, for the worship of God. Then a light dawned upon our benumbed faculties. Gold was the god, the power of money was the faith, and greed was the baptism.

There are two kinds of salvation which are offered to the world. One is a plan—whose plan no man stateth—wherein all must die to be saved. The other kind declares that you must live, and live righteously with God, the neighbor, and self in order to be able to attain to the possibility of salvation.

Who says farming doesn't pay? A Minneapolis flouring mill man has made $2,000,000 on wheat. He raised the wheat himself—raised it $2,000,000 higher than he paid the farmer for it, who raised it from the ground. In the meantime, the consumers of flour and wheat furnished the $2,000,000. Here is another evidence of prosperity with silk fringes on it!

Lost: An ante-election prosperity raquet, somewhere between the 1st of November, 1896, and the White House. Finder will be suitably rewarded upon the return of the same to Wm. McKinley or Mark Hanna, as it is essential that they have it to use in the next national tournament.

Don't get puffed up with the vain conceit that you are better than your neighbor, for you will, if you harbor such thoughts, turn yourself into a habitation for bats and owls.

Any fool can lose his temper, but it takes a wise man to keep it and train it for good use.

If any one calls you a fool, don't get angry, for that would only prove his accusation.

In the Editorial Perspective.

FTER several unsuccessful attempts to lift a stone, one might feel disposed to give it up and engage the time in doing something else; others might lift it some time. It would do no good to deny that the weight existed because it could not be ascertained in pounds. Some people are disposed to deny that the universe exists, because they cannot account for it. Look at this, for instance, from a writer imbued with the fallacies of "Christian Science:" "We flounder around and strain every faculty of the mind in our endeavor to account for the things of the 'The flesh profiteth nothing, the spirit quickeneth.' Why, then, try to account for the things of the flesh? I am spirit; God is my father. I was always spirit; God always is my father. I am not flesh. I never was flesh. Then why flounder around in the ditch of incarnation and reincarnation? Why try to account for the things that go on around us?" There is a good reason why such minds should not account for the things of the natural world—a good reason why they should not attempt the impossible—they cannot; Koresh accounts for them without difficulty—it is simply a question of ability. The mind that considers that this natural world is unreal, intangible, and non-existent, came from that sphere of the spiritual world where nothing is seen because all is dark. Such a mind will return to the same sphere of darkness as ignorant of the natural world as when the mind expressed itself in a natural pediment, the existence of which it now denies.

In the progress of the world to its destiny, war is as necessary as peace. War is a factor in the creation and in the destruction of national character, it is a factor of amalgamation and ultimate unity. Some chemical substances between which there is an affinity, unite by pleasurable contact; oxygen and nitrogen unite without combat. In the unition of some other substances a breaking down of the structural atoms must obtain, agitation and warfare ensue, resulting in the generation of positive force. War between nations is the ultimate expression of the agitation of mind. The ultimate result of all agitation obtains in the natural world, among natural things. Revolution begins in the mental domain and culminates in the revolution of all material bases. Revolution is a factor of reformation; the peace of the world-the coming universal peace, comes through universal adjustment, and this adjustment necessitates friction and disintegration, for order is evolved from chaos.

Koreshan Science is the science of all natural things. Its scientific religion is a natural religion, founded upon tangible, scientific evidences. It has no ghosts, and no assumptions. It knows no higher power in the universe than mental force, and no higher form of knowledge than science. It repudiates all forms of hypotheses and guesses, and resultant irrational conclusions, and sets forth only that which can be demonstrated right here in the natural world. It has no superstition; it teaches nothing that cannot be investigated and understood by any rational mind, and contains nothing that is mysterious or hidden. It is the uncovering of all things hitherto unknown. It begins with the discovery of the foundation of all science, the premise of all reason. In reaching conclusions, it employs known premises and logic, involving the laws of analysis, synthesis, and antithesis. It is the science you have been looking for, redeemed from fallacy and clarified of error.

Popular conclusions are the reverse of the truth. Men are looking for things where they are not. The world is permeated with fallacy—truth perverted. They are endeavoring to locate the power of government in a democratic circumference; it is located in the Theocratic center. They are seeking God in the occult; he is revealed in natural science, and is no longer hidden. They are expecting to go to hell, when they are already there. God in his perfected state is finite; man at present is infinite—unfinished. The universe is a cell, and the earth environs all; the sun is at the center. The earth's surface is concave, not convex. The people of the world have much to learn—in fact, they now know nothing that is absolutely true. When they learn what the truth is, they will realize the necessity of being governed by its source. All other governments are but forms of misrule, with motives selfish and power despotic. Who and what is the source of truth?

A writer in the Boston Investigator uses the following language: "We live in the nineteenth century of Christian superstition, but in the first century of science." Correct; but this is as bad for some other things as it is for the superstitions connected with Christianity. Did the writer know what he was saying? He said more than he knew; he condemned some modern so called scientific theories as well. If this is the first century of science, pray tell us to what is the theory of Copernicus, originating in the fifteenth century of superstition, to be relegated? What is to be said of the nebular hypothesis, the theories of Newton, Thomas Dick, and a host of others? Just as we have said all the time—superstition. We are glad to see an agnostic acknowledge a fact once in a while!

Rational conclusion is necessarily founded upon a known prentise; if the premise is assumed, the conclusion will be an assumption also. An exchange, devoted to the promulgation of "Christian Science," says: "The premise of Christian Science is: God is omnipresent, omnipotent and omniscient." This is a strange premise—assumed in the first place, a premise which is above the conclusions. The entire "system" is inverted; it has its foundation where the pinnacle ought to be, and undertakes to build conclusions concerning natural things from a metaphysical premise. The natural world alone can furnish a natural, tangible, and knowable premise—the basis of all conclusion. The marked contrast between Koreshanity and "Christian Science" is seen and appreciated at a glance.

An eminent scientist says that "Affirmation, pure and simple, without reasoning and without proof, is one of the surest means of planting an idea in the popular mind. The more concise it is, the more free from every appearance of proof and demonstration, the more authority it has." This agrees exactly with the sentiments of the famous Barnum, who said that the people of the world liked to be humbugged! In these brief expressions is disclosed the secret of the success of modern astronomy and its companion theories of religion. The system that is true, the system that demonstrates its premise, and backs its every assertion by a multitude of facts, is the system that will experience the greatest difficulty in finding a place in the public mind.

Mysterious things are in demand. The people at large find satisfaction in modern fiction and fraud. The unparalleled support of the sensational press is evidence of the abnormal condition of the mind of the world. The modern church can thrive only where its assertions are accepted without question. The church wants nothing revealed, for in such case the opportunities for deception would be destroyed. The clergy, the pseudoscientists, and the politicians are afraid of the search-light of truth; and the masses, under the spell of popular ignorance and delusion, resent every encroachment upon the field of superstition.

There are thousands of minds in the world engaged in the work of disseminating what they term theology, or the science of God, who cannot define a single law by which he exists, nor how he created the world, what he did it for, nor what he is going to do with it. They are anxious to have us know something about that which they do not know, and have no means of knowing. They do not know where God is, where he came from, nor how long he is going to exist—nor how many there are of him! Men who know nothing about so many points of a character are not the people to teach us anything about religion, or science, or social economy, or anything!

The world needs living ideas—ideas originated and expressed by a teacher of the present generation, who knows what he is talking about. The ideas of the past, the theories of Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, and a host of other Thomases, are old and musty. The dead can think for you no more, and there are many of the "living" who cannot. Let the living govern; the so called fathers or founders of nations were able to meet the exigencies of their times, not ours. Their views, plans, and methods must be discarded as utterly inadequate.

Prison records do not contain the names of all the criminals; thousands go unpunished, and even unsuspected. The charitable institutions do not register the names of all the poor and the unfortunate; thousands suffer who do not drop into the channel of popular relief. Charitable institutions are a standing rebuke to the competitive system and its unrighteousness. If equitable adjustment obtained, there would be no suffering from want of food and clothing—there would be no tramps nor beggars of any description.

The world has gotten into a pretty condition when a man has to break a plate-glass window or commit some other misdemeanor to get something to eat—even from the jailer. Institutions care for the infirm and shelter the criminal, while the honest and ablebodied working man starves from lack of employment. If the country would do its duty, it would feed and protect the honest and the strong; in doing so it would provide for the poor and the infirm, and destroy the incentive to crime.

The explosion that blew up the battleship at Havana extends beyond the limits of the harbor; it vibrates the hearts of millions, and may yet amass armies, beat the drums of war, engage navies, and win victories for the oppressed. It touched the fuse of a greater magazine, a greater source of energy than all torpedoes and submarine mines of the nations combined.

Fallacy is as logical as truth; the difference is in the premise. Logic is like mathematics; its terms are invariable. A conclusion reached through a train of logic is rational only when the premise is true.

What shall it prophet a man if he gain the whole world for a following, and fail in all his predictions? He would have to charge it up to prophet and loss.

Some popular questions today are not worthy of discussion. While some of them are being discussed we become disgusted.

The reason the so called scientists do not consider a true premise, is that they are afraid of the inevitable conclusion.

The main question today is the Maine question and its bearing upon the relations of the United States and Spain.

Sometimes the doors of opportunity are closed and locked forever.

Monopoly is the devil's co-operation, the devil's commonwealth

Money is intended to facilitate exchange, not to hinder it. This is an age of gab and grab, and of creed and greed.

Replies to Everybody's Questions.

E. P. H., Brodhead, Wis.-Your letter is at hand, and we thank you for it: Lucie Page Borden was also pleased with the spirit of your reply with reference to her article. Concerning your attitude toward the religion of Koreshanity, we would say that if you understood the System, you would not write us as you do. There is not an effete idea in the world that we entertain; Koreshanity is wholly original. We have no superstition, and present no conclusions to the world that we cannot and do not demonstrate actually and scientifically. Please take us at our word sufficiently to investigate. You say some good things in your letter, but you are supposing that some of them are in disagreement with Koreshanity. You are at a disadvantage; you are not familiar with our premises or conclusions. If you understood the theology of Koresh, you would at once realize that it is the most rational and conclusively satisfactory system of thought in the world today. We do not prove it from the Bible; the Koreshan theology would be true and demonstrable, and the purpose of the System fulfilled entirely, if there were no Bible! We do not depend upon the Bible for support of a single proposition in the System; it is used by us as corroborative. Suppose you study our propositions awhile longer, and wait awhile before forming your conclusions; you are jumping at them now, without a premised fact; that's where you miss it.

- (1) See the Youth's Companion of February 17 for an article, "The Depths of the Earth," by Prof. Nathaniel S. Shaler, and kindly give us a refutation of the same in THE FLAMING SWORD. Send him a FLAMING SWORD, and he may take up your challenge. (2) I hope you accept the proposition of Samuel Blodgett, of Grafton, N. Dak., whose attention I called to your system, and in whom you will find a foeman worthy of your steel.—J. N., Staples, Minn.
- (1) Thanks for calling our attention to the article by Prof. Shaler. We will refer to it briefly in the Editorial Perspective next week. He offers no proof and presents no argument; he simply speculates concerning the interior of the earth from the basis of the exploded hypothesis of the earth's convexity. We should be glad to get our literature to him; can you give us his address? (2) See THE SWORD of last week for reply to letter of Mr. Blodgett. Propositions which involve an offer of $1,000 must be referable to the fundamental basis of the earth's actual curvature-to the facts of the tangible crust. Appearances are not proofs. It is evident that we should have to come to some understanding in this regard with Mr. Blodgett before we could reach an agreement. Please do not permit him to back out of his desire to refute the Koreshan Astronomy; we have had experience in this line before!

When the truths of Koreshanity are made manifest then they must be accepted; as yet, the world lacks the evidence necessary to a belief. Jesus the Christ said that all the law and the prophets centered in the two points of love to God and love to man; and as we measure the truthfulness of a theory by the effect produced on the person accepting it, love to God and love to man being the test, and as the ungloved manner in which Koresh handles some of his critics does not measure up to this test, it follows that I am slow to accept his claims, or Koreshanity as the religion of humanity.—A. M. V., Rossmoyne, Pa.

Of course this is a good way to reach a rational conclusion! Apply the same rule to Jesus himself, and see how it works; it just puts the sword handle in our hands! Look at Jesus when he was at the home of the Pharisee, dining with him as his guest; how he sat at his table and called his host a whited sepulchre and a hypocrite. Search the accounts of his daily association with the men of church and state, and see if he handled any of them with gloves. Let one imagine himself in the temple courts, where hundreds of bankers had congregated with their counters; just after Jesus passed through with the scourge, see the tables of money overthrown, with coins scattered all over the floor, the cages of the birds smashed, and the bankers and merchants smarting from the scourge, and ask yourself if he measured up to a sickly, sentimental standard of a misconception of what love is!

I hereby acknowledge receipt of THE FLAMING SWORD, and find it still on the advance in interest. I find only one thing to speak of adversely; after accusing the so called church of hypocrisy, of which I believe it to be guilty, I find in THE SWORD the title "Reverend" before some of the names, but not all. That title to me is very sacred, being only once found in the Bible, and then applied to Deity. If I am wrong I shall be glad to be corrected.—W. M., Springfield, Mass.

Jesus accused the Jewish church of hypocrisy, and yet he actually founded a system of religion and delegated his power and life as well as titles, to his apostles. No one is reverend in a system of fallacy and hypocrisy. When the new kingdom is established and a portion of the human race become known by the name of the Almighty, they will be reverend, won't they? If the Koreshan System be true, its people constitute the nucleus of the new kingdom, and its authorized representatives are entitled to the title of reverend, at least prospectively. We are just as much against other people using it as you are, but perhaps for a different reason.

C. A. D., Horanif, Kan.—We do not advocate the abolition of machinery as a means of solution of the social question, but rather the abolition of the millionaire. When the wealth of the world is held in common, and man co-operates with his neighbor, machinery will be a blessing and a factor in the era of rest and recreation.

W. W., National Military Home, O.— Your letter and the pamphlet you mailed to us are received; many thanks.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

I read your estimable magazine every week. This week's (February 18) is particularly interesting. Indeed, every number of The Flaming Sword grows better and better, and that is saying a good deal. I hope I am not intruding upon your time and patience by addressing you so frequently upon the subject of Koreshanity, which, though I do not quite understand, has nevertheless a peculiar fascination for me. I read and re-read every word of The Flaming Sword, and the more I read of it, the more I am convinced that you speak with the inspiration of a Hebrew Prophet, and that there is vastly more in what you say "than was ever dreamed of in my philosophy," or indeed in the philosophy of most men, be they never so wise and highly educated. I am not easily made a convert to a religious theory, dogma, or belief, as I have always looked upon all religions (especially the religion of the modern Christian church) as monstrous frauds and delusions; but your religion of Koreshanity seems founded on such just and scientific foundations—everything you advocate appealing to man's higher intellect and deepest sense of justice, that I cannot but give it serious thought.—H. E. H., Lancaster, Pa.

DR. CYRUS R. TEED:—For many days I have had a longing desire and inexplicable feeling to know more of you personally, and why? I can only say because I have long been infatuated with the magnificent production of your brain power, in wielding in these days, The Sword of Truth. Those who are blessed with the wisdom to travel along your channel of reasoning can only see the Day-Star of Truth that has been hidden through the past ages—even from those who have claimed to be vanguards.—B. N. G., Woodbury, N. J.

Proofs of Koreshan Astronomy Entirely Satisfactory.

I do certainly regard an experimental line run as I understand the Florida test to have been conducted, as absolute, unequivocal, and final. And to those who doubt the results of it, the way is open to make the same test with their own instruments. In sporting language, it is now in order for them to "put up or shut up."—A. P. B., Jersey City, N. J.

We are intensely delighted with The Sword; we have given away the extra copies you have sent us, to friends and acquaintances, and have also mailed some to friends in the East. We are glad to learn that the circulation of The Sword is increasing, and we appreciate your labor of love, and often wish that we could aid you in a more practical way.—J. M. L., San Bernardino, Cal.

I have read every copy of THE FLAMING SWORD and PRUNING HOOK that has ever been issued, up to last week; consequently I am not in a position to willingly give it up now. Please shove my name ahead one dollar's worth for the only true reform paper now published. Like it? Well, yes, particularly since it has its new clothes on.—M. L. H., Evansville, Ind.

If everybody were interested to know the truth as I am, there would not be one intelligent thinker do without The Flaming Sword.—E. ('. D., Terre Hill, Pa.

Do you owe us anything on subscription -a year behind? If so we have been carrying your subscription, and it is but fair that we ask you to carry us a year now, in advance. Send us $2; $1 for the past year, and the other for subscription for the coming year. We need money, and must have it. We are now publishing a weekly, giving you about four times as much matter as you subscribed for on the basis of the monthly, and it requires at least four times as much money to run the weekly as it did the monthly-and out of the same receipts: we have not increased the subscription price. We must appeal to you, to your sympathies, and to your sense of obligation, once in a while. You would soon see the effect of it in the paper, if every one of you who could possibly spare it, would sit down and write us, enclosing $1 for the benefit of THE SWORD work, whether you owe us for subscription or not. See what you can do, and you will never regret it!

The mind is a storehouse—a storehouse of mental entities. There is as much difference in minds as there is in stores. Look at some small, second-hand stores in poor districts, and compare them with the magnificent department stores of the great cities. Yes, you may have a store, a mental store, but it may not be the best; your stock may be shelf-worn, dusty, and outof-date. We have seen some mental stores filled with cheap toys, and others with daggers, explosives, and other dangerous things. The greatest wrecking of humanity is first done in the mind; the mind creates ages and epochs. The condition the world is in today is the result of the aggregation of bad mental elements. Humanity must begin to think differently, and you must help; a change of mind leads to a change of action See?

This number of THE SWORD will be specially interesting because of the number of questions answered. "Lucid Answers to Pertinent Questions" cover a great deal of ground, and clear up many things for the investigator. See particularly the article, "The Great Cosmic Cell the Only Material World," in reply to a question concerning the limitation of the universe and the possibility of other worlds existing outside our own.

6-3-0-8-! See these figures? The six comes first, then the three, and so on. Good! If you were in school you would like to get the number down on the blackboard correctly, wouldn't you? That's the ambition of the schoolboy. Well, get it straight on the envelope, when you write us, and your letter will not go astray; don't send it to 3608, but to 6308 Wentworth avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Please read the short paragraphs under general statement at top of page, second page of cover. Money orders intended for us must be made payable to the Guiding Star Publishing House, Chicago, Ill.,—not the Editor, nor to the Manager; neither should they be made payable at any substation, but at Chicago P. Our Review Corner.

Our Race News Leaflet, by Prof. C. A. L. Totten; Nov. and Dec. number, 1897. monthly, $1 for 13 numbers. Our Race Pub. Co., New Haven, Conn.

With the November number came Totten's Chronological Chart, presenting thirteen different systems of chronology in comparison with the chronology of Totten. This is perhaps as valuable a table of comparative chronology as has ever been issued. We are nearing the end of the age -that is one thing sure, and the time is valuable in that it enables the student to prove prophecy by history and locate the most important event of the century or of the age; the revolution is at hand. In the December number the News Leaflet contains a defense of the chronology of Totten against the attacks of H. Grattan Guinness and others, and from our standpoint of observation, Totten has the best position in the controversy.

Voices of the Morning, by J. A. Edgerton, of Bureau of Labor Statistics, Lincoln, Neb.; 120 pages, cloth, stamped in gold. Chas. H. Kerr & Co., Chicago.

The author's poems have been seen in almost every reform journal in the country. This work is a collection of about fifty excellent poems, which bear marks of originality and ability. It is a contribution to reform effort. It is optimistic; and looks at the coming bright side of the world.

The author is liberal, hopeful, modest; in his poems he has endeavored to be natural. There is one thing about the work that we like, and that is, it is not written for literary critics, but to voice the longings of the great struggling masses, and to point out the great possibilities of the future. We would much rather have it this way than suited to the entertainment of the wealthy aristocracy or to the fancy of the conceited critics of some orthodox schools of literature.

Dianism, or Sex Holiness; 24 page pamphlet, price 25 cents. National Purity Association, 79 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

This pamphlet purports to contain the secret of health, happiness, and success, but it misses the mark; for if we know anything about the science of mind and of sex, and we claim we do, Dianism is as far from sex holiness as is prostitution. We can demonstrate that the so called science of sex as set forth under the name of Dianism, and which appears to be gaining ground among a class of sensualists who regard present sex relations and functions as sacred, is unscientific, and in direct violaof every known and demonstrated physiological law. Koreshanity alone possesses the solution of the sex question; its solution is natural and scientific.

In Reform Journals.

As Editors See Us.

Truth Isn't Begging People to Accept It!

A "new religion" journal, which bases its claim to be the religious leader of the universe on the claim that the earth has a concave surface, the sun, moon, and stars being on the inside instead of the outside of the earth, is now out with an offer of $1,000 to any editor who will disprove its theory. I want to call the attention of the publishers to the fact that the burden of proof rests upon them, not upon the rest of mankind. As Anarchists who hope to have their opinions concurred in must first show the inefficiency of governments and gods to properly regulate the affairs of men, so must these claimants prove the errors of simple astronomy; to ridicule mooted questions because of the variance of different minds in regard to them is easy. Proof is something different. Fabulous stories of sea-level measurements won't do, either.

But what has the whole thing to do with religion, anyhow? When the paper in question turns its batteries on other religious frauds it does good work, but when it only destroys one falsehood that another may be erected in its place, the effort is a loss of energy.

But just what won't be crammed down the throats of mental weaklings, in the name of religion, so long as gullibles can be found, would be hard to name. This brings us back to the present case, that of Koreshanity. Some three years ago one of its publications came out with wonderful proofs of the earth's being flat. [The author of this article doesn't know what he is talking about—gotten things mixed badly; his remarks here do not apply to us.] (If I remember rightly that was the shape assigned it.) The idea was to prove the old astronomy false. The next issue of the publication was considerably delayed. Why? Nothing much—only—well—ahem—this old earth had been rolling up its edge like a scroll until it had swallowed itself whole and put us all in a hole. No wonder Germany is putting rice on its China and we poor devils jump from a Cleveland panic right into McKinley prosperity and wonder which is hottest! But all this gives Koreshanity a true scientific basis, so what's the odds.

Zola says of Lourdes and its miracles: "Lourdes grew up in spite of all opposition, just as the Christian religion did, because suffering humanity in its despair must cling to something, must have some hope; and, on the other hand, because humanity thirsts after illusions. In a word, it is the story of the foundation of all religions." And of Koreshanity?—Free Society. San Francisco, Calif.

The Fearless Plaming Sword Prized Highly.

The Index stated last month that we were reading THE FLAMING SWORD, of Chicago, and that we valued it very highly. We do. We value it because of its fearless, chip-on-my-shoulder attitude on the subjects of religion, socialism, finance, and the various reforms that one every day sees the necessity of, from the handling of governments down to the all-absorbing question of earning daily bread.

Part of the contents of this lively paper is read by us and discarded as being too deep for us—don't understand it.

A theory advanced by "Koresh" a short time ago is, that he has discovered the secret of immortality. "Koresh" is Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, and he says that immortality can be brought about by the removal of the pineal gland of the brain. From our knowledge of anatomy we would modestly remark that the man who has his pineal gland removed, will immediately require the services of the undertaker and the sexton. However, Dr. Teed may not be as crazy as he seems. A man nowadays who gives birth to an idea which is in direct opposition to old established customs and ideas, is said to be a crank, lunatic, etc. We have had a little experience in this. If the man who discovered Osteopathy was crazy, would we had more crazy people.—The Osteopathic Index, Ottawa, Kansas.

An English View of the Koreshan Colony.

THE KORESHAN COMMUNITY is still hard at work at Estero, in Florida, on the site which they confidently believe is destined to be the New Jerusalem, centre of the world's future development. So far the community is, from all accounts, prosperous and happy. The climate is perfect, and the natural facilities great for sea and river communication with all America.—

As Editors See Other Things.

"Life is More than Meat, the Body More than Raiment."

Is there nothing more in life than to have enough to eat, a place to sleep, some covering for the body, and perhaps a polo game, a prize fight, or blood-and-thunder melodrama to while away the few hours between drudgery and sleep? even that little would be like a seventh heaven of delight compared to what the average working man now enjoys, but can the ambition of American sovereignty rise to nothing higher than that? are all the beauties with which nature has stocked the earth, and that the skill and ingenuity of man have reproduced and amplified for, if not for the enjoyment of man? Yet do we enjoy them? We who produce the wealth of the nation and make possible the grandeur and magnificence so abundant on every hand, are ourselves content to struggle on in poverty, live in wretchedness and die in our misery without having seen, let alone enjoyed, the beautiful world that was built for us all .- The Beacon.

When Egypt went down, 2 per cent of the population owned 97 per cent of her wealth. When Persia fell, 1 per cent owned the land. When Babylon went down, 2 per cent had all the wealth. When Rome fell, 1,800 men owned everything. In this country, 25,000 people hold more than half the entire wealth.—The Common Cause.

Spain, Russia, and Turkey are among the most religious countries in the world. They have God in the Constitution of every one of them. Spain has Cuba; Russia has Siberia; Turkey has Armenia; and God has all the glory. God comes handy to bear such burdens. We need him every hour.—New Dispensation.

The Flaming Sword the Clearest Search-Light.

LAKESIDE, CAL., Feb. 19, 1898.

DR. CYRUS R. TEED:—I have read THE FLAMING SWORD during the last five years, and have followed your teaching with a serious desire to find the ultimate verities according to which the processions of the race are carried forward from cycle to cycle. I am slow to accept radical doctrines, especially when they flatly contradict the cousensus of opinion which has slowly accreted through the historic ages. But I must confess that your plain, straightforward definitions embrace the facts of life more completely than anything I have heretofore found in current literature.

I have nearly, but not quite, lost my hold on the old astronomy. Your answers to astronomical observations are comprehensive, explicit, and full of that electric fire which flows from an earnest heart and brain. But I cannot see why the universe should be limited to a single cosmic cell! The analogy of cell structure in the human body—with groups co-ordinated in interdependent series—would seem to suggest a plurality of worlds, limited in number and forming, in their serial aggregate, that larger cosmic structure which Swedenborg designated as the "Grand Man." Does the logic of your premise inexorably limit the universe to a single world?

I heartily accept your teachings regarding Socialism, Theocratic Government, and the establishment of the divine kingdom in the earth. I have long believed that the two poles of existence—matter and spirit—are perpetual and reciprocal. I also fully accept your views of reincarnation for the rank and file of humanity, and your distinction between these partial re-embodiments and the resurrection, in which the partial lives are brought to fruition in a composit body-form, or ripened fruit as "sons of God."

I understand you to teach, (1) that Christ will come at the end of the age—now closing—and gather his harvest, the fruit of his planting 1900 years ago, who will then come forth as sons of God and dwell in the earth as visible persons.

(2) That Koresh will be planted in the race at the beginning of the forthcoming age—now dawning—and again appear at the end of the age to gather his harvest. Am I correct? If I am, a perplexing problem will be unraveled to my apprehension. (3) You make frequent reference to astrology, and seem to regard current systems—both heliocentric and geocentric—as abounding with chaff, but that there was in pre-historic times an Astro-Science, the key to which was lost, and that you have re-discovered that key. Am I correct here?

I came "out from the world" about twenty years ago, and have since been trying to live along the general lines which I discover in your teachings. I regard The Flaming Sword as the clearest "search-light" on the drift of events now published. You have a very able corps of writers and co-workers, and into a first-class paper in every respect, you infuse a soul and purpose which make it a tavo-edged savord that will be potent in separating the sheep who are looking for a shepherd, from the goats who are in quest of the finest pasture. It is a disturbing force in the halls of conservatism and intrenched error, and will be sure to shake up the body politic in such a manner that its units will segregate for a rearrangement of its organs and functions.

Sincerely,

E. W.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

The Common Origin of All Religions.

PART I.

"GOD HATH MADE of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." It would appear from the above statement—admitting the declaration to be true—that all men had a common origin. It is due, however, to the inherent right of the intellectual thinker, to analyze somewhat the claims of Scripture to scientific authorization. The common orthodox Christian regards the Bible as a book of Divine revelation in matters of religious direction, with whatsoever it may contain of historical and cosmogonical character and interest as merely incidental to its religious purpose.

It is a common conviction among all classes of so called Christians, that the Bible is not a scientific work, and was never intended to be more than a guide to the moral and religious life of man. At its very inception we find what purports to be a cosmogonical delineation. If the description therein recorded be merely the erratic wanderings of the unscientific and puerile mind, and is found to be in opposition to, or not in agreement with correct interpretation of nature as discovered through scientific research, investigation, and conclusion, we unequivocally pronounce it not of Divine origin; for the Divine mind, the very source of creation, should not only know the nature, form, and order of his creation, but should be able to communicate a revelation of its true character in no blundering way, through the men He appoints to proclaim his works.

That there be no ambiguity attached to our attempt to make clear our views regarding the authenticity of the Bible as of Divine origin, we here reiterate most emphatically what we have so often declaredthat the Bible is strictly scientific, and agrees perfectly with a correct interpretation of the alchemico-organic (physical) universe. The universe is an integral structure; every part of that which may seem to be structurally imperfect, is an essential factor in the integralism, for the waste of any given domain is eliminated and becomes food for some other sphere. To the sphere in which it is a waste, it is repulsive; and if obstructions retard or prevent its speedy elimination, it becomes the cause of disturbance, and its retention is attended with evils. That which is repulsive, then, to one domain, becomes the good of another. That which is bad in any sphere is essentially so, not relatively bad or evil, but emphatically, absolutely, and unconditionally evil. This law applies to every domain in the alchemicoorganic (physical) field of form and activity, and also to the anthro-biological spheres, including the realms of the angels and the sons of God.

In the Koreshan Cosmogony, it is announced that immediately above our common atmosphere of oxygen and nitrogen there obtains one of pure hydrogen. In the activities which comprise the life and perpetuity of that atmospheric field, there are combinations of energy and matter which, if not precipitated, would constitute deleterious elements. These are thrown down and at once appropriated by the field below. The gravic (descending) energies produced by the contiguity of the hydrogen with the oxygen upon which it rests, unite in our own atmosphere with co-ordinate levic energies produced at the point of contact of our atmosphere with the surface upon which it rests. The descending or gravic eliminations of the hydrogen sphere combine, in our atmosphere, with the levic eliminations of the surface below, and in the union of the two the cloud is formed and thence the water is produced, which, precipitated (dejected as water), clarifies the atmosphere and becomes a supporter of life in the field beneath. There is not a domain in existence, either in the alchemico-organic world or in the lower biologic, anthropostic, angelic, or theo-anthropostic, in which this law does not prevail and operate. The hells themselves generate the forms of life they cannot endure, and spew them upward in their ascending flight to realms of joy above. Christ the Lord, in his ascending development, came from the hells and was the first begotten of the dead, and when created, had he remained a tangible personality among the inhabitants of earth, would have done so as an effete element of the nether world, a cause of disintegration, a disease in the body politic, and a disrupter of society; but being eliminated as an ejection from the sphere of brutality whence he arose, he operated as the conservator of the less brutal field of benign activity in his spiritual power.

We have thus far-in a general way, and with specific allusions—outlined the relations of good and evil, and in so doing have portrayed some hints of the character of a universology in which good and evil are antithetical coadjutors; a universology which could obtain only as good and evil were correlates in some common bond of fellowship and perpetuity. We have shown in a measure, the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, the fruit of which all men must eat, thereby knowing good and evil, with power to discriminate. The very law by which the elements combine to resist and eject, like the rainfall, that which has become effete in any given field of physics, enables the mind after the discrimination of good and evil, to resist and eject the evil and retain the good, thus becoming the Tree of Life. In the exposition thus far rendered, there seems an opportunity to question one of the fundamental axioms of the Koreshan System, in which obtains the avowal of absolute good and evil in contradistinction to quite a prevalent belief that these are only relative.

The student of Koreshanity must become familiar with the Koreshan Cosmogony, and learn to associate the alchemico-organic with the anthropostic kosmos, in correspondence. Understanding the relation of the absolute center of a sphere with the outmost limitation of its environment,—the center being in a constant state of electro-magnetic combustion, and the circumference in an equal state of a corresponding combustion, where solid deposition results as the sequitur of electro-magneti: activity,—he can readily comprehend the fact that there obtain at least two extremes or limits of both form and activity; that is, form and function. One is the central, the other is the circumferential limitation. These limitations are absolute. Thus there are two absolute ends of form and motion.

We have announced the fact that, underlying the geologic crusts of the earth, there are mineral and metallic strata, the outermost or circumferential stratum being gold. Here the laws of transmutation perfect the element which, through successive stages of metamorphosis, is deposited as the finished product of radiatory and obtensive operations. In those activities which are impulsed and attracted toward the circumference of the alchemico-organic kosmos, the gravic substances, both of energy and forms and qualities of matter, are more or less chaotic and uncertain until the laws of order bring them to those points of stratification in which the pure mineral and metallic substances are deposited as environments of the kosmic shell. Before the precipitated substances which primarily proceed from and are the principles of the electro-magnetic nucleus (the astral center) become the metallic laminæ or plates of the kosmic rind, they are precipitated as geologic strata. The laws operative in nature keep them in the chaotic state.

The mineral and metallic strata are constant, but subject perpetually to an equal waste and supply. Their atoms are constantly being destroyed as atoms of matter, but when destroyed as matter, the substance becomes energy. This destruction of the stratum is reinstated with the influx of energy which deposits or materializes as supplemental atoms. Thus the rind is constant, eternal, and pure. The law of supply and waste is equally true of the center, which as a nucleus holds contact or touch with every alchemico-organic atom, and with every motion engendered in the alchemicoorganic field. Thus in miniature is this nucleus—the composite subtense of the universe as a macrocosmic whole, and thus the star point of consciousness and the correspondent of the Deific center of anthroposophythe astral nucleus of the God-man existence.

The Domain of Order in Contrast with Chaos.

It will be noticed in the exposition given, that after passing the geologic strata toward the circumference, the mineral and metallic strata are related in specific order according to quality, in which is included that of specific gravity—specific gravity constituting the law of their relative emplacement. Superimposed on the orderly arrangement of strata, are the geologic formations. These are chaotic. Into this chaotic formation all things tend, proceeding from the center and directed toward the circumference. This chaotic state is due both to transmissions from the center and upheavals from the circumference, or upheavals proceeding from activities derived from the outer laminæ.

In the foregoing, we have outlined the great alchemico-organic egg or cell, in which the process of incubation or hatching is developing a corresponding chick, this incubating chick being the Grand or universal Man not complete in its organo-vital development until it passes beyond the state of chaos to that of the order of stratification in social groups, which in humanity correspond to the mineral and metallic laminæ. These groups are the orders of church and state, the seven laminæ corresponding to the seven churches (these are the new heavens), the five mineral strata-corresponding to the five divisions of state (the new earth). Jesus the Lord in his day and time was the astral nucleus corresponding to the alchemico-organic center, or to the physical star at the center of the kosmos, as outlined above. Between the time of the Lord, who inaugurated the Christian age, and the formation of the seven churches, the world of humanity, before the new church is inaugurated, reaches a chaotic condition corresponding to that in the alchemico-organic field; that is, corresponding to the condition of the superimposed geologic strata before noted.

The universe is integral and eternal as a structured whole. Animal life, including man with the animal life of God, attains its climax within the concave sphere, the shell or egg of its volutionary processes, which include involution, evolution, and revolution. When the process of development completes itself in the fruition of its life in the production of the sons of God, the absorption or appropriation of the harvest transposes the offspring from its material fruition into the spiritual status of the invisible but substantial and eternal spiritual entities, for whom these sons were created. In this absorption there is no loss of consciousness or individual identity, for that which is eternal has no beginning nor ending, hence there are eternal entities in the solar realm of man's interior existence, within the celestial spheres of his invisible and interior life.

In the dissolution of these tangible, visible, and material offspring of the Son of God, in their dematerialization from the tangible to the intangible, they flow into and become the essence of assimilation, in that the blending of what becomes, in its creation, an external consciousness, is transmuted to a unity with the spiritual and eternal ego of being. This is the blending of the natural with the spiritual entity, in the accomplishment of which there is an elimination of extraneous forces precipitated in matter, which meet a corresponding absorption in the existing lower forms of life. When the Tree of Life-progressing toward the climax of its fruition-eventuates, through propagation, in the manifest material sons of God,-the immortal men, for the production of whom the Tree of Life exists-and has completed its grand cycle, the precipitated essence of these immortals flows down by gradual stages of declension into the various phases of animal and human existence, and is again subject to those processes of reproduction by which, in a succeeding grand cycle, another crop of the sons of God appear, to be absorbed again into the eternal entities of their eternal life.

The divine consciousness in man is a matter of development and production. From that which is precipitated as the descending forces of transmutation, fallacy and evil develop. Fallacy is the inversion of truth, and evil is the inversion of good. Man becomes righteous through contrast. He is first incorporated into, and then incorporates, fallacy and evil. By the processes of incorporation, he gains his experiences with fallacy and evil. During the progress of his states there is a constant flowing down from the spheres above, the influx of truth and good, that man may contrast by progressive stages, his experiences with evil in the false light of inverted truth, with the modified truths and goods with which he is permitted to come in contact.

The White Stone and the Mystery of Iniquity.

The Girl and the Vala (No. 3).

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

HAT does a little boy know of guile, or an infant of deceit, that we should call a wicked man a knave? Even in the quaint Doric tongue of the Scotch, a boy-baby is a 'knave-bairn.' How has this tender designation of a man-child become the scornful appellation of the dishonest?"

"Through the involuntary wisdom of man," replied the Vala.

"And there is a propriety in the implied correspondence?"

"A fitness, in truth; and, trivial as this point may appear, could man clearly determine it, it would clarify many an obscurity for him, justify many an apparent prejudice of fate against him."

"'Whatever is, is in its causes just,' " quoted the Girl; and added, "read me the riddle."

"While the race is passing through the processes of evolution and involution, called growth," said the Vala, "from the inevitable disintegration of the germ of that growth until the end of growth is manifest in the image of its beginning, there is no integrity of life. The knave is the deceitful man, hopelessly such when self-deceit is sustained by self-confidence,—for the former determines him hypocrite; the latter, fool. Only integrity of thought can discern wherein dishonor lies; and he who realizes his shame will endeavor to escape it. The knave is one either advancing toward integrity, or receding from integrity; ripening or rotting."

"And in either case his state is distinct from the integral, the honest, state?"

"In either case it is separate."

"And as the boy is one who has not yet reached the maturity of the special cycle of life into which he has been born, his designation is not unfitly applied to the man who has departed from or not yet attained to the state of true honesty, the honest man being the integral man, the full-grown, perfect man. Is this the explanation?"

"You have said it," returned the Vala; "and by virtue of his honesty the perfect man deserves all honor; by virtue of his worth, all worship. And upon them who worship does he bestow his own excellence, for thus they place themselves in attitude to receive what is freely given, and asks but glad acceptance."

"Where shall such men be found? In what planet, or what far star of heaven?" asked the Girl; and though she knew it not, in her voice was that piercing note of keen desire heard in the cry of the North Wind as he searches earth for the Athenian maid who is to be mother of winged youth and joy, that earth may know her Aborigines.

"They shall be found in earth," replied the Vala, "earth that includes all planets, that holds the heavens in her wide embrace. Such men shall walk in the earth, for such men have walked here."

"In what long past age?"

"One such man the world has known within the easy reach of history," said the Vala. And the Girl knew that she meant him of Galilee.

After a thoughtful silence, the Girl spoke. "Your words open a new vista before me, and many things long confused and perplexed within my mind are clearing and unraveling. But tell me this: What is wickedness? There is a wonder in the word 'wicked' that holds my attention, though I may not define wherein the wonder lies."

"There is a wonder in it." said the Vala; "and a glory to spring from it as the lily from the dunghill. The wicked is the wizard, or witch, the one who sees, who realizes the dishonor of a life apart from righteousness. -by the light of truth which is the reconstructing memory of man's original integrity. The self-deceived knows not his own iniquity, and his pleasures are the pleasures of folly; but he who knows his shame is the true wizard, the wise, and even in the bitterness of acknowledged sin, tastes the sweetness of whispered promise, for unto him is the way of holiness discovered. He alone, who, having experienced all of evil, has had implanted in him the experiences of good, can know both good and evil, can measure each by contrast with the other, can discern all the difference between them. can truly see. He is the seeing one, the knowing one. Knowledge is power; but the pediment of knowledge is the body of the wicked, the weak. And as the wick of the lamp conveys oil to feed the flame, so does the frail body of death, by virtue of what is planted therein, nourish the mind of knowledge. Thus weakness, wickedness, is transmuted to strength, knowledge; and out of strength comes sweetness, life. When the harvest is ripe and reaped, peace? Peace, shalom, is nothing more nor less than completeness, wholeness, holiness. To be a saint, is to be sane, or sound, in body and mind, good; and to be good is to be God.'

"And this is the destiny of some?" asked the Girl. "The final destiny of all," returned the Vala.

"Surely the Fates are beneficent if such be their decree!" exclaimed the Girl. "Yet on every page of man-written history may be read, in the songs of the bards who are the voices of mankind may be heard, the curses of generations against fate's treacheries."

"Fate is not treacherous," said the Vala, "but man, who sees her promise and reads his own petty meaning into it, who hears her voice but will not understand her words, is deceived, not by destiny, but by himself."

"Where is her promise heard?—where does her voice sound?"

"Her promise is written in the life that comes out of death where spring succeeds winter and in the death that follows life where autumn succeeds summer; in the light that comes out of darkness where day follows night;—it sounds in the harmonies of the universe, in the stars that sing as they shine. In the light of its fulfilment, its meaning will be clear. To the letter shall it befulfilled, and then shall man know that the systems he has formulated from his fallacious reading, the rules of conduct he has devised for himself from his misconceptions, have been the bulwarks of evil, constructed of error. Yet some for the sake of ancient custom will cling to the vain imaginings of darkness; but some will gladly hail the advent of reality: and those shall wake to shame, and these to glory."

"But to those who find Destiny's word fulfilled to the letter in ways they dreamed not of, may she not, like the Delphic oracle, be said to have lied like truth?"

"Man," said the Vala gravely, "interprets her law and her promise by the cryptogram of his own desire, and fails to realize their true authority because deceived by the unlawful systems that he loves. But Destiny ever redeems her word."

"But does she not," still insisted the Girl, in her mistaken pity for those doomed to shame and confusion, "merit Macbeth's reproach to the weird sisters, in that she keeps the word of promise to man's ear, but breaks it to his hope?"

There was rebuke in the Vala's look and voice as she answered, "She merits no reproach; but man, whose unlawful desires resist her beneficence, merits, as he receives, the recoil of his maledictions on his head."

The Girl accepted the rebuke, and continued, "Then laws man has formulated for himself, and written on the statute-books of the nations, are but foolishness. Is the vaunted wisdom of kings, the high and the mighty, as well as that of the people, the many and the strong, of no more worth than this?"

"Whether by the hand of the haughty or the hand of the many," returned the Vala," the laws of the nations were written by rogues for the purposes of thieves."

The Girl started at the sharp harshness of the last words, and said, "Are there but folly and iniquity in the Commentaries of Blackstone?"

With inscrutable smile the Vala returned, "The divine law is revealed through a White Stone."

With rhythmic motion the Vala took her way into the wood. And the Girl, too, smiled, and whispered to the wind, "Better a poor and a wise child, than an old and foolish king, who knoweth not to be admonished."

A Woman's Influence.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

WE NO longer consider individuals," said a scientific speaker, "but only the race. Man is no longer the unit; the race is the unit. An individual is only one atom in the great chain of destiny. He lives his brief life as the repository of certain tendencies and instincts acquired by his predecessors and transmitted to him by heredity. Then he in turn passes them on, and the atom ceases forever to exist."

The foregoing statements are characteristic of a whole school of modern thought, and their insistent reiteration accounts for much of the prevalent paralysis of mental and spiritual energy. However salutary in repressing man's self-conceit, the immediate effect of this teaching is toward the discouragement of individual effort. It is not particularly cheerful and stimulating to contemplate oneself in the light of a human atom, and whoever feels himself "only this and nothing more," will be disinclined to put forth all his strength. Convince man he is but an atom, and he will begin to live up—or rather down, to the part. It is just as easy and infinitely more bracing to the higher faculties to convince him the throne of omnipotence awaits him, a destiny contingent upon his own desires and aspirations.

A conspicuous example of the force of individual effort, is just now attracting universal attention. For the past week the columns of the daily press have overflowed with eloquent tributes expressive of the world's affection and admiration for one woman. Her life work has been discussed in thousands of pulpits, with a general concurrence in the idea that for twenty-five years she has been one of the most eminent and significant influences in the moral and economic world.

From the Koreshan standpoint, we deplore the fact that during the very years in which the new gospel was formulating, Miss Willard should waste her splendid talents in waging an unprofitable warfare against appetites that the old religion is ineffectual to eradicate. At the same time we admire her intense conviction, breadth of sympathy, and strong will,—just the qualities that should predominate in the exponents of the new system and, in contemplating her career, the thought is imperative that if one woman by earnest, persistent, concentrated effort, could accomplish so much toward patching the tattered garments of the old social fabric, what greater possibilities open before every adherent of a cause that aims at complete renovation and recreation of human nature itself as the only

Labor-saving machines should be devoted to their legitimate uses; namely, to save the labor of man and not to manufacture beyond the demand for the goods created, or to increase the wealth of those who speculate upon the blood of their fellow men by diverting these means of industry from their legitimate channels.

It should be apparent to every one, that immortal-groundwork for the reconstruction of society. Miss Willard, to be sure, believed in the renovation of human nature through the grace of God and the temperance pledge; but she was ignorant of the wider methods by which God operates periodically, and the grace that saves humanity through the impartation of divine light and love brought to a focus in a personality and shed upon the world through his transmutation to spiritual energy. Given a knowledge of these higher truths, and what glorious opportunities lie before every woman who pledges herself, heart and soul to Koreshanity, the only cause that proclaims the complete emancipation of woman and her co-equality with man in the divine nature. It is significant that the Founder of this movement placed the first woman suffrage plank ever introduced into a political platform in this country.

There is another fundamental reason for the world-wide scope of Miss Willard's influence. She effectually resisted a tendency avowedly feminine and inevitably fatal to the achievement of great results. In order that her womanhood might express itself in terms of force, she never permitted paltry, personal considerations or petty details to fill her mind to the exclusion of broader interests and nobler sentiments. Another lesson for a sisterhood dedicated to Koreshan work destined, as we hope, to open the kingdom of heaven to all believers,—a sisterhood seeking through pain and toil, wearisome effort and oft repeated failures, to live the higher life that finds expression

"In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
Of miserable aims that end with self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge men's minds
To vaster issues.

So to live is heaven: To make undying music in the world, Breathing a beauteous order, that controls With growing sway the growing life of man."

The "science" of the day may classify all alike as mere struggling atoms in the great human body, but the health of any body depends directly upon the condition of its component elements. If the atoms are sound and healthy, the whole body will be full of vigor. A single group may conserve life enough to maintain the safety of the entire structure. With all its pretended wisdom, a fallacious science can never measure the circle of a woman's influence.

ity must inevitably depend upon something the very reverse of the conditions involving the present status of mankind. Immortality was not to come, however, until "the last day" or end of the age or dispensation.

The problem of labor and capital will never reach a peaceful solution on the basis of competism.

Economy is one of the primary laws of being. Q C

Official Treason and Perjury.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

EFIANCE to the law of the land, and treason to the rights and interests of the people, have become so common among officials in high position, as scarcely to provoke passing comment; but it has been left to that little great man, James H. Eckles, ex-comptroller of the currency, not behind the bars nor in the prisoner's box, but in an official report, to confess that for two years after he knew it to be an unsafe place in which to deposit money, and acting in entire disregard of the plain requirements of the law, he allowed a Philadelphia bank to keep its doors open and swallow up its depositors' money,—even until the larger depositors, suspecting that it was not safe, had withdrawn their deposits, leaving the poor to suffer the principal losses,—and then closed it. Among the reasons which he seems to think will justify his treachery and perjury,—for all this was in direct violation of his official oath and good faith to the general public, and calculated to weaken faith in all the banks,-were, first, he hoped that it would pull through; second, that "it could not have been closed without causing widespread financial disaster, in which other banks would have suffered." If this were a proper rule of action, a great bank would never be closed, however unsafe it might be; besides, the comptroller had no discretion in the case, and there was no right way open to him but to obey the law. But the most remarkable excuse is yet to come: "A year ago the election was on, and it would not have done to have had a bank failure at that time." That is, instead of the security against rotten banks which the national bank act promises, but which, through the treachery of high officials, it fails to give, men and women were allowed to go on for two years, depositing sound money in a rotten concern because, forsooth, this model official feared that if he did his sworn duty, a few voters might be turned away from voting for McKinley and "honest money." A fine way, indeed, to promote the cause of honest finance!

Bad as it is, the above is not the whole of this (for the official) bad case. Among the stringent provisions of the banking law to secure the safety of deposits, is a clause that forbids the loaning to any one person, more than ten per cent of the bank's capital, directly or indirectly. In this case, many times the amount allowed by law had been loaned to the president of the bank, and his affairs had become so involved that it was plain he never could pay it back; and so the bank's capital had, by this unlawful act, become seriously impaired. Notwithstanding his double obligation, this lawless official, as he himself shamelessly confesses, failed promptly to close the bank, for the flimsy reasons given above. Note also, that when at length he tardily did so, he did it at a time when his deed favored the rich at the expense of the poor. Such is now become the habitual course of those whom the people trust with official position. Having the power in their own hands to correct such outrageous abuses, how much longer will the people patiently submit to them? In the eyes of high office holders, money and party are entitled to all rights; humanity has none which they are bound to respect.

In the Editorial Perspective.

HERE ARE some strange things about the idea that we live on the outside of the earth, with all gravic energies tending toward the center. The idea involves all of the "scientific" absurdities of the universe, but there is one particularly to which we desire to call attention now. Look at the sun: Something is radiated from it, which we perceive to be light and heat. These are substances coming from the sun, the center of generation of these forces. An enormous amount of energy hourly proceeds from it. What is the source of the supply of the sun's fuel, which is consumed to produce all this energy? Now look at the earth, for instance, from the standpoint of the usual hypothesis that it is convex. It is supposed that gravity tends toward the center; that gravic energy is trickling down through the various strata, down and down, until it reaches the center. What becomes of it? What use is made of all the energies pouring toward the center? There has never yet been, in all the time of the existence of the universe, a conflux of energies of any kind that did not result in a combustion-in the creation and the maintenance of a vortex. A vortex of energy is the point of transmutation of energy to its opposite quality, and the consequent radiation from the vortex of all the substances generated in it. Gravity is generated at the center of the earth that really exists, with its tangible concave curvature; its vortex is the central solar sphere; gravity descends from the sun pushing all substances outward to the circumference. A vortex in a solid earth is a "scientific" absurdity! The astronomers have never thought of a vortex there, but it would not surprise us if some of them should make capital of a Koreshan suggestion and advocate a geocentral vortex!

Prof. Nathaniel S. Shaler is out now with some new ideas about the earth. He is a scientist, too, and contradicts what all other scientists have been teaching for hundreds of years. Geologists have long considered that the earth is nothing but a ball of fire, surrounded by a crust seventy-five miles in thickness. Prof. Shaler undertakes to refute all this, declaring impossible what others have held to be a fact. He thinks that the earth is solid, increasing in density until the center is reached, where there is absolute density—where the substances are perfectly compact, with the pressure so great that the heat is intense. Of course, the Professor offers no proof that the earth is solid, except by way of denial that its interior is liquid; for he admits that he does not know positively what is beneath the earth's surface. His conclusions are logical from the premise that the earth is convex; he has reached the exact opposite of truth. The earth is concave, and its interior is open, containing atmospheres and gases. The only thing we can get out of his theory, is the fact that he contradicts other men who have claimed to be authority on the subject!

