

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity: Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follies. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW.

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.80; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 10 cents.

Osteological Analysis of Structured Man and Cosmos.

Part V.

IT WILL be well to state here, for those recently interested in the publications of the Guiding Star Publishing House and the doctrines of Koreshanity, that there is no interchange of fluids between the third and fourth ventricles. The valve of Vieussens effectually precludes the possibility of any intercommunication during physiological activity.

The student will be able to comprehend a foregoing statement regarding the office of the aqueduct of Sylvius as a retort, and why, as such, the fluid contents held in solution is discharged into the third ventricle, whence it is again discharged into the tuber cinereum, thence into the glandula vitæ.

The Torcular Herophili (Wine-Press of Herophilus).

The torcular Herophili is situated near the center of the occipital bone, a little to one side of the internal occipital protuberance. It is situated on the equator of the tentorium and dura mater. The student's attention is called to this pole of activity, more especially to consider the relation and function of the straight sinus. This sinus derives its blood mainly from the inferior longitudinal sinus, the venæ Galeni, the inferior median, cerebral veins, and the superior cerebellar. The venæ Galeni derive their blood from the choroid plexus of the lateral ventricles. It is formed of that specific union of nerve essence and arterial blood presided over by the optic thalamus, as a reaction from the juice discharged from the choroid plexus into the ventricles. The optic thalamus—literally rendered—signifies bridal chamber.

The venæ Galeni convey blood of a specific magnetic quality to the straight sinus, which enters the torcular Herophili in such a directly forcible manner as to produce a vortex in which the current is made to describe a contortion, thus bringing a large surface of the blood in contiguity with the periosteal area. At this point, the magnetic energy which the blood of the straight sinus contains is discharged into the dura mater, giving it an impulse like the pulsation of the heart; thus inducing an electrical current which distributes itself throughout the dura mater, converging at the crista galli. The impulse communicated by the straight sinus to the dura mater at the torcular Herophili, is the cause of the pulsations noticed at the fontanel in young children, and is the primary source of the motion of the heart of the body.

Having thus presented an outline of the sources of activity resulting in the emplacement and deposition of the ethmoid, we are prepared to enter into a specific analysis of its significance, both as a factor in the uses of the microcosmic economy and as representing principles, functions, and forms in the anthropostic macrocosm.

We have given the merest outline, hints only, of the origins of the ethmoid and its functions. We have shown it to possess three poles of major activity; the right, left, and central. The development of the central pole, the ossifying center of the vertical plate, has its origin in the specific impulses of the torcular Herophili. The torcular is the heart of the periosteal system. It is to the periosteal system what the heart of the body is to the arterial and venous systems. Now, when we consider the character of the heart in all the domains of life, falling back upon the fundamental axiom of the Koresshan System regarding commerce, namely, that the heart is the power of commerce, we are enabled to define the intrinsic office of this center, and to analyze and study the character of the spiritual entities which congregate and comprise this group.

The spirits of the crista galli are spirits in co-ordination with those of the pineal gland; those of the crista being of a character to desire a knowledge of those laws and principles upon which depends the order of the emplacement of the parts of the framework constituting the basis of organic construction, while those in the co-ordinate cerebral pole are in the sphere of the acquisition of the knowledges of those laws and principles. There is a reciprocal electro-magnetic vibration between these two poles, for wherever there is a pole or center of motion there are diverse and reactive currents.

There are a few principles relating to this subject, which the investigator should forever bear in mind: First, energy is substance in solution. Second, when an electric or magnetic vibration insinuates itself it conveys, ready for deposit, that which has been material, but which has become energy. Third, this energy is ready to deposit itself again as matter, whensoever it meets a counter flow co-ordinately antithetical in character. For instance; when an acetic electric current meets an alkaline at any pole of connection, there is a reaction; for the alkaline and acetic currents are reagents to each other, and a material precipitate is made where the matter is created from energy when the counter-currents meet. From this principle in organo-constructive law, it may be concluded that while the periosteal flow proceeds through the ethmoid (sifting) bone over the course of the periosteal river to the ultimate bone of the osseous fabric, there is a counter flow meeting at the insertion of the falx cerebri in the point of the vertical plate, thence radiating over the fibres of the dura mater inversely to the electro-magnetic currents previously described.

There is such an intimate relation of the dura mater to the arachnoid membrane, and through this to the pia mater, and thence to the cells of the cortical area, that in the course of the electro-periosteal currents there is a constant intercommunication between the cells of the gray matter and fibres of the dura. The impulse given to the dura through the torcular Herophili is retransmitted, by induction, to the summits of the convolutions; but upon entering the cells, the pulsatory impulse is mutated to the motion of respiration through the reciprocal (correlated) reaction of the two living motions of life, namely, the pulsatory and respiratory, as operative between the heart and the lungs of the body.

When the magnetic energy is discharged into the cells of the cortical area, there is a reciprocal discharge of the co-ordinate magnetic energy from the cells into the fibre, which, by induction, becomes an electric current upon entering the fibre. All the summital cells of the cortical area, in discharging their magnetic contents into the fibre of the dura mater, impart a substantial encumberment to the polar point to which the dura conspires, this encumberment being precipitated by reaction in the ethmoid, as the first resting-point of the dural motion.

A little practical honesty on the part of the public service, this service being conducted in the interests of the commonwealth rather than for monopolists, corporations, and capitalists, would very quickly insure an economical expenditure of the forces of labor, and of the wealth flowing into the public treasury from a surplus of which, dividends could be declared and distributed according to the necessities and demands of vidual and public interests. Honesty in the conduct of public affairs would so equilibrate the uses of society as to meet every vidual and public demand.

God gave the law for man to obey, and the Christ of God entering the visible domain of human comprehensibility, brought down and out to us God's own life, the bread and wine of his immaculate presence, our pabulum, that through its appropriation we might also keep the law and become like him, immaculate.

Man had his origin in God; he will have his destiny in God.

Scientific Interpretation of Apocalyptic Symbolism.

“AND THE wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horse-bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.”

The Apocalypse is written in the language of symbolism, or correspondences, and cannot be understood by any man not versed in symbolic exposition. There are four general degrees of this language pertaining to the Word or Logos, which, according to antithetical or inverted correspondences, have their inverted definitions. The basis of all Scriptural exegesis is the Scriptures themselves; and there must necessarily be key-notes as guides and foundations to correct interpretations or renderings of symbolism into the ordinary tongue.

There are two, three, or more salient points of the above text to which the reader's attention is specifically directed: first, the wine-press; second, the city; third, the blood; fourth, the horse-bridles, and last, the six thousand furlongs. By wine-press, is meant the means of extracting the wine; being trodden without, or outside the city, has reference to the specific city involved in Rev. xiv, 8: “And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.” We find that the power of treading out the wine belongs to the city, and that the wine proceeds from that which she has the power to control,—that over which she has dominion.

Blood signifies life, and in the opposite sense, death. “The life of all flesh is the blood thereof.” Horses signify restraints, liberties, adjustments, and appropriations of commerce. A thousand and six hundred furlongs signify sixteen hundred years, and this has reference to the full time of the end. These statements are merely outlines or general impressions of what the verse contains.

It must be remembered that there are eight prime and general degrees of interpretation, four of which are true, and four of which are false, or interpretations of inversion. The Bible is not the Word. It is, however, an exposition of the Word or Logos, the Logos being the Lord Christ, not the Bible. Our interpretation has to do with the Bible.

The wine-press of the human brain is the torcular Herophili (the wine-press of Herophilus). This is the pole of pulsatory motion of the dura mater, the dispenser of subtle nerve energies which hold in solution the bones and muscles of the body. The reflex of this is the heart of the body,—the collector and dispenser of the blood of the body. The primary origin of the heart motion of the brain is the desire to know, and the perceptions which stimulate that desire. The heart motion of the body is the electric energy induced from the mental motion through the pneumogastric nerve, whence the secondary electro-magnetic energies are generated. The heart is the collector and distributor of the blood. It is therefore the center of commerce. There are many planes of commerce, but they all originate in the same universal principle.

Commerce means the collection, exchange, and distribution of the things pertaining to life. In sex, it is the aggregation, impartation, and exchange of the principles and elements of life for the purpose of creating a new life, or of perpetuating the life already existing. Correspondentially, we have religious commerce on various planes or degrees, as also secular commerce. We have the wine-press and the blood related to all these degrees.

It would require a volume to take up and delineate an exposition of all these degrees as pertaining to this one verse; therefore we are compelled to restrict (restrain) ourselves to a single exposition so near as compatible with mental demand, and we are thus compelled to apply the principles of the horse-bridles in this very act of restraint, for the bridle is that which restrains and guides the horse;—but we anticipate.

We will place our exposition on the basis of secular life and, on general principles, the collective life of the world.

Babylon signifies the general confusion and chaos of the competitive world. The heart of the competitive world is the principle and power of commerce. This power is the lion, for the lion in symbolic language is the heart or power of commerce. This is represented supremely at the present time, by England, whose supreme control of commerce is her power on the water, which corresponds to blood. The doctrine and life of competitism, particularly typified by the use of this power by the so called Christian world, comprise Babylon. This power controls the masses of the people who are “not in it,” not in the city, but outside of it, where the squeezing process is in operation. The products of life constitute the blood that comes out of this wine-press,—for life depends upon the products of industry.

The horse signifies the power of restraint, liberty, adjustment, and appropriation. In the inverted sense (degree), in which our present interpretation is couched, the force of restraint is in the hand of the money power, which constitutes the heart of a false life. The restraint is placed upon the producer; the liberty is the liberty the money pirate possesses, and the horse-bridles are the discretions of a perverted control, regulation, and guide to the masses who are oppressed, that is, whose lives are squeezed out of them by this wine-press. This will continue to the end, wherein the curse will be removed. This is an outline merely of interpretation partially confined to this specific degree of exposition.

Thought Impulsers.

The Table Turned, or the Secret of Copernican Propaganda.

THE FOLLOWING is Prof. J. W. T's. formula for the development of the Copernican system of astronomy, taken verbatim (except change of name of system) from the Professor's communication to THE FLAMING SWORD office.

Its acceptance will always be, as now, confined to that class, albeit a numerous one, which imbibes its faith through its psychological and unreasoning side, pure reason playing little or no part in the process of conversion, or at most, not enough to change the result. The agencies concerned in such conversions, as summed up by a writer whose name I forget, are five in number; namely, affirmation, repetition, prestige, contagion, and faith. The affirmation must be positive, dogmatic, and without the slightest indication of the possibility of doubt on any point, all must be urged vehemently with all the certitude of positive knowledge; the repetition must be frequent, in season and out of season with unflagging certitude; prestige must come from the number and character of the advocates; contagion from the number and zeal of converts, and faith is the fruition of all. When acquired it bids defiance to reason's efforts to overturn it, for it has become, not absolute knowledge merely, but something above and beyond, a certitude unknown to and inconceivable to the mere groveling reasoner. When that point is reached, improbability, absurdity even, gives no concern. Such is the "Copernican" system, and hence the uselessness of either asking it questions or arguing with it. As well argue with the Pope of Rome that he was only a false pretender to Apostolic succession and his creed was false.

This is one point upon which we agree. Having reached this point of agreement, if the Professor wishes to become reasonable, from such a premise we might be able to agree upon some final scientific conclusions.

If there were any hope for either England or the United States against the encroachments of European combinations, that hope would reside in Anglo-American alliance. Such an alliance appears to be irresistible against the opposing powers, in the eyes of the astute ones who control the commercial enterprises of the two countries. The power underlying the apparent rapprochement of affection, is the old serpent which infolds, in his coils, in sympathetic union, the two great centers whence originate the pulsations of Anglo-American legislation and statesmanship,—Lombard and Wall streets. Let the two governments combine. It is the sure road to the final destruction of both. It is the inevitable road, as it is the inevitable culmination.

There will be no escape for England and America from the final judgment of the great day at hand. Both countries, as governments, have violated every principle of justice. They have sinned more than any other peoples because living in the greatest light, with greater opportunities for good. The civilizations of these countries are not the processes of Christian influence. No Christian can smoke or chew tobacco, nor drink wine, beer, and whiskey; nor can any Christian country encourage and foster these pernicious mercantile abominations, and the hellish practices accruing from these financial resources.

The legislation of both countries is controlled by the great commercial pirates of the world, and the contest for the world's supremacy is founded upon the insatiable greed of the men who rob the industrial wage-slave of the productions of his industry.

Scientific Restoration of the Garden of Eden.

REV. BERTHA S. BOOMER.

"So he drove out the man; and he placed at the East [rising] of the Garden of Eden Cherubims, and a Flaming Sword which turned every way, to keep [perpetuate] the way of the tree of life."

THE TREE of Life is the Divine Motherhood, crowning glory of the increate, regenerated womanhood. True Science demonstrates a fact that must one day thrill the soul of every true woman with the awakening of aspirations possible only when verified by the divine truth it reveals.

The demonstration of the Cellular Cosmogony, now given to the world, communicates the knowledge that the hollow spherical earth is truly the environment and boundary of limitation to the inherent life of the self-fecundating universe, the suitable womb of all Nature.

The demonstration shows that this great physical ultimate, the womb of Nature, is the crowning glory of the most complex of all alchemico-organic construction. We find its marvelous complexity of constructive forces polarized for vitalization in its solar sphere, the organic unity of its ascending energies, the stellar center of which is the pivot of life. This great vitalizer reflects back to its environment whatsoever is surrendered for the reproduction of every existing thing after its kind. Involved within this great alchemico-organic universe is its correspondent on a higher plane, the anthropostic universe, or universe of humanity, prior in quality of creative energies, but co-ordinate in time.

The solar center of this universe, the God-man, Jehovah, the apex and pivot in human form, of the holy, virginal aspirations of his earth Bride, his prepared people or church, shed abroad, within her folds, the vitalizing essence of his Deity, the philosophy of his law of love. He did this that she might bring him forth yet once again, and reveal him as the greater Light of the anthropostic world, the Scientist of that law.

Such a revelation is like the rising of the sun upon the broad landscape of the earth. It clothes her with light as with a garment, and reveals in, and through, and by her, all his inherent glories as his own Divine Motherhood.

It is for the Church, the Bride of Christ, and in this age for woman pre-eminently, as the representative of the constructive forces of that church, to reveal to the world Elohi, as the Almighty Father, the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Prince of Peace.

By the revelations of Koreshan Science, the high calling of the Koreshan Christian womanhood is revealed. She is called to the confession of the Fatherhood by the purification of herself, that she may worthily represent the chaste virginity of Jehovah's inherent Motherhood. She is called to be clothed upon with the light of true science, that she may be prepared for that unity with Deity which will absorb her into the Motherhood of the Gods, and cause her to become the Imperial Ruler in all the hearts of the sons of men.

Over the operations of the constructive life of mortal embodiment, woman today is called to imperial sway. It is within the province of her power to close the flood-gates of perdition. By virtue of divine quickening of the mental energies, it is for her to reverse the currents of their descent, and polarize them in the Sun of Righteousness, causing him to arise upon the entire universe with healing in his wings.

The day is at hand when the womanhood of this age will awaken to the importance of the call now being uttered by the penetrating voice of the Science of Truth. Her eyes will then be opened to a realization of the horrible defilements of her body and mind, and she will wash in the waters of the living Word of Truth, and be clean.

There is such an attainment as immortal life; there is a set time in the cycles of the universe for the Divine Motherhood of the regenerated woman to bring forth the sons of God, the immortal Gods. Such an attainment and such a culmination of it will come through an understanding of and obedience to the law of immortality. "One of the first principles of this law resides with woman, to control her mind and body, and through it to conserve the destructive wastes of her procreative function." These wastes are the result of false education and of false, perverted desires. Change the inclination of the thoughts by holy aspirations, and the perdition of woman's soul (the life of all flesh is the blood thereof) will cease.

With this conserved energy of holy aspiration she will begin, by obedience to the law of polarization, the creation of the resurrected flesh, even the immortal flesh of Christ. It is for woman to say, that children shall no longer be conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity. Iniquitous sex commerce, resulting in lustful conceptions, forms the tap-root of all evil.

If woman can once be aroused and induced, through the enlightenment of the science of the laws of life and immortality, to say to the vast armies of human souls persistently descending the broad road to destruction, lured there by the deceits of the lights of "science falsely so called," "not another soul shall descend through the constructive forces of my body," the end of the old and dead way will speedily be manifest.

The heaped up energies of psychic force polarized in the pneuma of God, by the power of the intelligent aspirations of a faith working in obedience to the law of love, would reflex back on the whole human family with a baptismal power that would transform our mortal hells to the kingdom of heaven, and cause the glory of God to fill the whole earth with praise and thanksgiving.

Millions of women are now held in slavery, and degraded below the level of the beast by the marital bond. This bond is formed usually by the very language used in Scripture to define the curse pronounced upon the woman, when the night-time of earth's Mazzarothic day brought the due time for the descending energies of the woman to carry her sex life out of the sphere of the biune Deity into the realm of mortality, for the reproduction of the animal life of God.

There is a due time in the hours of that same great Mazzarothic day, for the declaration to be made by the Rider on the White Horse: "There shall be no more curse." There is a due time for the revelation of "a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb."

"In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." (Rev. xxii: 2.)

This pure river of the water of life is nothing less than the Science of the law, expressed in the doctrine of the Church Triumphant. Its cleansed life currents carry up to the throne of God, which is the illumined mind, all the powers of the universe that make for righteousness, and will create in earth the peace of God which keeps the heart and mind free from trouble.

To the church of Christ, the Woman, comes the welcome declaration: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord has arisen upon thee!" That glory is revealed by THE FLAMING SWORD, the theocrasis of the conquering Hero, who opens up the new and living way for the ascending Spirit of Jehovah to stand revealed as the Bride, the Lamb's Wife, the Divine Mother of all living.

The center and principle of all activity is the center of commerce. This is true on every plane of life, from the highest divine to the lowest human. The center of life in the vidual man is the commercial or copulative, for through this, perpetuity of being is insured.

Love is the law, or principle, of attraction.

The Victim of the Strike.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

“WHAT a bore it is to hear the Thanksgiving proclamation, again! I am sure I don't think we have much to be thankful for this year,” grumbled Mrs. Maxwell in her luxurious drawing-room on Cedar Hill, glancing, as she spoke, at the mirror, to adjust the rich lace which adorned the throat of her new satin gown. “Here's Ralph home from college in disgrace, and poor Miriam laid up for the winter in consequence of that accident. Heaven only knows whether she'll ever walk again, and I had set my heart on bringing her out this season. It is very trying! But the worst is having to give up the carriage. Of course, one of the horses must be sick and die just now when Mr. Maxwell is worried over the strike at the factory, and thinks he is too short of money to replace it. There is Mrs. Terry with her elegant new coupé. I declare it is too much of a mortification!” And Mrs. Maxwell put her handkerchief to her eyes.

“Wonder what poor folks have to be thankful for anyway?” Milly Brooks leaned her head disconsolately against the window-frame in one of the tenement houses by the river. There were rows and rows of tenement houses exactly alike, facing the canal and the long factories that lined the opposite bank. Milly hated the factories with their noisy, bustling rooms, and used to wish the houses looked away from them toward the city. She had worked in Richard Maxwell's mill ever since she was thirteen, until last year when her mother died; then her father said she must stay at home to mind the children and keep house. The place fell to her naturally as the eldest daughter. Milly was barely twenty-one, but the freshness of her beauty had faded already. It was usually so with the factory girls, and there were certain bitter lines around the mouth that bespoke an early acquaintance with poverty and toil, if not some deeper and darker experience. Her father and the boys worked in the mill, but now they had joined the strikers, and the family income was reduced to a minimum. Grace, the second daughter, was just recovering from typhoid, and what with the doctor's bill and sundry delicacies required by the convalescent, the prospect for a Thanksgiving dinner did not extend to chicken, and might be limited to brown bread and beans.

In spite of their widely differing environments, there was a striking unanimity of sentiment on the subject of the national holiday, between Mrs. Maxwell on the Hill and the factory girl by the river. Labor and capital for once were agreed.

It was the day before Thanksgiving. The strike had been on a month, but the mills were still running and the obstinate determination of the mill owners showed no signs of weakening. The strikers were getting the worst of it. Many of their families were in distress, and tempted by idleness the men had been drinking themselves into a hard, surly, reckless humour that boded no good. A knot of them gathered at the corner talking vindictively with eager, excited gestures. There was a plan on foot for burning the Maxwell mill that night. “Give 'em a Thanksgiving blaze that'll cook their dinners for 'em,” cried the malcontents. Milly, gazing idly at the canal and the mill opposite, gave a sudden start of recognition. That was Ralph Maxwell passing over the drawbridge to enter his father's office. “Handsome Ralph” they called him. Milly knew nothing of the little difficulty with the college faculty, that excited his father's anger and brought the gay, thoughtless fellow home in disgrace, but she turned pale and drew back from the window at sight of the familiar figure. When Milly was sixteen, her blonde beauty had attracted the rich mill owner's son. His philosophy of life was essentially epicurean. To love the wild rose and leave it on the stem was a precept that in no wise commended itself to his nature or opinions. Well, it was long past now, but Milly had suffered too deeply to forget.

“Here girl, step lively now and get us some grub. There's work on hand and I'm in a hurry.” Tom Brooks, Milly's brother, was the speaker. He and her father had evidently been drinking heavily. They ate their supper in sullen silence, interrupted before the close of the meal by the entrance of several companions. Bidding Milly leave the room, the men proceeded to discuss the night's campaign, and the girl, listening outside, soon gathered that the Maxwell mill was to be destroyed by a bomb placed under the outer wall contiguous to the President's private office, where “the cub” slept to guard the property, an inside police force being deemed unnecessary. “The cub,” that was Ralph! She must save him. That was the first thought of the girl whose life he had ruthlessly blighted. The time appointed for action was an hour after midnight. She knew how to enter the mill by an insecure fastening in the rear, and could wait for Ralph inside, ready to warn him of impending danger the instant he appeared. It never occurred to her that the strikers might advance the hour, and she, waiting to save the life of the man she still loved, would fall a victim to the fermenting antagonism between labor and capital, fostered by the conditions of this much lauded modern civilization of ours.

It had just struck midnight when a sudden footfall outside startled Milly at her post by the entrance within. “Ralph!” she cried, starting eagerly forward, expecting to hear the key grate in the lock. There came a crash, a deafening roar. The solid wall of the factory was blown to atoms, and the drama of life had ended in tragedy for the loyal heart faithful through wrong and betrayal, while the man she had died to save, long since unmindful of her existence, was chatting gaily, lingering over his wine at the club. He had intended to leave for the mill early that night, being warned that the strikers were in an ugly mood around town, but as it happened, one of the boys told an uncommonly good story and Ralph stayed to cap it with another, a lucky accident which had saved his life. Really, he must make a point of telling that story with this interesting climax.

Well, the mill owners lost their property—amply insured however. Tom Brooks, foremost of the strikers who placed the bomb, lost his sister, another sacrifice to the false and unnatural social conditions that set a great gulf between two classes of society, the rich and the poor, engendering a deadly hatred that must increase until the inauguration of the kingdom of righteousness in earth, and the dissemination among men of the spirit of divine communism.

Observations and Reflections.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

THE MOVING MOUNTAIN.

BEFORE the Mountain mightier than its fellows,
 Wrapped in sense of grandeur and mystery,
 Bare browed and reverent, the trav'ler stands
 And waits on words o'erdue.

We wait to wait

On words: We are at best a flippant crew;
 So strenuous of the little that we know;
 Noisy to make it cut our value's figure.

O Mountain of God's holiness removed
 And cast into the sea! Thou mystery's
 Revealment! Thou perfect Love that died in doing!—
 For the mountains to hide us we give our thanks:
 Thus hidden, our mien will speak us worthy thee.

* * *

The Spite of Greed.

CLAP HANDS and shout! Caressing smiles the sun, drops lovingly the sky upon the thousand growths that overflow God's providence.

Countless ramifying ways weave Nature's warp with the woof of art

Into maze of 'wild'ring beauty, softness, and delight which make palatial halls a splendor quite and pile the board.

Is there no wail?

Ah! Friend, some children wail, some women weep, strong men wax pale and join death's sleep.

All's taxed but sun and air, they say who fail and fall, but 'yond the prison grate e'en these abate.

Why?

Greed, like hounds full cry, to want lends speed, and feeding's made the question overtop and underlie.
 E'en while the church bells swell, all's well! all's well!
 stand on our poorer streets an' you would study hell!

What hope?

There's Holy Speech of first love left—repentance—first works begun.

The love of neighbor as of self—the law's fulfilling—love
 'fills the law: this our sole hope.

Who will lead?

The Christ! The old yields to the new.

He will shepherd his sheep—children will wail not, nor women will weep, and the rider—the pallid—shall fail!

THE SUBLIME AND THE RIDICULOUS.

FROM virgin birth of Christ, Huxley withheld
 His credence. (Does the gentle Nazarene e'er smile?)
 'Twas "unnatural—unscientific." He swept

It with the other chaff of wonder lore
 In the old Book, and turned him ruminant
 Upon inert atom, not of life resuscitate,
 But self-creative of its life; author,
 In myriad, of Huxley and his kind.

How blinder than bats these "scientific lights"
 Who eschew the Light of God—his Christ, Quarrel with the miracles that wonders are
 To the blind alone, and run hot haste to the weld
 Of impossibility to mystery.

The Broth of Hades.

Koreshans?

The determined followers of God's prophet—Elijah.
 Soldiers they, theirs God's battles.

They deal with times when the devil brews the broth, the clergy pours, and the world bolts degeneracy, disintegration, death.

Are none exempt?

All die—all gorge the brew.

The service from hell's vat varies, but taste of clergy's finger's in't all.

To eschew some are born, but none are grown—restoration waits on growth.

Multifarious! May one know?

Turn to the ensample, turn to the plain and simple life of Christ,

And hence from all the world teaches, receives, or desires, and—stand of men accursed!

A SACRILEGIOUS LIBEL.

Man's voice is man's? Of course. God's voice is God's?
Yea. And the devil hath the power of death?

The Scriptures so concede. Our churches put
 The devil in Jesu's mouth—His voice forsooth!

List to the jingle of the rhyming lie:

"Why do we mourn departed friends,
 Or shake at death's alarms?
 'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
 To call us to his arms!"

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

'TIS SAID his earlier steps on poverty
 Trode close, and in him it begot
 Large-hearted sympathy for the humble poor.

But later on, when friends had dowered him,
 He something lost of his tender interest
 In human woe: A cheerful competence
 Had warped the poet's soul.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE CLOCK systems of the astronomical observatories and the railroads are a wonder. One gigantic clock at the Washington Naval Observatory regulates the time for nearly half the world. The great clock at Chicago does not vary from the regulator at Washington a single minute in a year. In the Chicago clock, the time is regulated by gravity. The pendulum weighs about twenty-five pounds. Small screw heads are placed on or taken off according as the clock runs fast or slow; it is very carefully and accurately regulated in this way. It runs day and night with no variation, as determined by the regular and unvarying movements of the stars. Evidently the pendulum has exactly the same weight day and night; if it differed in weight, or if gravity were variable, the clock could not keep accurate sidereal time. Place an object on the scales; in the atmosphere it has a normal weight. Apply any force to the object and its weight is changed. If sufficient force be applied to lift it, no weight would be registered while the lifting force is being applied. If the same force be applied in downward pressure,—that force just sufficient to lift the object, its weight would be doubled. If any force should operate on the pendulum alternately applied up and down every twenty-four hours, it would be impossible for the clock to keep time. Astronomers assert that the moon pulls water on the earth sufficient to lift it, and that the sun is also constantly pulling the earth with enormous force, and therefore has a tendency to pull every individual atom toward the sun. Now, don't you think that if there were such awful pulls on the earth, up and down as the earth revolved, that they would make a little difference in the weight at different times of the day and night? They would change the weight of the pendulum; clocks would not run in the universe of Copernicus!

This is an age of false images constructed from perverted imagination. The modern gods have made man in their own image and likeness—mortal and corrupt. The graven images are continually entering the tomb. A mortal offspring is the result of gravitation of mental entities, through desire. The church harbors, blesses, and worships all of the processes of mortal generation, while parroting a false doctrine of regeneration. The church is filled with images graven through the functions of generation. The iconoclast is an image-breaker; Protestant hands and sledges smashed stone idols and images in cathedrals. On a broader and higher plane, THE FLAMING SWORD is the only true iconoclast or breaker of all the false images worshipped in modern times!

The Torch of Reason is exercised about Noah's flood occurring on a convex earth 25,000 miles in circumference. Thanks; it would be a little difficult! It's a new argument against the Copernican system. It would tax the ingenuity of the Almighty to get 1,006,820,722 cubic miles of water to stay on a ball shooting through space at the rate of 19 per miles per second. A little torch of reason, however, would be sufficient to suggest that the agnostic argument of Noah's flood is not an argument against the Bible, but only the silly orthodox conception of it. Agnosticism is the ridiculous antithetical pole of degenerate Christianity.

The railroad companies have persuaded a number of business men in all the principal American cities to protest against ticket scalpers—men who deal in railroad tickets at cut rates, just as other men deal in other things at cut rates. There is no more room for fraud in scalping tickets than there is in scalping people. Railroad corporations are adepts at this, and they want the monopoly of the scalping business. We are inaugurating a great protest against the scalping fraternity of the entire competitive system. We purpose doing some scalping ourselves, when the proper time comes; we are going to scalp the old world!

We write from the standpoint of principles and facts. Our illustrations are clear cut, our conclusions definite; our sarcasm is studied, and our ridicule of fallacy is pregnant with meaning, always indicating in the forms of expression the opposite, or truth. We are not fighting men; we are above the language and methods of ward politicians, or even reform politicians. In THE FLAMING SWORD you breathe an air of purity, determination, strength of character, purpose, and originality. The reader gets much in little—great truths expressed in studied forms. We are loyal to law, and true to truth.

The wonders of fallacy are the mysteries which fallacy cannot solve. The achievements of modern ingenuity have no more to do with the prevailing theories of chemistry, physics, and astronomy, than the kindling of a fire by a savage has to do with his conceptions of the processes of combustion. Modern fallacy gets credit for that which it has never performed nor made possible to perform. Ingenuity and fallacy exist together in some modern minds; but ingenuity could do better work without its mischievous companion.

We are approaching the end of the great Iron Age, just preceding the Age of Gold. The bars of iron will soon burst asunder. There have been great epochs in the past, distinguished by characteristics corresponding to other metals. This is distinctively the age of iron and its products. Take up a railroad map of the world and observe the hundreds of thousands of miles of metallic lines. Iron is used everywhere; it engages the labor of millions, and is a principal factor in the great war of so called capital and labor, and in the protection of nations. It is the base of the god of gold.

The candid mind cannot consider the rapid progress made by the colored race in America during the past twenty-five years, and not conclude that the Negro is destined to contribute much to the ultimate destiny of man. Koreshanity scientifically defines the racial value of the African; he is destined to live; he is in the ascendant. On the other hand, the Indian is decadent. A dying man does not laugh; the Indian is a stranger to mirth, while the Negro displays remarkable natural wit and humor. The Afro-American constitutes the ethnic foundation of the new race and civilization of future ages.

THE FLAMING SWORD is printed to burn—to burn its way into the hearts of the people; to burn away the barriers to human happiness and life; to burn away the cobwebs of a false science, religion, and economy. Then again, THE FLAMING SWORD is not printed to burn. In some homes where it has gone, it has become a flaming sword in the grate or stove, because its thrusts cut deep into some frail mortal afraid to think! In other homes, it is THE FLAMING SWORD, shining brighter than all other journals. After all, THE SWORD is mightier than the pen!

The horizon is the limit of geolinear foreshortening; the circle of foreshortened observation is but a fraction of the millions of square miles of the earth's area. To view the whole world over scapes of such limitation would require hundreds of years. History looks back in the world. Its range is merely one horizon of the world's mutations; it stops with the present; it cannot go into the future. Koreshanity reaches the center of universal circumspection, and places all things in the field of scientific perspective; and all that is hidden is revealed.

Modern social theories cannot be made practical because they do not involve the laws of organic unity. The world of human activity must be constructed to operate according to the laws of organic unity, which characterize the great cellular existence of the universe. True society must perform, correspondentially, all the functions of the universe and the analogous human system—the laws of equilibrium of life, equitable adjustment and relations, collection and distribution.

The Bible has been advertising Koreshan Astronomy all along. The Bible will not fit the popular system, yet hundreds of eminent men have been trying in vain to make it do so. It does fit the facts of the universe in every phase and on every plane of life and activity. When the universe is understood, the Bible is comprehended. Koreshanity interprets the Bible.

Some Bible readers think that the character of the universe can never be known, because it is said that if the foundations of the earth are searched out and the heavens measured, the Almighty will cast off his people Israel. Well, weren't all the tribes of Israel cast off long ago?

When the Philippines are insured to American possession there will be a change of policy; the old one destroyed, a new one issued. The premium will be paid by the Philipinos, while America gets the insurance.

If man has descended from ancestry through posterity, how is it that he has ascended from the monkey? Darwin may have come up a little, but humanity seems to have come down a great deal since man was perfect.

Look at the parable of the sheep and the goats in the Bible. Jesus gathers the sheep on his right hand and the goats on the left. Does the fact that he sits on the right hand of his Father, place the Father among the goats?

Tesla intends to make peace by making the armaments of war so destructive that they cannot be used; for if they should be employed, he feels sure there would not be a piece of anything left.

Many people do not want definite conclusions concerning anything except religion. When you come to test them on religion, you soon find that they have no definite conclusions at all!

Turkey contains the wish-bone of Europe; but the powers will have to feed upon other birds the present Thanksgiving season. They have fowl measures sufficient for this year.

It is usually thought that when the Almighty comes to judge the world that there will be no resistance; the fact is, that then is the greatest resistance the world ever makes.

It will never do to hold to a belief blindly while looking for some proof of its truth. You would be too blind to find the proofs.

The devils ask what the Creator meant when he began to create torment.