We are accused of having a desire to change facts. Facts are considered to be sacred things by some people. Sacred things, you know, the human mind should not pry into! That is one reason we suppose, why the people of the world are so ignorant concerning facts. Sometimes facts can be changed to suit us-scientific facts, too; we are engaged in the specific work of changing facts to suit our theory. That is better than having to change the theory to suit the facts, especially if the theory is good and true. Some theories that we know of are bad and false, and it would not be a good idea to change the facts to suit false theories. It is a fact that the workingman is enslaved. This fact we are working hard to change. It is a fact that the governments of the world are corrupt and democratic. We have a theory concerning the governments of the world, and we desire to change the facts of the world's present condition to conform to our theory, and it will be accomplished! There are a great many facts in the world that need to be changed. All facts will be changed when the prophetic promise is fulfilled: "Behold, I make all things new."

Individualism is a condition of the perfected humanity in the immortal state. At the present time man is vidual, divided, imperfect. The claim of the agnostic, the mental scientist, or the anarchist, to possession of the right and power to the exercise of the functions of the individual, is just as fallacious and hypocritical as the claim of the modern clergy to the possession of divine. sonship. Today every new religious fad succeeds a previous one in the claim to divine attributes. The "I am God" declarations are growing numerous, sounded from the pulpit and the rostrum, and through the Theosophic, mental science, "Christian Science" and metaphysical journals the world over. There are getting to be too many gods of this kind. They were foreseen nineteen hundred years ago: "Many shall come in my name, and shall say, I am anointed." At the time when the world does not know anything about God, millions are claiming to possess his nature, his attributes, his wisdom, and his truth. Strange, isn't it?

The New Church Messenger was recently called down by one of its correspondents, concerning the subject of the creation of the earth; the editor having gone away out into the nebulous mists of an effete "science" by way of explanation of the mystery of creation. The correspondent wishes to hold to the conclusions of Swedenborg. The Swedish Seer taught the Cellular Cosmogony. Cast a stone into a body of water; the agitation extends outward from the center. The order of creation referred to by Swedenborg, is from the center. The universe as seen by him was, first, the sun as the center; second, the three atmospheres surrounding the sun, and third, the earth, surrounding and enclosing all, the sun being the positive center, while the earth is the passive circumference. The earth that Swedenborg saw was the concave earth surrounding the sun; it was the earth of the Cellular Cosmogony.

An egotistical "scientist," in repudiation of the claim that the great pyramid of Gizeh is a remarkable monument, the methods of construction of which are a mystery to the world, says he could duplicate it with the aid of 100,000 men without modern machinery. Easier said than done; braggadocios and fools are not all dead. The entire wealth of Egypt is not sufficient to destroy the pyramid, and there is now no known method in possession of the so called scientists or the engineers of the world, by which the massive stones can be lifted, nor by which the blocks of granite can be polished and joined so truly as they exist today in the giant structure. Science is involved in the pyramid—the science of alchemy, the light of Ham, the light of Egypt.

Reform papers spend most of their time in endeavoring to prove to the people that there is something the matter with the world. The people that are not aware of the many phases of gross injustice and corruption in social and political affairs, the evils and the wrongs of society, and of man's inhumanity to man generally, need to be let alone to experience some of it themselves. One experience in this line is worth more than all the arguments that the would-be reformers are able to dish out. As for us, we are looking for those who are already aware that the world is out of joint, and who know it vividly enough to be on the search for the remedy, and who are willing to sacrifice to effect its application. We need such people, and they need us.

The fact that so called scientists talk about the facts which are involved in the premises of Koreshan Science, is no evidence of their progress. It is not a source of wonder that after nearly thirty years of persistent promulgation of genuine science, the imitators and counterfeiters should take the hint and steal features of Koreshan Science and claim them as their own! It is well known that there are literary thieves; men have to protect their ideas by copyrights and patent rights, so universal has the spirit of piracy become. Why should Koreshan Science escape the pirate's hand? The counterfeit proves the genuine.

The modern so called reformers could learn many valuable lessons about scientific socialism and communism through the study of ant colonies and bee-hives. The government of a bee colony is perfect; the system is a form of monarchy. In the bee-hive there is no such thing as equal rights; they would consider themselves in a state of anarchy and disorder if every bee advocated democracy and the idea of social equality. There is no such thing as equality in nature. The worst kind of slavery imaginable would be in a government where equality in all things was enforced! Equality among men is an absurdity.

The Morning Star says that Mr. C. T. Russell, the editor of the Watch Tower, Allegheny, Pa., "is one of the numerous so called Messiahs with which this country is so amply surfeited." His claims amount to this; he has not yet mustered up sufficient courage to make the claim emphatically; it would interfere with his revenues. He has a hobby, and is riding it for all it is worth, but it is not worth much. His observatory is out of shape—the tower is not high enough, and it limits his horizon; its foundation is crumbling, and will no longer bear the huge, cross-eyed telescope which he employs.

Lord Kelvin and a number of men who pose as scientists, have reached the conclusion that there is a threatened exhaustion of oxygen from the earth's atmosphere. Never fear; it is only the exhaustion of the essential qualities of rational conclusion in the so called scientific mind—the oxygen of their mental atmosphere. The only extinction of species that will result, will be the extinction of the "scientist." It is a question of "the survival of the fittest."

Only the just can comprehend the principles of justice. The plumbline of justice is to be suspended, because now there is no justice. A man cannot define the principles of a just and equitable social system until he reaches the plane of absolute integrity. Right here we charge the world's so called reformers with incompetency. They feel it and know it, but it would not be consistent with hypocrisy to publish their feelings to the world.

The Adventists do not see how the soul of man can retain any degree of consciousness after the dissolution of the body, and consequently reject the idea. It is very consistent (!) after such a denial to call upon a supposed intelligence off in the sky to come down through the atmosphere and make an impression upon their minds simply because they fall upon their knees. They strain at gnats and swallow camels!

Protectionists would have the people believe that the foreign manufacturers pay the tariff duties. It turns out, however, that the people of the United States pay every cent of tariff tax imposed upon imported goods. There are some minds that can see this clearly without any argument, but there are other minds that are not able to comprehend the situation!

A crisis is a point of decision where two or more opposing elements meet in combat. A new motion obtains, the character of which depends upon the character of the victory. The world's crisis is the world's judgment, and must obtain here in the visible and tangible plane of humanity, and not in the sky, where there is neither mind, man, nor God.

If the earth were convex, with "attraction of gravitation" toward the center, with water on the outside, resting on substances which are admitted to be porous, what is to hinder the water from seeping through to the interior? Why should not the earth absorb all the water on the exterior surface?

Some free-thought sayings we have seen are simply off hand shots from old-fashioned flint-locks. That is the kind of guns they used in the days of Voltaire and Thomas Paine. Ingersoll is still using that kind of artillery. The latest scientific fads are his wads; there is no change in the guns.

It does not require argument to establish the fact that the products of the world belong to the men who produce them; neither does it require argument to convict, as thieves, in the minds of all rational people, the men who are depriving the producers of the benefits of their products.

The Inquisition of the dark ages was under the control of a religious society for the suppression of vice. We have such societies today, filled with the same spirit and having the same injustice. The only difference is in the method of punishment. Purpose: Abridgement of free speech.

The Senate of the United States is the roof of the House of Representatives. This is the reason the senators never got floored nor called down. Sometimes they protect the House in its meanness, and at other times shut out the light.

The inhabitants of Mars are the men here upon the earth's surface, who were born under the influence of the anthropostic planet Mars, a correspondent of which is the planet Mars in the physical heavens of the alchemico-organic universe.

Even astrology is perverted truth. Modern astrology teaches that the planets and stars exert an influence over man. The reverse is true; humanity controls the stars.

"Who ever saw a family suffering for want of a Bible?" says an agnostic. Do people suffer for want of modern science text-books? we ask. Let us have a case.

Moody has been endeavoring to tell the agnostics where heaven is, and has about reached the conclusion that he knows as little about it as the agnostic.

"Atheism is nothing but the confession of mental honesty." Good; but it is also a confession of ignorance.

Spiritists who have so much to do with tables, cabinets, slates, and materializations, are materialists.

At a time when men are endeavoring to find out where heaven is, there isn't any!

Replies to Everybody's Questions.

The following is a list of questions appearing in the Boston Investigator, but which were never answered. We take it upon ourselves to reply, for the amusement and benefit of our readers:

- Is the universe infinite? (2) Is animal life in nature infinite in extent? How did it originate? (4) Could a being occupy the same space as the entire universe without being one with it? (5) If a system, like our solar system, were formed from a nebulous mass of matter, is it likely finally to return to the nebulous mass again? How could it do so? (6) Was crystallization the earliest form of growth and of vegetation? (7) Is there any religion which is not a belief in super-Is there natural beings, as a part or the whole of its creed? (8) Is it logical or reasonable for a person to say that he believes without evidence in what he declares unthinkable and unknowable ?- DEAN DUDLEY.
- (1) No; everything in existence has form, and form has limitation. The form of the universe is cellular; the environ of the cell is the limit of existence. (2) Anything that is infinite is incomplete; if finite, it is perfect, finished. If by extent is meant the propagation or perpetuity, then animal life is infinite in extent.

There is evolution of species in definite cycles, but there is a completion of evolution, and hence limitation of species. (3) Why say, how did it originate? The universe now contains all the sources of origination that it ever contained. Laws of propagation obtain now; cause and effect unite in the seed of life in any plane or kingdom of existence. The processes of creation of animal life are going on now as much as ever. There never was a time when animals did not exist. (4) A being could not occupy the same space the universe occupies-except the being of the universe. We suppose the orthodox idea of God is referred to. Such an idea is nonsense. The energies of the alchemico-organic universe exist in space as substance. There is no divine or human mentality outside of the human body. (5) The solar system was never formed from a nebulous mass; and consequently could never return to such a state. The only nebulous mass in existence to which the world has returned, is the nebulous mass of astronomical nonsense. (6) Early in the morning, early in the spring, or early when? There never was such an early time when all forms of growth were not in existence at the same time with forms of crystallization. Discard the idea that there ever was a time when the world was not; it is eternal. The fact that it exists now by means of laws of perpetuity, is proof that it always existed. (7) Yes; Koreshan Religio-Science is a natural religion, founded upon natural science. (8) No; not even when it comes to modern astronomy and other pseudo-sciences. They are as bad as the fallacious theories of orthodoxy concerning God, the creation of the world, and the hereafter of the human race.

(1) I am looking forward to the transformation of page 16. I do not try to guess what it is, but will tell you what would be interesting to me—a diagram of the earth's concave surface, giving the location of all the countries. I would like to ask a few questions which to you may seem very simple, but are too deep for me to understand. (2) I see in The Flamms Sword that the different nations of the earth represent different portions of the human body, and that China is the skin. I would like to know which one represents the head, and which the heart. (3) If the stars are reflected from metallic discs in the shell of the earth, how do you account for the North Star being comparatively stationary, with the Dipper revolving around it every twenty-four hours.—J. A. R., Ft. (ibson, Ind. Ter.

(1) Page 16, when transformed, will answer the purpose of all our readers; we know you will appreciate it. (2) The people, of course, are the nations. The difference in the character of life and mind of the people distinguishes one nation from another in lines of progress. The secret of America's progress is involved in the question of the progress of life planted in the race nineteen hundred years ago; it was the life of Aries, the head of the anthropostic Zodiac. That life is now in America, and we say, America is ahead of all other nations. America involves the embryo of the new kingdom. The nation corresponding to the heart is the nation containing the heart of commerce. This, in the body of the old order, is England. (3) The stars are not reflected from discs in the shell of the earth; planets are, but they are confined to the Zodiac, and do not get far from the ecliptic, nor out of the zone of the tropics. The stars are points or centers of combustion at places of meeting of levic and gravic energies passing to and from the sun. The heavens constitute a great sphere of force inside the earth; this sphere revolves on its axis. The North Star is near the northern axis, and hence is almost stationary.

I have read Wm. Carpenter's "100 proofs that the Earth is Not a Globe." He cites no references, presents no proofs—simply makes statements. His proof No. 16 is assertion only; I have failed so far to find any authority. He claims the earth to be a plane; you, a concave sphere. If the water is level, and only level, I do not see that the concave sphere would explain difficulties any better than the convex theory. Some one has sent me a copy of THE FLAMING SWORD, and I may yet find some explanation that will settle doubts as to the shape of the earth.—C. A. B., Port Lavaca, Tex.

We are familiar with the work of Mr. Carpenter and others who have endeavored to prove the earth flat. They observe objects on the water's surface at a greater distance than would be possible if the earth were convex, and from such observations assume that the earth is flat. Water at any given point is at right angles to the direction of gravity. If the gravic rays are radiated from a central point of generation, and we maintain that they are, the water's surface, in a state of rest or equilibrium or level, is concave. The Zetetics say the water is level and flat at the same time. This would be consistent and true if the gravic rays are parallel. We maintain, and by actual and scientific experimentation, which extends far beyond the lines of tests performed by Parallax, demonstrate that water is level and concave at the same time. In other words, we demonstrate that the true water level is the concavity.

Mrs. M. B., New Castle, Pa.-We note the clipping you sent us, concerning the bill for the restriction of marriage, the execution of incurables, misshapen babies, and confirmed criminals; also your question as to what our opinion is concerning Such a bill would place the life of every man legally in the hands of the medical fraternity. It is bad enough to interfere with the rights of man through societies for the suppression of vice. If a censorship of life were established, freedom of existence would be considerably curtailed. When the laws of life are understood in the future, the insane, the criminals, and monstrosities will cease to be; they will disappear by not coming any more! This bill, which boasts of what science will do, is originated under the delusion that whatever is done in the name of "science" must not be questioned. Scientists are just as badly off on these points as they are concerning everything else, on astronomy, chemistry, therapeutics, for instance.

* * * The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

THE FLAMING SWORD is the very best paper I have ever read. It is the most welcome visitor to my home each week-a visitor that comes to stay. I would not be without it for four times the price. The articles from the pen of our beloved Leader are always read first—eagerly devoured, so to speak, and then read over again more carefully. The other articles are all excellent, while the editorials are bright and witty. Chats with readers, the summary of the week's news, answers to inquirers, etc., are all written in fine style, and show that our editors are wide-awake, and doing a great deal of thinking. not find words to express my appreciation of the weekly Flaming Sword.—C. M. B., Los Angeles, Cal.

I am very much pleased with the weekly FLAMING SWORD, and look forward for its appearance from week to week with everincreasing interest and anticipation. As an educator, it deservedly merits a cheery welcome in every home in the land. The quantity and quality of the subject-matter that illumines its pages, the noble purpose to which it is dedicated, together with the low price at which it is published, combine, in my humble opinion, to make it by far the best and the cheapest weekly extant. As for us, and all earnest seekers after truth, it is especially attractive, as it opens up a field of thought entirely new, and sparkling with many glittering points of interest. It seems safe to predict that the time will come—as the demonstrated facts relating to the survey on the Gulf coast of Florida shall become more generally known—when the demands for THE SWORD will be so great that the people will be clamoring for it as eagerly as the starving people in Cuba are clamoring for bread.—W. G. S., Washington, D. C.

Chat With Readers.

You should have good ideas with you all the time; they are serviceable in times of contemplation, or in trouble, or in attempting to reach a conclusion-good for anything that is good. A good idea will always subserve your best interests, and will never lead you astray. They are always bad ideas that serve you badly. An idea is a group of thoughts or a formulation of thought entities; we are made up of thoughts, anyway. The trouble with the world is, that people have too many bad ideas-too many bad thoughts. "As a man thinketh so is he," is a true proverb. The nearer you can come to right thinking, the nearer you are to the goal of destiny; this is self-evident, for a man who cannot think at all has not progressed very far, and has yet a long way to go before he reaches the climax of mental brilliancyit may take him thousands of years to reach your plane, and even you can advance a little further. A man cannot think properly if his mind is in mental darkness; mental darkness can only be eliminated by the forces of truth. If you think a thought worth thinking at all, begin to think of things that will benefit the world, and get out of the ruts of your self. The world has forgotten how to think-it thinks negatively. Effective thought is positive. The most positive thought emanates from the mind involving positive Truth. Some positive thoughts are reflected through THE FLAM-ING SWORD. These thoughts are looking for you, and for your neighbors, and for all who desire to possess good ideas. We have to work to get them to you; you can help get them to others.

If you would devote two weeks to thought and study about what you could do to help spread a knowledge of the truth, and a little more time in correspondence with us, you would do yourself and others more good in a day's time after such a preparation, then by months of effort without definite plans and aims. Aday's work, characterized by a little tact and ingenuity, will do more good than all the argument shot off-handed at promiscuous hearers. You must break down prejudice in your vicinity by mental energy, silently generated. If you wish to help us, subject yourself to our system of propaganda; we have made a study of it, backed by a good deal of experience. Our field of observation on the lines of the promulgation of our System is wider than yours, and we can give you pointers. A lively work begins with the Spring; we are aggressive, and must be on the move continually. If we exhaust one field, we must try others.

If THE FLAMING SWORD teaches the truth, the motives of its promulgators are true; and when we ask your support to the extent of your financial and other ability, we are but asking that which is just. We are laboring for humanity; we are fighting for humanity's cause, and your cause, and in helping us you are but helping yourself and all those whom truth will benefit. You can contribute to the welfare of the world. Every mind reached at the present time means the conversion of thousands in less than a score of years from now. The success of a movement depends upon its support when it is in its inception.

The greatest pleasure that we experience is that of imparting to others a knowledge of that which we know to be true. Truth would do us no good if we did not do with it what it necessarily involves—application to life and the promulgation of it for the benefit of those to whom we are responsible. Seek to benefit your neighbor, as we have benefited you; it is your duty.

We are pleased to present this week another colloquy between the Girl and the Vala, by Rev. E. M. Castle. "The White Stone and the Mystery of Iniquity" is of special interest, and you will enjoy it; it is beautifully written, and the thoughts poetically expressed.

Our Review Corner.

Bab-ed-Din, the Door of the True Religion, By Ibrahim G. Kheiralla, D. D.; 84 pages, price 25 cts. Chas. H. Kerr & Co., Chicago, Ill.

This work is the result of a long study of the author under Abd-el-Karim Effendi Taharani, an Egyptian who pretends to teach the true religion. The author claims now to possess the key to the "secret doctrine," and attempts to reveal the same, and calls the work a "Revelation from the East." It happens to be a "revelation" that does not reveal. Dr. Kheiralla attempts to prove a number of things concerning the Creator of the universe, by starting out with some assumed premises such as, God is not the universe, nor in it, nor a power, nor a law, nor a principle. nor man; that man is not God nor a part of him. His conclusions are that God has personality and individuality, and that he is separate entirely from every part of the universe in which we live. He thinks that God is like a flame, and in this way has form; and is everywhere present through the light from the flame. He has simply discarded the fallacy of Christendom and has taken up as great a one, bearing the Egyptian stamp. It is no part of the truth. If the evidences in the universe, corroborated by the teachings of the Bible, are good for anything in the line of rational conclusion, there is nothing more clearly or positively demonstrable than that God is man.

The Constitution of the United States of the World, by Chas. Stuart Welles, M. D.; 9 pages. London; New York, 1 East 39th street.

The idea involved in this constitution is to confederate all distinctive governments of nations as they now exist or may hereafter exist, under one central government under the name of the United States of the world. This is a logical conclusion of a mind imbued with the idea of Republicanism or the Democratic form of government. If the government of the United States of America is a federation of many states, why not form a federation of all the nations of the world? Simply because it would not work; it is unnatural and unscientific; if we may judge the proposed government from the conduct of the politicians of the United States of America, we should declare the project a failure. The power of the true government must proceed from the cause of all things, and this involves the thought and the science of a Theocratic Imperio-Republico-Regal System, fashioned after the form and function of the physical universe.

Cold Facts, by C. St. John Cole, 104 pages, price 10 cts.; 50th thousand. 350 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

This little work on the money question is written for the common people, and is having quite a circulation. It is filled with facts and figures, and ought to be in the hands of every student of national finances. It advocates flat money, the money of the people, and proves that greenbacks have been worth more than gold. It exposes the conspiracy of bankers and schemes of bondage to bonds and bondholders. The tables compiled from official sources are valuable, and every one interested in reform should procure a copy for their own study.

A Sample of Astronomical Nonsense.

How Large is the Universe?

To form some idea of the largeness of the earth, one may look upon the landscape from the top of an ordinary church steeple, and then bear in mind that one must view 900,000 similar landscapes to get an approximately correct idea of the size of the earth. Place 500 earths like ours side by side, yet Saturn's outermost ring could easily enclose them. Three hundred thousand earth globes could be stored inside of the sun, if hollow. If a human eye every hour were capable of looking upon a fresh measure of world material 7500 square miles large, that eye would need 55,000 years to overlook the surface of the sun. To reach the nearest fixed star one must travel nineteen trillions of miles, and if the velocity were equal to that of a cannon-ball, it would require 5,000,000 years to travel the distance. On a clear night an ordinary human eye can discover 1000 stars in the northern hemisphere, most of which send their light from distances which we can-not measure. How large they must be! Round these 1000 stars circle 50,000 other stars of various sizes. Besides single stars, we know of systems of stars moving round one another. Still, we are but a short way into space as yet. Outside our limits of vision and imagination there are, no doubt, still larger spaces, The Milky Way holds probably at least 20,191,000 stars, and, as each is a sun, we presume it is encircled by at least fifty planets. Counting up these figures, we arrive at the magnitude of 1,000,955,000 stars. A thousand millions of stars! Who can comprehend it? Still this is only a part of the universe. The modern telescopes have discovered more and similar milky ways still further away. We know of some 3000 nebulæ which represent milky ways like ours. Let us count 2000 of them as being of the size of our Milky Way, then 2000x20,191,000-40,-382,000,000 suns, or 2,019,100,000,000 heavenly bodies. Suppose these bodies parading before our mental eye one per minute, it would require 3,840,000 years to finish the march, in all of which time we would have to look upon them unceasingly

Suppose a human being migrating from globe to globe and spending fifty years on each, he would require 100,955,000,000,000,000 years for the round. If he stayed only one hour, he would save much time, but still need 230,400,000 years for the task. Yet these nebulæ are only a part of the universe. Outside the nebula limits we know of other nebulæ not resolvable into stars. They appear to be primitive nebulæ—pure, unused world-stuff—matter for new creations. Some of them occupy a space as large as the orbit of Uranus. Some are still larger. The one in Orion is estimated to be 2,200,000,000,000,000,000,000 times larger than our sun. Are we come to the outermost limits? Who dares say yes? We are probably come to our limits; but the future, with new instruments and scientific devices, may push those limits so much further out into space.—Exchange.

The Mystery of Light.

"Scientists" in Ignorance of the Relation of Matter and Energy.

Light is transformable into color, into heat, into cold, into force, into weight, into sound, and yet with all that is known of some of the manifestations, we are absolutely ignorant of what it actually is. For all we know, it may be transformable into every phenomenon cognizant to the human senses. The army of speculative scientists is divided in opinion as to whether light is matter or not. For a long time our text-books have contained the statement that "the sun is the source of all light," and yet we manufacture light every night, at a time when the sun is at the opposite side of that portion of the earth where night prevails, and this artificial light fulfills the functions of sunlight. Recently, it has been asserted by acknowledged scientists that light is simply vibration—the vibration of particles in what is termed the atmosphere of space, the so called ether. But particles of what? For here, again, comes a question. Scientists are divided in opinion as to whether there is a vacuum in the interstellar space, or whether the ether is not filled with matter —is, in fact, itself matter.—New Ideas, Philadelphia, Pa.

While Honest Men Starve.

The other day we read of a man in Oakland, who was looking for work or for food. Finding no favorable response to his demands he picked up a rock and threw it through the glass panel in a front door. Then he was promptly arrested, and being put in jail he was fed, which was what he was after. Seems a huge joke on Oakland that an honest man can starve, but once he convinces the authorities that he is a criminal, he will be given shelter and food. The moral of it seems to be that if you are hungry, go and smash something and you will be fed; this is an immoral moral, but inculcated by all the other cities as well as Oakland. Individualism for honest men, socialism for criminals. Under individualism honest men starve; under socialism criminals are fed. Could not these conditions be transposed or modified with advantage?—Ex.

KEEP OUT OF THE PAST.

Keep out of the Past, for its highways
Are dark with malarial gloom;
Its gardens are sere and its forests are drear,

And everywhere moulders a tomb.

Who seeks to regain its lost pleasures, Finds only a rose turned to dust; And its storehouse of wonderful treasures Is covered and coated with rust.

Keep out of the Past. It is haunted; He who in its avenues gropes, Shall find there the ghost of a joy prized the most

And a skeleton throng of dead hopes.

In place of its beautiful rivers,
Are pools that are stagnant with slime;
And graves gleaming bright in a phosphoric light,

Hide dreams that were slain in their prime.

Keep out of the Past. It is lonely, And barren and bleak to the view; Its fires have grown cold and its stories are old—

Turn, turn to the Present-the New.

Today leads you up to the hill tops
That are kissed by the radiant sun, Today shows no tomb, life's hopes are in bloom,

And today holds a prize to be won,
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Two Things Just Alike.

A spirited discussion took place in a noted Republican resort one evening this week over the question, "Are times any better?" The company of fifteen or twenty were about evenly divided upon the question, and one life-long Republican said that a "gag" which he heard a few nights before, illustrated the situation exactly as he saw it.

The "end man" called out: "Say, Smith, did you ever see two things exactly alike?"

"No, did you?"

"Yes."
"What were they?"

"The Grover Cleveland panic and the Bill McKinley boom."—Justice.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

The Question of War With Spain.

WE HAVE been asked repeatedly to express our sentiments respecting the "strained" relations of the United States and Spain. If we are to make public our views regarding the international difficulties which tend toward bellicose complications with Spain, we would be compelled to go out on altogether independent lines. There are reasons why two sets of Christians ought not to send each other to heaven prematurely, but these might easily be offset by as cogent reasons why they should. Of course, we all know that war is an apparently terrible calamity; but as the Lord God has set us the example, both in the results of his express command as historically recorded and prophetically declared, it might be that even Christans are authorized to dispatch a few thousands occasionally, to the much desired "happy hunting ground."

If we are asked for cogent reasons why we as a nation should compel Spain to declare war with us, we would most emphatically iterate that the blowing up of the Maine through Spanish treachery, furnishes a possible incentive for a lovely Christian power like the United States to show its magnanimity by calling the affair off with an indemnity of a few million dollars. This would be business; it would comport with the true spirit of modern commercial enterprise, and Lombard street, the pendulum which regulates the tick of Wall street and thence the Congress of the United States, would be made extremely happy. Whatsoever indemnity was settled upon could be predicated upon the basis of a purely commercial transaction, with no doubt a good speculative profit to the United States. The corporations holding Spanish securities could furnish the money. and no doubt would prefer this to war. A few American and Japanese seamen could be supplied to fill the places of those dynamited through the explosion. Of course Spain is sorry, and if she exhibits her repentance by paying the indemnity demanded, what more could we reasonably ask?

It is written in a Book held sacred by hundreds of millions of people, that "there was war in heaven [this is written, though, in the past tense as prophecy of coming events]: Michael and his angels fought against the the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels." If two contending armies are justified in fighting in heaven that the dragon and his angels may be cast out, we know of no good reason why Michael may not extend the mobilization of his forces into our territory in hell, that the dragon may be cast out of hell also. There is but one justifiable ground upon which we could righteously force Spain into a declaration of war, and that is her malignant butchery of tens of thousands of defenseless Cubans. The United States has stood idly by for three years, observing the fanatical malevolence of the most inhuman power on the face of the earth, prosecuting its final and most diabolical exercise of authority. We have looked upon the desolating of Cuba through the mercenary eyes of Wall street, until we have disgraced ourselves and are a stench in the nostrils of Jehovah.

Is it possible to retrieve the loss of our national honor by enforcing a cessation of Spain's bloody work? In the declaration of the independence of Cuba by the United States, we might offend all the powers of Europe, but would we offend the spirit of a just God? Would the Almighty God and the angels in lieaven justify the attitude of the United States in the caution she has exercised on purely commercial incentives? Does the existence of the Republic of the United States depend upon the attitude of the monarchies of Europe, and shall we consult these powers as to the rights of Americans? There have been times when we did not. Shall we truckle more at this late day, than then? Settle first upon these points: Is the espousal of the Cuban cause by the United States, just? Would it be just to blow Spain out of American waters? Do the Cubans deserve to be free, or under the dominion of the United States? These are the questions to consider, if they are not already disposed of. These settled, let the world know by the dispatch with which we accomplish the work, that we can meet the combined powers of the world, if demanded, to sustain our national honor in righteousness. No national honor is worth sustaining, if not righteous and approved of God.

The paltry sum of $50,000,000 has been appropriated for "defense." Great God! has it come to the point where we imagine that we are required to defend ourselves against Spain? Spain in possession of Cuba, with the control of its ports and a great military and naval power, has been cornered in Havana for three years by a little handful of Cubans, and we are called upon by the press of our country to defend ourselves, and $50,000,000 have been appropriated! Congress should have voted $400,000,000, with the avowed intention of blowing Spain out of America, and any other power that would dare to interfere with our concerns. France under the great Napoleon would have conquered Europe and humiliated and degraded the Anglo-Saxon, but the elements under God conspired to thwart the purposes of the Latin race, and the Anglo-Saxon rose in triumph for the reason that in that race Jehovah had planted a nucleus for his righteous kingdom now to be established, and victory was achieved because the Lord so purposed it.

On the Point of the Sword.

Campaign Song for the Silverites in 1900.

THE CHICAGO Tribune is up and at it almost every day. Bryan and 16 to 1-notwithstanding the fact that Bryan and the 16 to 1 issue were buried (by the Tribnne) past resuscitation sometime since-make a very lively corpse; and one of the most interesting features of the editorial columns of that flopping journal, is the persistence with which it hangs on to the proclamation "cheap dollar," on the assumption that people are idiots and cannot reason. The Tribune has been in the advertising business long enough to know that a nostrum is not valued in this country for its merits, but by the amount of advertising it receives; hence, "cheap dollars," "cheap dollars," "cheap dollars;" is the only argument the goldbug daily has ever offered to the people in favor of the gold cure for the poor man's ills. It may have learned something from the policy of the "Christian Scientists" who, though they have no argument in favor of their fallacy, are making good headway by reiterating: "All is good;" "All is good;" "Good is God;" "Good is God;" "There is no evil;" "There is no evil;" "There is no evil;" "There is no evil;" and then go right along raising hell with impunity, with the expectation of endorsement by their dupes. It affords us an illustration of the supremacy of "suggestion" over reason, where the reasoning faculties are rendered obtuse through journalistic hypnotism.

"Dear dollars" imply long and weary hours of drudgery. When the dollar is dear (because scarce) and in the hands of the gold broker who has cornered it, it is hard to get. It purchases well for the gold owner, because the dearer it is the more labor it requires to purchase it. How would it do to sing this song?

The gold dollar is dear, work and get it.

The gold dollar is dear, work and get it.

"The dear dollar," "the dear dollar," "the dear dollar;"

You will prize it, working man, when you get it, when you get it.

You will prize it when you get it, because it's dear.

It is in the hands of the broker because it's scarce;

You will prize it when you get it, because it's dear.

The dearer the dollar, the harder the labor, and the more of it to get it.

Make it dearer; and you'll prize it the more, and work the longer to get it, working man, and don't you forget it, when you get it, that you worked the harder to get it in proportion to its scarcity,

And the extent to which 'twas cornered by the gold broker and commercial pirate.

We Are Publishing The Flaming Sword to Suit Ourselves!

WE HAVE a certain class of correspondents who want something spiritual and uplifting. They do not like the idea of reincarnation and many other things in The Flaming Sword. We know that those who live in our age are the ones who lived in the age preceding, and that the resurrection of the dead is the reincarnation of the dead. This is one of the doctrines of Koreshanity, and its promulgation is one of the purposes of The Sword. We cannot afford to repeat the story of the man, the boy, and the donkey, but suggest that those who desire us to publish The Sword for their especial benefit will read the fable, and if not too obtuse apply the moral. From Abraham until David are fourteen generations, from David until the carrying into Babylon were fourteen generations, and from the carrying away into Babylon until Christ, were fourteen generations. Here we have forty-two generations, before Abraham arose in the person of the Lord.

Now, we are not trying to force any one to believe what we teach, nor are we compelling anybody to read The Flaming Sword; but if we enjoy putting forth what we know to be true and if you do not like it, you know it is your privilege to refuse it. As we have said before, we are not quite ready to get down and let the donkey ride us.

It is the easiest thing in the world to be mistaken as to what constitutes spirituality. The basis of all spirit is matter. The better and more solid and material the gold, the finer the energy derived from its combustion. Let's get the matter right and the spirit will take care of itself. Read The Sword: in fact, study it. You will find it the only truly spiritual paper published. It is the only paper in the world, scientific, correctly theological, and spiritual. We do not begin to have the faith in your advice to us that we have in our own scientific conclusions. If we did we would cease to teach, and become the pupil

Job knew that after his, then, physical structure was destroyed, that in the last day in his flesh he should see God. We take stock in Job, not because he was Job, but because he knew what he was talking about.

There Is No Spiritual Philosophy.

THE FLAMING SWORD man, he of the Koreshan System, offers a reward of $1,000 to any editor who will prove that his system of Koreshanity is not correct. The reward has such a large string tied to it that editors hesitate to attempt to earn the reward, for fear that it would disappear about the time his theory is knocked out. The FLAMING SWORD man is really very interprising and wants to see some poor editor earn one thousand dollars (nit). The Dawning Light does not wish to be thought less generous than The Flaming Sword, and will give Mr. Koresh $1,000 if he can prove that the Spiritual Philosophy is not the only true religion; and that man can only save himself by and through its teachings; that the idea of a savior is not man made, and the theory can be of no possible benefit to humanity. Now, Mr. Koresh, go to work, and when you have earned that thousand dollars (to our satisfaction) you'll get it.—The Dawning Light.

THE Dawing Light man wants to be funny;—he can hardly be dignified by the title facetious. He wants "The Flaming Sword man" to earn $1,000 by proving that the "Spiritual Philosophy" is not the only true religion. It would be impossible to prove a thing that is self-evident. Philosophy is not religion at all. Religion is religion, and philosophy is philosophy. If philosophy were religion, it would have the title religion instead of philosophy. If the Dawning Light man is so ignorant as to confound the terms philosophy and religion, we don't know that we can help him. His light is dawning, not yet dawned. Our sun is shining, but it is no good for owls. If the Dawning Light man has a spiritual religion instead of a spiritual philosophy that he wants to bring to the front, and will define to us what is implied in his religion, and if it differs from all other religions in that the others are not spiritual and his is, then we will take his case under consideration. We are not in need of his $1,000, but we are willing to enlighten him to the extent of his capacity without remuneration.

Living Words and Substantial Thoughts.

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

HOW WONDERFUL a thing is speech," said the Girl, "and how strange the power that lies in words, that they should change the face of the world for one, and call up thoughts undreamed of before their awakening touch! Since first I heard your voice, I seem to dwell in a new world,—a world gleaming and quivering in the prophetic forelight of a glory about to burst and flush it with the rich crimson of life, and the shining gold of pure delight. The poets tell us words are things. Tell me, you, what they are."

"Truly they are things," said the Vala, "if such designation be to acknowledge them substantial."

"Substantial?" queried the Girl, with the advancing edge of a glad surprise in her tone.

"The thoughts formulated for communication by words to other minds," said the Vala, "are the result of the transmutation of the material base of mind to the energy of thought and speech, which is as substantial, though spiritual, as the matter destroyed in its creation; for spirit is the active state, and matter the quiescent state of substance. Spirit goes to sleep in matter, and matter awakes into spirit; and for this reason; long ago the clear-eyed ancients personified sleep as the god Morpheus, which means the externa form; but spirit is the function. So, too, through perception, did they bestow upon the eagle, as the symbol of the center that creates new forms, the epithet Morphnos; and here is wisdom. In speech, the actual substance of the speaker's mind is carried over to other minds; even more, the material base of mind, the substance of brain and body, is transmuted to energy and carried over to be redeposited through the receptive mind in the fabric of brain and body supporting that mind, modifying the mental and physical quality, consequently the life, of the recipient. From generation to generation there proceeds this passing over; and this is tradition, as the word itself tells you,—a giving over from life to life."

"And when traditions are handed down from generation to generation, something substantial is communicated and deposited?"

The Vala assented; adding, "And to remember is to draw up again from matter into mind."

"Then if all the books in the world were destroyed, still the lore of the past could be resurrected in the minds of the present?" And the Girl's face glowed with the greatness and beauty of the thought.

"It is not possible," returned the Vala, "for knowledge ever to be destroyed in the sense of being eternally lost. It is destroyed only by being transmuted into that from which it may be recreated. And if only one man remained, that one man would be the repository of all the world has ever known, of all the world has ever been, for upon humanity depends the perpetuity of the universe; and from him it could be brought again into active existence."

"Do you say that all the knowledge printed in all the books of the world might be held by one brain?" asked the Girl, mentally picturing, as she spoke, the libraries of the world with their countless volumes."

"Ah, child," said the Vala, "knowledge is not printed in such books as you think of. Knowledge never exists apart from mind, nor mind apart from body. Matter, through vibration, becomes spirit; and spirit, by compression towards a point, becomes matter. A vortex is formed, and the inrushing energies that crowd it press themselves into matter. Thus mind presses, or prints itself into the visible body, and he who has eyes may read. Men are the real books, and strange and sad, yet glorious in promise, are the stories printed therein. The record of knowledge is printed in what men call books, but the knowledge is no more there than the property recorded in the state archives is within the covers of the leather-bound books, or the guests of a hotel on the pages of its register."

The Girl smiled at the homely illustrations, yet it seemed not strange that the wise one should use them, nor did she esteem less the teacher who could use such means to make the truth more readily apparent. And smiling she asked, "What purpose does the book serve?"

"The purpose of the record or the register,—of direction. The attention is fixed by means of the printed page; and thus the mind is drawn to the sphere of the thought there recorded,—it pierces the sphere, and by the attractive power of desire calls to itself entities of that sphere, which thus enter the mind of the seeker after knowledge. But the days are very near when, for many, such external aid will no more be necessary, and mind will communicate with mind direct."

She paused; and the Girl spoke not, but sat as one content, yet quietly expectant; and the Vala continued. "Words are carriers of life. Life formulated for communication is word. The words that compose language carry intellectual life from brain to brain. But there are other words. Whatever is a means of transmitting life is word, and from generation to generation life is also transmitted in the creation of offspring. As

* *

The Lord Christ came to save from the curse, and if any part of that curse is physical in its character, the redemption must penetrate so far into the physical as the curse itself extends.

No modification of the competitive system can meet the requirements of the age.

language expresses the quality of thought, and thence of the structure from which thought proceeds, so do offspring express the quality of the parent structure. The first expresses more particularly intellectual life; the second expresses the will; but will is the continent of intellect, and its root is in matter. The heart of any existence, its words or seed center, speaks in these two manners, and what it speaks in one direction is the fitting continent of what it speaks in the other direction. Unless the will of man was expressed in outward form, his intellectual expression could find no receptacle. Thus the language of a people is always the true index of that people's life; for the word or seed center of any existence is the source of all emotion, or out moving, from that life. It is the center of all propagation,—of life, and of doctrine which is the guide of life.'

"And men are words?"

"Men are words."

"And the Word of God?"

"The Word of God is the aggregation into one perfect unity of all words; the root of all language, of all life; the manifestation in human form of the creative center of all existence."

"And by such a Word did God make all things?"

"In and through such a Word God created all things. All things exist in the universe supremely to contribute to the development of that perfect Word or Seed. And that Word is perfected for the sake of all life—that through its planting, from lower to higher levels growth might obtain. From this center evolves the universal life, to be again involved therein; it is the beginning and ending of all existence."

"Then how true," said the Girl, "was the sight of the majestic blind Milton when he saw that from one Almighty 'all things proceed, and up to Him return!' He saw, too, 'body up to spirit work,' and how the fruits of the vegetable kingdom in providing nourishment to man, 'to vital spirits aspire.'"

"All things of the universe," returned the Vala, "aspire to man, and man aspires to God; because first God has inclined to man, and thence to all lower existences."

"The wonder of what you tell overwhelms me," said the Girl, in that hushed tone that expresses more than language.

"And yet I have told but part," said the Vala, "for I can but give as you receive; and much there is to tell of the Word that made the worlds. What you have heard is but earnest of what you shall hear."

So saying, she withdrew: nor did the Girl, ruminating the sweet nourishment of Truth, remark her going.

The end of the age is reached; the time is now ripe for man to so apply the laws of life to his physical being, as to fulfil in himself the promised possibilities in which the efforts of the ages must culminate.

The science of Government is the science of life, and absolutely true government is immortablife.

From Faith to Knowledge.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

IT WAS a clear, bright winter's night. The air was sharp and frosty, urging pedestrians to hasten forward with swifter footsteps while the blood tingled in their cheeks. It was too cold to loiter by shop windows blazing with electricity or saunter leisurely in full enjoyment of the spectacle of the streets by night.

With beat of drum and burst of music, a detachment of the Salvation Army bore in sight, marching briskly with banners streaming and the usual escort of stragglers following in the rear. At the corner of one of the main thoroughfares, the soldiers made a sudden halt and went down on their knees in the new fallen snow. Overhead the stars were shining. Down below the street lamps flared and the passers hurried stolidly by unmindful of the praying band whose loud voices rang out into the night. Now, starting to their feet, while the rest of the company clapped hands and circled back and forth to keep from freezing, the leaders each in turn, testified briefly.

"I'll praise Him, I'll praise Him, every hour I'll praise Him! He's the same God that saved little Moses and sent Pharaoh's daughter to pull him out of the bulrushes, and delivered Joseph from the pit and went down in the den with Daniel and give the lions the lockjaw, and walked with the three Hebrew children in the fiery furnace so they never singed a hair. He's saved me from the power of satan and"—

"He's the Lily of the Valley and the bright and morning Star," struck in the company, to the tune of a popular negro melody.

The next speaker was a woman, Lieutenant March they called her, with a pale, striking face and dark expressive eyes. She began to speak very clearly and forcibly. Her words though simple, were well chosen and both voice and language betokened training and refinement of a high order. Every gesture was free and graceful; she wore the usual scarlet waist and dark skirt of the order, but her face shone out like a lily from the shadowing brim of the ugly black poke.

"Dear friends," she said, "it is easy to trust God and give thanks when all is well with us and the desires of our hearts are granted. But it is written, whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and joy is seldom the portion of his children here. Pain and weariness and disappointment beset us and too often our hearts fail and our hopes languish. Then is our faith tested; then do we cry in bitterness of spirit, 'Oh! God, why hast thou led me thus, why this road among thorns, not the pleasant path bordered by flowers?' Then the dear Lord answers: 'More faith, my child, more faith. What I do, thou knowest not now, thou shalt know hereafter. Trust me tho' the mystery of my dealings thou mayst not, canst not fathom.'

Trust Him when your faith is small, Trusting Jesus, that is all, sang the chorus gayly, and the company resumed its march.

This young officer with the sweet voice and gentle bearing, so conspicuously different from her companions, had a singular history. Born into a home of wealth, luxury surrounded her childhood and no advantage of training or education was denied. After taking her degree at a leading woman's college, she went abroad with her parents, firmly resolved when the year of travel was over, to devote her talents to the cause of humanity. Possessed of a deeply religious nature and strong humanistic instincts, it pleased her to contemplate the renunciation of ease for a life spent in unselfish service. To her indiscriminating enthusiasm, Father Damien was an ideal hero. She dreamed of following him to the leper settlement, but in the streets of London, she was converted to that phase of rescue work represented by the Salvation Army. Her impulsive nature came under the spell of the peculiar psychological force generated by this body, and on returning to Chicago she renounced everything to join its ranks. Donning the plain garb of the order, she followed its banners nightly, speaking and singing in the streets until her face and her voice became familiar in certain notorious localities.

Was Katharine March happy in her chosen work and satisfied with its practical bearing upon the elevation of the race? An evangelist of wide experience, speaking honestly after a lifetime of persistent effort among the lower classes, declared that he possessed not a particle of hope in the practical efficiency of any known means for the elevation of humanity. Less than five years had sufficed to bring Katharine to similar conclusions. Her youthful enthusiasm was of brief continuance. Results were small and constant association with the illiterate and vulgar, the criminal and the vicious, most depressing. She persisted in her line of activity now, more from inability to discern a better form of altruistic effort than because of any optimistic sense of its value as a regenerating factor. She saw the wretchedness and depravity of human nature and her soul was oppressed. She visited the populous haunts of the poor, invaded by vice and squalor. She watched the children of the drunkard, the pauper, and the criminal multiplying daily while the Army at best, pointed but to solitary individuals reclaimed from sin by its methods. The conviction grew upon her that the world needed some immediate relief more radical and sweeping than any of the present religious movements could offer. Thus unconsciously, heart and mind were prepared to accept higher truth.

The day following her street address on faith, words spoken mainly for her own encouragement and significant of her own mental attitude, clinging blindly to a God whose ways and purposes she felt to be inscrutable and unfathomable, Lieut. March was distributing copies of the War Cr. in one of the large department stores.

"Will you exchange papers?" inquired a lady earnestly. Katharine assented courteously and received a copy of The Flaming Sword. The device on the cover attracted her. That strong hand grasping the sword-hilt over whose blade, lambent coruscations of light played freely, reminded her of a picture in an Eastern gallery. Keeping the gates of paradise, an angel stood, leaning upon the sword whose flames streamed up and illumined his face. The sword thus constituted the central object of the painting, to which every detail was subordinated with wonderful effect.

"This is not the age of faith," were the first words to catch her eye as she turned the pages. The novelty of this proposition in a publication evidently religious, startled her. What could it mean? Was ever faith more needed to struggle against conditions that seemed hopeless? "This is the age of science," continued the writer, "of mystery revealed, law interpreted and truth exposited." So it was only a scientific periodical, no doubt agnostic or atheistic in tenor. But no, this was Koreshan Science, something wholly new. Here was a statement of its platform. "Koreshan Science uncovers the mystery of the ages, is a true index to the character of God and man, reveals the origin and destiny of humanity and declares the laws, forms and relations of Being that modern science has failed to discover."

Well, it was refreshing to find a science occupied with the nature of God rather than with earth worms or trilobites. Whatever the character of this movement, it seemed to be socialistic, as the following sentence indicated. "Koreshanity is devoted to the promulgation of the Social Theocracy and the Equitable Commerce, destined to revolutionize commercial methods and to crush the iniquitous money power."

Katharine gained confidence to proceed. The contents of the paper proved so interesting that she sent for more of the literature, poring over it eagerly, studying the system point by point, its science, theology and sociology, until at last, convinced of its truth ere ever she met its Founder, she left the Army for the Unity, passing thus from faith to knowledge, from conflict to concord.

 $oldsymbol{W}$ E WOULD respectfully call the attention of the bankers' attorneys in Congress, to the fact, that in all large cities the single line merchants have formed a combination to place bars across the path of the progressive development of co-operation as per department stores, and are trying to keep mercantile pursuits segregated. A factor of still greater importance to you and the masters—usurers—you serve, is the fact that these same small fry merchants issue a species of trading check to facilitate exchanges, one with another. Your prompt action, to nip this infringement on your masters' patent-right to draw blood money in the shape of usury on circulating medium, is demanded. Your attention is also called to the Labor Exchange check and the script of the B. C. C. Crush this iniquity, stamp out the heresy! No one has a right to interfere with the banks, or to attempt to destroy their business of drawing interest on what they owe!

We like the agnostic. It is probably due to the fact that anything absurd appeals to our fancy. If there is anything utterly absurd, it is the attitude of the one who declares he doesn't know, and then proceeds to hammer you into the same state of inanity in which he revels. He is a consistent sort of an animal, for he hates the orthodox Christian for trying to force orthodox rubbish down his neck with a crooked stick, and at the same time he is ready to attack his neighbor who does not happen to know less than his agnostic highness.

Chaos and anarchy reign in the spirit world, and the representatives of the spiritual in the natural world—the spiritualists—are agitating the question of organization. social structure endowed with the potencies of organic life, derived through regeneration from the perfect divine planting in the race, in the beginning of the Christian dispensation.

In the Editorial Perspective.

NE OF OUR exchanges, Freedom, wishes to decide for the world who are sane and who are insane, and begins to do it by passing upon a theological question, in connection with Webster's definition of sanity. A sane mind is one "having the regular exercise of reason"—all others of course, are insane. The paper referred to says: "It is really a question (or is so much a self-evident fact as to be beyond question) whether all forms of religious belief which include a personal God and an inspired Testament as an essential part of its faith, are not species of insanity." Some reason should have been displayed in the article in which this appears, just to show that the writer is sane. We do not make the charge of insanity, however, because the conclusions were not premised upon fact, leaving individualists to be judged by their own ideals. The conclusion of Koreshan Science that God is personal and human is a scientific one. True science defines the nature and function of the cause point—the relations of cause and effect. We maintain that the universe contains life, and that the universe is perpetuated by factors involved in itself. All life is perpetuated through its seed, and there is no life in all the universe, that any "individualist" can point to in a thousand years, that evidences an exception to this law. Seed is the unity of cause and effect, the involved pivot, the point of cause. Humanity is an evolution, having evolved from a previous involution, else it could not be called an evolution. If it is human evolution, there obtains between the periods or cycles of evolution, a human involution; that involution is the seed of humanity, and that seed is the human and personal God. All energies in the universe on every plane of existence in every domain of life, from the mineral kingdom to the human, must return to a center for regeneration, reformulation, revitalization, and renewal. The pinnacle of existence is the immortal structure, the immortal man, the personal God. The editor of Freedom is pretending to teach the science of immortality; the fact that she has overlooked so palpable facts and scientific conclusions, and the fact that she denies the possibility of an immortal structure as the climax of aspiration and of life, is conclusive evidence that she does not comprehend the science she pretends to teach. She reasons without a premise, and should settle the question with Webster, whom she quotes on the subject of sanity. She thinks the Koreshan premise invulnerable enough to let it alone!

Scientists are discussing the origin of cells. It has not been many years since scientists denied that cells had any special biological function; it has been thought that corpuscles and cells are little boats floating in the fluids of the body, carrying nutriment to the tissues, and scavenging waste fibre and conveying it to the dumping ground. This theory will not work any longer; hence the reason for the conclusion that cells constitute the basis of all organic life. Just how this is they do not pretend to say. The investigators have made a few discoveries concerning the structure of cells; they have been looking into cells, and find there conditions and functions which corroborate the conclusions of the Founder of Koreshan Science twenty-eight years ago. It is not likely that they would stop to consider the discovery of any facts antedating their conclusions; it would take the newness away from scientific (!) work. They have found that a cell is a small globule containing substances surrounding a central nucleus—a small protoplasmic mass at the center of the cell. Why this nucleus? What are its functions? They do not know. They are ignorant of the fact that right here is located a fundamental factor of organic unity. The scientists admit that there must be a vital relation existing between the inner wall of the cell and the nucleus at the center. The inner wall responds to the influence of the central nucleus—there is an interdependence existing between the center and circumference. The cell contains life and mind; it is the universe in miniature. The universe is a cell, with its central nucleus, the solar sphere; the inner surface of the universal cell contains all forms of organo-vital existence. We inhabit the inside of the great shell. Why should the newly discovered form of cells of the human body prove to be exactly the form announced by the Founder of Koreshanity twenty-eight years ago? What is the scientists' answer? What is yours?

Some people believe that they can think of more scientific facts concerning the nature of the world we live in than we can in a year; hence a desire to crowd "facts" upon us by the wholesale. We do not like to see people in a hurry—the world is progressing fast enough, anyway. We claim that we have as good opportunity to know what is taught in the "scientific" textbooks as any one who has gotten a little excited because we teach differently from the accepted beliefs. We understand modern astronomy, physics, and chemistry as presented to the world today, and we understand the Koreshan System as well. In this we have the advantage of those who would oppose us—they do not understand our System, and we find nine tenths of the objectors do not understand the Copernican system, either! Being thoroughly familiar with what is presented today as science, we are able to criticise it. Don't you think that we would be just a little bit "off," and just a little too facetious, if we undertook to talk about the "other side," if we did not know anything about it, and made a blunder every line or so? Now, this is just a little hint to those who wish to explode the Koreshan System, without having any knowledge of what they desire to overthrow!

An astrology is no good in defining the relation the stars and planets sustain to humanity, that does not know what energies are generated in the points and orbs above us. There is not an astrologer in existence today that can tell us anything. about what the stars are, nor what they are for, nor how large they are, nor how far away they are; and the planets are just as much a mystery to them. A system of astrology which assumes, with modern astronomy, that the moon is a useless and dead sphere swinging in the earth's aura, will cast a horoscope as devoid of certainty as the astronomer's idea of the moon is fallacious. The real moon environs all; it is a living, organic structure—a cell. The moon in the sky is but a reflexed impression upon the sea of hydrogen above us. All that astrology contains today that has even a semblance of truth, is derived from the records of the ancients, who had something of a knowledge of the true character of the universe. Koreshan Astroanthroposophy is the science of man's relation to the physical universe; it is the knowledge of man as the pinnacle of existence, and his relation to the ultimate form of expression of the humano-divine mind.

We place two paragraphs together for contrast. From an agnostic Journal: "The telescope is the great infidel; it is ever a dangerous thing for the Bible and the progress of religions. Like science in general, the star gazer, who sees no gods or angels in the sky, sees proof of the littleness of every creed, religion, alleged gods and ghosts, and finds evidence of powers incomprehensible, eternal and self-existent." From Armstrong's Autonomist: "I believe it were better for the happiness of mankind today had Ptolemy and Copernicus, Galileo and Newton never been born. The telescope has done more harm than the sword. The sword cleaves the heart in twain and the victim rests with its last pulsation, but the glass burns it and blights it like the desert blast." The difficulty is that the Bible, the telescope, and the sword have been in the hands of the wrong parties; there is a proper use for each, else they would not be; but out of place, one is just as dangerous as the other. Neither one was made for fools to use!

Throughout the whole world! You often hear this expression; what does it mean? We score again for the concave world. The universe is a cell. It is hollow; its circumference is a shell or hull. A hollow is a hull or cavern. The universe is complete, having all the functions of its own perpetuity; therefore it is whole. It could not be whole and complete unless it were hollow—unless it were a cell. Its shell or environ is the hull. Now, are we punning on these words? Look into etymology a little; hull, hole, hollow and whole are derived from the same roots, and we need not trace them further back than the old English, Saxon, and German to see the relation of all of the four words. When people say "the whole world," they virtually say, the hollow world, and did they but understand language there would be nobody to differ with us concerning the form and function of the universe.

Some people are endeavoring to make it appear that Joseph Leiter is the modern Joseph who formerly had eleven brethren who came down into Egypt. Of course there is Egypt enough, also grain, and the Joseph, but we do not take any stock in the idea of his being the re-embodiment of any patriarch. We should take it that Joseph, in his experience in the hundreds of re-embodiments, should make some progress. If we can read human nature, the wheat dealer of Chicago is a lighter (Leiter) Joseph than the philanthropic Joseph who was associated with Pharaoh in the government of Egypt.

What has become of the new planet that was to be projected from the sun by the astronomers a few months ago? The downfall of astronomers is near at hand when worlds fail to materialize at their command!

This is specifically the age when men are not what they pretend to be. There is now existing in the world the greatest amount of hypocrisy that ever cursed humanity!

Some 'don't worry clubs' are almost as formidable as policemen's clubs. But don't worry—and you can get along without them. They don't worry us at all.

A belief about God in an age of science does not amount to a row of pins; knowledge is the thing that counts, for knowledge is power.

Some men see or deny that there is prosperity, on the basis of the success or the failure of their schemes to defraud the neighbor.

There is no truth anywhere that is separate from personality; but it has forms of expression in all phases of existence.

Delusion is the necessary opiate for those who cannot endure the knowledge of the real purpose of existence.

Mystery has been mistress of the world long enough. The world now needs some man to master it.

Interrogation Points and Other Punctuations.

Revolution of the North Star.

(1) Please explain why Polaris revolves about the north pole in the opposite direction to the movement of the sun. The sun moves from east to west daily, or opposite to the movement of the hands of a watch. (2) I am told that there was a representative of one of the Chicago dailies here not long since, and that he said that some experiments were being conducted in Chicago which would explode the Koreshan Cosmogony; and also that there was a Koreshan assisting in the experiments: that they were measuring the base of tall buildings and also the top, and invariably found that the top was longer than the bottom, which proved that the earth is convex. Now this "experiment" is too silly to arouse any comment, and I do not think that any Koreshan is mixed up in it, unless it is to "poke fun" at the fellows after they are through. What I would like to know is, is there foundation for such a report?-O. W. B., Cedar Rapids, Ia.

(1) The heavens revolve in the same direction continually—from east to west. Diurnally every star and planet, as well as the sun and moon, pass a given meridian, moving toward the west. Polaris moves in the same direction daily as the sun. Stand between two wheels revolving in the same direction; face one with watch in hand; the hands of the watch and the wheel turn in the same direction. Upon facing the other wheel it will be found to revolve in the opposite direction to the hands of the watch, because you have turned the watch around. It is the same way when you face the south and compare the movement of the sun with the movement of the hands of the watch, and then the north, the opposite direction, and find the circumpolar portion of the northern constellations revolving in a direction opposite to that of the hands of the watch. You have perhaps been testing your compass by the pole star. Polaris reached its culmination shortly after midnight on March 1. The surveyor observing the culmination of Polaris will find the movement of the star to be from west to east, or from left to right as he faces the north. This is because Polaris has reached its inferior culmination, or the crossing of the meridian below the polar point; twelve hours later, it will reach its superior culmination, moving from right to left, or from east to west, above the polar point. Polaris is about 11/2° from the exact axis of revolution, and consequently revolves in a circle about 3° in diameter. (2) No such experiment has ever been proposed in Chicago to our knowledge. It would be impossible to detect any variation if the buildings were measured; the buildings are not constructed with such exactness. The matter is a silly one, and no Koreshan scientist would have little enough sense to engage in such an experiment. Plumb lines a mile long would show some divergence, but 200 or 300 feet would not be sufficient. Two plumb lines suspended from an altitude of one twenty-fourth of a mile would diverge only .013 of an inch. The experiments at Naples, Fla., last year determined that the divergence of plumb lines is at the bottom, and our arc was 21/2 miles in length, and the lines in consideration were 4,000 miles. All perpendiculars converge above us, 4,000 miles distant-at the center of the earth.

Friends of Mammon.

(1) THE SWORD is evidently building up, but are you sure it is not by courting favor and friendship with the world? (2) You say you know that your theology is right. It may be, I do not know, for I do not understand you. But frankly, would Digitized by you be willing to be shown to be wrong as to bringing in of the universal peace and righteousness in the earth? (3) In a recent number of The Sword, S. M. C. asks: "Where in the Bible did the Lord Christ teach organic unity?" to which you merely replied—well, no answer at all. Rings like polite, evasive diplomacy. You do not play fair. Why not? I feel much interested in this subject. Please tell me where Jesus taught the right or duty to organize churches, societies, etc.—G. J. B., Joplin, Mo.

(1) Yes, THE SWORD is evidently building up, and the only way that we know for truth to make a success in the world is by gaining friends. Now we go at it in just the opposite way from the methods usually employed. The church makes friends of the world by catering to sensuality. We lift people up--we elevate people by bringing them up to a scientific comprehension of the standard of righteousness; in this way they become our friends, the friends of truth. We do not become the friends of fallacy. In this connection, what do you think of this: "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations"? (2) Certainly; if any one is able to show us where we are wrong, we should give him a hearty welcome! (3) Jesus did not teach the science of organic unity. The primitive Christian system was a system of philosophy. Koreshanity is the science of the philosophy of Jesus the Christ. From the standpoint of our observation, our answer to S. M. C. was correct; and he has not yet expressed himself as being dissatisfied with our reply. We did not give the particular Scripture texts, taking it for granted that those familiar with the Bible knew where the points were that we mentioned. Every teacher of truth comes armed with the authority to do as he pleases. Jesus taught whatever truth was applicable at that time and to the people to whom he came, regardless of, but nevertheless in harmony with what Moses had written. If Koreshanity is the truth, it involves the authority of truth; and hence, contains the basis of origination of any system of work, of church, or society that may be necessary to meet the exigencies of the hour. You might see a few thoughts on organic unity in the following: Ps. cxxxiii:1; John x:16; xvii:20; Rom. xii: 4, 5; I Cor. xii: 14-26; Eph. ii: 14-18; iv: 3, 13; Col. i: 18-20; iii: 14.

Reproduction of the Immortal Men.

How are the sons of God to be reproduced if not through sex relations?—J. P., Milford, Ill.

The reproduction of the immortal man is through relations of sex, but sex of a higher order than is manifest today. A seed is both male and female, having the power to reproduce itself. Jesus was the seed of humanity, a biume being, both male and female in one personality, having the power to reproduce and multiply himself through his sowing in the race by the infusion of his own mental and physical substance into the minds of his followers. The fruit of that sowing will be manifest by the process of resurrection, which will be accomplished scientifically through known laws of conservation, use, direction, and materialization of mental energy.

$1,000 or $1.00?

Mr. Blodgett Can't See the Point, and is in Doubt About the Reward.

Editor of THE FLAMING SWORD:—I think I have accepted your $1000. or $1.000 (which is it, one dollar of one thousand dollars, that you intend to offer to have your concave theory demolished in a way that your readers will recognize as fair and pointed).

You have accepted me as a proper man to compete for the prize, but you say your offer is to "pay something for something," and that "we should not feel disposed to leave the question to disinterested parties." Now, what some of your readers would like is to have you designate distinctly the interested parties you would be willing to leave it to. Of course, as you say, there would have to be an investigation of the facts, not of the "text-books; the text-books, including your own, must not be taken as undisputed authority. Your own writings will be criticised if I take hold of it, with the same freedom that I would criticise any other writings. What I propose as a part of the work laid out for myself is to show that the facts and reasons vou set forth in defense of your own theory disprove it, taken in connection with such practical demonstrations as I can exhibit to any looker-on, without expensive apparatus, or the consuming of much time; and if I cannot do it right there in Chicago I will own beat. I will meet you in that city and demonstrate before such arbitrating committee as we shall select, said ommittee not being prejudiced, either for or against your theory; and I will publish or get published, the result in a way that the world may know all about it. I notice your offer is put in an ambiguous way—in a way that you may say means but one dollar. As long as I have called your attention to it, good faith requires you to set it forth in reading that you will give one thousand dollars to the one who shows that we are living on a convex surface.

Now please publish this, and show clearly how much money you intend to include in your offer; and whether you really mean that to get the money the winner must not only convince you that you are wrong, but also to induce you to own it. If that is the position you occupy, I think your money is safe.—Samuel Blodgett, Grafton, N. Dak.

$1,000!—One Thousand Dollars. Figures can have but one meaning to those who know how to read them; they may have a thousand meanings to those who do not. The number was correctly printed in our offer, and there is no mistake on our part; so the mistake must be Mr. Blodgett's. We have seen school-boys laughed at for mistakes not so bad as this! The above letter presents to us two strange aspects: First, that the writer who poses as a scientific gentleman, able to overthrow whole systems of astronomy-the Newtonian hypothesis, as well as the actual Koreshan Cosmogony, should not be able to interpret figures; and secondly, that he should begin his work of disproving our System, with insinuatious of dishonesty and trickery. If the gentleman wants to make any terms with us, he will have to leave all such insinuations out of sight!

It would be an easy thing to persuade a committee of men that the earth is convex -men who have been taught all their lives to believe the fallacy. Of course, if Mr. Blodgett were allowed such a committee, he could have everything his own way. Whom does he take us for? Get us to sell our evidences to a committee of men Mr. Blodgett might choose? Not in a thousand years! But this is getting ahead of the times. Mr. Blodgett has to write his refutation first, and when he has done this, we can fix up an elaborate program of experiments, or something of that sort. But his "proofs" must be specified; he must say what they are before we conclude what is to be done, how it is to be done, and who is to do it. We insist on seeing his stock in trade before we make any arrangements about testing its quality, or putting up the money to purchase it. We should not want to get a number of astronomers together if a lot of physicians were necessary! Let us have the proofs! For the principals, referees, reporters, judges, etc., we should want a party of scientific gentlemen, who were up in science, and understood their business—one half of the party to be selected by Mr. Blodgett, from the old school of astronomy, and the other half to be selected from the Koreshan School of Science. The man that loses pays all expenses and forfeits $1,000.

It's Concave Everywhere.

The Koreshan Cosmogony Comports With all Facts of Astronomical and Geographical Research and International Geodetic Survey.

$1,000 REWARD .- Upon a basis of certain known geological, geographical and astroi nomical facts and data men have formulated several theories of cosmogony, all plausible, but all can not be right. Perhaps none of these is wholly true. Certainly we should not make the mistake of supposing that the Copernican theory is true and credible until it is proven false. It is merely a theory sustained by some facts to the point, but mainly acceptable and popular because it is adopted in the text books, and because the Papists bulldozed Galileo, and because farmer Beanpole said his duckpond would empty out if the earth rolled over on an axle, and chiefly because it gives the lie direct and repeatedly to God and his Bible.

John Smith's system may be just as good as the Copernican system, if it harmonizes all the facts: probably better; for, if the truth were known, a good many of the legs Copernicus stands on are sham—sophistries. Dr. Cyrus Teed, of The Flaming Sword, with a competent corps of civil engineers, has lately made a survey along the west coast of Florida and demonstrated the fact that our earth is not globular there at least; but that along the Florida coast meridian the EARTH IS CONCAVE. No candid scientist doubts his truth or accuracy on this point, which is a very vital point. In fact it may be said that the editor of The Flaming Sword has punctured the Copernican system's heart.

And now he offers $1,000 to any editor who will publish a single fact controverting his theory that the universe is a cell with the inside inhabited surface of its Here in Deshler, O., shell concave. earth seems flat: but if the Caystral Cosmology is true and Earth is shaped like a woman, a survey east and west most anywhere would prove earth to be round one I feel that Dr. Teed's stake money is in sight. The trouble is, it would cost several thousand dollars to make the survey with scientific accuracy. The only other scientific proof I think of now, is to wait till the firmament is broken up.—The Cayster, Deshler, ().

The earth is concave everywhere. If convex, flat and concave in different places, there would be three distinct phenomena of water horizon. Ships disappear everywhere beyond the horizon from the same causes. Gulf of Mexico and Lake Michigan are concave north and south, and east and west. The horizon is not apparent in one direction from laws of perspective, and in another from convexity. Geodetic surveys made in all directions indicate curvation of the earth at the ratio of about 8 inches to the mile. Why deny facts to bolster up a fancy? Caystral Cosmology is patchwork.

Flaming Sword is Seen.

Wonder in the Northern Heavens Excites all New York.

Special Dispatch to The Inter Ocean.

NEW YORK, March 7.—Some said it was "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon," and foretold war at hand. Those less inclined to discern signs and wonders in the heavens thought it a comet, or the aurora borealis or the reflection of a distant fire. Whatever it was, the spectacle drew thousands into the streets and upon the Brooklyn bridge to watch and wonder.

In the northern sky was a gigantic sword of fire. It appeared shortly after 8 o'clock this evening and hung suspended in the heavens for nearly two hours. It rose from near the horizon, half way to the zenith, and was the hue of living flame.

There was a white cross of peace upon the rising moon. This was before the flery sword appeared in the north and vanished when the signal of war flashed out. The two celestial phenomena were thetalk of the whole city out of doors. All spoke of the war with Spain drawing near, and asked if this was a warning to New York.

The flaming sword broke into three pieces shortly before 10 o'clock, and by that hour had disappeared entirely. The weather man said the cross on the moon was a lunar halo, caused by ice crystals in the air, and that the flaming sword was the reflection of a fire reported from Fort Lee. But those who love signs and wonders said it foretold war with Spain and victory for the United States, the power of the north.

They said the cross on the moon meant that peace would rise from the sea upon distracted Cuba when the American naval sword had chased home or sent to the bottom of the ocean the galleons and warships of Spain.

Chat With Readers.

If we needed subscribers as much as subscribers really need the truth promulgated through THE FLAMING SWORD, we should purchase subscriptions at $1,000 each per year. Readers should appreciate their needs and their opportunities for pushing so great a work as we are promoting. We need your help; you can economize for your own as well as for our benefit. We can use every cent sent to us, in placing into the hands of new readers some truth which will be sure to do good. The church has thousands of missionaries-men and women who sacrifice all they have for the promulgation of fallacy. Koreshanity needs thousands of people who will do better work under a different name for a different purpose, with different and more actual incentives to sacrifice, than exist in effete orthodoxy. A dollar from you now and then for literature will be worth thousands in years to come, and would help us out of close places that such a work as ours necessarily experiences. We are opening up new fields of work—we want to reach new minds—the progressive minds of the world. Some day there will be a mighty rallying of resources for the promulgation of Koreshan Science; men with millions will desire to help us. Single dollars now are as necessary as thousands will be after awhile.

Take a book having 832 pages, the size of THE SWORD pages-would it not be worth more than $1.00? We print that many pages in one year, containing the best thought of the times in the best forms of expression. Hundreds of our readers would pay $5.00 a year before they would do without THE FLAMING SWORD. The amount for which we send this publication per year is small-it costs only $1.00 for 52 numbers. Some of you are a year or two behind. Don't you think you could sleep better if you should send us something in return for what we have been sending to you? We sacrifice luxuries, and work day and night to get the paper to you weekly; if each reader should sacrifice as much, in proportion to the interests involved, no one would be indebted to us a single cent.

Your friends could charge you with selfishness if they should realize that you had the truth and were doing nothing toward its promulgation. Some others need the truth as well as yourself. If it were necessary for thousands to suffer persecution and to sacrifice personal comforts, and even life, to give impetus to the philosophy of Jesus at the beginning of the dispensation, how much more necessary it becomes that those coming into a knowledge of the science of life should sacrifice all for the benefit of humanity!

6-3-0-8-! See these figures? The six comes first, then the three, and so on. Good! If you were in school you would like to get the number down on the blackboard correctly, wouldn't you? That's the ambition of the schoolboy. Well, get it straight on the envelope, when you write us, and your letter will not go astray; don't send it to 3608, but to 6308 Wentworth avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Please read the short paragraphs under general statement at top of page, second page of cover. Money orders intended for us must be made payable to the Guiding Star Publishing House, Chicago, Ill.,—not to the Editor, nor to the Manager; neither should they be made payable at any substation, but at Chicago P. O.

In Reform Journals.

A PROPHETIC ECHO.

An English Picture of the Social Condition of America.

The signs of the times indicate that before the sun rises on Jan. 1, 1900, the great American nation will groan and writhe in an agony of revolution, and the streets of all her great cities will be slipperv with blood-a hundred drops of blood for each gem that flashes on the cheeks of the rich and pampered women, and ten drops of blood for each tear that has washed the faces of the poor. Politics is so rotten that it stinks. Every one knows, and no one cares. America is no longer a republic; it is a plutocracy. The president is merely the creation of bank directors, railroad kings, and coal barons; and it is the same with the governors of the states. The poor whine about their poverty, and gnaw their crusts of bread, but can always be relied upon to vote for the rich; and nine tenths of them would shoulder their muskets and lay down their lives in defense of the rich to rob them. A nation such as this, in which one million plutocrats tyrannize over sixty million slaves, will be either overthrown by a foreign foe or die of gangrene. The various labor or-ganizations do not think together, vote together, or work together; and they have no money to buy votes, lawyers, and judges. Soldier police shoot down laboring people, and are cheered on in their bloody work by monopolies and the clergy. But the day will soon come when there will be a horrible dance to death, lighted up by burning houses, and music and cries and groans and dyanmite bombs. Rich idlers amuse themselves at Newport and Tuxedo; poor workers toil ceaselessly in the darkness of the mine and the den of the mill; young men and women dawdle over iced champagne and opera parties; old men and women pick rotten food out of the garbage-cans; lap-dogs are driven through Central Park to take the air; children die of overwork in filthy garrets; piety in the White House is enjoying the fruits of bribery; infidelity in the tenement-houses is enduring the punishment of uprightness. These are the signs of the times in America today—signs that point to calamity too dreadful to imagine, but which nothing can avert .- London

How Machines Displace Laborers.

There is a steam harvester that reaps and binds 90 acres a day, with the attention of three men.

In the shoe industry one man, with the McKay machine, can handle 300 pairs in the same time it would take to handle five pairs by hand.

In the agricultural implement factories five hundred men, with machinery, now do the work of twenty-five hundred.

Nine men with machinery can turn out twelve thousand brooms in the same time 17 men used to take to turn out five hundred dozen.

A watch factory with machinery, can turn out two watches a minute, or half a million a year.

In modern steel works with the help of machinery and electricity, eight men can do the work that formerly required three hundred.

The latest weaving looms run without any attention during the dinner hour, and for an hour and a half after the mill closes at night.

In leather manufacture, modern methods have reduced the number of workers from ten to fifty per cent.

In the manufacture of carriages it used to take one man thirty-five days to make a carriage; now a carriage is made by one man with machinery in 12 days.

And yet there are destitution and despair throughout the land, not because of the application of machinery in production, but because of the inequality of distribution.—Clarion.

Who is the Coward?

Whoever hesitates to utter that which he thinks the highest truth, lest it should be too much in advance of the time, may reassure himself by looking at his acts from an impersonal point of view. Let him duly realize the fact that opinion is the agency through which character adapts external arrangements to itself—that his opinion rightly forms part of this agency—is a unit of force, constituting, with other such units, the general power which works out social changes; and he will perceive that he may properly give full utterance to his innermost conviction, leaving it to produce what effect it may.—Herbert Spencer.

A man engaged in some sort of foundry work was carted to the hospital, and after a careful consideration of his case the house surgeon said: "You were not very much hurt about the body by the explosion, but there is a piece of iron embedded in your head that may cause some trouble." At that the sufferer sat up and excitedly said: "There's a bit of iron in my head, is there? Well, for heaven's sake don't let them know that at the shop or the foreman'll dock the price of that iron out of my week's wages!"—The Worker.

It is only the poor that are generous. The rich cannot give; they have so many wants, so many necessary superfluities, those poor rich.—Alphonse Karr.

The March number of the Crusade will be hailed with delight by all interested in child-study and the work of Mother's Clubs. Suggestions for organizing and conducting Mother's Clubs, together with the first half of a comprehensive, helpful course of study, planned to cover the first sixteen years of a child's life, from the pen of so eminent an authority in this work as Dr. Mary Wood-Allen make it of inestimable value. FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

Communistic and Co-operative Orders of the Koreshan Unity.

HE FLAMING SWORD does not advocate equality as a principle of organic unity. Equality is an absolute impossibility. What does organic unity imply? It means a system of social government founded upon scientific principles, a knowledge of which is derived from a full comprehension of the laws of form and function as they obtain in the structure and offices of the alchemico-organic (physical) universe. alchemico-organic world (kosmos) has a definite form. This form may be studied through the investigation of the literature emanating from the Guiding Star Publishing House. It is the only scientific literature in the world. It is the only source of absolute knowledge of the cosmic structure, and its Author is the only scientific man. There is no agnosticism (I don't knowism) in any of this literature; hence we say, study it and obtain the truth.

The organic form of the alchemico-organic kosmos embraces the sun, the greater glory; the moon, the lesser glory; the earth, and the stars of various degrees of glory. They are not equal, but each is useful in its domain, and the whole could not be without the part. What the sun, moon, and stars are in their degrees, the humanity is, when its organic life is developed in the various phases of its degrees.

The Organic Unity of the Koreshan System.

There are a few fundamental principles lying at the very basis, and constituting the substratum of organic life, which may be set forth in axiomatic postulates, to ultimately shape the destinies of men in their efforts to attain to that rest which a correct application of the laws of economics provides. The first one—or that which we shall place at the head of the list of postulates -is, equitable industry must constitute the right of men to the appropriations of what nature and industry develop in the combined operations of these two important factors of human existence. Involved in this postulate is the preclusion of the many forms of disability which may arise in imperfect stages of relationship and activity, dependent not upon the rights of justice, but rather the supreme demand of the weak upon the strong,—a principle without the recognition of which no society can be perpetuated. The second postulate is the right of all to an equitable share of the products of industry. [Postulate (1): Men have no right to what they do not produce. Postulate (2): Men have the right of equity in what they produce.] Our third postulate embraces the right of divinely cultured and appointed might.

In constitutional governments the people govern themselves through representation. They ought to feed, clothe, shelter, and generally and specifically provide for themselves through the exercise of the same right and the application of the same principles. Society is useful, collectively, proportionately to the strength of its bond of unity, made approximately indissoluble through the possibility of the individual contribution to the public, thence to the private well being. Society should be so arranged and organized that the individual is made to provide for himself through his contribution to the general and collective body, and his personal necessities, comforts, and luxuries should be made to depend upon the general wealth to which his own industry and that of all others have contributed.

Digitized by Google

The people of a constitutional government create and maintain their army and navy, and arrange for the essential provision and discipline of that army in all its details. The men comprising the army and navy elect to enter these services, sacrificing the comforts and pleasures of home, being subject to rigid discipline, to all of which they learn to accommodate themselves for the general protection. The collective body—the government—enters into all of the detail of the personal wants of the individual. Food, clothing, shelter, etc., are provided for thousands, and tens of thousands, and hundreds of thousands of men. The necessities arising from the essential demands of so, many people who are not engaged in the production of what they consume, compel the most rigid application of the principles of economics. "Paternalism," so much condemned by a large proportion of society, is enforced as a necessity by the same proportion, in this specific department and arm of government.

THE PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS AS APPLIED TO THE GOVERNMENT OF SOCIETY, involve such a judicious adjustment of industry and distribution of its products as to meet all the demands of consumption with the least possible proportionate expenditure of energy. This means the maximum amount of production and distribution, with the minimum amount of the expenditure of energy. Upon the basis of the present system (the competitive), there obtains a profligate waste of the labor of the masses by those who do not produce, and consequently have no right to its appropriations. We herewith instance one case of prodigality as illustrative of the prodigious waste of human energy to gratify the propensity of the speculator to dissipate the products of industry and degrade the laborer. Three years of the labor of thousands of men, including millions of their earnings previously accumulated, were devoted to the creation of the most beautiful city of modern times. It was placed on exhibition for six months in Chicago, and then ruthlessly destroyed. These flagrant violations of the laws of economics, while ministering to the speculative tendencies and pleasures of the pirates of this age, deprive the masses of their hard-wrought productions, saddling upon them the debt of bondage which perpetuates their drudgery.

Our third postulate—an economical expenditure OF MENTAL, MUSCULAR, AND MECHANICAL ENERGY APPLIED TO ARTIFICIAL PRODUCTS, ASSOCIATED WITH THE PRODUC-TIONS OF NATURE, WILL FURNISH A SUPERABUNDANCE OF THE ESSENTIALS, COMFORTS, AND LUXURIES OF LIFE TO EVERY MAN, WOMAN, AND CHILD ON THE FACE OF THE EARTHrequires no argument to show the superiority of united and corporate effort over vidual enterprise. There are two conspicuous factors in the successful operations of a railroad corporation. The first is the aggregation of effort; the second is in the skilful direction of that effort through the centralization of its power. We have in this illustration, all but two of the principles of the united life system. We have the combination of effort under the competitive system. We have the compulsory enforcement of labor through the power of legislation, to permit the comparatively few men, at least, to selfishly appropriate the products of the many. Men are forced by the power of monopoly to earn their bread by the sweat of their faces; not only so, but by the sweat of their faces to place in position those who squander their productions through luxurious and profligate existence.

The two principles alluded to in the foregoing which are lacking in the corporate and successful efforts to accumulate wealth under the competitive systemare, first, the monopolistic use of that wealth, which, created under combination of effort, precludes the cheerful co-operation of the industrial—a very essential element in bringing forth his best efforts. Many men under organized co-operation produce the wealth, but the few manage to steal it from the many who co-operated in its creation. We have here co-operation in production, but not co-operation in distribution and use. There lacks the spirit of liberty and ownership in monopolies of the competitive system, which would characterize the freedom of united life. In the correct system, every man in performing uses for the general body, would possess the advantages of economical co-operation for individual (vidual) use.

The second and greatest destitution in the competitive methods, resides in the deplorable fact that the very incentive of all its activities precludes the highest Christian virtue love. Religion (rebinding, re-marriage) is the re-copulation of God and man. The church contains the matrix of gestation (regeneration), and is of a character to suit the genius of the age. Every age has its baptism or impregnation, and succeeds the foregoing age in the production of the fruit of its kind, at its termination and the beginning of the new. The fruition of an age must depend upon the character of the seed planted in its beginning. The Lord Christ planted communism. He himself was the embodied product of the dispensation preceding his advent. The fruit of that planting must not only recognize the principles characterizing his life, and him as the firstfruits of the resurrection of the dead, and the Lord of Glory, but themselves as embracing in their own lives the very substance and attributes of his own glorious character. This can only be reached in a full fruition.

Every phase of socialism and nationalism, including so called "Christian socialism," has within it the elements of its own dissolution and failure. Their ignorance of cosmic structure, and therefore the basic and fundamental principles of organic unity as the modulus of social government, precludes for them the possibility of formulative and integral projection. The Koreshan System presents to the world the exact form of the universe as a whole. Its laws of form-involving proportion, limitation, modification of quality, divisions into spheres of relation and parts, with its integralism of form, involving the principles and laws of function-we give as the scientific basis for its formulation of the coming social structure. The Flaming Sword, turning every way to keep the way of the Tree of Life, is preparing for the preservation of God's chosen people from the great destruction about to be precipitated, and from which the Theocracy will arise, phœnix-like, from the ashes of the coming dissolution.

The Clock of the Ages Strikes the Hour of Revolution.

GES and dispensations are regular periods of timedefined by movements in the physical heavens. Twelve dispensations mark a period of one grand year, in which the movement of the sign-called the precession of the equinoxes—on the ecliptic causes a return of a specific relation of the equator to a certain constellation, and a certain star in the constellation. These grandyear periods specifically define and mark the great event of a final anthropostic fruitage, called the firstfruits of the resurrection, or reincarnation of the dead. The peculiarity of such final fruitage is, that in the culmination of this zodiacal cycle, hundreds of thousands of people will spiritually dissolve by adematerialization, and disappear, leaving nothing behind them to decay. This, however, does not complete the process. This electromagnetic conflagration is the burning up of the wicked. It is not a painful operation, and in it there is no loss of identity or consciousness. This is the burning up of the world so long prophesied. From this incorruptible dissolution there obtains a reunion of the energies of dissolution into the creation of biune beings, that is, virgune men (virgins), neither male nor female, but combining the two principles in the life of the resurrection. The product of this rehabilitation is the sons of God.

One of the supreme factors of the change about to startle the world as the most marvelous of human possibility, is that the change is to be brought about by the intellectual comprehension of one man, who not only knows of the coming changes, but who inaugurates the methods, arranging into organic form the psycho-material and biologic battery by which it is accomplished. This is the work of Elijah the prophet, Elijah signifying God the Lord.

We are just now ending a series of ages, in which there is a climacteric of power and phenomena. The world is mobilizing for its grandest pyrotechnic dis-The armies and navies of the world, both in the metaphysical and psychic, and in the natural and militant, are gathering for the consummation. The world is not mobilizing for peace, but for war, though a war that the Divine peace may succeed. The governments of the world will be broken to pieces and dissipated as the "chaff of the summer threshing-floor." This is involved in the laws of causation; there is no escape. Prophetic declaration predicts the end in the midst of catastrophe, and the laws of metamorphosis corroborate the testimony. God's chosen people will await the call for the gathering of Armageddon. THE FLAMING Sword is the sign of the prophet.

Theocracy an External and Natural Kingdom.

HE Theocracy is the Divine kingdom. Ademocracy is an inverted phase of what comprises, in the integral system, one side of the Theocracy. The Theocracy will accrue as a natural and external kingdom, being the final result of the descent of the New Jerusalem. The New Jerusalem is the aggregate, in the spiritual world, of all such as through the fulfilment of spiritual uses are gathered into the nucleus of the special mentality of the crowning glory of the new natural Order. The spiritual world is the purely mental sphere. It does not occupy space outside of the brain of humanity. When a spirit within the organized brain of an individuality transits from the home of one mind to another, it is an instantaneous radiation corresponding, in the mind of man, to the radiation of the physical energy of one star in the alchemico-organic world, to any other star into which the energy flows.

The entire New Jerusalem is gathered into one individual mentality. Upon the mind of this mentality is written the name of the Holy City and the name of God. [See Revelation iii:12.] In the descent of this Holy City, the New Jerusalem, there will accrue a conflagration which will consume, electro-magnetically, the thousands of people who through the conflagration will arise into the state of immortality. This immortal life is merely the stepping-stone from the natural into the invisible solar realm. Man never will reach a state of bodily immortality, by which the life remains externally tangible through infinite time. Immortality is the fruit of the ages, and when ripe is absorbed by the internal and invisible. Those who announce a contrary doctrine are ignorant of the laws of life. This is not what we think; it is what we know, and what we are ordained and authorized to declare. The New Jerusalem will not only descend into the manifest visible humanity to be structured in righteousness through her descent. but this humanity will enter into the formation of a central and material city, the beauty and glory of which will exceed anything of either traditional or historical record. Such a city must have a location definite and ordained of God, and she will arise through seas of blood. From this central throne will go forth the laws which will govern the world, for the entire world will be under one dominion, its throne being the throne of the King of kings and Lord of lords.

The Flaming Sword is the only divinely authorized educator of those who shall become the firstfruits of the coming kingdom of righteousness. In the coming social government, communism will govern the interior and first, and co-operation, the second Order. The government will regulate the entire system of production and distribution, through an entirely new system of commerce. The general government can be entrusted with the control and conduct of all accumulated wealth, because it will have the divine heart. The government control of the various departments which the Populists and Nationalists would at present place in the hands of government, would only be a greater curse to the people, for the reason that the same central motives would actuate the body which now constitute human incentive. We advocate the centralization of government, but under the control of the King of kings, he directing the governing authority of the Empress of universal empire, whom the Lord endows with the prescience of natural dominion. It will only be through a great and glorious baptism of the seventh outpouring that government can be righteously ordained.

It would be very surprising to many if the "Eastern question," which the would-be prophets have harped about so long, should after all prove to be the Western question. There is no spot on the cycle of the equator that is not the East; and it is a fact that the spot of fertility, both mental and physical, revolves westward over the face of the earth, and the East—the rising—is wheresoever the laws of fertility place the location of the central resurrection. God is preparing, through blood, the isles of the sea for his special presence and the great baptism which the world ignorantly awaits.

On the Point of the Sword.

The Only Way by Which Our Offer of $1,000 Can Be Obtained.

There are some people who "desire to kill two birds with one stone." They wish to earn one thousand dollars, and at the same time silence the Koreshans on the question of Cosmogony. Now, we want to be magnanimous and tell them how to accomplish these results. The process is very simple. Place a vertical post six feet high, by the side of a body of water where a straight line can be run for six miles. Extend a straight line at right angles, three miles in either direction from the top of the post. It will be found that at the distance of about three miles either way, the line will touch the water. Any fool, at least a child eight years of age, can see that if a line extended at right angles perfectly straight from the vertical point of an upright post six feet high, will run into the water in both directions at the distance of three miles from the post, the water is necessarily concave. This result will be found to obtain at any place on the earth,-north, south, east, or west. Now, the easy part of the problem for the man who wants the thousand dollars, is to show how these results will obtain on any but a concave surface.

We want somebody to tell us how to make the upper side of the arch of the accompanying figure, convex. The man who does it will get the thousand dollars so soon as the feat is accomplished. Bear in mind the fact that this is all that is required, and that this is demanded before the thousand dollars is yours. When you are able to accomplish this, you will furnish us the key to some very marvelous prestidigitations.

We are not teaching what we think. If we were, we would be like the general agnostic who says he knows nothing, according to the title he gives himself, but who at the same time assumes to instruct, from his knownothing standpoint, those who study to know.

The Balance of Opposing Forms and Forces.

The Girl and the Vala (No. 5).

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

BEGIN to learn," said the Girl, as she gazed into the face above her, "that all things and conditions serve wise ends, and that to understand truly any one thing in the world implies a depth of wisdom little dreamed of by the multitude. Since listening to the wonder of your words, I realize the force of the poet's apostrophe to the little flower he plucked from the wall's cranny and held in his hand.

'Little flower! but if I could understand What you are,—root and all, and all in all,— I should know what God and man is!'

I have asked you many things, and as dew to the rose, as honey to the bee, have your answers been to me. Yet would I ask, and ever ask, for the sweet refreshment of hearing, for joy in the light of your words. Today, tell me why it is that the wisest and best are by fewest understood, and ever in this world 'fame is half disfame.' My mind runs much on the Arthurian legends, and I think of that great king whose very 'white blamelessness' was by them of gross sense 'accounted blame'; and especially I think of wise Merlin whom foolish rumour called devil's son, he who valued his fame for that it broadened his use, yet knew that ever in men's minds would be strange doubt of the sources of his power, and in many hearts bitter hatred that he should so presume 'to give men better minds.'"

"And yet, Girl, there was more than baseless rumour in the story of that Princess of ancient Wales and her demon bridegroom," said the Vala; and as she spoke there shone in her face the light of long-gone days, as when in the heart arise sweet, mystic memories of farremote times; and the Girl knew that to her ears would come the story from the lips of her who had lived it, and that, for some rare, delightful reason, there would be no shuddering horror in the tale, but, on the contrary, the reassuring light of all-revealing law.

"Down the many-mingling stream of life of which you are a product," continued the Vala, "comes from many sources,—Hebrew, Egyptian, Aryan, and Uralo-Altaic; as well as from the later Teutonic, both German and Scandian, and Celtic, both Gallic and British; not forgetting grandest Latin and peerless Grecian,-the same truth, told in multifarious legends, pathetic or inspiring, of gods and giants-or demons-and heroes; and deep and high, and dark and glorious, are the wonders hidden in such legends from the sight of the many, preserved in such legends for final revelation unto them that can speak the open sesame. In all mythology, in all folk-lore, is preserved the primal idea of opposing qualities, which, through their mutual interdependence, their conflict, and final unity, insure the perpetuity of the universe. Whether these qualities manifest to the Hebrew in God and Devil, to the Egyptian in Osiris and Typhon, to the Norseman in the Asas warring against the Jotuns, to the Zoroastrian in the exalted Ahura-Mazda and his good counselors against the legions of evil led by the mighty Ahriman, or even to the Greeks in Chronus rising against his father Uranus, and Zeus in his turn rising against Chronus,—to one and all comes the personal manifestation of creator and destroyer, each owing the field of his operation to the activities of his adversary. And, Girl, whether the traditions of earth-that wonderful vessel that forever floats on the ages—be written in the sacred books of the Hebrew, the Zend-Avesta of the Parsee, or the Upanishads and Brahmasatras of the Hindoo, glimpsed in the almost forgotten tales of the Druids or the Arthurian legends of the isles, or gathered in the Eddas and Sagas of the Norse and the Nibelungen-Lied and Hildebrand Lay of the German, one identical meaning is to be found therein, pointing unmistakable to one First Great Cause of all existence, telling undeniably that God made of one blood all nations of men, and that not even Babel's confusion could quite obliterate the evidence that the whole earth was of one lip and one speech. So in revealing to you the meaning of the legendary origin of Merlin, I give unto you the key-note of all tradition, even of the teachings of the most central and sublime of all peoples -the Hebrew-unto whose keeping the almighty God committed for preservation his Name.

The Girl's face shone with reverential joy as she heard, and realized the majestic scope of the promised revelation; but she did not speak, neither was word of hers needed to tell the Vala that she listened, and was glad.

"First let me state for you a fundamental law, so axiomatic that no argument is needed to commend it to the acceptance even of minds more cumbered with vanities than such as yours could ever be. In the words of Deity himself shall I state it," continued the impressive voice, and its vibrant tone vivified and amplified what from the mouth of stupidity, speaking parrot-wise, might have sounded a dead, or, at best, contracted formula: "Every quality in the universe, whether it be of form or function, has its opposite."

The Girl thought of good and evil, love and hatred, light and darkness, sphere and cube, upward and downward, inward and outward,—her mind rapidly flashing over past experiences innunmerable,—and instantly realized the force of the statement. The Vala read her thought, and smiling, said, "No mind can think with anything approaching completion without thinking in opposites." And continued, "The universe is held in perpetuity by the balance of opposing forms and forces. The processes of destruction are equally essential with the processes of production,-indeed the forces and materials for new creations are generated by the destruction of old forms and functions. In one primary cause originate these opposing qualities, for as nothing exists without its opposite, so voluntary creation of any force or form cannot obtain without the simultaneous involuntary creation of its opposite force or form. Love is the central impulse of existence, and its involuntary reaction is hatred. From this center the supreme emotion-or outmoving towards the circumference—is to project its life into the circumference, creating there the offspring which is the reproduction of the center. This is the highest degree of love, man's love for woman being in the path of this emotion, the end being the generation of offspring. The involuntary reaction of this is hatred, which also finds form in the circumference, and operates to destroy that which has been created. Love creates and hatred destroys-one being the principle of expansion, heat, and the other the principle of contraction, cold. Together they constitute respiration, which is the starting-point of the life completed from the parent organism.

Now the Girl spoke. "At last I understand that allembracing passage in Isaiah, 'I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things.' And methinks I even begin to penetrate Merlin's origin."

"From above and below was hecreated. This is the mystery of man's existence. He is that middle world—Midgard—where the life from above meets the life from below, where Asas and Giants, Gods and Demons, war, and finally unite in that state of rest—Devachan—which is the new body, or earth, in which is the starting point and the end of both life and death. The demons are the knowing ones;—those proceeding from and depending on Deity, the Greeks understood them to be. The Giants of the Hebrew scriptures are the fallen ones or the fearful ones, but always the powerful ones. The word demon conveys in the original the idea of fall through division of one final unity; also of warning and guidance from the painful experiences resulting from such division and fall; together with the idea of cumulative creation and successive destruction of each degree of creation attained, through processes of crossing of higher with lower, back to the primal unity, which was origin and now is destiny,—the one separates into many; the many reunite in one,—and First Great Cause thus becomes Last Great Effect."

"The union of expansion and contraction to produce breathing, life," said the Girl, "gives me understanding of the Norse story of the creation of man from the union of the dwellers of the divine love-world, Muspelheim, with the frost-giants, in the Elder Edda."

"Merlin," continued the Vala, "was the product of the union of the Wisdom world—the God world—with the world of experience—the nether world. Giants, or Demons, are the knowing ones,—it is thus they are the powerful ones, for knowledge is power,—but the possession of knowledge crystallized in the mind as intellect, makes no one a savior of his kind. It is intelligence that blesses others, for intelligence is the conveyance of knowledge that it may act upon other lives; and this, instruction, is the kingly degree,—the power of true royalty. This explains who the Princess was. This power belongs to him in whom the higher and lower worlds complement each other, making him the discerner of all things, the center of circumspection and instruction—and well may he be called Merlin, the falcon, or reaper, of Wales."

The Girl could say no word; and though her first question seemed not explicitly answered; yet gropingly could she form the answer in her mind, and would not further question the Vala, upon whose face was a look of holy exaltation as though in her thought she contemplated him of whom she spoke; and without giving further notice to the Girl, she slowly moved into the wood.

"Some day I shall ask again," said the Girl.

The Function of the Beautiful.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

IN A NORMAL brain there would be perfect balance and co-ordination of the various qualities dominant in the different groups of cells; there would be no development of one faculty at the expense of another. At the present time there are no normal brains, the resultant being that activity on the external plane of life is chaotic. The primary cause of physical activity is mental activity. "To think is to act," wrote Victor Hugo, the great French liberalist, reformer and prophet. That particular quality of mental or spiritual life,—for thoughts are living entities-attracted and aggregated in the cells is translated into externals, so the inner and the outer correspond by law as immutable as governs the revolution of the planets or the flux of the ocean. Every act is a spontaneous self-revelation of the soul, beautiful or hideous, noble, or ignoble, according to its nature, borrowing the very hue, tint and complexion of this mystic Dweller on the threshold where spirit and matter meet.

Art is best defined as the perfect adaptation of means to an end, perfect adjustment between service or use and the agent or performer. Even a machine, though devoid of harmony in color and outline to please the eye, is termed beautiful when all its parts are fitted and adjusted with absolute nicety, rendering it the best possible instrument to the end in view. Whatever, then, in nature, art, or mind perfectly fulfils its destiny may properly be called beautiful. The higher the destiny, the greater the beauty; moral beauty outranks physical.

According to one of our later dictionaries, beauty is that perfection, physical or spiritual, resulting from the harmonious combination of diverse elements in unity. The greater the number of elements uniting, the higher the form of beauty expressed by the resulting unity.

The greater the number of uses to society performed by the individual, and the higher those uses, the higher his place in the scale of being and the more perfect the type of beauty that he represents. To illustrate, the Hottentot and the Indian do little more than minister to their own animal necessities, and that in the simplest and most primitive manner. The whole sphere of intellectual activity is closed to them. This inferior quality of soul life manifests itself, as it must, in outermost relations; they are uncouth in dress, language and appearance, uncleanly and unmannerly, an offense to the eye and the finer perceptions of taste and harmony. Here on the other hand is their polar opposite, the modern gilded youth, curled, perfumed, in purple and fine linen, who passes his days in the pursuit of pleasure. He does not offend the eye in externals, like the Hottentot, but the total lack of soul beauty betrayed by his useless existence, offends the perception of the beautiful, producing the impression of the whited sepulchre. Both of the types under consideration are imperfect. The highest product of development, he who performs the highest uses, must be perfect and entire, lacking nothing, or in other words, must express the interior harmony in the minutest external particulars. There is a moral principle lying back of each inflection of the voice, the cut of every garment, a right and a wrong way of doing everything, and the true is the beautiful, and the really beautiful is the true. Hence it is impossible to conceive of Christ otherwise than as a type of physical beauty, or as decked out in the paint and feathers of the Indian,as in any way deficient in externals. Unpleasant eccentricities in language, dress, or manner such as often disfigure very excellent persons are a sign of incompleteness, argue some moral twist in the nature, and guage their lack of spiritual wholeness or holiness. Now what is the function of objects commonly denominated esthetic? Why does the economy of nature yield flowers and sunsets? "The ideal of everything exists eternally in the mind of God," says Plato. Everything in the natural corresponds to something in the spiritual, and nothing exists apart from its subservience to some definite use. The contemplation of a sunset or a flower is calculated to elevate humanity by raising the thoughts toward God. To quote again from Plato, "The beautiful is the splendor of the true," and its function is to awaken those diviner emotions that expand the soul and impulse man to nobler living.

Philosophically classified, the various departments of art range from Architecture, which Mme. de Stael called frozen music, through painting, sculpture and music, up to poetry which properly ranks first, since it combines the musical effect of rhythm with the communication of definite ideas that may embody spiritual truths, thus pertaining to a sphere beyond the natural. Architecture ranks lowest, because although it appeals to the sense of beauty, its function is less purely spiritual since it ministers to a material want by furnishing shelter and warmth.

A study of the art-forms of history reveals at the same time the intellectual and spiritual status of the different nations among which they flourished. Egyptian, Grecian and early Christian art each represents a distinct stage of human development. The representative figure of Egyptian art is the Sphinx, the woman's head emerging from the lion's body, the ascending and the descending spirit, the spirit of the man and that of the beast in closest union. The distinctive characteristic of Grecian art is the perfection of the human form. Greek art has furnished us with the most perfect types of physical beauty, a prophecy of the external completeness of humanity when it shall fully emerge from its animal tendencies, when not the head only, but the whole body shall be free with the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

Early Christian art from Giotto onward to its consummation in Raphael, the Prince of Painters, centers in Christ and the Virgin Mary and portrays the Deliverer, the promised Lord who came through the function of the Divine Motherhood to baptize the church and plant himself as the spiritual germ of the perfected kingdom of righteousness, in the minds of his disciples.

Modern art is decadent. The art centre of the world today is Paris, the capital of a nation doomed like all the offshoots of the Latin race to pass into oblivion, a nation whose heart is corrupt. It is written that the pure in heart shall see God, fateful words wherein the judgment of many is published!

As for the art of the future, untold possibilities cluster about the new age destined to inaugurate the life of Beatific Vision when philosophy as foretold by certain of the ancient sages, concludes in an erstasy affording full fruition to the entire nature of man.

Sharp Cuts at Existing Evils.

BY W. H. PAVITT.

THE GOVERNMENT has given to the railroad corporations a land grant equal to an empire comprising 197,699,697 acres, or as much territory as is contained in New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, West Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana. Not satisfied with this, the land sharks stole the government blind in its timber and other domains, and now they are exercising their thieving propensities in trying to rob the Indians of their reservations. It is a pity the Indians have not developed the white man's business instinct far enough to organize a trust, deed their land over to their own corporation, fenceit in, and shoot or murder all trespassers. But poor "Lo" has not reached the low level of savage brutality occupied by the civilized business cannibals of the nineteenth century.

Certain governmentalists claim that there is no such thing as an individual; that society is the only factor incivilization; whereat the anarchists pretend to answer with a sort of individual "gibe argument." The anarchist is a weakling. There are no individuals, not "because society is the only factor in civilization," but simply because we are all segments.

By the aid of improved machinery, five hundred thousand persons now perform the work which formerly required the labor of sixteen million people, and the invention of labor-saving devices is yet in its infancy. "Competition" and that good old wise "incentive" will yet force a majority of the people to fish, cut bait, or get out of the earth!

"To him that overcometh," etc. Overcometh what, the neighbor? Oh no, that is easy; besides, that is what the whole competitive world is trying to do. It means overcome self. This is a large sized job, but it must be accomplished. There is no escape from this crucible. Faith without works is an empty vessel.

We are not excited over the fact that a genius in Dakota and one in Florida have knocked the prop from under Koreshanity. We have two things to console us;—it might not have been a prop that was knocked out, and then again, it might not have been under Koreshanity!

The Chicago Tribune claims to have had a correspondent at Havana who told the truth, but it failed to state how long he survived after he discovered what he had done.

Anyone who believes all he reads in the daily press is like a billy goat, and can eat everything he sees. Let him goat (go it).

HE BOSTON Investigator asks the Adventists some pertinent questions concerning the coming of Christ, one of which is, "Why does not Christ come?" The Adventists expect Christ to come down through the atmospheres to the earth somewhere. "Where is he coming from?" "Where has he been for the past nineteen hundred years?" "How far up did Jesus have to travel before he was received up into heaven?" and "Where was God when Jesus went up to meet him?" are other stunners. We should like to see some of the Adventists answer these questions. In the meantime we would take issue with the Investigator, which says that "Christ does not come because he cannot; that Christ will never come, any more than Jacob or Roger Williams will come." But suppose that Jacob and Roger Williams have come back? Is it unreasonable that wheat returns after it dies? Human life is transmitted from generation to generation. Everybody recognizes the fact that we have ancestors. Have we come down through a line of ancestors? Then have we not lived before? This one-life-time business for everybody in agnosticism is just as silly and unscientific as it is in the orthodox church, and sensible people should begin to gather together sense enough to see that men go and come. We know where they come from all right enough; it is sure that they are the product of mental and physiologic functions. When men die they are taken care of through a process of mental attraction; they go where they come from, and have been doing it for all the millions of ages past. If Christ has ever lived he will come again, just as he lived before he did come; but when he comes there will not be any orthodox foolishness about him or his coming. It is no more strange to live again than to have lived, for all men will live again by exactly the same processes they now live.