The slang phrase, "I don't think," fits more than those who use it.

Editorial Discussions, Chats, and Correspondence.

THE EDITOR.

WE GREET you with a brighter face.

During the past year we have met with marked success; fifty-two times the weekly FLAMING SWORD has visited your homes, and now we are glad to enter upon the new volume with renewed energy and determination. This unique Journal has met with your hearty approval and welcome, and perhaps surprise; and you are glad with us in our success.

We are still standing in advance in both claim and fact; the fact is apparent and obvious; we have substantiated our claim. A greater field of influence is before us. We are overcoming obstacles in the promulgation of the Koreshan System, and are breaking down some unreasoning prejudice against us. Fallacy has felt the stunning blows dealt through Koreshan propaganda during the past year.

We have labored and studied to interest you. We cannot mistake, from your many kind letters, that you appreciate our efforts to give you the highest, the purest, the most substantial, refined, and scientific product of intellectual activity. We are making friends everywhere; we are coming in contact with an army of new readers, and we are proud of the mental character of the ever enlarging circle of investigators of the marvelous System we promulgate. Chords of personal interest and sympathy between the writers and readers of THE FLAMING SWORD are vibrating with encouraging tension and rapidity.

What Will We Do During the Coming Year?

Continue our encouraging progress; you deserve that we should do so. We are raising our standard higher; beautifying THE SWORD, toning and tuning its expressions to the volume of thought necessary to effectively sweep away fallacy. We will give you many surprises and introduce unique features. While we progress, the present improves upon the past.

First in importance and position always, are the profound productions of the Founder of Koreshanity; like the rising sun in the morning, these brilliant articles greet the reader upon opening THE FLAMING SWORD. During the past year, many of the articles of KORESH have found their way into the reform press, and many editors are personally interested in the prescient journalism of Koreshanity. From the one source, the rays of scientific truth stream through all our pages; the disciple but reflects the knowledges of his Teacher. Our Contributors mirror the one mind.

More vigorously than ever our Staff of Writers begins the new volume, to deftly and ingeniously display Koreshan thought for easy comprehension. A supremely interesting field will be occupied by the Pre-Eminent of the Koreshan Unity, VICTORIA GRATIA, from whom, we are pleased to announce, our readers may expect a number of soulful articles through which they will breathe an atmosphere of lofty aspiration, purity of character, and honesty of purpose.

We would not omit from special notice the excellent and beautiful contributions of literary merit and tone, from LUCIE PAGE BORDEN, and the unique department of "Observations and Reflections," by AMANDA T. POTTER. The treatment of special subjects relating to the declension of old institutions, the world's progress, social theocracy, and practical work in the establishment of the Koreshan System of Organic Unity, by REV. BERTHA S. BOOMER, will be of inestimable value. Other writers, whom we prize highly, will discuss various phases of Koreshanity, oppose fallacy, and interest all.

Our special editorial departments, which have aroused both interest and comment, will be continued. Our Perspective views embrace the scope of the world. We enjoy answering the interesting questions of our readers, and in entering into the many lines of discussion and controversy which the advocacy of the Koreshan System incurs and demands. We invite questions, objections, and criticisms. We enjoy your letters, whether favorable or unfavorable; write us what you think, always.

Deserving of special mention also, is the department of "First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology." These letters are pregnant with a peculiar personal interest, stimulating to all, and especially to many isolated readers who have no associations disposed to sympathize with them in these remarkable themes. You touch many hearts, strike many glad hands through the pages of THE FLAMING SWORD. It encourages us and thousands of others, and does you good. Our columns are open to all; let the coming year be marked by many sympathetic touches from the pens of hundreds of readers.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

Wonderful Unfoldment of the Mysterious Riddle of Nature.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—In reply to your request for first impressions of Koreshanity, I will say that mine were very alluring. I had been looking for the "pearl of great price" for half a lifetime, but like a will-o'-the-wisp, it seemed to ever elude me, and I had grown weary in my search. Three years ago, when the Founder of Koreshanity—a system I had never heard of before—gave a series of parlor lectures in Denver, I realized that he was giving something not only original, and that challenged my closest attention, but which seemed to answer all my questioning whys as well. Of course, it overthrew my preconceived ideas altogether. However, I cared little for this, so that I found the Truth.

Day after day I put everything behind me, in order to drink in, while the opportunity lasted, this wonderful unfoldment of the mysterious riddle of Nature, humanity, and God. The more I heard, the more I wanted; my soul was athirst for the living waters.

Most forcibly the Science appealed to me in all its grandeur; but when the subject of the humanity and the personality of God was touched upon, my enthusiasm received a shock;—here I found my stumbling-block—doubt, and apparent inconsistencies, threatened to wreck my bright hopes. I battled with these feelings for a year or more; tenaciously my mind clung to the traditions of the past, and refused to break from the thralldom of false teachings. However, by continuous study of the doctrine, the light gradually dawned upon me. I began to see clearly that Koreshan Universology was corroborated by the Bible, which, by the aid of this new light, was a revelation of the entire Book. I saw also that what seemed to be a stumbling-block was part of a most wonderful mosaic in God's perfect plan. I realized that my long night of despair was at an end. I was convinced, and surrendered unconditionally.

I rest in the conviction that my religious belief is founded on a proven scientific premise, in which speculation has no part; that analogous reasoning is the highest form of reasoning, and that love to God and the neighbor is the keynote that must vibrate from center to circumference, to bring harmony out of chaos. Notwithstanding the fact that the world is groaning in the travail of dissolution, and hoping that a Moses may arise to guide it through the storm-clouds that are fast gathering from every point of the compass, it stubbornly refuses to recognize the fact that the man with the plumb-line in his hand is already here.

Some remark that Koreshanity is the "most rational doctrine they ever heard of,—but they have no use for its Founder." The man who brings to the world the unity of science, religion, and a perfect social system, brings a panacea for all its ills; and to ignore him is to nullify the authority of his message. We are standing on the threshold of the Golden Age. Koreshanity is the keystone of the arch, and KORESH is the Master-Builder, the one who will open the book of seven seals.—M. V. STILES, Colo.

Endeavoring to Unknow Modern Vexities and Convexities!

To KORESH:—Just a word of greeting and gratitude from this Ultima Thule, the Garden of the Gulf, a paradise of red sandstone and warm evergreens, once named by the aboriginal Micmacs, "Epaygnit,"—anchored on the wave, "where every prospect pleases and only man is vile." But you are going to change this latter assertion.

Pray pardon some egotism as I try to explain how your revelations inflamed me. I am the son of an orthodox Congregational and the grandson of a Presbyterian clergyman, both of whom I feel reincarnated within me, and influencing me to learn of you, as I ply my trade of an M. D.

I was 47 years old January 15, 1898, being born in the metaphysical third of the sign Capricornus, the Goat,—"service but not servitude;" and as you say "horns denote power," I am able to swallow you whole, or allow you to swallow me whole. I believed all before I understood anything. Thus the soul grasps and assimilates the Truth, like our prehension of ripe grapes. Comprehension takes place creatively, and the creature grows to know his Creator.

Knowledge of the physical demonstrations of your symbolisms and applied science seems to spin out from within like the spider's web, and quite strong enough to sustain himself and family. It is a labor of Hercules, a toil of Sisyphus, Icarus, and others, to unknow the innumerable vexities and convexities taught in schools, colleges, and professional universities, time immemorial, world without end. However, I am fast becoming concave, after only a few months of your tuition in THE FLAMING SWORD, and satellite pamphlets, including the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. If I were free from these bonds and humanities, I should take up my cross and follow you at closer range; I should see KORESH tomorrow!

Dear old Tolstoi saved me from ruin, and prepared the way for your teachings. John the Baptist is always the forerunner of the Christ, the Son of man. Then and now comes and goes KORESH, and the new Age of Reason to rule out misrule. As an anatomist, I enjoy your Osteology of Man and Cosmos, and as a Christian Communist, I study your commentaries of the Bible. "Never man spake like this man." To doubt is to die!

Sometime, I wish you would explain Astrology and the Zodiac in relation to man. Yours in the hope of Immortality,—GEO. D. CLIFT, M. D., Prince Edwards Island, Canada.

* * *

Words of Welcome for the Cellular Cosmogony.

Its Value Cannot be Estimated.

Permit me to thank and congratulate you and your co-workers for your successful efforts culminating in the production of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. Its value cannot be estimated in dollars. Of course it will be opposed by the false teachers of our time, whose reputations are at stake. Nevertheless, I believe it is destined to refocalize the scattered thought of the world and force attention to the Truth, through which humanity will be enlightened and redeemed from its miseries.—DR. GEO. CANNON, Cal.

It's a Most Remarkable Work.

I wish to express my great pleasure in reading the new book, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. It is a most remarkable work. I have placed copies in four of our hotels, sold three, and placed two in our public library. May it find many friends. I see it has found some in Chicago and elsewhere.—MRS. C. M. BLANCHARD, Cal.

Please accept my hearty congratulations for the general harmony, inside and outside, of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY.—M. V. S., Denver, Colo.

I received the one dozen copies of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY last week, and they only lasted about two days! Please send me another dozen.—W. H. W., Muscatine, Ia.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

I cannot find words to express my admiration for the weekly FLAMING SWORD. It is full of the most excellent articles, editorials, and chats. All that I could say in praise of it, would not begin to do it justice! Truly and well said, the Koreshan cause is a great battleship, and its best gun is the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. May it win in its bloodless battles for God and humanity.—C. M. B., Los Angeles, Cal.

I like THE SWORD tip-top. It has the soundest principles—it is founded on the most scientific ideas ever given to the people. The more I read the literature the better I like it. I believe there is going to be a great turning over of the people, and oh! what fun we will have, watching some of the stiff-necked and stubborn hypocrites with which the world is overstocked today!—J. M. P., Galesburg, Ill.

I have received a copy of your paper, and must say that I indorse its contents in toto; especially the article under the caption of "Communism the Goal of Economic Progress." I have always contended that the churches were followers of the Christ by profession only. You go to the bottom of things. May success attend you ever.—W. A. M., Montgomery, Ala.

I greatly appreciate THE SWORD above all other papers. It is not only the best, but the brightest paper in existence. The beauty of it all lies in the truth of its statements. I swear by it! Sorry the Blodgett romance was so short; but you deal your critics such blows that they die while they are puerile!—R. W. G., Mexico.

I have read THE SWORD for five years, and can truly say that it is the only paper that ever interested me specially. I have read all kinds of papers, and they all fade alike before the Truth that comes from headquarters.—J. A. G., Stroud, Okl.

It's a paper I cannot do without, any more. It gives me more truth in one copy than all the sermons that I have ever heard combined!—J. VanZ., Muscatine, Ia.

THE SWORD has not come to hand. Now, for heaven's sake send it at once, and the back numbers also. I cannot live without THE SWORD much longer.—H. J. J., Perkins, Ia.

THE SWORD is a welcome visitor; it is the only paper I care to read.—N. H., Marco, Fla.

THE SWORD is the greatest paper I can find; it's up to date. I do not want to miss a single number; it contains all.—T. H., Georgeville, Ga.

Coming Into the Koreshan Unity?

The best institution for education and co-operation in Social and Economic Reform. There is a place for everyone, every trade or business; extensive system of co-operative exchange now being organized. We need you; but don't rush in without knowing something of the situation. For full particulars as to membership, admittance, etc., in any branch of the Koreshan Movement, address, with stamp, VICTORIA GRATIA, Pre-eminent of the Koreshan Unity, or her private Secretary, VIRGINIA H. In Reform Journals.

A Kansas Judge.

When George R. Peck first became an attorney for the Santa Fe, he went to a small town in western Kansas to argue a case that had been brought against the road for damages to several head of cattle that had been killed. The case was tried before a judge who was decidedly German. The witnesses were examined, the case was gone through with, and the attorney for the prosecution arose and made a strong plea for conviction. He waxed eloquent, and the judge paid close attention.

"Are you troo?" asked the judge when the lawyer stopped.

"Yes, your honor."

"You vins de case," said the judge.

"But I want a chance to argue my side of the case," said Peck.

"No, he vins," stontly asserted the judge. But Peck commenced to talk and gradually his talk led up to the case, and before the judge knew it Peck was arguing the defense. The judge listened closely, and when Peck had finished he said:

"You vins de case."

"But you have already decided in my favor," said the other lawyer.

"Dat's all right. I reverse my first decision. Dis man vins," and the judge stuck to his last decision and won his railroad case.—Topeka State Journal.

GOD'S CHOSEN.

O, my people,
Ye who have taken a new world,
Ye who have conquered the desert,
Ye who have broken from bondage,
Gathered from all nations,
Flower of all the races,
Be true, O my people,
Be loyal unto the highest,
Be great as the fathers who bore you,
Be worthy the past and the future;
Help all peoples from bondage,
From bondage forever.

LIBRARY OF

Napoleon. Memoirs of the Life, Exile, and Conversations of the Emperor Napoleon, by the Count de Las Cases. With eight steel portraits, maps and illustrations. Four vols., post 8vo, each 400 pp., cloth, $5.00; half calf extra, $10.00.

With his Son the Count devoted himself at St. Helena to the care of the Emperor, and passed his evenings in recording his remarks.

Napoleon in Exile; or A Voice FROM ST. HELENA. Opinions and Reflections of Napoleon on the Most Important Events in Life and Government, in his own words. By Barry E. O'Meara, his late Surgeon. Portrait of Napoleon, after Delarache, and a view of St. Helena, both on steel. 2 vols., post 8vo, 662 pp., cloth, $2.50; in half calf extra, $5.00.

Mr. O'Meara's work contains a body of the most interesting and valuable information—information, the accuracy of which stands unimpeached by any attacks made against its authors. The details in Las Cases' work and those of Mr. O'Meara mutually support each other.

Goodloe's Birth of the Republic. Compiled from the National and Colonial Histories and Historical Collections, from the American Archives, from Memoirs and from the Journals and Proceedings of the British Parliament. Containing the Resolutions, Declarations and Addresses adopted by the Continental Congress, the Provincial Congresses, Conventions and Assemblies, of the County and Town Meetings, and the Committees of Safety, in all the Colonies, from the year 1765 to 1779, to which is added the Articles of Confederation, a history of the formation and adoption of the Constitution, the election of President Washington, his Inauguration, April 30, 1789, a copy of the Constitution, and Washington's Inaugural Speech. 12mo, 400 pp. Cloth, $1.00.

Origin of Species, by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of a Favored Race in the Struggle for Life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth, 75 cts.

This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists now fully support Darwin's position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race.

Roche foucauld's Moral MAXIMS. Containing 541 Maxims and Moral Sentences, by Francis, Duke of Roche foucauld; together with 144 Maxims and Reflections by Stanislaus, King of Poland. Also Maxims to live by, and Traits of Moral Courage in every-day life. 12mo, 186 pages, cloth, 75c.

As Roche foucauld his maxims drew From Nature,—I believe them true.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

* SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO. *

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Osteological Analysis of Structured Man and Cosmos.

Part VIII.

THE ZODIAC of the alchemico-organic cosmos (the physical world)—as we have before stated, and as generally known—is $23\frac{1}{2}$ degrees oblique to the equator. There is an axis to the plane of this circle, as there is also an axis to the plane of the equatorial circle. The axis of the plane of the equatorial constitutes the normal terrestrial axis, while the axis of the ecliptic determines the south magnetic annulus and the north magnetic apex or pole. We have already defined the causes of this magnetic cone, but in order that the student of Universology may the more fully comprehend the character of the zone or belt of the zodiac, the belt in which the twelve zodiacal constellations are emplaced, we will enter upon a more detailed analysis of this zone of motion, for the further consideration that in the study of either one,—the microcosmic or the macrocosmic anatomical structure and functions,—the investigator may be fortified and sustained with the corroborations of the other.

Without entering now into the analysis of the very cause of motion, which we have before stated to reside in the relation of the will to the intellect, we may again urge the fact that motion produces friction, and friction destroys matter and converts it to energy. The primary energy generated through friction is magnetism, or magnetic energy.

The reader is already acquainted with our attitude regarding the character of universological form. The cosmic structure is cellular; its circumference is related to its nucleus or center by a reciprocal interflow. The energies of the circumference converge to a focal point, which is most intensely active because it is the prime vorticle (vortex point), at which point all converging energies meet. All metallic and mineral substances in the circumference, when reduced to energy, flow to this astral nucleus; there they materialize into a partially solid focus, which is made to revolve upon its axis. This motion and the concomitant friction and combustion, with the correlation of energy and matter involved in the active processes, conform to the universal law of activity.

Heat reacts in cold, light in darkness, and positive, in negative or passive. These accompaniments and attributes of motion are supremely intensified at this center of influx and efflux, and because of this law, heat is repelled from cold, hence they are polarized at the two extremes of the stellar center. One of these energies being expansile and the other contractile, the stellar nucleus is thrown a little from the central axis of its motion, and is therefore forced into a circle of excentricity in connection with its axillary revolution. Thus the central star of the physical cosmos, whence emanate the energies of radiation, becomes the primary origin of the so called physical energies radiating through space and denominated luminous ether by the "scientists."

There are two axes of magnetic energy generated by the motion of the stellar nucleus; one is the axis of the axillary motion, the other is the axis of the excentric motion. Magnetism is the correspondent of heat, as electricity is the correspondent of light; the difference residing in the mere fact of higher and lower tension. The magnetic energy generated by the friction of momentum observes the general law of combustion, developing into reverse and repellent qualities of energy, the superheating energy flowing in one direction, the heat-diminishing energy in the opposite. As the tendency of one is to expand and the other to contract, there is formed the magnetic cone as the result of the excentric motion of the stellar nucleus.

The stellar center moves in a spiral around the magnetic cone, with its axis convergent or oblique to the axis of the cone. The spiral motion of the nucleus is caused by the charging and discharging of the energy generated by the motion. The oscillation of the nucleus north and south—the movement occasioned by the induction of the energy generated by the motion of the nucleus—is correspondential to the contraction and elongation of the pineal gland (conarium) in the discharge of its secretions into the aqueduct of Sylvius. The stellar nucleus is the parent of every other star in existence, and its motions determine the course of the motions of the stellar realm; this entire motion being governed by the course of the motion of the zodiacal belt.

The ecliptic is the median line of the zodiac. It is so called because all eclipses occur on this line. It is a circle running obliquely to the equator $23\frac{1}{2}$ degrees, extending north to the tropic of Cancer, and south to the tropic of Capricorn. The motion of the sun north and south from these two tropics, is a perpetual spiral or helical motion. It is from a knowledge the ancients had of this motion that the sun was called helios, and from which is derived the term helix. The same spiral motion is communicated to the planets,—all dependent upon the spiral motion of the central nucleus.

The encephalic zodiac must sustain the same relation to the pole of its axis, that the alchemico-organic does to the pole of its axis. In determining the zone or annulus of the cerebral zodiac from its correspondence to the astronomical zodiac, we lay the foundation for an absolutely correct mental science.

We here introduce a diagram for the purpose of facilitating the somewhat intricate subject engaging the student's attention. Notice the circle marked equator; the poles of the axis of this circle are marked south and north pole. The belt lying oblique to this circle, upon which are marked the dark spots representing the planetary discs (disci), is the zodiac. The middle line of this belt is marked by an arrow at the word ecliptic. The student will also notice the axis of the ecliptic perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic and zodiac.

If we would pursue a study of the character of the encephalic belt of motion in its correspondence to the laws and motions of the astronomical zodiac, we must first learn to translate the language of physical motion and form to the motions and forms of mental qualities. Let us furnish an illustration of the significance of this proposition. We have defined the fact and causes of the excentricity of the astral nucleus. To translate this physical language into the language of mental science, we must know the corresponding cause of the excentricity of human character.

To the normal world, moving along on the line of the anthropotic equator, the Lord Jesus was the most excentric of men, but he was to the anthropotic zodiac what the astral nucleus of the cosmic astronomy is to the astronomical zodiac.

A Notorious Criminal Attacks Koreshanity.

Ex-Convict Dis Debar, Foiled in a Fraudulent Scheme at San Estero, Fla., Libels Koreshan Institutions.

A WOMAN professing to be Madame Howard came to the Guiding Star Assembly of the Koreshan Unity at Beth Ophrah, announcing her desire to identify herself with the Koreshan movement. She seemed in many ways attractive to a number of our people, and to a certain extent ingratiated herself into the good opinion of some of the membership.

We very soon discovered her identity with the notorious Dis Debar, alias Vera Ava, whom we knew to have been two or three different times convicted of criminal offences, and having served the period of two or three convictions, one of which was two years in the Illinois

State prison at Joliet, the evidences of which are on the criminal and police court records of Chicago, together with her portrait and description in the Rogues' Gallery of this city. She is regarded by the police and detective forces of Chicago as the slickest and most accomplished crook, confidence woman, adventuress, and swindler that the devil ever conjured and let loose to afflict society. Her aliases are Dis Debar, Vera Ava, McGown, Howard, Princess Editha Loleta, Baroness of Rosenthal, Countess of Landsfeldt, etc.; of these latter fictions we are justified in stating that the claim is pure fabrication, having no foundation in fact.

Ann Odelia Salomon, Madam Dis Debar, Vera P. Ava, all one and the same person, is in the State Penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois. The crime for which she is now paying the penalty was the theft of $735 from Mrs. Jane Irene Mitchell, of Elgin, Ill., a poor widow who keeps a lodging house and a small bakery as a means of earning a livelihood. Mrs. Mitchell in her testimony, said that in February, 1892, Vera P. Ava came to her house to board, and soon ingratiated herself into her affections. She claimed to be a medium through whom she (Mrs. Mitchell) could receive communications from her departed husband.

Time went on; Vera Ava left the city, but returned to Elgin the following September and again took up her residence with Mrs. Mitchell, using her sitting-room daily. Mrs. Mitchell returned to her room one day and discovered Vera Ava counting some money which she (Mrs. Mitchell) had drawn from the bank and placed in a tin box. Out of $1000, Vera claimed there was but $265 left, and declared that the spirits had taken the rest. Mrs. Mitchell did not have Vera arrested till a month later, when her suspicions were aroused by Vera's extravagant expenditures in wearing apparel.

The above is copied from a report of the case. For this crime she (Dis Debar) was convicted and sentenced to the Joliet State prison for two years,—and served her time. She served six months on Blackwell's Island, the court records of which are accessible to any one interested enough to inquire into her character.

After coming to us, and after knowing that we were acquainted with her history, she professed repentance, confessing the crimes for which she had been convicted, but begged of our people not to send her out to utter destruction. She declared that she had never been honest in her life, but that now she was honest and desired to be saved. We tried to save her; we gave her a home, and endeavored to make her happy. The Pre-Eminent of our Society was specially kind to, and considerate of her, and trusted her so much as to give her the liberty of the house without special supervision. The result was that a diamond ring and a gold necklace, valued at about $150 each (three hundred in all), were dematerialized by the identical spirits which appeared in the sitting-room of Mrs. Mitchell.

The evidence we have that the diamond ring was taken by "Princess Editha Loleta, Baroness of Rosenthal, Countess of Landsfeldt," is, that two witnesses will testify to having seen her with the ring, while trying to borrow money on it, she claiming it to be worth $150. The testimony regarding the necklace is more emphatic, for we procured the pawn ticket for the redemption of the necklace, of the party to whom the "Princess Editha Loleta, Baroness of Rosenthal, Countess of Landsfeldt" turned it over, after raising $10 on the necklace at the pawnshop where it was located. We possess unmistakable proofs of the larceny in question, and we are watching for the woman's return to Chicago, from which she will take a longer journey to Joliet than the one she took in March, 1893, previous to the World's Fair at Chicago. The Chicago police are very much in want of this self-dubbed Princess.

Since leaving our Society, she married a man by the name of Jackson, and started on a "confidence" tour. Her first adventure was to visit a man in New Orleans who had become interested in the work of the Koreshan Unity. She and the man Jackson professed to be authorized by the Koreshan Unity to work publicly in its interests. He believed their report, and on the strength of their apparent interest in the work, was prevailed upon to go with them to Estero, Florida. Their ostensible purpose was to show him the site of the New Jerusalem, but the real purpose was to inveigle one of the members of the Unity at Estero to go with them to New Orleans and thence to India, whither they expected to lead the man in question. Their little game was blocked, and the pair were exasperated; a villainous newspaper scandal against the Koreshan Unity is the outcome.

We write the above to warn the readers of THE SWORD and all interested in the Koreshan work, against the wiles of this villainous pair of rascals. The woman is not tall, but unproportionably large, weighing nearly three hundred pounds. While here, her hair was bleached yellow; it may be brown or grey, now. She has one distinguishing mark,—an ugly scar under her left eye and extending up on her temple. Look out for her in whatsoever guise she appears to you. She makes an apparent display of diamonds, but they are paste. Regard Frank D. Jackson with a liberal degree of suspicion.

Koreshan Flashlight on a Dark Object.

The Dark Object.

HUMANS ONCE HAD SIX SENSES.—Office of the Lost One No One Has Been Able to Learn.—One of the greatest discoveries of physiology is that we once had six senses. What the lost sense was no one knows, and probably no one will ever know. But that our forefathers possessed it there is no doubt, for the remains of that part of the brain in which it resided are still to be seen in any one of us. These remains are simply a small and now perfectly useless little mass of brain substance, called the "pituitary body." It consists of two tiny oval lobes joined together and lying in a little cavity of the skull strangely named the sella turcica, and situated over and above the nose. It is quite possible that it may have enabled our forefathers to see in the dark before lamps and candles were invented, or it may have placed them in communion with ghosts and fairies, or it may have been an organ that enabled them to go home in a bee line when they lost their way in the primeval forests. On the other hand, it is possible that it was a bad substitute for vision or smell or hearing, and died out when the improved sense organ developed.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Koreshan Flashlight.

SENSE is a sensation, and the seat of every sensation, accompanied with mental consciousness, has its primary location in the brain. Vision is a sense, so are hearing, smelling, tasting, and the feeling of the cuticle and nerves of the body. Aside from these, there is another sense or sensation just as natural, and belonging as much to the material and sensory functions as any of the above; and so far, we have not discovered any indication that the sense under consideration is obsolete in the mass of mankind. We refer to the sense so commonly called sens-u-ality, in which people are so steeped that their stupefaction precludes the possibility of distinguishing its existence.

The sense of orgasm is one of the natural sensations, and has a sensory center in the brain as absolutely as any one of the other five. How mankind can subject itself perpetually to an indulgence of a sense or sensation which is the most sens-u-al of any, affording a more degrading and inverted delight than any, and not know of its existence, is more than we can understand. There is still another natural sense, the seventh, which we have not time to consider in this brief article.

As there are seven natural senses, so there are seven correspondingspiritual qualities. It is a most common thing for so called advanced thinkers to class everything of what some denominate psychic phenomena, as belonging to the sixth sense. Now, as there are seven natural senses and seven corresponding spiritual attributes, how much mental perspicacity is there in the general psychological rubbish regarding the "sixth or psychic" sense?

If there is a sense of seeing in the natural world, and something which corresponds to it in the spiritual, and we classify vision in the natural as the primary or first sense, why not also classify vision in the spiritual as the primary, first, and corresponding function, and the same of hearing, smelling, tasting, and the general sense of feeling? Clairvoyance is an attribute or function; it corresponds to seeing, No. 1. Clairaudience is clear hearing; it is the second function, No. 2, and corresponds to the natural ear; then there is olfaction, No. 3, and gustation, No. 4; etc. Why not employ a little common sense in the consideration of sensations, and not amass and jumble things up when the object is to enlighten the mind?

Now a little about the pituitary body, or glandula vitæ. It is the most active elaborator of any organ in the human brain. All the essences of the fifth, two lateral, and third ventricles, and the fluid of the aqueduct of Sylvius flow into the glandula vitæ, pituitary gland, through the infundibulum. These fluids are there mixed and re-elaborated for distribution throughout the body, by various channels to be subsequently and further considered. The pituitary gland is the vital gland par excellence of the human economy.

The Coming Conflagration and Birth of the Sons of God.

VICTORIA GRATIA.

WE WHO have accepted Koreshanity necessarily accept in full both the Message and the Messenger. We know nothing of the truth concerning God and the universe aside from the direct communication of the word as exoterically imparted by our great Teacher. Koreshanity is the scientific communication of truths given for our comprehension.

As we mentally develop under the instruction of KORESH from month to month and year to year; while we listen to his incomparable logic and his eloquence, we would not dare—lest we do violence to the truth he utters—formulate or project a thought, either for private or public consideration, not subject to his criticism and approval without an absolute authorization and commission to go and declare his truth. His words to us are too full of meaning and his cause too sacred for any of us to jeopardize their successful progress by any careless attempt to promulgate any private interpretation. Having thus premised the subject to which we desire to invite the reader's attention, we will merely add that whatsoever we attempt to portray is but a reiteration of what he teaches as we have learned it from him, submitting it in our own language in the hope that we may simplify to some extent for the purpose of reaching minds not yet fully prepared to receive directly from the fountain-head of wisdom.

In a recent article we attempted to set forth in our own simple methods of presentation, the profound question of the Womanhood of God. We endeavored to do this in our own way and from our own mental conceptions. We have been under the instruction of the Founder of Koreshanity for ten or more years, and have therefore incorporated more or less his methods of expression; besides we have before us his own written expositions upon the subject we have undertaken to elucidate, and further, we dare not project our thoughts without their being subjected to the proper inspection and criticism, hence our own thoughts upon this subject are his own.

Koreshanity teaches us that now at the end of the age or dispensation, the fruit of the age is to mature in the resurrection of the sons of God: that these sons are to result from a change wrought in the present humanity, and not by the product of offspring through virginal propagation. The reason for such a conclusion is in the fact, first, that the present humanity is to be redeemed from sensuality and corruption by the application of the laws of life, and this present mortal and cor-ruptible nature is to be changed suddenly to an incorruptible and immortal nature; second, that there must be an agreement between the process of sowing and the process of ripening fruit.

The Lord was produced by a virginal conception. When produced he became the firstfruits of a new order. He was planted, not a material sperm, nor was there a psychic impregnation of females as in the case of the Virgin Mary. In the case of the Virgin there was a psychic transmission from the mind of Joseph, her affianced or espoused, through the mind of Mary. The conception was not ordinary, it was extraordinary, that there might in this way be produced the beginning of a new order or genus of men.

When the church was vitalized for the regeneration of the sons of God, a man dissolved, became spirit. It was not the mere sperm of reproduction, either physical or spiritual, but the man as a full grown, complete human being. The God-man was planted,—He constituted the seed of the church. The seed was planted in the church. The man was the seed, the full church comprised or contained the womb of reproduction. The church will bring forth full grown men. This is emphatically the position of KORESH, and this is his doctrine. There will be no virginal infants in this age of the world. It is contrary to every principle of law and to everything KORESH has ever proclaimed. We are thus imperative, because there are some who are promulgating doctrines of devils,—base counterfeits of this special gospel of Koreshanity.

We may now consider the process. KORESH, in the declaration of his gospel, proclaims his own theocrasis (translation). In this enunciation he says he will prepare a biologic battery composed of men and women chosen by himself, so ordained and related as to provide for their dissolution by dematerialization, that is, their conversion from matter to spirit without the ordinary process of corruptible decay. He declares that through the dissolution of this central biologic battery, the great conflagration is kindled that the prophets have foretold, and that in this conflagration or burning of the world, thousands of people will be consumed and converted to spiritual energy.

He will have entered the receptacle which he has prepared, taking with him his central group,—for they will have been thus absorbed and blended into the one central consciousness. This will constitute the vitalization of the material womanhood. It will constitute her transformation from the mortal and degenerate state to the divine natural Motherhood. It is the literal creation of the Goddess, so forming and vitalizing her maternity as to prepare her for the influx of the spirit which has been produced by the conflagration of the thousands who have been dissolved. She becomes the nucleus of inflow, and therefore the materializer of the sons of God whom she will project from herself as full grown, materialized forms.

These are the biune, virgin men. They will be biune, because to produce them there will have been formed at this centre the biune nucleus, and in the general electromagnetic conflagration men and women will have been consumed. Their energies will have merged together into the one recreative centre, from which they will project as the two-in-one, biune sons of God. In the conflagration, the spirit of the thousands will flow to the one centre, because it is the central pole of masculinity and femininity united in the primate biunity.

Origin of the Christian Church and State.

REV. BERTHALDINE.

IN THE Scriptures of KORESH it is written: "Church and state have their origin primarily in the unity of God and man. Every age or dispensation begins with a retying (religion) of that which, through adultery, has been divorced. God entered into covenant with Abraham to the degree that Abraham became endowed with divine grace, and had found favor with God. Through that conjunction it became possible for the great Lawgiver to appear, and by law to lead, through the force of its potentiality, the people of Israel into such grandeur of development as to produce the Lord God from heaven (the most holy and interior domain of divine mentality), by virtue of the seed of God planted in that people through Abraham. The Jewish people were not only a unity of God and man, but in their government they comprised the unity of church and state until, through the corruptions of Jewish polity, there came a necessity for a divorce. God and man became separated, the church divided, and a new religion,—a new bond of obligation was consummated, and a new church and state were instituted."

This new bond of obligation, in which the Christian church and state found their origin, was the seed-fruit of the universal progressive and retrogressive life of ages, the redeeming product of the unity of God and man, consummated in the Jewish race. The Lord Jesus Christ, Jehovah, manifestation of the biunity of Deity, in essence wisdom and love, polarized and materialized as the God-begotten, God-inherent Son of man, is the God-declared origin of the entire universe:

He is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature: for by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist; and he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell.—Col. i: 15-19.