It has been thought that so called money constitutes the basis of all commercial transactions and business of the world. One of the first objections urged against the Koreshan System of Exchange is, that we could not get along without money, for what would we buy with? Is money indispensable? Koresh has for years answered emphatically, No! in his advocacy of the demonetization of gold and silver and abolition of legal tender. KORESH first lost confidence in "money," and now at this late date other men are beginning to see the point. The real thing is the exchange of products. The value of products should be the basis of exchange, not a fictitious value of some intermediating commodity. One of the features of Equitable Commerce is the system of debit and credit by means of accountant checks. the general adoption of which will dispense with so called money altogether. All of the business of the world can be transacted with a single dollar of gold, silver or greenbacks. The opinions of Secretary Gage might startle some money sticklers, and we have a mind to quote a few words from his recent Pittsburg speech just to show which way the wind blows: "Money is not the main active agent that operates to accomplish the enormous volume of production and exchange. While it is true that exchanges are effected in terms of money, yet the real operating agent is credit. It is not a misuse of language to say that credit, with its multiform instruments, is the real money of commerce. "

Spanish newspapers are pretending to wonder what all the talk in America about war is for! They say that Spain has done nothing to offend America. What an insult to civilization! Done nothing to offend America—to offend humanity? A great nation pouncing down on a little island; the spirit of Inquisition starving and butchering hundreds of thousands; Spain stealing, silently, cowardly, and treacherously under an American battleship with torpedo in times of peace-does all this offend America? He who thinks it does not, must think that America is devoid of every instinct of sympathy for the oppressed. Atrocities may not offend Spain-treachery belongs to barbarians, and America may have risen a little above the plane of Spanish butchery and cruelty!

Many people imagine that a fact will settle a question for them; that if they could observe facts in contradiction to preconceived opinions, they would accept the same as conclusive. With thousands this is but a delusion. They won't do it!. Evidence cuts no figure today—a time when other things than evidences lead to conclusions. For instance, what facts have led the world to fallacious conclusions? Something devilishly wrong intervenes between facts and the will to forbid conclusions of truth in the minds of the majority of mankind.

Geology is no longer in it; it is revolutionized because inadequate, notwithstanding whole Bibles have been denied on the basis of geology. Geomorphy is the name of a new scientific fad, which involves guessing at what the rocks mean just as geology did. The essentially new feature of the fad is the "science" of trying to find out the history of the earth from examination of the soil. In the past, investigators have reached some rocky conclusions, and now they will be followed up by soiling geomorphy?

Life inheres in its expression. Did you ever know of an exception to this rule—this law? The life of man is within man, the life of a plant is in the plant, the life of a seed is in the seed. There is no life outside of organic structure; life is inherent, not exherent. The life of the universe is within the alchemicoorganic structure. Knowledge involved in the science of cellular life is the thing; everything else is fallacy and fraud.

Hell is a mystery—that is the meaning of the word, concealed, hidden, covered. The world is in hell when all is mystery. Heaven comes with the revelation of all truth. We are now in the period of transition between the age of hell and the age of heaven in the earth.

There should be no such thing as interest or usury; interest is a tax or bonus paid for the privilege of exchanging products. There can be no equitable exchange where this tax is exacted and paid. What the people need is a scientific system of exchange of products-value for value.

Some people do not like American jingoes; it is considered that the jingoes are endeavoring to cause war. The real cause of war is something more profound-more closely allied with the money power. National jingoism is but a phase of national prophecy.

Spain is still hunting heretics and running the Inquisition. It has attacked the religion of America and demolished it, or at least it has blown up the Maine worship (warship) of the United States.

The old proverb, omne vivum ex ovo, all life is from the egg or cell, is absolutely scientific.

Flour is not flourishing; it is in bondage-bound up in wheat elevators.

The mastery of mystery is its solution.

Interrogation Points and Other Punctuations.

Solar, Lunar, and Stellar Parallax.

I see in your valuable paper you always cheerfully answer questions. I would be glad to have you explain the following, if it is not asking too much: (1) Please explain parallax if we are on a concave surface. (2) If I understand you correctly, only those having the seed of Christ sown in them at the beginning of the dispensation will be saved at the harvest time. If so, why did Paul say, "Now is the day of salvation"? Also in Revelation, why does the "Spirit and the Bride say come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely"? I am anxious to know more of the Koreshan religion. I believe it to be the true way of living .- Mrs. J. T. H., New Kensing-

(1) Parallax is the apparent displacement of the sun, moon, andstars, and the earth being concave, of course the parallax is a certainity in such a universe. If you are familiar with the subject of parallax, take for instance the facts of the observation of lunar parallax. Seen from different points on the earth's surface any great distance apart, the moon appears to shift in the constellations—as, from the observatory at Greenwich and observing station at Cape Town. This proves that the moon is nearer the earth than the stars. The moon's distance is less than 1,000 miles; the stars about a thousand. Light is not propagated in straight lines, but in curves, which with perspective foreshortening, make the convex heavens appear concave to us. With the assistance of these suggestions, and by reference to diagram of the universe in January, 1897, Sword, you may be able to gather a few points of Koreshan parallax. The so called stellar parallax seen from "different points in the earth's orbit," is a humbug: and solar parallax considered from the standpoint of the hypothesis of the earth's motion, is nonsense. The sun, moon, and stars have considerable parallax—at least 90° parallax from points on the earth's surface having 90° difference of latitude. For instance, the North Star, in the zenith of the North pole, is seen on the northern horizon by an observer at the equator. A star parallaxes 1° for every degree traversed upon the earth's surface north or south. Astronomers do not consider this kind of parallax in the measurements of stellar Some illustrated articles on parallax will appear in future numbers of THE FLAMING SWORD. (2) If the germs of immortality were necessary to salvation, of course those who did not receive them at the beginning of the dispensation have not passed through all the experiences necessary to entrance into life. Those who did receive them have been re-embodied socres of times in the path of progress, and now at the end of the dispensation have to be awakened by the great call to obedience to truth and the laws truth reveals, and whosoever has the will, will be able to respond—none others. Paul's words, "Now is the day of salvation," were applicable then. A day of salvation comes at the beginning of every dispensation. Opportunities for salvation are confined to the time of seed sowing, just as the propagation of wheat has its seasons of sowing and harvest. Awakening to the knowledge of the truth is the first step in the actual resurrection of the dead.

A Straight Line Would Settle Mr. Blodgett.

Samuel Blodgett, of Grafton, N. Dak., informs me that he wrote you in reply to him in a recent issue of THE FLAMING SWORD, and I do not see that you have printed his letter in this week's SWORD (March 11). This is disappointing, and scarcely fair to Mr. Blodgett, who took up your challenge in good faith, and with the intention of refuting your system. May we hope to see his letter in the next issue of The Flaming Sword? It will be disappointing, if you choose to ignore his challenge. State your conditions and terms, and give him the opportunity to give battle.—J. N., Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. Blodgett's letter was received too late for the issue of March 11, and it appeared in the following issue. When Mr. Blodgett applies to us for terms, rather than security (for this shows his lack of good faith), we will give them to him in detail, together with subject matter of the Koreshan Astronomy, that he may have opportunity to study it. Our scientific propositions, terms, and challenges are all embraced in the New Geodesy, soon to be issued. We will submit to have the question settled by but one method; it is simple, unquestionable, and unmistakable, about which there can be no quibble whatever. See "On the Point of the Sword," by Koresh, this issue. The man that can extend a straight line in two directions from a given point on the earth's surface -a line that is tangent in the middle to a convex surface curvating downward from the tangent at about the ratio of eight inches to the mile, is the man that can overthrow the Koreshan System, and force us to admit the same if done! We will enter into a contract with any man who will consider our propositions and our terms sufficiently to admit that such a line would settle the question beyond dispute with him; we would agree that it would with us. Now, if Mr. Blodgett wants to do anything regarding the matter of "refuting" the Koreshan System, this is the only method to be pursued; by it any and all arguments he may wish to make while battling against us must be tested; every argument, every appearance or phenomenon he may wish to bring into view, would have to be referable to the actual, curvating crust of the earth. He can begin his arguments whenever he chooses; we know of no challenge of his to ignore; we will not refuse his acceptance of ours. The question is, Is he willing to agree to our propositions concerning the extension of a rectiline? If he is not, we cannot make terms with him; if he is, we can close up contract as soon as he gets down to business; you can help him and urge him on, if you desire.

The Question of Eating Meats.

Please answer through THE FLAMING SWORD, what is the Koreshan doctrine as to eating animal food. Are you vegetarians or not? I cannot arrive at any satisfactory result on that subject. The teachings of the vegetarians do not seem to go to the root of the matter.—X, Oregon.

We believe in a variety of food. We are not vegetarians; we eat whatever we desire. Human life must be sustained by subsistence upon substances of the kingdoms below us-this is a natural law. For instance, the vegetable kingdom feeds upon the mineral kingdom; the vegetable is the next kingdom above the mineral. The animal kingdom is composite, representing the progress of both the vegetable and the mineral, in the ascent or evolution of life. Man is the climax of progress; he is made up of all the elements of the kingdoms beneath him, and he requires such food as will sustain all the elements of life he possesses. Man is characteristically animal; animal food is natural to him—as natural as vegetable food is to the animal, or mineral food to the vegetable. Modern theories of hygiene are a lot of bosh, and along with them goes vegetarianism. This latter grows out of a sentimental misconception of the purpose of existence. The only way that we know of for substances to pass from a given kingdom to a higher is by appropriation by the higher. Instead of feeding upon animals being a curse to the animal world. it is a blessing; it takes the animal life out of the plane of the animal kingdom and transforms it to the human. Man does not become what he eats, but that which he eats partakes of the nature of man. Right here is the point of mistake of all vegetarians. If a man partakes of the nature of that which he eats, we suppose this would account for some people being cabbage-heads! Most vegetarians pretend to believe in the Bible, anyway; we do not know how they pardon such offenses as meat-eating committed by Abraham, Elijah, and Jesus and his apostles. Other vegetarians are "metaphysicians," and advocate the supremacy of mind over matter, and yet they are afraid to eat meat because of the fear they entertain that animal food might have a bad effect upon the mind and subject it to the influence of the gross elements of the animal kingdom!

Messianic Law and Biologic Battery.

Please define briefly: (1) Messianic law. (2) The energies of theocrasis. (3) How are the energies of theocrasis focalized in the Messenger of the Covenant? (4) A biologic battery.

(1) The Messianic law is the law of seed and of seed sowing. A seed is the saviour of the life of the plant, as well as the substances of the next lower kingdom which enter into the constituent elements of the seed form. (2) The energies of theocrasis or Messianic translation are the energies of love and of hate. (3) They are focalized in the Messianic center in accordance with the same laws that light and darkness focalize in the central sun. Thought, both good and bad, travels in the direction of desire. (4) Jesus and his apostles who loved him, and his enemies who hated him, constituted a genuine biologic battery.

Chat With Readers.

You can judge a man by the company he keeps and by the paper he reads. Progressive people read progressive publications. The Koreshan System is the summing up of all the world's progress for ages, and THE FLAMING SWORD is presenting the truths of that System. Many rational minds are being attracted to the investigation of the scientific light of truth—minds capable and fearless enough to follow logic from a known premise to the conclusion. You are one of these; you are fortunate enough to come into possession of so valuable a publication as THE FLAMING SWORD. We are constantly touching the key notes upon which depend the future harmony of the spheres. You know that there is not another such publication in existence. Editors and reformers have written us commending The Sword; everywhere good words are being spoken of it-in exchanges, by correspondents, and by subscribers to their friends. They all like it; they are beginning to realize that we are thoroughly in earnest—as earnest as the pioneers, and even the martyrs, of every cause of genuine reform. We are progressive and aggressive; the increasing number of our friends, readers, and sympathizers represent the widening, receptive circumference.

As we write, the large drawing of that which is to appear on page 16 of THE Sword lies before us, almost completedit will not be long until it becomes page 16 in fact! After this is completed, which involves an immense amount of work, the edition of the New Geodesy will follow. Our friends will be pleased to wait a little longer for the book, because it will contain nearly 200 pages, and will be embellished by a number of illustrations not intended when first advertised. With its publication, our work is given a new impetus. We want you to assist in disposing of copies of the new work on Astronomy. We want agents everywhere to sell this wonderful work-nothing like it in all the world today! Send us your orders at once, for as many copies as you can use among your friends.

The clock of the ages strikes the hour of revolution! The time dial of the world's evolution is correctly interpreted by Koresh; he reads the stars in the physical heavens as well as in humanity; he reads the great book of nature and the Bible,—the two great, harmonious forms of expression of the divine mind. In this issue we have from his pen two extraordinarily significant articles, "The Coming Theocracy a Natural and External Kingdom," and "The Clock of the Ages Strikes the Hour of Revolution." Do not fail to study them.

Who wants to win our $1,000 reward for the overthrow of the Koreshan Astronomy? It is growing a little interesting already. Some want to look into the text-books, others to criticise our literature, while others want to look into the sky, to see if Jupiter is convex! There is but one method of settling the matter beyond dispute in the mind of the most skeptical, and that is summed up by Koresh in this issue. Such a method is simple, rational, conclusive. We know what the result of such a test would be, for we have tried it! We challenge the world, but as we have stated repeatedly, our challenge will have to be met, not with the pen, but in the actual extension of a rectiline from the vertical point of a perpendicular. If such a line departs from the earth's surface at the ratio of eight inches to the mile, why, the earth is convex; if it rises to meet the chord, as the segment of arc, the earth is concave. We are asked to state our terms, etc. There are none, aside from the proposition to extend such a right line. We are looking for a scientific syndicate to back the other side; for it would require $25,000 to make a survey that would be acceptable to the modern scientist.

Next week's FLAMING SWORD will contain an excellent article on "Patriotism From the Koreshan Standpoint," by Rev. Bertha S. Boomer, whose earnest articles are always appreciated by our readers. The article is a resume of true patriotism—the patriotism that is to be, in the era of righteousness now dawning on the world through the revelation of demonstrated science.

This number is of especial interest. We have our standard of excellence to which we always adhere, but sometimes the mental thermometer registers above the standard. You will notice this to be the case in "The Function of the Beautiful," by Lucie Page Borden, and in the favorite meeting of the Girl and the Vala, by Revet. M. Castle.

We are not overlooking several questions which have come to us for answers; yours will come in their turn.

"How Much Does God Charge For Coal Mines?"

Little Jo had been listening to his father reading about the starving miners. Little Jo was too young to understand Casar's ways; he only heard the voice of nature as it spoke within him. He was no told enough to be contaminated by vices and devices of lawyers and landsharks, bogus statesmen and political mountebanks, boodlers, and coal barons. He had heard his father reading and talking about something wrong in the affairs of mankind, and he was trying to find out the "why." So he let the natural voice of truth and justice speak:

"Father, why don't those miners dig out some coal and trade it for something to eat?

"Because, Joey, they don't own the coal mines.'

."Who does own the coal mines?"

"They are owned by some men in Chicago.'

"Did those men in Chicago make the coal, and put it down in the mines, father?

, no, Joey; God made the coal. "What did He make the coal for?"

"Why, He made it for fuel, my child, to keep us warm and to cook our food." "Did God make it for those men in Chi-

"Well, then, if He made it for everybody, didn't He make some of it for those min-

"Why—yes—I suppose so; but you see, my dear little Joey, those miners are too poor to own anything.

"Oh, yes, I see; God made the coal for everybody that's rich."

"No, no, Joey; He made the coal for all, but the poor are not able to buy the mines, and so they don't own them."

"How much does God charge for the coal mines, father?"

"Why, my boy, He doesn't charge anything for the coal, more than the trouble of digging it out."
"Do those men in Chicago ever dig any

"Oh, no; they hire those miners to do

"Well, father, if God made the coal for all, and doesn't charge anything for it, and those miners take all the trouble and labor to get it out, why don't they own it after they have dug it out?"

"Well, Joey, my boy, I know it does look that way to your young and childish mind, but as you get older you will understand how it comes about that a great many of God's creatures that He sends here, fail to get what He made for them.'

"If they fail to get what God intended for them, who does get it, father?"

"Why, it is the sharp, shrewd, business men who get it."

"How do they get it?"
"Why, Joey, I don't know as 1 can make you understand it; but I'll tell you that once upon a time, long, long ago, a certain king rose up and seized the 'earth and the fulness thereof,' and said, 'It all belongs to the king. Now, when the king did that he actually confiscated—or if you don't understand that word, stole—everybody's interest in the earth and all the earth con-

"Yes, Joey, the king divided up the earth among his favorites, and they parceled it out to such as were rich enough to buy, and those who were poor lost their inheritance,"—C. W. Ayres, in Farmers' Voice.

Slavery is Not Abolished.

The great and fund-holding millionaires have their hands on the throats of the people through various forms of national, state, municipal, telegraph and railroad debts, many millions of which are "water," costing the holders only the printing and signing of the papers. The interest and dividends on these stocks and bonds are met by high national and municipal taxation, and by high telegraph and transportation rates, forming a constantly growing river of hard earned cash from the fingers of labor and business into the coffers of the millionaires, who are thus our new slave masters. They are the masters of the taxpayers, masters of congress, masters of legislatures, masters of courts, masters of finance, masters of transportation and masters of the public means of communication and intelligence. In the pride of their power, they snap their fingers in the faces of the people, and say: "The public be damned!" and "What are you going to do about it?"

The chattel slave system has been abolished in the United States; but "Have we abolished SLAVERY?" Ask the factory girls, the sewing women, the coal miners, the iron workers, the farmers, and all the men and women of toil, who form the great public which the Vanderbilts would damn to perpetual servitude! The old slavery rested on three millions of blacks, whom it pauperized, but fed and clothed. The masters never became millionaires. Some were bad and overbearing, but they had were bad and overbearing, but they had not the means to purchase great lines of railroads and telegraphs, and thus to levy tribute on whole states. The new slavery rests on sixty millions of people. It makes paupers which society must feed, and it has created thousands of millionaire slave masters, with regular incomes of millions per annum, from the labor of the people.-John Davis, M. C. in Arena.

Trying to Prove Evolution.

French scientists, aided by the French Government, are making bold attempts to unravel the secret of the origin of the human race, and are busily engaged in the work of trying to evolve men from monkeys. They have obtained the use of the famous catacombs of Paris, and there the work is being actively carried on.

The question to be solved is what science expects to gain by it, for as those who are engaged in the work of evolution are men, no one would ever think of accusing them of hoping to improve upon man, or of expecting, as a result of their labors, to evolute a superior being. Their object may be to supply more adequately to evergrowing demand for men, particularly at the summer resorts, where sometimes the dearth is greatest!—New Ideas.

I respect a man who knows distinctly what he wishes. The greater part of all the mischief in the world arises from the fact that men do not sufficiently under-stand their own aims. They have undertaken to build a tower, and spend no more labor on the foundation than if it were a hut.—Goethe.

The March number of the Crusade will be hailed with delight by all interested in child-study and the work of Mother's Clubs. Suggestions for organizing and conducting Mother's Clubs, together with the first half of a comprehensive, helpful course of study, planned to cover the first sixteen years of a child's life, from the pen of so eminent an authority in this work as Dr. Mary Wood-Allen make it of inestimable value. The Beast and the False Prophet.

PART I.

MANY who are looking for the coming of the Lord in what the church has denominated the second advent, have variously tried to fix upon the exact time of the manifestation of the beast and the false prophet, as the man of sin to be revealed is one of the precursory indications of the Savior's approach. Professor Totten who has been cutting quite a figure in modern calculations, may be regarded as the most pronounced lightning calculator since the days of Miller. If there ever appeared in the world's history a more emphatically distinguished chronological prestidigitateur than the so called second advent church, we have never been able in our historical research to discover it. To say that the chronological practice on these lines for the last fifty or more years has not been of some value, would be to misstate the proposition. It has been of great value, and will become a most important factor in our endeavor to show to the weary chronological tramp, not only the time, but the character of the false prophet and the animal.

The Beast.

This beast is specifically a wild beast, as we find therion, in the Greek, which means a wild beast, to be the term employed in connection with the pseudoi prophetes, the false prophet. That we may make a thorough analysis of this subject, it is obvious that the first step in its exposition involves the dissection of the term employed to designate the thought expressed. Words are employed to express thoughts, and they do this perfectly or imperfectly in proportion to mental powers of understanding, communication, and reception. The root ther involves primarily the idea of both to prey and to be preyed upon; so that in the study of the question on the basis of the most thorough analysis and synthesis, we are forced to include these diverse properties and characteristics of the beast in question.

The first allusion we find to a specific and terrible beast in the Scriptures, is in Genesis iri, 1: "Now the serpent [nachash] was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made." This is the serpent through which came the fall of man, and in which all the temptations of men have their origin,—the beast upon which the first of the three curses was pronounced. The first woe mentioned in Revelation has special reference to the curse upon this beast, and as there comes a time when there shall be no more curse, the removal of the curse from this beast will be accomplished through the woe in which the curse culminates. The Hebrew word nachash, rendered serpent, has its origin in the idea to hiss, and is derived directly from the hissing sound which results from the fusion of metals; hence the word brass, from the same root, the sound produced from the alchemical blending of two or more metallic substances. The most ancient brass was made from the union of gold and silver, and constituted the object of human commercial love; hence the statement, "The love of money is the root of all evil."

The force of the above argument can only be comprehended when we take into consideration the fact that the progress of time moves in cycles, which repeat themselves; a law in which is involved the truth that as the sign moves on the ecliptic 50″ (seconds) of a degree every year, it returns to the place upon the ecliptic whence it started, and that at that time conditions with men repeat themselves. It follows, then, that we are now approaching a time wherein the resurrection of the dead unfolds the sons of God, a condition identical with the creation of the Adamic men, whose generic name was Adam in the day that they (the Adamic men, the sons of God) were created in the image and likeness of God.

Our observation leads us to conclude that "the love of money is the root of all evil." It does not require the Scripture declaration to confirm this concept, but inasmuch as it is a Biblical truth it cannot conflict with any other declaration, but must conform to and confirm other truths; hence we are forced to the conclusion that if "the love of money is the root of all evil," then the serpent that tempted our first parents was money, or the love of money, and that the old serpent, the devil, is the money power. This argument is strengthened by the following Scriptural testimony: "And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

The power to buy is rapidly being concentrated in the corporations, and the middle classes are being forced to the wall as inevitably as the laboring masses. To have the mark, is to have credit by virtue of the possession of acknowledged wealth. To have the mark in the hand, is to possess the brass (gold and silver) with which to purchase. Do not infer from this, that we contend that this passage of Scripture has no other interpretation. There is a series of significations belonging to various spheres, and through this series runs a continuous catena of correspondencies; but this significance is the most external of the series. There is nothing more subtle, insinuating, and potent, in its influence upon the mind, than the hellish potentiality of the money power, nor more enslaving and degrading to the intellect and the body.

It may be argued, and with much propriety, that the sensual love is more evil and subtle in its influences than the love of money; but when the principle of money is understood, this argument has no bearing, for the center of the sensual determination is commerce (sex commerce), which is the correspondent—on the plane of sex union—of commerce on the secular plane. merce is the interchange of substances for life. Sex commerce is the interchange of the sperminal and germinal essences of sex for the production of life; hence they are correspondencies. Money is the medium of exchange in both domains, and in both domains it constitutes the old serpent, the devil. The same law is operative also in another sphere; namely, in the church, where the interchange of truth and good is prostituted, for the commerce in fallacy-in the promulgation of the false doctrines of the church-leads to the practice of a coordinate and corresponding life. This is the beast in the church, the old serpent, the devil, in the so called church of Christ.

We have in the great leviathan, a description of which is found in Job xli, an illusion to the same great and terrible beast; and also in Isaiah xxvii:1, we find a description which confirms it as identical with the beast in Genesis: "In that day the Lord with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan, the piercing serpent, even leviathan, that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea." In what day? Isaiah xxvi: 20, 21, answers the question: "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover herslain." What is this leviathan, this crooked serpent, this great dragon? The word leviathan has a double signification; the first signifying binding or twining to Jehovah. The second significance is the curse of conjunction.

The Curse of Conjunction.

What is signified by the curse of conjunction? On the surface of water or the surface of metallic substances exposed to atmospheric action, there is constantly in progress a combustion which oxidizes the surface of whatsoever kinds come into conjunction. If we study the character of the alchemic action of a large body of water having no outlet, we discover the lake or sea to be saline. There are two surfaces in apposition, the lower being the water, the upper being the atmosphere, composed of oxygen and nitrogen. Through the atmosphere the cathodic flow of energies is descending from the physical(alchemico-organic) heavens, meeting the anodic energies flowing upward through the water. These cathodic (descending) energies meet the anodic (ascending) energies at the point of apposition of the two surfaces. The result of this complex union and conjunction is a burning, which converts the substances of the two surfaces to a distinct anodic energy with a co-ordinate, distinct cathodic energy, while at the same time there results an oxidation which deposits, by transmutation, the saline substances held in solution in the body of water, like the ocean or the great salt lakes or seas. The chloride of sodium found in solution in the ocean, is the chlorine energy from the sun in union with the sodium in minute quantities flowing into the ocean, in the fresh river waters flowing into the ocean and into the great confined seas. These deposits are the results of the conjunction of energies and elements—so called.

A piece of steel or iron with its surface exposed to the atmosphere, passes through a process of alchemical combustion which liberates the energy generated in the burning (combustion) of the surface, and leaves a precipitate called oxide of iron. This oxide of iron is the debris or waste of the combustion, as the saline substance in the salt water is the precipitate of a waste in the combustion operative on the water's surface. This is merely a law operative in physics, corresponding to an operation constantly active in all the relations of anthropostic existence. Digitized by

In the beginning of the grand cycle, the conjunction between the invisible Gods and the humanity with which they were conjoined to produce the visible sons of God, the Adamic men, produced a precipitate which became the descending element in the race. In the union which obtained when the Gods made men in their image and likeness, breathing into them the life of the Gods, there occurred both an ascending and a descending action; the one was the spirit of the man that goeth upward (inward), the other was the spirit of the beast (the animal life of the Gods and men) that goeth downward. The descending life is the leviathan, the accursed life, descending to become again ultimately the redeemed and ascending life of a new creation.

On the Point of the Sword.

If THE rational and scientific manner of the consummation of any event, prophetically declared answers all the demands and ends of the prediction, then why look for some irrational, unscientific, and improbable fulfilment? When we reach the consummation of God's revelation; when the mystery of God is finished and man comes into a knowledge of godliness, and all arcana are unfolded to human comprehension, as they certainly will be, the most consummate arcanum of all things, now hidden, will be made manifest in fulfilment of those legal processes in the line of laws inhering in, and proceeding from God as the origin or beginning of all things,—all being concluded through natural and spiritual law.

In a certain sense, Isaac was a child of promise, and special or extraordinary generation, yet he was born of human parentage. Moses was a child of special providence, but he came through a human channel. Jesus the Lord was the product of parthenogenesis or virginal propagation, but he also had a human mother, and was the Son or offspring of the human race. Therefore, is it not reasonable to suppose that on His return to earth, his entrance will be through some line of human progeny?

The line of demarkation between reason and inspiration is not so drawn as to set them in antagonism to each other. Inspiration (inbreathing), as pertaining to a progressed stage of human development, is the application of a new or spiritual atmosphere inspired through an interior and deeper channel, quickening the inner nature, and by its awakening enabling it to more deeply penetrate, by the aid of reason, the laws governing the hidden or mysterious operations of the universe.

God is either bound by the force of human circumstance and man's voluntary opposition to the laws of life, or he is a hard and cruel Master who, having the power to transform sickness, death, hell, and sorrow to the joys of superior bliss, will not exercise his attribute in establishing a sudden transformation.

When the Golden Bowl is Broken.

The Girl and the Vala (No. 6).

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

ONE DAY the girl sat waiting long beside the stream, with meditative eyes resting on its shining waters. When at length she looked up, she saw the Vala contemplating her with rapt attention, as though she would impart a more wonderful phase of truth than yet the Girl had heard. But her lips remained sealed, and after a little delay, almost timidly the Girl began: "One day you startled me as with almost fierce reprobation you spoke of thieves, and apparently included all mankind in the stern designation. Often since have I thought of it, and would have asked regarding your meaning; but the memory of your tone and mien restrained the question on my lips. To-day, however, your face encourages the inquiry. Pray tell me, where does meum end and tuum begin?"

"Child, child!" said the white one, in sombre tones, "your very question reveals the dark legacy of blindness which the sins of the age that is passing have bequeathed to the present. But my office is to bring you to the light since it is your desire; for though in darkness, you love it not; and would come unto the light, even that your deeds should be reproved."

"Indeed that would I," returned the Girl with fervor; "for some sweet instinct tells me that nothing is of worth but to see light, and to know and do good. And right willing am I to accept reproof from one who by virtue of just balance has right to judge."

With beaming glance of approval the Vala said, "Before honor is humility; and the ear that heareth the reproof of Life abideth among the wise: for the fear of the Lord is a foundation of life to depart from the snares of death." And the words thus applied had a strangely novel, yet familiar ring in the Girl's ears, and she remembered the sayings of Solomon, the wisest of men.

The Vala continued. "Where is righteousness, there is no question of mine and thine. Where dwells love, there all is in common and to each as he hath need, nor is need determined by selfish desire; but through the energies of all for the service of all do all things exist, and each is free to devote for use to self whatsoever may be essential to equip him for perfect use to others; nor does he desire more, for the joys of the righteous are in the activities of service. Where is love, which is the fulfilling of the law, there can be no selfishness,—for selfishness is enmity to God and hatred to man,—and where is not selfishness, is not thought of meum et tuum."

Keenly did the Girl attend, and her old point of view receded as she heard; and gladly was she lifted for the time to the exalted plane of the speaker, enjoying in that exaltation and direction of vision, a clear-sightedness to which were apparent many things not thought of hitherto.

The Vala proceeded. "Where is hate, always springing from selfishness, there is robbery and murder—the work of the thief; for robbery and murder are one. He who takes the means of life, takes life itself; and all vice is in this one vice, all virtue in its opposite."

Softly quoted the Girl, and lingeringly, and pondering each word as it fell: "'The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy. I am come that life they may have, and abundance may have." Then she added questioningly, "And theft is the chief sin?"

The Vala paused ere answering; then spoke with marked emphasis. "To commit any one sin is to be guilty of all; for any single expressed sin does but revolve about the all involving root of evil in Satan's stronghold in the human heart. In breaking the primal command to love God supremely, man robs God, and thus terribly originates the sin of theft; nor ever could man have robbed a fellow creature, had he not first robbed his Creator. Love is energy of life, and to withhold from God the love that is rightfully his, is to rob Him of the means of living; hence God, the great Architect of the universe, has been dead in humanity. But at last is he resurrecting! and as he casts the grave clothes from him, perjured, patricide earth trembles at the rumble of her descending doom, even while she claps hands over her ears and denies the sound!" She rose as she spoke, and with awful majesty stretched out her arm, as though in menace over all mankind, adding in dreadful voice, "Woe! woe! to the murderers."

Breathlessly the Girl looked and listened, and visibly shrank and shuddered at the terrible denunciation, as to her heart struck the chill thought of her own responsibility, in common with all, for this most awful crime.

In barely audible voice she breathed, "How should God die? And why does man fail to love him?"

"His death, as to his external nature—for man has no power to affect the supreme degree of Deific existence, which is eternal in the heavens—was necessary; for it needs must be that offenses come; but woe unto the world because of offenses! Man fails to love God because of the false gods thround in his heart,—because he worships the idols himself has made." More gently she proceeded. "Listen, Girl! The love of divine wisdom, which directs to immortal life, is the root of holiness. The love of diabolic wisdom, which directs to mortal existence, is the root of death and hell. divine wisdom manifests in the natural world as truth, the diabolic wisdom as fiction. These antithetical loves are expressed by one word, which, in common with all language, is susceptible of antithetical application. The Greek philarguria well expresses it—love of silver; sometimes translated into your tongue love of money, again covetousness. This is the word Paul used to designate the root of all evil, using it in its evil sense, after the manner of men. Supremely, silver is the symbol of truth. In either sense, the evolution of the love of silver is the love of gold. In the true sense this is the power of good operative in earth to bless; in the false sense, it is the power of evil, operative to utterly blast earth, and the criterion of this dread power is the gold standard of the nations. Love of truth is love of God, the supreme love; love of good is love of man, of the humanity that tabernacles the truth. And in these two loves is all the law fulfilled. Love to God is the root; love to man is the evolved power of the root. In the antithet, the honor paid to material silver is the external indication of the love of fiction; that paid to gold is the external indication of love of the power of evil, to rob and destroy humanity when bound by fallacy. One is hatred of the truth, which is hatred of God; the other is hatred of man, in and through whom God exists. Here is the inevitable reaction of idolatry."

With uplifted look, and brighter voice, she proceeded. "When the ultimate of evil is reached, when divine natural good is about to begin in earth, the humanity that tabernacles the truth manifests as the Messenger, or Herald, to announce the end of a long, black night, the dawn of a new day. At the sound of his trumpet, in the moment of his triumph, the silver cord is loosed and the golden bowl is broken. One clear note announces end and beginning; but O, how diverse it sounds to those who have heeded the injunction to watch, and to those who love darkness because dear to them are the ways of evil! Against the golden gong man is fashioning for this very hour, it strikes as the rattling peal of doom, shattering it to fragments in the moment of its completion. This gong is the golden bowl, or vessel, that the ingenuity of man, directed by the fallen wisdom, fashions to contain all the treasure of earth; and the silver cord is the bond of fiction that binds humanity while being robbed. But in the divine sense, the silver cord and golden bowl have opposite significance."

Eagerly the Girl drank her words, at last with question-parted lips, and now she waited not to know whether the Vala would explain at this time the divine sense, but asked, "Who is this Messenger?—this Herald?"

"He who has the herald's staff—Caduceus—which tells that he is Mercury."

"Mercury!" exclaimed the Girl. "The thief?"

"Ay, the thief!" said the vala, smiling at the surprised inquiry. "Did you not expect this? Surely you have read the promise given by the mouth of the revealing prophet, 'Behold, I come as a thief.' If he comes as a thief, he comes to steal; but to steal for God and humanity from those who wrongfully hold. Here is the wonder of antithets: he who comes to put an end to theft is himself a thief; for it takes a thief to catch a thief. Now, Girl, let your heart sing! for this homely proverb expresses a marvel. In righteousness does he appropriate from those who misuse that he may bless even them in re-bestowal for true use. He it is who shall recover all that man has robbed from God. He may enter every door for he possesses the key that opens—and no one may shut; and what he has he may hold against the world, for he possesses the key that shuts—and no one may open. He seals and unseals all mysteries, he fastens and unfastens all covenants, he binds and frees captives, he opens the two-leaved gates of life. He is that skilful one who schools the world. And O, wonder of wonders! In this day, Girl, manifests in anthropostic existence that mount of skill—or mount of the skull—Calvary—where for a light and a warning and a promise, forever, rise the figures of the two thieves with the Lord between."

Digitized by GOO

She rose to depart. "More than this I may not tell you now. When again I come I shall tell you more of this Mercury—the divine Messenger, whom the Almighty raises up in righteousness."

Patriotism From the Koreshan Standpoint.

BY REV. BERTHA S. BOOMER.

IN THESE DAYS of intense international cogitation concerning the destiny of the present storm center of the world, Cuba, appeals are made in all quarters to that grand passion—patriotism. The inherent significance of the word patriotism, gives us the thought of a father who bequeathed to his heirs a country in which to make his name loved and honored by all his posterity.

The query arises, Who was the father or vitalizing principle of this nation, and whose name has most supremely personified its fatherhood? Secured freedom of individual action in communal and co-operative relationships, to the end of realizing as a nation a divine brotherhood, with the Almighty as the supreme Father, was undoubtedly the animating hope of the most potential, personal factors in the generation of this nation. During our entire history as a nation, this hope has ever been the inspiration of our noblest men, who have deemed it an honor, a coveted privilege, to lay down life, if need be, to maintain the moral integrity of its constitutional force. Our Constitution embodies in itself, in documentary form, the best of the lives and thoughts of our nation's forefathers.

A fraternity without a common father is inconceivable to the rational mind. A father unknown and unknowable, cannot command any grand passion of intelligent devotion. Principles can be justly valued only as they are personified, and reach us as the emanations of a life force. While this nation is practically without the recognition of a common father, or a scientific knowledge of his absolute will, there can be no true, intelligent patriotism. "Peace at any price" men, advocates of war whose desire for it originates in the bitterness of revenge, worshipers of the money power as representative of the central principle of life (commerce), will all esteem themselves true patriots, and force upon public attention their claims as such.

Only that man is a true patriot who knows God as his Father, and the destiny of his nation. To claim to know God as an impersonal principle, is to confess merely a consciousness of ignorance of a vague mystery. To know God as a man, is to know him in the only way he can be known to natural men; that is, to know him in his humanity, personified and revealed in the active exoteric communication of his will concerning us as individuals and as nations.

The science of God's laws as seen to be in universal operation, is the first requisite of intelligent patriotism; and only the intelligent execution of his will as revealed by science, can make his name loved and honored as holy, and the land of his inheritance a revelation of his handiwork that reveals his power and glory. The United States claims to be the most progressive of all the Christian nations, with the grandest inheritance of resources of power and wealth ever bequeathed to a nation. As a nation avowedly progressing under the banner of the cross, as well as the stars and stripes, with all the energies of youth and the resources of the richest virgin country on the face of the earth, we have a moral responsibility to the confessed King of kings and Lord of lords, exceeding that of all other nations.

The patriotism of our national allegiance belongs primarily to Jehovah, the force of whose spirit should energize our intelligent prayer for a kingdom whose destiny is to become a universal empire of the righteousness of the law of Moses, as fulfilled in the person of our Lord Jesus Christ. Every Christian citizen of the United States should shrink in horror from the "peace at any price" policy of some of our demagogues. War is a holy thing when in divine service, for the altar sanctifies the gift. War for the overthrow of iniquitous systems of government and their unrighteous enactments, serves a divine purpose, and the peace secured by their overthrow is baptized with the blood of heroes who win on the Lord's side. The life energies of the fallen hero maintain in their progeny the exemplification of the righteous principles for which they fought and bled.

The fathers of the Revolution have not yet realized the answer to the prayer they taught this nation to pray. They fought yet again in the bloody battles of the war of the Rebellion, to work out the salvation of an inherent nation destined to rule the world in right-eousness. The war cry that wakes for the righteousness of this inherent kingdom, is heard in our land today, and The Flaming Sword of God's consuming love of truth turns every way to keep the way of the Tree of Life open for all believers in the fruition of our Lord's life, the divine kingdom in the earth.

Righteousness exalteth a nation;—revolution in her service renovates. This nation must reap the bitterest fruits of iniquity, if, in the name of Jehovah, she fails to assist every spirit of progress appealing to her. It is a spirit of progress we are allowed to witness in such heroic devotion manifest in Cuba struggling to be free from the tyrannies of Spain, hoary with decadence, and gory with the blood of saints and martyrs.

Every true patriot should know that every record of national history testifies to the culminating of the Christian Era of national progress in the occident of the effete nations, and that the occident of the past becomes the orient of a future cycle of national progress for the whole earth. Our tremendous geographical area, rapidly filling up with an aggregation of all known social elements, furnishes a magnificent social chaos, unequaled on the face of the earth for the involution and evolution of a new social order. God in his humanity can alone speak the word to give it form and life.

The disintegration of the old church and state goes on in ever-accelerating ratio. It is for the true patriot to declare the pattern of the Theocratic kingdom, Imperio-Republico-Regal in its form, and to call upon his co-laborers to arm themselves for the greatest moral conquest the world has ever seen. We were told of old to add to our faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge. Essential knowledge is absolute knowledge of the form and functions of the universe in its microcosmic and macrocosmic development. The microcosm is the Godman, and the macrocosm the completely evolved environment, of which the God-man is the completely involved infoldment. The possessor of this knowledge is the true pater or father, to whom the eyes of the nations must turn if America is to become the long-sought Canaan, the world's Beulah land. Destiny decrees her the mother country of nations yet unborn, and God's home of the downtrodden, weary, and oppressed.

Cuba is but one aspirant for advancement, to which we must lend a hand for rescue and protection from further outrage. Humanity everywhere longs to behold one righteous government, to see one land illumined from shore to shore with the glory of the science of the cross of Christ. Millions wait almost breathlessly for the sound of the feet of Him who bringeth glad tidings of great joy,—tidings of the restoration of man to the image and likeness of God, that men may know him and the power of his resurrection.

On the 10th of April, Easter anthems will fill the air with the harmonies of the universal human hope that the day is at hand when the aspirations which generated the first glad Easter of the Christian Era will find again their infoldment in a human form, whose presence will comfort as a mother comforteth, and whose surrendered life will bring to the birth the life of God in man.

Fellow countrymen, patriots, let your patriotism be that of the heart of God, which so loves the world that his life is a continual sacrifice of self for the commonwealth, the universal good of every one who names his Name, and for the conversion of his every enemy to friend! For the love of humanity He sent a sword of division and overturning, that he might overturn until he whose right it is should reign over the devastated kingdoms of sinful men, for their restoration to the kingdom of their Hero and Savior. Our King cometh! He shall reign by the power of knowledge and the life of love. In his kingdom every man shall be a true patriot, clad in the whole armor of divine righteousness.

"The Slings and Arrows of Outrageous Fortune."

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE great French impressionist, Alphonse Daudet, so often called the Dickens of France, says that his only recollection of childhood is a recollection of tears. Happiness is so essentially the native element of all young, living creatures, the thought of their pain tugs at the heart strings in a peculiar manner. The lack of perspective incident to this period of existence, intensifies its sorrows. "Those bitter sorrows of childhood!" writes George Eliot, with her usual warm hearted sympathy for all that grieve; "when sorrow is all new and strange, when hope has not yet got wings to fly beyond the days and weeks, and the space from summer to summer, seems measureless."

Daudet has embodied much of the pathetic history of his early struggles in one of his novels, the first to captivate public attention, "Le Petit Chose." Especially interesting is the account of his first journey to Paris, that Paris his genius was destined to conquer. This chapter, partially translated below, is entitled "My India Rubbers:"

Should I live to the age of uncle Baptiste, who must be as old now, as an ancient baobab of central Africa, I shall never forget my first trip to Paris, traveling third class. It was in the early part of February and still very cold. Without, a leaden sky, wind and sleet, bare hills, water covered marshes; within, drunken sailors singing songs, burly peasants dozing, open mouthed; old women, children, nurses, insects, all the usual paraphernalia of a third class coach with its tobacco smoke, brandy, garlic sausages and damp straw.

At the outset, I established myself in a corner near the window, where I could watch the sky; but two leagues away, my place was stolen by an army nurse who wanted to sit opposite his wife and, too shy to complain, I.e Petit Chose (Little What's-his-name) found himself condemned to ride two hundred leagues, wedged in between an ugly, stout man who smelled of flaxseed, and a tall drum major from Champenoise, who snored all the way on his shoulder. The journey lasted two days. I spent them both in the same place, immovable between my tormentors, my head rigid, my teeth set. As I had neither money nor provisions, I ate nothing the whole distance. Two days! it is a long time to go without food, especially with eating going on all around one. Just under my feet was a huge basket, piled to the brim with all kinds of eatables, shared by my neighbor and his wife. The proximity of that basket rendered me intensely miserable, especially the second day. Still, it was not from hunger that I suffered most during that dreadful journey.

I left Sarlande without shoes, wearing on my feet nothing but thin india rubbers. Very necessary, very useful, but in winter traveling third class, merciful Heaven, how cold I was! I could hardly keep back the tears. At night, when everybody was asleep, I held my feet in my hands for hours, trying to warm them. What if my mother had seen me then!

Ah! well, in spite of his hunger and the cruel cold that forced tears from his eyes, Le Petit Chose was very happy, and nothing in the world could have induced him to surrender his seat,—that half seat he occupied between the man from Champenoise and the army nurse. At the end of all his sufferings, there was Jacques, there was Paris.

The second night, about three o'clock, I awakened with a start. The train had just stopped; the whole car was in a commotion. I heard the army nurse say to his wife: "Here we are!"

"Where?" I inquired.

"Paris, of course."

I rushed to the curtain. No houses, a few street lamps, the barren country. Yonder in the distance a great red glow and a muffled roar like the noise of the sea. An official was passing from seat to seat, with a lantern, shouting: "Paris! Paris! Tickets, please." I withdrew my head involuntarily, with instinctive terror. Ah! fierce, proud city! Le Petit Chose was right to fear you.

Five minutes later, the train pulled into the station and the lad was clasped by the faithful Jacques, already initiated into the adventurous life of the metropolis. The way to Jacques' lodgings, led past the Jardin des Plantes, dim and shadowy in the darkness, whence issued hoarse cries and muffled roars.

"I seemed," writes Daudet, "to have debarked in some dark, monstrous cavern, full of ferocious wild beasts ready to spring upon me. We walked on and on through black, interminable streets, then suddenly Jacques halted in a small square near a church."

"Here we are in St. Germain-des-Pres," said he. "Our room is up there." $^{\prime\prime}$

"What, Jacques! In the belfry?"

"Yes, in the belfry. It is very convenient to tell the time of day."

of day.''

Jacques exaggerated a trifle. He occupied a little garret on the fifth or sixth floor of a neighboring house, and his window looked out upon the clock of St. Germain, just on a level with its face. Upon entering, I gave a cry of joy. "A fire! How good!" and running to the chimney, I presented my feet to the blaze, at the risk of melting my rubbers. Then, for the first time, Jacques observed how strangely I was shod. It made him laugh heartily.

"My dear," said he, "many a famous man has come to Paris in sabots and has lived to boast of it. But you can say, some day, that you arrived in rubbers. It is much more original.''

The chief interest of the narrative resides in the fact, widely published in connection with the recent death of the novelist, that the poor little lad who arrived that night, cold and hungry, to share his brother's garret in the Latin quarter, lived to be courted and feted, to command success and an ample fortune by his works, and to refuse as an idle adjunct to his literary fame, that honor, coveted by every Frenchman, a seat among the "forty immortals."

The annals of literature are filled with the struggles of genius. Think of Dr. Johnson, the "Great Cham of English Letters," walking the streets of London, night after night, too poor to pay for a supper or a lodging! Think of Hawthorne and his young wife in the old manse, dining off bread and milk!

"Who never ate his bread with tears," says Goethe, "knows not the heavenly powers." The lives of most great men as well as the history of all great movements, are marked by storm and stress periods by which their inherent vitality is tested. If the living truth is hid within them, it must express itself soon or later in visible results, for all the hosts of hell shall not prevail to crush truth. "The eternal years of God are hers." The "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" that made Hamlet question weakly, "To be or not to be?" impel the noble mind to nobler daring; they wound but cannot daunt; they sting but to incite.

Sharp Cuts at Existing Evils.

BY W. H. PAVITT.

HE MERRIAM PARK and St. Paul, Minn., banks have been pinched in the recoil of their own trap. It appears that a government clerk by the name of Southall, who, for a number of years, has been in the habit of making out time checks to the employees of the government, for labor in dredging on the Mississippi river and its upper tributaries, resigned his position somesix months ago, and it develops that out of $400,-000 of time checks issued, about $100,000 worth are fraudulent, and the banks now want the government to make good the amount. On the surface this looks fair, but when it is known that laborers who are paid in these time checks, and most laborers are now paid in this manner, whether working for dredging, railroad, logging, or other contractors, are compelled to discount them at the banks at anywhere from ten to twenty-five per cent-and even more in doubtful cases-one has little sympathy to waste on the confidence men who get beat at their own game. Instances are known to us of certain firms who had money on deposit in the banks, paying their men in time checks due in thirty days. Their workmen being pressed for money, were compelled to stand a shave of fifteen cents on the dollar at the very bank where this money was on deposit—the bank and the firm dividing the spoils of the piracy. This is not an isolated instance, for a number of years' experience shows scarcely enough exceptions to prove the rule.

To show how puerile are all the popular reformatory efforts, one has only to dig below the surface, to get at the real power of the people's debasement. Let us look into the domain of commercial activity in social life. It is competitive, and is actuated by the spirit of greed. Those who have made a success of the competitive strife have done it by focalizing or polarizing thought in that domain. From this polate center, which we will call hate, goes out a substance, the product of the thought in that domain, which reaches to the outermost environ and actuates all who are pivoted "in the love of money" to send up their "wages" to the centers radiating the force. This is the "wage system;" it is a sin, and "the wages of sin is death." Not only does the product of the workers' laborious toil go up to these centers, but something greater—their thought energies—which feed the fires of their own undoing.

It required fifteen gallons of beer, one gallon of distilled spirits, and half a gallon of wine for every man, woman, and child in the nation for the year 1897, to keep up the fires of our present high standard civilization. To this, add the enormous consumption of wealth, and waste of energy in the nauseating, disgusting, and filthy tobacco habit, and one must conclude that civilization needs civilizing.

If the reports of the press are true, the condition of the inmates of the sweaters' dens of our large cities is as pitiable as that of the starving Cubans, but we don't see that many are wasting their energies in "maudlin sentimentalism" over the fact. Hypocrisy has many shades. "Nothing succeeds like success," and if you want to be eminently successful, be a usurer. There are many things which recommend this course to the aspirant, chief among which is the fact that it does not require any brains to practice usury.

The Loud bill in Congress met defeat in the House. If the Senate will defeat the bill and introduce one giving railroads and express companies a legitimate rate for the use of cars—and pass it—there will soon be a surplus in the postal service.

The golden calf has broken loose and sucked dry the cow which produces the milk of human kindness.

There is nothing more radical than truth, or more harsh than justice.

Virtue consists not in knowing, but in knowing and doing.

In the Editorial Perspective.

HE Koreshan Cosmogony is not an hypothesis, it is not a speculation. It fits the facts and explains all phenomena. There are no facts of geography, geology, astronomy, geodetic survey, navigation, nor of any class of scientific research, that conflict with the conclusions of Koreshan Astronomy, for it is founded upon facts, the facts of all these departments of scientific investigation and knowledge. A mind loosing the reins of fancy and discarding reason, can imagine a universe to be just any shape it chooses. One of the worst examples of absolutely unfounded guess is seen in the conclusions presented in the "Caystral Cosmology," which says that the earth is actually in the shape of a woman, head, shoulders, sides, arms, waist, hips and lower limbs! The head is in ice, extending into the north, and the feet through an ice shell in the south, with the sun revolving below the elbows, while the stars are set in a shell of ice which surrounds the tapering, cylindrical, convex form. This entire mess has been derived from a misconception of the Koreshan Cosmogony. There is a relation existing between man and the physical universe; man in his perfected state is the universe involved. A seed is the plant involved; a seed does not have roots-actual roots, extending from it; they are involved. The universe is a cell; man is a modified cell, elongated and adapted to his surroundings. What use is there of a world with legs that do not walk-limbs 8,000 to 10,000 miles in length? Koreshan Anthropology and Cosmogony are scientific. The Caystral geo-anthropomorphism is a humbug!

Geodetic Surveyors have long beeen puzzled regarding the deflections of the magnetic needle. The first "magnetic center" discovered in the world is located near Hudson's Bay; it was considered to be the magnetic pole of the earth, but it now turns out that it is only one of many polations of magnetic currents. Another is located 90° west, in nearly the same latitude. There is a large tract of land in Russia which is subject to extraordinary magnetic variations, and the magnetic point is about 600 miles south of Moscow. There is one primary magnetic center at the North Pole; there are four secondary magnetic poles near the Arctic circle, and a number of tertiary centers on about 45° north latitude; on the equator there are none. It is a well-known fact that magnetism is not electricity; magnetism is a force which is generated through union of electrical energy and matter—it is the product of electricity through the mediation of matter. Demonstration of the laws through which these magnetic arcs, zones, and poles are formed, is easy in Koreshan Science, in the universal cell, with the sun's electrical forces constantly reaching the earth from the solar nucleus at the center of the cell. It is as easy to demonstrate that such phenomena would be impossible in a solid earth millions of miles from the sun. They obtain in the cell, 8,000 miles in diameter, and are the natural evolution of forces in their transmutation from the solar to the lunar spheres.

An exchange says that agnosticism is the spirit of the age, and that it is impossible to resist it; that it has oozed through the church walls and saturated the pulpits; settled upon literature, taken command of science and philosophy, and rests at last upon the muses. We agree with these statements; the progress of agnosticism during the past century has been marvelous. But we disagree with the exchange, that agnosticism is for the elevation of the race. We go according to the meaning of words. Agnosticism means know-nothing-ism, from the Greek a, not, and gnosis, to know. It is ignorance, mental darkness; and the only elevating tendency it manifests is when it "raises hell" to the altitude of heaven! It is decidedly the spirit of the age. The general and prevailing attitude of everybody about everything is, "I do not know!" These words are heard about religion, science, and economics, the purpose and laws of existence and creation, cosmogony, and the basis of reason, in the pulpit, in the observatory and laboratory, and in the legislative halls everywhere. Yes, agnosticism in its truest termsmental darkness and ignorance-pervades the world's so called systems of religion, thought, and science.

Humane societies instituted for prevention of cruelty to animals, have quite a hold in Spain. It is said that Spain has better laws for the prevention of cruelty than America, and moreover, that Spanish people are the tenderest and most humane of any people in the world! If the records of the Inquisition are to be trusted—records of torture on the rack, over the fires, and between the thumbscrews—we are certainly able to "corroborate" the above statement. Spain as a nation is marvelously humane; and even today is not falling behind its former record, for hundreds of thousands of reconcentrados are starving in Digitized by Cuba. A man may be kind to a hog, with which he feels some well-defined lines of affiliation, and at the same time lay hands of oppression upon the human race without remorse of conscience.

A number of so called conservative newspapers were mistaken again. At first, they considered it jingoism inflaming the public mind, to reach the conclusion that Spain is responsible for the destruction of the battleship in Havana harbor. Public opinion was fixed long ago—the next day after the explosion. The Flaming Sword's write-up was true—it was an outside explosion, by the hand of Spain. Conservative men are not prophets and conservative newspapers are not progressive. The progressive man today is the revolutionist, bold and fearless in denunciation of wrong. The world is his enemy; he is the world's friend. He is both revolutionist and conservatist—the Founder of Koreshan Science.

A good many people do not believe in the personal devil, on the ground that they have never seen him, nor felt, nor possess any knowledge concerning him. The latter is true enough, for the supreme knowledge of the universe is to know one's self. It is too bad that some people never use mirrors when they take a little time for reflection; for with a few factors of thought applied, we do not see how any one can escape the conclusion of the existence of the personal devil.

Arguments put forth by the agnostics to disprove the idea that God exists, are about as ludicrous as the arguments of the church to prove that he does exist! Neither party knows what it is talking about, for the church teaches that God is unknowable and incomprehensible, while the agnostic measures his ism to suit his mental calibre—his know-nothing-ism. The fool is always eager to teach what he does not know!

Labor unions are deploring the fact that genius is throwing hundreds of thousands out of employment by the invention of labor-saving machinery. They would prefer toil and drudgery by the sixteenth century methods to the use of machinery, because they have not ambition enough to get out of the competitive business into co-operation, for then labor organizations would have no excuse for existence!

War is significant. Many people abhor war; some of them we know have an abhorrence for truth, righteousness, and other necessary things. When war is at the keystone of the world's interest in the external, it indicates that forces and powers of mentality in the hells are seeking to war with the nucleus of the new era.

The condition of the reconcentrados in Cuba, reminds us of the condition of the prisoners of war, both North and South, during the rebellion of the southern states. To starve prisoners now is a crime; it was for the South in '61-'64, but for the Union it was all right!

Politicians are not to be compared with vultures, and the reform press should cease making the silly charge that politicians are vultures. They are not even so good as that; vultures perform a useful function in the destruction of corruption, while the politicians create it!

Scores of people have shown their ignorance by ridiculing Koreshan conclusions; but no one has had either the sense, ability, or desire to tackle a single premise, principle, or postulate of the System!

It is said that "facts are stubborn things;" but our observations lead us to conclude that facts are not half so stubborn as the man who does not want facts!

Conservatism today is simply cautious jealousy guarding the interests of old and corrupt institutions.

There is a good deal of confusion in reform papers, about the fusion of political and reform parties.

Of course Spain is humane; all the nations are humane—they have the humanity of evil.

It will do the reformers no good to despise the millionaire because they are not in his place!

Most of the managers of business in the competitive world are man-agers.

There is very little art displayed in modern artillery.

Comets and Meteors in Concave Earth.

(1) What have you to say about the phenomena of comets, meteors, shooting stars, etc.? Astronomers claim to know that comets move in huge parabolic orbits and with great velocity, some of them leaving trails of luminous matter millions of miles long. Astronomers also predict when some comets will return, and claim that they can see a comet at a great distance, and tell how fast it is traveling, how soon it will be visible to the naked eye, and how long it will continue so.— H. J. J., Hull, Ia.—

Comets and meteors are all on the inside of the earth, 8,000 miles in diameter. Comets are lenticular reflections and refractions of solar energies through rings and lenses of crystallic energies which revolve in the atmospheres above. There are definite comet cycles, cycles in which comets of a given quality, shape, or size are produced at regular intervals; astronomers have noted a few of these definite periods, and that's all they know about comets. A comet never returns. Each comet is a new production, has a brief existence in visibility, and then plunges into the sun. Astronomers know when a few comets will be visible, by reference to tables of comet cycles; anybody could do that if they had the tables. Astronomers' claims concerning the size and distance of comets, are a lot of bosh and nonsense; they are just as badly off about comets as they are about the form of the earth, the size and distance of the sun, planets, stars, etc. Meteors are materializations of ferruginous and mineral energies which descend from the sun. They materialize and fall just as hail forms and congeals.

The Concave Arc in the Bible.

- (1) Sometime ago I wrote requesting an explanation of the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, but have not as yet received the explanation. (2) In The Sword recently, you referred to Isa. xi:22, with reference to the concave earth, but you surely have made a mistake, as there are only 16 verses in that chapter. Prov. viii:27. "Set a compass upon the face of the depth," does not seem to give any definite proof that the earth is concave, and I would like to know why you gave the above references as proof.—E. C. D., Terre Hill, Pa.
- (l) Explanation of the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus was published in The Flaming Sword for August, 1896. If you have a copy, please refer to it; if not, write us and we will loan you a copy, or write you the explanation, for that issue is out of print, and we cannot supply more. (2) Isa x1:22 (not xi; 22) was referred to in The Sword. It refers to the "circle of the earth." We do not refer to these texts as proofs, but as corroborative of the facts we have obtained by scientific methods. See October, 1896, SWORD, "Koreshan Astronomy and the Bible," for an analysis of the Hebrew words from which circle, compass, etc., have been translated. The point we make is, that the words mean arc, environ, enclosure, boundary, and consequently concavity or hollow of the earth. (See Isa. xl:12.) The meaning of the words is not apparent in the popular translation, but can be seen by any one who will refer to a Hebrew lexicon. The Hebrew is very exact, and it is very definite from the original that the writers referred to the true cellular form of the earth.

"The Prince of This World."

F. P. H., Scholten, Mo.-We make no mistake in THE SWORD about the "Prince of this World,""the Prince of the power of the air working in the children of disobedence," being the Comforter, the divine energies imparted to the early church by Jesus as the result of the translation of his personality. The seed energy of life was sown nineteen hundred years ago. Its course was death, and through death in order that actual, practical, and scientific resurrection might result at the end of the age. Life must be transformed to death, light to darkness, and immortality to mortality from one, the Head, to and in the many, in order that the many be vitalized to the plane of transformation of death to life, of darkness to light, from mortality to immortality. When the Holy Spirit, the divine energy, entered into the corrupt soil of the early church, it entered the hearts of the children of disobedience, and began its process of death. Then a different kind of a spirit operated in them from that which operated prior to Jesus. The cause of light and darkness, good and evil, is the Almighty (Isa. xlv:7). The progress of life from itself in its seed-form, to its reproduction, is through corruption. There must be decay and a falling away in the life of the Almighty, just as there is in a seed when it is planted. The results of the sowing of the life of Jesus are in accordance with the workings of iniquity. 2 Thess. ii.

N. C. M., Kingston, Tex.—We have your favor with $1.00, with new subscriber. Many thanks. We will send you a number of copies of the New Geodesy. It is not yet ready, but will be within a few weeks. Glad to know of your efforts to increase the circulation of The Flaming Sword. Go on with the work of spreading the truth. We are preparing new circulars and matter for general and widespread distribution, which will appear about the time of the New Geodesy. We desire to push our work then as never before.

Prof. Geo. W. W., Denver, Colo.—Thanks for your favor. We mail you a number of copies of The Flaming Sword to supply inquirers. The Flaming Sword is devoted to religion, science, and economics, dealing with subjects usually discussed in metaphysical journals, as well. Received your pamphlet, "Practical Guide to Occultism," which we will review in a future issue of The Sword.

H. de J., North Shields, Eng.—Your cards have been received; as we have advertised, the new Geodesy is not yet ready, but it will be soon. The drawings for the cuts to illustrate it are now completed, and will go at once to the etchers and electrotypers. We do not handle the papers we advertise. For the pamphlets you mention and the copy of the Free Man, write to the publisher at Bangor, Maine.

Mr. Blodgett Vet Confused Over the Function of Punctuation Marks in Figures.

EDITOR OF THE FLAMING SWORD:-Yes. Mr. Blodgett thinks he can see the point, and he has been complimented more times than one in being able to see points that other intelligent people failed to see. I noticed the point in your figures was placed next to the figure 1, with three ciphers following. I notice also, that when you are telling the subscription price of your paper, you put the point in the same place, next to the figure one, with two ciphers Now your readers will see that following. if the point next to the figure 1 in your offer as pay for some one to refute your means one thousand dollars, the point next to the figure 1 and the two ciphers after it, makes it mean that the price of your paper is one hundred dollars per annum. But we will pass that over, as long as you now state it in words, and we will presume that you did not mean any catch there. But here is another point that you are called upon to meet. Your unprejudiced readers will perceive that the evidence is against the idea that your offer was made in good faith, unless you show your willingness to leave the decision of the matter to parties who are neither prejudiced for nor against your concave theory. You leave the inference that you intend to be the sole arbiter in the matter, and all know it would be very humiliating for one in your position, who has insisted for so long a time that he knows that he is right, to own that he is wrong, to say nothing of the dislike he would feel to surrender so much money. Now remember, I have not asked you to let any one on the committee whose opinion is already against your theory. All I ask is a fair board, neither prejudiced for nor against you, that will decide according to the evidence presented. Are you ready? SAMUEL BLODGETT, Graiton, N. Dak.

We think Mr. Blodgett would better study punctuation a little before he undertakes the work of puncturing the solid wall of Koreshan facts! Does he not know the difference between a period and a comma? $1,000—why, man alive, look at that! The comma separates the thousand from the hundred's place. $1.00what's that? That's a dollar mark, then 1, a unit, followed by a period, a decimal point, separating dollars from cents! We are very much afraid that other pointspoints in the Koreshan System, would prove just as confusing to Mr. Blodgett as these simple common-sense points, used by everybody in whole nations! We can teach him points, and would like to, but we do not like to begin at the very rudiments or abc's of mathematics, which we learned away back in earlier days, to prepare Mr. B. to overthrow us. Ready? See last week's FLAMING SWORD. When the offer is accepted, to overthrow the Koreshan Cosmogony by the extension of a straight line over the earth's surface, we will, out of magnanimity, increase the sum from $1,000 to $10,000—(four ciphers there!-and the comma slipped down between the first two!) but we want somebody to take hold of it who will not make simple blunders for the daily press to laugh at, to say nothing of all the critical readers of THE FLAMING SWORD who are enjoying the funny part of it now. Either that person will have to be Mr. Blodgett devoid of his blunders, or some other person than Mr. B. Concerning other things, we can only repeat what we have already said. There is not a reader of THE FLAM-ING SWORD that would be willing to submit the matter as a final test, to any other process than that of a straight line. The line itself would decide it; the committee would be a secondary consideration. We want a man that is able to look at facts and comprehend them; we do not like a man who will quibble over points, especially if he does not understand the points!

Chat With Readers.

The Sixteenth Page is completed! The transformation will soon take place on the last page of THE FLAMING SWORD; it is more than we promised it would be, and it will please you. It will serve many purposes: As a study tablet, as a work of art, as an advertiser of THE FLAMING SWORD, to attract attention to our work. We will use it for all it is worth, and in connection with it and the New Geodesy, we are preparing circulars and matter for general and widespread distribution—we are devising a system of advertising in which every subscriber can be serviceable. We have names of scores who have written us that they desire to help us; we have not forgotten you we are simply reserving your name until we can arrange the proper ammunition for a general campaign.

Within a few weeks the New Geodesy will be published. The drawings are all completed, and other work is being done. We are getting it ready; the size of the work, its illustrations, and other added features, will more than make up for the delay in its publication since first announcement. Have you ordered a copy? If so, order more-you will need them.

Do not miss the next issue of THE FLAM-ING SWORD; we think the Sixteenth Page will adorn it-besides, it will contain valuable matter for its inside pages.

When writing us, enclose stamp for reply. We place this number of THE SWORD in your hands, and leave it with you;. it is full of valuable matter, and we could write columns commenting on its character and

When Doctors Disagree.

He looked at my tongue and he shook his head-

This was Doctor Smart.

He thumped on my chest, and then he said: "Ah, there it is-your heart!

You mustn't run, you mustn't hurry, You mustn't work, you mustn't worry; Just sit down and take it cool.

You may live for years—I cannot say— But in the meantime make it a rule To take this medicine twice a day.

He looked at my tongue and he shook his head-

This was Doctor Wise.

"Your liver's a total wreck," he said. "You must take more exercise.

You mustn't eat sweets.

You mustn't eat meats,

You must walk and leap, you must also run, You mustn't sit down in the dull old way-Get out with the boys and have some fun, And take three doses of this a day.

He looked at my tongue and he shook his head-

This was Doctor Bright.

"I'm afraid your lungs are gone," he said, "And your kidney isn't right."

A change of scene is what you need. Your case is desperate, indeed, And bread is a thing you mustn't eat— Too much starch; but, by the way,

You must henceforth live on only ment And take six doses of this a day.

Perhaps they were right and perhaps they knew-

It isn't for me to say-Mayhap I erred when I madly threw

Their bitter stuff away;
But I'm living yet, and I'm on my feet,
And grass isn't all that I dare to eat, And I walk and I run, and I worry, too;

But to save my life I cannot see What some of the able doctors would do If there were no fools like you and me. -S. E. Kiser in Cleveland Leader.

The seller of nearly every commodity has the right to sell or not. But the labor market differs from all others. The laborer brings his very life to market. He cannot wait for a rise. He must sell his service or die. Hunger is not a postponable want .- The Worker.

There are Others!

Do Recent Discoveries Show that the Earth is Pear-shaped, as Pictured in some Newspapers? One of the pictures, so far as now recalled, made the earth very pearshaped.—the northern arctic region nearly flat and the southern, bulging at least a quarter length of the earth's equatorial diameter. It professed to represent the shape as inferred from some data about the depth of the Arctic ocean, and from a so far purely imaginary bulge of the antarctic region, as an offset, equal to the northern depression.

We cannot well suppose that the Arctic ocean is deeper than the great oceans. Supposing it to be even five miles deep, this would be but one sixteen hundredth of the earth's diameter. On a globe ten feet in diameter, this would be nearly onethirteenth of an inch,-not even noticeable to the eye, whether as a depression or a In a picture with the earth's equatorial diameter about four inches, like the one referred to, the axial diameter, of course, would not show any difference. is one of the many follies of newspaper sensationalism, humbugging the public in the name of science.-Popular Science News.

Condensed Wisdom.

But we must some day at last, and forever, cross the line between nonsense and common sense. And on that day we shall pass from class paternalism, originally derived from the fetish fiction in times of universal ignorance, to human brotherhood, in accordance with the nature of things and our growing knowledge of it; from political government to industrial administration; from competitive industrialism to individuality in co-operation; from war and despotism in any form to peace and liberty.—Carlyle:

Diseases affecting the national life can no more be cured by half-way measures than can diseases which prevent bodily health and physical perfection; it should be borne in mind that a cancer on the body politic as on the physical body, can only be cured by cutting it out root and branch. To attempt to sever the chains and relieve mankind of the yoke of slavery by political palliatives, is just as silly as an attempt to cure a case of small-pox by cutting the patient's hair or trimming his whiskers .-Social Democrat, Chicago.

FROM THE PEN OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED (KORESH).

Hastening to the Inevitable Vortex.

WHETHER it be peace or war, the fact is apparent that the war scare has given an impulse through which a long stride is made by the United States toward the general preparation for the final great culminating struggle. The world's catastrophe, like any other maelstrom, approaches its vortex in an accelerating ratio. We are hastily reaching the great crisis. The love of money, which is the root of all evil, and therefore the great serpent upon which the initiative curse was pronounced, is about to have its idol broken. The gold god is the god of human greed, and the source and regulator of all the legislation enacted throughout the world.

Whether we have peace or war, depends upon the attitude of the money-changer and the influence of either upon the stock brokers' market. It is a fight between the bulls and bears in the stock exchanges of theworld. It is not a question of the blowing up of one or two ships of war by a treacherous national fiend, nor of the starving to death of a few hundred thousand reconcentrados. How will it affect the ruling money pirates of the world? This is the practical question, and it reduces itself to a conflict between two classes of financial thieves, the one clamoring for peace, the other for war.

The Congress of the United States is between three fires. The people of the United States have somehow gotten the craze that we ought to whip Spain. They first were in deep sympathy for a people struggling for liberty from a brutal tyranny exercised for the aggrandizement of a foreign usurper. Then they were enraged over a pronounced declaration of war,—the explosion of a mine under the warship Maine,—for which we should have immediately captured Havana, and which either England or Germany would have done without having first given notice to the Spanish government. The people demand that Congress and the administration do something. This is one of the fires troubling the Congress of the United States.

The administration is practically in the hands of the money power, and the money power is Lombard street. This is the fire that poor McKinley trembles most under. He knows that his way to the White House was purchased with the money of the money broker, and that this power has overcome the public sentiment and the public interest, at least in one great issue. Then, too, Congress is under the fire of politics; for howsoever great the effort to disguise the fact that the policy of the administration is being shaped independently of politics, the question is deep in the heart, How shall we steer the political ship so as not to shipwreck the g. o. p.? Poor Mr. McKinley! He is under a great strain. He thinks of his pledge to the people who voted for him, then of the money power which manipulated that vote, then of the struggle in the Congress of the United States for political supremacy, and between them all the aspect is a dubious one, and he is tired, -so they tell us.

Cuba has a right to her liberty. Cuba knows, America knows, and the world knows, that Spanish treachery and insincerity are so thoroughly inbred that there is but one just course, and that is to wipe her off the face of the earth. There is coming the death struggle of the Latin race. Its entire history has been marked by rapine and blood. Its doom is sealed, and it is in the purpose of Divinity to obliterate her from among the nations of the earth. It may not come this year, but the time of the end is about full; the cup of human iniquity is running over, and we aver, by divine authority, that the end is at hand, and that the money power is about to receive its death warrant.

Senator Mason on the Cuban Question.

SENATOR MASON has given, in the following, the best summary of the situation and the relations of the United States with Spain, that has yet been made public. It is concise, direct, honest, and full of loyal Americanism.

The Senator Replies Categorically to Chicago Interviews.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 2.—[Elitor of The Tribune.]—I beg the privilege of answering the interviews in yesterday's p uper, which just came.

Mr. Elson Keith says: "I think Senator Mason makes a great mistake in saying that Spain blew up the Maine." My answer is that under the order of General Weyler, which has not yet been published, but which is known to every Senator, every ounce of all explosives was absolutely and entirely under the control of the Spanish government, and I say what is approved by every student of int-rnational law, that the discharge of a mine is the same as the discharge of a cannon, and after reading Mr. Keith's interview I hope he will excuse me if he and Mr.

Wharton disagree.

I have also read the interview of Mr. Sprague, where he says: "Spain would not have dared to blow up the Maine." Mr. Sprague is right, but if he had read the diplomatic correspondence from Washington down to and including Cleveland, he would have known that Spain always does its principal work in the night and disavows it in the morning. Mr. Sprague says: "If Spain blew up the Maine I believe she would make reparation that would be satisfactory to this country." I know Mr. Sprague. I cannot think he made this statement. The only reparation that Spain can make will be dishonor to her own flag. He says further that "the board of inquiry was unable to fix responsibility." He is entirely mistaken. The board declines to fix responsibility on "person or persons," but I know that the board fixes it upon Spain.

I have also read the interview of Mr. Cudahy, in which he says: "The policy of the government should be unde by the Chief Executive." I regard Mr. Cudahy as one of our best citizens. In the press of business he has not had time to read our Constitution, which says that Congress alone can declare war. I should be very glad to shirk responsibility and leave it to the President, if the Constitution had put the responsibility upon the President and not upon Congress.

I have also read the opinion of Mr. Selfridge, of the firm of Marshall Field & Co., whom I am pleased to call my friend, and who, in a moment of excitement says: "Senator Mason falls short of representing the people of the State." He also says: "That there was not the slightest proof that Spain had blown up the Maine." My answer to Mr. Selfridge is, that in his busy moments to look after the interests of his firm, he had not read the evidence in the case nor the rule of international law laid down by Wharton.

I have read also the interview of Mr. Felix of Felix & Marston, and agree with him except that he is entirely mistaken when he says that 'other nations have the same ground for intervention,' Mr. Felix does not stop to consider the Monroe doctrine.

I have also read the very fair statement of Mr. Ebling of Gage Bros. & Co. He also seems to forget that the Constitution fixes the responsibility on Congress and not on the President, and when he suggests that we should give ten days or two weeks, he seems to have forgotten that we have given them nearly three years.

I have also read the interview of Mr. Parrottet, who says: "We do not want to see a fight if it can be helped." I quite agree with him, but I don't see how that can be helped after Spain has lowered our flag, sunk our ship, and murdered 260

. American citizens.

I have also read the interview of Mr. Selz of Selz, Schwab & Co. He says: 'Spain has owned that island for centuries, and has as much right to it as this country has to the State of Maine.' Spain has no right to govern that island without that island's consent. This was the proposition of Lincoln, and it was sustained in the arbitrament of war.

I have also read the interview of Mr. Albert W. Kohn of Kohn Bros., who says: "As for Senator Mason, I think he is playing to the grand stand." I desire to say, that as a rule the people are in the grand stand, and Lincoln said, "Keep close to the people," which means keep close to the grand stand. If the bucketshops imagine for a minute that I am looking for re election, I call attention to the fact that my time does not expire until 1903; therefore, it will be useless and worse than childish to talk about playing to the grand stand.

My answer is the same answer I gave yesterday. I have studied international law for twenty five years, and I am familiar with Spanish diplomacy for more than 100 years, as it is laid down in the books. I know that the government of Spain has murdered 266 American citizens, and leaving out the 250,000 women and children they have murdered in Cuba, I am for a declaration of war. I do not expect the approval of those gentlemen who fear that the defense of our nation's honor may interfere with one of their dollars, and if the hour of justification does not come in my time, my children or my children's children may learn of it.—William E. Mason.

From the moment of the first report that the Main e with its nearly three hundred noble Americans was destroved, we knew where the responsibility rested. We knew as well, that the course of events leading to the settlement of this issue would be conducted on the lines of the commercial interests of Lombard street, manipulated from Wallstreet. While Senator Mason's attitude is the correct one, and though having the sympathy of the masses of the people, the power behind the throne will still endeavor to shape the policy of the country. The dear little children of the administration cannot endure the cords of the party lash, for any great length of time, and they will be whipped into line under the instigation of Mark Hanna, who has said "there will be no war; ' and Mark will not allow himself to play the role of the false prophet if he can help it. His reputation and commercial interests are both at stake. Mr. McKinley owes too much to Mark Hanna to stake any chances on his friend's antagonism and the antagon'sm of Wall street, which made this administration and proposes to manipulate it. The following is a plank of the platform upon which President McKinley entered upon his present incumbency:

From the hour of achieving their own independence, the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American people to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty. The government of Spain having lost control of Cuba, and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens, or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

We all know that party platforms are mere sops to the people; that they are used to hoodwink voters, and made expressly to be broken. This plank was instituted as an express disapproval of the Cleveland policy. -a policy which, so for as it relates to the Cuban question, has been continued over into this administration. When Wall street advocates peace, it does so upon a purely speculative basis, and with the ulterior purpose of sucking the blood of the millions of people who are being reduced to pauperism and as bad a system of starvation as that instituted by the Spanish government, to which the poor Cubans are subject. The world needs peace, but it never will come while armies and navies are made to menace each other from mercenary and pusillanimous motives. We are for peace, but we know it will come through blood, and that the very measures instituted by the great nations of the world upon the predication of self-defense, will constitute the aggressive and desolating measures in which the age will culminate. When the angels said, "Peace on earth, good will to men," they did not assume that great armies and navies were the means to be employed to perpetuate peace.

We have before us a circular issued from the office of Carley, Stokes & Co., of the New York Stock Exchange, 20 Broad street, New York, to their customers:

It is not the purpose of this publication to attempt the disclosure of temporary market movements, except in a limited degree. It is our effort to enable our correspondents to discern the important influences which create the radical changes in markets, and to note the earliest indications possible of coming developments. Except in editorial comment, there is no attempt at originality. On the contrary, our plan is to bring together in compact form, all important facts and controlling opinions which underlie and ultimately control the great movements in finance. Our correspondents will find it advantageous to preserve these circulars and review them from time to time.

Following this announcement is Mr. Carley's statement, dated March 21, in which he says:

I venture the following prediction: The New Parliament in will favor Sagasta. This will put Sagasta and the Spain will favor Sagasta. Cortes in control of the Spanish situation. I also predict that the United States Congress will take some aggressive action, probably recognizing the independence of Cuba, and the whole matter will then be eliminated from Congressional debate. Speaker Reed will keep other movements out of Congress. After recognizing the independence of Cuba, the United States will say to Spain, virtually, what are you going to do about it? It will then be left to Spain to initiate a war if she cares to. I also predict that the result of it will be that Sagasta and President McKinley will enter into negotiations which will ultimately end in peace. Meanwhile the Cuban insurgents, strengthened by supplies and probably by men from the United States, will attempt during the summer to drive out the Spaniards, and may probably succeed. Possibly Sagasta will accept, after these developments, Cuban bonds. There will be no war. If the skies clear in the way I now believe, the market will be a certain purchase during this week.

The world may rest assured that all the fuss about war and millions for defense, is upon the basis of a secret understanding between the administration and the gold gamblers, and that the mobilization of our navy is manipulated by these same gamblers, as a blind, but that in reality it is one more step toward the bondage of the masses.

* *

The dark or medieval ages were the result of the natural declension of the church in its passage through the processes of regeneration.

The Wall street speculators desire to manipulate more government bonds, but as the masses are, on general principles, averse to their issue, some special excitement, such as the blowing up of the Maine, must be taken advantage of to extort from the people what they would, under ordinary circumstances, most emphatically denounce. The people are the same blind, patient asses that they have been for the last thirty years, and this condition will continue until the ass will no longer carry the great burden imposed by the gold power. Then will come the crisis.

We quote further from Mr. Carley, the mouthpiece of Wall street, under date of March 28. Please note these dates. He says:

When we cross the ocean and come among our own furious people, we find the situation perplexing. The Republican party had resolutions in its platform that Cuba should be free, and the Democratic party has put it into a thousand vociferous Both parties therefore are striving to keep ahead of each other in support of Cuban intervention. This renders the situation very difficult for President McKinley. The members of Congress are so anxious to please their constituents and go home in a halo of war glory, that they are prepared to act without prudence and much less without statesmanship. However, the strong and far-seeing members of the Senate and House, including both parties, are many of them desirous of avoiding war, if possible. President McKinley is proving to be one of the greatest statesmen of history. From all the information we can get, and from careful and continuous study of the situation at Washington, we have come to the conclusion that Congress will act with remarkable unanimity about something or other, but we do not believe that "something" will be such that Sagasta will be compelled to call it war. After Congress has flashed its gunpowder, the whole subject will drift into the hands of President McKinley. Then we will see President McKinley and Sagasta working together for peace. trouble lies in Congress in the immediate future. McKinley with the aid of Speaker Reed and other lieutenants can guide Congress through the next few days without doing something which virtually amounts to a declaration of war, we believe the enactments of Congress, whatever they are, will such as to virtually eliminate Congress from Spanish entanglements. The moment that Congress gets cut loose from this question, we may rely upon President McKinley with confidence.

Take note of the statement that "President McKinley [in the estimation of the Wall street gamblers] is proving to be one of the greatest statesmen in history," which means that he is even a better tool for Wall and Lombard streets than Grover himself, and especially if Wall street can "virtually eliminate Congress from Spanish entanglements. The moment that Congress gets cut loose from this question, we may rely [says Wall street, through Carley] upon President McKinley with confidence." It resolves itself, then, to this issue: Will Congress be forced by the people to liberate Cuba despite Wall street, or will Wall street whip Congress into line, under Hanna, making McKinley the tool and king's fool of the Rothschilds?

All in the Interests of Peace!

THE greed of nations in the very violation of the principles of the Lord's righteousness, hastens the world to the final precipitation and its culminating catastrophe. The fear of all nations has come. The British lion trembles for its coming inevitable conflict with the Northern bear. The nations are augmenting the power of their armies and navies. Is it because the spirit of Christ and peace possesses them?

England has become the great commercial cormorant of the world. From the fact that she is the moneylending power, her commercial interests impel the maintenance of a vast navy, and because of her commercial greatness she is able to maintain it. The weakness of the United States resides in the fact that she is the money borrower, and it is for the interests of Wall street that she remain such. The people of the United States are gradually being educated to a knowledge of the fact, that it is not profitable to borrow money during a time of peace, when there is no emergency, while during a time of war the nation can create it, and through actual experience prove the potency of its fiat.

It is for the intellectual growth of the common people at the expense of the religious and ethical, that we are to look for that final crisis in which the nineteenth century cracks its doom. This century will end through war. Its culmination in peace will be when there has been the final great struggle of the age, into which merge all the cumulative engenderings of the dispensation. The Jewish age ended with the destruction of Jerusalem and the scattering of the Jewish church and people. This dispensation is no exception to this general and perpetual rule. Every prophet in every age has been a calamity howler, in the estimation of such as are given over to the greed and fictitious pleasures which sordid accumulations provide.

The age is hastening to its culmination, and it will end in a destruction commensurate with its prostitution of the principles of righteousness in which it was inaugurated. We raise the warning voice only for such as God will call to avoid the catastrophe by coming out of the great Babylon, forsaking her sins and escaping the plagues to come. The Christian age and church came into being upon the basis of the principles of communism; its destruction will come through the violation of communism and the substitution of competism. The cup of commercial iniquity is full, and the government of the United States is in no wise backward in commercial prostitution. The commercial power manipulating the halls of legislation has dared to defy the people, and until now has done so with impunity; but the time seems to have arrived when Congress fears longer to follow the leadership of Lombard street in defiance of the public demand. Right or wrong, the people begin to understand the duplicity and treachery of Spain, and this knowledge may be the means of precipitating the great conflict which, though beginning apparently in the interests of a downtrodden people, will end in the great conflict of Gog and Magog, in which prophecy has determined the age shall culminate.

On the Point of the Sword.

The Danger of Denouncing the Devil.

FRANCE is the holder of Spanish bonds;—to demolish Spain will damage France. France is in sympathy with Russia;—to demolish Spain will financially cripple France,—hence English love for America. What hurts France hurts Russia; what hurts Spain hurts France,—therefore England's friendship for, and France's animosity toward the United States. War between the United States and Spain will not be likely to end with these two nations. The world's crisis involves more than this—The old earth (the governments of the world) is about to be demolished.

Never in the history of the world has a prophet been respected in his day, who proclaimed destruction, or who dared to declare the truth in opposition to the deceptive announcements of the optimists of any age. It is not popular, nor has it ever been, to proclaim the truth. The prophets who have dared to be so foolhardy have been destroyed. The Lord himself, with all his rights of supreme inheritance and authority, was compelled to succumb to the popular clamor. The virtue of divine prerogative was no exemption from the venom of the popular prostitutions of his day. One of the most flagrant objective points of his condemnation was the stock gamblers of his time, and as he then with a whip of small cords drove out the money-changers, so now in the fulness of the times and conditions of iniquity, will he scourge the temple of his body (the humanity) of this terrible curse. The nations of the world are not building navies and recruiting armies for the sake of peace. In these exhibitions of power may be seen the purposes of the divine vengeance. These are merely words of warning, but who will hear?

The observations and experiences of the last few years have shown to the critical observer, that it lies within the discretion of the stock gambler to so manipulate events as to provide for what may be denominated good or bad times. Of course, we all know that good times imply good times for the gambler in the world's markets. If Lombard and Wall streets unite in making hard times for political purposes, then we necessarily have hard times. If they unite in saying good times, then we have good times. Good or bad times never affect the wage slave; it is always the same with him. He is always under the iron heel of competism and oppression, and will remain so until the end brings the destruction of the competitive system and wage slavery, and substitutes divine communism, which will inevitably accrue as the result of human progress regenerating from the implantation of the germ of righteousness when this age began. Mercury, the Divine Messenger.

The Girl and the Vala (No. 7).

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

THE Girl went eagerly to the trysting place beside the stream, and as she moved along the familiar path to the sweet familiar spot, each tree and branch and twig, each stone and flower, with silent voice called up the memory of words of wisdom there spoken, of images of truth there seen. The Vala awaited her beneath the Cedar, with outstretched hands and welcoming voice; but as the Girl seated herself at the feet of Wisdom, impetuously she began to speak.

"Ever since I saw you last, over and over in my mind have repeated themselves the words Shakespeare put into the mouth of Timon:

I'll example you with thievery:
The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
Robs the vast sea: the moon's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears: the earth's a thief,
And feeds and breeds by a composture stolen
From general excrement: each thing's a thief.

"Ay," said the Vala; and the ineffable repose of the assent at once relaxed the Girl's tension; and she smiled expectantly up into the face above her. "Until creation is completed in Shiloh, and the reign of white-winged peace extends through the universe, each thing's a thief; even God is under the curse while the work of creation is in progress. Then, as she saw the quick light of question spring to the Girl's eyes, she added, "But let this thought rest for the nonce. Today I shall tell you of Mercury."

Brightly the Girl smiled. "Ah, yes; let me hear the truth regarding that cunning, crafty one, who was so kindly and droll withal, that even when he cheated he charmed."

The Vala flashed a smile in answer; then spoke gravely. "Purblind modern thought, with its disdainful attitude towards ancient story, knows not the depth of wisdom sleeping here, ready to wake into myriad sparkles of light when touched by the hand of power; knows not the treasures crystallized here, ready to melt and pour forth streams of truth when touched by a breath from the heart of love. This all-experienced one, embracing in his mighty circuit Olympus, Earth, and Hades, mediator between gods and men, known to the Egyptians as Thoth, later to the Greeks in Egypt as Hermes Trismegistus, to the Romans as Terminus and again as Mercurius, was by the Greeks called Hermes, from the idea of a pillar or support; for he is that hero of John's revelation who becomes a pillar in the temple of God. And well indeed may he be named Trismegistus, for he is that thrice-greatest pillar of Beauty in the sanctum sanctorum of the Temple, the union in a third of all that is in the other two—the pillars of Strength and Wisdom.

This is the pillar of that Hiram who was arbiter between king Solomon and king Hiram of Tyre, the skilful Master-builder whose cunning craft could unite the wisdom of one with the power of the other to bring into being beauty; thus was he thrice-greatest. As messenger and plenipotentiary of the immortals, concerned in all alliances and treaties,—as the ancients represented Mercury,—and as protector of flocks and herds, is he that Shepherd of whom the majestic Hebrew Isaiah prophesied, who should perform all God's pleasure, that Messenger of the Covenant whom Malachi declared. Roman, Grecian, Egyptian, Hebrew story, all declare, all describe, this supremely attractive one. All point to and foreshadow what is a living reality in this hour."

"And do the symbols that represented Mercury, the stories told of his attainments and exploits, indicate the office of one who lives today?"

"They point to the climax of all attainment, that highest round of the ladder which reaches the key of the arch, or beginning, of creation. And from the key idea evolve and about it revolve all conceptions of Mercury's attributes, attainments, and exploits. The key is the power of locking and unlocking, binding and loosing; and he who possesses the essential key may have access to the arcana of ages, and the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places. From the Greek kleis, key, comes klepto, to steal, also klemma, another form of the same word, meaning a theft or thing stolen. This word, in its origin, did not necessarily express a discreditable action—being susceptible of antithetical application. It conveyed the idea of secret, concealed, or unobserved accomplishment. It is identical with the word kruptos, to cover, or hide, this change of I to r being not uncommon in the Greek. And you may know that there can be no dishonor in the word when applied in righteousness,—and Isaiah declares that in righteousness is this Shepherd, or Messenger, raised up-for it is the Hebrew equivalent of this word that Solomon uses when he declares, "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing." Its noun, secret, is used by David when praising the Lord for hiding in the secret of his presence, them that trust him.

"In the Greek tongue there are two words for the tortoise, the creature so closely associated with the Hermetic idea. One of these words is klemmus, from klemma, from klepto, to filch. The ancients rightfully conceived the tortoise to be the ultimate support of all creation; which conception the foolish modern mind, blinking in the present twilight that succeeds the mediaval night when men slept the sodden sleep of forgetfulness, has ignorantly distorted, and now scoffs at its own distortion while impudently imputing it to the ancients. Climax, the topmost round, or summit, of the ladder, has primarily the same significance. This also means the key, or pass,—supremely, the strait gate that leads to life. On an ancient coast was the Climax, a narrow strait where the mountains came down to the sea, impassable at times because of the pulsing tide; but he who marked well the time and manner of entering in, might safely pass through this strait gate. "The other word for the tortoise, in the Greek tongue, is chelus. It expresses in one word the union of Divine Principle with chaos, which they conceived to be the origin of the 'primal nature powers' from which all creation progresses. The word chelus is formed by dividing chaos, placing the letter Lambda, the symbol of the Almighty vitalizing power, in the middle of the word chaos, the change of vowels resulting naturally, according to the nature of these most fluent sounds, so readily flexed,-from the introduction of the new element. Originally they saw truly, those clear-eyed Hellenes, children of the sun! It is the introduction of the Deific element that conquers chaos and reduces it to order. This element divides chaos, becoming the cause and center of a vortex of opposing forces—a vortex of transmutation, which is creation. Thus it is that order is created out of chaos. Here is the highest application of the precept, Divide and conquer! And your English word tortoise, from the Latin torqueo, to twist, or vortex, expresses the same truth. Well does the animal thus named, for names as originally bestowed truly expressed attributes, symbolize the climax and support, the key-stone, of all creation!"

With absorbed interest the Girl heard, and by the light that entered her mind from the speaker's, readily understood; and saw how from a long use of words in their perverted sense, man was barred from reading aright the record of ancient lore.

"What meant Mercury's theft of the oxen? It was, as I remember, immediately after this theft that he prophesied the tortoise should sing for ages, and made the lyre by putting strings to its shell."

"Your question is fittingly placed," said the Vala: "and the truth may be clearer to your mind if today we eonfine our consideration to the Greek idea. Another day I shall re-enforce for you this same truth, by a view of it through the medium of the story of Thoththe Egyptian Mercury-who was identified with the dog-star, Sirius, and whose terrestrial symbol is the gazelle. Mercury stole the oxen of Admetus, you remember. The ox is the symbol of commercial liberty, -commerce being life,—and commercial liberty being the liberty, or power, to appropriate the products of life. Admetus is merely a poetic term meaning the unvoked, or unmarried, the unsubdued; and robbing Admetus of his oxen means depriving those not married, or bound, to God through Religion in which is the yoke of his Christ-of the liberty to longer appropriate -misappropriate, the products of life; and this applies in all domains. Adamant means the same as Adametus, and originally applied to the heart of stone possessed by those not yet subdued by the power of the His driving the oxen backwards into the cave, indicates a reversal of the method of commercial procedure. Thus he limits and dams back the wastes of unrighteous commercial indulgence in all domains. And even this is his office as the god of boundaries, the office of Hermes that was personified to the Romans in the god Terminus. And, Girl, as god of boundaries it is his office to determine and point out the limits and confines of the universe. And through this determination of the limits of the universe, he directs the confession by man of the humanity of God. The symbol of this confession is the harp, or lyre. Understanding what the tortoise is, you may see that the shell of the tortoise is the shell of the universe. To fix strings, or cords, to the shell is to determine the chord of arc from which is made evident to men the true limits of the universe; it is spanning the arch of creation. But this is a story in itself.'

"And Caduceus?"

"It is the same story; and, O Girl, a wonderful story! the reconciliation of the two serpents in Arcadia, the beginning! the reconciliation of external fact with eternal truth, and man, the maker of facts, with God, the Creator of Truth!"

And as she moved into the wood the Girl wondered over her last words, and could not understand; but rested in the thought that all would be made clear in future instruction.

In the Editorial Perspective.

IF EVIDENCES amount to anything, the end of the age is here! The evidences are unmistakably dotted here and there by dates of prophetic chronology; by the great dial of the physical heavens, the movement of the colure on the ecliptic in the precession of the equinoxes; the rapid acceleration of all the energies of humanity and of nature penciling toward the focal point of time, of location, and of man. The struggle of the people for liberty cannot last always—they must either perish in the conflict, or live in triumph over the various forms of oppression in the world. The hour of battle approaches, the most stupendous conflict the world has ever seen, involving greater numbers of mankind, the marshaling of a greater volume of forces than ever before. Light and darkness, truth and fallacy, good and evil, have moved along the planes of progression and metamorphosis for thousands of years, and now the mightiest revolution of the age is approaching. This is not a wild war cry, but the calm conclusion of Koreshan Science. The Founder of Koreshanity sounds the warning; he designates who, what, where, and when. Mark the prophecies; in future years the truthfulness of his statements will stand out in relief above the world's fallacies, and his voice will be sought and heard above the din and confusion of the battles of the revolution!

There is such a thing as the "new" astronomy, in the absence of sense enough on the part of its originators to name it anything else. People generally are not aware that gradually unfolding from the older phases of popular astronomy, come the new features of fallacy, known as the New Astronomy. It is a polite endeavor to get rid of the older absurdities of astronomy by the quiet substitution of new ones. The "new" astronomy discards all previous theories of gravitation, the laws of Kepler, the hypotheses of Herschel, and withal, the crude ideas of Copernicus. The idea is to make some new discoverers; too much honor has been given to the older astronomers who did not know, and now there must be room for the younger ones who do not know! The "new" astronomy embraces the astrophysics of Langley, Keeler, Burnham, and See. Now watch it: the fallacies of popular astronomy will change entirely, and thousands will never know the difference! But for THE FLAM-ING SWORD the world would never know that there is any other alternative but to accept the stuff the "scientific" world desires to give it. Koreshan Cosmogony is not patchwork, but a complete system in itself, the absolute antithesis of all modern scientific conclusions.

Typical of the modern conception of the moon, a great lunar model will soon be erected in Chicago. For years it has been stored away because of unpaid freight charges. It is a useless mass of plaster, decorated with little hills and undulations to suit the fancy of the modern astronomer. The hemisphere is about twenty feet in diameter, and is now placed on exhibition at the Columbian Field Museum at Chicago. The moon of modern astronomy is useless and dead, nothing but a burden to the earth,—like the model has proven to be to its originators, and fit only for exhibition. It is a monument of astronomical ignorance. It resembles the moon in appearance—to the "practiced eye;" but even the best of them have been fooled-would it not be scientifically amusing (as it is to us now!) if it should turn out that the so called protuberances on the moon are depressions? The moon is of some use; it possesses the same functions that it had trillions and trillions of ages ago-the same functions that it has had ever since, and will always have. The sun is electric, the moon is magnetic; the visible sun is projected from the center of the earth, the moon from the circumference, the concave shell.

As an example of the flagrant falsehoods which the daily newspapers invent, we refer to the report last week that the Spanish torpedo flotilla had arrived at Porto Rico, and was to be joined immediately by the two warships at Havana. It now turns out that the flotilla has beeen crippled by storm at the Cape Verde Islands off the west coast of Africa, and is no nearer Cuba than when the fleet left Spain. The people wondered at the quick trip of the flotilla across the Atlantic; they can now wonder at the quick time back again! The climax is reached in the "official" denial that the flotilla stopped on account of storm, and in the statement of the press that the flotilla is expected in the port in the West Indies in a few days.

Rev. Heber Newton says that he has no confidence in any faith which is not capable of a scientific basis. Of course, we agree with him, just taking the bare words that no religion is worth anything today that has not science as its foundation. But do you know what the reverend gentleman does? He makes the statement, and then undertakes to show the inquirer through a lot of scientific bosh! The religion that he has confidence in is "higher criticism," which is founded upon the rank fallacies of modern astronomy and chemistry. Koreshanity is founded upon Science—upon a science that is true. The fact is, that the Rev. Newton has no confidence in the religion that is founded upon demonstrated science.

Now that the Americo-Spanish war is so nearly a fact, especially since Spain has struck the first blow on the Maine, it is safe for astrologers to predict a little "brush" with Spain!

After they find out what parties are to be engaged on the problem, it is easy to hunt up constellations and planets to fit; but it is not quite so easy to take the planets and constellations and select the nations that are to be involved in the struggle that shall close the dispensation. Koreshan Astro-anthroposophy considers more scientific elements and factors in a single thought in its predictions, than are involved in so called astrology in a whole year's effort at prognostication.

The Sixteenth Page is now within the range of your perspective as well as ours—the transformation has been made. It will adorn the back page of The Flaming Sword permanently, to the consternation of many who would rather not see it at all! It is for you to look at this week; we do not want to spoil your ability to study it out by presenting an explanation of the details with its first appearance. In a future number we will explain a few of the principal features involved in the drawing. For the present it will explain itself. You can now have your say about it, and then we will have ours.

Some people are eager to have the government of the United States founded on the laws of Moses—that is, some laws of Moses. Perhaps the bare moral code, which the people do not understand, would be sufficient—not the laws governing land ownership, certainly. Under the Mosaic Theocracy, land contracts were disannulled every fifty years. This prevented the possibility of grabbing land through wholesale land grants by corporations, and of course such a scheme would not work today.

A priest in New York has advised the Catholics that in case of war in Spain they must take up arms against the United States for the Dons. The priest evidently thinks that it is time for the revival of Catholic cruelty through the nation that has proven itself to contain the most faithful following—Spain.

The "justice" of France now convicts itself. The Zola sentence cannot be executed because it is irregular and illegal. If it will turn its attention to the Dreyfus case once more, it will prove Zola's charges against the officers of the French army and government. The Franks are not frank enough!

It is said that "experience is a dear school, and fools will learn in no other." In that case, the Almighty must have been a fool, as well as everybody else, for the only way that we know of obtaining knowledge is by experience. That's learning that is learning; book learning is nonsense.

After the government of the United States has intervened to free Cuba from tyrant Spain, it should intervene to free its own citizens from the grasp of hunger and hard times. It may be more liberal abroad for show than to our own people in dire distress.

Should the Spanish-American "strained" relations result in actual war, thousands would find employment, fiat money would be put into circulation, and a general but transient stimulus of the commerce of the world would result.

One fourth of the inhabitants of Cuba are maintained by American charity. The United States will not permit Spain to continue the work that has made charitable distribution of food necessary.

This is a period of "prosperity" and plenty. There is a plentiful lack of employment for thousands of American citizens.

Happiness is like the will-o'-the-wisp: the closer you get to it, the farther it is away!

At the present time, the vitellus of the great egg of competition is in the yoke. Competition is a sell.

Interrogation Points and Other Punctuations.

Distance to Sun, and Moon's Phases.

Will you be kind enough to answer, in the next issue of THE FLAMING SWORD, for the benefit of a class of students deeply interested in the Koreshan Cosmogony, the following questions: (1) Copernican astronomers claim that the sun is nearer the earth in winter than in summer. Is this also according to the Koreshan System? (2) Please explain the Moon's Phases, new moon, first quarter, full moon, etc.—Class, Denver, Colo.

(1) The hypothesis of the old school astronomers, that the sun is 3,000,000 miles nearer the earth in our winter than in summer, is devised to explain the apparent increase in the diameter of the projected or visible sun in our winter. This is no proof that it is really nearer, for some other cause operates to increase the diameter of the disc-that of difference in temperature, and the difference in quality of energies generated in the central sun, which operate to produce the change of seasons. The visible sun being the image of the solar vortex, and not a solid body as is supposed, is subject to all the variations in size which the central solar sphere experiences. There is some difference in the distance to the visible sun, but no material difference. In the Koreshan Cosmogony, we calculate the vertical distance to the sun, from points on the earth directly beneath the visible projection, to be about 1,000 miles. The sun is nearer Chicago during our summer than it is when 47° further south, in our winter. (2) The real moon is the mineral and geologic strata of the earth, upon which the sun is constantly shining -covering one hemisphere at any given moment. The material crust of the earth has a corresponding sphere of force in the physical heavens, a little larger in diameter than the sea of hydrogen; this is the lunar sphere. It receives the lunar energies generated in the crust. This sphere has poles of force, the light pole of which is visible. The lunar sphere revolves in the heavens from west to east once in 27 days, and the appearance of the light pole to the eye at any point on the earth's surface, depends upon the relation the pole sustains to the light and dark hemispheres of the earth. When the moon is new, or nearly between us and the sun, it reflects dark rays, because it is on the light side of the earth—the same side as the sun. When the moon is full it reflects light rays, because it is on the dark side of the earth. The first and third quarters of the moon occupy positions midway between the lunar extremes. The surface of the visible moon in the sky is a picture of the outer surface of the outermost mineral stratum in the shell of the earth, modified by the X-ray impressions of all the substances above the outermost mineral stratum. The reflections are from the metallic mirrors. Please refer to page 16, for cuts showing position of the moon at third quarter—directly on the meridian at sunrise.

"Scientists" Won't Consider Our Facts.

(1) I am pretty certain that the earth has no diurnal nor annual motion, and I think the flat theory is more likely true than the concave. (2) You will never convince the world with short measurements, with little rods and stakes marked off by sixteenths of an inch. (3) Why don't you get a good telescope, mount it in Chicago, and focus it on St. Louis? You would have a concavity of seven or eight miles. (4) Get the editors of papers and faculty of the great University there, and let them see and believe and certify to the fact of the concavity, if it be a fact. I just make this as a suggestion.—J. A., Philadelphia, Pa.

(1) We are not merely pretty certain that the earth has no diurnal nor annual motion, but we know that it has not. The man who only half knows a thing, does not know it all surely. The way we know that the earth has no diurnal motion, is because we know that it is concave, and such a motion is not required to produce day and night. The rational mind will not remain satisfied with likelihoods; likelihoods are guesses; conclusions from known premises are absolute. (2) Who said that we would convince the world by such processes as you mention? We have never employed them. (3) The reason that we do not undertake such an experiment as you propose is, that we do only rational things—for the simple reason that we know that St. Louis can not be seen from Chicago, and could not from any kind of a surface one might imagine to exist between the two cities. Geolinear foreshortening and vertical perspective are factors to be taken into consideration in the study of visual phenomena. The very conditions which operate to prevent extended views over the earth's surface from low altitudes, prove the character of the surface on which we live. But what is the trouble with your mathematics? The real concavity between Chicago and St. Louis is only about 2 4 miles. (4) You should make these suggestions to the advocates of the flat theory as well. We have had years of experience in the matter of endeavoring to get "scientific" men to look at our facts. You think that every "scientific" man in the world would be willing and anxious to investigate actual facts and evidences offered in support of any new theory of science? If so, there is where you are mistaken. They won't do it, and it is impossible to persuade, force, or hire them to go into the field of observation of facts which overthrow the theories in which they are entrenched, and upon which their salaries depend.

Early Geodetic Operations.

(1) Refer to Draper's History of the Conflict between Religion and Science, page 109, and note the measurement of a degree of a great circle upon the earth, by Al-Mamun, in the interest of science and religion. Did not the great caliph, considering his limited means, come nearest establishing the globular form? (2) page 117 it states: "They understood the phenomena of reflection and refraction of Aheyen made the discovery of the curvilinear path of a ray of light through the atmosphere, and proved that we see the sun and moon before they have risen, and after they have set .- J. N., Minneapolis, Minn.

Thanks for the citation. Yes, Al-Mamun, the Arabian astronomer and caliph of Bagdad, came near the mark of the circumference of the arc he measured. Of course he did not determine, because he did not employ the methods involving the possibility of doing so, whether the arc is convex or concave. There are just as many degrees on the inside of a circle as there are outside. The only thing he did was to approximate the circumference of the arc. Of course, he contributed evidence of the globular form, but of the concave globular form. (2) Even today astronomers admit that light is not propagated in straight lines, at all times, except when this principle is used in the Koreshan Cosmogony to explain the phenomenon of the concave appearance of the convex heavens, the phenomena of sunrise and sunset, then they object. Admitting curvilineation of light, they make calculations of star distances from stellar parallax. If they should make a mistake of a thousandth part of a second of a degree, they say it would throw them out over 200,000,000,000,000 miles, and at the same time they know that refraction through the atmosphere displaces the stars a number of seconds of a degree. The chances for error are a million times greater than the accuracy of their instruments!