The church is the strength of His biune being put forth in humanity for the regeneration of his legitimate environment of earthly glory, and for the reconstruction of himself and his inherent Bride, the Church Triumphant, in his divine image and likeness, as the astral center of the universe. Jehovah is the origin of all heaven-begotten and earth-born forms of church and state in all ages which succeed each other in timic order, to express, in varied forms, his seven degrees of evolution and involution which reveal the seven stages of the creation of the Grand Man,—Jehovah multiplied and glorified. Jehovah, as the seed-man, Jesus, in fulfilling the office of Abram or high father, disseminated his personality as Holy Spirit of biune being, and formed from its vitalizing and constructive potencies a spiritual church or Bride, in whatis known through history as the primitive Christian church, of which he was the fully recognized head, Abram or "high Father." This conjunctive unity of Jehovah with an earth-born Bride, made of twain one, for the production of a new man,—a new name to be written on a "white stone."

The primitive church, by virtue of appropriating the seed, Jehovah, was recognized by Paul, not as seeds many, but as one Christos,—seed of Abraham, the Father-Mother of Abraham himself as the biune Deity and of all his glorified sonship, the order of Melchizedek. This order, in the supremacy of its earthly glory in the unity of the Anointed, reveals in simultaneity the unified origins of all churches and all states that manifest in earthly forms during the great cycle of Mazzaroth of 24,000 years. The seed-man (Jesus) involved, enthroned as his controlling power, the "spirits of just men made perfect" by many cycles of mortal embodiments and suffering by which they had learned obedience to the law of Moses. In the glory of their unity as Jehovah, they constituted the manifest fulfilment and fruition of that law which embodies as the seed of an ever new and divine church and state.

While in the progress of its cycle of development, the seed of a new heavens and a new earth is developing by involution; a field is being prepared for its reception by the law of evolution from a previous planting. When Jehovah was ready to impart his life to a world, a world was ready for its reception; that is, a people had reached their terminal point of retrogression, and were intellectually and affectionally matured for impregnation by the degree and quality of life forces he had to impart.

When the Jehovah became manifest nineteen hundred years ago, three great varieties of national life,—the Jew, the Greek, and the Roman—divided the prepared world between them. Through the operation of law, the Greek and Roman elements had been brought into remarkable union with the more sacred elements of Judaism. In the Hebrew nation was a divinely-laid foundation for the superstructure of the church. In the spread of the languages and the commerce of the Greeks,—in the perfection of their poetry and philosophy, was found the necessary means for the rapid spread of Christian concepts, and in the union of multitudes of incoherent provinces under the laws and government of Rome, was found a strong framework which kept together for the required time, the social orders to be vitalized by the divine seed for its ultimate reproduction in supreme glory.

The fountains of national life forever gush forth and flow in channels appointed of God. That of the Jews, as has been stated, began its manifestation with the call of Abraham, whose family was chosen to transmit the life of the divine unity of love and wisdom under the immediate direction of its almighty power. Everything in Hebrew collective and private life was connected with a revealed religion, which found perpetual expression in divinely-appointed and significant ceremonies, and was for the use and benefit of all,—from the poorest peasant to the wisest Rabbi; and all children were taught to claim their share in the religious privileges of the chosen people. One God, the Creator and Judge of the world, and the author of all good, was the only object of adoration, and his most sacred and potential name was Jehovah, of whom Isaiah wrote: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the everlasting [age-lasting] Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isa. ix:6. This name was destined to become to the world the motive and support of all holiness; and his spirit, in its seven progressive involutions, is the vitalizer of the seven universal churches which give birth in turn to seven manifestations of the Deific name, with their varied radiances of crowning glory during the 24,000-year cycle of Mazzaroth.

The seed of Abraham, or the Christos in the form of the primitive Christian church, was characterized by an adherence to certain clearly-defined principles and practices manifest in the life of its head, Jehovah, who said to its primary nucleus: "One is your master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." This body, as to form and function, was fashioned like its head, made up of many members performing divers uses or functions, and characterized by varying degrees of honor according to uses performed. In this body the functions of church and state were so conjoined as to be denominated one. The relationships of members were so close, by virtue of spiritual bone, blood, and nerve, that they regarded each other as of one flesh; and if one member suffered, all suffered. All the goods of life were held in common, and were distributed like the elements of the physical body, according as each had need. The historic record of this holy seed of Abraham, made manifest through the functions of the organic unity called the Christian church, is found in such language as this:

And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers. * * And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved. Acts ii: 42-47.

The life of Deity manifest in the flesh of Jehovah, is the eternal pattern of the perfect organic social life expressing the unity of church and state. The prayer of Jehovah was this: "As thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." Organic unities always have their origin in one, and if the unity is perfect and self-perpetuating, the origin is a biune one, through whose overshadowing power many members are baptized by one spirit into one body, and rendered obedient to the laws which perpetuate its being.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE RADIATIONS of antichristian forces which militate against the revelation of the fundamental truths of being and existence, are from the great battery of fallacy. The generation of the energies of fallacy begin primarily in the pole of mental darkness, the positive pole of death. It is the antithet of the biological Head of the universe, manifest in humanity nineteen hundred years ago; it is the reaction of the operation of the forces of truth in the sensual heart and soul of man during the Christian dispensation. The vortex of evil is receiving influxes of pabulum of death from the mortal world. It is the absolute reversion of the poles of mental activity, and the energies generated in the pole of death are the exact reverse in quality and tendency of all that was contained in the Godhead of Jesus the Christ. Subtly its penetrating rays speed through every plane of thought, until the entire mental world operates under the hypnotic governing power. It is the power of universal hallucination, the unknowing of all things. The principal idea pervading the theological and astronomical world is infinity. It is a process of mentally reaching out into infinite space, going farther and farther from the central principles and factors of life; it is diffusion and disintegration. It saturates the mind with a fallacious science—with the thought that the universe extends illimitably; it fills the mind with the thought that God fills all this infinite openness, in all directions. It involves the doctrine of ultra-individualism, making one lifetime for man, and presuming every man to be the external mortal coil for all divine activities. The great battery of fallacy is human, and involves the millions of devotees to the gods of this world; and it will continue radiating its energies until the whirlpool reaches its ultimate revolution in the destruction of the last element of the "Man of Sin" in the beginning of a new spiral of progress, in the formation of a new pole—the positive pole of Life.

Many persons put two days' study of the Koreshan Cosmogony alongside a lifetime saturation of Copernican fallacies, and cannot see how the Astronomy of KORESH can ever fit the facts of astronomical phenomena. We are advised what some of the features are, and how they militate against Koreshan conclusions concerning the form of the universe. Some of these features are particularized: The appearance of Saturn, the movements of planets, eclipses, positions of the stars, distance to the sun, and the exact number of miles to the farthest nebula, etc. We have had many lessons on practical and theoretical astronomy by correspondence. We are unfortunate in having to come upon the stage of action at a period in the world's history when astronomical knowledge is accessible only to our critics! It is remarkable how some novices in astronomy who criticize Koreshan Cosmogony, who cannot solve the problems of the universe on the basis of the Copernican system, nor remove the numerous inexplicable difficulties in the modern astronomy, can so quickly decide how things should operate in the hollow globe! We have studied the question a little longer and a little more critically than some we have heard from, and we will yet awhile presume to know that astronomical phenomena fit the Koreshan System.

Human beings are continually coming into the world of tangibility and going out of it. The laws of the conservation of substance in the economy of the universe, provide for their coming from the place to which they go—the spiritual world. Existence is a sort of series of arrivals and departures, and constant turning of cycles, the renewing of the old and the aging of the new. In the great cycle of being we progress and retrogress; we ascend or descend according as our aspirations are in the higher or in the lower plane. We follow our ideals; they may be good or bad. In time, in the revolution of cycles, heaven and hell are alternately expressed in the earth, derived from corresponding conditions in the spiritual world. All things and conditions originate in the mind. Mental entities descend from the mind into the blood corpuscles, and from thence to the plane of reproduction. Re-embodiment is scientifically demonstrated in the propagation of all life. If we can scientifically ascertain from whence man proceeds, we determine the location of the spiritual world; it is nowhere else than in the labyrinthine cellular involutions of all thought—the human brain.

What kind of astronomy did Jesus believe in? He himself was a complete world, the perfect microcosmic universe. His astronomy, his world of observation, was the subjective world in him. He saw himself through and through by means of his philosophic sense. The objective world did not concern him as it concerns the sense of science. He read his own book, he contemplated what he contained as the pivot of all, as the seed contemplates its own essential life in involution, in its own self-satisfaction. The seed, through propagation, develops other senses in its death and resurrection, and reaches externals in its evolution. Through the sowing of philosophy, through the dissolution and dissemination of the life of the central man, science develops in the external mind and reveals the world of Jesus, his astronomy, his theology, and his organic unity.

Modern theologians are desirous of finding some bridge, connecting link, or "missing link" between finite man and the infinite, because Jesus refuses to fill the prescriptions of the doctors of divinity. The cross of Jesus was the bridge, the means by which his own divine nature was crossed with the imperfect and the mortal. Finite means perfect, finished; infinite means imperfect, unfinished, incomplete. God is finite, and the devil is infinite! The cross of Jesus was the bridge over the chasm, the way by which he crossed the great gulf fixed otherwise impassable, between the finite nature of God and the infinity of mortality, the bridge between heaven and hell. The resurrection is the way back.

The difference between the popular and the Koreshan ideas of being, is the difference between the lowest and the highest degrees of mental conception. The modern idea is that God fills all space,—the same in every place; and hence cannot be determined because he cannot be directed along channels of limitation. The universal mind of the physical cosmos is the lowest form of mind, while the mental force generated in the perfect brain cell is the highest possible degree of consciousness. The mind of God is the mind of the perfect man.

The old world repudiates the discovery of the new. The old world endeavors to smother the light which reveals its corruption. The greatest agitation the world can ever know, the most intense vibrations that can ever obtain, will be concerning the greatest discovery of the age upon which pivots the destiny of the world, and which will establish universal equilibrium—the fundamentals of life and being as revealed in Koreshan University.

There is a shade of difference between modern "Christian Science" and the primitive Christian System. The former says that "There is no real power in sin and death"; while it was a fundamental teaching of the latter that "the devil hath the power of death." If there is no power in death, Jesus did not overcome anything, and his victory amounts to nothing. And yet the "science" is "Christian"!!!

Modern republicanism finds its correspondence in the republican system of salvation, of the doctrine of ultra-individualism, which makes every man his own teacher, and the arbiter of all questions for himself, whether his conclusions be right or wrong. It is intellectual chaos and mental anarchy.

Christmas reminds us of the great mass of Christians who commemorate the birthday of the Almighty from the human world, but who, having forgotten that God is man, now worship a myth in the sky billions of miles distant. A fallacious god was the creator of the Copernican worlds.

Copernicus did not discover anything new; he simply projected his own perverted world of planets and stars which operate, not in the celestial space, but only in the mind of fallacy.

If there is no real substance to sickness or disease, the "Christian Science" method of cure is a fake—pretending to cure when it is held that there is nothing to cure!

There is no difference in the character of authority of the supreme courts of law and the supreme courts of modern science; the decisions in each are "opinions."

The cries of the oppressed are heard everywhere; under the oppression of the millionaire and the money power, we can even hear the earth "hollow!"

The stars in the visible heavens are vortices of alchemical energies, the nuclei of consciousness of the physical cosmos.

When we surveyed the rectiline on the Florida coast, we demon-straight-ed the fact that the world is concave.

There are two kinds of communism; one is a community of goods, while the other is a community of bads.

Human corruption cannot be transformed to the gold of immortality without passing through the crucible.

Modern cities are full of the signs of the times, of all trades and professions of competism.

Editorial Discussions, Chats, and Correspondence.

THE EDITOR.

How Did the Ancients Know the Earth was Hollow?

(1) I never was more interested in anything in my life than I am in the New Geodesy. The scientific part interests me beyond measure; the religious aspect has no charm for me whatever.

(2) Those old Bible astronomers stumbled onto the truth in regard to the hollow globe theory, for the simple reason that they could not conceive of people living on the outside of a ball spinning through space at the rate of 65,000 miles an hour. But you did not ask people to give their views on the old Bible scientists; you merely wanted their opinions on the CELLULAR COSMOGONY.

(3) Well, your position seems impregnable; but the majority of the scientists in these latter days are too self-sufficient and bigoted in their opinions to investigate anything so dangerous to their own fossilized ideas.—S. P., Quincy, Ill.

(1) We are pleased to note your interest in the Koreshan Cosmogony. We have found the subject of the form of the universe to be intensely interesting, because it reveals the laws and functions which operate and are found in every domain in the universe. The Koreshan Cosmogony is a revelation of the laws of creation, and consequently, is the theology of that creation. But for the ramifications into which this knowledge enters, the discovery of the earth's form would fail in its mission. It is the foundation of all reason, the premise of all conclusions—the natural, tangible, and unmistakable proof of all other features of the Koreshan System. The mind cannot fully comprehend a thing made, until it reaches the comprehension of how it was made and the means by which it is maintained, as well as the purposes of its existence.

(2) There is no such thing as stumbling onto the truth. The focusing of entities and substances of truth is the result of the operation of immutable law, the result of the conspiracy of forces which make the discovery of the truth inevitable at the proper time, but impossible during any period of the world's history not destined to produce the scientific fruit of the dispensations. An idea is a living entity,—a living being, communicable as a substance, transmissible as an energy, and susceptible of being received only by those who attract the substance. The knowledge of the form of the universe can come in any age to that man only who, through the highest possible desire to make knowledge serve its highest purpose in the world, can create a vortex of thought of sufficient intensity and rapidity of vibration to attract and harmonize into one system of organic unity, all the knowledges of the universe and its contents.

(3) The Koreshan Cosmogony will never be overthrown, because the shape of the earth cannot be changed; it has always been concave, and will forever remain so. The evidences of the earth's tangible surface are absolute, and when subjected to test, it will always testify to the facts of its eternal form. Truth asks no favors of the modern astronomer; she will accept him if he accepts her bounties, but she will crush him in his persistency in remaining in ignorance. Truth is terrible enough in her vengeance to remove all obstructions to her progress!

The Vertical Plumb-bob.

Prove that the plumb-bob hangs vertical. I have been asked to demonstrate the fact.—O. W. B., Surveyor and Engineer, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

The fact that the plumb-line hangs practically vertical is demonstrable from several standpoints. A given perpendicular is in the direction of the gravic ray. It cannot be conceived in thought that an object in free suspension could be out of equilibrium. There must be a balancing of weight on both sides of the center of gravity of the suspended object; otherwise there would be an oscillation of the center of gravity if the suspended object was at rest. This forces the line connecting the point from which the object is suspended, and the center of gravity of the object, directly and absolutely coincidental with the direction of gravity.

The plumb-line hangs exactly at right angles to the level. The level is but the balancing of a fluid on the same principle that the object suspended is balanced. The bubble seeks the highest point on account of its specific gravity; and when it is at rest in the middle of the vial the liquid is in equilibration, the vial is level, and the vertical of gravity is absolutely at right angles. Standing water is in equilibrium. Any point on its surface is at right angles with its co-ordinating perpendicular. This is demonstrated by actual experiments in hydrostatics, as well as by the Koreschan Geodetic Staff in the leveling and adjustment of the Geodetic Apparatus.

The practical vertical is at right angles to the level. The practical vertical and the absolute vertical (or the line connecting any point on the earth's surface and the absolute center of the sphere) would be coincidental if the earth were a perfect globe. It is not perfectly spherical, and hence the planes of the horizontals do not always present to the center, arcs of the same ratio of curvature. The verticals vary from the absolute perpendicular in the same proportion as the arcs vary in curvature; and consequently the gravic rays are refracted more or less according as the arcs vary, and penetrate the circumference always at right angles to its level.

At no point on the earth's surface, however, would the variation be sufficient to materially alter the results of practical demonstration of the earth's concavity, such as made in the Florida coast survey. If out of plumb in any marked degree, it would only cause a difference in the distance in the two directions from the vertical point, to the points of convergence of the chord and arc. The line would run into the earth anyway, even if started on an upward inclination at a given angle!

To China in a Balloon.

(1) I have received a letter from the opposite side of the globe, in which the writer said that we were standing feet to feet. That would be so if we were on the outside, but head to head on the inside.

(2) In such case, could not one go up to China in a balloon?—C. K. S., San Diego, Cal.

(1) Standing feet to feet is the usual idea; hence the term antipodes, from αντι, opposite, and ποδος, feet. In fact, they stand head to head; we would say they are anticephales, from αντι, opposite, and κεφαλη, head.

(2) Australia, rather than China, is on the opposite of the earth from Chicago. (See diagrams on the Sixteenth page.) It would be impossible to go to the other side of the earth directly through the atmospheres, for the following reasons: The atmospheres grow lighter in proportion to the altitude, temperature decreases, and we can breathe only our own atmosphere and live. It cannot be properly said that the opposite of the earth is above us. Perpendiculars reach the terminal point at the center of the earth, and beyond that it is down. It is down in all directions from the central sun, and up to that point from all points on the earth's surface.

Blodgett Blunders Again.

Endeavors to Sell Three Untried Methods of Proving the Earth's Concavity to Prof. Spear.

PROF. R. O. SPEAR:—You cannot find, if you hunt till doomsday, in anything I have written you or Prof. Morrow, where I have claimed to have proved that the earth is convex. Saying that I believed it is, or saying that I do not doubt but it is, is very far removed from saying I have proved it. I make no claim to have proved it; but if Prof. Morrow had not suppressed my criticisms [They were answered specifically in Sept. 30 and Oct. 14 SWORDS.—EDITOR], I would have given good reasons why he has not proved the reverse; and I would have given a method of demonstration that any one could try cheaply in any state in the Union.

You say Prof. Morrow knows that his position is unassailable and infallible. The only question for you and him to answer is, Why should he decline the test you both declare to be infallible?—SAMUEL BLODGETT.

Mr. Blodgett has the misfortune of being on the guessing side of this question. I have had several letters from him, and in one he says: "I have studied the shape of the earth until I am satisfied that the surface is convex." In the above extract he states that he makes no claim to have proved convexity. Yet he offers me a simple method of demonstrating the contour of the surface of the earth. Putting two of the statements together, we must conclude that Mr. B. has proven the surface to be convex.

He offers to furnish me three methods which he claims will prove what the contour of the earth is; then he says he is satisfied that the surface is convex; again, he writes that he has not proven it, but wants to sell me methods of demonstration. It is evident that Mr. B. does not know "where he is at." He has a method, but he has no idea of what it will prove, for by his own statements he has not proved what the shape of the earth is! If he knew his position, he would know what his methods would prove. It would be consistent if he were to test his methods, prove something, and then offer his proofs to the world.

So far as I know, Prof. Morrow has not refused to test Mr. B.'s methods; he has refused to permit Mr. B. to name who shall decide the results of the untried methods. Prof. Morrow has tested his own methods, and has proven concavity; and why should we care to deal with the unknown when we have the known?—R. O. SPEAR, Wis.

Modern Absurdities.

Inconsistencies of Popular Beliefs Concerning Religion and Astronomy.

What strange ideas people will get while groping in the dark! My father and mother belonged to the Methodist church, and of course I was compelled to go to the Methodist Sunday school. There I was taught that God was up above the stars in heaven on his throne, and if I was a good boy, when I died I would go up to heaven. When I went to the district school I was taught that this earth was a round ball and we were living on the outside of it, and that China is on the opposite side from us. The Bible says, "Come, let us reason together." Now suppose we put these two theories together and see what the logical conclusions will be.

A Methodist minister preaching a funeral sermon states to the mourners, "The immortal soul of the deceased has gone up to heaven;" and a Methodist minister in China preaches a funeral sermon and states that that immortal soul from China has gone up to heaven, which is in the opposite direction from the one on this side. Another soul starts from England to the east, and another from California, west, for heaven, and all going in different directions. The further they go the further apart they get, and all bound for the same place. I would like to have some good smart minister tell me when they will all reach heaven!

When I went to Sunday school they used to sing, "Death is the gate to endless joy, yet we dread to enter there." This has the orthodox twang to it! All who have bought through tickets via the underground route to heaven, have been cheated. That is the devil's route and is a broad gauge road. The fact is, the ministers who claim to be called of God (the larger the salary the louder the call) to stand in a pulpit to expound the Scriptures, know just about as much about the Bible as the old lady did about the Presbyterian creed.

A good old Presbyterian while traveling on foot, arrived at a small village. He saw an old lady sweeping the front steps and asked, "Are there any Presbyterians in this town?" "I don't know," she answered; "my son John was down in the back pasture the other day, and shot some kind of a bird, but I don't know whether it was a Presbyterian or not!"—HIRAM MAYO, Fla.

Chat With Readers.

This number of THE FLAMING SWORD is specially good, and you will appreciate the studies arranged for your perusal and reflection. The profound subject of the analysis of the framework of Man and Cosmos, by KORESH, continues, accompanied by a surprising flashlight on the usually dark subject of the sixth human sense. The sixth sense is so clearly defined in this article that even a metaphysician ought to be able to see the point! Another article from the pen of VICTORIA GRATIA appears this week. It is called forth by the advocacy of an absurd fallacy concerning the processes of the resurrection, by a few viduals who would like to destroy the work of KORESH. The arguments used are clear, authoritative, and scientific. The subject is of special interest, and the treatment of it suggests the very key to the processes and purposes of the great biological battery originated by KORESH, which will culminate in the redemption of the world. The "origin of the Christian Church and State," is one of a series of three very excellent articles from the pen of REV. BERTHALDINE—a very clear treatment of the subject of the Head of humanity as the origin of all principalities and powers.

We wish all our readers could peruse some of our high-class exchanges. We receive some very excellent ones—the representative magazines of the world. We find many things contained in these journals that assist the student in the study of Universology, the drift of current events, and the thought and work of the higher classes of humanity the world over.

We have the Christmas number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, into which has been infused newer editorial life. It is now edited entirely by Mrs. Frank Leslie. It contains an excellent article of interest to womankind, "Women in Journalism," and one of special interest to all scientists, —Marconi's Space Telegraphy, by a noted civil engineer. Just now, after the assassination of the Empress of Austria, "The Romance and Tragedy of Schonbrunn," connected with the history of Napoleon, is worthy of special mention. Taken with THE SWORD, you get a reduction on this monthly; both THE SWORD and Frank Leslie's for one year, for only $1.75.

We take special interest in the Cosmopolitan, a valuable illustrated monthly. The December number is before us, containing the very finest engravings illustrating its subjects. We like the treatment of "Art in Photography"; also the "Eclipse Expedition to India" in 1898, illustrating the cinematographic outfits for photographing the solar corona. A number of very fine photographs of solar spectra and corona appear. The Cosmopolitan is only $1.00 a year, each number containing over 150 pages. It would be a very excellent auxiliary to the FLAMING SWORD in your home.

We have recently been favored with the exchange of Success, Cooper Union, New York, a journal which has had remarkable success during the past two years. It is designed to be a journal of encouragement and progress; full of journalistic vigor. We like it. It is an educator, out of the usual ruts. It is now a weekly, 24 pages, fully illustrated. Take it in connection with THE FLAMING SWORD: it will keep you in touch with the times. The regular price is $1.50 per year. You can have THE SWORD and Success for $2 a year, either on new subscription or renewal.

We get the Chuntauquan also; received the Christmas number with a little glad surprise, because it was larger than usual and very beautiful—besides it is unusually interesting. Students of social economy will find Genning's "Immensity of London" a subject for reflection; also "Present Conditions in France," as well as "Factory Life in England." "Woman's Work in War" is bright, newsy, and full of incident. We take an interest in its department, "History as it is made."

In Reform Journals.

ENDORSES KORESHANITY.

A Reform Paper Discovers that Koreshan Universology Solves all Problems.

The word logic is derived from the Greek word 'logos' which itself means 'word,' and both logos and word, in the higher metaphysics, mean the supreme intelligence or absolute truth and wisdom, the divine mind which involves in itself all laws of mind and processes of reason and sensation. Logic, as a science, deals with the laws of reasoning. Analogy, from the same root, 'logos,' is a higher application of logic. There is a correspondence between physics and metaphysics, everything in the physical having its correspondent in the spiritual world, and every physical law having its corresponding mental law; and analogy is the higher logic which traces these correspondences and connections between the different domains.

Now in this age of mental, social, and industrial chaos, when the confusion of beliefs and theories is as complete as the confusion of tongues at Babel, comes a man teaching a system called Koreshan Science, which brings order out of this anarchy and wisdom out of chaos.

It has always seemed to me that there ought to be an intelligible solution of the problem of life, a reason why we are born to suffer and die, a knowledge of whence we come and whither we go. This is the mystery of the ages and the riddle of the Sphinx, and no system of religion or science or logic or metaphysics or ethics that I have ever found, except the Koreshan System, solves these problems, co-ordinating the natural and the spiritual, combining the practical with the ethical, relating all sciences and utilizing all knowledges for the benefit of mankind.

On examining more carefully the Koreshan literature and clearing away some misconceptions, I find that Dr. Teed announces himself as a Messenger of the Covenant. What is a messenger? A person with a message. What is a covenant? A bargain, contract, conjunction, union or marriage. What kind of union or contract is it? A union between God and man. The message is the announcement of the laws of life, and therefore of the laws of death, for life and death are correlatives, as heat and cold, light and darkness, high and low. We are under the laws of death, because we are ignorant of the laws of life, which are the commandments of God. These are written on two tablets. The table of stone is the physical universe. The table of flesh is the metaphysical or anthropotic universe, the spiritual nature of man. Violation of these laws means obscuration of the soul in a material environment, which is the mortal body or body of death. The covenant of life is the law which, if man can fulfil, he shall inherit an immortal body instead of this mortal and corruptible body which shall be dissolved.

This teaching is all in the Bible, which declares that there will be an actual resurrection; that certain persons shall have their corruptible bodies dissolved or dematerialized, and be clothed with immortal and incorruptible bodies. This scripture is constantly repeated at funeral services by people who fail to perceive that it must be fulfilled in the natural, as well as the spiritual, evolution of the human race. There are both natural and supernatural things,—existence and being in their different degrees, and the differences between them constitute their correspondences.

The creeds of the churches state that Jesus was crucified, died and was buried, and descended into hell, from which he rose again the third day. This is a type or correspondence showing that the spiritual Christ, the true Christianity, which was buried in the early church and descended into the hells of Roman paganism and mediæval barbarism, shall be resurrected at the beginning of a period which is now at hand. The present Christianity is as dead as Lazarus was, and his resurrection is another type or symbolism to indicate its resurrection. Everything in nature points in the same direction. The procession of the seasons is a constant round of deaths, burials, resurrections, reincarnations, re-formations, and re-embodiments. The seeds, the flowers, the insects, are destroyed and renewed every year; other creations at longer periods. The period of each is its day. Shall not humanity also have its day? Can we believe that man alone shall forever rot in the grave and humanity be always held in the bonds of ignorance and falsehood which are spiritual death? A knowledge of analogy reveals the relation between man and Nature, and Koreshanity, as I understand it, teaches that man advances through partial reincarnations on the natural plane to ultimate immortality in the flesh.

The word integral, from the same root as 'integrity,' means whole, perfect, sound, and sane. The Koreshan is an integral system, because it links together, according to the laws of analogy or science of correspondences, the spiritual with the physical universe, showing the relation and balance of the forces and functions that perpetuate themselves. It does not teach that suns, moons, stars, and worlds are flying madly through the vast inane, like sparks in an explosion of Chinese fireworks. It teaches that all life inheres in cells, and that the earth itself is a great cell in-habited by humanity. This theory is predicated, I presume, on an understanding of the fourth dimension, a property of matter of which the ordinary scientist is wholly ignorant, and in which, no doubt, is concealed the key to the scientific relations between the visible and invisible worlds.—New Dispensation, Corvallis, Ore.

WEED.

Only a seed!
But it fell from on high
Out of the stars or out of the sky,
Into the lap of the motherly earth,
Into the garden of death and birth,
Where it burgeoned and broke into glorious green,
Into pendulous plumes with an emerald sheen.

Only a weed!
But there sprang from its breast
A blossom as fair as Ithuriel's crest,
A blossom as sweet as the frankincense blest
And the myrrh of the Magi from the West,
A blossom so rare in its beauty and grace
That nothing can ever its sweet self replace,—Boston Ideas,

THE BLIND ASTRONOMERS AND THE UNIVERSE.

Illustrated by the Six Blind Hindus and the Elephant.

It was six men of Hindustan, to learning much inclined,

Who went to see the elephant (though all of them were blind);

That each by observation might satisfy his mind.

The first approached the elephant, and happening to fall

Against his broad and sturdy side, at once began to bawl:

"I surely think the elephant is very like a wall."

The second, feeling of the tusk, cried:

"Ho! what have we here

So very round and smooth and sharp? To me 'tis mighty clear,

This wonder of an elephant is very like a spear."

The third approached the elephant, and happening to take

The squirming trunk within his hand, then boldly up and spake:

"I see" quoth he, "the elephant is very like a snake."

The fourth reached out his eager hand, and felt about the knee,

"What most this mighty beast is like is mighty plain," quoth he:

"'Tis clear enough the elephant is very like a tree."

The fifth, who chanced to touch the ear, said: "E'en the blindest man

Can tell what this resembles most, deny the fact who can,

This marvel of an elephant is very like a fan."

The sixth no sooner had begun about the beast to grope,

Than seizing on the swinging tail, that fell within his scope,

"I see," quoth he, "the elephant is very like a rope."

And so these men of Hindustan disputed loud and long,

Each in his own opinion fixed, exceeding stiff and strong,

Though each was partly in the right, and all were in the wrong.

—John G. Saxe.

Our readers, fond of mathematical problems, will find in the figure 3 some mysterious and unaccountable properties, not to be found in any other numeral, that will afford them considerable amusement as well as instruction in the long winter evenings, if they wish. To begin, when any number is multiplied by three or any multiple of three, as six, nine, twelve, etc., the separate figures in the result, if added together, give a total of three, or a multiple of three, thus:

4, X 3 gives 12, and 1 and 2 are 3.
5 X 3 " 15, " 1 and 5 are 6.
17 X 9 " 153, " 1 and 5 and 3 are 9.
22 X 12 " 264, " 2 and 6 and 4 are 12.

Another noteworthy property of the number is that when thirty-seven is multiplied by three, or any multiple of it up to nine times—that is, twenty-seven—the result consists of three same figures, thus:

37 multiplied by 3 gives 111.
37 " " 6 " 222.
37 " " 9 " 333.
37 " " 12 " 444.

That peculiarities of this kind make 3 a remarkable digit, even mathematicians admit,—Morning Star.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell, we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follum. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. The Success of the Koreshan Movement.

Truth Against a World of Sensualism, the War of the Few Against Modern Corruption.

UNDER the auspices of the Koreshan Unity, the principles of Communistic and Co-operative economics are being put into practical operation. Already there is a meat market and grocery store in successful progress, with the broom manufacturing department well advanced. The bakery recently opened promises success. Just arrived from Boston, we have a shoe manufacturer with machinery and stock for the beginning of operations. In a few days, the shoe establishment will be in active operation. We do not expect to introduce our methods of social development on the lines of communistic co-operation without a fight.

"There was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels," and it is not expected that the conflict will be an easy one. It is communism against competition, therefore when John in vision beheld the birth of the new kingdom, as he looked down the generations to follow him before the harvest, he saw "a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars: and she being with child cried, travailing in birth and pained to be delivered." This struggle to bring to birth the man-child was merely the portrayal, to John, of the struggle the truth would have against error, and the practical life of divine uses against the spirit of the age as it would be manifest in the hell-born spirit of competition that now universally prevails.

The Koreshan Unity has struggled for eleven years in Chicago, against the powers of hell; and notwithstanding the efforts of foes within and without to break us up and destroy our potency, we are certainly making substantial progress. Our system is no longer an experiment. Our printing office, which we started on the financial basis of $350, much of which was obtained on credit, with a chattel mortgage on the material, has grown into a plant now utilizing the labor of from twenty-five to thirty persons, and growing. We not only print our own publications, but are doing quite an extensive job business. When it is taken into consideration that the commercial world, the politics of the city, and the churches are all against us, with the power of a vilifying press, we can congratulate ourselves that we have been able to hold our own.

It must be remembered that we have had a sentiment to create, and have therefore been compelled to turn the current of public opinion, with the prejudice of lies against us which the holy (?) Christianity of this modern age has itself instituted against our cause. We have steadily continued our victorious march, and will continue to do so until our Church will be, as its name signifies, the Church Triumphant. We need all the assistance we can muster from the friends of our cause; a constituency multiplying as the days and weeks go by, and months are compounded.

The CELLULAR COSMOGONY is multiplying our friends. There are thousands of pyramidal apexes who are not supposed to investigate anything new; of course, they reject it. But the processes of progress have developed an augmenting intellectuality capable of comprehending this marvelous enunciation of truth regarding the construction—the form and functions—of the universe, and whose minds are adequate to the deepest interest for that into which they are maturing as the fruit of the dispensation.

There will be no failure of our work. The God of conquest and glory is the Captain of the salvation now being instituted, and though the devil may rage and rave, the god of the money power, which today seems all powerful, will be overthrown, and the King of righteousness will reign in this world as he reigns in heaven. As our work in its practical operations progresses, we will keep our readers informed for their encouragement; for we know the longings of that portion of the human mind which is ripening for Koreshianity, to become co-workers in practical life in co-operative and communistic fields of utility. While others may agitate, and tell the world of a prevailing disease without diagnosing its character, and with false prognostications and without a remedy, we, having diagnosed, and knowing the only remedy, prognosticate scientifically. We know all the laws to be applied in the establishment of God's kingdom in the earth. It is our province to give to the world the gospel of perfection.

"No Weapon Formed Against Thee Shall Prosper."

THE KORESHAN Unity revolves around the central principle or pivot of purification. There can be no immortality without the separation of mind and body from the sensual tendencies of the flesh. This mortal shall put on immortality; this corruptible shall put on incorruption. This cannot be done while mankind indulges in the propagative order of existence. The very intimation of the necessity for a separation from sensual indulgence in order to acquire immortal life, will incense the devil, and his emissaries will bring the very charge against the fruit of the dispensation, suggested to the sensual mind by the enunciation of the central truth of life.