J. Isaac H., Winchester, Va.—We note the contents of your letter, and see a little misapprehension of our scientific System. The gold stratum of the earth is the outermost division of the metallic shell, about 100 miles below the surface. The gold in the earth accessible to man comes frome the sun instead of from the shell directly. We have shown repeatedly that gold can be manufactured from sea-water, and from the gold ether rays descending from the sun; this belongs to the department of Alchemy of the Koreshan System. The manufacture of gold will never help the world, except so far as to give temporary impetus to commerce, a stimulus; then destruction of the money power from depreciation of the commodity, or rather a destruction of the money trust. The Founder of the Koreshan System does not desire to contribute his knowledges of the laws of transmutation or his energies to any "settlement" of the money problem except the true one, the demonetization of gold and silver, and the recognition of labor as the only true and real capital of the world. The wonderful discoveries for the world's greatest benefit will be reserved until the establishment of the new order, when the application of the principles of good and truth will be made in every department of society and life.

Questions Are Welcome.

Everybody, Everywhere.-The Question department is proving interesting to all our readers. It has entertained many of you profitably, and will continue to do so. We devote this department to brief answers-just hints, so you will be enabled to think out matters for yourself mostly—that is, all the details, from the suggestions we give. We reply cordially, and you are all welcome to all that we can crowd into this department. So come on with your questions, and in turn your questions will receive attention. You have done well so far, and we think that we have pleased you. This is a question department that is a question department.

Anybody, Anywhere.—The Flaming Sword is progressive. From time to time we have added new features, and from time to time we shall continue to do so. If you do not continue to receive The Sword, you are likely to miss some important steps in Koreshan journalism—journalism that is journalism!

Mrs. O. M. C., San Francisco, Cal.—Your encouraging letter is appreciated. Glad to know of your continued interest, and of your desire to assist in the circulation of THE FLAMING SWORD. We will continue sending it to you, and will expect you to do what you can. Can you not obtain three or four subscribers this spring?

E. B., Salt Lake City, Utah.—Thanks for favor with $2 enclosed; the previous remittances you refer to were received. We noted your question in a previous letter, and we will take up the subject of ether vibrations, personal magnetism, etc., you suggest, in a future issue of The Sword.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

I am anxiously awaiting the New Geod-ESY you are preparing, and trust as soon as you have it ready you will send the six copies I ordered, without delay, as they will be of great assistance to me in spreading the light of truth. I have principals of schools and ministers of churches reading The Sword at this place. The new theory of the earth is being talked of on the streets and in public gatherings, and while many deny the truth, others are honestly seeking it. I am doing what I can to help them, and I need whatever assistance you can give me. Send me papers and tracts for distribution, and I will place them in the hands of those who are willing to learn the truth. There are many things in relation to Koreshan Science I wish to learn—thousands of questions I would like to ask, but I will be patient and learn as it comes to me through THE Sword and other sources until I can meet the Founder of the System. I feel drawn to him more and more every day.—N.C.M., Kingston, Tex.

The Flaming Sword as an Advertising Medium.

THE FLAMING SWORD, Chicago, is running an ad for the INDEX, and we are well pleased with results. We have received requests for our paper from nearly every state, as well as from Canada and England, on account of that same ad.—Osteopathic Index.

As for myself, I would pay $5 a year rather than be without The Sword. I look forward to the coming of each issue as a hungry man for a meal, and I am sorry when I have finished the paper. I like every feature of The Sword, and I only wish it contained 50 pages instead of 16. Oh, how I look to see that wonderful sixteenth page! The Sword is ever on the increase in interest, and each number is better than the preceding. No other paper like it in the world to me!—R. H. L., Malta Bend, Mo.

I prize The Flaming Sword more and more. I think you have indeed set the standard high, and last week's issue seemed to come up very nearly if not quite to the mark! I am waiting with what patience I may, to see the transformation of page sixteen. Indeed, I am in a state of expectancy from the time I finish one paper until I receive the next.—Mrs. M.B., New Castle, Pa.

THE FLAMING SWORD, the tree of knowledge of good and evil, is an ordained journal of God to lead the nations of the earth from error to holiness. The truth shall make us free—it is mighty and must prevail. THE FLAMING SWORD will have some hard battles to fight and win, and will be more than conqueror in the end.

—W. A., Turbotville, Pa.

I cannot too highly commend the series of articles issuing from the pen of Rev. E. M. Castle. Let the voice of the Vala be heard in our land until the deep mysteries of God are revealed to all. Her voice is music of such wonderfully refined and elevating tone that the alluring songs of the sirens are lost in harmony divine.—M. G. W., Terre Hill, Pa.

THE SWORD did not come in the morning mail as it usually does, and I am so disappointed; I can hardly wait from one week to another for it; it is my constant. companion and strength. I read it, every word, over and over again.—Mrs. E. G. R., Kalamazoo, Mich.

THE FLAMING SWORD is looked for eagerly each week; the last one was a marvelous eye-opener to me, especially the words from the pen of Koresh.—W. H. H., Hubbard, Minn.

Chat With Readers.

"Hastening to the Inevitable Vortex," from the pen of Koresh, raises the prophetic voice concerning the end of the age. The world pulsates rapidly under the stimulus of the war spirit, which will result in the creation of an anthropostic vortex preparatory to the destruction of the old order and the construction of the new. Dispensations begin and end through conflict of powers in the settlement of great issues. The greatest problem of all ages will find its actual solution in the greatest of all conflicts. Read also "All in the Interests of Peace," a lucid discussion of the Americo-Hispano-Cubana embroglio.

We want volunteers to assist in the circulation of THE FLAMING SWORD and the NEW GEODESY. The astronomical and geodetic work will soon be ready—thousands will be issued for the first edition, and they should go everywhere. The work is just the thing for circulation among your friends, and among all classes of thinkers. It will attract the school-boy, as well as the astronomer in the observatory! We want agents; our terms are liberal. We supply circulars, blanks, etc., free. Send now for a general outfit, so you will be prepared immediately after we are ready for vigorous work.

THE FLAMING SWORD has a circulation among progressive minds. We are exchanging advertisements with a number of Journals, and THE SWORD is being thoroughly advertised. Other papers are appreciating the benefit of THE SWORD advertising. We quote as follows from the Osteopathic Index, Ottawa, Kansas: "THE FLAMING SWORD, Chicago, is running an ad. for the Index, and we are pleased with results. We have received requests for our paper from nearly every state, as well as from Canada and England, from that same ad."

"Mercury, the Divine Messenger," the subject of conversation between the Girl and the Vala, is of special interest. Our readers are all pleased with this series of articles by Rev. E. M. Castle, and we have received a number of complimentary expressions concerning the character of her excellent productions. "The Girl and the Vala" has become a special and valuable feature of THE SWORD. There is nothing like it in any other journal; it is superior because it contains Truth, and it is not a whit behind in points of literary merit.

Ancient Peru. A Few Facts From History.

The whole territory of Peru was divided into three parts, one for the sun, another for the Incas, and the last for the people. The lands assigned to the Sun furnished a revenue to support the temples and costly ceremonials of the Peruvian worship. Those reserved for the Incas went to support the royal state as well as the numerous members of his household and his kindred, and supplied the various exigencies of the government. The remainder of the land was divided per capita among the people in equal shares.

It was provided by law that every Peruvian should marry at a certain age. When this event took place the community in which he lived furnished him with a dwelling. A lot of ground was then assigned to him sufficient for his own maintenance and that of his wife, an additional portion was granted for every child. The divisions were renewed every year, and the possessions of the tenant were increased or diminished according to the number of his family.

The territory was cultivated wholly by the people. The lands belonging to the Sun were first attended to. The people next tilled the lands of the old, of the sick, of the widow and orphan, and of soldiers engaged in actual service, in short, all that part of the community who from bodily infirmity or other cause, were unable to attend to their own concerns. They were then allowed to cultivate their own ground, each man for himself; but with the general obligation to assist his neighbor when any circumstance—the burden of a young and numerous family for example-might demand it. Lastly they cultivated the lands of the lncas, which was done with great ceremony by the whole population in a body. The different provinces furnished persons peculiarly suited to different employments. One district supplied those most skilled in working the mines, another the most curious workers in metals or in wood, etc., etc. The artisan was provided by the government with materials, and no one was required to give more than a stipulated portion of his time to the public service; he was then succeeded by another for a like torm. who were engaged in the employ of the government,—agricultural laborers as well, were maintained for the time at public expense. By this constant rotation of labor it was intended that no one should be overburdened and that each man should have time to provide for the demands of his own household.

The greater part of the produce and manufactures was stored in magazines scattered over the different provinces. These spacious buildings were constructed of stone.

By a wise regulation, any deficiency in the contributions of the Inca might be supplied from the granaries of the Sun. The providence of the government usually left a large surplus in the royal depositories which was removed to a third class of magazines whose design was to supply the people in seasons of scarcity and to furnish relief to individuals whom sickness or misfortune had reduced to poverty. These magazines were found by the Spaniards on their arrival to be stored with all the various products and manufactures of the country—with maize, cocoa, woolen and cotton stuffs of the finest quality, with vases and utensils of gold and silver and copper, in short with every article of luxury or use within the compass of Peruvian skill.

The Peruvians were without money and paid their taxes in labor.

Peru had no rich, no poor, and no mendicants were tolerated. When a man was reduced by misfortune to poverty the arm of the state was stretched out to minister to his relief; not the stinted relief of private charity, nor that which is doled out, drop by drop, from the frozen reservoirs of "the parish," but in a generous measure, bringing no humiliation to the object of it and placing him on a level with the rest of his countrymen.

No better government, in the opinion of the Spaniards who first visited the country, could have been devised.

The people were contented with their condition, and were free from vice. The whole population under the Incas was distinguished by sobriety and industry; robbery and theft were unknown, and there was not a prostitute in the country.—

The Common Origin of All Religions.

PART II. Continued from March 11.

IN DIRECT opposition to many who either classify themselves with the "higher critics" (?) or utterly renounce the Bible as of divine authenticity, we most emphatically champion the Scriptures of the Hebrew and the Christian as a marvel of consecution, consistency, beauty, and power, with an aggregation of evidence in support of their absolute correctness in every particular of their historical and prophetic records. Our conclusions respecting the reliability of the Scriptures are primarily derived from sources so incomparably beyond the ordinary human conception, as to preclude the possibility of a rational appeal to the unilluminated mind, and an acceptable hearing from such as predicate their convictions upon the basis of unwarrantable assumption.

Illumination, as we employ the term, means merely intellectual enlightenment, which involves two primal factors of mentality. The first is the amplification of mental power through experience, which may embrace many partial reincarnations, insuring a comprehensibility commensurate with environment; the second is the prediction of light rationally derived from an established scientific and universal premise. Illumination is primarily of the intellect, sinking into the will. It is exoteric and scientific. Inspiration is, per contra, primarily of the will, and may be either true or false according to environment. That which proceeds from the will is determined to be of the character of good or evil by the act of the intellectual principle, which is the light of reason; and there can be but one possible determinant and discriminator of the genuineness of this light, whether it be the light of God and heaven, or the light of satan and from the hells. This determinant is such a premise as to furnish the basis of a logical and comparative system as will preclude all uncertainty relative to the structure and function of the universe as an entirety. We have stated such a premise in the plumb-line or vertical. the right-angle line, the chord of arc, and the arc, any section of the earth's surface. In this we have thoroughly disproved the Copernican system of astronomy, and have thus eliminated the essential prop and pillar of the fallacious superstructure of infidelity and atheism, which finds at least one of its principal supports in this ridiculous conception of the dark or medieval ages. In our scientific demonstration of the Cellular Cosmogony, we have discovered an absolutely certain corroboration of the truth of the Bible. Upon this absolutism we affirm the divine authenticity of its origin. Hence we may take its statements, interpreted by the aid of scientific knowledge, as true in the absolute sense.

Conception, Birth, and Mission of the Lord Corroborative of the Doctrine of Evolution.

The most advanced thinkers of the age endorse the doctrine of evolution, as promulgated by its chief advocates. This doctrine embodies the assumption that from the lowest and most simple beginnings, development has progressed through successive stages from a homogeneous state of matter, through mineral, vegetable, and animal life, to the present structural character of the universe, which includes man in his existent form and function. While the Koreshan System of Science advocates the doctrine of evolution as co-ordinate with its accompanying involution, it is most emphatically opposed to the doctrine as set forth and advocated by the so called evolutionists of the times. The evolution of a child in its matrix depends not only upon the vitalized germ which was previously involved in the sperm and germ, but upon the structured organisms in which the beginnings were involuted, and also the structured organism in which the conception occurs and the gestation progresses.

Evolution and involution are co-ordinate processes in progress within the structural organism called the universe. These processes are merely those of perpetuity. The universe is a thing of life. Those parts usually denominated inorganic and non-vital sustain a living relation to the whole, which constitutes them essential atoms of the organic structure called the universe. Not an atom exists that is not susceptible to metamorphosis, and that is not endowed with some degree of life and that cannot be transformed from what is usually regarded inert and inorganic, to the most vital element and even the most vital principle of life. Every atom of matter can be converted to energy, and per contra. the substance of every energy can be and is converted to the substance of matter,—atomic, molecular, and organic, in that sense in which the term organic is commonly employed. "The cross of Christ" had its inception and possibility in this law of transmutation; the Lord's crucifixion on Calvary, while a fact, being but the symbol of the infiltration of the substance of the Lord's body, through the operation of the Holy Spirit. into the race receiving it, thus commingling with the spirit of a degenerate humanity. This union of the Holy Spirit with the degenerate spirit of men constituted the cross of Christ, represented by the crucifixion of the Lord on Calvary.

The Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, Came Into the World Through a Parthenogenetic Conception, Gestation, and Birth.

Evolutionists assume to trace the operations of the law of evolution, in its progress, to the present development of the human race. There are no evidences conspiring to show any progress of the race, spiritually, morally, intellectually, physically, or mechanically, within historical periods. Admitting the records to be authentic, the beginning of the dispensation was characterized by preternatural phenomena; but these signs even, were not new, though specifically related to the time and people, and appearing to them as wonderful. They are now regarded as miraculous,—the term being employed contrary to its real significance, namely, astonishing. Every miracle (wonder) was the result of psychic laws unknown to the common people,—those not subject to direct psychic influence,—but produced by the operation of soul forces coming more directly into the field of matter, where all psychic phenomena are realized.

If we pluck an apple from a tree and open it, we find

* *

Reproduction or regeneration pertains first to the Son of God himself, who contained the Christ germs, the germs of the anointed. These germs were transmitted that the seeds which are almost white in an unripe apple, are dark brown in the ripe one. We say the fruit is ripe, and that because it is ripe, the seed, when subjected to the forces of its development, will cause its germination. We may know that the fruit is ripe, from the fact that its seeds will reproduce. A certain attention to soil and selection of buds and methods of budding, may induce the utmost perfection of any given apple; but no kind of horticulture can cause the pound-sweet apple to be anything more than an apple of its particular kind and quality. The human body has the power, through its seed, to reproduce another human body. Some mentalities are superior to others, as well as some physiques; but they are human both in mentality and physical development. We know the man is ripe, from the fact that his seed is ripe and he can reproduce his kind. His evolution is complete. There is no possibility of improving beyond a certain limit, except through the introduction of another and higher principle.

If we take a few so called chemical elements and "compound" them by chemical union, we may produce a certain substance—H₂O in the production of water, or H₂SO₄. in sulphuric acid. In either case, if we wish to effect a higher chemical (alchemical) combination, we disintegrate either compound (so called) by the introduction of other elements, through which a new and higher development is reached. What is true in the field called chemistry, is also true in the field of organic life. In the beginning of the age the world, through the Jewish race, had attained to a certain degree of development,—the highest spiritual state yet attained by any people on the face of the earth,—and the highest stage possible to reach except through the introduction of a higher element. The laws governing the progressive stages of alchemical combination and progress, govern the progress of the higher and organic alchemical compound, the human organism. The world must progress, therefore a new element is found and introduced, but introduced just as the new alchemical element is infiltrated to produce an advanced degree of alchemic progress.

By the foregoing consideration, we are brought to the analysis of the character of the Lord's conception, gestation, and birth. According to the Scriptural declaration, the Lord's conception was purely pneumic. The vivifying principle proceeded from the mind of Joseph unconsciously to himself. The gestation was natural, and his birth was from the virgin. Parthenogenesis has its most absolute portrayal, as a factor, in the progressive evolution and involution of being, in this supreme instance of the parthenogenetic law. Joseph, the husband of Mary, was the pneumic channel of vitalization. While the germ was perfect, combining in its form the binne character of the cell or ovum, it would have remained sterile but for the overshadowing of the Spirit, which came unconsciously from the mind of Joseph.

by the operation of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit contained them, and was the medium or conduit of inspiration.

On the Point of the Sword.

WE ARE accused by our enemies of wearing spotless linen. We plead guilty to the charge of wearing linen as spotless as can be provided—and at the same time we are working night and day to so shape human affairs as to provide immaculate linen for the millions of earth's downtrodden to wear. "Fine linen is the righteousness of saints,"—so says the Scripture; hence, as fine and spotless linen is the symbol of righteousness, we urge conditions which will provide not only for the adoption by the world, of the symbol, but also of the life which the symbol portrays. Koreshanity offers the only possibility of the revolution upon which depends the kingdom of righteousness, the clothing of divine truth and good, to be adopted by the world when the Lord Christ shall have arisen in the people of regeneration, soon to appear as the firstfruits of the resurrection of the dead.

The resurrection of the dead is the coming of the fruit of regeneration, the fruit being the sons of God, reproduced from the Son of God, who was planted in the church for the purpose of multiplying the sons of God. The seed was planted in the beginning of the age, and the fruit will come in the end of the age. The fruit when fully matured will constitute the divine government, but the ripening of the fruit will depend upon another baptism, which will be effected through the theorems of the Messenger of the Covenant.

If there be any foundation for the account of man's fall, and though that account is spiritual and symbolical, (having an interior and higher significance than the one usually ascribed to it), it still has a natural meaning, and pertains to man's condition as under the bondage of excessive labor for that which, under the proper relations of society, would be within the reach of all with comparatively little mental and physical effort and strain.

Governments and churches contain within themselves the forces of their own disintegration, and must crumble to decay through the inherent injustice actuating both. They will give way to a new organic unity, to succeed the old as the government of divine equity, thereby fulfilling the expectations of the race.

The love of use to the neighbor has become subverted, and the wisdom which before directed love circumspectly, has become the subtlety which directs the performance of use to selfish ends. The legitimate design of use is frustrated, until it has become a prostituted or subverted performance, which is drudgery.

From certain standpoints, there are wrongs to be righted. From the standpoint of progressive evolution, every apparent wrong will be righted by either pacific or tumultuous revolution when the time comes for such regulation.

We can only walk uprightly as we walk in the light. The walk is the life, and the light is the guide to that life.

The specific gravity of every substance indicates its normal deposition in space.

The Waters of Strife.

The Girl and the Vala (No. 8).

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

STONE bearing the similitude of a broken column stands near the margin of the stream. Here leans the Girl, her right arm supported by the column, her left hand resting on a vase beside her. Before her is an open book, but it claims her attention less than what she holds in her right hand,—a curious sprig of green. She thinks of all she has heard from the Vala, and knows the delightful quivering of growth, and the expanding joy of anticipation for what she is to hear. As she regards the green sprig, vaguely does it seem to recall some long-forgotten experience; and suddenly she is touched with that elusive memory—so strange, so sad, so precious in its fleeting whelm—of a life separated from the present by a dark abyss, a life connected with the present by rings falling each from each to form a chain that spans the abyss, the latest link of which is the cycle of today, but the earliest link of which is beyond mortal ken. And now, as she gazes at the green, a woeful sense of separation from something she may not remember, for a reason she may not revive, overwhelms her with a wordless remorse, and her heart, as though struck by a magic wand, swells with the strangely sweet pain of contrition, and tears well to her eyes and drop upon the stone. The shadow of the cedar rests upon her. But look! Is it really a shadow behind her? Or is it not, rather, a winged figure with scythe upon shoulder and hands entwined in the ringlets of her hair?

The Vala's voice breaks upon the weeping Girl. "Let me tell you of Niobe who wept herself into stone." As she spoke, her divine smile shed a radiance about, and the shadow departed.

The Girl raised her eyes to that surpassing face and said simply, "Tell me of Caduceus; for I know that this is the wand of wands."

"Ay; and of wonders," returned the Vala. "It was the prophetic touch of this wand on your heart that caused your tears. But if you know that the Chaldean Mercury was Nebo, and that Niobe was so called from a radical identity therewith, you will perhaps understand my offer to tell you the story of Niobe, though I promised that of Caduceus."

The Girl's eyes grew deep with awe, while anxious furrows showed themselves; and she said, "But how shall I understand? Your words are beyond my power to fathom."

"Though I bear you into deep waters struggle not; for the arms of my wisdom shall uphold you, till at length you learn to rule the depths."

The Girl became serene,—her brow unbent, her pulse quieted.

"Every mount where a mediator between God and man has testified—whether Nebo, or Carmel, or Calvary, —every prophet whose voice has sounded in the ears of the world, pleading God's cause for man's sake and man's cause for God's sake, every triumph of man over the foe in his own heart, every transformation of darkness to light and of evil to good, every aspiration that rises from the depths, every blessing that descends from on high, tells the story of Caduceus. It means to the world what Kadesh meant to the children of Israel,—Kadesh, where they strove with the Lord, where they wept for their rebellion against the Lord, where the Lord was sanctified in them.

"As the hour approaches for the final strife that ushers in the promised peace to earth, God's Prophet (nabi, in the Hebrew tongue) manifests as the Cloud which presages the outpour of the water of life, that quickens creation. This Cloud is the settling down of Jehovah in humanity—the cloud of witness, the guiding pillar (Hermes), the Shekinah that rests between the Cherubim. He is the Nebula, or Cloud, from which proceeds the formal creation! And the precipitation of water from this Cloud is the descending whirl of God's judgment in that final-that primal catastrophe that destroys the old, that strikes life into the new. This is the wonder of the wand Caduceus, which means to fall as water!" Very softly she added, "Here, also, is the mystery of Niobe. Ah, Girl, how much would I give unto you to know, were you but fitted to receive!" Then with ineffable patience, "But you grow and I wait upon your expanding capacity."

She paused as though considering what treasures from her wealth of lore she might bestow.

"In the human brain is all things—it is the involution of the universe, with all its forms and all its powers, and here in endless repetition operate the laws that the history of the world exemplifies, that the legends of the world express in beauty. Niobe, the melting mother, the pia mater, is here, and ever do her tears of contrition fall, and ever is generated at the same time, by the same process of contrition—rubbing together, grinding—the spirit of contrition that passes directly to the heart of stone, where, meeting an opposite force, it is deposited as the substance of that stone. Verily Niobe weeps herself to stone. This crystal heart is the White Stone, and its melting is the removal of the heart of stone, by transformation to the heart of flesh. The name written in this stone is the new name of the Prophet who in this day is the Herald of judgment. From the words of his mouth do those who hear—few are they yet, though many shall they be—begin to realize their rebellion against God, and separation from him, which realization is the mourning foretold of old. He is the promised Sign."

"This is the Herald who has Caduceus?"

"This is the Herald; and his wand, or staff, is his power to guide, to warn—that is, to demonstrate."

"To demonstrate what?"

"To demonstrate the central truth of all truth! the Philosopher's Stone!—the truth and law of immortality!—the truth that mortal is transformed to immortal!—the truth that man may become God!—the truth that perfect man is perfect God!"

"What is the demonstration?"

"To the circumferential humanity, it is the proof of his understanding of the most external form of God's expression. Thus he probes the inflated fallacies of the wise and makes their knowledge foolishness. chords of arc that demonstrate the concavity of the earth's habitable surface, proving the universe a cell which may exist forever through processes of transmutation between center and circumference, are the strings Mercury fixed to the shell of the tortoise to form the lyre, or harp. The harp is the confession of the divine human, and this demonstration of the form of the universe causes earth to confess to the divine character of him who determines it. But in the supreme sense, this confession of the divine human is the standing forth of man as the perfected image of God-the temple or house of God. This is accomplished by application of the laws of immortality to transmute corruption to incorruptibility—the mortal structure to the immortal one. His knowledge of the laws of transmutation is grounded in his knowledge of the form and function of the physical universe. In this supreme process of transmutation is produced the water of life, which precipitates as the catastrophe of judgment. This water of life is the truth, which, received by man, causes him to strive with final effort toward the goal of supreme attainment. Its reactionary effect is the strife of all the forces of evil to accomplish their own destruction.

"The waters of strife!" exclaimed the Girl.

The Vala concluded. "Just as the fact that man dies, fights against the truth that man may live, so are all the facts of external existence arrayed against the truth the Prophet brings. Fact is fighting for the existence of fiction. But the rod of demonstration is cast down, and truth and fact twine about it in final accord, and no more may fiction rule in the external world, until, in some far future day, the two serpents again separate. This is Caduceus."

As the Vala was moving away, she paused, and turning, said as though in afterthought, "The sprig of cassia in your hand is emblem of that one of Niobe's twelve children who is alive and remains—Chloris, the green one—the resurrection ignized by Heartsease, the Symbol of Divine Consciousness.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

The interior thought of God, from which originate all other thoughts, is the mystery of being. To know the source, destiny, and purpose of existence, to attain to possibilities hitherto supposed to be beyond the ken of mental perspective, to be impulsed with the prescient discernment of divine potentiality,—all these are set forth in the colors and fragrance of the violet, the parent of the pansy.—KORESH.

Omnipotence is the complete subjugation of the desires by the intellect.—Koresh.

IT CHANCED one day, if chance there be, that the Divine Love, who is also Light, in whom the two in just proportions blent, assure the self renewel of creative impulse, asked of the bright ones who surround his throne like blazing stars: "What symbol of my being, knowest thou, has found expression in the outer world?"

The quire of young-eyed scraphs that attendant wait in blissful adoration at his feet, made swift reply: "All things, O First One, are instinct with Thee. Thy breath inspires to rapture all that lives, throbs in the mighty pulse-beat of the world, and mounting to the skies, kindles the torches of the stars that circle rhythmically about one centre."

"This know I, but what special token speaks to man the mystery he shall one day fathom?"

"The sun, O Light Divine, that central radiance whose golden beams spread warmth and gladness, fructify the earth and recreate all nature."

Another said: "O Mighty Hero, is not the hidden secret of thy sevenfold nature, best imaged in the bright iridescence of the arch prismatic? Does not the rainbow as it spans the sky, reveal thyself?"

"Tis true," He answered, "and right well I find my being imaged in them both, yet will I grant to man some lesser though diviner symbol of my inmost thought where seraphs seek, but seek in vain to peer. Let it denote the love that led by wisdom means content."

So spake the All-Good, and on earth a flower appeared, its colors blended of celestial love,—the pure, ethereal essence of the spectrum, violet hued, and golden truth. Men called it Heartsease, but knew not its message nor perceived that heartsease blooms in earth as sign and token of the consciousness divine where wisdom guides desire,—nay more, that God's omnipotence itself, is but the will in thrall to reason.

The air was chill, but not unpleasantly harsh. A light snow fallen the night previous, frosted the ground and gleamed from the roofs. Scintillating particles like stardust floated in the atmosphere through which the morning sunbeams filtered slowly in a pale, wintry haze that softened the black curves of the leafless branches and invested the tall, dingy warehouses and shops with a glamour of remoteness and unreality. It was a touch of nature's poetry, magically transforming familiar scenes. The streets and avenues looked strange to the pedestrians who trod them daily.

Between two rows of trees that bordered on both sides the avenue Lachene, a woman was swiftly passing. She did not look up to the brown network of interlacing boughs, letting her glance follow the snow as it climbed along the windward side of the trunks, filling every interstice of the bark and accumulating in the hollow of the branches. She was gazing straight down the long vista so green and beautiful in summer, picturesque even in the bare desolation of winter with the highlights furnished by the snow.

Her eyes looked strained and eager, their brilliant depths lighted up by the fire of intense thought. A red flush of excitement burned on either cheek, rendering her unconsciously but superbly beautiful. She was enveloped in a cloak of some rich dark fur with a thick, fluffy border that rose high about her slender throat and half concealed a loose knot of waving hair that caught the light in warm red gleams like burnished copper. A little cluster of heartsease carelessly fastened to her cloak in front, peeped out beneath the fur.

In the throes of some inward conflict, she heeded not the curious or admiring glances of the pedestrians. Her soul was torn by contending forces, and the flood-tide of mighty passion threatened to sweep away every barrier that confined its swelling waves.

At the end of that avenue, a carriage was waiting. If she persisted in meeting it, if she suffered it to convey her to the place of appointment, all her past life was effaced in a moment, her destiny fixed by immutable choice. Could she do it? Had she not already promised? Then all the days of the years she had known, with all they held of sweet and childish happiness, of tender, girlish memories, rose up imploring her to stay, to turn back, to pause ere she flung away in the mad impulse that throttled reason, every tie of duty, interest, and affection, her honor and the clinging arms of little children.

But the force that impelled her—she called it love, she knew no better—was strong and cruel as death and the grave whither the roots of passion strike down; they grow deep.

"Your flowers, lady!" cried a low, timid voice, and startled by the words that suddenly recalled her to the world outside herself, she glanced down at the child who held up the knot of heartsease that in her haste and agitation had slipped from her bosom unnoticed.

Thanking the child with a forced smile, she replaced the flowers mechanically, but in so doing, the significance of the omen flashed across her like a lightning gleam of truth irradiating the murky darkness of her stormy consciousness. Heartsease! It was her own peculiar and chosen flower, whose delicate perfume clung ever about her. Why, at that moment should it slip from her bosom, if not to warn her that adown the path she was treading, its fragrant blossoms could never expand?

She faltered, half turned and was on the point of retreating when a few paces further, at the end of the avenue where the waiting carriage was now plainly visible, she espied a well known figure hastening toward her. In an instant, at a single glance, passion triumphed and she ran forward, oblivious to every thought but one. As she brushed against him to enter the carriage, a little knot of flowers dropped to the ground and a beggar child who was passing, snatched them up and pinned them gleefully to the bodice of her ragged frock. The divine symbol found a new resting place; it bides not in the heart that owns the sway of impulse.

In the Editorial Perspective.

HE PRESIDENT of the United States has about exhausted the patience of the American people. He has allowed himself to be tricked time and again by Spanish diplomacy, through the insincere offers of autonomy, cessation of hostilities without granting Cuban insurgents that which they are determined to have-independence. At the same time Spain made the last offer of peace, 6,000 Spanish soldiers left Cadiz for the Canary Islands! McKinley has put off Congress on the plea of peace, mercy, and time for negotiations, until now Congress threatens to ignore the President and declare war at once. There is not a single humanitarian principle nor law of justice that the President has considered apart from the advice or the demand of Wall street. The message sent to Congress this week is, without doubt, the weakest document that ever emanated from the Executive Mansion. Disappointment is felt throughout the nation; we could expect nothing else so long as the matter is retained in the hands of the President. It now rests with Congress to fix the punishment of Spain for her red-handed crimes against the American nation and the world. At this writing they seem to have pluck enough to precipitate war and to drive the Spaniards from the island of Cuba.

Pick up a copy of THE FLAMING SWORD and read a paragraph, and the nexclaim that you cannot understand what we are driving at! A schoolboy takes up his morning lesson and complains that it is too hard for him; in the neighboring seat is one who has mental acumen enough to master what the other has not the ability to attack. We are not attempting to explain the entire System in THE FLAMING SWORD; but to call attention to a few principles to attract attention of the progressive reader to further study and investigation. When THE FLAMING SWORD gains its point by impressing a mind with the necessity of studying the Koreshan System, the fact speaks well for the mind so impressed. We are after those who desire the truth, and who will follow up a line of systematic study, not only of its premise, but of all the factors in the train of logic. Without a little mental application to begin with, you might as well let it alone! We do not want you if you cannot and will not think. Candidly, we think it is quite an unmanly confession to enter the complaint that you cannot understand our language, nor obtain a clue as to what our System is for; such a complaint is unworthy even of a child!

The ballot is not a factor of reform; people vote to create or permit all of the social, financial, and political evils of modern times-trusts, monopolies, banks, and all others throughout the category. After all the talk about reform, Koreshan Science reveals that reform must begin in the mind—it must begin in the destruction of the love of money, the root of all evil. Any reform instituted on the basis of ignorance of the fundamental factors of true reformation, at the knowledge of where it begins, what is its object, what it will accomplish, and what will be the results, is a humbug. If there is anybody who can see through the whole problem of reform from beginning to end, and get up a system covering more ground than Koreshan Science, let them hold up their hands, or forever afterward hold their peace!

It has been thought that capital is money. Men in possession of large sums of money are called capitalists. The man who understands or operates machinery is a machinist, and the men who create capital are the true capitalists. The producers of the world are the capitalists; the men who control that capital are the parasites—the thieves and robbers of the people's wealth. Even Baron Rothschild has sense enough to see this, although hundreds of editors at their desks make claims for the millionaires that they do not make themselves. Baron Rothschild has recently uttered a truth, derived more or less directly from the teachings of Koresh. He said: "Capital-there is no capital but labor!"

Reformers are confronted with the palpable stubbornness and selfishness of humanity. With the mind of man in its present state, there can be no successful universal co-operation. Selfishness is so deeply rooted in the mind and heart of man as to render harmony of effort in the direction of genuine reform impossible. The man who is able to infuse into a following the actual substance of his spirit, soul, and body, will be able thereby to actually build an organic system of human society in accordance with the laws of human and divine physiology. There must first obtain a radical change in the mind of man, and this necessitates a radical anatomical transformation of the brain.

Up is opposite to down, and up means something. It is direction, and there is a limit to it. Up is toward the suntoward the center. Everything, therefore, is directly "under the sun." The earth all around is about equidistant from the central sun; the planes of materialization of solar energies comprise the earth's shell. Gravic rays descend from the sun, levic rays ascend to it. There is but one center of gravity and one circumference in the Cellular Universe. There would be no sense to a universe arranged on any other plan than that of a cell.

KORESH is honest enough to declare the truth, and to declare it emphatically. We have no confidence in a "system" that has been guessed at, and the time is coming when the people will join us in denouncing systems of so called religion and science put forth in the world as merely probable. The so called teachers of the world are still too timid to say emphatically that their teachings are absolutely true.

If it were possible for all of the hypothetical social, scientific, and religious schemes to be true, we would not object. They cannot all be true, and we are just frank enough to say that we are exceedingly dubious of any system whose originator is too timid to say that he knows exactly what he is talking about, or too cowardly to acknowledge that he does not know absolutely that he is right!

What would you think of a man who, after half learning his first lesson in mathematics, should declare that he understood the whole system, and that he would disprove its accuracy by putting two or three figures together? He would be a fool! Just like some people who misconceive a single principle of Koreshan Science, and then jump around with a straw, attempting to overthrow it!

Superior mental force is supreme only when in conjunction with a corresponding or correlate body. The perfect mind must therefore reside in the perfect man. The Founder of the primitive Christian System was such a man in such a body—the immortal structure. The orthodox idea about God in the sky is the sheerest nonsense.

A government that is divorced from the true religion is divorced from the power to govern the people from the pivot of absolute justice and moral integrity. The true religion rather involves the sphere and function of external government, the laws of which proceed from the central mind, which is denominated the mind of Deity.

It has required years and years for the average mind to become more or less familiar with the lines of current thought in science, theology, and social reform. Do not suppose that you can get a clear insight into the Koreshan System of Universology by looking over a copy or two of The Flaming Sword!

The character of objections urged against the Koreshan System enables us to measure just the distance the objectors are behind us in the path of progress, or how far they have gone the other way! Between us and some of our objectors, critics, and persecutors, there is certainly an awful chasm!

Many a Christian reads right over the statement that "the love of money is the root of all evil," and fails to reach the conclusion that a government ruled and controlled by the money power partakes of the character of the central desire of its people.

The "infallible" Catholic church now accepts as true the scientific fallacies it condemned 250 years ago—radical change in the church, you know. If it was right then in its attitude toward Copernicus and Galileo, it is wrong now!

The more righteous the lawmakers the more just the government. This is why we insist that the true government must derive its power from the source of absolute integrity. The absolutely just and equitable government is the Theocracy.

This is a truth that cannot be denied: The cause that produces the universe is the only source of true government of the universe. There is no true government that does not receive its power from the source of all things.

Freedom of the world from its present forms of oppression resides in the union of church and state—in the establishment of the genuine Theocracy, the government of the world from the actual source of all knowledge and life.

We have heard the expression, "As easy to demolish as a card house." Card houses have passed beyond the stage of toy-hood, and now become a feature in the great $50,000,000 paper trust. Not so easy to demolish now.

The true backbone of a nation does not consist in the money power. Some governments have weak spinal columns, but inflexible externals, rendered so through abnormal ossification.

The Almighty has no power apart from physical existence. His highest degree of potentiality is at the point of conjunction of spirit and matter.

Reformation in the abstract is no reformation at all; reform journals are full of this kind of reformation.

The postulates of Koreshan Science are live wires that ungloved hands are cautious enough to let alone!

Interrogation Points and Other Punctuations.

Reincarnation in the Concave Cell.

(1) If we are inside a universe that has existed from eternity, only 8,000 miles in diameter, and man has been increasing in numbers for all time, and will finally be reincarnated, will not such a limited universe be a little crowded, even though the generation should stop now? (2) There seems to be no limit to the numbers of any kind of beings that may be born by the union of sexes. Is there a limit?—D. E. S., Santa Ana, Cal.

(1) The habitable surface of the concave earth has an area of about 268,074,600,000 square miles, and according to our calculation, if the earth were a convex body 8,000 miles in diameter, it would have a convex surface of about the same area. If impossible to get them all in the earth, we do not see how it would be possible to stick them on the outside! In the physical universe there is a complete system of reciprocity or interdependence between the center and circumference of the great cell. Energies from the sun are continually being materialized at the circumference, and millions of atoms are constantly being formed, and yet the earth does not become full, because there is a corresponding decomposition going on continually in the earth's shell, through which energies are generated which supply the sun with fuel. The energies or spirits of the sun are thus continually finding re-embodiment in material atoms. There is no more nor no less of the universe now than there was trillions of ages ago. The fact that people have been generated for millions and millions of ages in the past in the concave earth without running it over, is proof that continued generation will not exceed the demands of existence. Do not imagine that the dead for all past are held some place, and are coming back some time and live in the earth. All of human life there ever was or ever will be is in the earth now. The vegetable kingdom perpetuates itself; all of the vegetable life there is in existence, or that is possible to exist, is expressed in one season of vegetable growth. All of the wheat in the world is growing in a single season, or being appropriated or reserved for appropriation into a higher kingdom. Men are produced from mind, through mental and physiological functions; they enter mental spheres at corruptible dissolution. (2) Man has segregated almost to the limit. This has been the age of prolification, or increase. There will now come a conservation of the energies of life, and the hapless generation of human kind will cease when the world understands the laws of life. As numbers have increased during the past few thousand years, the quality of life has deteriorated. With development into superior quality of life on all planes, the numbers will again be reduced.

The Terminology of Koreshan Science.

- (1) The language used in the Koreshan literature is above the comprehension of people of average intelligence; if you have the truth, you should put it in language that I can understand. (2) THE FLAMING SWORD criticises everthing that is not Koreshan—as though no one else is right but Koreshans. (3) The shell of the earth may be 100 miles in thickness and composed of just the substances Koreshan Science claims, but you do not prove it; it is only theory. All you can know, is just how far down people have gone.—Objector.
- (1) It was no fault of Jesus that people could not understand what he taught. Even those associated with him for years did not understand his purpose fully until he infused the substance of his own spirit, soul, and body into them after his translation or theocrasis. When he spoke in parables, it was not to reveal but to conceal the truth from the masses-those who would not understand. Koresh has not undertaken to teach the world at large; he is educating a class of minds that have advanced far enough to understand the System as he presents it. At the present time he can use no others, and wants only those who are able to comprehend the Sys. tem scientifically presented. The time is coming when the knowledge of the truth will be let down to the comprehension of the simplest. At the present time, it is quite a recommendation of Koreshan Science for the objector to admit its profundity and to acknowledge his ignorance as well as the ignorance of the masses! (2) When the Founder of Koreshan Science demonstrates the premise of the System to be true, he overthrows all other theories and so called systems of thought in the world. In proving the earth to be concave and establishing the Koreshan Theology, he proves that no more dense ignorance can be imagined than the Copernican system of astronomy and the theology of the modern church. Do you think that others can be right, in the face of the evidence that we are right? From the standpoint of demonstrated premise, THE FLAMING SWORD possesses the ability as well as the exclusive right to criticise everything else, and purposes to exercise that right! Would you rather have men guess at a thing and undertake to teach it, than to know it, and say so? (3) It matters not to us if the mind of the majority cannot sufficiently grasp the fundamentals of the Koreshan System to follow logic to rational conclusions concerning the simplest facts of cosmogony, alchemy, theology, and social science. We venture the assertion that you accept as true, the teachings of modern astronomy that the earth is filled with molten matter, and have never asked a single "scientist" in the world for proof of his assertions. Take your own medicine, and reject everything that modern astronomers do not know positively, and see how much of their theories you will have left!

The Aurora Borealis.

- (1) When were the northern lights first discovered, (2) and what is the generally accepted reason for their existence? (3) Also, what explanation do you give?—E. M., Swaburg, Neb.
- (1) The northern lights were observed by the ancients. History records remarkable displays in 502, 688, 1097, and 1117 A.D. Books published in London in the sixteenth century contained descriptions of the phenomena, and Gassendi, Halley, and other astronomers of the past referred to them. Angstrom made the first specific analysis of the auroral spectra. (2) There is no settled opinion among so called scientific men as to the nature or the cause of the auroræ; some claim that they are electrical displays, others that they are the result of metallic or meteoric dust coming in contact with atmosphere outside a convex globe, and rendered luminous by friction. The altitudes of the aurora increase the mystery in the minds of astronomers. They are calculated to be from 200 to 1,000 miles altitude, admittedly within the atmosphere. This is in accordance with the demonstrations of Koreshan Science that the atmosphere is 1,000 miles in depth. The auroræ were first seen in America about 100 years ago. Activity of the northern auroral zone centers now about the American magnetic center, instead of the European, 90° east from Hudson's Bay. (3) The auroral pulsations are manifestations of currents of electro-magnetism, streaming from a zone in the concave earth to points in the physical heavens. The coronal points are seen at such altitudes as would make their display impossible on a convex surface, surrounded by an atmosphere only 50 miles deep.

The Only System of Universology.

- (1) I should like to see a copy of THE FLAMING SWORD, as per your advertisement in the Free Man. (2) Does your Universology, to which you refer, have any connection with the teachings of the late Stephen Pearl Andrews?—E. G. B., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- (1) We mail you sample copy of THE Sword as you request, and trust that it may interest you as it does others. (2) The Koreshan System of Universology has no relation whatever to the theories of Stephen Pearl Andrews, except in so far as he copied from the teachings of KORESH. The Koreshan System was founded and its terminology and nomenclature were in use long before the Founder of the System was aware of the existence of Stephen Pearl Andrews. The system of "universology" which he put forth, is the exact antithet of the Koreshan Universology; it dealt wholly in abstractions and hypotheses, while the Koreshan System pursues the opposite course, and premises its conclusions upon known facts, making it a practical and scientific system instead of a mass of hypothetical abstractions. If you know anything about his system, you can readily perceive the difference between it and the Koreshan System of Universology, embracing the science of religion, cosmogony or astronomy, biology, alchemy, social economy, and other departments of knowledge of the universe.

W. B., Liverpool, Eng.-We send you THE SWORD as you request; also papers containing accounts of our Geodetic Survey on the Florida coast, which will prove interesting to you. We remember you as being interested in the work of Parallax; we are thoroughly familiar with his work and theory, and with the difficulties which confront his followers in the belief that the earth's surface is flat. The Koreshan System accounts for all his observations. Our Scientific Staff conducted experiments and observations which involved principles that were overlooked by Parallax; the facts we obtained demonstrate the earth's concave form.

W. H. C., Liverpool, Eng.—We mail to you literature regarding the Cellular Cosmogony as per your request, and also sample copies of The Flaming Sword. We note your interest in facts which overthrow the Copernican system of astronomy. When the New Geodesy is ready we will mail you a copy for your study; it contains proofs and demonstrations of the fact of the earth's concavity, in refutation of both the convex and the flat theories. Shall be glad to answer your questions.

The Race for the $10,000.

With his Tires Punctured, Mr. Blodgett Concludes to Sit and Wait for Repairs.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—It is all right for you to laugh while you can, but the laugh you think you have against me has no significance. Sometimes it is a very easy matter to mistake what is intended as a comma for a period; and besides, I acknowledge that so far as that was concerned, the presumption was you did not intend any deceit.

But here is a point that you still evade, that is vital; the point of letting unprejudiced parties decide whether I succeed in demolishing your theories. But I see you have backed into a corner, and so I am making progress. Your original offer was to the effect that you would accept any kind of good evidence that was presented. You now say that you will not accept any evidence accept one particular kind. affect to think that you are well fortified in that little hole. But with $10,000 in sight if I win, I will attack you there. I will attempt to show that a line at right angles with the perpendicular, started from a point a given number of feet above the water, running in any direction, will not approach it as we proceed; and I will be to all the expense in giving the test. I will get surveyors of acknowledged competency to make such a line, and all I ask of you is to place the $10,000 so that I shall be sure of it when my demonstration is complete. I meet you fairly on your own present proposition, and we will see where you will jump to next. Perhaps you will say that we must use Professor Morrow's invention especially designed to make the convex appear concave, and that no one except the inventor knows, or can learn, how to use it, and that even his vision is so foreshortened and bent up that he can only determine he is moving at right only determine he is instrument so adjusted that it points towards the water. Atany rate, we will wait for your next move.
—Samuel Blodgett, Grafton, N. Dak.

We have made no false moves, and have evaded no points; we stand just where we stood when our offer was made to any one who would overthrow the Koreshan Cosmogony. For a starter, we advertised for a single proof that the Koreshan Cosmogony is incorrect. We proposed to test all so called proofs by factors which we have applied, and which can be applied again. Mr. Blodgett at first was going to overthrow the whole system by argument, but he has failed to do so; at least he now desires to proceed on a basis he never thought of at first. He is making a little progress, you see!

It is no new thing that we are fortified with facts; the difficulty with Mr. Blodgett is, that he was not aware of the character of our work nor the strength of our premise. It is remarkable that he should now be learning points from THE FLAMING SWORD! He now leaves behind all his so called "proofs," and is looking into the matter of a straight line extended from the vertical point of a given perpendicular! Why did he not think of such a method before-why has not the scientific world thought of it? It was never thought of nor applied until the principles were discovered by the Founder of Koreshan Science, and applied under his auspices. The "little hole" that Mr. Blodgett has had punctured through his mental cortices by a little effort on the part of THE FLAMING SWORD, is really the little hole through which he now observes us; perhaps it will grow larger as time goes on, and then he can work better, and save himself from confusion over periods and other points! But we talk of a straight line. We will accept only a straight line—not a line subject to refraction 3 inches or more to the mile, such as surveyors extend. Surveyors of "acknowledged ability"—where are they? All on the other side, of course, using optical instruments, extending lines incurvating at a certain ratio. We cannot use such men nor such instruments. Our next move will be to instruct the right man who accepts our propositions, how to run a straight line, from which all of the factors of uncertainty-refraction, perspective foreshortening, etc., are eliminated. Disinterested parties-where are they? All on the other side, of course. If any man thinks that we are numbskulls enough to submit our propositions for decision by people on the other side, why, he is going to get left on short order. As we have said, there would have to be chosen representatives from the two schools of astronomy; it is useless to say any more about this point—there's where we stand, and from it we will not budge an inch! In . the meantime, we will not back out in a thousand years; but we are not going to give ourselves away just because a man who "will attempt to show" desires us to. It would be a pity if we would stake everything on a couple of surveyors and a committee steeped in fallacy, and technically lose through the intrigue of "scientific" ignorance and fallacy of the other side, and then afterwards succeed in proving the contestant wrong! Better adopt absolute measures at first, and save trouble. Prof. Morrow's invention is not an optical instrument; it is constructed on the principle of right angles-of rectitude. Any further negotiations with any man looking to the overthrow of Koreshan Astronomy, involves his investigation of the demonstrations of the System, and our Optics and Physics, and other factors which scientifically interpret the phenomena which, misconceived, constitute the basis of fallacy.

As Editors See Us and as We See Editors.

The Essence of Scientific Argument.

The Dawning Light approaches the subject of a reply to THE FLAMING SWORD with a great deal of hesitancy and trepidation. We suppose it is a very easy matter for one who has made the wonderful discovery that we are living on the inside of a great big ball instead of the outside, as has been generally supposed, to size up the mental capacity of those who do not agree with him, without the least bit of trouble. If a disbelief in his Koreshan System is an evidence of small mental capacity, we plead guilty to the soft impeachment, and are rather glad of it. We will go further and say it must certainly take an enormous amount of brain power to make the wonderful discovery THE FLAMING SWORD man has. Gulliver and Munchausen stories sink into utter insignificance when compared to the wonders of the Koreshan System of Cyrus R. Teed. It may be that after millions and billions of years of progression and innumerable reincarnations we might be able to see things like he of THE FLAMING SWORD sees them. At present we would rather not. You have our permission to call us an ignoramus, but don't ask us to believe Koresh .- Dawning Light, San Antonio, Tex.

Would Like to See Proof.

THE FLAMING SWORD, the organ of the Koreshan Unity, published by Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, advances the theory that the surface of this earth is concave, instead of convex, and claims to be able to demonstrate the fact. It has also made a standing offer of $1,000 to any one who will prove the contrary. As we understand it, the generally accepted conclusions of astronomical science are not accepted as proof, but the fact must be practically demonstrated. It says this universe is a hollow ball of about 8,000 miles internal diameter, and we are living on the inner surface; that the sun is in the center, and that outside of the ball there is—nothing. We would rather see the proof of all this than to hear about it.—The Medium, Los Angeles, Cal.

Even that most peculiar of all so called Advent sheets, THE FLAMING SWORD, Chicago, Ill., while combating us no little, and self-sufficient in its idea that its own originator, "Cyrus," alone has the truthand is the literal "Cyrus" of prophecy, has upon the whole been fairer to our Chronological and Israelitish contentions, and more liberal in exchange and notice than any of those above animadverted on. scientific contentions of Cyrus proved," and his animitation We have to say candidly that we find the proved," and his spiritual pretensions as to being the reincarnation of the Messiah disproved a priori by the word itself! We look for the return of "that same Jesus" once for all made man, whom every eye shall see and none shall be able to doubt—whose advent is yet to transpire!— Our Race News-Leaflet.

Chat With Readers.

The New Geodesy is not yet ready; you would not want it without the illustrations and additional matter we are preparing for it, and consequently it will please you to get a good, full volume within a few weeks rather than a mere pamphlet right away. Two illustrated chapters written especially for the work by Koresh—one being a synopsis of the Koreshan Astronomical System, and the other defining the laws of perspective foreshortening—will be of special interest. These articles are in addition to the matter first advertised. Waitfor it, but look for it, for it is coming!

In whose hands can you place copies of the New Geodesy? The proofs and dem onstrations of Koreshan Astronomy will save you hours of argument—they are just what you want. Get your orders in for extra copies—and help us push the work of advertising and distribution of the edition. It will make an impression in the world—it is the most remarkable scientific work ever issued. Do not fail to obtain a copy for your own study as well as other copies to give, loan, or sell to your neighbors, or for mailing to parties interested in the progress of science.

It is better to read one page of Truth than all the productions of fallacy in the world. Weighed in the balance over against the feather-weight theories of so called science, religion, and social economy, The Flaming Sword exhibits a weight of evidence.