A state prison convict, with her pal, is at the present time active against the Koreshan Unity and its Founder; and while she may endeavor to enrage the community against the progress of our work, and while she may attempt to divert the public gaze from her own nefarious practices of thieving, blackmailing, and appropriating whatsoever she can lay hands on, her effort does not particularly disturb the equanimity of Koreshans. We would scarcely notice the onslaught she and her consort are making, but for the fact that she is liable to dupe others as she already has some who have entertained her, because she claimed to be an authorized agent of the Koreshan Unity. Her record is black with criminality, and it is impossible for her to avoid criminal offences for any length of time. She is neither a countess nor a baroness. The charges she makes are malicious and false, and are suggested by her own criminal life, for they are in line with her own corrupt practices. At present, she is operating in Florida in an effort to excite the ire of the people of that state against the Koreshan Unity.

We have never devoted much time to contradicting the calumniations of our slanderers. The truth we are propounding to the world is great enough to take care of itself, and is so much beyond the comprehension of the devil and all his modern emissaries, as to preclude the possibility of its being stolen for impure and impracticable uses.

Full of Intellectual Dynamis.

We are glad to be informed that the CELLULAR COSMOGONY is a "dangerous book." Nothing destitute of power is ever "dangerous." We know it is dangerous to atheistic astronomy, modern theology, and the "Higher Criticism" having its basis in a system of so called science which has only assumption for its premise, and supposition upon which to predicate the formulation of intellectual activity.

We expect opposition; but the book will have the reinforcement of THE FLAMING SWORD, now placed at the east of the Garden of Eden to keep the way of the Tree of Life. "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought, and his angels." Let the war progress. Selah.

We wish to encourage our readers by stating the fact that we have a real, live agent in New York state, who is devoting his entire time to the sale of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. He is selling hundreds of copies and stirring things up generally, in the localities where he is canvassing. The book is creating a sensation. Let the good work go on.

The beginning of every dispensation is ushered in through the promulgation of religious thoughts suitable to the genius of the age. By the promulgation of religious ideas or thoughts, we mean such restatements of the doctrines of life as will insure the restoration of the relations of God and man, broken through the natural recidivation of the outward church while passing through its regular cycle of regenerating progress.

Every attempt to establish communism upon the basis of atheism, or infidelity to the precept and principle of the personal Jehovah as manifestly human, will come to naught.

Astronomical Evidences of the Approaching End of the Age.

Warning Written on the Dial of the Zodiac.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

ASTRONOMY is said to be one of the most sublime subjects for contemplation. If it be the most sublime, it should serve the greatest and most magnanimous purpose to which any department of the knowledge of the universe can be applied. The fact that modern astronomy has not served such purpose, only proves that it is not the system that is destined to enlighten the world.

The mind of humanity today is not in unity concerning our location in time. There is an instinctive feeling that we are about to cross the threshold of a new world, a new era. The new century is thought to be laden with the fruit of ages, in which all of the high aspirations of humanity may be realized. Millions of people are expecting the ushering-in of an age of universal peace; indeed, here is a field in which man reposes the focus of optimism. The intuitive instinct is prophetic, vaguely expressed in hundreds of new theories of religion and reform.

The subject of the end of the age has concerned the mind of the world since the days of Jesus. As he came into the world in accordance with the operation of law, his return at some period of the world's history would be inevitable. Nineteen hundred years ago, the seed of the Tree of Life was sown in man—in the human race; and since that time there has been a looking forward to the harvest of that sowing. The processes of reproduction of that life span one entire age. Nearly 2,000 years have passed, and thousands are asking, "When shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming?"

The general evidences of the approaching end of the age are seen in all the current events of the world; in the rapid disintegration of church and state; the acceleration of all the forces of the world evinced through the unusual and startling events in the great panorama of progress. The pencilings of human thought converge in the new century. As the old draws to a close, there is renewal of agitation concerning the great questions of the ages, and once again the time prophecies are considered by chronologists. The focal point of the age is not far distant; the harvest is at hand.

Dispensations Marked by Astronomical Time.

The relations of the human world to the physical cosmos are absolute. Man is the highest product of universal activity, the apex of all progressive evolutions through all the lower kingdoms of the world. The human world and the great cell which contains it are co-eternal and co-ordinate; cycles in the physical world correspond to cycles in humanity. The general mind accepts this, in the belief that the coming era will witness the perfection of both man and his environments. Disasters and cataclysms have occurred in the past as a consequence of the greatest mental darkness; while the factors of peace of the Golden Age will hush the storms in the mental and the material worlds!

Astronomical time is invariable; the sphere of the heavens is the truest chronometer. The movements in the physical heavens are constant, and the revolutions of the orbs are completed with unremitting regularity; they make the calendars of the universe. One by one the years of equal length are divided into seasons, and even into seconds. Every orb returns to its place in definite times, measuring definite periods, from the smallest division of time to the great cycles spanning thousands of seasons. Epochs of the past have been marked by the unvarying standard of the stars; written in the physical heavens are the records of all the past, the unmistakable signs of the present, and the infallible prophecies of the future.

The astronomical mind is cognizant of the fact that in one cycle of solar precession the equinoxes pass through twelve divisions of the great belt of the Zodiac, which contains the ecliptic. Every one familiar with the practical astronomy knows that there is a continual shifting of the stars, a changing of the celestial longitude, so that in astronomical reckoning, allowance must be made for the precession of the vernal equinox, or the point of the sun's crossing the celestial equator, when considering stellar longitude. It is known positively and absolutely, from the records of the astronomical world, that about 2,000 years ago the equinoctial colure in its movement westward on the celestial equator, passed from the constellation Aries into Pisces; and that from that time until this, with the annual stepping of 50" arc of the heavens, the vernal equinox has been passing through the constellation Pisces, causing a displacement in celestial longitude of about 30°.

These movements are concurrent and co-ordinate with dispensational events in the human world. The divisions in humanity are so clearly defined as to be unmistakable. During the great Noatic dispensation, in which the light of Egypt illumined the Orient, the sign was moving through Taurus. The product of the Noatic dispensation was the beginning of the Jewish dispensation, the coming of Abraham, the head of a new people, marked by the precession of the sign through Aries. The anthropostic fruit of the dispensation of Aries or Lamb, was the Lamb of God, Jesus the Messiah. The constellation and its product agree in name. The constellation is the head of the Zodiac, the point from which right ascension is determined; Jesus was the head of humanity, the beginning of the new cycle, the beginning of the new creation. The birth of Jesus the Christ was written in the sky, and read by the wise men of the East. The memorable journey of the Magi, just preceding the first Christmas nearly 2,000 years ago, was the result of the correct interpretation of the stellar precessional pageant bearing the diadem for the Son of the dispensation, and preparing to crown the world with a New Man!

The world is ripe for revolution; another great event in the world's history is about to occur. A stupendous tidal wave is about to sweep the sea of humanity; an appalling and world-wide cyclone, a destructive vortex, is forming and preparing to gather into its cone of disaster and cataclysm, the entire modern world. A terrible volcano is smoldering beneath human society, ready to burst into activity at the crisis of the age. We are nearing the end of a great cycle; we are about to reach the culmination; about to reap the whirlwind of disaster; and we are about to pluck the fruit of the Tree of Life. The critical moment is arriving; the time when these things shall be—the sign of the coming of the world's great Teacher, is unmistakably marked upon the face of the sky. The vernal equinox is passing from the constellation Pisces into Aquarius, to bring the storm of vengeance upon the old, and to shed the light of Truth for the new; and when the sign reaches the meridian of the initial star in the Aquarian firmament, the great dial of the Zodiac will announce the hour of revolution!

The Decline of the Christian Church and State.

Or, the Great Falling Away, and Revelation of the Man of Sin.

REV. BERTHALDINE.

THE ORIGIN of the Christian church and state has been shown to be the Lord Jesus Christ, seed of the biune Deific humanity planted in and crossed with the mortal humanity prepared for its reception. The Lord Jesus is represented by the vertical line of the cross, which both ascends and descends. The mortal humanity is represented by the horizontal line, which indicates the plane of demarcation between the ascending and descending energies of life. The point of conjunction is the point of terminal transformation, where the resulting product is manifest as the center of all activities, "the mighty one of forces."

It is written in the Scriptures of the Christian: "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The seed of God fell into the ground of mortal humanity, and all its energies were quickened to newness of life by virtue of the disintegration of the seed, whose transforming potencies were absorbed by both the ascending and descending energies of the seed of the woman or earth-born church it vitalized.

The descending energies of a vegetable seed manifest their activities in the physical earth, which corresponds to the hells or mortal spheres of humanity. The ascending energies have their activities in the atmosphere, which corresponds to the heavens, the intellectual and affectional realms, from which the immortals come forth to bless with life.

The descending life of Jehovah was made to be sin in our mortal humanity. It has, in obedience to the law of transmutation, become the perpetuating force of sensual reproduction, by which every mortal man is conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity. Jehovah himself is thus transformed, as to his animal life, to the corruptible nature of sensual or carnally-minded humanity. He has become the messenger of death to all in subjection to the impulses of the sensual nature. The sensual nature perpetually proliferates and disintegrates, till the limit of its vitality is reached, and the man is left without an impulse to proceed. Disintegration comes through friction or conflict.

The seed of the woman, or church, vitalized by Jehovah, the Father's seed, when conjoined through the adultery of the earthly church with the pagan states of the world, was forced to free herself with her inherent vitality, and withdraw from the conflicting and disintegrating elements of the body of the great harlot produced by adultery, and to reject any connection with the harlotries, the fruits of that adultery. The Papal states or governments, endowed with power from the male head of the great harlot, all give evidence of their being conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity. As they become hoary and worthless in the decline of their era, they are doomed to fall and disintegrate as corrupt democracies, so devoid of vitality that they are fitly symbolized by the feet of iron mixed with miry clay, as seen by Daniel in his vision of the great image.

The culminating power of the disintegrating democratic or demoniac spirit is becoming brilliantly visible in the United States, where all the legitimate relationships of church and state are made null and void, and where the most pronounced tendency to individualism is made free to exhibit itself. This individualism comes from self-centeredness, the desire of the self to claim the universe and become its hero or god. This desire is reflexed from the throne of the living and true God, the living self of every man dead in trespasses and sins, who can receive the wisdom by which He is recognized, and by which the man may be absorbed into Him. This reflexed desire of the Almighty to reclaim his humanity from its lost estate, is to the spirit of the ascending humanity, the power of attraction to God, and the Saviour of life unto life; but to the descending or retrogressive humanity, it is the savour of death unto death, leaving man without God and without hope.

The day of the Lord, who comes again a second time without sin unto salvation, cannot come, so the Apostle Paul wrote, except there be a great falling away and the "man of sin" be revealed. The decline of the church and state is for the revealing of the "man of sin." Salvation and its results cannot be appreciated without a complete experimental knowledge of sin and its consequences, and also its remedy. Moreover, the God-man had to die or abide alone, just one of his genus, the Theo-anthropoi. This latter it was not in the nature of His Divinity to do. He conformed to the law of the cross, despising the shame, knowing that through the travail of His soul he should bring many sons to glory.

The ascending biune spirit-life of Jesus has, through the era of his continuous bodily disintegration, been occupying the throne, represented by the median line of progressive intellectuality, which in its celestial realms is conjoined to the altar of divine love. From this sphere of conjunctive unity there must descend the constructive spirits or energies, to gather the fruits of God's sacrifice in humanity, that he may appropriate them, and transform and reform the elements of his disintegrated body into a temple fit for the living God, by whose light is revealed the power and great glory of Jehovah.

By searching the records of history, it is easy to trace the descending steps of the Son of man. The earliest record, in the Acts of the Apostles, of the holy seed, represents it as a living epistle of obedience to the law of love. One, a little later, represents the mystery of iniquity, the sensuous energies as already working. Primarily, we have revealed a holy seed, a chosen generation in the midst of wicked and perverse nations, controlled by the spirits who compete for dominion in the lowest hells. These antichristian spirits instigated the early persecutions of the little flock for its destruction. Through the weaknesses of its unredeemed mortal flesh, it finally compromised with the iniquitous, and sought the protection of the strongholds of satan, by tendering its services to the pagan powers of the world, who in turn courted the church for its favors, she having become a recognized superhuman power, even by the devils who believe and tremble.

A marriage was effected in the time of Constantine, in conformity with the language of the curse. The adulterous consummation of it has brought forth a belligerent progeny of conflicting churches and nations, which have filled the earth with violence and dishonor to the holy name of Jehovah, by practically denying all they publicly profess. They grope in a darkness which is only made visible by the lurid lights of the false sciences of the hells in which they breed the children of disobedience.

In 1893, the forces of disintegration gathered for a new and final impetus. This gathering was called "The Congress of Religions," and was made up of representatives of all nationalities and all conflicting spheres of religious belief. Each representative endeavored to furnish evidence of superiority to the rest, and by virtue of this, the right of dominion. The force of resistance met by each claimant for the throne, in the combined opposition of all the others, turned the forces of each by reflection, loose in the world to compass land and sea to make converts, to rally round the priests of Baal for their final conflict with Elijah, God the Lord of Israel, when the climax of the fall of Babylon will be manifest to the world, and the man of sin saved by fire from God out of heaven.

Persecution is Always Antichristian.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

WHEN some of the Lord's disciples wished to call down fire from heaven to destroy people who did not live and think as they did, or as they thought right, he rebuked them, telling them that they knew not what manner of spirit they were of. Every persecution is an attempt, by persons whose own lives will not bear inspection, to force others not to live and act after the promptings of their own spirit, but after the dictation of others.

As a matter of course, persecutors claim to possess superior virtues in some way; but their very acts in persecuting others give the lie to their professions. Any assumption of superior intelligence or virtue in such persons is always suspicious, as such assumption is merely a cover for ignorance, and fraud, and falsehood. The truth, which Jesus was, never operates in that way. It teaches plainly what right and justice are, and leaves people free to adopt or reject them, according to the dictates of their own consciences, with none to molest or make them afraid. When such people talk about others using occult powers to oppress, you may rest assured that they are talking about that of which they have some knowledge, which they themselves are in the habit of using for the purposes of which they complain. The truth has no mysteries and no occasion for their use. THIS IS THE TIME WHEN ALL MYSTERIES ARE TO BE REVEALED.

Nineteen centuries ago, when the divine seed—of which the harvest, in humanity, is now at hand—was sown, the Apostle said: "But God hath revealed them [mysteries] unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." Now, when we are coming to the harvest of that seed sowing, when that holy and divine Spirit will mature an equally holy and divine body, soul, and spirit, there must come the doing away with all mysteries, for the Lord himself said: "Fear them not therefore: For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known."

Again the Apostle says: "And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." Charity is the love of humanity, which Jesus had, and having which he never persecuted anybody; and no man who ever received that Spirit became a persecutor under its operation. Mystery has been the tool of tyrants long enough, and is soon to be, with every other evil and oppressive thing, swallowed up in a glad fruition of glory to God and good will to men.

Observations and Reflections.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

A Glimpse of Society.

GENERATIONS wind the clock and retire to rise, wind the clock and retire to rise.

Truth and Good, manifest in man perfected,—Jehovah, —wound the universe as a clock, and retired.

If the cricket on the hearth thought the "gude man" had gone to come no more,

He was as much in wisdom as the multitude of ists and isms who,

Fancying that they inhere the Truth and Good—the Christ—expect not the reappear nor the rewind.

Men desirous of truth will adhere to facts, which, in part, have their mainspring in truth.

The reading public demands a brilliant pen before truth or fact.

The public, when it subsides from the main line of acquisitive instinct,—money getting,—seeks amusement.

Instruction is secondary, and must embody that which, in the eyes of the world, enhances the brilliancy of the instructed.

Imposture is welcome, if it appears in the wedding-garment,

And the brilliant pen does not scintillate anything that would discredit the acumen of penetration.

Hence, all in all, the uncertainty which hangs over those vivid portrayals of foreign personages and evirons That else would become an almost tangible relationship.

From over the water, barring uncertainty of data, floats the thistle-down of the seed of love of money and pleasure.

That symbol of fortune, the horseshoe, has at present a very intimate connection with the "Jersey Lily."

A racing-stable of a double thirteen is the charm

Which opens wide to her the doors of society erst so tightly shut.

It matters not that the greater number of the twenty-six steeds were spoil from the wrecked fortunes of her friends—

They are her passport to the good graces of the British world of exclusives:

"The winning of a great horse-race atones for all sorts of shortcomings."

Horse-racing is foremost among English pleasures, and the "Lily" is rapidly taking her place in its vanguard.

If she has not yet radiated her smiles upon the English throne, and embraced its queen, the heir-apparent of said throne has doubtless made amends.

He leads her off on his arm, rides with her, and sits as star guest in her enchantingly beautiful race box at Newmarket.

Her town house in Cadogan Garden, London, is the scene of lavish entertainment,

Where may be found women of rank and social eminence who have forgotten "the long train of ruin and death in her wake."

This phase of society is a highlight of the whole.

The journey from hut to palace is through a maze of degrees of similar condition.

The two great demands of our modern civilization are money and pleasure,

And the way from hovel to palace will be lined with starveling contributors thereto,

Until people are educated into a sense of duty to themselves and their dependents.

Men should not contribute to the coffer of thieves.

By so contributing, they share the dishonor with added vengeance to themselves.

Men who possess themselves of the unrequited earnings of their fellow men are thieves,

And those whose minds are open to this truth, should be fearless in speaking out.

Hugo says that hunger digs a pit in the heart of man, and fills it with hatred.

But it is quite legitimate to say that it is hate which allows hunger to dig the pit.

Where love to the neighbor exists, there is no hunger.

The hunger of the world will cease through restoration of those conditions

Which obtained as result of the teachings, and particularly as the result of the baptism poured out by the Savior of mankind.

SEED MULTIPLIED.

GOD SPAKE, and the Word that was with God and was God, Invisible, Intangible, became

The Visible and Tangible; the pure,

The undying flesh; the Son of God, the Bright

And Morning Star, even like unto those

Of whom God demanded of Job—those Morning Stars

That sang together, those sons of God who shouted

For joy. God spake; his Voice was his Son, the Sower who sowed the Word—himself—in men.

The harvest is near when is heard the "great Voice out of heaven," the many sons of God

Upsprung from that one Son sown in the race.

THE TRUTH complete must stand for naught
Unless with action it be fraught;
And action itself will run but lame
If sprung from aught of selfhood's name.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE WORLD repudiates reason; its conclusions are formed not in accordance with logic, not in accordance with evidences, but in accordance with desire. All through the ages the thought of the world in general has followed its desires, retrogressing into sensualism until reason is lost, and the mental world is left in chaos. Today the world is in chaos; we have unmistakable evidences that reason is not the world's guide. Man entertains popular opinions held in the times in which he is born. If in Europe or America, he is likely to be a Christian; if in Africa, he is a Mohammedan; if in Asia, he is a Buddhist or a Brahman. The modern church repudiates reason; it asserts that reason is not a safe guide. Recently, Dr. Dixon of New York declared that "man, all reason, would be as near the devil incarnate as I can imagine." This means that the modern church will denounce the man who is able to reach absolutely true conclusions concerning the universe and its origin. In other words, it despises knowledge and loves ignorance; it declares in actions speaking louder than words, that absolutely scientific knowledge is of the devil, while ignorance is of God! The truth is antagonistic to the interest and the life of fallacy. Truth and fallacy will come in conflict in the human world; great armies of entities will engage in the battle of Armageddon, —reason against credulity, light against darkness. Reason incarnate, reason enthroned in the scientific mind, is in the world today, lifting again the standard of purity of life and thought, challenging the sensual world to war! It is waving the red flag before the sensual bull of perverted uses. The great Matadore, SWORD in hand, glides upon the arena of conflict. The church denounces the Man and his System, and will endeavor to crush it out as it endeavored to extinguish the light of Jesus, thereby only adding fuel to the flame!

The question has arisen concerning where the weak minds are. Occasionally we hear the insinuation that there are weak minds in the Koreshan Institutions; while we say that the world's insipidity and stupidity are surprising as well as alarming! Suppose there should be weak minds among us; what of it? We didn't make them; they came right out of the old world, which, if we would believe some of its hypocritical representatives, produces nothing not strictly first-class. Very well; the world produced us; the Koreshan System is an evolution, the result of factors operating according to inexorable law. Intellectually, it is the highest product of the universe. Occasionally, we have the happy opportunity of saving some minds from the conditions the world has produced—from the hells of fallacy—and to receive them for development of character for a noble purpose. We are proud that any mind can in any degree comprehend the marvelous system of Koreshanity. It is immeasurably to the credit of so called weak minds that they can understand the profundities of the universe; and indeed, to the everlasting shame of boasted intellectual capacity, that it is incapable of understanding that which is left to individuals socially beneath them to grasp and appropriate! It is simply a difference of standards of tests; the most advanced and able minds are those who can reason from a premise, while the weaker ones are those who allow the blind leaders to lead them regardless of the consequences and regardless of rational conclusions, no matter whether they possess thousands or millions of dollars. Nineteen hundred years ago, a few recognized the Teacher of Truth and entered upon planes of experiences which were closed to the self-centered, hypocritical, and conceited sensualists. The hypocrits always get left; the big bugs of hell are the last to be rescued from it!

The directions east and west are the only continuous ones in the physical universe. West extends all the way round the world, and east likewise. There is no end to east nor to west because they are at the periphery of revolution; a wheel may turn in one direction continuously. North and south are limited directions; the longest north possible is 180°. From every point on the earth's surface there is a due north and a due south, because north and south are points representing the axis of revolution. Follow a meridian around in the earth: The direction traveled would be north to the polar point and then, without turning to the right or to the left, without making an angle in the path, the direction would be south! Semi-cardinal points are still more limited; northwest, for instance, can only extend 90°; then the direction is changed to the southwest without any actual change or angle in the line! If the mind can grasp how these simple directions change, how a straight course upon the arc of the earth's surface can change in its relations to the magnetic needle, it can easily comprehend the limitation of interior space, and how a single point at the center of the great cell divides the entire universe in the creation of antitheses of space as well as its thousands of qualities of energy.

The Chicago Journal rejoices over the success of the Chicago water-works in meeting every demand of the times. The system is under the control of the people of the city, and the expenses are reduced to the minimum. It excludes monopoly, and absolutely precludes speculation and profits. The people get the benefits of the entire system, and there are no private interests. Of course, now that the evidences are so obvious, any newspaper can safely argue for the city water-works! But what about the street car systems? If the people owned and controlled them it would preclude monopoly and private interests; the expenses would be reduced to the minimum, and the fares a mere insignificant fraction of a cent. The same is true of railroads, and all other industries of the nation and the world. Take them out of the hands of the millionaires and put them into the hands of the people! See how the water works: It flows in free circulation through the city system. There should be no obstructions to commerce; the dogs in the manger should be removed!

Before the Spanish-American war and the consequent colonial policy of the United States were thought of, the Founder of Koreshanity announced that the center of the world's future religious, governmental, and commercial activities would be in the tropics. The founding of the Koreshan Colony in southern Florida, the beginning of the great work of founding the world's greatest city, in 1894, establishes the priority of the conclusion that the South, not the West, involves possibilities for the highest ethical and ethnical culture. The great magazines of the world are now discussing these possibilities, foreshadowing the white man's ultimate relation to the tropics. The movement in Koreshanity toward the South, is definitely and specifically prophetic, the result of the scientific revelation of the world's future as related to the change in the ecliptic of the physical world, the consequent conjunction of the solar and lunar spheres, and corresponding conjunction of God and man. Southern Florida is at the point of the vitellus of the great egg of the universe.

Are there any weak minds in the modern church? we might ask, when the question of weak minds is insinuatingly asked us. Look at the character of the classes it presumes to save. Thousands are taken from the slums—induced through offers of food, clothing, and employment, to leave their old habits and join the church. Out from the lower classes, millions swell the church roll but add nothing to the intellectual stores of Christendom; and it has almost exhausted its stock! The mind of the modern church is rather lowered to the level of the majority. There is no difference between the people of the church and the people of the world, unless it be in favor of the world. There is more crime in Christendom than there is in heathendom. We are not opposed to whatever moral influence there is inhering in the church world. The highest degree of the morality of hell is the standard of a fallacious church; the lower wears the cloak of the higher, ultimately wiping out all distinction.

Life cannot exist without organic form. Human society must have form—the true form—before the true social life can obtain. As human life exists in form analagous to the form of the universe at large, it follows that the form of the social structure in which the goods of life are conserved and appropriated in equity, must correspond to the form and function of the physical world. There must be a point of concentration as well as the circumference of commercial activity. Where the goods of life—the products of labor—are misappropriated, it is a manifestation of social disease, social injustice, which must terminate in disaster to the social and economic structure. The socialism of Koreshanity is a system of organic unity, involving the specifications for the construction of human government and definite human relations which will insure the greatest happiness and health, life, and liberty to humanity that the world has ever known in all its history!

Some minds cannot conceive how there can be an interior terminal point of space, nor how the astral center is the point of convergence of all perpendiculars. The problem is an easy one: A light shines out; radiations extend in all directions from the point. A rifle ball may be shot toward the light; in its path it changes its relation to the light going in to it, against the radiations, and then beyond it, following the direction of the opposite radiations; the ball would go in and then out, although moving in a straight line. A straight line extending from side to side of the concave earth would extend up one half the distance and then, without changing its direction, without being refracted from its course, it would extend down to the other side! Up is toward the center; down is from the center of the earth, the center of the hollow sphere.

It is in the order of the evolution and deterioration of thought that its retrogressions culminate in infinity, as opposed to the finite Center, the point of all mental impulse. The Copernican system of astronomy and the modern theology are the result of retrogression, the exact opposite of the truth.

When the sun and moon are in opposition on the ecliptic, the Zodiacal clipper severs the magnetic currents of relation between the sun and moon, and the moon is eclipsed or cut off from the positive pole of the battery of the universe.

There is a startling difference between the primitive and the modern churches. Jesus instituted a system of regeneration of man, while the energies of the modern Christian center in the functions of generation of common mortal humanity!

The world vainly endeavors to ascertain who is Who. He is a stranger, lost and unknown; he is the prodigal son, who, when he overcomes death, will sit on the throne of the Almighty.

Toy stores have been stocking up for Christmas; for a small share of the entire lot, the Sunday school boy is hanging his stocking up.

Modern reformers are endeavoring to revive the spirit of '76. That's the trouble already; the spirit of '76 millionaires rule America.

Even Christmas has its restraints; it can come only once a year. When the modern Santa Claus is dead, it will not come at all.

In the promulgation of the Koreshan System we are writing the condition of the world, the beginning of the work of making it right.

God's knowledge is limited; when he knows all things, he knows all there is, and hence he cannot know anything else!

The motto of the modern astronomer is "Silence is golden," when confronted with the facts of Koreshan Cosmogony.

Copernicus was the big sun of fallacy; the modern mental worlds revolve about the absurdity.

Stump speakers are in the backwoods of political progress.

The Almighty must lose himself to find the world.

Saturn rings the curfew for its many satellights.

The life of the modern church is death.

Remarkable Total Eclipse of the Moon Dec. 27.

I send you a copy of Storms and Signs for December, to call your attention to the marked passage mentioning the total eclipse of the moon Dec. 27, and the statement that it will be witnessed by "all peoples of the earth." As such a statement cannot be explained according to the usually accepted Copernican theory, I shall be glad to get one of your lucid explanations.—W. B. G., Chicago, Ill.

The statement in Storms and Signs is not quite correct. The eclipse will not be visible in Australia, nor in the South Pacific islands. As the moon will be in Gemini, the most northerly constellation, the eclipse will be visible for the most part in the northern hemisphere. On December 13, there was a partial eclipse of the sun, when the moon was new; but as the sun was in Sagittarius, and the moon southing considerably, the path of the eclipse was thrown to the extreme south, and consequently was invisible in the north. The coming eclipse is simply one of longer duration than usual, and is seen successively in the different horizons as the path of the eclipse moves toward the west; it is not visible simultaneously all over the world. The eclipse begins in the eastern part of the United States, and continues until the moon passes over America, the Pacific Ocean, Asia, and Europe, or ends rather, when rising in Europe, about 18 hours after the eclipse begins. It is not visible on the Atlantic Ocean.

A number of things contribute to the duration of this eclipse. The moon reaches its descending node in Gemini on December 27, and crosses the ecliptic at a very acute angle; its movement for nearly one day is due east and west over the sign Cancer, and consequently is in the plane of the ecliptic for that time; and its altitude is greater, the moon nearing its apogee, or greatest distance above the earth's surface. This places the line of the lunar apsides in the direction of the visible sun, and the visible moon deeper in the inverted cone of darkness having its apex in the focal point of darkness 180° west of the projected sun.

All of these facts conspire to throw the path of the moon on the ecliptic for a longer period than in the usual lunar eclipse, and hence its remarkable character. When the moon is on the ecliptic and in exact opposition to the sun, (which occurs 29 times in an eclipse cycle,) the magnetic circuit which connects the solar and lunar systems, is opened and the currents are cut off from the visible moon as actually and really as the electric currents are cut off from the arc light by the electric switch. In this coming eclipse, the cut off (or eclipse) lasts over 18 hours.

Sun, Moon, and Planets Move East and West at the Same Time.

Please explain a statement I have seen in THE FLAMING SWORD, that the sun, moon, and planets move in the heavens from west to east. All of these bodies rise in the east and set in the west, and so far as I know they have never moved the other way. It is certain that they could not move both ways at the same time. I have seen the apparently inconsistent statement in works on the old astronomy, and now I find that the same thing exists in yours.—W. B., New York.

It is not a correct conclusion, that the heavenly bodies do not move in two directions at the same time. Take a rotating globe for instance: It has 360° in the periphery of its rotation; suppose it to rotate once a minute. A fly is crawling in the opposite direction, and covers the space of nearly 1° for every time the globe turns 360° . The globe is moving the fly in one direction, while it is actually crawling in the opposite direction! When the globe has turned over 366 times, the fly will have gone around, as related to your eye, 365 times, because crawling in the opposite direction to the rotation of the sphere it has gained one rotation, which must be deducted from the number of rotations of the globe in 366 minutes.

It is the same way with the sun, moon, and planets. The sun moves in the order of its path in the Zodiac toward the east in the heavens about 1° of arc, and completes its revolution in 365 days. In the meantime, the stars record 366 revolutions. The moon moves about 13° per day toward the east, and completes its revolution or lunation in about 28 days.

The planets have longer periods of revolution in the Zodiac from west to east; the shortest (Mercury) being 88 days, and the longest (Neptune), 164 years. These movements are in the sphere of the heavens, but being in the sphere they turn with it in its diurnal revolution, and hence rise, reach our meridian, and set once a day.

When Will the Vernal Equinox Reach Aquarius?

Will you please give me the exact date when Aries, the Head, will be entirely out of Pisces and into Aquarius?—Mrs. J. W. R., Springfield, Mass.

Approximately, in a few years. There is a period of lapping between the dispensations; and the passing of the sign from Pisces into Aquarius will not be in a moment. The new dispensation began in the anthropotic in 1839, and we are now in the period of twilight. The culmination of the present dispensation will be when the beginning of the sign Aries, or the point of the vernal equinox, reaches the initial star of the constellation Aquarius. See article, "Astronomical Evidences of the Approaching End of the Age," in this issue.

The time when that will occur will depend upon the ratio of acceleration of physical forces of the universe, which depends upon the primary impulse given in the mental world nineteen hundred years ago. We are entering the period of foreshortening of time; similar foreshortenings occur at the end of every dispensation, making the cycle of precession 24,000 years instead of 25,816, as indicated by the normal precession of the equinoxes. For the same reason that Jesus withheld the time from his disciples, KORESH leaves the mind to depend upon unmistakable evidences of the proximity of the event.

Words of Welcome for the Cellular Cosmogony.

One Universe Is Sufficient.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Having written my endorsement of Part I of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, I would say with special reference to Part II, that it is very ably constructed and put forth in the strength of exact science. The old astronomy brought to me no lasting impressions that it possessed absolute knowledge. One reason why it did not suit me is, that it seemed burdened with superfluous worlds. The earth as a concave sphere and the universe in one, does afford plenty of room for the illustration and full demonstration of all laws, phenomena, and uses of God and Nature. One earth (universe) being enough, what need of a billion more? Even were there other inhabited worlds, as taught by the old school astronomy, and the inhabitants of the different bodies were in different states of progression or retrogression, all of the different states of the low and the high have been manifested in endless series in this earth (universe).

There must be an economy as well as order in being and manifestation. If so, one inhabited world, with its kingdom of heaven inside (within) and all that it implies, involves that economy. Jesus taught the Godhead, the Godhead bodily, to the people of this world. What use or economy in having other worlds of inhabitants to teach the same thing? And should there be a different style of expression of Divinity in other worlds, they could not transcend the manifestation of the Godhead bodily, that is a known accomplishment in this our world. What use in other worlds that could not, at some time, compass a greater thing than that manifested in one of its parts?

My objection to the superfluous worlds is only exceeded by a little more than inclination to rejoice at the invention and practical demonstration of the Rectilineator. The quotations from Procter on page 66 of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, are indicative of the uncertainty that haunts the old system of astronomy. That which follows as to experiments on the Old Drainage Canal and on Lake Michigan, as well as the accounts of the experiments made on Southern waters, is very interesting. Beginning at page 87, the Principles of Mechanical Survey are given in less space and more readably than by any of the authors of the old school text-books. The matter is specially educative in its neat illustrations, as under the subhead, Fundamental Principles of Geometry, pages 90 to 93. Then follows the description of the Geodetic apparatus and its methods of use.

This book is particularly valuable not only for school teachers, but every student of general learning. The article copied from the editorial pages of the Chicago Times-Herald, and the Louisville Courier-Journal reporter's interview with Prof. Morrow, are such as to afford new readers a complete bird's-eye view of the Koresan System of Universology. Even such questions as, What is on the outside of the hollow globe, and what do the Koresans hold with reference to the creation? are answered. Then the Professor shows how the Koresan Astronomy demonstrates the truth of the Bible. That part of the book is of even startling interest!—MAJOR OGDEN WHITLOCK, Colo.

The New Book a Chrysanthemum.

All hail to the CELLULAR COSMOGONY and New Geodesy! It is a beautiful large chrysanthemum! This flower says, I love truth; the book does more, it gives the truth, which is as lasting and enduring as eternity. We all know how long-lived the lovely and stately chrysanthemum is, not like its frail sister, the sweet rose; and so the flower is a fitting emblem of this pearl of great price. May it break down all strongholds of error and fallacy, and teach the world the true science of universal form and function!

The lovely article by Rev. E. M. Castle was read by me with the greatest interest and reverence; I made a study of it, reading it over and over again, trying to make it a part of my understanding. I was delighted! I refer to "Angerboda's Brood," recently published. Oh, how grandly beautiful when the mind grasps these glorious truths! The theology of the Koreshan System appeals to me the most of all. Rev. Castle has truly sat at the feet of the great Teacher and drank deep of the living water from the fountain of truth.—MRS. C. M. BLANCHARD, Cal.

Our New York Traveling Representative Stirring up Professors, Clergymen, and Business Men.

This is a college town (Hamilton), containing the Colgate University, a Baptist institution. I have sold books to the professors, and also books to the ministers and business men. They have created quite an excitement here. The professor in astronomy denied that a vessel could be seen at sea after it had disappeared to the unaided vision. Another professor said that it was true, for some of his friends had tried the experiment. I told the first professor what the other professor said, and he replied that Dr. Teed lied about it, and that it was a money-making scheme! He seemed very much excited.

I stopped off at Earlville. There I met a surveyor who told me that he had been convinced for years that the earth was concave on account of his surveys. The first professor referred to above, informed me that the "book is a dangerous one, and ought not to be circulated." So it goes on!—REV. U. GORDON MITCHELL, New York.

The Jackson Conspiracy.

Citizens Will Not Drive the Koreshans Out of Lee County.

Princess Editha Loleta Jackson is right handy with the pen, and she continues to throw hot shot through the columns of the Ft. Myers Press at Dr. Cyrus R. Teed and his colonies at Washington Heights, Chicago, and Estero, Fla. She wants the citizens of Lee county and the local government to assist her in running the Estero colony out of Florida. The citizens of Lee county and the local government are not likely to do this, however, until they are asked to do so by some one other than Princess Editha Loleta Jackson, or until Koreshans infringe upon the rights of Lee county citizenship and become obnoxious. From all accounts, Princess Editha Loleta Jackson is not the proper person to get after the Koreshan crowd with a sharp stick, nor to tell the citizens of Lee county and the local government what should be done. Teed and his peculiar religion may be an infamous fraud, but the learned princess should leave that for some one else to say. She is said to have many conspicuous peculiarities herself. Besides, it is understood that she, too, desires to establish a colony down this way, and it might not be so vastly superior in any respect to the Teed following.—Punta Gorda (Fla.) Herald.

Chat With Readers.

We published last week a short sketch of a notorious criminal who attempted to wage a war of persecution against the Koreshans at the Estero Colony in Lee county, Florida. The citizens of Lee county have long recognized that the Koreshans there are quietly and peacefully attending to their own affairs, persecuting no one and infringing on the rights of nobody. The fact that a number of like attempts have been made before and resulted in failure, leads the citizens of southern Florida to question the character of any further attempts to drive law-abiding people from the county. The Constitution of the United States is some guarantee to religious freedom, and frauds who oppose us will become startlingly aware of the fact when the proper time comes! Prof. L'Amorceaux describes in this issue the motives for all persecution, and by whom it is always waged. Noble causes always suffer at the hands of those whom truth exposes. In another column, the comments of a Florida paper concerning the fraud "Princess," appear. Every attempt made against the Koreshan Unity thus far, has resulted in lasting good to our Institutions!

Despite the fact that any attempt to destroy the octopus of the money power and the corruptions of modern times is met with the mental and material resistance of the entire world, the Koreshan movement is succeeding. We are rapidly growing in numbers, and in influence and power. A review of the Koreshan work is given by KORESH in this number, descriptive of a few of our industries—the result of the application of the principles of communism and co-operation. Our friends are always interested to know of the character of the work against us; another reference to the unsuccessful plot against our people in the South is published this week. The effort of the two crooks against us is a failure, and amounts to nothing. When the characters of the conspirators are known in the vicinity of their operations, it will make every citizen our staunch friend!

A foreign correspondent desires us to publish the name of some Chicago post-office substation recognized by the English postal books, so that money orders may be procured payable at our post-office. In the first place, we do not know what is contained in the English postal books; and second, we do not desire money orders made payable at any substation in Chicago. Will all our readers please read the instructions on second page of cover; there we designate that money orders intended for us should be made payable at the Chicago post-office, NOT at any substation. We make our collections on money orders at the main office in the city.

Special Offer until Jan. 15.—If you send us $1.00 before January 15, either as a renewal or as a new subscription, we will send you THE FLAMING SWORD for one year and mail you free one copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. If you are a reader of THE SWORD you cannot afford to be without the book. It will be the cause of much discussion in this Journal during the coming year, and you can the better appreciate the situation if you become familiar with the contents of the book.

Begin the New Year by presenting your friend with a copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY and a year's subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD—both for $1.00.

A Merry Christmas!

Formation of Clubs for the Study of Koreshan Universology.

Victoria Gratia Stipulates Conditions of Organization of Initiatory Councils.

As our work develops, inquiries are constantly being made regarding the organization of Clubs for the purpose of discussing and disseminating the gospel of Koreshanity. In reply to such inquiries we extend the privilege of organizing Initiatory Councils as preliminary to the regular organization of Camps of the Society Arch Triumphant.

Every Initiatory Club should have a President, Vice President, and Secretary; and the meetings of the Club conducted according to Roberts' Rules of Order. All meetings should be held strictly according to rules and discussion of questions regulated through the office of the Presiding Chairman of the Club. No person should be allowed to take part in discussions who doubts or opposes Koreshan Science. What we mean by discussion involves questions of differences in opinion regarding the true interpretation of that which is taught in Koreshanity and Koreshan literature.

If those interested in the subject of Koreshan Universology will be painstaking in the acquisition of the fundamental principles of our System, they will not get very far away from the main line of Koreshan Gospel. To acquire this knowledge it is essentially important that the literature of Koreshanity be read thoroughly, and whenever there is a question of uncertainty regarding a matter of doctrine, the President should communicate at once with Rev. Berthaldine, Matrona, Honorable President of the Society Arch Triumphant, Beth Ophrah, Cor. 99th St., & Oak ave., Chicago, Ill., Substation 48, when the point in question will be elucidated.

Any person may become a member of the Investigating, or First Degree of the Club,—for the general division of the Club into two degrees must conform to the general division of the Society Arch Triumphant—but no member shall be permitted to vote who is not a member of the Second Degree.

No person can be a member of the Second Degree who uses tobacco, profanity, or intoxicants. Moral character must be a prerequisite to membership to the Second Degree. Whiskey, beer, wine, tobacco, opium, profanity, and vulgarity favor sensuality, and militate against any successful effort to reform the character. When a Club is sufficiently advanced to appeal for entrance to the Orders of the Koreshan System, it may apply to Rev. Berthaldine, Matrona, Honorable President of the Society Arch Triumphant.

Halls, or parlors occupied for the convening of Clubs, should be so seated as to demark the members of the two degrees. The Club has no jurisdiction over the habits of those in the First Degree, which is merely investigative. It has, however, absolute control of the conduct of the meetings, and no tobacco or intoxicants shall ever be tolerated during any of the sessions of the Clubs. When convenient, the line of demarkation of members of the two degrees shall be from front to rear of the room occupied; the members of the First (lower) Degree sitting at the left, and the members of the Second (higher) Degree at the right.

These are merely general principles for the conduct of meetings by such as desire to enter upon the great work of re-formation, which will only come, in its ultimate fulness, through the impending revolution.

VICTORIA GRATIA,

Pre-Eminent of the Koreshan Unity.

In Reform Journals.

Railroads of the World.

A pretty good test of the civilization of a country is to be found in its railroad mileage. Among the important countries of the world, the one which stands lowest in the respect to railroad mileage is Persia. Persia has just thirty-four miles of railroad—the distance from Brooklyn to Fire Island, no more—and it is made up of the line from Teheran to Shaabdul-Azin; another line twenty miles long was begun, but abandoned later. Persia's distinction of being last on railroad list seems likely to continue indefinitely. China and Japan have generally been regarded as similar countries, but while China is described by Lord Salisbury as a dying country, Japan is up to date. The area of Japan is approximately 150,000 square miles; the area of China is 1,300,000 square miles, or more than eight times greater. The population of Japan is 42,000,000, whereas the population of China is in excess of 400,000,000, or ten times greater, and yet the railroad mileage of China is only 124, while that of Japan was 2,237 by last accounts. The longest of the railroads in China is seventy-three miles, from Tientsin to Peking. The Japanese railroads carried last year 70,000,000 passengers, about ten per cent of the number carried by the railroads of the United States.

There are in the United States 180,000 miles of railway, a mileage greater than that of the whole of Europe and the whole of South America combined. The extent of the American railroad system, the wonder of all other countries, is better understood, perhaps, with a knowledge of the fact that in proportion to population, the United States has more than five times as much as Germany, five times as much as Great Britain and Ireland, more than four times as much as France, more than six times as much as Austria-Hungary, and more than twelve times as much as Russia. The laggard among European nations in respect to the railroads is, of course, Spain; the country having the largest railroad mileage in proportion to its area is Belgium. In respect to the rate of increase in railroad mileage Russia stands first, with a gain of 20 per cent in the last five years; Germany's being 7, and that of France 6, and of Great Britain 8. There are 9,500 miles of railroad in Africa and 14,000 in Australia.—Ex.

THE SONG OF THE SAVAGES.

We are savage in our dreaming,
No odds how we sigh and pray,
For our brain is always scheming
Conquests for a future day.
Ev'ry man may be our brother,
Ev'ry maid our sister, too;
But we're skinning one another,
Just like savage creatures do.

What is commerce now, but taking
Food and clothing to the poor?
And beneath their starved eyes shaking Things they're needing, to allure.
See their eager, starved eyes burning
While they all our goods behold!
See again, how hopeless turning,
At our cool demand for gold!

Send again our pious mission
To the heathenish Hindoo;
Save his poor soul from perdition
With the Christian gospel true.
But when famine, grim and awful,
Brings him miseries untold,
Deny him bread, for it is lawful,
Unless he can pay you gold.

But we've nearer need for pity;
In our own land hear the cries
Going up from crowded city,
To that home beyond the skies.
Help me! Comes the cry appealing,
From the hovels damp and cold;
But the rich can stand unfeeling,
Until they are paid in gold.

We are savages, my brother,
And the gospel Jesus taught—
How we should treat one another—
Simply now amounts to naught;
For our face with greed we're carving
Like a granite statue cold;
And our answer to the starving,
Is a stern demand for gold.

—Jacob Huff.

Knowest thou well yesterday, its aim and reason?
Workest thou well today for worthy things?
Then heed thou not tomorrow's hidden season,
Thou need'st not fear what hapsae'er it brings.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions
of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profound-est question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer.
The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium.
2 cents each.

paid, for 10 cents.

The Corruptions of Modern Government.

THE GREAT serpent is gradually tightening his coils. Despite the pretended legislation against trusts, they flourish in open violation of law. When the tenpin alley was introduced and became a center for a den of thieves, the law prohibited the tenpin alley. It was changed to ninepins, and was never after interrupted. The lawmaking power of our country is in the hands of the money sharks. The primaries whence originate the political activities of our nation are deeply rooted in the slums, and the professional politician of the slum is there for the purpose of selling himself to the man or party who pays the price.

The political machinery is manipulated by the money power, in the interests of Wall and Lombard streets. The backbone of the great financial and commercial trusts is this accursed den of thieves; and there is no legislative power on the face of God's earth that can extricate the people from the financial dilemma into which they have merged through party affiliation. There has been no legislation for thirty years, in the interests of the people. The whole question of politics resolves itself to what will further the possibilities of the financial cormorant, who owns the money of the world and is gradually usurping the rights of the people who know just enough to throw up the hat and hurrah for men like Mark Hanna, because he is endorsed by the particular party with whom they have been in affiliation.

The hour is fast approaching when there will be but two parties in America and throughout the world,—the money power owning the governments and the people, and the poor deluded people, the asses who carry the burdens. With the money power will be the governments, supported by the army and the navy. Issachar will then be in reality, according to the Scriptural prediction, a strong ass couching down between two burdens, imposed upon him through his own dereliction; and no man can buy or sell without the mark of the beast, either in his forehead (credit) or in his hand, the gold with which to purchase. This mark is the mark of the beast; and so sure as there is a God in heaven, this prediction of John the Revelator is coming true.

The golden calf (desire for money), typified by the image set up in the most holy place by Manasseh, the king of Israel, now desecrates the temple; and as that desecration was the signal for the destruction of Jerusalem, so the golden calf now instituted is the signal for the final desolation to come upon the world. This is the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet.

Let not the people be deceived by the great dailies,—that are under the direct influence of the money power,—in their enunciation of good times. Any influence which operates to lull the wage slave into a false security by the cry of prosperity, even though it be an impulse in the direction of employment of the wage slave, only forges another link in the chain of his oppression.

The race must emerge, by the very nature and course of events, from chaos, or from the formless and void condition, to the state of organic unity.

Truths are representative of, or correspondential to, riches. In other words, truths are the riches of the mind.

The Four Great Elements of Social Activity.

IT IS NOT the aim of the GUIDING STAR PUBLISHING HOUSE to perform the dirty work of smashing idols, though in clearing up the debris of the iconoclasts we may be forced to cart away some of the rubbish which they have left in their tracks. Ours is a constructive work.

There are four fundamental principles lying at the foundation of the social organism and constituting the organic framework of social perfection; they are represented by the four beasts of Ezekiel's prophecy, they signifying the four great basic elements of organic unity. The first principle is commerce; it is the system of circulation, and in the social order corresponds to the heart and vascular system in the human body. The second great principle is represented by the bullock, in the vision of Ezekiel; it corresponds to the hepatic system, and designates agriculture. The third principle is that of the adjustment of the relations of commerce with agriculture, and is represented by the third beast of Ezekiel's vision. It corresponds to the kidneys or reins, and in the signs of the Zodiac is represented by the balances or scales. This beast had the face of a man. It involves universal justice.

The fourth principle may be summed up in the term education. This includes everything educational, disciplinary, and especially involves culture on the lines of industrial education. It embraces music, and all the forms of recreation. It comes under the head of the university system of Universology. In the vision of Ezekiel it is symbolized by the Eagle, the voice of which is the pale horse followed by death and hell. The power to aggregate and unify these four great elements of organic force is represented in the symbolic language of the Bible as the four carpenters, who have in hand the construction of universal order in the formation of the kingdom of righteousness about to be inaugurated in the earth.

The Scientific Conquest of Death.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

HUMAN DESTINY, the ultimate goal of the highest human aspiration, has been the great problem of the world for ages. What man will be when the cycles are completed, when all of the lines of human experience converge in the apex of progress, is the subject of all religions, the object of universal hope and wonder, the burden of the prophets, the song of the sages. The human heart longs for the realization of a condition of existence transcending the present mortal world—a condition in which life may be enjoyed and death overcome. Such a condition, such destiny, is in the bounds of possibility; indeed, the very elements of ultimate destiny are involved in the momentum of human thought and desire for ages, and its realization through the operation of immutable law is inevitable. The foundation of the primitive Christian system was the actual work of destroying death in one personality in the tangible world; a fact accepted by all Christendom, a scientific evidence that its achievement may again result, and result to the many, through obedience to the laws of life, which brought immortality to Jesus. The time must come, in the development and progress of the essential substances transfused into humanity in the departure of the Messiah and Founder of the Christian church, when war against death will be renewed in the natural world! Every effort, every work in the natural world, though reflexed in the spiritual, must find its ultimate expression, effect, or fruitage in the world in which the primary and central impulse reaches its climax of potentiality.

Death is a universal conqueror; it rules the world—not merely in the mowing down and entombing of the millions, but in residing and operating in the very nature of the mortal man, in sitting upon the throne of the human will and intellect, fortified in the citadel of the human system. It is the gravity of human desire manifest in the duality of vital life in the segregate humanity. The world today is in a state of death, both in and out of the grave. The grim spectre stalks the corridors of the human temple, persistent in the work of wrecking the structure until it falls a crumbling ruin. Humanity is a living tomb, in which are maintained the fires of sensualism, where the fuel of life is consumed and its energies dissipated. The seething mass of corruption, of sentient chaos, is the world's hell, the dominion of evil, the kingdom of the devil, the empire of fallacy and delusion!

Every condition in the universe has its opposite condition; the universe is a world of antitheses. The relation of opposites is absolute in every domain, whether in the physical or the mental world. This is a scientific, self-evident postulate, demonstrated in the actual existence of light and darkness, heat and cold, up and down, good and evil, as opposites. The perpetuity of the universe results through the transposition of poles of activity, providing for the continual ascent and descent of energies, the progressive and retrogressive evolutions and involutions of life on all planes of existence. From the basis of analogy, which we find to be applicable in the simplest alchemy, we may know that if death obtains in the world today, its opposite condition of immortality may be attained in the world in which death is now operative.

The cause of death at once becomes a problem for scientific solution. Its solution is the discovery of the laws of biogenesis and their practical application in the actual achievement of victory over death in all its phases. Why may not science touch the secret springs of life, and heal the race of its awful malady? Does not the universe somewhere contain in its bountiful fund of energies, in its generous provisions against contingencies, and in the obvious necessity for the satisfaction of every human desire and aspiration, a conquering host of entities to fight the germs of corruption, to wage war upon the powers of death? Why may not man discover in the laboratory of Nature, the elixir of life, the universal panacea, and give to man a full bounty of vitality and lift him out of the delirium of death? Men have searched for the fountain of eternal youth; they have endeavored to discover the universal solvent, the "philosopher's stone." It was the hope of the medieval alchemist and the explorer. Today, chemistry hopes to discover the central element of all existence and render its appropriation possible to all the world. Even Virchow and Tesla have startled millions through announcement of their avowed interest in the problem of human longevity and immortality, as the result of scientific achievement in the natural world.

Science has solved the problem of human life, and is applying the laws of its discovery. The remedy does not exist in the world of physical energy: there is no potency in the alchemico-electric battery to dethrone the emperor of death. The elixir vitae is not to be found by chemical research in the non-vital substances of the universe. The process of overcoming death is a battle of the vital energies of human existence, a war of mental entities, the energies of brain cells and blood corpuscles, the process of storing in the very fibre of the human system the residuum of exalted mental force in every channel of communication of body and brain! The discovery of the laws of life results from the discovery of the cause of death. When the universal disease is scientifically and successfully diagnosed, both the remedy and its method of application are known. The remedy for death is life; human life must resist and overcome human death, and the plane of conflict between life and death is the plane of human existence. The remedy must be applied where the disease obtains.

Man dies because he does not know how to live; he dies because he wastes the very elements of life itself—wastes that which if scientifically conserved and appropriated would bring health, a surplus of vitality, and the consequent happiness of human longevity. The ravages of death obtain through the voluntary and persistent dissipation of human vitality. The flood-tides of mortal corruption have their source in the heart of sensualism, where originate all of the world's woes, all human ills and diseases—and death itself. Man ignorantly dissipates human energies, and is mortal. If mortality results from the destruction of the vital elements of his being, it follows that the conservation, exaltation, and scientific appropriation and determination of these elements would yield to him his substance of salvation, the elixir of life, the very forces which would cause every cell and fibre to teem and tingle with essential essences of being. The processes of regeneration of life are the exact opposites of the processes of physical and mental degeneration,—radical in the extreme, because located at the opposite pole of being. As man exists today, in the reckless sowing of the seed of life for other than legitimate purposes, every corpuscle becomes a tomb of decay, and every fibre the dumping ground of mental offal. The brain is a vortex of sensual spirits in the generation of lust, the magnetism of death; it is the origin of fallacy in the perversions of all the uses of life and of thought. The imbecility, insipidity, and mediocrity of the modern mind are directly due to the continuous destruction of mental entities through the various forms of dissipation of neuro-electric energies in sensual gratification. The very existence of fallacy and mental chaos in the world today is the absolute evidence of the perverted life, an unmistakable manifestation of the universal disease afflicting the world as an entire mass, without exception in all the millions of sentient humanity.

When man undertakes to overcome death, he grapples with his worst and most powerful enemy—an enemy more persistently active for purposes of his destruction than any other agency of the planes of hell. The work of discovery of the secret through which the world is to be redeemed from the thralldom of death, was a daring venture of the Founder of Koreshanity on the sea of turbulent humanity, where the spectres of the sky and the monsters of the deep threaten the life of the voyager on the forbidden waters; the new Columbus, in the avowed purpose of discovering the Garden of Eden, discovered the continent borders of the New World. The man who antagonizes death must enter the dark chambers and vaults of the dead, and incur the dangers of hungry ghouls and human hyenas; he invades the territory guarded by all the armies of hades, under the authority of the courts of death. We do not mean in some unseen world or realm, but here in this, the natural, corporeal world of man. Nineteen hundred years ago, through lifting the standard of absolute purity in judgment of a fallen church, Jesus brought upon himself the awful vengeance of a mob of devils educated in the orthodox and apostate church, which in every period of the world's history, kills its prophets and destroys its saviors! Koreshanity is engaging in the work of unmasking the modern world in its war against mortality in all its phases; and the modern church, in defense of the sanctity—the hypocrisy of the modern family and the modern home of sensualism, will conspire with all the forces of diabolism, to blot it and its Founder out of existence.

We are entering the war of truth and fallacy, of life and death, of good and evil. We are nearing a practical age, and the essential mental forces are being externalized; the laws of life are now susceptible of application in the external man, because known to the external mind. The doctrines of life, the science of the universe, is able to combat fallacy and death in the external world, because of the discovery of the knowledges of man and cosmos. It is a war of the man against the world—the most stupendous conquest of the ages!—a war beginning in the mental domain, the combat of truth and fallacy extending into every sphere of human activity. There is no greater work than that of overcoming death for the world. Human experience for dispensations culminates in the ability of man to achieve the greatest victory possible in all the universe. Whoever is successful in the stupendous undertaking, is the universal and mightiest Hero, whose destiny is the scientific resurrection, in highest exaltation on the throne of the universe; he wins the throne of Deity by virtue of the strength of conserved vital manhood, exercised and scientifically applied for the successful dethronement of the emperor of death in the human temple in the natural world!

Restoration of the Divine Unity of Church and State.

REV. BERTHALDINE.

NO RATIONAL mind critically observant of present ecclesiastical and social conditions, in the light of the science of the sole legitimate standard of vital and social integrity, the Mosaic law, can fail to observe in himself and in all men, the revelation of the "man of sin," the violation of that law.

The first essential for the restoration of the divine unity of church and state, is the science of the laws governing the universe, which is the sphere of all existence. This science can be derived only from the truth concerning its form and functions.

The serpent, as the origin of the name indicates, is the symbol of wisdom. The wisdom of the divine human is represented by the brazen serpent. Brass is an alchemic product. The anthropostic brazen serpent is the product of the cross of Jehovah with the mortal humanity, the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. It is written that the result of eating of the fruit of this tree is to make men wise, to make them as Gods, knowing good and evil.

The first man Adam—known to us as the Lord Jesus Christ—was, it is written, the beginning of the creation of God, the first living soul, inspired by indwelling Deity. So perfect was the equilibrium of his organism, that his flesh could not see corruption. So wise was he unto the salvation of its spirit and soul, that when killed by enmity, he secured their preservation for the resuscitation of his body in the tomb of Joseph, and provided for the reproduction of its life from the universal Gentile tomb of Joseph, of which the sepulchre of hewn stone was a type.

To this first man Adam, or Jehovah, it was said, by the Deity within that holy temple: "It is not good that the man should be alone." Jehovah purposed the manifestation of his Deity as the Tree of Life in the physical universe, and to yield its fruit. The execution of this purpose meant the subjection of Himself to the central law of life, which is the law of the cross. This meant for him to become accursed, to hang upon the tree of knowledge of good and evil as its product, the "man of sin," and to be regarded by those in the domain of the love of sin, as that old serpent the devil.

The Lord Jesus held within himself, sanctified but not yet glorified, the spiritual seed of Abraham, the spirits of the just made perfect by their conjunctive unity in him, through the obedience to law which he made manifest. He was the involution of a divine spiritual kingdom to be ultimately naturalized in the earth, his inheritance, as a theocratic kingdom, the divine unity of church and state.

To reproduce the divine wisdom as the science of life and immortality, and the divine love as the application of that science to the uses of life, Jehovah necessarily planted himself in soil rich in such reproductive possibilities. This was the mortal debris of a previous cycle of such reproduction, the corrupt and perverted elements of all truth and all good, awaiting transformation to his own divine life in the body of his resurrection as the Grand Man. He is raised in power and great glory. The power is knowledge, the great glory is revealed in the application of this knowledge to the uses of life. Science is the result of the divine love of wisdom and understanding.

When Jehovah entered into conjunctive unity with the soil of mortality, he became the Church Militant as to his manifest existence, the sphere of conflict and disintegration; but the formulator, by virtue of this, of a new kingdom in the heavens, the realms of progressive mentality. As the Church Militant, described by the symbolic term,—"the tree of knowledge of good and evil," completes its cycle of existence, it yields its life to its seed fruit; a fruit so unique in its character that it takes all time and eternity to express its involutions and evolutions. It is none other than the knowledge of God,—God's knowledge of the universe; this is the power of God unto the salvation of the universe from center to circumference. Brought into conjunction with the love of His fallen humanity, which it is its divine right to command, that love is transformed and restored to be the revelation of the divine wisdom, whose eyes are illumined by the Son of Science, the Father-Mother of Gods and men, Elohi-Jehovah.

The descending energies of Jehovah perpetuate the hells by the operation of the laws of sensual propagation, thus giving every entity of His sacrificed flesh the experiences of all forms of mortal existence, by virtue of the law of re-embodiment. In the ascension and aggregation of these entities from the hells, in response to the power of God, which is knowledge in ultimates, the seed fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, the man in whom this knowledge ultimates, stands forth from the hells as the nexus of the conjunctive unity of God and man. He is the great Alchemist—the light of Egypt; the great Reasoner—the Assyrian. He is Petros—the rock of ages,—the foundation stone of the eternal temple, who holds the keys of heaven and hell. He is the Father's name, Jehovah's new name, by which Deity is known for ages; the Sire, the Seer, the prophet, the Eye of Jehovah, this one and no other, is the restorer of the divine unity of church and state in the earth. Without him we can do nothing. When he, Petros, is converted to the spirit of the new age, the church and state which he has founded in the earth will receive his breath of lives.

This church and state will constitute the divine expression of universalempire. The strength of its organic unity will be the science of the laws of universal being. Baptized with the spirit of divine life, this empire is transfigured, and unfolds as the answer to the prayer of Jehovah: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

"The strength of sin is the law." Sinai, the mount of the law, arose from a region of miry clay, hence its name. On its summit, amidst the thunderings of the clouds of Jove, Moses, truth or water-saved, received by divine influx the strength of sin, the wisdom of experience, the science of the law. This divine influx carried the ascending spirit of Moses to the throne of the celestial heavens, and his descending spirit, as the flesh of Jehovah, through the mire of all the mortal hells. Now, as it ascends, as the natural mind of mortal man made wise unto salvation, it may behold, in the face of the "man of sin," the eyes of the eternal Motherhood of God, the intelligence of the wisdom of her laws.

"Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." This is the day of the Lord in which "the wise shall understand." It is the hour of the day's dawning. In the mental realms, the lightnings play from the Sword of the Lord and of Gideon. Should the clouds be rent that limit natural vision, the heavenly hosts of the Almighty might be seen descending as the Church Triumphant, to establish in the earth, through her conjunctive unity with the man of God, the holy Kingdom, the state of Righteousness, the Theocracy.

Enemies of Truth Photographed.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

THE PSALMIST describes the enemies of Truth in this wise: "For there is no faithfulness in their mouth; their inward part is very wickedness; their throat is an open sepulchre; they flatter with their tongue." When persons have lent themselves as open ways, or mediums, for the communication of lying spirits for a time, they lose all capacity for truth and love for those who are its representatives. Their throat becomes literally "an open sepulchre," out of which come only lying spirits of the dead, and the lies they promulgate. That they can perform some marvelous things is true; but they are lying wonders whose whole intent and purpose is to deceive. In Revelation, John saw at the end of the Christian age (the present time), only the "spirits of devils working miracles." We have come to the age of science, and the devils know that their time to deceive, in which they would "seduce, if it were possible, even the elect," is short, and that what they would do must be done quickly, since "The lip of truth shall be established forever, but a lying tongue is but for a moment." They are destined soon to find that it is in vain that "They trust in vanity and speak lies."

Koreshanity is the movement against which "the gates of hell shall not prevail." The gates of hell are the corrupt and lying humanity through which "Hell has enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure," getting up even into heaven, so that "There was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon." But the dragon and all his lying brood were cast out, and we are approaching the time of that happy deliverance. Now, as nineteen hundred years ago, it will be well for those who are being urged to action, if not to violence, against the Lord's hosts, to heed the advice of that doctor of the law, Gamaliel: "And now I say unto you, refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it: lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

Evolution and involution are co-ordinate and co-operative factors of being; and every involved germ in the universe reaches "its fulness, its sanctity, and its power in ultimates" or last things. The material germ of any given life is the final and culminating germinal plenum of that existence, whatsoever it may be.

If natural death is the result of disobedience and the sequence of the curse, then redemption is not complete until the physical nature is redeemed; and if excessive labor is a part of the curse, then the redemption of the Christ must extend to the regulation of that question also.

Each dispensation culminates in its own peculiar order of fruit:—no two dispensations of the same zodiacal series terminating in the same or exactly similar fruition.

Physical creation has absolute and symmetrical form.

Observations and Reflections.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

"What is Mediumship?"

"By mediumship is meant whatsoever faculty in human nature enables one person to communicate with another, each with all, and all with God."

Does the above sentence convey any knowledge of the method of spirit communication?

And yet the article of which these are initial words, is written by one of the most prominent of modern spiritistic mediums—W. J. Colville, Ostensibly, if a title means anything (we are writing under the gentleman's title), to impart to the public the modus operandi of such mediation.

He declares that in some degree we are all mediums or mediators of some sort:

But we might as well be in darkest Africa so far as any real light shed by his pen is concerned.

He goes on to speak of people and their theories, of the advisability of correct living,

And in "firstly" of his closing specifications, asserts that "mediumship is simply extraordinary sensitiveness in one or more directions."

The remaining five of the six particulars, convey just as little of the science of mediumship.

Mr. Colville cannot give that which he does not possess.

Neither himself nor the power behind the throne of his intellect is cognizant of the science of spirit communication.

Therefore, they encourage processes which are condemned by the laws of legitimate intercommunication between the natural and spiritual worlds.

Overproduction and Distress.

The political trickster's word for it, overproduction fathers stringent times.

It is therefore in order to remark that there is ominous increase in food stuffs;

Corn alone threatens at the added rate of twenty-four million bushels over the yield of 1897.

We must expect deprivation and distress for the millions to increase in parallel ratio.

That Georgian who recently devised an attachment for rocking cradles,

Would deserve better of the populace had he turned his inventive genius upon curtailment of bursting granaries and bulging bins,

Thus giving a shadow of encouragement that the cradled baby would continue.

Perhaps some missionary on the wing to Bariboolagha can be induced to alight for time

Sufficient to dawn it upon the mind of that man of Georgia, that for the ordinary baby, bread is better than rock.

We agree with the trickster, that there is overproduction in plenty—of selfishness.

We agree with the political trickster exactly, always excepting his application of the term,

Which application is the bull in the china shop of hardpan fact.

Peace Attends Good Government.

The Cuban's strong desire for peace and settled conditions, irrespective of government, Reminds one of those brisk specimens of the genus homo who flips up, Jack-in-the-box fashion,

With the assertion that they do not care one little bit whether they live on the inside or on the outside of the universe!

The average American schoolboy of twelve years, should be able to inform the Cuban

That the essential quality of peace and settled conditions will never brood down upon a people under a pestiferous government;

While the tyro in Koreshanity is aware that as between an interior and exterior residence,

There is all the difference in the world with impossibility to apply in the proper place, thrown in.

Some one remarks, that certain people cannot comprehend certain things until their heads evolve brains.

The case skips beyond our horizon when we reflect that involution must precede evolution.

Smiles Are On Sale.

Time works changes in the style:

A century or so ago, when Bull bellowed across the waters, his countenance was cut on the bias;

He smiles on us now. He smiled on us all through the 111 days of sulphurous difference with the Dons;

He smiles upon our achievement; he smiles upon our aspirations;

He smiles upon our expansions; he smiles. He smilingly remarks that, as an earnest of our appreciation.

The Sooloo archipelago, with some slight tariff amenities, would be a graceful reminder that the lion beams upon the whelp.

In substance of needless addendum, the predilections of the Soolooist cut no figure.

Good and Evil.

Positive good and positive evil exist. Neither state is dependent upon mental conception.

Good, in its perverted state, is evil; it has suffered transformation.

Evil, likewise, is equally amenable to transforming process, and in its transformation it becomes good.

A contradiction to this cannot be wrung from the saying: "What is one man's meat is another man's poison,"

Since it is a received fact that the demons of the nether regions cannot respire the air of the pure angel sphere.

Any more than the holy angels could exist in the nether regions.

God is positive good; the devil is positive evil.

* * *

Mr. Colville quotes Kate Field in these words: "I look to science to prove immortality."