One new subscriber from each interested reader of THE FLAMING SWORD, during the next month, would prove a good beginning of a vigorous propaganda of our System through the effort of friends. Try it, and arouse an interest in your own vicinity.

Our Review Corner.

Stand Up for God, by Sphinx; 32 pages, price 15 cts.; Peter Eckler, publisher, 35 Fulton st., New York City.

A production of so called liberal thought, directed against the modern Christian interpretation of the Bible and misconception of the character of God. It makes the mistake of supposing that the church's nonsense about the Bible is the Bible itself. It uses the arguments common to higher criticism, derived from Paine, Voltaire, and Ingersoll. The author appeals to the reader, in the first place, to stand up for God, the God of nature and not the God of the Bible; but he fails to define what kind of a God he desires the reader to stand up for. He thinks he sees God in the stars, in the earth, in insects, in vegetation, and in the numberless worlds of the Copernican fallacy. His god is doomed, as well as the god of modern Christianity. The writer of the pamphlet cannot point to a single fact in the universe as evidence or demonstration of his misconception of the form and function of the Creator, nor can he point out scientifically nor rationally, how any fact in the natural or physical world, affords evidence of the existence of Deity. The man who has reached this point knows not only that there is a God, but knows also who, what, and where he is. Any evidence that proves that God exists, proves that he is human. Questions and Answers on the Bible and Nature, by Lady Blount, Bath, England.

The questions are concerning subjects on the Old and New Testaments commonly discussed between Catholics and Protestants; and answered from the standpoint of a phase of Adventism—a little advanced from orthodoxy, but missing the mark of Truth widely. Interspersed among the theological questions are questions concerning cosmogony, the answers to which are from the basis of the idea that the earth is a flat surface, in denial of the Copernican system of astronomy. There can be no true concept of what the Almighty is, nor what the processes of his creation are, until the knowledge of the character of what he has created, is obtained. The universe is a cell, and its creative pivot is the Seed of the universe; that Seed was Jesus the Christ, the Creator of all things. Any system of cosmogony or theology not in accordance with the facts of the physical universe is a fallacy.

Cause and Cure of Hard Times, by Rev. E. M. Wheelock; 24 pages, price 5 cents; Austin. Tex.

A discussion of the troubles of the workingman; good in pointing out the fact that hard times exist-which needs no argument to those who feel the oppression. But the pamphlet fails to locate either the cause or the cure of existing social conditions. It treats the subject superficially, and hints at the ballot, and the usual song of initiative and referendum. It is easy to condemn the money power and to imagine it out of existence, but that is not the cure nor the way to it. The key to the world's freedom is involved in Koreshan Science. Transformation of the nature, mind, and heart of man precedes transformation of human society.

We shall not attempt, for we could hardly expect to succeed, portraying the deformities of a character so repulsive as the "they say" of society. The reputations of men and of women, good and bad, old and young, are alike withered by its blighting influence. "They say" is a convenient mask for the slanderer, from behind which to emit the foulest libels, the most scandalous rumors, and the vilest insinuations. It is astonishing how many thoughtless persons there are to seize the petty scandal or the malicious insinuation and give currency to it without pausing to consider its probability, or the consequences of promoting its circulation. "They say" is a demon who spreads a moral malaria which invades every circle, destroys the peace of families, blasts reputations, sows discord, engenders strife and heart-burnings, withers friendship, poisons the fountain of love, and even desecrates the altar. The habit of repeating its utterances grows apace with the least indulgence, and produces results of the most painful character.

How many feelings and affections are sorely lacerated, and that not for the time only; for how often do the slanders thus germinated live to injure the good name and fame of many for years after! has escaped its baneful influence? How many can trace their most poignant sorrow to some heartless utterance, exaggerated by repetition, and to be traced in its origin only to the ubiquitous "they say"? This flend is ever busy scarring the reputation, magnifying the frailties, and torturing the most innocent conduct and actions of men. Private reputation is a priceless jewel; and we envy no man's or woman's heart who will trifle with it, by heeding or giving currency to "they say" rumors affecting the character of a neighbor. How much more wicked is it when it assails the absent, who cannot meet its accusations, but must suffer without the opportunity to repel it, it may be, until too late to avert the evil which it has entailed! It is a very safe rule when you have nothing good to say about your neighbor, to keep your mouth closed. Above all, let the "unruly member" be stilled against the utterance of "they say" rumors .- Boston Investigator.

The Common Origin of All Religions.

PART III.

THE DOCTRINES of modern Theosophy (?) in which much of the Buddhistic system is falsely interpreted, furnish an example of that great law of unity found to obtain in the origin of religious conviction. The doctrine of absorption did not originate with the Hindu, nor is its exposition by either modern Theosophy, or its ancient prototype, as clearly defined and its portrayal exemplified as in the religion of the Hebrew and the Christian. "Enoch walked with God and was not, for God took him," is a more concise statement of a great religio-scientific truth than can be found in Buddhism or Theosophy, because it points to a practical theocrasis or terminal absorption, emphasized by the more recent absorptions of Elijah and Jesus, both of which are practical demonstrations of the law.

The Biblical record of the theocrasis (translation) of Elijah and of Jesus, is positive and historical. We refer to these, leaving out of the question Moses, Noah, and Enoch because, while typical and pronounced, they come more specifically within the pale of history, the factor of tradition forming no part of a basis for a conviction and acceptance of the truth. The translation of Elijah being a fact, there can be no subject of greater significance in the light of modern research, than the analysis of this marvelous phenomenon, and the influence such an analysis may exert upon modern thought. There are two, perhaps three or four, pronounced factors of this analysis deserving more than a passing notice, because they constitute key-notes to the elucidation of the question. Elisha importuned Elijah for a baptism of his double spirit (not a double portion, as king James' version would indicate), and in the dematerialization (by a combustion or burning) Elijah was absorbed by Elisha, as Elisha had desired and Elijah had promised. This is the first factor. A few hundred years subsequent to this important event, John the baptist, the precursor of the Lord's advent and Messianic office, came to the world, transmitting a pneumic force which the Lord declared to be the spirit and power of Elijah the prophet. "Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. * * * Then the disciples understood that He spoke unto them of John the baptist." Elijah was absorbed by Elisha, and after a succession of transmissions appeared as the spirit of John, again transmitted in John's spiritual baptism of Jesus the Lord. This second factor unmistakably denotes the great truth of the absorption of the fruits of human perfection, as this fruit ripens upon the great Tree of Life placed at the East (rising) of the Garden of Eden. Elijah and Elisha were the cherubin (cherubs) placed at the East to keep the way of (perpetuate) the Tree of Life. The theocrasis of Elijah was the Flaming Sword.

A third and marvelous factor in this analysis, was the exhibition on the mount called the Transfiguration. It should be remembered that the Lord was transfigured in the presence of the three most prominent disciples. The material form of the Lord resolved itself into nebula, and in this cloud there appeared Moses and Elias (Elijah) —the innermost and inner lives of the Lord Christ. The Lord merely opened himself to the vision of Peter, James, and John, and they beheld the kingdom of God come with power as Jesus had promised them only a short week before the vision. The identical Elijah who, hundreds of years before, had been absorbed by Elisha, was here reinvolved by ethnic transmission from generation to generation, in Jesus the Lord. When John had baptized the Christ, Elijah departed from John and entered Jesus. John lost his prophetic unction, for the Lord Jesus had received it. Thus the Lord became the Anointed, that is, the Christ, with power to re-anoint the world.

The analytical fourth factor, the one upon which we may hang with rapturous transport, is that of the absorption of the Lord Jesus. With the authorization of the verity of verities, fortified by all the conspirations of truth from the elaborations of nature, corroborated by all the testimony of the Scriptures, and urged by the focal energy of the apex of the New Jerusalem as she struggles to reincarnate the race of angels in their culmination of the fruitage of the Gods, we declare this truth: The Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, in whom was the fulness of the Godhead bodily, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost in the one person of the Lord, was absorbed through his own incorruptible dissolution, by which his visible form became the Holy Spirit. As the star of greatest magnitude radiates its energy to every star into which it shines, transmitting its stellar potencies, so the Christ, the bright and Morning Star, in the combustion of his person, radiated his life into the stars of lesser magnitude, baptizing all who became receptive to his baptismal influx.

The absorption of the Lord Jesus, the Christ and Son of God, and the Son of man as well, is definitely portrayed in the institution of the Lord's supper, the passover, given to the world in perpetual memoriam of the great fact that the flesh and blood of the Lord entered the disciples by virtue of his dematerialization through the fire he declared he came to kindle, and which resulted in his appropriation (eating) by the church. The fundamental difference between the doctrines of Buddha and the corresponding doctrines in the Jewish and Christian religions, is merely in the theoretical annunciation of the one without the power of an emphatic corroboration with the practical demonstration of the other in many recorded instances,—Enoch, Elijah, and the Lord Jesus comprising remarkable testimonials of the verity of the law. While Buddha transmitted the traditions of the past, he failed to reach the condition of absorption, lacking the essential link to perfect the concatenation of truth necessary to perpetuate the chain of life.

The one great lack of modern Theosophy (?) is a want of the knowledge of universal polarity, an element entering into the conspirations of the Christian system, which, focalizing in the Lord, made him the great polar center of authority and power. The power to impregnate the world by the overwhelming baptism of the Holy Spirit proceeding from his own personality and made consciously potent through his incorruptible dissolution, was the resultant of his own conscious Sonship proclaimed to the exasperation of the learned ones of his day, whose learning precluded the possibility of their knowing anything,—a factor standing in the way of the comprehension of the truth at the present time. The doctors of old had taken away the keys of knowledge, and the inheritance of ignorance is entailed upon the learned (?) of today.

The Age Ends in War and Revolution.

FROM PRESENT appearances, the prospects are grave for war. There can be no doubt of the fact that war is a deplorable necessity. The destruction of human life in the contest of arms waged for any purpose whatsoever, is calamitous. But can any person doubt the righteousness of the struggle for the perpetuity of our country in the great Rebellion, or that war is sometimes inevitable and essential? We are not, however, arguing either for war or peace. The present impulse of the United States is but preliminary to the work she is to perform, in her relation to the great struggle in which the dispensation will end. The dispensation is rapidly drawing to its final close. The map of the world is about to pass through a revision in which the United States will constitute the most prominent figure, for in America the Universal Empire will project its head. The nations will yet come to know that the prophets of God were authorized to predict the radical changes the time of the end will bring through the revolution in church and state, essential to the initiation of the coming kingdom of righteousness.

There is a prevailing sentiment and growing tendency in the direction of the fallacy that the simple force of social evolution will inaugurate a better state, while the fact is, genuine and incontrovertible science inevitably determines that the culmination of every age comes not by peaceable but by forcible revolution. It is not merely in one field of activity that we are to look for the woes in which the dispensation will terminate. There will be upheavals in the religious, social, political, and commercial fields of action, but especially have the commercial Shylocks fixed the mine and laid the train for the volcano of imminent destruction and retribution.

The control of the legislation of the world by the money sharks, a condition augmenting through a subtle and prescient foresight worthy of a higher purpose, has been determined by the corporate financiers of the world and age. The great financial thieves of the times have entered into a conspiracy to manipulate and enforce legislation in their own interests and against the masses, for in their hearts they have decreed the subjugation of the people to the interests of the bondholders and money-lenders. The time is not far distant when the thinking masses will awake to the urgency of the situation, and in one mighty and overwhelming struggle break this bond of iniquity. The world cannot long struggle in the great conflict for bread against the combined opposition of so called capital. The hope of the world is in the crisis, in the catastrophe, a tribulation the elements of which had their origin in the very initiation of the Christian age. The Lord planted the spirit and life of Communism: the processes of regeneration (re-production) will usher in its fruitage. Competism will yield to Communism, but only through the coming revolution. The world may desire and cry for peace, but it will come through war, for which the world at large is preparing. Do not be deceived. The armament of the world is for the purpose of destruction.

The Bible vs. Scientific Fallacy.

OPPOSITION to the Bible as divinely inspired is—by many who are more than skeptical regarding it—predicated upon the assumption that modern science is true. Before the truth of the Scriptures is questioned upon the basis of scientific discovery, it would be well for the scientist (?) to authenticate the verity of his premise. It is a positively known and admitted fact, that the entire fabric of the Copernican system of astronomy has an assumption for its foundation. What is true of astronomy, is equally true of every branch of so called science. Nothing is known that is predicated upon what is unknown.

Practical demonstration has irrevocably determined the fact that there never has been so exaggerated a fallacy projected by the mind of man, as that of the convexity of the earth and its coincident astronomical vagaries; and we emphasize the iteration, with all the essential expletives understood and gratuitously thrown in, that no man has a right to say a thing is not true, upon the basis of a proposition about which he himself is in doubt. "Scientists" profess to be the most unassuming and modest of all men on the face of the earth, while the fact remains, that the whole experience of modern so called science is the contradiction today of what was promulgated yesterday. Why do they state their conclusions hesitatingly? Merely because they are not founded upon determined premises. A truly scientific man is not a doubtful man. "He speaks as one having authority" to speak, was asserted of the Lord Jesus. Why? Because he knew whereof he spake.

The earth's surface is concave throughout the sphere. We declare it because we know it. We knew it as positively before as after our mechanical demonstration, but we instituted the physical experiments for others. We have challenged the world, and defy any exhibition of science to refute the absolute premise upon which the Koreshan fabric has its foundation. We do not merely believe the Bible to be true;—we know it is the truth, because everything positively discovered as veritable truth, finds within it an emphatic corroboration. The Scriptures are not argumentative, but declarative. They go to the apex of truth and doctrine. issuing facts respecting forms and principles, to be verified in subsequent research under the direction of illumined reason. They deal philosophically and centrally with the things which concern origin and destiny, leaving the scientific method to those who awake from the past and occult age of the world, into the age of rational and scientific light.

The Indestructible Atom and the Illimitable Void.

The Girl and the Vala (No. 9).

BY REV. E. M. CASTLE.

44 A WIDE-SPREAD fraternity claiming survival from ancient days, transmitting symbolic emblems through a succession of ages, profess to guard in the present the secret arts and mysteries of the Builders."

So spake the instructive tongue of Wisdom to the attentive ear of Desire; while the trees whispered among their tops of the mighty wind soon to transform their branches to tossing arms of anguish or to waving arms of Terpsichorean joy; and the river babbled to its banks of the rioting torrent soon to woo and win them with its conquering flood, drawing them onward in the current of its mad desire; and the glad light of battle was in the Girl's eyes; and the fierce glory of the Dies Iran shown on the Vala's brow.

"And what do they guard?"

"They guard an empty casket."

"But the emblems?"

"The emblems survive, though the essence emblemed has long since departed; nor know they the significance of the words they iterate as vocal emptiness, or of the ceremonies they partake in as automatons."

"The particular emblems to be instanced?"

"Hollow globes surmounting the two pillars that guard the approach to the holy place of the Temple. Generation after generation has been repeated in pseudo-solemn rites, the reason these globes, believed to be originally the archives of the craft and to contain the rolls, records, and constitution of the order, were cast hollow,—to withstand floods and conflagrations; and yet they do not know what they emblem, nor why they are two. And though I desire to tell you much pertaining thereunto, I may not now, lest even this very fraternity be enlightened as to the transition of know what to them is meaningless, or at the state of know what to them is meaningless, or at the state of the state of know what to them is meaningless, or at the state of the state of know what to them is meaningless, or at the state of the st that when certain arcana are spoken, though in the ear of but one, though that one never whispers it to another, and hardly to her own heart, nevertheless is there a power that spreads broadcast; and the time is not yet. But this may I tell you: they were cast hollow in the pattern of the universe."

"And will you reveal to me the truth of universal existence? Already do I suspect that the stupendous fabric of cosmogonic theory which has dazzled and amazed me with its illimitable unrest, is the product of stupendous stupidity, and the crowning evidence of that last and deepest darkness whose denizens are 'too blind to have desire to see.' And methinks there was indeed madness, and no true vision, in that terrible dream of Lucretius, when it seemed to him that a void was made in nature, and he saw

'the flaring atom streams
And torrents of her myriad universe
Ruining along the illimitable inane,
Fly on to clash together again, and make Another and another frame of things
Forever.'

Once, this conception of the 'indestructible atoms,' credited in its origin to Leucippus, but formulated and entrenched by Democritus, taught by Epicurus, adorned by the verse of Lucretius, accepted by the accredited teachers of today, to me seemed glorious. Now its glory has departed in my eyes, and I know that the vaulting invention that thus leaps the barriers of reason, can but descend into the abyss itself creates, and that not even the melody of genius that blazons error can sanctify it. Am I right?"

"Right; but never yet was error that was other than the reflex of truth,—else how could it have being?—nor ever an error that did not serve the ends of truth by contrast, nor ever an error that could not be inverted into truth."

"And the theory of the illimitable universe?"

"Reverse the conception, with the earth's surface as the standing-place and base of consideration; think upward, inward, to the heavens, and through the heavens to apex of the converging lines from circumference to center, where is the central nucleus, the meeting place of all energies from the circumference,—the primal and ultimate vortex."

"The vortex! The problem of the vortex has engaged many of our so called wise since Descartes day,—even Stokes, and Helmholtz, and Sir William Thomson. Great names, these, in the world! But none has solved it."

"Because this is one of the vital things concealed from the wise to be revealed unto babes. When one of those you name regarded the vortex as the ultimate of matter, he grazed the hem of Truth's garment, but when he reached the conclusion of "indestructible vortex-atoms" he was as far removed from Truth as Gehenna from the Throne. The exponents of fallacy never abandon the thought of the indestructible atom. It is the key-note of the entire gamut of scientific fallacy. The vortex is the ultimate of matter, and also the ultimate of force. It is the nexus between matter and spirit,—the conjunction,—the turn, or transmutation.

"Nor did Descartes do more than pervert truth when he applied his vortex theory to the planets. Even wilder are the speculations of the arrogant sages of the present—they who deride Descartes, and boast of their firm moorings to the physical, which preclude excursions beyond the material realm. But the great battle of Truth with the Chimæra of false science draws near; the final storm is about to burst upon the world,—as distinctly may its threatenings be heard, as those of the storm about to break over the forest." And even as she spoke, the insistent whispering of the tree-tops increased and the low rumble of distant thunder was heard. "On the winged horse of Olympus, Bellerophon rides forth to hurl the dart against the grotesquely composite monster of fallacy-to destroy forever the delights of those who teach fallacies that are held to be truths. Nor will they yield these delights without bitter conflict. But victory is with the rider on the horse, the winged horse that knows both earth and heaven!victory! which vindicates him who has the White Stone, the philosopher's stone! The fulness of victory in the culmination of the triple woe about to descend upon earth, belongs to the heavenly horseman, who in the fulness of triumph over the dark powers of fallacy and their evil train of sin and death, rolls away the reproach of Antea."

"And the hollow universe, that withstands fires and floods?"

"It is an all-inclusive cell, a great battery of transmutation, the environing wall of which is the earth, on whose inner surface you walk. In the process of transmutation is seen the relation of the flame to the flood; 'tis fire that generates the water that quenches it. The lightning is the flaming of spheres in their union, and one result of the union falls as rain. The wonder of flame is the wonder of transmutation of creation."

"The wonder of flame! He who in our day has been called the Maccabean Eleazar, indignantly protests that no chemistry without stupidity to help it could conceal that flame is a wonder."

"It is a wonder; but pertains not to chemistry, the earth-born giant that wrestles with truth as Antæus did with Hercules—to be in the same way overcome. (And the great exponent of truth may well be likened to Hercules, the glory of Hera, the mother; for his is the glory of that holy city, the free Jerusalem, which is the mother of us all.) Flame pertains to alchemy, the light of Egypt, which is science. Alchemy removes the darkness of Egypt by transmuting it to light. The fires of transmutation and the floods thus generated, perpetuate the universe, and the environing concave withstands and sustains them."

- "When shall the world know the truth?"
- "Even today the world is waking to the truth."
- "And the proud agnostic authorities of the present hour! they whose thoughts range the illimitable void in search of specks whose existence they maintain, whose purpose they explain not! they who scrutinize particles of matter and delve in heaps of trash for incts! who examine heaven and earth with microscopes, which reveal they know not what! they, indeed, who pride themselves on their inability to comprehend, and presume to instruct men in ignorance!—what of them?"

"The bubble of their pride will be touched and destroyed. The Indestructible Atom and the Illimitable Void have reached the end of their career. Their reign over the minds of men shall cease. They are the vain imaginings of darkness, and vanish in the light."

"O, the irony of fate!" exclaimed the Girl. "Democritus laughed at the follies of mankind!"

"He laughed," returned the Vala; "and now is chief sponsor for a tribe at whom all the world may well laugh."

She departed. The Girl thought of the learned dissertations that would conceal from man the glory of God in this visible creation and prove existence commonplace, and the inflated arrogance of their authors. Soon her voice pealed out merrily: "And you laughed, Democritus! O Democritus, Democritus! all the world will laugh, —when its eyes are well open—at the swelling, strutting sage, (who swears by you,) with his sesquipedalian discourse on the 'law and order of nature,' knowing nothing truly of the law of nature, which is the law of God, to be realized and fulfilled only through love, which is not puffed up."

Even while she laughed, the sky darkened; and with blowing garments, and the wind in her face, she passed along the path.

And the wild storm broke over the forest.

A Fateful Sign.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

A FEW weeks ago, the French chamber of Deputies became the scene of a disgraceful quarrel. Now the House of Representatives of the United States, following in the wake of her sister republic, presents to the world a similar humiliating spectacle with features little removed from those of an ordinary street brawl. When the Constitution of the United States has fallen so low in the eyes of its national defenders pledged to the support of its sacred principles, as to become a mere implement of petty personal spite in the hands of one member to inflict an insulting blow upon his opponent, its glory has indeed departed. In these two occurrences significantly transpiring almost simultaneously in France and America, the two great representatives of modern democracy, the world may behold the outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual truth. Modern democracy is weighed in the balance and found wanting. Liberty, equality, and fraternity, hitherto the watchwords of every American heart, have proved themselves but "words, idle words," empty and vain with the false ring of a counterfeit coin. There is no liberty where plutocracy rules, no equality in nature, and no fraternity without the love of God in the human soul.

The pattern of all things was shown the prophet in the holy mount. The perfect ideal of government to be wrought out upon this earth must be delivered to the people from on high. The desire of all nations, Utopia, Altruria, the lost Atlantis, will be realized in Theocracy.

Undermining the Throne of the Gold God.

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

CARCELY has his reign been at length securely established, (as his blind devotees imagine,) when the rivals and enemies of the gold god begin undermining his throne. In our Revolutionary war, our fathers -having no money resource to clothe and feed armies and sustain themselves against a powerful foe-resorted to what Jefferson declares to be a nation's only resource in war,—the credit, not that they had any, but one which they hoped to establish. So effective was this, that when England saw that by the sole help of these treasury notes (called assignats) her colony was getting the better of her, and was likely to slip through her fingers, she resorted to the expedient of counterfeiting them and flooding the country with them so as to destroy their value. Even thus they were too much for all her power and resources, and she had to acknowledge the independence of her revolted colonies after a seven year's struggle.

In spite of the reign of the gold god in her own dominions, it looks as through Britain was trying a similar experiment against the authority of the same god in this country. She has been importing a large amount of silver from this country, and it now transpires that a quantity of silver dollars already estimated at $20,000,-000, has been put in circulation in this country. They are genuine silver, some of them of even greater fineness than our silver coins. According to the theory of our coin worshipers, that the value is in the commodity out of which money is made, and not at all in the stamp-fiat, which it bears, these dollars are just as good as any silver dollars and, practically, just as good as gold. There is no law against their circulation, and the more of them that find their way into circulation, the better for our debt-cursed poor. Swelling the volume of money in circulation, which fixes prices, they help to counteract the appreciation of king gold, and thus to lighten his oppression. But this is quite a plum to British thieves and their imitators this side the great waters. Fifty per cent in the value of the money thus put in circulation is a find worth picking up, and there is no reason in sight why the whole amount mined may not be thus rendered into good coin of the realm, which would soon settle the question of 16 to 1 without its bothering the politicians longer. Add to this the manufacture of gold everywhere becoming rife, and it looks as though the mighty tyrant would soon find himself minus a throne, and there would be one more added to the world's pretenders to sovereignty.

Sharp Cuts at Existing Evils.

BY W. H. PAVITT.

GOLD is a great king. The people bow down and worship it. They issue bonds against themselves, and industry is taxed for the interest. There is but little gold, and the people need more money. "Bankpromises-to-pay" are issued on the bonds, and the people borrow them—for which they mortgage all they have, and pay a bonus and some more interest for their use. Some of the neighbors deposit the "bank's-promises-to-pay" in the safe keeping of the banker, and other neighbors come and borrow and pay interest for the use of these same "promises-to-pay," which are based upon the "promises-to-pay" that the banks issued, and which are based upon the bonds the people issued to buy gold to do business with. Great financial scheme! Wonderful people!

We have no objection to others wasting time and sinking deeper into the mire of usury until they strike the bottom of the gutter, if they feel so inclined,—it is a free country and it is their privilege,—but it does not require a great amount of erudition to see that they will vote themselves out as soon as they can lift themselves out by pulling on their boot straps.

Interest, profit, rent, taxes, the four channels through which the toilers are robbed of the fruits of industry, must and will be annihilated, else they will annihilate the race. The party that has not erudition enough to see it, and moral stamina enough to demand its destruction, can hope to be classed only among the debris of the past.

Madame de Staël's idea of happiness was "conscious progress in a worthy undertaking." To look ahead and feel in every fiber of our being that the end draws near, and that the shackles which now fetter the race will soon be broken, fills the loyal heart with exultation.

There is no such thing as pauper labor. The only paupers are those who live upon the fruits of others' toil, without performing equivalent uses to the neighbor.

Truth lies dead in the street, for men cannot barter it for gold, and a prophet is without honor because no one can make a profit on his predictions.

"Bear ye one another's burdens" does not signify that you should climb upon your neighbor's back and bear down with all your weight!

Waste is sin; reckless waste is a crime; ergo: the competitive system is the monumental crime of the age.

We cannot judge a tree by its blossoms. Some of the poorest apples come from the fairest blossoms.

BY THE EDITOR.

MANY PEOPLE fancy themselves to be reasoners, who have never taken the trouble to test a single conclusion which they or others have presumed to reach. To jump at a conclusion may please the mind under the sensation of delusion, but it does not involve a single factor of reason. No man can reach a correct conclusion who does not begin with a known premise and apply the principles of logic to the end of the process of ratiocination. Ever engage your mind in such a process? If you have successfully, you are a reasoner; if not, you have all of your personal conclusions to overhaul entirely. Hundreds of people object to Koreshan Science who have never given it a rational test to ascertain whether it is right or wrong. It is just as funny to us for an unreasoning mind to undertake to criticise a conclusion of Koreshan Science, as it would be for a man knowing nothing about mathematics, to enter the office of a mathematician and declare his calculations wrong! "Whereshow where the process is wrong." The objector holds the process of his ignorance in reserve, while the blunder is unmistakably manifest! Koreshan Science is a system of fact, logic, and reason; its conclusions are founded upon known premises, and we challenge contradiction. Apply any recognized system of logic extant to a single fact in the universe, and prove the System wrong if you can!

We declare war, not only against Spain to destroy her barbarism and avenge her crimes, but against all the fallacies of modern times. Operative in every government and in every department of life in the world today, there are forces far more dangerous and more subtle than the Jesuitism of Spain. Nations become enraged at little spurts of man's inhumanity to man. The massacre of Armenians, the starving and butchering of reconcentradoes of Cuba, cause a generous display of false charity and give opportunity for mock philanthropy to increase the luster of transient halos of glory. Hundreds of thousands in the great cities of the world are in a starving condition; opportunity to support themselves is denied by giant monopolies. It is just as much a crime to take away support and to force starvation upon the occupants of tenement houses, as it is to drive reconcentradoes from their farms and homes to coops within the Spanish trochas! There is misery in Havana and Matanzas, but no less in Chicago, New York, London, Paris, and Rome. There are more butchers than Weyler and the Sultan of Turkey. There is not a district in the "civilized" world where starved and oppressed people can undertake to effectively protest against unjust taxation, without meeting the same fate at the point of bayonets of armed militia that Armenians met at the hands of the Turkish Khurds!

War incurs enormous expense, and millions of dollars are necessary to conduct warfare and pay indebtedness which accrues. There are three ways in which war funds can be raised: (1) By subscription from individuals and payment of same out of private moneys. (2) By bonding the nation for a period of years, or (3) by the issue of greenbacks. The first would be slow and tedious, and of the other two methods the bonds will be chosen for the simple reason that millionaires, the gods of the money power, are behind the throne, and their business is BONDAGE. The men in power and the majority of the population of the American nation today are blind enough to borrow a few billion dollars and pay interest on the same for a hundred years, when Congress has the power to make money out of paper by fiat, which would pay all indebtedness and fulfil all the functions of naval and commercial commodity. In this way there would be no indebtedness, no interest, no bondage of the people, and no revenue to the millionaire. One of the greatest fakes and delusions of the hour, is the idea that gold intrinsically possesses the value stamped upon it, and that it is necessary to the business transactions of the world.

It is a general impression that the money power, through Mark Hanna and other agencies, influences the present administration, dictates its policy, and measures the extent of its action on any question arising for settlement. To gain a place in the Senate for Hanna, Wall street influenced the Ohio legislature; and to prevent recognition of Cuban independence, it is charged, a number of Senators were in collusion with cliques that conspire to save the Spanish bonds. Is there any foundation for this charge? If it is true that Wall street influences the President, Cabinet, and Senate, then the entire clique in office should be impeached for overt acts of treason against the Constitution of America! Such measures are in direct violation of the spirit of liberty, of the laws of government, and the will of the people.

War clouds are no longer in the horizon of the East or the West, but in the zenith; slowly they have been gathering for years, and are now ready to burst upon the world, precipitating the elements of destruction in the great contest over the universal vitellus. The difficulties between the United States and Spain constitute a few of the many factors contributing to the settlement of the great question of the world's freedom. Declarations of war will grow more and more numerous, and national grievances more and more aggravating, until all the forces engage in the final combat. The time is at hand; the dispensation ends in revolution, warfare, and bloodshed!

The White Horse Army is the only army in the world that carries the banner of Liberty! It not only cries Cuba Libre, but liberty and freedom for the world! It is an army of war; it is an army of peace—it will revolutionize human thought, activity, and relations in every department of life, hold the reins of government, adjust, restrain, appropriate, and use the world's commerce in accordance with the laws of equity and justice.

Occultism is a suitable cover, under which those who know nothing are enabled to make the false claim to spiritual perception. It is out of the sphere of demonstration; it eludes all facts, and is the opposite of science. Koreshan Science is not occultism; it is uncovered, discovered and revealed, open and above-board, founded upon facts; it courts and invites investigation, proves its claims, defies criticism, and challenges fallacy!

The great revolution is being waged against all forms of error and fallacy. The Messenger of Truth sounds the tocsin, announces the issue, declares war, and arraigns the enemy on countless charges of infamy and despotism. The Battle of Armageddon is a war of invasion, or aggression, involving the destruction of all powers of usurpation. We are fighting that battle now!

There is no such thing as occult science. When anything is occult, it is hidden—it is mysterious. When mystery is revealed it becomes science or knowledge of the thing hitherto occult or mysterious. A thing cannot be hidden and revealed at the same time, and therefore "occult science" is an absurdity.

The universe could not be spherical if it were not cellular. Cellular activity is within the cell, the inner surface of which sustains a direct relation to the central nucleus. The pivot of the cell is the center; the wall is the material environ which constitutes the cellular form.

When the tomb of Osiris was found, the startling discovery was made that the Egyptian deities were living men here in the earth, and not myths as heretofore supposed by Egyptologists. All gods, good or bad, are men; the true God is divinely and supremely human.

The power of Spain is supposed to rightfully belong to Alfonso XIII, a youth of fourteen; to be assumed by the Queen regent, and to be exercised by the premier, Sagasta. Perhaps Spain would be less cruel and the better ruled if the order were reversed.

Social democracy is a pseudo-social system, the purpose of which is to divert attention from the promulgation of the principles and truths of the Theocratic Socialism taught in the Bible and scientifically demonstrated by the facts of nature.

Many people object to our radical expressions and positive statements. They do not like them now because they hurt, but after awhile the masses will be glad to know that we had backbone at the right time!

The supreme power of government can never emanate from the governed. Government by a circumference regardless of the center or origin of all power, is as inconsistent as a kingdom without subjects.

When the great powers have exhausted their resources in the impending revolution, the Army of the coming Theocracy will hoist the flag of genuine liberty and declare peace forever!

The war department is endeavoring to keep up to date. The term flying squadron may indicate to some that the U. S. navy is composed of airships; the vessels are yet floating on the ocean.

Labor unions are clamoring for peace with Spain. The only time the unions want war is when they can wage war on non-union workingmen when the unions are out on a strike!

The Spaniards have given the world a practical illustration of how to under*mine* anything they wish to destroy.

War prophets are no more reliable than the proverbial weather prophet.

The United States has more dangerous enemies at home than abroad.

Criticism of the Sword.

H. M. P., Hamburg, Ia.—You acknowledge THE FLAMING SWORD to be the very ablest Journal published, and yet you criticise it in a long letter of March 24, without stating a single instance to which you could object. What you have to say of the church, the press, and a host of other follies in the world, has no application to us. If you think THE SWORD is afraid to say what its promulgators think, you are as badly mistaken as you ever were in your life! We think the trouble with you lies in the fact that we did not publish your letter of January 27, concerning Spiritism. We did not, for the simple reason that the editor of this department considered it a personal letter. We know something about Spiritism, not only the phenomena, but also the science of these manifestations, and the laws of both the natural and the spiritual worlds. You know nothing about the phenomena nor the laws upon which spiritual being depends. You cannot tell us anything about Spiritism nor the character of its advocates, that we do not already know. We have made a business of acquainting ourselves with our business; and having the knowledge of the true science of the universe,with its various departments, including a knowledge of human nature and the medicine that is required to put the world on a reasoning basis,—we are of the opinion that you, without something superior to what we have, cannot tell us anvthing about how to accomplish our work. From the standpoint of demonstrated premises, we have the ability to point out where ignorance is dangerous. When it comes to egotism, we say frankly, that the Founder of Koreshanity is the only genuine egotist in existence. Knowledge and egotism are the necessary prerequisites of the teacher and the critic. You say you are not an egotist, and you do not assume to possess the actual basis of all true conclusion, and therefore we deny that you can criticise THE FLAMING SWORD from any other standpoint than a wrong one!

The Only Physical Universe.

Suppose the Koreshan theory be true, upon what law do you base the proposition that this earth is the only one? Why might there not be others, with their cellular activities and life?—C. B., Salem, O.

The very fact that the universe is—the very fact that it exists in its completeness, is absolute proof that it is the only one, for otherwise, it would not be complete. If another universe existed, it would render this one incomplete from the simple fact that the existence of the other one could be possible only through an established relation with everything else in existence having origin in cause. That cause necessarily finding the pivot of unity in one form, would necessitate the return of two forms to the original state of wholeness. The universe is a unit, a complete and perfect structure, possessing all the functions of its own perpetuity, and therefore it is one, and no more, else it could not be the universe. The universe perpetuates itself by inherent laws of involution and evolution; it involves itself and nothing else-it turns in itself, (from unus, one, and vertere, to turn.) and puts forth itself, cycle after cycle. If it were not the only universe it could not be eternal. If there were two, one or the other had a beginning, and hence would have an ending. The universe can never be divided; its completeness, its unity, can never be dissolved. To divide it would be to destroy its existence. It cannot be related to anything but itself. The Almighty who creates it at definite periods is the Seed which the universe itself produces. He can create no more nor less than that which conspires to produce Him, and there is only one God. He is the heart and center of this structured unity; he is one and no more. Primary cause and ultimate effect are one. Original cause and universal effect could unite only in one universal form: the one universal form is all that one pivot of cause can express.

The Great Drama of Job.

- (1) Did God give Job the same children that he gave the devil the power to destroy, and if he did, in what manner and how?
 (2) If David then called him Lord, how is he his son? (3) What does it mean when the prophet says, "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran"? (Hab. iii:3.) (4) Who is the Holy One, and where is mount Paran?—S. H. C., Kingston, Tex.
- (1) The book of Job records the experiences of Jah in humanity, in a great cycle of 24,000 years—the descent and resurrection of the Almighty in humanity. The children restored are the sons of God in the resurrection at the end of the cycle. It is the story of the planting of seed, its death, and its reproduction; the story of the propagation of life necessary to the perpetuity of the universe. In the highest sense, the children are the same; they are the resurrection of that which was destroyed. (2) David called Jesus the Christ his Lord, by virtue of the fact that Jesus was the resurrection of David; thus one of David's posterity became his Savior, just as a seed saves the corpuscles of a plant. (3) Here we have a definite statement of where God came from. The church has been discussing the question of the Almighty for hundreds of years, and has forgotten to inquire concerning the origin of God! God was created out of humanity, and away back in the days of Abraham, he began to be generated on the natural plane; he came from Abraham and his posterity. Teman, the grandson of Esau, was a specific line through which specific qualities of life came in the generation of Jesus. Teman was a man, then a people, living in Edom. See further on the generation of the Almighty from humanity, in Sword, April 15, 1898, "The Common Origin of all Religions," Part II. (4) Jesus the Christ was the Holy One, coming through Teman. Mount Paran was the pivot of spiritual force in the people of Teman. Typical Mount Paran is a mountain in the old Edom or Iduma.

Not Engaged in "Absent Treatment."

H. J. Y., Portland, Ore.-Your kind favor, and also that of Mrs. Y., som time ago, were duly received. We send you back numbers of THE SWORD as requested. We are not engaged in the work of "absent treatment," and have no system of mental healing separate from the system of Science founded by Koresh. Restoration of the world to life and genuine health will come through fulfilment of divine law, the foundations of which are the ten principles of life given to the world by Moses, fulfilled by Jesus, and now scientifically interpreted by KORESH. Any so called treatments or cures which do not involve obedience to the scientific laws of immortality here in the flesh, are inadequate. The central nucleus of the Koreshan System exists for the purpose of conserving energies for this higher purpose, and will not be expended for any other purpose until the proper time arrives.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

I saw your advertisement in the Altruist. I am looking around for the true system of theology, the true religion of God, if he has given man such a system. I can now praise him only so far as I know him through his works. I do not know whether the Bible is of God, or not, or whether Jesus the Christ was his Son or not. I am skeptical on these two points. If there is no true system of theology or religion in the world, then one should be devised. The better we know the universe and its laws, the more we shall know of its wonderful Creator.—J. C. N., Tuttle, Golo.

Page 16 is both a wonder and a work of art. We unscientific students are now anxiously waiting for learned men of the old theory to take up the bold challenge of DR. TEED and proceed to run the air line at various localities, and thus make the test, while a wondering world in almost breathless anxiety watches for the verdict which is either to confirm the Copernican theory or confess and declare a truth which must produce the most far-reaching revolution—scientific, political, and religious—of all discoveries of history. Let it be soon.—C. B., Salem, O.

While writing, I will renew my subscription to The Flaming Sword. Have forgotten whether I paid for the New Geodesy or not: for fear I did not, I enclose $2.25, as I wish to get it as soon as it is issued. There is only one thing to be said against The Flaming Sword: there is not enough of it; what it lacks in quantity, it makes up in quality, and one number is worth more than the price of the whole year's subscription; but I want more. Koreshan literature continues to be my principal pabulum.—A. P., Antioch, O.

Please find postal note to extend my subscription, and accept my thanks for having sent it continuously. Your paper is surely unexcelled from several standpoints. The paper, and presswork, are excellent, and in science it leads. The humanity and fraternity advocated are admirable. Its theological expositions are, as yet, beyond the reach of most minds.—Dr. C. A. G., Austin, Tex,

There are many real sound truths in The Flaming Sword of April 1. Send me the 2-cent pamphlets referred to. When published, I will take a half dozen copies of the New Geodesy at agents' rates. I carry a large stock of occult books. My intuitions have always impressed me that modern astronomy is radically at variance with nature and spirit.—Prof. G. W. W., Denver, Colo.

All hail, THE FLAMING; SWORD! More news, more sense for the money, than any paper I know of, and the most interesting.

—N. H., Marco, Fla.

We are very much interested in THE FLAMING SWORD and the principles it advocates, and do not want to miss a single copy.—H. J. Y., Portland, Ore.

Chat With Readers.

This week's FLAMING SWORD is another exceptionally good number added to the numerous issues of like character during the past five months. Beginning with the excellent articles by the Founder of Koreshan Science, the attention of the readers will be absorbed in the subjects discussed. "The Common Origin of All Religions," Part 3, differentiates between Koreshanity and so called Theosophy. The difference is so clearly indicated that we do not see how even the casual reader can fail to see the points. Many new readers would like to know what is our attitude toward the Bible. There is a growing skepticism about the familiar collection of books-a skepticism growing out of the fallacies of modern so called science. Of course, if the Copernican system of astronomy were true, the Bible would be absolutely false in every particular, and wholly unreliable in its every feature. The splendid short article by Koresh suggests a line of thought for those who have hitherto reposed confidence in that class of "scientists" who make capital out of nonsense.

Take up a single copy of THE FLAMING SWORD and count the new thoughts it contains-go through all of the articles and note the scores of subjects touched upon. The thoughts are all new and true, radical and revolutionary. There is not a thought that we entertain—there is not a conclusion in the entire System that is not the absolute antithet of that entertained in the fallacious modern systems. In the Editorial Perspective and other departments, scores of Koreshan conclusions are suggested each week. In 52 issues not less than 10,000 distinct items of premise, proof, and conclusion are presented. How fortunate the readers of THE FLAMING Sword are! Men for ages past have struggled in vain for a single true thought; and now at the end of the dispensation, thousands and thousands of brilliant rays are streaming from THE FLAMING SWORD alone, and from no other journal. There is no other journal like it in the world; it is unique, alone, unparalleled!

The subject of war is filling the mind of the world-not only as a matter of news, but as a matter of feeling. The war sensation is felt everywhere, and the agitation in the mental spheres will have its effect in the most outward forms of expressionin war itself, soon or later. "The Age Ends in War and Revolution," is the caption of prophetic declarations by Koresh, founded on knowledge of what constitutes vengeance for all the wrongs of the oppressed! There are two ways in which unity is effected in every domain: (1) by affinity, and (2) by agitation and war, where the breaking down of old forms results from the battle of opposing forces. War must break down the competitive system; war must destroy existing institutions!

We desire to express our appreciation of The Girl and the Vala, No. 9, "The Indestructible Atom and the Illimitable Void," by Rev. E. M. Castle. In the colloquy in this issue, there is a fund of scientific thought which should attract the attention of every reader of The Flaming Sword. Our readers may consider themselves fortunate in having the great truths of Koreshan Science presented in so attractive a style as is now being done in this remarkable series.

Do you like new thoughts, new ideas? There is no end to them in The Flaming Sword. We are radically different from everybody and everything else in the world—we entertain just the opposite of all modern conclusions. The Koreshan System satisfies every desire to investigate it—whether out of curiosity, desire to criticise, or to have the truth.

If you are in arrears on your subscription to The Flaming Sword, it is just as much your duty to remit for the same, as it is our duty to send the paper to those who have paid their subscriptions. See?

Watch for new developments in the Koreshan movement. You can do this only by receiving The Flaming Sword each week. Subscribe for it now and take it right along.

MONEY FALLACIES EXPOSED.

Money Values Shown to be Fixed by Fiat and Not by Intrinsic Worth.

The belief that money must be made of some substance that possesses intrinsic value, will die out of the human intellect with other popular errors. That which really possesses intrinsic value should never be diverted from its proper function and used as a medium of exchange. We write our letters on the cheapest material we can find—paper. Money is the creature of law, the decree of authority, therefore the cheapest material should be used to print the law or decree upon.

The only decision ever given by the Supreme Court of the United States in a case where the question of what constitutes money was involved, declared that "money is not a substance but a legal decree."

And shall we take millions of laborers out of productive enterprises, where they are producing the necessaries of life, and send them into mountain gorges, caves and tunnels, and out on arid plains, and on and on, up to the frozen North, where they undergo hardships that no pen or tongue can describe, to search for a certain yellow metal so scarce that all that has been found · in modern times, including the Klondike, could be placed in a room forty feet square and deep? Those who claim that gold is money, that nature made it so, once claimed the same magical quality for silver; but when the pluck, industry, and perseverance of man unearthed a vast quantity of the white metal, its so called "intrinsic value" or "natural money" character was stricken down by the flat of government. The "legal decree" was repealed by the same power or authority that gave it its life or purchasing power.

It would be quite as sensible or logical to insist that the proclamation of a ruler, a law of Congress, or a decision of a court, should be written or printed upon gold or silver plate, as to contend that the legal decree called money be printed upon those metals.

A general impression prevails that the word coin means metal. Coin means "to stamp." Webster defines coin thus:

1. "Coin, n. A piece of metal, not necessarily gold or silver, on which certain characters are stamped, making it legally current as money. 2. Coin, v. t. To stamp or convert into money. To form by stamping. 3. Coinage. The act of stamping or converting into money."

How, then, about "nature making gold and silver money?" But now then comes the old stereotyped questions: "How about the greenbacks? Why did they depreciate to 40 cents on the dollar? Was it not because they were paper? No, it was not because they were paper, and no one at all posted on the financial legislation of this country since 1860 will ask such questions. When the civil war broke out, Lincoln realized the need of money. There was not enough "legal decrees" coined or stamped on gold and silver to pay the soldiers needed, and carry on the war to preserve the Union. Honest, noble, great-hearted old Abe, who was something of a lawyer in his day, remembered that the Constitution of the United States says: "The government shall have the right to coin money and regulate its (If gold is money by nature, how ongress regulate its value?) Lincould Congress regulate its value?) coln saw that nature had nothing to do with it, and also that money was simply a legal decree, and that this decree might be legally stamped, viz., coined on any substance for convenience, as the decree constituted its value and not the substance on which the decree was stamped, written. printed or coined.

The first sixty millions of greenbacks issued by the Lincoln administration passed at their face value even in London. Why? Because the contract or "legal tender" coined or stamped (printed) on them declared them good "for all debts, public and private;" that the government would take them for taxes, interest on the public debt, and duties on imports. Demagogues have tried to make the people believe, and in many instances have succeeded, that the first issue passed at par because they were redeemable in gold. Not so. The word gold or silver does not appear on any of the first issue of greenbacks. They were redeemed every time they were exchanged for anything between man and man, or paid to any officer of the government for taxes, duties on imports, or interest on the public debt.

This frightened the money kings, those who owned the metals upon which money (a legal decree) had by the authority of law been stamped, and they at once took steps to prevent any more money being coined on paper. So they sent out the famous, or infamous, Buel circular, from which the following is an extract: "To issue more paper money will provide the people with money." Not a word about "rag money" or "intrinsic value." So Congress was "fixed," and when the next issue of greenbacks appeared they bore this strange device: "Good for all debts, public and private, except interest on the public debt and duties on imports." Here was the spectacle of a government issuing money and then refusing to accept it.

Query: If money is only good according to the intrinsic value of the material on which the stamp is placed, why did a piece of paper six by four inches pass for fifty cents when stamped one dollar, and the same amount of paper pass for fifty dollars when stamped one hundred dollars?

But there is not a metal money man in the world who will attempt to answer.

Let the government print, stamp or coin that greenback "exception clause" on twenty-dollar gold pieces, and see how quickly they will depreciate to ten or twelve dollars. Why? Because they would not be full legal tender for all debts, public and private. Paper possesses more intrinsic or real value than gold, because it is used to print all the news and knowledge and new discoveries on. It is also used to make shoes, buckets and even car wheels; in fact, there is no limit to its use in the arts and sciences.—Dr. Carey in Spectator, Santa Cruz, Cal.

The Spirit of Domination.

"Distance lends enchantment to the view," and most persons who take up reform ideas tend at first to rush into the fire of officialdom, with which they are not familiar, in their desire to escape from the frying-pan of plutocracy, with which they are uncomfortably intimate. It is their inexperienced opinion that the sins and iniquities of bureaucratic authority are invariably due to capitalistic corruption, and that the abolition of the commercial system would convert officials generally into angelic instruments of the Millennium. A little reflection might, however, reveal the fact that the most galling tyrannies of plutocracy itself are those which are actuated not by greed, but by the spirit of domination; and the truth is that craving for dictatorship is at least as powerful an incentive to wrong-doing as the craving for riches, whilst if "opportunity makes the thief," it is no less certain to make the tyrant. An appropriate alteration in the moral tone will make a vast difference in the general working of business, just as an appropriate alteration of moral tone will make a vast difference in affairs of office; but if we simply take refuge from com-mercialism in officialism, or rice versa, the effect will be in the concluding words of the once famous melodrama Norval, "To change the scene, but not relieve the pain."—The Worker, Sydney, Australia.

Modern Christianity.

If the well-fed person, dressed in the latest style, living in a fine mansion with more luxuries than Solomon in all his glory ever dreamed of, whose congregation pays him a princely salary, should take for his text: "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head," and tell his hearers that he was a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus (who today would be called a tramp by his audience), it would make everybody laugh. And if he were to tell them to sell what they had and take up their cross and follow their Savior, they would send him to a lunatic asylum. Time was when it was easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. But this is all changed. easier now for a rich man to build a church and get preached into heaven, than it is for a poor man who has no place to lay his head, to get a square meal. Such is the kingdom of the modern saints.-

The martyr cannot be dishonored. Every lash inflicted is a tongue of flame; every prison a more illustrious abode; every burned book or house enlightens the world; every suppressed or expurged word reverberates through the earth from side to side.—Emerson.

Rail-Sanding Apparatus for Railways.

Automatic and Non-Automatic Action Combined; Has Been in Practical use for Four Years!

This rail-sanding apparatus for railways has been used practically and satisfactorily on a railroad vehicle for four years. It is very simple, and consequently inexpensive. It saves time, property, and lives.

The rails are sanded under all wheels of the train, locomotive or car at the same instant in case of emergency, whether or not the engineer has thought or time to apply it, ensuring the most sudden stop possible compatible with safety. Running time is very considerably shortened by added ability to run closer to stops before applying the brakes. Dampness and clogging of lower ends of the sandpipes are prevented, obviating wrecks from that cause.

Referring to patents Nos. 438,568 and 469, 263, some of their features are eliminated, greatly simplifying the apparatus without in the least impairing, but adding greatly to the effectiveness of the same. For further particulars, address, Science Will Make Man Immortal.

MMORTALITY is to be attained by man through the scientific comprehension and application of definite laws, the central one of which is Messianic. There is not a person living on the face of the earth today who has attained to it, or who will perpetuate the body now existing. All persons whose hope of immortality is founded upon, and who will receive, the gospel of immortal life, will disappear through the incorruptible dissolution or conflagration about to electro-magnetically consume the visible bodies of those who now exist. The spiritual substance of this dissolution will flow toward and into a prepared nucleus, ordained and chosen for the specific purpose of elaborating and projecting the sons of God. The sons of God are neither male nor female, but are the product of a dissolving and unity of males and females who now constitute the vidual and mortal beings, but who. after the conflagration, will become biune, that is, two-in-one. The Lord was such an one. "He who hath the bride is the bridegroom."

There are some who labor under the grave mistake that immortality is to remain a perpetual condition in the earth. Immortality is the fruit and product of regeneration. The ages culminate in a general consummation, denominated in Scripture as the resurrection of the dead. When the fruit is ripe, it is absorbed and assimilated by the invisible world, for whose perpetuity the fruits of the earth are generated. This absorption is not into a universal spirit or consciousness. In the invisible anthropostic solar realm, there obtains an eternal society of Gods, called the order of Melchizedek. This order comprises a numerical cube, the product of a specific cube root. It cannot be increased nor diminished in number, yet at the end of every zodiacal cycle there is added to this numerical cube its own definite number, not by absorption into a universal spirit, but by a conflagration and absorption into the thousands of entities who comprise this order.

There is no loss of identity nor consciousness in the process of absorption, nor is there any pain. It is rather the delightful culmination of human hopes in the attainment of immortal, thence eternal life. From this glorious consciousness there is no fall, to it no termination; but from this absorptive unison, in the act of conflagration, a debris is precipitated or thrown down and back into the mortal part of the race, the decadent substance or ash, to be again remoulded, through thousands of generations, into the immortal fruit. Once having reached eternal life, and having become conscious in the perpetual entity of sonship, there is no descent nor loss of eternal glory. Once redeemed and having entered into life, there is no end nor break in eternal continuity. The common human existence is but the debris or precipitation of the Gods, and the Son of God generated from and in the race, is the High Priest of this eternal order.

The doctrine of conjunctive unity is one of the most central of all the doctrines of life. It is the most subtle and mysterious to the unilluminated, as well as one of the most simple and comprehensible to the astro-solar Initiate. This doctrine is the inculcation of that law which provides for the eternal symmetry of both the cube and the sphere, which unitedly comprise the integrity of the perpetuative whole. The increment of universal being in its numerical perpetuity does not nor can it increase either the cubical or spherical number which make up the integer of the perfect form and function.

Who Can Overthrow Koreshan Cosmogony?

ONE BLODGETT desires to disprove the Koreshan Cosmogony. We have suggested a process by which he can accomplish this feat—provided it can be accomplished! We will now suggest another method which will settle the whole controversy. Prove the Copernican system of astronomy, ergo: the Koreshan Cosmogony has no basis for its claims; or if he prove any other system of cosmogony to be true, then ours is essentially false.

We invented an apparatus on purely mechanical principles, sent our Geodetic Staff to make a mechanical survey, performing what no other man or number of men ever tried to perform. It is a positive fact that no record can be found of an attempt, in modern or ancient times, to determine the contour of the earth's surface as to whether it be concave or convex. An attempt was made a few years ago to prove that the world was not convex. This demonstration was made on optical principles, and the testimony was in favor of non-convexity. The party making the experiments jumped at the assumption that because the earth was not convex, it was necessarily flat. This is the nearest approach that has ever been made to the truth.

Those who believe in and advocate the Copernican system, do so upon the ground of audacious assumption. We devoted much time and money to the application of a strictly accurate method of confirming the discovery of the contour of the earth's surface. We proved the instrument to be absolutely perfect, and found the ratio of the concavity to be about eight inches to the mile, as we had previously determined. Now Mr. Blodgett, ignorant of the instrument and its processes, assumes to know more about the instrument than the inventor and experimenter, and desires to prove that the instrument cannot do, and has not done, what the Koreshans claim it has done and will do, under any and all circumstances.

Our advice to Mr. Blodgett is, that he go to work and prove the Copernican system. If he will accomplish this feat, he will confer an everlasting favor on modern astronomers, who have never yet found or submitted a scintilla of evidence in support of their vagary. He will also, by so doing, put to route the Koreshans, who are making a good deal of headway in the spread of their gospel. When he has met with success—he need not wait for us—we will fulfil our promise in the transfer of the thousand dollars which he will have richly earned. In the meantime, we shall proceed to wage an aggressive warfare on the lines of cosmogony, astronomy, religion, social science, etc., with the full knowledge that the greater our success in the propaganda work we institute, the more rampageous will be the blustering of the advocates of the absurdities we combat.

On the Point of the Sword.

The End of the World.

HE fundamental error of the Christian world regarding the question of "the end," as predicted by inspired men, lies in a misconception of the character of the closing of the now culminating Christian dispensation. We cannot be surprised at the manifest ignorance of the common people upon this subject, when we consider the profundity of the ignorance of their teachers, their willingness to be ignorant, and their determined purpose to shut out every ray of information not coming through the regularly authorized clerical channel. The end of the world came when Noah and his family were saved from the flood, yet the world still continued, and also a portion of its inhabitants. The end came when Jesus the Christ was manifest, for it is declared: "Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." From this, if there were no other proof, we may conclude that "the end of the world" does not imply the destruction of the physical globe. The Jewish dispensation ended with the mission of Jesus and the establishment of his The Christian dispensation will end with the manifestation of the Shepherd and the establishment of the new Church, which will come as the matured fruit of the Christian age.

LESSED are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." There is not a church, outside of the Koreshan Unity-unless we may except the Swedenborgian-that teaches that obedience to the commandments is essential to immortal life. The Roman Catholic and Protestant churches alike believe and teach that faith—and this with them means a blind faith-in the Lord Christ is sufficient to insure immortality. The works of the law by any follower of the Lord, is the only guarantee that the faith possessed is salvatory. When the young man inquired of the Lord, saying: "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" the Lord said, "Keep the commandments." Koreshanity not only emphasizes the necessity for keeping the law, but also scientifically analyzes the Decalogue, defining its principles, and declaring that immortal life can only be obtained through strict obedience to this law.

The recorded exposition of the order of creation in Genesis is a simple and general outline of all subsequent specification given in the Book. It is the most complete, with the most concise and accurate general delineation possible for human language to portray. It is the most scientific, in fact, the only scientific exposition of creation ever made.

CONTRIBUTORS' AND EDITOR'S DEPARTMENTS.

Explanation of the Sixteenth Page.

PARTI

BY PROF. U. G. MORROW.

THE DESIGN on page 16, illustrating the Koreshan Cosmogony, has attracted much attention, caused much comment, and induced some study wherever it has gone. It is welcomed by all our readers for the reason that it conveys definitely the astronomical principles involved in the System—the general physical form and relation of its parts which conspire to produce the phenomena we daily and nightly observe in the physical heavens. The design is multum in parvo—a volume in itself; if our readers will apply as much time in the study of the same as was required to produce it, we feel that they will be richly rewarded. But first, in order that you may appreciate it the more, we desire to tell you a few things about the character of the work and the processes by which it was made.

The design originated and was executed in The FLAMING SWORD office, and is the result of Koreshan education and of practical experience in the actual work of promotion of the Koreshan System. The original drawing is in India ink, reproduced and reduced by the photo-etching process, and is the exact facsimile of the original and actual penwork. It required about four weeks to complete the drawing, and in order to convey some idea of the undertaking, we will state that in the border there are not less than 15,000 cells or corpuscles, each corpuscle requiring a stroke of the pen. All of the shading on the page was done by the dot system-that is, by making dots with the pen, each dot requiring a separate touch, in the right place. In the central circle alone, over "The Cause of Day and Night," there are over 150,000 dots, the dark portions being made by blending of the dots; while on the entire page the dots number nearly 600,000! Every dot and every line had to be executed with care and caution, and in the right place! The design consists of the border, composed of cells fittingly adorning illustrations of the Cellular Cosmogony; seven diagram illustrations and pictures of seven planets; with concise statement of the character and purpose of the System. It is decidedly a scientific and astronomical page, and we assert that there is not another journal in existence that adorns its covers so appropriately, so scientifically, and so artistically as THE FLAMING SWORD!

Standing out prominently above the others are the three larger illustrations, and the two upper ones first claim our attention. We take the hollow globe and cut it in two at about 45° obliquity from the poles, and open the hemispheres out to your view. The concave surface of the land hemisphere is entirely exposed, while in the other, we picture the convex heavens, about 6,000 miles in diameter, suspended in the hollow. The exterior surface of the sphere of the heavens is the sky,—the blue under surface of the great sea of hydrogen—everywhere about 1,000 miles from the concave surface of the earth. The diameter of the earth itself, from side to side, is about 8,000 miles, and is the environ of the universe.

Our geography is obviously different from the old school, our maps representing the concave instead of the convex surface, and have so pictured the earth in the design. If at first glance the concavity is not apparent, hang the page in a bright light and step back from it about six feet-there! The sheet does not appear to possess a continuous flat surface, for the concave hemispheres appear to sink in and beyond the surface of the paper! The shadows curving on the left side of the hemispheres are thrown into the cavity by the edge or rim of the hemisphere, while the ship on the left is on the side of the concave wall, throwing its shadow far down into the cavity. The light is supposed to be back and to the left of the observer, throwing a shadow into the hemispheres, and to the right on the outside. By means of the shadows and meridian lines, the visual effect of the concavity is complete; this is where the art of the design is displayed—and so far as we know it is the first successful attempt to picture a concavity with the eye exactly perpendicular to the center of the cavity. As it is, it stands before the eye with the appearance of a veritable cavity, stripped of the features usually thrown in by the artists to assist in the concave impression in a

In the picture on the right, the sphere of the heavens stands out in bold relief in the cavity, vividly convex, with a map of a number of constellations, the circumpolar stars surrounding the North Star, and southward to about 45° below the equinoctial. The position of the heavens in the picture as related to the poles, is as seen from the latitude of Chicago, with the position of the constellations at about sunset in April. Imagine the two hemispheres closed together, with the sphere of the heavens revolving once in 24 hours, and you have a good idea of the relations of the stationary earth to the revolving sphere above us.

Part II of this series next week, will contain explanation of the central diagram, showing the universe cut in two at the equator.

Mrs. Stanton's Lament.

BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, "the scarred veteran of many a hard fought battle" in defence of woman's rights-rights which too many of this generation have proved themselves unworthy to claim and appreciate, laments that there is none to succeed her, none upon whom her mantle may fall. "The women of today are content to eat of the fruit that I have picked for them," said she recently: "but there is not one who has the courage to climb the tree of knowledge and experience, to pluck of it for others. Such an act involves toil and privation; it exposes the actor to the criticism, vituperation, abuse, and calumny, of the world, and it requires courage, fortitude, tenacity, and ability." She regrets further that in her old age no one greater, better, more energetic than herself has taken up the weapons which she must relinquish to fight the battles of her sex.

Mrs. Stanton is mistaken; she is ignorant of the fact that there exists today a little nucleus of brave, devoted women who, wedding practice to profession, not in word only, but in deed and truth, have laid friends, reputation, comfort, ease, all that renders life pleasing according to worldly standards, upon the altar of woman's emancipation from the thraldom of ages. The Koreshan movement in its inception, is so little known, so perversely maligned, that it may never have come to Mrs. Stanton's notice. It is, however, a fact that no other movement today, so faithfully and uncompromisingly champions the restoration of woman to her rightful kingdom. It sanctions no halfway measures; is not forging fresh fetters for her ankles while it unclasps the manacles from her wrists; does not curtail in power while it grants in education. It offers her freely the throne of intellectual, national, religious, legal, and, last but not least, personal liberty that she may stand forth before the world by divine right, a queen.

Those who have hitherto allied themselves with the Koreshan movement have found, indeed, that it involves "criticism, vituperation, abuse, and calumny," but they are willing to make a track to the water's edge. They know that the perfect woman whose coming is as the rising of the sun, must soon appear to usher in the new day. It is the fate of every new movement to be misunderstood and misrepresented. Conservatism is forever reaching out its iron hand to stay the swiftly flying wheels of progress. Who, now, is more widely read and quoted than he who said: "Beware when the great God lets loose a thinker"? Yet there are those still living who remember the occasion when an address by the Sage of Concord was followed by prayer from an outraged conservative clergyman that from future hearing of such nonsense as had just been uttered, the good Lord would be graciously pleased in his mercy to deliver all members of that audience. Ridicule and vilification by the press constitute the Inquisitorial tortures of the nineteenth century. The inaugurators of Woman Suffrage movement were mercilessly scourged, but their devotion to a great principle has at last won gratitude and honorable recognition; so the book of history is full of encouragement, and those who possess the "courage, fortitude, tenacity and ability" to join the Koreshan body may rest assured that although the scorching fires of calumny burn hot about them, their hour of vindication and triumph must surely

The woman question and the sex question are the burning questions of the day, the despair alike of virile intellects and wild eyed theorists, while the novelists have treated them adnauseam. In his "History of European Morals," Lecky declares the social evil is beyond the power of man's will to check or of his intellect to adjust. The Koreshan System finds solution for this and every other vexed question, in the realm of pure science.

The doctrine of conservation and correlation of energy is as true in the domain of mental as of physical force. History shows that celibate organizations have existed in all ages, which, though subject to timic degeneration, are agreed to have been pure in their inception. It is this chaste potency conserved and handed down from one age to another, that constitutes the balancing power to counteract the evils of license, while at the same time it provides for the Messianic manifestation of the age. It was this spiritual force transformed to physical energy and concreted, that appeared nineteen hundred years ago as the perfect man. The same potency properly applied and directed is yet to stem the surging tide of evil and deliver woman from the curse of subjection.

Mrs. Stanton may rest upon her laurels, confident that the emancipation of her sex is in the hands of a Leader greater, wiser, more powerful than herself. Woman's cause is man's; they rise or fall together; but her cause is also God's, and the strong right arm of Omnipotence is raised for her protection.

After three hundred years of so called science, Koreshanity brings to light the original alchemy which enables mankind to comprehend the laws of Deity, by which it becomes possible to effect the reunion of God and man, making humanity the temple of righteousness—a fit habitation for the Almighty.

The fruit of regeneration is the multiplication of the sons of God. The spiritual germs of regeneration were in the Christ, and from him planted in the viduals of the church; that is, in all who in the commencement of the age were receptive to the spirit of Christ.

Science is the light of the mind, the guide to life.

Must War Necessarily Enrich the Money Lender?

BY PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

AR need not enrich the money lender unless the country abdicates its own prerogatives in his favor, as it has done for more than a quarter of a century. The Hazard circular, issued by British bankers in 1862, said, not that a great debt need to be created out of the present war, but, you American bankers "will see to it that a great debt is made out of it, and that the bonds are made the base of your paper currency." When, under the guidance of these bankers, the process of funding in interest-bearing bonds what was then being used as the money of the country commenced, it was practically out of debt, and might have remained so but for that process of funding, of which the elder Pitt said truly, that when the Americans began they would find they had lost their liberties.

In the beginning of the war of the Rebellion, the money-changers wanted (as they had done in the beginning of the war of 1812) to furnish the country their "promise-to-pay money," that was not money at all, and would not have been if they had not already suspended the pretense of specie payments (which is never more than a pretense) at the rate of 80 professed dollars for a 100-dollar bond at 6 per cent, specie interest. President Lincoln and Secretary Chase thought they knew something better than that, and advised the issue of treasury notes, which the country had done many times before, with this difference: that whereas before they had always been receivable for all government dues, and were always at, or above, par, they proposed that these be legal tender for all dues, public and private. When amid great rejoicings of all the people but the banker-speculating class, this beneficent measure had passed the lower House, whose right it is to introduce measures for raising money, Wall street money gamblers, seeing that a chance to speculate in the life-blood of the people was slipping through their fingers, rallied and sent a deputation to Congress a hundred strong, and when they were not able to destroy the measure entirely, succeeded in crippling it by the exception clause, so that Thad. Stevens, the head of the Ways and Means Committee, said its own father would not know it, Human demands are continuous, and the channels through which these supplies are contributed must remain unobstructed or the consequences are derangements of the body politic, and the whole fabric is threatened with revolution and dissolution.

Economy of labor, its reduction to the minimum standard compatible with the just balance of all the functions of the organism, is the first step toward the adjustment of functions to a perfect physiological standard.

Koreshanity involves the application of absolute science to all the processes of life, including, necessarily, the application of the science of government to its prac-making it a most destructive instead of a beneficent measure, thereby creating two kinds of money; one that would rapidly appreciate in value for bond-holders, and another, which was depreciated and dishonored by act of Congress, for the soldier and the laborer. Under the operation of this iniquitous measure, a very large amount of the nation's indebtedness cost the bond-holder forty to fifty cents on the dollar, in gold, and when these robbers had secured their ill-gotten gains, these bonds were, by other villainous acts of a venal Congress, raised to par, thus giving these thieves many hundreds of millions of dollars.

By such acts of bad faith was our national debt originated, and by a similar process it has been constantly increased, if not in the number of dollars it represents, at least in their purchasing power-which is their power to enslave labor. By such a criminal process has our present enormous debt been contracted; but not one dollar of it was necessary or just. The people would hail with joy the issue of treasury notes enough to furnish all the money needed for the present war, knowing that that would ease up the burden of hard times that has been the result of the ruinous policy of contraction that has been so long continued in the interest, not of the people, but of bankers and usurers. Such means of raising revenue would put the money into the hands of the people for present and much-needed use and not for their oppression, as is generally the case when put into the hands of usurers.

If patriotism requires that the citizen hasten to put his life in peril for the good of his country, it certainly requires that the citizen who still remains in safety should furnish the means of sustaining him and those dependent on him while so doing, without enslaving him (should he survive) and other citizens and their posterity, to the sordid tribe of usurers. Men have no right to enslave themselves, much less their innocent posterity. Congressman Kellogg, of Illinois, was entirely right when he said, during the war of the Rebellion: "If I had my way, if I drafted men, I would draft money to sustain them, and if it did not come forward, which it never does, I would compel it to."

WHEN Brigham Young, the great Mormon apostle, announced his belief that the Almighty is simply a "great, big man," he expressed the gross conception of God common to the ignorant masses. Of course, he considered that God is a white man; but the Chinese would not tolerate thistheir God must be conceived to be a Chinaman in order to command their worship. In all religions there is the impress of anthropomorphism that cannot be entirely expelled from the minds of even those who deny that God exists in human form. The Jewish race, which was chosen as the channel of transmission of life from the days of Abraham, looked forward to the coming of a personal Messiah, or manifestation of the Almighty. He came nineteen hundred years ago, the product of the Jewish race, and was necessarily a Jew. He was a man-a physical demonstration of the humanity of God. The Negro race now has its conception; Bishop Turner, of the African M. E. church, concludes that God himself is a negro, and asserts that he has no respect for negroes who do not believe that the God they worship is as black as they are! The negro race will contribute its quota of energy and material in the creation of the new race of men now about to appear in the earth. The Americans are a mixed people, containing the bloods of all nations. Columbus started the stream of Latin, Teutonic, and Anglo-Saxon emigration to the land of the Indians; and destiny directed the negro to the New World. The reds, the whites, and the blacks possess elements which, when scientifically united, will constitute the coming man of the Golden Age in America and the world.

The modern church is wedded to the competitive system and to modern science. The world is cursed by these three manifestations of ignorance. Each of the three great systems unmistakably indicates a distinctive characteristic of the modern mind -each marks a particular phase of delusion, the result of the world's retrogressive evolution. Modern science is unreasonable and irrational, and it necessarily follows that the reasoning faculties of the mind entertaining the fallacy are demoralized to the extent of its influence upon conclusions. The church is superstitious, and has destroyed all true conceptions of liberty and justice, and blotted out the knowledge of the laws of creation, and of moral progress; while the competitive system is an example of the influence of fallacy upon the social and economic relations of humanity. The rapid development of mankind in the future will be the result of the complete destruction of these three forms of fallacy, and the establishment of that System of Universology, the three divisions of which—theology, cosmogony, and social economy-are the exact opposite of the three phases of fallacy which have cursed the world for centuries. It is a logical conclusion that if we can locate that which actually causes the present demoralized condition of the world, we can by the application of the exact opposite, restore that which has been destroyed. Koreshanity is the System of human enlightenment, of human liberty.

A moment's reflection might focus the attention of even the casual reader, to say nothing of the "scientist" (!), upon the enormous waste that would result if the universe were constructed on the basis of the modern astronomical fallacy. In it a gigantic sun, nearly 900,000 miles in diameter, is supposed to consume an enormous amount of fuel for the generation of energies for a few planets, the combined mass of which would be less, by a thousand times, than the mass of the sun! An amateur astronomer has endeavored to patch the matter up a little, and suggests that the gas surrounding the sun is thicker at the sun's equator than at the poles, and acts as a lens, throwing the sun's rays in the great zone of the ecliptic, thereby economizing much of the solar energies. Even then, the planets would receive and intercept only about one billionth part of all of the sun's energies! Practically, all of the solar energies would be darting out into illimitable space like so many bullets and never hitting anything. Great universe, that! There is no such nonsense in the Koreshan System. The inner surface of the great cell receives and utilizes all of the energies generated in the solar sphere at the center of the cell.

The modern church is not a factor of civilization; it does not reform, it does not enlighten-it has contributed nothing toward the liberty of humankind. The mother church counts her millions of subjects, three fourths of whom are superstitious and illiterate. Spain is as completely saturated with the religion of modern Christianity as any nation in the earth. During the past fifteen hundred years she has carried the doctrines of the church to more peoples than any other nation; and in the same time and in the same territory, she has murdered and starved more human beings than all the powers of the earth combined! She has used the superstitions of an apostate church to keep her colonies in subjection. Cuba for centuries has felt the oppression of the church through the secular power of Spain. The Insular Patriots are now fighting to throw off the yoke of oppression of the corrupt church and state. Time carries the religious fallacies and systems swiftly onward to destruction. The mediæval church threw upon the pages of human history the darkest picture the world has ever witnessed; and now dire vengeance and judgment will soon overtake the system stained with the blood of all nations!

The march of empire is westward. The rumblings of war betoken the downfall of the Latin kingdoms, the death of the Latin race, and the end of Catholic barbarities and atrocities. The result will be the demonstration of the supremacy of the Anglo-Saxon peoples-the superiority of America. Four hundred years ago the geography of the American continent was unknown; then, its shores had only been touched here and there by Spanish adventurers. After three hundred years, the powers of the East claimed possession of the entire New World. In 1800, the wings of Spanish dominion spread from East to West; one half of America was then enlisted among her possessions. The mighty acceleration of the forces of human liberty has practically stripped Spain of all her territory in the western hemisphere. The Spanish sun is setting. The century closes with the destruction of Spanish misrule in the West; the dispensation closes with the destruction of all forms of political oppression in both hemispheres, and with the establishment of the coming Theocracy in the earth, in the light of the rising Sun of Liberty, the Light of Truth-Koreshan Science. America is the nation of Destiny!

In some Pennsylvania schools, a list of questions concerning the Almighty has been submitted to the students for answer, presumably for the purpose of obtaining a knowledge of the various conceptions existing in the juvenile minds concerning theology. The Labor Leader protests on the ground that nobody knows anything about God—or at least, the mystery has been too much for the greatest minds of all ages; and therefore, the questions are useless. This will be news to the people generally, for it is usually supposed that the theologians are thoroughly familiar with His purposes and works. If any of our readers wish to put the matter to the test, let them ask the nearest "minister" the following questions, and see what answers will be received: "Who is God? What is he? What does he look like? Where does he live? What does he do? How old is he? Did anybody ever see him? Why did he make so many fools? How do you know?" By way of contrast, the same questions might be asked The Flaming Sword. Koreshan Science answers the questions definitely.

The reason we say so much about science is, that science is the basis of all reason and conclusion in all other spheres of thought. The science of the physical universe is the basis of the true theology, because the natural creation is the expression of the Almighty; and hence, in order to read his character, we must first understand the form and function of that which he has created. This is the declaration of Koreshan Science, the light of the age. Nineteen hundred years ago the same truth was expressed: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." Rom. i: 20. The cosmos is the infallible index to the character of the Almighty. Do you believe it? We would like to see some one endeavor to arrive at a correct conclusion as to who, what, and where God is, from the basis of modern astronomy! Up to the present time no one has claimed to possess a knowledge of God from the premise of modern science; for ignorance cannot reveal the truth.

If the church, the competitive system, and modern astronomy are the fallacies which curse the world, the men engaged in the promotion of these systems of delusion are a useless class of men—parasites on human society. There is not a clergyman in existence that has ever put forth any project for the permanent practical benefit of humanity; no banker or capitalist has ever originated anything that aids the producers of the world's wealth, and no astronomer has ever made a discovery that has contributed to the world's progress. The practical men of the world are outside the ranks of the clergy; the true reformers and statesmen have always fought the bankers and the thieves; and all of the discoveries of modern times have been made by men outside the ranks of the educated and recognized orthodox scientists—as actual count and canvass of the field of discovery will reveal.

Failure inevitably attends all so called reform. There can be no true success in anything where the course is wrong. The first thing is to "know you are right, and then go ahead." This is a common and true maxim; but because Koresh has instituted the genuine System of reform on this basis, affirming that we have a right to go ahead because the true course has been discovered, many people, by their actions in opposing the Koreshan System, assert that the best way to do a thing is to remain ignorant of how to do it! There can be no success attending any social reform until the correct theory is accompanied by the operation of sufficient mental dynamis and energies of life to change the mind and nature of the men of the world. Science, not superstition, must define the true social system; knowledge, not ignorance, must direct the cause of reform.

Modern education does not educate—it does exactly the opposite. It is nothing more than a stuffing process. To educate means to draw out the faculties of the mind, from e, out, and ducere, to lead or to draw. The modern schools do not train the mind; they do not teach the principles of original thought nor the process of reasoning. The process of memorizing the contents of text-books deaden the mental faculties. The colleges and universities of the world have added nothing of practical benefit to humanity. The ingenuity of the world does not originate in the school room. In proof of this we point to the fact that the world's great men have not been college and university graduates. Modern education is a society polish. Graduates are turned out by the thousands yearly, but where are they? They are not in the higher walks of life!

Now let that class of reformers who are so loudly proclaiming the doctrine of universal brotherhood, claim the Spaniard as his lovely brother! Christendom has never acted Christlike. The "Christian" nations of Europe have enjoyed only enforced peace for centuries. The United States and Spain, two so called Christian nations, are now at war, the people of each claiming to be meek and lowly followers of the greatest Character of human history!

There is not a single invention in the world today of any practical merit, that is the result of modern orthodox "science,"—astronomy, chemistry, or physics. Modern "discovery" has not been the result of the application of scientific principles; discovery has rather been along the lines of accident and of practical experiment, and is in no way connected with the hypothesis or theories which have darkened the path of progress.

The White House is not necessarily a symbol of absolute integrity and purity of motives. If it were, the United States would have a case of desecration of national emblems and sacrilege of sacred principles and laws.

Two things or conditions prevent most people from understanding the Koreshan System of Science,—through no fault of ours: They wouldn't if they could, and they couldn't if they would!

It is very easy to originate new and "advanced" astronomical, religious, and social systems, since the promulgation of the Koreshan System of Universology in the world for nearly thirty years!

What a change the world would experience if deception were not practiced by the people, the physician, the preacher, the politician, the pope, and the priest!

Looking from Chicago to St. Louis.

(1) I cannot see why a good telescope should not enable one to see St. Louis from Chicago, if concavity be true. The geolineation of the first half would be counter-acted exactly by the last half, and so rendered practically nil, and I think a good telescope would meet the vertical per-spective. Could you, by half the distance, say from Springfield? At night, with electric lights burning, you could surely see it. (2) Now I want to propose to you another scheme, which would settle the question of convexity, flatness, or concavity, beyond all dispute. Find a level piece of quiet water, having a stretch of about 6 miles—a canal if possible. Place stakes 10 or 12 feet in height, at the beginning, end, and middle of the six miles, with lights at the tops. Train a theodolite on the first and last. the hair-line is above the middle light, it will prove concavity; if below, the convexity; if at the light on the middle stake, it will prove the earth flat. The difference between the convex and concave would be 10 or 12 feet, I suppose; at all events, there is plenty of space to settle the question .-J. A., Philadelphia.

(1) Like many others, you fail to consider the important factors of perspective and incurvation of visual rays, when you propose to look from Chicago to St. Louis. Images of objects we see are implanted on the retina of the eye. Correct interpretation of what we see necessitates a scientific comprehension of the function of vision. Looking out over a plane of land or water, the first mile makes a picture of definite vertical space; second mile, a shorter picture; the third, still shorter, while the fourth mile appears to drop out of sight, at an altitude of about 10 feetthe fourth mile is in the vanishing point in the eye, or where geolinear space fails to make a picture. A telescope will increase the vertical space of the picture on the retina, and will extend the horizon of land or water beyond the horizon or vanishing point of the unaided eye. Beyond the horizon in the telescope the concave surface appears to drop away out of sight. At sufficient altitude, with clear atmosphere, St. Louis could be seen from Chicago, but the concavity would not be apparent in the way you suggest in your former letter. Perspective will not admit of vision of objects at different angles up the slope of the concavity; the horizon is on a level with the eye, or nearly so, and rises with the eye to the highest altitude accessible, until the eye seems to be directly above the center of a huge bowl. In this way the concavity is apparent to the eye. (2) If there were no such thing as perspective, the experiment you suggest would settle the question as you say. Do you think that the lights on the stakes would appear to be in their actual positions on any surface the earth might be imagined to have?

Don't you think that the middle and last stakes would appear to be shorter than they really are, and consequently their vertical points apparently out of their true position? Yes,—well, we should say so! Consequently, the lights would not occupy the apparent relations you assume to define. The earth's concave curvature of about 8 inches to the mile lacks 5 inches to the mile of filling the vertical perspective, and hence the earth appears to curvate downward beyond the horizon at about 5 inches to the mile, as tested by stakes. Such observations interpreted by demonstrated laws of vision, demonstrate the concavity. We have conducted about 100 experiments similar to the ones you propose, during the past two years, and know whereof we speak,-from actual experience.

A Novel Astronomer.

CLINTON, IOWA, April 19, 1898. EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Some one has been so kind as to send me a publication called The FLAMING SWORD. The publication is of no use to me; please do not send it any more. I am a man 70 years old, or nearly so, and have made somewhat of a study of astronomy, and have seen a good many planets by the aid of the telescope. Have seen the light cut off from the moon when it was in opposition, and the body cutting off the light was round; and if anybody told me that it was done by the interference of a square or a cube-shaped body, or a hollow spherical body, I could not believe it. So you see, it is a waste of your energy to send any such nonsense to me. I am a reasoner—first, last, and all the time. Respectfully,—J. A. GREENHILL.

An astronomer who has seen "a good many planets" by the aid of telescope or otherwise, is ahead of us surely! We have seen all of the planets there are to be seen, and we have made pictures of them on the Sixteenth page of THE FLAMING Sword -there are seven of them. We have seen "a good many" eclipses of the moon, though, with the light cut off when it was in opposition; and if anybody told us that it was done by anything that is square, triangular, or any other shape than round, we could not believe it! So, where is the difference between us and Mr. Greenhill? Why, he believes, we suppose, that the earth is convex, while we know it is concave. The way we know it is by the application of logic to known and demonstrated premises, to the exclusion of all assumption. If the writer sums up his premises in the above for the unalterable conclusions that render Koreshan Astronomy to be nonsense, we will accord him the exclusive right to think of himself as "a reasoner-first, last, and all the time," for we do not wish to join him in the conclusion; we rather incline to reach similar conclusions concerning him that he has reached concerning us. He is eclipsed, with his light cut off because he is in opposition!

Gold is Not the Panacea.

J. Isaac H., Winchester, Va.—The Koreshan System of Universology was founded for the specific purpose of freeing the world of humanity from every conceivable form of bondage. It embraces a complete system of Religio-Science and and Social Economy, involving not only a knowledge of the principles and laws of the new order, but also the knowledge of how to make a practical application of the same. The successful operation of the Equitable Commerce of the Koreshan System, with its established center and branches all over the country, is the remedy for all social and political evils of modern times. The manufacture of gold will not be a factor in the establishment of universal peace, but a factor in the world's impending revolution of war and bloodshed. The Founder of the Koreshan System will not contribute material for the setting up of the golden calf. Gold is already being manufactured in New York, St. Louis, Chicago, and other places, by various processes. The only object we have in referring to the manufacture of gold is to enable a blind world to see the fallacy of modern chemistry, and to assist in the comprehension of the truth of the Koreshan Alchemy. Koreshanity is the genuine system of reformation and recreation of man. The scope of the System. the purpose of its establishment, and the stupendous work of application of its principles for the benefit of the world at large, will not permit us to seek to promote the modern money system which we know will ultimately be destroyed.

The Law of Sin and Death.

"Angel of the Three Crosses," Ocala, Fla.-We note your diagrams and what you say concerning them. We fancy that if you are an angel of truth, your conclusions should be in harmony with demonstrated facts-which we find to be not the case; and again, if you are right, we would be wrong, and we hardly think that an angel would ask beings of the other kind what their opinion is concerning angelic conclusions. If you will start out with the scientific facts of the propagation of life on any plane in the universe, you might be able to see the law of life as well as the law of death op-Digitized by GOOSI erative. Jesus the Christ was the seed of the anthropostic world; he was produced in accordance with the laws of life, and by process of absorption was planted in the race-he crossed himself with imperfect humanity and entered into a condition of sin and death during the present dispensation. He became obedient to the law of the cross, and transgressed the laws of life. In his transmission in humanity he became sin; he was metamorphosed from the plane of divine life to sinful flesh—he was counted among the transgressors. Law is eternal, and has never been and will never be abolished. A seed is resurrected only through its death-its death in the soil. Law existed in the Garden of Eden, and will exist there again.

Movement of Sun and North Star.

O. W. B., Cedar Rapids, Ia.—Regarding the motion of the sun as compared with that of Polaris, we referred to the matter in a recent Sword, on the basis of appearances. Facing the south with watch in hand, IX would point toward the east, and III toward the west. Watch hands move from IX to III; the sun moves from left to right, in the same direction between those hours, in an apparent concave arc. Polaris moves in the same direction, ascertained by actual test. You may have in mind the actual position of the sun, moving in a convex are during our period of daylight; from that standpoint, the sun travels in a direction opposite to that of the watch hands. By reference to the cuts on the Sixteenth page, you will find that the diurnal motion of the sun and all the stars are in the same direction. Polaris appears to move in the opposite direction from the actual movement of the sun, because the convex heavens are made to appear concave through visual incurvation and perspective; hence the circumpolar stars, while in reality curvating upward from our latitude, (see cuts) appear to curve downward toward the horizon. We believe these suggestions will clear up the difficulties you mention.

* * * Our Scientific Ultimatum.

Termination of the Blodgett Diplomatic Dispute Concerning Periods and Other Points.

EDITOR OF THE FLAMING SWORD:—You have done as I supposed you would do: you have jumped clear out of the ring and taken to the woods. You now say you will not accept any one to run the line except one of your pupils. Of course, one of your pupils would run the line to suit you—would point your concern towards the water without regard to right angles with the perpendicular. I thank you for owning, however, that I would have no difficulty in convincing every disinterested party by the application of your own methods, that your concave theory is false. We will let that pass for what it is worth, while I make you a better offer:

If you will send me those numbers of your paper containing an account of your Florida survey, I will write a criticism of that experiment, and show that it presents no evidence that we are living on a concave surface. This will be for you to publish in THE FLAMING SWORD, with the request that the readers will mail you their opinions as to whether I have succeeded in my effort or not. If a majority say that I have proved by your own record that the experiment was too imperfect to be reliable and conclusive evidence, you are to pay me $50. If a majority say I do not make this apparent, we will stop there, you publishing the names and addresses of all who express an opinion on the subject, stating which way each person votes. You cannot object to the character of this tribunal, for they are your own flock. If I do not succeed in convincing your readers, you lose nothing; and if I succeed, you save $950 from your display offer. us see if you have pluck to face this.—SAMUEL BLODGETT, Grafton, N. Dak.

Involved in our contention that the earth is a concave cell, are questions of which there could be no satisfactory settlement in the field of experimentation, in the minds of the world, without the co-operation of both sides in open contest, in accordance with specific lines of experiments, agreed upon by all parties before the beginning of the operations. In the promulgation of the Koreshan System, and through the publication of the evidences of the truthfulness of its premise, we will induce sufficient agitation to attract the attention of the "big guns" of modern astronomy. It will be worth our while then, to open up every avenue in THE FLAMING SWORD for a discussion that will count for something. Our proposition to have representatives from both sides-principals, referees, judges, reporters, etc., is a statement of what would be the natural adjustment of things in a contest where facts are at stake. Representatives from the two sides would insure the accuracy of the work, on lines which both sides would accept as conclusive. In the adjustment of the facts of observation and experiment to logical conclusions, some mental operations are necessary, and we propose to enter the field with scientific men of sufficient mental calibre to appreciate what would naturally be required of a corps of persons appointed to settle the issue!

We have said nothing about any pupil of the Editor of THE FLAMING SWORD running any line to suit anybody. The Editor of THE SWORD received his education from the Founder of the Koreshan System, and is not aware that he has any pupils or disciples. Mr. Blodgett has not even learned to distinguish between the Editor of THE SWORD and the Founder of the Koreshan System, though their names appear in THE SWORD in several places. If it be supposed that one of our people would "run the line" to suit us, we have all the more reason to have matters arranged in such a way that the survey would not be made to suit Mr. B. He is afraid to leave it to the kind of a committee we stipulate. He does not now desire to pursue any reasonable course to "overthrow" Koreshan conclusions, and for that reason jumps to another proposition, entirely foreign to our offer. He now asks to criticise our experiments, after his unsuccessful attempt to arrange the programme so that we could have no opportunity to criticise his work or to have competent men pass judgment on the character of his demonstrations; until now he has not even suggested that he would employ our methods. He does not even know what they are, and until now has never asked to be informed of our modus operandi! At first, he had "methods" of his own. He has found that even his "evidences" are not absolutely conclusive. and he foregoes the pleasure of announcing to the world what his plans were, for which we asked in accordance with our proposition.

The blunders of Mr. Blodgett, his unreasonable demands for a committee already persuaded that the earth is convex, to pass upon his experiments, his disregard of the fact that it requires two or more to reach an agreement, his insinuations, his lack of experience in lines of scientific experimentation, his several changes of tactics in the published correspondence, have afforded us and our readers some amusement, and have led us to conclude that a continuation of the same would prove to be ridiculous to our readers.

It is not a part of the rational settlement of any question to stake the issue upon the votes or the opinions of a number of readers, whether ours or others, and we will enter into no agreement to accept articles for THE FLAMING SWORD until they pass under the scrutiny of its Editor. We will not pay $50 subject to the vote of anybody who has not observed the facts that we have observed. Mr. Blodgett is hunting for names and addresses of persons with whom he can correspond concerning a new book called "The Scientific Skeleton," Price 25 cts., of which he has the misfortune to be the author; so it would be a good thing if he could procure a few thousand names from our list of readers. He has written us for such a list. We advertise his book here, to save further announcement.

We stand to our original offer of $1,000, with the increase to $10,000 as proposed. The offer is open to any one who will disprove absolutely, beyond all dispute or question, and beyond all possibility of refutation or change by any subsequent discoveries or demonstrations, that the earth's surface is concave. The whole matter of proofs or tests must be reduced to mathematical and geometrical certainty. The other side must understand the issue, and thoroughly appreciate the situation, as well as the rights of the two schools in the contest, and the duties devolving upon the representatives of each. In these particulars Mr. Blodgett has fallen below par. Up to this time he does not even know what are the facts of the premise of the Koreshan System; he has presumed to attack that which he does not understand. That is the reason he changes tactics and armor every time we turn on the searchlight. Mr. Blodgett has backed out, and we await consideration and acceptance of our offer by some one of still greater calibre. If Mr. Blodgett does not like this, let him hunt up an able astronomer or recognized scientist of some influence, to champion his cause for him, and we will begin negotiations with the astronomer or scientist, state terms, and secure the $10,ooo to meet a corresponding sum on the other side of the scales!

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

Accept my sincere thanks for The Flaming Sword. The last number with the wonderful, beautiful drawing, surely ought to make skeptics think. Enclosed find 25 cents for a copy of the New Geodesy. I must have it to loan. You may send me a few circulars and blanks. I must try to sell a few copies of the New Geodesy. I do not want any commission—not that I am in good circumstances, far from it. But you know true souls get beyond greed. I feel an honest interest and a desire to show my appreciation of your liberality to me as well. I could say much, but consideration is due your time. You will sense all I have to say.—O. M. C., San Francisco, Cal.

I notice with a glow of pleasure the many commendatory letters you receive from your readers; and I often say to my acquaintances here, that if all but one of the reform papers in the world, and the magazines to boot, were to be striken out of existence, and it were left to me to decide what that one should be, my answer would be, THE FLAMING SWORD! To say that it is all good, altogether good, is hardly complimentary enough. It seems to me full of divine and life-giving potency; and I, alas! how little am I able to help on its great work!—E. C., Natick, Mass.

The literature arrived all right, including THE SWOEDS, which I did not expect. I will distribute the pamphlets. I think the Sixteenth page is immense. Will send money for copies of the New Geodesy when it is issued.—E. J. M., Peyton, Colo.

Enclosed please find $3 to renew my subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD, and to obtain the Arena for one year—the two for $3, as advertised. Our time for THE SWORD expired in January. We like the paper; it is interesting and instructive.—T. L. R., Salem, Ind.

Allow me to congratulate you on the Sixteenth Page. I had imagined it would be a work of art, and a fitting advertisement of the foremost reform publication of America, but lo, there were four times as much as I had anticipated. The work is certainly an imperishable monument to the intellectual capacities of THE SWORD Editor.—W. T. P., Peyton, Colo.

I dearly love THE FLAMING SWORD, and would gladly sacrifice one meal a day to have it. It is the leader of all papers in the world, in my estimation.—Mrs. O. A. L., Atlantic City, N. J.

A Voice from Far-away Australia.

49 CREMORNE ST., RICHMOND, MEL-BOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

DR. CYBUS R. TEED;

DEAR SIR:—I have for a long time desired to communicate with you, but have been unable to get your address. Even now I am not sure that I address my letter correctly, but hope to reach you.

My desire is to learn something of your Koreshan work. I have read so much adverse comment that I assume that there is something really good in Koreshanity. I am not prompted by mere curiosity, but solely from a desire to know the Truth; and if you have the Truth, I hope you will be so kind as to teach it to me. I have tried to get hold of a copy of your FLAM-ING SWORD, or any of your printed literature, but failed to find anything in Australia. I should be glad if you would send me a few copies of your periodical litera-ture, as well as any books or pamphlets that are calculated to explain to an honest, and I hope devout, inquirer, the princi-ples and doctrines you advocate. I am sick of the shams and fallacies of popular religion, with its hypocrisy and humbug, and long to get out of this darkness into clearer light of the pure and true religion. Can you help me?

I shall be glad to hear from you by return mail, and to receive any instructive reading matter that you can send me. There are many out here in these colonies who, like myself, desire to reach the light of Truth, and I hope by your aid to be instructed in the faith of the Koreshans, and then possibly at no distant date, you may have a branch of the work here in Australia. May God help and prosper your efforts in the good cause. With kind regards and good wishes, believe me to be, dear sir, very faithfully yours, H. W. M.

Rail-Sanding Apparatus for Railways.

Automatic and Non-Automatic Action Combined; Has Been in Practical use for Four Years!

This rail-sanding apparatus for railways has been used practically and satisfactorily on a railroad vehicle for four years. It is very simple, and consequently inexpensive. It saves time, property, and lives.

The rails are sanded under all wheels of the train, locomotive or car at the same instant in case of emergency, whether or not the engineer has thought or time to apply it, ensuring the most sudden stop possible compatible with safety. Run ning time is very considerably shortened by added ability to un closer to stops before applying the brakes. Dampness and clogging of lower ends of the sandpipes are prevented, obviating wrecks from that cause.

Referring to patents Nos.438,568 and 469,-263, some of their features are eliminated, greatly simplifying the apparatus without in the least impairing, but adding greatly to the effectiveness of the same. For further particulars, address, W. F. McCREADY.

Definition of Mind and Mental Spheres.

Please give definition of mind and mental spheres as used in The Sword: "Men are produced from mind through mental and physiological functions, and enter mental spheres at corruptible dissolution."—J. N., Minneapolis, Minn.

IND is reciprocally related to matter. It does not exist separate from, nor independent of it. If atoms of matter, as for instance, two of hydrogen and one of oxygen, enter into combustion by the introduction of an igniting spark, the atoms are both destroyed as hydrogen and oxygen and are transformed to water. The principle which attracts them is the affinity each has for the other. The principle differs nothing from that which attracts two persons through mental affiliation, except that in the attraction of the three atoms it is atomic and simple, while in the attraction of two persons many atoms have, by the power of attraction and combustion, entered into molecular and organic union. When two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen enter into union, they are both destroyed. There is no hydrogen in water, nor is there any oxygen. The so called liberation of hydrogen and oxygen in the combustion of water is a creation through the law of alchemic rather than chemic action. You may say, prove it. We do not have to prove it. The theory that an atom is eternal, is not proven. The theory that water is a chemical combination of hydrogen and oxygen, was never proved. These are mere statements; there never has been a proof offered. The common atomic theory is merely an hypothesis,—nothing more.

If you destroy two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen, a certain amount of energy is generated. This energy is the substance of the two equivalents of the one, and the one equivalent of the other. It may be asked, How can the water be precipitated, the amount of which is the same as the two substances entering into the "compound," as proven by the fact that the same quantities of hydrogen and oxygen may be taken from the water as was consumed to produce it, while at the same time an equal amount of energy is liberated? We answer, by the mere fact that as much energy is required to disintegrate the water, together with the two primary "elements," as is liberated in the combustion. The ordinary scientist declares that energy is a mere mode of motion. He has never proved it;—it is a mere hypothesis predicated upon a prior assumption. It does not comport with facts, and we deny the hypothesis. It is a ridiculous absurdity, and is the result of human ignorance of the universal laws of form and function.

Destroy an atom of matter and it becomes energy. Destroy a given amount of energy and it becomes matter. When two equivalents of hydrogen and one of oxygen come in contact, they are drawn by the law of affinity. That affinity is touch; the touch is feeling, and the relation of the two is experience. This is mind; this is simple mentality. When thousands of atoms unite through affinity and separate by antagonism, and then reunite by more complex affinity, experiences multiply. Oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, carbon, sulphur, phosphorus, fluorine, chlorine, sodium, calcium, potassium, magnesium, aluminium, cuprum, etc., enter into composition and union in the human structure. They form the constituency of the blood; they form the bones, muscles, and nerves; they comprise the nerve juices, and enter into alchemical combustion in the cell, fibre, and tissue of the brain, generating the complex energy called mind. There is no mind that does not rest upon, and is not the result of the disintegration of matter. Mind, then, is that state and quality of activity obtaining in the unities of matter, by which there is a reciprocal interchange of the substances called matter and energy. Matter cannot create mind independently of the reciprocal relation of spirit or energy and matter. Mind cannot create matter independently of the reciprocal relation of the two. Both mind and matter are created and perpetuated by the persistent reciprocity of the two, in organic or compound relation.

Mental spheres are individual (vidual) and universal. Every vidual being in the material form, is made up of myriads of cells. Every cell is the generator of a specific kind of energy. The emanation of energy from the activity of the cell, whether it be in the brain or body, is a conscious entity. The perpetuity of the entity depends upon the perpetuity of the generator. This aggregate generation and emanation of myriads of differentiation in quality, comprises the spiritual sphere of the vidual being. This is the spiritual sphere of the lesser degree. Groups of people in the greater aggregation comprise an aggregate sphere of the greater degree. The people of a given denomination, we will say the Baptists, Methodists, or Presbyterians, etc., constitute the sphere of which the Baptists, etc., are the groundwork or material basis. What is true of one denomination is equally true of all. No spiritual sphere of any given denomination could exist without the material denomination as its basis and groundwork, nor could any given denomination exist without the spiritual sphere of that corresponding existence.

The mind is an aggregation of mental energies derived from the activities of the cell and fibre of the brain. supplied materially through the reciprocal functions of the brain and body. The blood conveys the multitude of alchemical constituents held in organic solution, to the cells of the encephalon (brain), and the afferent nerves, in a corresponding but more infinitely refined state, convey the solution of the nerve fluid to the same cells. Every so called element entering into the creation of the fluids of the blood and the nerves, is destroyed as matter through a process of combustion which generates from it the energy called mind. There is also poured into these cells through cellular respiration, the aura of the cell, from the influx of all other minds; for as the emanations of any one star pour into all other stars, so every mind is transmitting its mental energies of wisdom and love, or fallacy and evil, into every other mind. As in the combustion of material substances matter is constantly being converted to mental energy, so mental energy is constantly being converted to material substance.

It was stated in the foregoing, that mind cannot exist without a material pediment or groundwork, because the esse and existere of the mind are the product of the combustion of matter. This elaboration takes

Gold and silver should be used and exchanged as all other commercial commodities, for their true commercial value, and never as a basis for the representation of wealth. place through the function of the reciprocal action of cell and fibre. The spirit partakes, in its aggregation of quality, of the spiritual complexity of the material substance entering into the combustion, and thence into the creation of the aggregate spirit. The mind is made up of affectional and intellectual energies. These are merely experiences of touch or contact of atoms gross or refined, according to degrees of either high or low experiences, and we can best define their character by correspondential and antithetical analogy.

The alchemico-organic stellar realm is comprised of many constellations and definite stars of various degrees of magnitude, each of which transmits its energy into all other stars, and also receives (by influx into itself) the energies from all other stars. These energies are light, heat, electricity, magnetism, etc. It will be seen that while the single star is the point of influx from all the stars, as a fact it is also the point of influx as a necessity. Each star, then, depends for its existence upon the energies generated in all other stars. The variety in the quality of energy is proportionate to the multiplicity of the elements entering into the processes of combustion in all the stars. The character of this variety of influx gives character to the specific stellar nucleus. All influxes of energy into each star are modified according to the local attitude and relation of the star in the stellar economy.

Let it be remembered that the groups of stars, that is, the constellations in the physical heavens (the alchemico-organic heavens) correspond to nationalities in the earth, and that the stars are to the great mass of stars, what the individual mind is to the mass of mind. This is not only true, but every star has its correspondent in the intellectual stars of humanity. "We have seen his star in the East, and are come to worship him," was said of Jesus. His star was a specific one, and of the first magnitude. All men have their stars of various degrees of magnitude. As the energies of all stars flow into each, so the energies of all minds flow into each mind. This being true, it is manifest that while the food we eat, which contains the elements of mental supply transposed through the blood to mental energy, enters the brain and is consumed there, it is met at the cell of elaboration by the mental energy of other minds flowing into the cells of the cortical area from the complex aura, originating in the generation of energy through mental combustion and the energy of influx. It will be well for the reader to also bear in mind the fact that every influx of energy is the influx of a spiritual identity. For while the radiation of a line of energy from the alchemico-organic (physical) star is pure energy, the radiation of either an intellectual or an affectional force from one mind, which corresponds to a star, is the transposition of a spiritual entity.

When regeneration approaches maturity in man, he naturally seeks for the science of immortality.

By the science of immortal life, we mean the science or knowledge of what it consists, and how acquired.

Genuine Science the Panacea for Human Ills.

WE ARE frequently requested to give advice and treatment to physical sufferers. We are not devoting ourselves to personal healing. The doctrines of Koreshanity believed in and applied, will gradually overcome the tendency to disease, and will finally usher in the state of immortal life. One of the greatest dangers threatening those who are loosing their old moorings and are consequently being buffeted about on the waves of misfortune and uncertainty, is the subtle doctrine that immortality is a present condition, without the recognition of the operation of the Messianic law. The mission of the Messiah of this age is altogether different from that of 1900 years ago. Jesus came then to save the spiritual man; he comes now to redeem the natural, and it is as important to polate the mind of the mass into the recognition of the Shepherd, as it was in the beginning of the Christian dispensation to confess the Savior of men. The Jews did not believe in the Lord, because he did not appear according to the lines they had laid down for his appearing. The modern church, prostituted in every department of its religious system, and in all the ramifications of its dissensions, is in no condition to judge of the Lord's purposes and laws of entrance upon his work of renewing the age.

The Lord Jesus, the Christ and Son of God, was absorbed by the church. This was done through the incorruptible dissolution of his personal and material form. The Holy Ghost was the product of the dissolution of his body, and comprised its substance, which the church, in receiving the Holy Spirit, appropriated. This was the seed planted, from which the sons of God are about to appear through the transformation of man from the mortal to the immortal state. The recognition of the Messianic center, and obedience to the laws promulgated by the appointment of the Almighty, will insure immortal life. Immortality does not exist now. It is a matter of acquisition, and the first law of its attainment is the recognition of the divine law and method of His appearing. We are coming to the great and dreadful day of the Lord. "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." God hath placed at the East (rising) of the Garden The Flaming Sword, of which our weekly publication is the representation.

We are giving to the world the final and positive warning of the great conflict about to engage, not merely the nations of Christian degeneration, but the world of paganism. The hour is at hand; the world's struggle is upon us, and dire destruction will follow the mobilization of the armament of the Christian world. Out of this debris will arise the sons of God, who will in the near future direct the affairs of men. If you will but touch the hem of the garment of the divine truth as it issues from the Guiding Star Publishing House, your ills will be dissipated. Get into the proper attitude of acceptance, and all else will legitimately follow.

On the Point of the Sword.