She was a true prophetess; science has proven immortality;

But people who allow themselves to remain engulfed in spurious manifestations of immortality, will be slow to perceive it.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE ECLIPSE of the moon on the evening of December 27, viewed through our refractor, exhibited a number of features of interest to the Koreshan astronomer,—facts which receive little attention and consideration in the popular observatory, and which militate against the conclusions of the Copernican system. The extraordinarily bright copper face of the moon, bordering on scarlet, while in the middle of totality, greeted us. It was the reddest eclipse that we ever observed, presenting the aspect of a red-hot copper ball suspended in the sky. The reader is no doubt familiar with the usual theory of the lunar eclipse: It is that the moon at certain periods passes into the cone of the earth's shadow, consisting of the umbra and the penumbra. The penumbra is supposed to be that outer part of the earth's shadow into which sufficient light is diffused and diffracted to make an "eclipse twilight," while the umbra is the complete cutting off of all the sun's rays. If the moon simply and directly reflects sunlight, it would follow that when all of the sunshine is cut off the moon would be entirely invisible; but it is not! It is known that no two lunar eclipses present the same phenomena. In the Copernican system it is not supposed that open, interplanetary space is subject to changes of temperature and weather, as in the film of atmosphere upon the convex earth; therefore the laws of transmission of light through universal ether (!) would admit of uniform sunshine in quantity and quality, and consequently every total eclipse of the moon would appear to be the same. The last eclipse was of bright copper color—a red-hot appearance; September 3, 1895, it was purple, and on March 19, 1848, there was only a slight tinge of red during the total cut-off, the moon shining throughout totality with its perfect light as though there were no eclipse whatever! These phenomena are not compatible with modern astronomy; they are inexplicable from the accepted premise of the Copernican system.

The work of modern evangelists,—Moody, Simpson, McCabe, Barnes, Jones, and others, is reacting against modern Christianity. Their methods of soliciting and collecting funds for their self-aggrandizement are not meeting with favor; in fact, they are being repudiated. Moody's methods are especially repulsive; he excites prejudice, and institutes moral and even business boycotts in communities in which he operates, against men of wealth who do not immediately respond to his calls for money. Moody is to a community of wealthy men, what the "hold-up" is to the individual on the highway. His mask has recently been torn off by a Denver capitalist, of whom Moody made the extortionate demand of $75,000 for the Y. M. C. A., which Moody, some years ago, fought bitterly for adopting its club style. Moody ranted in the pulpit about the capitalist, because of his non compliance. The capitalist accuses Moody of extortion and brigandage by the "your-money-or-your-life" method, by which he sinks to the level of a mere financial exploiter in the interests of so called charitable institutions. The Christian world tolerates such work, such robberies; it tolerates every form of robbery of the competitive system; but endeavors to wage a war of persecution every time any one voluntarily gives $1,000 to the Koreshan Institutions!

Adventists for sixty years have been looking for the coming of the Christ, and have not seen him. The older enthusiasts have passed away in disappointment, while others are continuing to cry out of mental darkness, "Behold the bridegroom cometh!" An Adventist evangelist turns the question over in his mind and writes an article, "The Twentieth Century Adventist." He sounds the notes of despair; the time prophecies have all run out; the signs agreed upon are far in the past, and the Adventists cannot raise another general excitement. Their old story of a man bursting through the clouds, is becoming obnoxious and absurd. The advent world has reached its limits. The Man comes teaching the truth, and the blind do not comprehend it. The modern church in all its phases will pass into the new century in doubt and disappointment, to final agnosticism, just as the Jewish church failed to receive the truth sent to them. After rejection of the truth, the bogus doctrine of the impersonality and intangibility of the Messiah must be foisted on the modern world; then they can rest in false peace, until the storm of revolution bursts upon an astonished world.

A Christmas enthusiast endeavors to connect the religion of Jesus the Christ with the modern republicanism, in the declaration that "the unfurled flag of liberty and the cross of Christ go hand in hand." Of course, modern republicanism is spreading a little, but we cannot say so much of orthodoxy; for it is dying out! We point to another item of American production, which has to do with the spirit of the times. The American people believe in spirits, both mental and alcoholic. While "spiritual food" is being sent to every land, and stuffed into the minds of heathen imbeciles, the spiritual stimulant is poured down their throats! Before us, alongside the statements of the Christian preacher, is a review of American productions and resources: "We produce more whiskey and better whiskey, than any other country in the world; more brandy and more rum, proved by the wise as the best and safest liquor to drink; enough is made in Massachusetts to supply the needs of America, and to load the many vessels yearly for the civilizing and Christianizing of Africa!"

Hasting's Christian observes too much of the evils and corruptions of mortal humanity to conclude with the modern faddists, that the Almighty is the father of the wholesale mass of modern depravity. A recent issue contains an article entitled, "The Fatherhood of the Devil," in which it is said that "the fatherhood of the devil seems to be forgotten or ignored." Jesus did not teach that an immortal God is the father of the mortal, corrupt, and sensual man. The modern doctrine of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man is promulgated by false claimants to divine sonship, making every devil a Christ, and every sensual brain the container of the divine mind!

America is indeed passing through rapid transformations. The past month has witnessed a genuine surprise—the visit of the President to the southern states. McKinley has visited the legislative bodies of both Georgia and Alabama, made speeches in the South on the growth of Americanism among the powers of the world, and eulogized the confederate soldier for his patriotism. The President was very much in evidence in the southern Peace Jubilee at Savannah, Ga., and aroused a stupendous volume of feeling of American supremacy.

Only two more years of the present century remain; when 1900 ends, a cycle pedaled by a new rider will begin its century run. What marvelous changes took place during the past year! What marvelous transformations in human thought and human society will fill the brief space lying between us and the door of the new century? False prognosticators are failing as pace-makers and as peacemakers. Progress makes rapid strides, riding over every obstacle. Truth moves with Progress, for Progress is the progress of Truth.

Before the Spanish-American war, the democrats in both Houses of Congress were opposed to the recognition of the independence of Cuba, on the ground that the Cubans were incapable of governing themselves. Now, since the republicans are committed on the subject of annexation and expansion, the democratic party all at once concludes that the Cubans are capable of self government, and that even the semi-barbarous Filipinos can safely run a republican government with 10,000,000 subjects!

There are no elements of a fad in Koreshanity. In its founding, human sensualism was not consulted, human vanity was debarred from selection of its features. There is nothing existing as a part of the old world's fallacies, that has any part in the Truth. It is not in keeping with the perverted tastes, desires, and aspirations of modern humanity. As a following, it does not desire quantity, but quality; it does not want numbers, but capacity—brains, hearts, vitality!

The time is rapidly approaching when the Koreshan Astronomy will be the only system recognized in the world. At present, it is considered an innovation—a mere theory, but withal a beautiful one. Its beauty lies in its rational conclusions, in its truth. After a little hard work against modern prejudice, it will move the world with an irresistible impulse, converting the millions who now thoughtlessly accept a gigantic fallacy.

The Bonapartists of Europe are sounding the alarm of the approaching end of pretended peace. The Bonapartists exist as a party, a power in politics; they exist as a society, and hold annual conferences under the leadership of Prince Victor Bonaparte. Upon recent election of Baron Legoux at conference at Brussels, it was announced that "The time of watching is ended, and the hour for combat is sounding!"

A number of modern reformers appeal to Jesus as authority on socialism. Did not Jesus teach other things than socialism? He taught the philosophy of life; he had no socialism apart from his revelations of the divine Being, no communism separate from his theology. Yet many reformers who are harping about Christian socialism do not care a farthing about the principles of the divine religion.

The democrats are fighting manifest destiny in opposing American expansion. Is American democracy incapable of girdling the globe? If democracy is the true form of government, the government of liberty and freedom, would not the Cubans and Filipinos be as free, if made a part of the American republic, as they would be if democratic only by themselves?

The work of enlightening the world consists in more than burning away the cobwebs; the difficulty is deeper than spider's yarns. Fallacy goes down into the fibre of the human system—into the very groundwork of all mentality. Truth must burn it out,—burn up the old fibre and construct the new; it must destroy the mortal frame and form the new man.

The world talks of peace, and many are deluded into the feeling that real peace obtains. There is no peace in the world today—not even cessation of war. No less than twenty wars are now being waged: 11 in Africa; 5 in Asia; 1 in Europe, and 3 in the western hemisphere; while other nations are on the brink of insurrection and revolution.

All of the reform papers that have patent insides and outsides have issued booming news of the Spanish-American war, the victories, the prospects for annexation and expansion of American territory, while in the editorial columns, we find the editors opposed to the measures. Consistent reform press! Too many editors spoil the broth!

Both the natural and spiritual worlds are being drawn into the inevitable vortex for the destruction of the barriers between the two. When the spiritual stars fall into the anthropotic earth, humanity will enter an age of reformation in the establishment of heaven in earth.

If the world could not have a devil, it would be impossible to have a God. It is impossible to generate light independently of darkness; heat cannot exist where cold cannot be. Through the universal law of antithesis, opposite conditions must obtain in all domains of existence.

Hypotheses are bubbles projected into the mental atmosphere, from which logic, the artist of reason, is asked to draw conclusions. Conclusions from hypotheses are imaginary pictures of unrealities. The Copernican astronomy is founded upon bubbles.

An agnostic exchange says: "If you wish to know what religion is worth, try to borrow money on it." Might try agnosticism as security. What's the trouble, Agnostic,—running short of arguments, that such matter must be used?

Modern ingenuity and competitive schemes meet the pope of Rome half way in parading his holiness through the Vatican gardens, by means of the cinematograph or kinoscope. Now, drop a nickle in the slot and see the pope!

The world is nearing the rapids of revolution in the stream of time. There is no escape from the awful Niagara, over which the elements of fallacy must gravitate to destruction.

At the time the Almighty is endeavoring to establish his kingdom in the earth, the world is making the greatest endeavor to get out of the world into heaven.

If the modern church is in the light now, the primitive church was in darkness; for there is no semblance between the two in either faith or practice.

The world is perverted; the true science has come to turn the old world upside down, and the axes of revolution are laid at the root of the tree of evil.

Men will persist in wasting the life energies they have in the natural world, while hoping for immortal life beyond the clouds!

Are you tired of modern theories and systems? If so, hear the other side; we have the exact opposite side.

The workingman is weighed on the wage scales, and often found wanting in the necessities of life.

What are the wild thought-waves on the ocean of mental chaos, saying?

When mortgaged farms are rigged for sail, they are launched on the market.

New Year resolutions are like fallacious theories; they fail in application.

Modern stock breeders produce bulls and bears in the stock exchange.

Some spheres of thought are as light and as empty as soap bubbles.

Manufactories and establishments of the capitalists are steal works.

Nothing but a proven fact can be a true premise of conclusion.

THE EDITOR.

First Step in Church Declension.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—In Vol. 1, No. 38 of THE SWORD I find this statement: "The Christianity of today is a sham; its pretensions are spurious; its standard of life is not the standard set up by Jesus, but a modification of primitive religion made by Paul, who was 'all things to all men,' and who permitted, in the church established among the Gentiles, compromises that his modification of the Christian system might gain a rapid foothold throughout the world. The Pauline theology is not the theology of the Lord."

This is equivalent to saying that the writings of Paul contain false doctrine, whereas I had supposed that a true interpretation of Paul would be in harmony with the truth involved in Koreshanity.—H. J. J., Perkins, Ia.

The dispensation of the truth of Jesus, in its purity to the people to whom Jesus came as the Messiah, was through the personalities whom Jesus personally chose, taught, and specially commissioned to preach his gospel. The apostles chosen in person by Jesus constituted the central nucleus of the primitive church; in that nucleus were the three personalities representing and receiving the three degrees of divine life—John, James, and Peter, receiving respectively the celestial, spiritual, and the natural degrees of the Word. Unless Jesus was mistaken in his choice, these men proclaimed the truth to the Jews,—a profounder faith than could be comprehended or imparted by any other minds. The central nucleus contained the truth in its unity and wholeness.

Paul was never in harmony with the twelve apostles, for the simple reason that he received a fragment of the disseminated life. He quarreled with Peter and other apostles, and finally separated entirely from those who worked among the Jews, while Paul went among the Gentiles. The only way the gospel could be given to the Gentiles, who were not prepared through an age of experience and progress along specific lines, and who were outside of the channels through which the Almighty operated and passed from the Noatic dispensation down to the end of the Jewish dispensation, was by a process of modification; and the character of that modification depended upon the character of the man or mind through which the modification was to be made.

The theology of Paul was an adapted theology, diluted to suit the Pagan taste; his compromise was the first step in the declension of the church. Paul did not comprehend the gospel in its fulness; he did the best he could, but he made some mistakes. What he taught was true in a sense,—it was true in the plane to which the essence had descended in him; he manifested the effect of the life of Jesus in its commingling with the mortal man; he expressed a shade of death or apostasy of divine life. The essences had gravitated into a different atmosphere, and their character was naturally changed, because the operation of the laws of the alchemy of the mind do not admit of an idea being exactly the same after its transmission through different planes or strata of mentality. There was just as much difference between the theology of Paul and the theology of Jesus, as there was between the life and character of Paul and Jesus. The theology of Jesus was perfect, because he was the perfect, immortal man; his concept was clear and absolute. The theology of Paul was imperfect because he was an imperfect man, and acknowledged that he "saw through a glass darkly" and but dimly.

The Blooming of the Tree of Life.

A friend inquires, Where is the analogy in the bringing forth and ripening of seed in the vegetable kingdom and the mission of the Founder of Koreshanity, there being no dependence upon one maturing seed in the ripening of many seeds. Please answer in THE FLAMING SWORD.—M. A. P., Ohio.

The tree of life performs its functions according to immutable law. It is the tree of humanity, the tree of human life, bearing its fruit every twelfth division of the great Zodiacal year, each fruitage differing from a previous bearing, according to the quality of the soil into which the seed was planted. The life of Jesus, as the seed of humanity, was sown in the world nineteen hundred years ago, and in the order of the propagation of the life of that seed it died in the corrupt soil, producing a tree which has been active in human history during the Christian dispensation. It has spread its branches, put forth its foliage, and has grouped its corpuscles for the final fruitage. All of the progress of the tree of life during the passing dispensation has been through the church in its various modifications and results. No tree bears its seed directly on the stem without the bud, the flower, and the fruit. We must be rational in our analogies, and scientific in our application of the correspondence between the vegetable kingdom and the human world.

The old dispensation ends with the blooming of the tree of life; where specific functions of sex in dual forms are expressed. The flower contains the organs of generation of the coming seed. The flower and its functions intervene between the sowing of the seed and the fruitage or harvest. The central personality of this dispensation corresponds to the center of the bloom, the pistil, terminating the axis of growth of the flower, the central stem for the reception of the elements of fecundation. The pollen received by the pistil is produced by the stamens or the anthers, corresponding to the seven celibate and communistic societies of America; and their decline, after casting off the pollen of human progress and life into the central intellectual laboratory, is scientific evidence of the stage of development of the tree of life and the proximity of the time of the maturity of the fruit, the time of the harvest.

When the pistil has performed its functions as to its outward form, it does not wither and die as do the stamens, but becomes a part of the living fruit by absorption into the ovary of the flower, the vascular or cellular terminus of the pistil, through which the seeds are constructed and manifest. In the consideration of the subject of this analogy, the fact that man is composite—made up of elements of all kingdoms beneath him, while the vegetable kingdom is but a fraction of the whole, must be recognized and all the relations and correspondences understood; because in the blooming of the tree of life and the production and manifestation of the fruit, there are operative functions and laws analagous to all the kinds of vegetable life, and it requires the science of the entire kingdom to make the analogy complete.

God is in the Righteous.

You did not answer my question satisfactorily regarding the reproduction of the sons of God. You say they will be of a higher order than is manifest today. What higher order can there be, since God dwells in man.—J. P., Milford, Ill.

Man as he exists today is mortal and corrupt. The mortal man is, in fact, only a half a man; the true and perfect genus of humanity being biune in nature, male and female in one person, possessing the functions of the propagation of life on a plane above the sensual generation. God is not in everybody. Through the Jewish dispensation, the only people he was in were the descendants of Abraham. The Almighty is in the generation of the righteous (Psa. xiv:5), not in the generation of the unrighteous. The sons of God will be men from heaven just as Jesus was from above; while the mortal man is from beneath, having his specific and direct origin in death. The new order of humanity, consisting of 144,000 Gods, will be as far superior to the present manhood, as the mortal man is superior to the animal kingdom, or as the animal kingdom is superior to the vegetable. The immortal man is the resurrected man; and the resurrected man is God, in the highest form of his tangible existence.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

A Foundation Firmer than the Rock of Gibraltar.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—My first and present impressions of Koreshanity may interest your readers as much as others' impressions have interested me. My fondest desire since earliest childhood has been to make others happy, or more happy than myself. As I grew into youth and manhood, I longed for a humanity impelled by brotherly love, and in pursuance of my craving I followed the example and advice of my parents, a Quaker father and a Wesleyan mother; and before the war of the Rebellion, associated myself with the church, hoping to find that jewel—love, I so long had sought. I did find something in these hearts, but so far different from what I expected; for to me it was cold and dark, not warm and bright; it was envy and hate, not fellowship and love.

My longing was for the reality of good and truth, not theory. I felt that people had gone to perdition on theory, and my prospect was not much brighter! For many years I wandered upon the shoals of despair, until it seemed to have wrecked my bark among fierce breakers; while wildly plunging for something to buoy me up, I unexpectedly found myself upon a rock, a sure foundation, a Gibraltar of Truth, Koreshan Science.

In 1886, I heard of a lecture given by a man on healing and other wonderful topics, on Washington Boulevard, Chicago. Eagerly I grasped at the prospect of physical relief from a severe affliction, not knowing the depth of the recipe the healer would hold out for my acceptance. At first opportunity I called upon the Doctor, and was surprised that he talked religion, not medicine; of manipulating and moulding the mind, not massaging the body. He said he wanted to cure my body for eternity, not for the grave. I must admit that I was dumbfounded by the interview, and could not gather myself to digest his statements and questions. He discovered that I was deeply religious, but ignorant and orthodoxal. After the interview, I remained and heard him lecture on the brain of man. I found a man of wisdom, an intellectual man that I believed knew what he was talking about! His assertions in our private conversation puzzled me, but when I coupled them with his lecture, I concluded that there was more than an ordinary mind in his System of Science, and that it was well worth my while to consider all I had heard. That night brought me no sleep; but the restless hours were spent in a careful analysis of the interview and the lecture. I had a battle with self and the errors absorbed from religious instruction in past life; but I soon gained the victory on the Concave Theory, and the triumph on that score led me to conclude to give the theological claims careful, calm, and unbiased consideration. My statements to my friends on the following day amazed them. I soon accepted the System of KORESH, and my friends were horrified at my assertions of faith in it, and many turned against me.

From the first week of my acquaintance with KORESH, I have lived on the concave surface of the universe. My mind became revolutionized; all that I had depended upon as truth, I saw to be fallacy! For twelve years now, I have given my entire religious and scientific thought to the Koreshan System; and today I am more firmly impressed than ever before, that it alone contains the jewel of truth and good. It measures the universe by the plumb-line of right; it compasses all the ends of the earth, knowing the layers thereof. It has the Sign of Jehovah, the Fore-runner of the new heavens and the new earth, the new dispensation of peace in earth and good will! By it we are merging into the imperial Theocratic kingdom, of which America will be the glorious national Head and Leader; yet by the fire of theocrasis only can we be cleansed, and the evil consumed.—J. H. D., Chicago.

Words of Welcome for the Cellular Cosmogony.

Koreshan Astronomy Interests Professors and Students.

I have disposed of the copies of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY you sent me for the professors and students of this place (Dixon, Ill.) I have placed one copy in the library, and gave one each to Prof. D. and Prof. H. I gave one copy to a student, who has accepted the astronomy. I sold one to a Chicago man, one to an ex-teacher, and one to Prof. P. an ex-principal. Prof. P. reported after reading Part 1; he claimed that KORESH had convinced him on the subject, as far as he went. H. will accept the Astronomy; the ex-teacher is converted, and the store-keeper is studying it. I called on Prof. D. today; too busy with examinations to read, but will do so. Prof. H. had taken time to read about 60 pages; cannot give an opinion yet. In talking to him, he admitted that convexity is only an assumption, but that triangulation was a successful method of demonstration. I forced him to admit the three assumptions used in triangulation as applied to celestial mathematics; he admitted the assumptions, and then I left him guessing. He is the finest geometrician here, and has just sent in 68 corrections on the book on geometry he uses in the schools. His opinion will have some weight, for he will find an error in your book if it exists; he promises a written opinion.—R. O. SPEAR.

Convinced of Accuracy of Koreshan Geodetic Work.

EDITOR SWORD:—Having read the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, I want to say that I do not see how any honest, intelligent person can read it without being convinced of the painstaking fairness of the Koreshan Geodetic Staff in the survey on the Florida coast, and other experiments noted therein. For Copernican advocates to deny the results of the observations and experiments recorded, without instituting as careful, publicly announced counter experiments, seems to me either down-right dishonesty or babyish idiocy. I will do what I can to circulate the book.—J. L. TRAUGHBER, Texas.

Excitement in San Diego, Cal.

Some of the people here are getting quite stirred up over the concavity of the earth; and say they are going down to the bay to prove it for themselves. I wish the Koreshan Geodetic Staff could come here. One man said that the earth might have been concave where the experiments were made. Koreshans must be pretty smart to be able to know just where they could find a concave contour on the water's surface eight inches to the mile on a convex earth! Two others said that it seemed natural that we were on the inside, as all life is within.—MRS. L. P. C.

Can be Understood by the Schoolboy.

DEAR EDITOR:—I saw in your paper, THE FLAMING SWORD, that you would send it for names. As I have no other way to pay for subscription, I would send you names for it. THE SWORD is the best scientific paper I ever read; I could not be without it. I am only fourteen years of age; I go to school every day, and study Harper's fifth reader, White's arithmetic, Eclectic geography, and Barnes' history. My brother Charles is a member of your community. I will send you 100 names now, and more later. My father is selling nursery stock, and obtains many names.—RALPH RABY, Ohio.

Some Pooh at It.

I accept your offer of a thousand circulars with my name on them as authorized agent. I think they will greatly assist me in selling the book. It has created quite an excitement in this city. I approach none but men of some visible means of support, men of intelligence. I informed some others who poohed at it, that twelve years ago they poohed at many inventions announced, and which afterwards became realities,—as wireless telegraphy, long distance telephoning, etc.—C. W. W., Akron, O.

I have read the CELLULAR COSMOGONY and find it to be a feast of good things. It is equivalent to a command to the most intelligent believers in the Copernican monstrosity to keep silent,—which I have no doubt will be implicitly obeyed by every one of them! Even conceited weaklings like Blodgett will be slow to raise their voices after reading the book.—M. H. Z., Lochthree, Ala.

The CELLULAR COSMOGONY stimulates the mind of every one reading it. No good, sound-minded man will do without it. I find that thinking people are wanting the book, and THE SWORD as well. I am happy when I can take up THE SWORD and study its columns, and find the true teaching for the purpose of elevating mankind.—W. H. W., Muscatine, Ia.

Chat With Readers.

The consensus of opinion is that the last issue of THE FLAMING SWORD was extraordinary. Perhaps this one is just as good; we anticipate the conclusion in advance. We are greatly encouraged in our work; a prosperous year is before us,—a year in which it will be easy for our readers to assist us in many ways. You are the circumference of our activity; we radiate the best thoughts of the world,—we print them for you. You cannot estimate the value of truth, for it is not to be measured by the mere pittance of subscription. During the present year, a great movement should spring up in our increasing and expanding circle of readers and friends,—a crusade against fallacy. You can be happiest only in giving to others what you enjoy. We labor unceasingly in the interests of Truth, because we enjoy it; it is our mission, and it should be yours. We want to do more for you; we have much to give, but the amount is measured by our opportunities and the receptivity of the people. The cities and towns of America should be searched for those who are hungering for the truths of life. How many can you find in your vicinity? There are surely others besides yourself. What is life to you may be to them also, did they but know that such a marvelous System is in the world!

THE FLAMING SWORD is a journal of general interest—it is a journal of Universology. It does not fill a niche, it covers the field of the thought of the world. It is a journal for the student of the world in any and all of its phases, from the consideration of the nature and structure of the atom to the form and function of the physical cosmos; from the mineral kingdom up to the highest anthropostic manifestation. Koreshan Science is the science of the entire universe and all its relations; it teaches the true theology, the nature of God and his relation to man, and sociology, or man's relation to man. THE SWORD is not filled with matter printed from patent plates; it is original, and its matter select.

The so called reform press is as changeable as the wind. Political and economic issues are adopted to be soon discarded for a new idea, until definite issues have run out, leaving the reform press in chaos. The purpose of THE FLAMING SWORD is definite; Koreshanity is a definite system. This journal is not an experiment, but a success—the success of ten years' progress; a banner of purity, of truth, of science, and persistently wages an effective warfare against modern corruptions. It is not scavenging the world for ideas—it has them; and we are not discarding old ones, for in the founding of the System, a clean sweep was made of all forms of fallacy. We are anchored on certainty.

Special Offer. If you send us $1.00 before January 15, for THE FLAMING SWORD, in renewal, or for new subscription, we will mail you at once one copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY free, and send THE SWORD for a year. Combine this offer with our club offers with the following magazines, and it will surprise you:

SWORD, book, and Frank Leslie's ($2.25) for $1.75.
SWORD, book, and Chautauquan ($2.25) for 1.75.
SWORD, book, and Cosmopolitan ($2.25) for 1.75.
SWORD, book, and Success ($2.75) for 2.00.

The brightest journal is the one that projects the light of Truth.

Success of the I. C. U.

The Addition of New Industries Necessitates More Co-operators; An Opening for Industrials.

The Industrial Co-operative Union of America, now operating on the West Side, Chicago, is meeting with marked success; beginning a few months ago with a grocery store, and now involving a number of industries where the principles of co-operation are applied. There are now in the co-operative business, under the management of Mr. W. R. Wallace, 630 West Lake street, Chicago: A grocery and produce store, on the basis of profit-sharing with co-operators and patrons; a bakery, a restaurant, a meat-market, a sausage factory, a broom factory, and a shoe manufactory, with all modern facilities for manufacturing the best shoes on the market.

We want Industrials in all these departments, especially now in the new industries more recently incorporated in the movement. We are building up a line of manufacturing, and the Industrial Union intends to retail directly to the consumer, obviating all middle jobbers and dealers. Here is a field for all industrious Koreshans, and others who find employment in the competitive world difficult to obtain. Hundreds of our people scattered abroad are engaged in industries for the corporations and oppressors of the world; the same labor utilized by the I. C. U. would give the Koreshan movement a most powerful impetus in the world, along the line of its basic practical features,—features that concern the well-being of every man and woman. It is an opportune time for our friends to cut loose from the competitive world and engage in the industrial work of the Cause which they have espoused as scientific in all its phases.

Constitution of the I. C. U.

The Guiding Star Publishing House is issuing the Constitution of the Industrial Co-operative Union of America, which gives full particulars of the purposes and methods of this branch of the Koreshan Bureau of Equitable Commerce. A number of our friends and readers have become interested in this work, and have applied to the General Manager, Mr. W. R. Wallace, 680 West Lake street, Chicago, for information concerning the movement. We will soon be able to satisfy all inquirers through the mailing of the Constitution: it will be sent as soon as ready, to all those who have written for particulars.

LIBRARY OF

Force and Matter; OR PRINCIPLES OF THE NATURAL ORDER OF THE UNIVERSE, with a System of Morality based thereon. By Prof. Ludwig Büchner, M. D. A scientific and rationalistic work of great merit and ability. Translated from the 15th German edition, revised and enlarged by the author, and reprinted from the fourth English edition. One volume, crown 8vo, 414 pp., with portrait. Extra silk cloth, $1.00; half calf, $3.00.

"Büchner's volume is so powerful an exposition of the thorough-going scientific theory of the universe that it may be confidently recommended to all who wish to become acquainted with present-day Materialism. The earlier chapters, dealing with the nature and indestructibility of force and matter, are sufficiently cogent to arouse curiosity, while the facts adduced to prove the affinity of matter are so bewildering any theistic hypothesis. The unbiased reader will sympathize with Büchner's protest against the degrading conceptions of matter which are so common, as well as against the inveterate habit of implying a severance which does not exist between matter and force, nature and spirit body and soul. Natural laws are everywhere the same, the properties of matter are everywhere alike; nowhere do we find evidence of outside government or intervention. After treating of the successive periods of the generation of the earth and the development of life, Büchner gives us a highly interesting chapter on teleology, in which the fitness of things in nature is explained from the point of view of science, while the latter half of the book is occupied with an examination of man; the various phenomena of mind, consciousness, and soul, and the probabilities of their continued existence after death, being analyzed in a very able and trenchant manner. The final chapter, on morality, treats the problem of human relations on the evolutionary lines which Mr. Spencer has rendered familiar."—The Literary Guide, London.

History of a False Religion (BULWER) and ORIGIN OF EVIL (BROUGHAM). Preface by Peter Eckler. Paper, 25c.; cloth, 50c.

Fawcett's Agnosticism, AND OTHER ESSAYS, with a Prologue by Robert G. Ingersoll. One volume, 12mo, 277 pp. Cloth, 75c.

"Between the Christian and the Agnostic there is the difference of assertion and question: 'There is a God' and 'Is there a God?' The Agnostic has the arrogance to admit his ignorance, while the Christian from the depths of humility impudently insists that he knows."

"A few centuries ago the priests said to their followers: The other world is above you; it is just beyond where you see. Afterwards the astronomer with his telescope looked and asked the priests: Where is the world of which you speak? And the priests replied: It has receded—it is just beyond where you see."

"As long as there is 'a beyond' there is room for the priests' world. Theology is the geography of this beyond."—Extract from Ingersoll's Prologue to the above work.

Faith or Fact. By Henry M. Taber With Preface by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. Crown 8vo, extra silk cloth, gilt top, 347 pages. Price, $1.00.

The author of Faith or Fact has drawn a life-like picture of modern Christianity; and has shown from the admissions of Christian writers, and from the testimony of Christian ministers, what are the real aims, desires, and tendencies of the Christian church. His work, which is indeed an arsenal of Faith, is a most effective antidote to unreasoning Faith. It richly deserves the support of all intelligent liberals, and should be in the hands of every honest inquirer.

"I have read this book with great pleasure," says Robert G. Ingersoll, "because it is full of good sense, of accurate statement, of sound logic, of excited thoughts happily expressed, and for the further reason that it is against tyranny, superstition, bigotry, and every form of injustice, and in favor of every virtue."

Father Tom and the Pope; OR, A NIGHT AT THE VATICAN. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicking visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a super-abundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "putteen," and an Irish recipe "for conchoung the same." "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the sperits first," says his Riv'rence; "and then put in the sugar; and remember, every drop of wather you put in after that, spoils the punch." "Glory be to God!" says the Pope, not minding a word Father Tom was saying. "Glory be to God!" says he, smacking his lips. "I never knewn what drink was afore," says he. "It bates the Lachymal-chrysal out of the face!" says he—"it's Necthar itself, it is, so it is!" says he, wiping his epistoli cal mouth wid the cuff ov his coat. Paper, 25c.; cloth, 50c.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell, we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double page plates. Over 200 pages. The Science of Mental Therapeutics.

Part III.

The Science of the Generation and Projection of Physical and Mental Energies; Exoteric Radiation and Esoteric Reflex; Contrast of Divine Dynamis and Hypnotism.

IT WILL be noticed that in the vibration of the second string, it has come in contact with no perceptibly tangible substance; whatsoever force excites it to action is projected from the impulse communicated to the first string, the motion of which is the result of visible material contact. This result is not produced by the vibration of the atmosphere. The science of the projected vibration can be explained in few words. The friction of the atoms of oxygen and nitrogen composing the atmosphere reduces those atoms to energy, so that they no longer exist as material substance. When they are destroyed as material substance, they become the substance of energy. This energy is of such a specific character, that it possesses distinctive powers from either light or heat. It is specifically sound energy. It not only has the power to oscillate the string, but in addition to this, to vibrate the tympanum of the ear. It does not affect the retina, nor communicate the sensation of heat to the physiological sense of feeling. It is a distinct energy, and as such, is a distinct substance.

If we were writing in the parlance of the theosophist or the advocates of the "objective" and "subjective mind" theory, we might be tempted to remark that the strings possessed dual characteristics, or that they had souls capable of independent existence, as some internal thing not visible left the first string and passed to the second and produced unaccountable physico-psychic phenomena;—for we saw the second string vibrate and heard the sound of the vibration, and know that there was no possibility of any conscious external and material impulse. How is it that a material thing can be moved at so great a distance from the cause of the motion, without any material connecting medium? How shall we account for this great mystery? says the empirical investigator of the psychic science.

The string has a soul; that soul is the result of its activity, and that soul reaches out from the vortex of its energy, projecting its radiations to the limitations of its force. If we institute a correspondential analysis of this law, we may discover the secret of psychic phenomena upon the basis of a much more consistent and rational hypothesis than any presented by the advocates of the common mental theories. Every cellule of the brain is an elaborator of energy, the force of which is a thousand times more subtle and potent than that generated by the vibration of the violin string or the tuning-fork. Not only does every cell generate an essence which passes toward and supplies with nutrition the organs of the body, but it generates electric and magnetic energies which contribute to the electric and magnetic action of the organ, while at the same time and by the same action, it evolves the energies of mental force.

As the alchemic action which unites the oxygen and hydrogen in the precipitation of water also generates the energies of light and heat, electricity and magnetism, so the action of a cerebral center in performing that function which elaborates an essence with which to supply the organs of the body, at the same time and by the same process elaborates the exoteric and esoteric mental energies, the outer currents of which are communicable through the external expression, and the inner or subjective currents transmissible by the more subtle mediums and channels of communication. As illustrative of this law in a more specific application of the principle, suppose we take that group of cortical cells situated just in front of the ear,—the seat of the mental desire for food and drink, the center for alimentation. It is primarily a mental function, but while it is a mental organ, it is the pivot of that cerebral activity which controls the alimentary tract. It is the hub of the inferior convolution or gyrus of the frontal lobe of the cerebrum; a gyrus divided into as many centers as there are divisions of the digestive or alimentary canal. This gyrus or convolution embraces the organs of individuality, form, size, weight, color, order, and number; those on the right side of the head constituting the affections or desires of the functions, and those on the left, the science of the functions.

Now, if we consider one distinctive group of cells, or one organ of the mind, say for instance the organ of order, we deal with the center which presides over the physical functions of the colon of the alimentary canal, a physical portion of the tract of alimentation which is in direct communication, through the inferior mesenteric vein, with the lobus quadratus of the liver. The organ in question is a physical organ in one direction, but a mental organ in another.

The laws of vibration governing the action of the violin string or the tuning-fork, are correspondentially the same in the mental tensions to which the mind may control and shape its organs, and through it their functions. If we may locate any given center of the brain, comprehend its functions, and associate in our knowledge its physiological relations, we possess the mental key to the channel of connection between the organ of the brain and its corresponding organ of the body; but if we possess not this key, our knowledge is speculative and uncertain, and our practice that of the empiric—the quack.

The Three Schools of Hypnotists.

There seems to be three distinct schools of hypnotism noticed by Hudson:

The Mesmerists hold to the fluidic theory of Mesmer. * * * The theory of the Nancy school is, that the different physiological conditions characterizing the hypnotic state are determined by mental action alone; that the phenomena can best be produced in persons of sound physical health and perfect mental balance, and that this mental action and the consequent physical and psychological phenomena are the result, in all cases, of some form of suggestion. The Paris school holds that hypnotism is the result of an abnormal or diseased condition of the nerves; that a great number of the phenomena can be produced independently of suggestion in any form.

"The Mesmerists hold that * * * the hypnotic condition is induced, independent of suggestion, by passes made by the operator over the subject," and that the concentration of the will of the subject is an essential factor in the production of the phenomena. According to Hudson's theory, the whole subject of psychic phenomena is summed up in the one word belief. He says:

When, therefore, Jesus proclaimed the law that belief was a condition precedent to immortal life, he formulated a scientific proposition then new to the world, and at the same time proclaimed himself master of the science of the soul.

When the hypnotic mountebank places the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, on the common footing of the hypnotist, and ascribes his powers of physical and spiritual restoration to anything in common with the hypnotic force as believed in and practiced by the charlatans of today, whose only incentive to heal the sick is the money there is in it, he is reducing—in his own estimation—the Godhead to a very degraded moral standard.

Psychology, or the Science of the Soul.

The term psychology is from psyche, soul; and logos, word or discourse,—a word on the soul. Jesus himself was the Word. There were two broad phases of his powers to impress himself upon his disciples. The first was while he was among them; the second and greater, was after his absence, through his theocrasis. Neither of these powers was similar to the operations now variously named Mesmerism, psychology, faith cure, hypnotism, and "christian" or mental science. He was distinctly the Holy One of God. His power to lay down his life and take it up again demonstrated this. This he manifested in his own resurrection, and subsequently in his power to dissolve his body and convert it to that which has been recognized as the Holy Ghost or Spirit, and which, subsequent to his theocrasis, was shed upon thousands of his followers.

Jesus said: "I perceive that virtue [dunamis] is gone out of me." What was the source of this virtue? It was the result of his own immaculate life, the great potential power of which was manifest when the Logos himself, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, rested upon and entered into the soul of his people; when the soul of the Godhood made conjunction with the soul of sinful humanity. Will the modern hypnotist, putting the mind to sleep (for this is what the term hypnotism signifies), pretend to assure us that this is identical with the awakening of the dead? The power of the Christ was the power of the resurrection. "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light," is quite distinct in character from, "Go to sleep under the hypnotic power of some empiric, and you shall be made alive!"

The Metropolitan Center of the New Civilization.

"Behold, I Make all Things New."

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE VERY word new gives a sense of refreshment to the mind weary and heavy laden. The effete civilizations of today, reeking with corruption and maintained by institutions that are the macrocosms of the "whited sepulchres," denounced by Jehovah as "full of dead mens bones and all uncleanness," need to be swept out of existence by the force of a universal cataclysm. It would seem that nothing short of the birth throes of a universe pregnant with the sons of Jove, each one full armed with the thunderbolts of his divine vengeance, would be sufficient to awaken this present evil world, this final hades of mortality, to the real nature of the so called civilization of which it boasts.

Viewed by the light of that eternal commentary on the nature of sin,—the science of the law,—the civilization of today lacks one redeeming feature. It serves just one essential purpose perfectly,—that of being a background so dense in its blackness, that it enhances the gleaming whiteness of the purity and the glory of the true civilization that shall be.

All forms of present civilization lack primarily the scientific application of a single righteous basic principle. They are like the viduals who formulate them,—conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity, children of their father the devil, nourished by their mother satan. The tap-root of all their evils is that dominant passion of passions, the love of money. The new civilization will be ushered in by the annihilation of that love, through the destruction of the necessity for the use of its object, money. That octopus of the money power, the trust system, will finally so clutch at the vitals of the people that they will turn with hatred from it, and leave it to its own destruction by its own inherent enemies.

A voice is destined to be heard in all lands, saying: "Behold I make all things new." "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." A cry is destined to go forth and reach the people of the Most High, bidding them escape out of Babylon, that they be not partakers of her sins, nor visited with her plagues. This Voice of one crying in this wilderness of sin, this forerunner of the Jehovah, to be revealed in the majesty of imperial glory, is the voice of true science, the science of truth. This Voice, this Messenger, this anointed one, is destined to lay the foundation of the new civilization, and to build its central city. He will operate in and through and by the living stones of His living temple, the redeemed from among men, to fill the whole earth with the Magnificat of its glory.

The final ushering in of the new civilization will be with cataclysms—physical and spiritual—so marvelous, so overwhelming, that only the divinely wise can understand their origin. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, with them that call upon his name. Already, a few have been found receptive to wisdom and understanding, that his name may be declared and his revelations heralded.

While the present evil world is absorbed in maintaining its abominations, its leprous social system, its adulterous church, and its industrial sausage factories for grinding the poor, one Man treads the wine-press of the wrath of God alone. He it is who scientifically proclaims the day of doom to all that's old; he it is who heralds the descent of the New Jerusalem from God out of heaven, adorned as a bride to meet her husband,—the Spirit of Jehovah, the progressive spirit of the race—ascending to receive her.

It is written that, primarily, the kingdom cometh without observation; that primarily the King himself comes as a thief in the night. When he comes, he comes with the faith of the Son of God, that faith by which his race is saved; he comes with the hope that maketh not ashamed; the hope that the glory of God shall fill the whole earth; he comes with love divine, all other loves excelling, the love of the science of truth, light and guide of Jehovah. "Behold the king cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass." He comes, the sole representative of the power of God unto salvation; the cross of Jehovah with the mortal human, supremely the "man of sin," our burden bearer.

This involves a universal kingdom, to be expressed by a city whose builder and maker is God. This city is the New Jerusalem, the true daughter of Zion. This new city will find fitting expression in every plane of existence, primarily geographically, on the surface of our mother earth. This earth is said to be God's footstool. By the agency of his physical manhood, God's feet tread the earth; with the plumb-line of the mason, God's hand determines its form and its boundaries. With the square and compass of the Master Builder, in the hand of man, God squares the circle and plans the city of the great King.

With the wisdom of the Ancient of Days, he reads in the stars the destinies of nations, and for one—a holy nation, a peculiar people, the whole house of Israel—he casts a horoscope befitting the heirs of the universe. He locates the centrality of their future national power, and finds Eden, the new East, the point of sunrise, in the West of a past dispensation toward which the empire of the Gods wended its way in the days when earth was made young with the youth of Jehovah. This is no poetic dreaming; cold Science, with the flaming sword of divine truth in her hand, has rent the veil of the mystery of human destiny, and quietly, firmly, persistently, tells the world the simple truth concerning the past, the present, and the future, and concisely and plainly, as a table of weights and measures, does she present her potent facts and define their details.

Science has led the Messenger of the Most High to the exact location of the New Jerusalem, the earthly pediment of the heavenly descent. The world unconsciously awaiting the transformation of the new respiration to be given it by the breath of a new-born Deity, has seemed to sense the call of Abraham, and is impulsed toward the future sphere of perpetual day. It centers its thoughts, as never before, upon Cuba and Florida, and the isles of the southern seas which lie within the zone of radiance that will crown the Golden Age. The central city of the new civilization has been located, by the unerring indications of true science, on the west coast of Florida. As an act of faith in the prescience of its prophet, Koreshanity has unfurled its standard on the spot to which he was led by the Divinity that shapes the destinies of men and of nations. This standard bears upon its foundation of white, the colors of Joseph, in lines formulating the plan of that city to be built as the Guiding Star and Central Sun of all future civilization. The diagram of plan reveals the central nucleus of a series of geometric harmonies that will command the admiration of master builders for ages.

This sun city of divine science will be the Zion of the future, from which the knowledge of the law shall go forth to all the confines of earth. In this city, the temple of the Grand Man in God's image and likeness, will find typical expression as a legacy to mortals, in a temple of precious stones so rarely combined to reveal the beauty of holiness, that the temple of Solomon will be reckoned but the far away foreshadowing of a dim perception. In this city, the new commandment—that ye love one another, will be obeyed in the noblest, broadest applications of the fulness of its meaning. In this city, equitable commerce will find its motory center, in the heart of the divine Motherhood of Jehovah, revealed. Merchants will traverse the seas in ships that will be winged messengers of peace in earth, and God's good will to men. They will fly, energized by the most subtle and potent forces of nature, to meet the human needs in every land laden with every comfort and luxury of life, to be distributed without money and without price.

To this city will all eyes turn in far away lands, with longing; with "windows open toward Jerusalem" will all knees bend in prayer, that her peace may never be disturbed, who has spoken peace to all the world. To this city will the aspirants for the wisdom of the Gods be led, for Minerva, there regnant, will turn the stars in their courses and unite them to the sun. To this city, the vintellus of the divine expression of all arts, all sciences, all uses, will souls hungering for the beautiful, the true, the kind, turn as to the bosom of their Mother God, to rest and be nourished.

We would that we could command a voice so penetrating in quality as to compel the dullest ear to hear this call of God, this Elohist prescience of Koreshanity; or pen trenchant enough to open the blind eyes of torpid minds to the handwriting upon the walls of the universe, proclaiming the destruction of the world that now is. We would that we had an arm strong enough to carry all the weary and heavy laden out of the old into the new civilization, which the supreme heroism of the Koreshan movement is preparing to make life glorious for ages to come.

Unreasoning Zeal for Human Liberty.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

IT WAS the eve of the New Year. The solemn stars were shining in the wintry night. I found myself alone upon the summit of a lofty mountain that rose, solitary, in the midst of a wide plain. The air was vocal with a thousand cries ascending from the earth that lay dimly stretched below, and as I listened I understood that these dreary sounds were the voices of the suffering throughout the whole world, calling upon God to let the New Year end their anguish. I heard the groans of the broken-hearted mingled with the piteous pleading of little children. There was one strain of agony from those whom death had robbed of their loved ones, and another from the host of those afflicted with grievous and manifold diseases. The sobs of the weary and oppressed rose in unison with the wail of the hungry. Scarce could the heavy air convey the mournful sounds, and as I listened to the mighty plaint, my heart cried out, "O God, is there not one note of happiness in all this swelling chorus of pain?"

Low in my breast, a voice replied, "not one."

Weeping, I flung myself face down upon the rocky height, begging the merciful to banish sorrow ere the dawning light of a new year should flood the world.

"Man is not ready for the boon," the same low voice replied, "but at thy wish 'tis granted. See to it. Thine the awful risk."

"Gladly I take it!" swelled my heart in praise.

Then a strange, new thing befell the earth. With the shadows of the night, its sorrows fled away, yea, carking care, the vampire pain, disease with its foul train, and last of all the giant spectre death itself, veiled his grim face and turning, sped. When the sun arose, it seemed new splendor in his beams proclaimed "the world is free"! Man rejoiced, glad, strong, and full of hope. No wasting sickness to devour his strength, no haunting fear of death to blanch his cheek, no pale hand laid upon his shoulder as he quits the feast, no baleful whisper telling him his days are numbered ere he taste their sweetness. My heart exulting, leaped.

"This joy," I murmured, "at my wish awakens."

"Wait but a year, till time shall prove thy work," the voice commanded.

So it chanced that when the year had sped, I stood again upon the mount, and once again that strain of anguish rose, the mighty heart-throb of a world in travail. Myriad voices praying for surcease of sorrow mingled in sad plaint. Where the joy, the freedom, all the gifts of my desire translated by kind heaven to reality? None the less did sorrow reign, and death with kindred woes. Perplexed, amazed, I questioned in my heart, seeking in vain to understand the swift return of banished ills.

"If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God." Enlightenment I craved, and found it through the inner voice whose accents speak peace to my troubled soul.

"Know, foolish one, thy zeal unthinking, touched but the outer circumstance of mortal state, extended not to change man's nature. In his heart the germs of evil lie whence issue death, disease, and every lesser ill. Twofold his nature; from above kinship he claims with the Divine, but Ah! the roots of the great tree Igdrasil strike deep to the nethermost hell. Now the wheat and tares grow side by side in the heart soil, until the fires of pure love, unquenchable, destroy the evil germs. What avail to pray that suffering cease, since being the effect, its cause remains? So long as man clings to his lower self, not the All-Merciful himself can check recurring pain. Freed from his ills today, tomorrow he will generate fresh evils springing from his wayward will. Pray, then, that man be changed. Pray that the covenant of life may be fulfilled and man, transformed, bearing no more the image of the earthly, may be filled with heavenly love that breeds no sorrow."

With bowed head I owned my folly, recognized how fruitless was the zeal that, lacking wisdom, wrought so far amiss. In humility I prayed, and while the mournful chorus still assailed my ear, took glad assurance that a Messenger had come preaching the Covenant of Life fulfilled in his appearing.

Signaling the Hour of the Coming Catastrophe.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

The single gold standard is the great question for the Shylock who holds bonds by the billions, worthless as the means to oppress the people except as paid in gold. The safest man to trust with the single standard purpose of Wall and Lombard Streets is the man for the occasion. The time is not fully ripe for the catastrophe. The single standard idea will be firmly fixed and seated on the throne of the world before the crisis matures. Then and not until then is the signal of the cataclysm; then it will be the pound of flesh for Shylock,—but not one drop of blood.

Gold will reach its apparent and final victory. Its triumph will be the signal for the culmination of the crisis, then will come the end. Selah.—KORESH, in THE FLAMING SWORD.

CUBAN finances—under the strain of two valuations for the same piece of money—show the truthfulness of KORESH in asserting that the valuation of coin lies in the stamp thereon, rather than in the value of the metal. The Spaniards had inflated the value of their standard coins, says the journalist, but he does not add that every country under the sun has done the same thing. But every country has not faced a vicissitude that makes a gold coin of a stated weight satisfy an old contract of $5.30, while the recipient must pass the same coin at a valuation of $4.82. The writer naively remarks that if the United States coin is used in the settlement of debts it will have two values also, to correspond with the distinction made in the Spanish money.

The method that governs the use of an American coin in Cuba, is more frank and outspoken than obtains at home. Here we are not put in possession of the fact that a gold piece will depreciate on our hands. With us money is dear today and cheap in the coming time with out warning. Under the existing conditions, the Cuban's ability to know of the depreciation certain, does him no good, unless, indeed—a contingency altogether unlikely—he be thus able to read the true nature of money and become minded to assist in its abolition. It is quite safe to assert that not one inhabitant of the fair "Queen of the Antilles" will harvest any additional knowledge, or form any noteworthy resolutions from the double dealing.

That money is capable of inflation and depression in service of the interests of those who command the mass of it, and who by so commanding add to the hoard of it, is just foundation for its banishment; that it is a perfected weapon in the hands of the driver of the wage slave, the prime means which enables the rich to become richer to the proportionate deprivation of the poorer, is just basis of its death sentence.

On the theme of the Cuban money tangle, Commissioner Porter skims the surface with swallow-like lightness in the expressed opinion that this process by which the existing stress is tided over, is an artificial and arbitrary one which can only be justified by the peculiar conditions. Said "peculiar conditions" are a lamentable effect of an adequate cause—the existence of money. Commissioner Porter adds that steps toward disinflation in Cuba must be taken slowly to prevent a serious financial disturbance.

It is poor policy in the apologists of the world's money system, to admit the possibility of financial disturbance through the handling of money; but here is the admission, and we are justified in concluding that Cuba will suffer a financial crash or not, just according to the interests of those capable of precipitating or averting such calamity.

The coming era is woman's. Now, near the close of the old era, a woman is jeered for proclaiming that the silver question is dead. It is not dead because a woman—Mrs. Lease—proclaims it, but because it is to the interest of the gold combination that it be so; it is because the gold combination—the more powerful twin thief—has throttled its brother.

The death of the silver question will tighten the thumbscrews upon that portion of humanity in the capitalistic pillory, and hasten a fearful day of reckoning.

It will scatter to the four winds an upper class structured upon the "mud sills" of humanity. It will unclinch the hard, cruel fingers that have tightened upon and lacerated the beating heart of commerce. It will expose that fabrication of the evil one—the brotherhood of man pretendedly existent in a sensual humanity!

EDUCATIONAL institutions all over the civilized world are becoming alarmed over the prospect of a general astronomical and geographical revolution, growing out of geodetic operations which have been in progress for the past twenty-five years, and but recently completed. For a long time the astronomers have considered the earth round like an orange, slightly flattened at the poles; they have calculated the difference of the equatorial and polar diameters to be twenty-six miles and some feet. The terminology of the orange earth is familiar to all school children, and it would be a pity to have these exact figures and popular impressions disturbed, and the school-books rendered useless! The results of the latest survey seem to indicate to the modern geodesist (who begins with an assumption), that the earth is tetrahedral,—bounded by four triangular surfaces and shaped something like an irregular spinning top. Dr. Gregory and others are creating sensations in all geographical and astronomical circles, and a revision of all modern astronomical hypotheses is admitted. In case the tetrahedral earth becomes the prevailing idea, all previous popular conclusions concerning cosmogony and astronomy will be destroyed. It will demolish the nebular hypothesis in the popular mind, the theory of Newton, with its convenient gravitation ever present to explain all phenomena; the idea that the form of the earth is analogous to a drop of liquid and the planets; it will render useless the "proofs" of the pendulum, the theories of the earth's rotation, and throw the precession of the equinoxes into a darker realm of mystery, and wipe the round shadow from the surface of the moon in eclipse! Men have been thoroughly satisfied with the assumption that the earth is round and convex, before the geography of the earth was known, and long before any proofs were attempted. After such a lapse of time since the idea originated without proof, to have new facts throw the whole thing into such apparent contradiction and uncertainty will only pave the way for the true solution. There is no true solution outside of the Cellular Cosmogony; and a greater alarm and a more stupendous scientific revolution is to confront the observatories and schoolboards than that rising out of the myth of the tetrahedron!

An exchange wants to know why the Bible never speaks of the printing press, the circulation of the blood, electric lights, steam engines, and the typewriter. A child looks at the multiplication table and asks, why doesn't that table say something that I can understand? The Bible was written as it is, to keep the agnostics from thinking it was inspired; it would never do in the world to have an agnostic champion the Bible, for the Bible is a book of knowledge, while the agnostic, according to the meaning of the word, is a know-nothing. Suppose a man a hundred years ago had described all the modern inventions; the people would have thought he was insane. Why, Koreshans cannot describe the civilization of the twentieth century, its inventions and progress, without being called fools! Take for instance, Newton foretelling the railroad train traveling fifty miles an hour, and Voltaire, the great apostle of agnosticism, laughing at him! If the Bible contained a complete description of all these things in language that could be comprehended by the world at large, there would be nothing left for the modern mind to originate and pervert in use in favor of the millionaire; such inventions described in the Bible would have rendered them ridiculous to the modern agnostic, and he could not boast of modern civilization! In the language of scientific symbolism, the Bible does contain all these things,—the science of progress of the nineteenth century, as well as for all ages of the past and future; but it requires a Gnostic to read it!

THE FLAMING SWORD is continually giving its readers new and brilliant points of information concerning the science of man and cosmos; every page of this Journal is strikingly original. You can find rational and logical conclusions from beginning to end, from week to week, and withal, the correct interpretation of current events, and their bearing on the world's future. THE FLAMING SWORD correctly diagnoses the world's diseases, casts its true horoscope, and arranges its stars for future success and progress. The world is feeling the strength of Koreshan mental force as never before; the vibrations are sweeping wider fields of humanity, changing, with every wave, the mental character of the modern world in all phases of beliefs and conclusions. Its mental rays are being reflected everywhere, and new inventions, new theories, new projects, springing up all over the world, are directly traceable to the thousands of suggestions from the Koreshan center. 1870 was the year of the founding of the Koreshan System; that year marks the beginning of a remarkable mental acceleration and activity in all spheres of thought. The battle of truth and fallacy began then; the positive mental pole is active, and the negative antithesis are correspondingly vigorous.

Ever since the decline of the church in the early centuries, theologians have found the Fatherhood of God and the sonship of Jesus, the Christ to be an inexplicable mystery. The so called early fathers of the church were unable to solve the problem; discussions and dissensions concerning the subject have been numerous. In the most popular churches of the present time, discussions have ceased altogether; the subject darkens with every attempt of ignorance to discuss it, and they have decided to leave it alone, and be charitable! But in the small sects there is much still said. The Adventists take it up occasionally; they are divided as to whether Jesus lived before he appeared nineteen hundred years ago. Why, of course he lived, and lived billions of ages before, just as wheat has always lived, just as humanity has always lived. Theology is as simple in its fundamentals as the functions of a planted seed. The seed is the son of a previous planted seed, and the father of the coming crop, and by virtue of its function of self-perpetuation, is the mother also. Jesus was the Father, Mother, and Son in one, Jehovah, God Almighty in his most potent and causative form of manifestation, the man Jesus, the head of all things, the Creator of the universe.

The strength of the demonstrations of the Koreshan System in the mind of the investigator, depends entirely upon the character of that mind. The perception of evidence is an intellectual process; there can be no proof apart from mind. There are some minds in the world that can grasp the System from consideration of the laws of analogy and their application to the most commonplace facts; there are thousands of logical proofs from other premises than mechanical surveys. The mechanical demonstrations of the Koreshan System are the most external forms of evidence, but they are by no means more forceful than the thousands of evidences observable in all parts of the world, in all lines of human thought. To the mathematical mind, there needs to be no demonstration of the multiplication table; but to the child, the demonstration of its correctness is often a tedious process by the most external means. But even with external demonstrations, unless the mind is exercised to the extent of comprehension of the simplest principles of geometry and mechanics, they remain powerless. Some time soon, the modern world will blush to think of its ignorance and indifference to the discovery of truth, which has stirred the hearts of men in all ages of light!

The science of form and function is the science of cellular life. There is no life outside of form; and every form that is a container of life is cellular. Every structured unit is a cell; every organic structure is a cell, from the animalcule to the great cosmic form in which we live. There is no exception to this law. If the universe exists, it exists as a unit; an organic structure, having center and circumference. The very fact that it is a unit, forces the rational conclusion that it is cellular. This is the foundation of the entire Koreshan System, a fundamental premise so thoroughly demonstrated in the most commonplace expressions of the inherent laws of perpetuity, in every feature of existence of everything that we are able to observe, as to be absolutely impregnable. The discovery of the laws of cellular activity constitutes the greatest discovery in all the history of the world. Carried into all its ramifications, there can be no greater revelation in heaven or in earth, because it is the revelation of all mystery.

Flammarion, the great French astronomer, predicts that the universe, which has existed from all eternity to the present time without serious interruption of its existence, will sometime shut down its extensive electric light plant, and thus blot out the sun; and that the result, as manifest to the astronomers on millions of worlds in infinite space, will be the mere record of a variable star, finally disappearing altogether. As the sun dies out, the animals and men on the earth will crowd to take up homesteads on the equator until they crush each other; then the Almighty will attend the funeral of the planets. Flammarion makes a true prediction, only he is mistaken in the kinds of worlds that are going to pieces. He sees the failing of the central sun of fallacy, the waning of the influence of Copernicus and the dependent human planets and stars in the astronomical world which have revolved around him. The Almighty will attend the funeral of the Copernican solar system!

Hall Caine is an observer of human nature; he is an artist in portraying human character upon the literary page. He finds mankind much the same the world over. If he takes the smallest group of humanity and represents it faithfully and fully, he has spoken for all the race. The human heart is the same everywhere; the Japs differ from the Chinese only in color. If the observer strolls through New York and sees the poor and the homeless, he can imagine himself in London, or in the poorer districts of Paris or of Rome. The tragedy of human life and the problems of human misery are the same wherever witnessed. He fails to find a universal brotherhood, but everywhere a hell of humanity, full of the same corruption, ruled by the same passions, guided by the same evil genii. Everywhere, it is the same story of oppression and tyranny and misrule by the few, and the consequent suffering and slavery of the many.

"If the people require leaders, it is a self-evident fact that they are not competent to choose them." It is a fact that the people of the world need a leader, and need him badly; it is also a fact that they are not competent to choose or recognize him. Jesus was a leader of humanity; he did not ask the people to choose him—he forced himself upon the world, and passed down through the age leading a host through the avenues necessary for their development. They would never have chosen him—never would have chosen the route of persecution, but he nevertheless led them there. The forces that fix the destiny of humanity are never voluntarily chosen by the multitudes. The people do choose their leaders— theological, scientific, and political—leaders in fallacy. They are not competent to choose the man who will lead the world into the truth!

We often hear the objection against the Koreshan Geodetic Survey, that the "air line" at the initial section was so inclined as to extend the rectiline into the water at the proper distance. We started 10 feet and 8 inches above the water, and extended the line into the water in four miles; the rectiline as the chord of arc, converged with the arc at a distinct angle. Suppose instead of starting as we did, we had begun at an altitude of 4 feet and 8 inches, and inclined the first section of 12 feet at an angle of about .11 of an inch; the line would extend into the water in about seven miles, and relate itself to the arc of 8 miles concavity according to the ratio demonstrated in our survey. We can start the line and run upward, and strike the surface!

Dun and Bradstreet, the two great American commercial reporters, declare that a period of prosperity is upon us. The volume of business for 1898 was greater by far than any previous year in the history of America, and the present year begins with signs of promise. Of course, they feel the pulse of the money concerns; the prosperity is confined to the class of men who are becoming more and more skilful in manipulating the wealth produced by the millions of slaves. It is not a sign of prosperity for those who labor; it is a sign that the avenues and channels of commercial activities which lead to the vaults of the millionaire, are less obstructed than ever before. McKinley promised this, and has fulfilled his promise!

The modern church loses its reputation for morality when the statistics of the prisons and criminal dockets of the civilized world are examined. Out of 1,348 convicts in the Joliet (Ill.) penitentiary, 756 are Protestants, 508 are Catholics, while only 15 are Jews; one is a Buddhist, and 68 are of no religious belief. Does not this properly represent the moral status of the modern church in contrast with those outside her folds? If so, why has the church demoralized her members to this extent? If not, why is not the greater percentage of the nonchurch people represented on the prison records?

What the cause of truth needs, is staunch characters who will march against fallacy as valiantly as the American soldier marched against the Spaniard! We have the cause of human liberty in its truest and highest sense at stake; and Koreshanity needs fiber and cell, vim and vitality, through which to operate and express itself as a power in the world. It needs thousands of the courageous and daring who will be true to principle, and who will sacrifice as much for it as others have sacrificed for country. Can you be one of them?

In the great civilization of Babylon, the idea was entertained that the earth was concave; it was taught in the Noatic civilization of Egypt, and found its way into the Hebrew Scriptures—there expressed in the highest possible form of expression, in the language of symbology. The hundreds of references to geological, astronomical, and anthropological science cannot be explained from any other standpoint than the Cellular Cosmogony.

The various phases of modern reform are but so many different colored patches on the worn-out garments of the Christian dispensation. What a grotesque world this would be, should it conclude to wear its old garments for another season of the great cyclic year. Tear off the patches! Discard the clothing of the old dispensation, and dress the religious, scientific, and economic world in entirely new styles!

The astronomical world was once wrought up over the moon hoax; and now comes the "electric eye" of Prof. Coles, a Pennsylvania weather prophet, with a power of 40,000 diameters, with which he has taken photographs of men, trees, and landscapes on Mars. It is promised that it will startle the world whenever the Lick observatory gets ready to commit itself on Martian affairs!

The remarkable growth of the Anglo-Saxon peoples in 500 years, is summed up in the following contrast: In the fifteenth century they numbered about 4,000,000, and occupied 125,000 square miles of territory; today, they number about 475,000,000, and occupy over 15,000,000 square miles,—a gain of over one hundredfold in population and territory.

Even republicans do not act as though all men were created free and equal. Either they are not equal or their rights are not recognized. There is a shade of difference—mentally, socially, and financially—between the unprosperous tramp and the prosperous McKinley; the American nation has one head, but many toes!

Koreshanity reads the language of nature written in the forms which exist, the language and laws of cause expressed in effect. The records of life are tangible, and what is written there is infallible, the product of the operation of immutable law.

Anarchy wants every man to have the privilege of doing as he pleases. That is the trouble with the world now; the millionaires have everything their own way, and their liberty is the world's oppression.

It is as impossible to reach correct or logical conclusions without a premise, as it is to make intricate mathematical calculations without a knowledge of the relations of numbers.

There is a warmth of love that is lacking in the modern world. For the neighbor, every man is zero, away below the freezing point; his temperature indicates his value also!

"Christian science" is not positive, but entirely negative; it is founded on denials of things that exist, and affirmations of conditions which have no reality.

Bellamy's idea was, that better conditions of society would make better men; the Koreshan idea is, that it will require ideal men to make the ideal society.

The oppressors of humanity will never be permitted to cross the bloody river of revolution, to monopolize the business of the New Age.

Agnostics who are so anxious to have the existence of God proved to them, never think to ask for proof of modern astronomy.

There is a striking likeness between the church organ and the clergyman; they are both full of wind.

The smoke of battle has cleared away, and reveals the corruption of America as well as of Spain.

In the race for money the millionaire comes out a-head; the others remain at the foot.

Prophecy is the mental Zodiacal light preceding the rising of the anthropostic Sun.

The spur of competition is more severe and cruel than the whip of negro slavery.

The church members are bad eggs, but sing of hatching out with wings!

Every man is not a king who can put his hand on the crown of his head.

Man's conduct reveals that which he endeavors to hide by silence.

Why Christianity Does Not Capture the World.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—What is wrong with the Christian religion? Only think of it! As this is only the 1316th year of the Mohammedan era, Mohammed must have been born some 583 years after Christ; then, as to time, the Christian church has some 583 years the advantage of the Mohammedans—quite a considerable advantage. Yet it is said that there are not only more Mohammedans in the world today than Christians, but that there are more converts to Mohammedanism every year than to Christianity.

Now, with all the advantages of the Christian church over the Mohammedan religion, not only as to time, but in civilization, wealth, learning, printing, rapid transit, postal facilities, etc., why is it thus? It has been fifty years since spiritualism sprang up at Hydesville, N. Y.; yet it is said that there are more spiritualists in the world today than there were Christians 500 years after Christ.

It is now nearly 2,000 years since the Christian church was established; and with all the learning and wealth of the civilized world backing it, it is supposable that in this long period of years it would have planted the seeds of Christianity in every home in the world; yet when we look over the map of the world, only a very small portion of it has been Christianized. Why is this? There is certainly something wrong somewhere in the Christian church. Is it possible that the seed sown by the laborers was bad, and would not sprout? Will some of the learned Christian theologians please explain it?—J. ISAAC HOLINGSWORTH, Va.

Though the above letter is intended by its writer to be answered by the modern Christian clergymen, we must make the reply, because we know that the representatives of the corrupt church will not diagnose the disease. To understand why Christianity has not spread throughout the world as a mighty movement in the world's progress, the purpose of the founding of the primitive Christian system must be comprehended.

During a single dispensation of the world's history, the Almighty operates in one constellation of the anthropostic Zodiac. Through Abraham God raised up the Hebrew people, and he chose them as the channel of the transmission of his life throughout the period of the Jewish dispensation. To them he said: "You only have I known of all the families of the earth." At the end of the Jewish dispensation, so far as that people could be located, they were confined to the comparatively small area of Palestine. Why did not Judaism spread throughout the world? It served its purpose as the basis of operations of the Almighty during one entire age, and it was impossible for him to operate in any other than the channel prepared through lines of special development. The Jewish church constituted the "book of the generation" of the Lord Christ, the specific line in which the life of the Lord was developed, and out from which he was resurrected as the perfect man.

Jesus was the door between the Jewish and Christian dispensations; he was the seed of the new order, the new age. He was the seed sown at the beginning of the Christian age, and the sowing of his life was the founding of a new channel of activity for the specific purpose of regenerating the one seed into many seeds, the sons of God to appear at the harvest of the dispensation. During the present dispensation he has been passing through the anthropotic constellation of Pisces, a twelfth division of humanity. His life has been active only in the field in which it was sown. The Christian church was never established to convert the world of mankind, but that through the specific channel of divine operations, a new genus might be developed,—Saviors to come up on Mt. Zion, to rule the world.

The seed planted in the race nineteen hundred years ago, like all other seed planted, passed into corruption. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The death of that seed in humanity was manifest in the apostasy of the church in the early centuries of this dispensation. A form of this apostasy was received by Mohammed, who was taught by the Nestorian Christians and the Jews; from this basis, Mohammed put forth the diluted and polluted doctrines to a larger circumference of humanity.

The apostate church has never planted any seeds of truth. "While the men slept the enemy came and sowed tares in the field." In the field of Christianity truth died, and the rank weeds of fallacy sprung up quickly. There has never been but one sowing of truth and life in this dispensation, and that was at its beginning. The reason there is no more Christianity in the world today than there is, is because it is limited to the size of the field in which the seed was sown. The effort of the modern church to spread itself into foreign lands, is on a par with the effort of the Jews at the end of the Jewish dispensation to proselyte the world,—compassing land and sea to make proselytes, and when made, they are twofold more condemned and corrupted.

Another sowing must take place ere the truth reaches the whole world, and the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth as the waters cover the sea; the new sowing will be in the propagation of the life and truth of Koreshanity as emanating from a central personality as the involution of the age, the harbinger of the Golden Age. When the new System prevails, the old church and state will have passed away.

Communism of the Primitive Christian Church.

(1) How long did the Christians live in the communistic idea? What history will give it, and where can it be obtained? I want several copies of it, especially for the preachers here who do not believe in the idea. (2) Has there been a Master Mason since the days of Jesus? If so, who was he? (3) How may the seventh sense be improved? What are the evidences that one possesses it, and what is it?—S. H. C., Kingston, Tex.

The church maintained its united life system during the first century of this dispensation. Its highest form was confined to the first groups of converts, where the remarkable influence of the Holy Spirit was manifest; but the custom, variously modified to suit the classes of people, spread with the church of the first century. The original Christian communism was the spontaneous expression of love for the neighbor, an evidence that their hearts responded in unison to the supreme impulses of divine love for humanity. The motives of such a life were, of course, too high to be understood by the world generally, and hence it has not found its way into the records of popular history. Reference is made to the fact, however, in all accepted church histories, such as Mosheim's, D'Aubigne's, and Pressense's, which can be obtained from any denominational publishing house. James Pott & Co., of New York can supply them, or the Methodist Book Concern, Cincinnati.

The most reliable authority on the early Christian communism, however, is the New Testament. The disciples who followed Jesus had one common treasury; Judas was appointed treasurer, and it was his duty to make all of the purchases for the disciples. (John xii: 6; xiii: 29.) After the translation of Jesus, the united life system spread rapidly to thousands;

there were 3,000 converts on the day of Pentecost, and 5,000 a few days afterward. They formed communities, subject to the regulations of the apostles, who presided. Properties were sold, and the moneys given to the apostles, who made the proper distribution of goods to the members as was required. (Acts ii: 41-47; iv: 32: 37; vi: 1-4). The duties devolving upon the apostles became so great, that special officers were appointed to look after the comfort of those who joined the communities.

The early church had to do with the temporal welfare of its members. The advice of Paul to the communities he established was, that members among them who were too lazy to work should not be permitted to eat. This of course could not be made applicable, if the members of the early church continued in their old pursuits, each supporting himself! Many of the so called church fathers refused to admit persons who desired to hold private property. If your ministerial friends are not satisfied with the records of the Book they preach from, they would not accept the evidences of church history, founded for the most part on the records of the disciples of Jesus.

(2) There have been no real Masons in the world, since the order lost the genuine meaning of the symbols of Masonry. Koreshanity scientifically interprets the symbols and rites of the orders.

(3) The seventh sense belongs exclusively to the female and her functions; it is the maternal sense in gestation, travail, and birth. You were thinking, perhaps, that it is some sort of an occult sense. All of the seven external senses are perfectly natural; corresponding to the seven natural senses are seven more interior senses, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, etc.

Not Summer All Over.

(1) I see nothing in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY to account for the ice at the poles, nor heat at the equator. (2) I never deny anything; but for my part, I will wait even to take such a theory into consideration till I am satisfied that a man standing on the sea shore can be made to see with a strong telescope, a shore a hundred miles away; and that to see it he will have to raise, not lower, his telescope.—READER.

(1) It seems to be quite difficult for the modern mind, after years of belief in the gigantic sun of the Copernican solar system, giving light and heat to planets millions of miles distant, to conceive of the change of seasons in the hollow globe, 8,000 miles in diameter. It seems to be the impression among the thoughtless, casual investigators of a few Koreshan conclusions, that the sun in the center of the earth should cause even temperature all over the world, day after day. This is the result of endeavoring to carry into the Koreshan System, concepts formed while under the delusion of the Copernican fallacy.

Light and heat, cold and darkness, are the result of specific polarizations of energies. In the visible sun, a projection of the central solar sphere, we have the light and hot poles of the universe in unity. The field of spirations of the visible sun is the zone of the tropics, while the cold poles are connected by an axis, at right angles to the tropical annulus. The action of the substantial energies of cold in the north and south causes the ice at the poles, while the radiation of the energies of heat causes the warmth of the equatorial regions.

(2) A man looking into a large mirror placed at an angle of 45°, will see in a horizontal direction the objects that are directly in the zenith of the mirror. He might say that if the objects are above the mirror he will not believe they are there so long as he can look horizontally and see them directly in front of him. If he were to ascend in a balloon to an altitude of five miles and place his telescope in a horizontal position and see the horizon all around, he might become convinced that the earth is concave; for perhaps, were it convex, the conclusion might be apparent that the telescope would have to be lowered a little in order to see the horizon, or the rounded offing in the distance.

Perspective foreshortening must be considered when it comes to looking at objects beyond the vanishing point; for if reduced in size, they would be correspondingly shifted from their true position in appearance. Look at a balloon bearing the vanishing point, through a transit instrument, with the cross-hair just cutting the point. Does the instrument have to be moved in order to place the cross hair in line with the sides of the balloon, as distinct from the center? The cross-hair covers the point, the entire balloon! The telescopic field embraces a vertical area large enough to take in a mountain five miles high, if the distance is great enough; and the telescope does not have to be raised or lowered in viewing base and summit—it embraces them in the one view. Objects in the horizon, and beyond, when restored to view through the telescope, appear lower than their real position, just as the top of the balloon appears drawn down to the point.

Not Published Yet.

Will you kindly inform me how much the work on Koreshan Astro-Anthroposophy or Bio-Astronomy costs, and if you have it in paper cover, cheap edition?—S. A. S., Carlisle, Pa.

This work, by the Founder of Koreshanity, was once announced as being in preparation, but as a complete work it has not yet been published. We purpose issuing it in a series of volumes, as the Koreshan Scientific Series, of which the CELLULAR COSMOGONY is a part. Then when the series is completed, it will be made up into one large volume. It will be one of the most profound scientific works of modern times, fully illustrated, fully demonstrated. As the numbers of the series are issued they will be announced in THE FLAMING SWORD.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

Koreshanity Scientifically Vindicates and Defends the Bible; It is the Gospel of Perfection and Purity.

DEAR FRIENDS:—You are asking for "First Impressions" from the readers of THE FLAMING SWORD. I will give you my impressions—what they were eight years ago, when I first began to read THE SWORD, and what they are at the present time. My first impressions were that Dr. Teed was a conceited pretender and false prophet; but my opinions have changed, and I see things in an altogether different light. I am convinced that he teaches the truth, because he teaches proven facts. Guesses and opinions prove nothing; we must accept only what we know, not what we do not know or only assume. The so called modern scientist forms a theory of guesses and opinions, then gathers a few facts to fit his theory; while you gather the facts and form the theory to correspond.

Is it not strange that people are constantly seeking the truth, and when found they will not accept it? that when the evidence is produced they will not investigate it? Is not one perfect proof of the concavity of the earth more convincing than ever so many assumptions? You have tested, vindicated, and defended the Bible scientifically. The teachings of Koreshanity are the teachings of Jesus the Christ; it is primitive Christianity revived. It teaches that knowledge is useful only in its application to the understanding of life; for what good is knowledge if not used for the good of mankind?

Koreshanity also teaches that man, through disobedience to the divine laws of life, or laws of nature, brought suffering and death into the world, and that if he could overcome evil and keep the law or commandments (loving his neighbor as himself, or do to others as he would be done by, thus following the golden rule which will bring the Golden Age), he would transform this earth into a heaven, where sin and suffering will be no more, and where diseases are unknown. A system that teaches prevention of disease, is better than one that seeks to cure by putting all kinds of plasters on the outside. An ounce of preventative is worth a pound of cure. If by disobeying and disregarding the laws of life, man degenerated into ignorant animalism, which obscured his wisdom and knowledge of the world, bringing all sorts of misery upon him, can he not then, by following and obeying them, regain his former paradise?

If one lays aside prejudice and uses judgment he must say, if he be not a thoughtless dummy, that THE FLAMING SWORD is multum in parvo, much truth and wisdom in little space and few words, but convincing proofs. It goes straight to the point, calling things by the right names, not calling good that which is bad, or true that which is false. It teaches practical religion, not only for Sunday, but for every day. How can a thinking man say he agrees with the economic and cosmogonic principles of Koreshanity, but not with its theology? Is not religion the theory, and economics the practice of it? Politics without morals is corruption. The cosmogony, economics, and theology of Koreshanity constitute a triunity of things that belong together in an integral whole. It is the gospel of perfection and purity. The form of the universe teaches us the form of government. Where there is a circumference there must also be a center; therefore, let us be patient. It will not be long before the outcome or result will justify and determine the claims of Koreshanity.—Mrs. ANNA WALDER, S. Dak.

As Others See Us.

The Industrial Co-operative Union Viewed From the Standpoint of Its Customers.

While busily engaged partaking refreshments served at the I. C. U. Restaurant, I heard the name of the Industrial Co-operative Union mentioned; the voices came from the other side of the curtain, and I naturally grew curious as to what they had to say about us. The curtain was drawn so that the speakers on the other side did not know but that they were the only persons in the room. As a rule, I do not believe in nor encourage eavesdropping, but in this case I think it was excusable, as I shall give you all the benefit of what I heard, and which, under the circumstances, I could not help hearing.

The two gentlemen were evidently strangers to each other, and had met on common ground; namely, they were both very hungry. Stranger No. 1 had never before partaken of lunch served at the I. C. U. Lunch Rooms, and was a little curious to know all about the organization, as you will learn from the following conversation which took place:

"By the way," he asked, "do you know what the letters I. C. U. mean?"

"Yes," said stranger No. 2, "they mean Industrial Co-operative Union, an organization which has recently made its appearance in this neighborhood."

"Do you know anything about them?" queried stranger No. 1.

"Well," replied stranger No. 2, "all I know about them is that they serve the best lunch for the money; everything looks nice and clean, and is served in first-class style, and better and cheaper than you can be served in any other place around here. And the people seem very obliging and courteous."

(Oh! thought I, this is indeed getting interesting and very encouraging, coming from entire strangers; so I listened more attentively.)

"Well," asked stranger No. 1, "have they many people connected with their organization?"

"I do not know how many they have," was the reply, "but they seem to have quite a number whom they employ, and I believe they have quite a little community among themselves. They have a grocery store and a meat market; a broom factory, this bakery, and lunch room," (evidently the stranger had not yet heard about our sausage factory in connection with our meat market, which is rapidly growing in popularity because of the superior quality of goods manufactured,) "and by the looks of things they must be doing a good business. I see Mr. W. every day, almost, loading up wagon-loads of brooms from their factory and sending them somewhere."

"By the way," chimed in stranger No. 1, "that Mr. W. is a hustler. I am acquainted with him; he is a bright sort of a fellow, and understands his business."

"Yes, that is true," replied stranger No. 2, "but it seems to me that if I were these people I would not advertise this thing very much."

"Why not?" inquired stranger No. 1. "Haven't they a charter?"

"I do not know," answered stranger No. 2, "but it seems to me that they will bring down upon their heads the enmity of all the other business houses."

"Well," replied stranger No. 1, "I do not know of any law that can prevent them from carrying on their business. Have they a government of their own?"

"I do not know," replied stranger No. 2; "but if they haven't, they soon will have, and a country of their own as well; and there is nothing to hinder them from having it."

The conversation then drifted to other things, and I arose from my chair with a determination that, so far as I was concerned, I should try harder than ever to do my best, knowing that our movements are not only criticised, but watched from every side; and that it behooves us to demonstrate to the world that it is possible to apply the principles taught in our System for the advancement and perfection of humanity. Although we are not aware of it, our influence is being felt. If we desire unselfishly to help the Founder of Koreshanity in this grand and glorious work, we must be up and doing, with a heart ready for anything, leaving the results to show for themselves. If we are soldiers, let us not shrink from duty; but press onward and upward, ever bearing in mind that we have nothing to lose but everything to gain.—A MEMBER OF THE I. C. U.

Special Offer Extended.—We have decided to extend our offer which terminated January 15,—to send one copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY free, to all who send us $1.00 for a new subscription, or renewal of subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD. Many of our readers availed themselves of this generous offer. We now extend it to March 1, 1899. The giving of the book will be an extra inducement to new readers to subscribe for the inimitable FLAMING SWORD, and afford our workers an excellent opportunity and incentive to work up their own vicinities. You can procure many subscriptions for us in 30 days, and we trust you will arouse a telling interest in the Koreshan System during the time of the extension of this offer of the book free with every subscription.

Our Magazine Exchanges.

Success, New York.

Success, Cooper Union, New York City, is a popular journal of real merit, full of interesting sketches of men who have been successful in satisfying their ambitions. The journal is devoted to success, and how to reach it in anything one undertakes. The number for February 4 is specially interesting; it contains an interview with Theodore Thomas, the leader of the great Chicago orchestra, and sketch of Cyrus Hamlin, the founder of the famous Robert College, Constantinople, Turkey, the man of sixteen professions. Its interesting departments are Questions of the Hour, the World's Progress, How some Great Fortunes have been Made, and all About Successful Women. Fully illustrated. Weekly, $1.50 per year. Success and THE FLAMING SWORD, one year, $2.00.

The Cosmopolitan.

The February number of the Cosmopolitan is an extraordinary number, and our editorial department has been highly entertained by its contents. It illustrates the German Emperor's visit to Jerusalem, by a number of superb engravings; contains illustrated articles on Manila after American occupation, life among the Dyaks of Borneo, Antelope hunting in southern Africa. These are the principal features of the February number, but in addition there is an abundance of interesting matter and short stories for diversion. The Cosmopolitan is one of the best 10 cent magazines; $1.00 per year. The Cosmopolitan and THE FLAMING SWORD, one year, $1.75.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The principal features of the February number are the illustrated sketches of West Indian life, Dawley's campaigning with Gomez, an account of a journey in the Andes in the old Spanish districts, Mrs. Leslie's description of a Spanish bull-fight, and the article on Ice, Snow, and Frost, giving the first successful micro-photographic reproductions of ice crystals. This number contains also an interesting short story, "The Tragedy of Thornburg," and other matter. 60 illustrations; 10 cents per number, $1.00 per year. This Magazine and THE SWORD one year, for $1.75.

The Chautauquan.

From the Koreshan scientific standpoint, the articles on Chemistry as a Factor in Modern Civilization, the Physiology of Alimentation and Liquefied Gases and Air in the Industries, are of special interest. The testimony of Human Experience, from an orthodox standpoint, would arouse some brisk suggestions concerning the chaos of modern theology. History As It is Made, is an excellent review of prominent men as related to current events of the world. $1.00 per year. The Chautauquan and THE FLAMING SWORD, per year, $1.75.

The Advocate of Common Sense.

A Semi-Monthly Newspaper, published by August Buesing, 158-155 Riverside Avenue, Jacksonville, Fla. Subscription rates $1 per annum, payable in advance. THE ADVOCATE OF COMMON SENSE is undeniably the best medium through which the Manufacturers, Jobbers, wholesale and retail Merchants, and every other trade and profession may make money by advertising. THE ADVOCATE OF COMMON SENSE is a high-class journal devoted to literature, science, art, spiritualism, free-thought, exposing religious and political errors and the evils of our present system of society and offers devices for better ones. It gives the news of the week from all over the world. No paper at any price can excel it. It is especially interesting and profitable. It is accepted by everybody not only as an entertainer, but as a teacher. No one should be without it.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HAMERIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell, we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 20 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 20 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 20 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 20 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 20 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.50; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of 1 Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 20 cents.

The Science of Mental Therapeutics.

Part IV.

Phenomena Not Explained by the Dual Mind Theory; Transmission of the "Subjective Mind;" Baptism of Jesus; Raising the Dead; Spirits in Swine.

OBJECTION is made to the fluidic theory of Mesmer. But suppose we analyze more critically the laws and processes of psychic transmission, from the standpoint of practical demonstrations in the Lord's personal experience. We have in mind an illustration of the absence of any possibility of suggestion in a case with the following record:

Now when he [Jesus] came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her. And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her, weep not. And he came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, young man, I say unto thee, arise. And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother.

Where was this man's "subconscious mind," and upon the basis of what law was he raised from the dead, but by virtue passing from the Lord to his unconscious remains? In another instance already noted, the Lord said: "I perceive that virtue is gone out of me." In the case quoted from Luke vii: 12-15, will any man imagine that the process was radically different, and that virtue (dynamis) did not go out of Him? In still another case, we have a more striking illustration of the departure of dynamic power from a person, and a more definite basis of analysis. At one time the Lord met a man in the country of Gadara, who was surcharged with some kind of pneumatic or psychic energy (from the record we conclude it was pneumatic force), and who by the power of this force was made to cry out:

What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not. (For he said unto him, come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.) And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, my name is Legion: for we are many. And all the devils besought him [for this was the kind of dynamis possessed by the man] much that he would not send them away out of the country. Now there was there a great * * * herd of swine feeding; and all the devils [spirits] besought him [Jesus], saying, send us into the swine, that we may enter into them. And Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, * * * and were choked in the sea.

How is this for "suggestion" and the subjective mind? What became of this subjective mind that entered the swine? and what entered the man to fill the void?

The modern counterfeiters of the power of the Lord nineteen hundred years ago, will quote the record of the Lord's sayings in so far as those sayings bolster up some antichristian theory, while they denounce the very fundamental principles made most prominent in that ancient testimony. What was it that passed from John the Baptist, when John saw the Lord coming through the throng bordering on the river Jordan, where the great prophet was baptizing, and was made conscious of the Lord's Divinity through the descent of the pneuma (spirit) in the form of a dove (type of regeneration), lighting on Jesus? Was it the passing of the pneuma (not psyche) from John to Jesus? or what was it? Who shall answer? It was the Voice of God, the veritable Logos, the spirits of the dead which John had gathered into himself, into the vortex of the resurrection. He had aggregated them for the express purpose of transposing them to the Christ of God, for immediately afterward John was taken and cast into prison, and what followed is conclusive evidence that John had lost his prophetic power.

Just as the evil spirits had departed from the man of Gadara, by the thousands, so the divine spirits departed from John, passing into the Lord and leaving John destitute of the power of prescience; for he sent two of his disciples to Jesus to know if he was the Messiah, or should they look for another? This was after the spirit of prophecy, formerly in John, had declared the Son of God, and also after that spirit, or thousands of spirits, had entered Jesus. This was the reason John, while the prophetic spirit was still with and in him, said: "He must increase, but I must decrease." By what power were these spirits made to transpose themselves from one person to another? and is there any similarity between this case and the doctrine of modern hypnotism?

It is not generally known that energy is a substance. Modern chemistry and the false theories regarding electricity are leading the mind astray. Mental energies are the product of the destruction of matter; but while they are substantial, they are not merely fluidic activities, for they comprise spiritual entities. The human body is the product of the digestion of the substantial material which it appropriates, but through the appropriation, the substances metamorphosed become the aggregate form and general conscious entity of the structured organism. So every spirit inhabiting the interior mental spheres of organic life, is the product of appropriated energy. Every mind is constituted of thousands of spiritual beings, and these beings either dwell in the cells of the external cortical area, the internal area, in the central cellular groups of the encephalic mass, or in the locations of the various organs of the body; but no spirit can exist independent of external or material organic structure. Organism is the substantial basis of all spirit life, and the channel through which all pneumatic and psychic phenomena are manifest.

There never has been an instance in which a psychic phenomenon was not the result of operation in and through a physical basis. Every psychic and pneumatic influence upon what the "subjective mind" theorists have denominated the subjective mind, has been exerted through the instrumentality of the physical organism. The operator operates through his own organic structure, not necessarily from his "sub-conscious mind," but by and through the voluntary operations of his exterior intellectual and affectional functions; and the so called objective mind upon which the influence is exerted, is also within a physical organism.

Hudson tells us that the subjective mind "is a distinct entity, possessing distinct powers and functions, having a mental organization of its own, and being capable of sustaining an existence independently of the body." Why, then, does not Hudson operate on these subjective spooks without the intermediation of the physiological structure, through which, so far, his experiments have been conducted? Why did not the spooks, the devils driven out of the man of Gadara, and which immediately passed into the swine, try a little of that independent existence which Hudson says they are capable of enjoying? Because they could not exist independently of some kind of a structured physiological and material form and basis of existence. Those spirits entered the living brain cells of the swine, and were transformed from human spirits to the spirit of the swine. And what is more reasonable—following out the lines of analogy, and accepting the fact that the external forms of animal life are transformed to human, and, per contra, the forms of human life are transformed to animal, this transmetamorphosis taking place constantly in the food appropriations of the two kingdoms, the animal and the human—than to think that the spiritual spheres of the two kingdoms are subject to a corresponding transposition?

Hudson is wrapped up in the modern fallacy of the non-substantiality of energy. This is the rock upon which he goes to pieces. We deny the possibility of spiritual or psychical life of any kind independent of the physiological and material form in which it resides, and through which it performs its functions. All spiritual life has its basis of operations in the material, hence we say with the apostle: "God is in the generation of the righteous;" and again, to those in whom the Word is manifest, "Ye are the temple of God, because God dwells in you."

All the Difference in the World.

We have before us a neat little monthly issued by the Self-Knowledge Pub. Co., Baltimore, Md.; $1.00 per year, 10 cents per copy. On the title page we notice the following: "Devoted to the unfoldment of the divinity in humanity on all planes of consciousness in spirit and in truth for truth's sake." One difference between the claims of the monthly in question and THE FLAMING SWORD, is in the fact that while Self-Knowledge is devoted to the unfoldment of the God in humanity, THE FLAMING SWORD gives some attention to the extraordinary advancement of the unfoldment of the devil in humanity, while it does not forget to speak of the final evolution of the sons of God.

Celibate and Marital Orders of Koreshanity.

The Virginal and Marital Divisions Differentiated; Purpose and Possibilities of Each in the Establishment of the New Era.

After studying the Koreshan System for one year, and finding it a Universology, in contrast with all other modern sciences, I have a strong desire to become, in time, an active member of your Unity. I understand the merits of the Industrial Co-operative Union of America, and agree with you that effective training and practical results of the Koreshan Universology will not be realized in the ordinary mind so long as the same is imprisoned in the present slavery of the industrial wage system. For this reason I advocate your practical establishment of the Co-operative Union. Now, do you wonder, or can you guess why I am offering you my service?

But right here I see obstacles in my way, explained in the two words in your teachings, "Celibate and Communital." I would or could not claim the full comprehension of Koreshan Universology, if I would not recognize the great truth involved in these two principles. The duty, the responsibility, of making a living for my family and to educate the children in the right direction, is a duty which with me reigns supreme. You may stand as high as you wish, but you will never succeed (and probably you may have no desire to take such a difficult stand) in inducing a man with a family to sacrifice his own children for the general welfare of humanity; this welfare must be brought in harmony with the ideal of that duty a man feels he owes to his own life blood. I could comply, in fact, we do comply with the second principle regarding sexual relations, not because Koreshan Universology teaches it, but because we feel and know it to be true.

Now I ask, as the disciples of the Christ nineteen hundred years ago asked, "What shall I do to be saved?" I could use my own judgment, but I am asking for advice. Will you give it to me?—B. B., Portland, Ore.

WE WOULD call attention to our general division of the Koreshan System into two orders, the primary one being virginal, the second or lower general order is marital. One of the provisions of the marital order is that people who are married or who desire to enter into and remain in the marital relation, are at liberty to do so, while at the same time they are identified with the Koreshan movement. This lower order of Koreshanity is monogamic, in this particular differing nothing from the common system of marriage as it obtains throughout the world, and especially among the so called Christian nations and peoples. There is, however, this distinction: We advocate a higher standard, founded upon certain defined physiological laws which the world will ultimately not only come to recognize, but will be compelled to enforce.

The sex functions are for the double purpose of propagating the race, and for generating a surplus energy which, when conserved according to certain higher physiological principles, will conduce to the physiological and mental perfection of those who know and apply the principles. No person, even in the marital order, should ever indulge the sex function for mere pleasure, and never for any purpose but that of propagation. Sensuality in the common marital life of the world is carrying humanity to ruin at a rapidly accelerating ratio, and the great waste of human energy, through the prostitutions of married life in the dissipation of the sex forces, is the fundamental cause of disease.

The lack of resistance to the encroachments of the destructive elements to sound physiological conditions, is due mainly to the fact that there is no reserve force, because the electro-magnetic and animal energies are dissipated through sexual excess. It is not merely and altogether the result of present excess, for the present humanity has inherited much of its defective resisting and conservative power through the sensuality of the past; nor can these inherited conditions be obliterated in the primary efforts to restore the race to its once normal social life. The perfection of the marital order depends upon the establishment, first, of the virginal, from which the marital will derive its supreme potency through the laws of psychic influx.

While it is understood by the students of Koreshanity that we have reached the end of the Christian dispensation; that there is impending the most universal revolution the world has ever known, and that all things are to become new, it should be distinctly known that we do not advocate the end of the world or its destruction as heretofore taught and believed in the so called Christian church. It is not merely the end of a dispensation, but it is also the termination of a twenty-four-thousand-year cycle. There will obtain great changes, but in many respects the world will progress on general lines intensely human.

Men and women will enter either one or the other of the general orders, determined by their degree of physical, moral, and spiritual development, and according to voluntary, not compulsory force. No person living in and practicing the principles of the natural and sensual propagative life, can become the firstfruit of the resurrection, nor belong to the redeemed who stand on Mount Zion and sing the new song, and who are redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb. These are virgins (vir, man; gin, gune, woman), and are without fault;—these are the product of the absolute practice of a life of virginity. All people who overcome may enter this state, but not without overcoming.

Does Koreshanity separate families? Yes, just as effectually at least, as does Christianity wheresoever it enters new fields of exploitation and action. The great antipathy in so called heathen nations to Christians and Christian belief, is that wherever it goes it introduces dissension and separation. We teach the doctrine of the separation of the sexes, for all who can and will enter upon a higher plane of existence; and to such we offer a higher standard of perfection, yea, the highest standard; for to those who believe in His name and obey his law gives he power to become the sons of God.

These become the offspring of Jehovah, for they are the product of the Lord's planting in the race. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

It is the purpose to so provide for the development, education, and pleasure of the children and young people of the Koreshan Unity, as to place them, in all these respects, beyond the possible attainment afforded by the world under the competitive system now universally prevailing. We state our principles without giving personal advice in these matters; every man must be his own judge as to whether he can conform to either one or the other of the Koreshan Orders.

"What Shall I Do to be Saved?"

Every man is saved in proportion to his application of the laws of life. If he desires to enter upon the highest life, he must conform to the principles of the highest law. Every man is condemned (damned) in proportion to the extent of his violation of the laws of life. If he violates spiritual law, he suffers spiritual damnation so long as he persists in the violation, and to the extent of that departure. It is the same with moral and physiological law. Physiological damnation, which is disease and death, is in consequence of violation of physiological laws, and the damnation is proportionate to the infraction.

The Mystery of Adam Revealed in Jesus.

Comprehension of the Koreshan Cosmogony Necessary to a Perfect Understanding of Koreshan Theology.

THERE ARE a great many things regarding Koreshanity that the ordinary mind cannot comprehend. It is for this reason that there should come into the world a specific, great teacher who, upon authority, may declare certain truths, as facts, independent of argument, that the receptive mind may appropriate until the mental power amplifies sufficiently to grasp the doctrine in its magnitude. We are asked for further particulars about the translation of Adam, et al.

The personal Lord Christ, the Son of God, came into the world nineteen hundred years ago, when the constellation Aries was directly over the sign Aries; that is, the twelve constellations stood over the twelve corresponding signs in the earth. This relation of the signs and their constellations occurs once in 24,000 years. Twenty-four thousand years before the Lord came into the world, the same conditions existed in the world, and the same relations of the signs and constellations; therefore a man was born into the world corresponding in every particular to the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God. He was Adam. He was the beginning of the creation of God, which the Lord Jesus Christ was declared to be.

The Lord Jesus was the first Adam, for he was the living soul; the outpouring of the Holy Spirit was the second Adam, for the second Adam was a quickening spirit. Now, between the manifestation of Adam (twenty-four thousand years before the beginning of the Christian age) and the man who is declared to be the Christ of God, there are just as many theocrases, in a direct line, from Adam to Adam (Christ), as there are planetary forms in the physical heavens. This is because the planets correspond to Messianic manifestations.

We know that Noah was translated, both from observation and experience. The word Noah signifies breath of Jehovah. This term could only be applied to a soul who, complete, could dissolve and become breath. Enoch signifies man, and as such signifies fulness or completeness. He rounded up his cycle, therefore he was translated. Abraham was not translated, though he began a cycle or a division of time; but he did not belong to the cycle in which the perfection of character was manifest. Moses did belong to such a cycle, and because he did he was translated. A person to comprehend these differences would be compelled to understand all the intricacies of the Koreshan Cosmology, with the correspondences between the alchemico-organic world and its correlate anthroposophy.

Any restoration of man which falls short of the perfect transformation of the organic structure from mortality to the state of integralism or immortality, is deceptive and undesirable.

The bad so completely permeates the whole system of ecclesiastical and secular activity, that dominion throughout the world is the devil's.

The office of the Sign culminates in the theocrasis; for through this comes the baptism of fire by which the new life is formulated.

No love less comprehensive than the love of God, can meet the demand of this age and condition of the world.

God and regenerate man are one.

The Rational and Logical System of Koreshan Universology.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

IT WOULD seem that a consideration of the salient features of the various departments of the Koreshan System ought to establish its claims to investigation, at the hands of the intelligent and fair-minded. Its reasonable and convincing solution of one problem alone,—that of the source of the sun's heat, certainly ought to procure it a hearing from present day scientists. As every one knows, this is a question that has heretofore baffled the human intellect, no doubt because being one of the central truths of existence, the scientific region of the brain had not hitherto developed sufficiently to reach such a conception. Conjectures are rife, and new theories on the subject are constantly propounded. The general tendency has been to vibrate from one extreme to the other, one theory predicting such an increase of temperature as would produce a general conflagration in the solar system, the other affirming that the loss of heat arising from so rapid a radiation of the solar energies must eventually render this earth a frozen planet, void of light and warmth where all life has perished.

Now Koreshan Science, as it would seem, very reasonably, declares that the cosmos is self-perpetuating, since waste and supply in it are equal; that there is a reciprocal interchange of energies between the sun and the earth, as between centre and circumference, by which an equilibrium is maintained so that just as the earth receives light and heat from the sun, so the latter is supplied with fuel for the solar fires from the magnetic and electric energies sent up by the earth.

In Koreshan Science, the physical cosmos is not considered as a thing apart, complete in itself, but rather as furnishing by correspondences the key to the anthropotic or mental world. It is a system of types; and whereas it has been shown that the physical universe is governed by absolute, unvarying law, Koreshanity further declares that every law is the exponent of a principle inhering in mind.

General ignorance in regard to the source of the sun's heat and the relation of centre to circumference, would naturally imply a corresponding ignorance concerning the nature of the Divine man, or the anthropotic center, and the relations existing between God and man as centre and circumference of the anthropotic world. Is it not a fact that this age is avowedly agnostic, confessing its lack of knowledge in just this direction? Dean Worcester in his book on the all-important islands whose destiny is just now a subject of national interest, relates that certain devout Filipinos caught sight of a caricature of Ex-president Cleveland in a copy of Judge that some one had sent him. Cleveland, then in office, was represented as a saint in an ill fitting nimbus, weeping over the sins of his fellow countrymen; the innocent natives begged this caricature, hung it up and worshiped it.

It seems that there are many persons today, worshipping as absurd caricatures of the Divine Being as this distorted image of one whom his warmest admirers never qualified as Godlike. The need of the age is a scientific idea of God and a religious system that, as the logical outcome of science, is strictly reasonable. According to the Koreshan concept of Deity, the divine man is perfected out of the common humanity, through processes of involution and evolution extending over ages of experience. His manifestation is periodical, recurring at intervals ordained by law, and he renews the spiritual life of humanity by imparting his own to the race,—spiritual force which he previously draws up from the race and returns in higher and purer form. Hence there is a reciprocal relation between God and man, precisely analogous to that existing between the sun and the earth.

The Cellular Cosmogony, which to some minds appears so startling as to border upon absurdity, is in reality in strict conformity with that dictum of modern research which asserts that all life develops ab ovo. And it rests also upon a definite mathematical premise demonstrable by any one with sufficient courage and interest to undertake the experiment of running an air line.

No student of sociology who scans intelligently the signs of the times, can fail to apprehend a deep and widespread dissatisfaction with existing conditions. The statistics from German schools for the ten years from 1887 to 1897, show that 407 school children under fifteen years of age committed suicide. Now while it is cowardly, suicide on the part of those who have advanced in life far enough to see their fondest hopes wither and the blight of disappointment spread over every joy, may not be altogether without excuse; but when the very young shrink back on the threshold of existence and refuse to carry the burden of life, the phenomenon is felt to be both unnatural and appalling. Child-suicide is one of the saddest and most startling symptoms of modern social life.

What manner of civilization have we been fostering, that even the children find its conditions impossible at the outset? The remedy proposed by Koreshanity, is a return to the communistic relations of the early Christians. The figure of Jesus Christ stands as the exemplar of a Christian world that professes to see in him the Divine man. If it be possible to establish orderly and harmonious relations among men, and to inaugurate a social system calculated to provide the best possible opportunity for the advancement of humanity to a higher plane of moral and intellectual activity, it is reasonable to suppose that Jesus would supply the model for this form of government. Clergymen and students of church history are beginning of late to emphasize the fact, attested by secular records as well as by the Bible narrative, that the early church was communistic in its aims and methods.

The Koreshan Unity is a practical attempt in modern times to return to early communistic and co-operactive ideals, but it meets with persistent hostility and opposition from the competitive world. The lives of the great reformers furnish pathetic reading, and the homage of succeeding generations cannot recall the calumny that wounded the sensitive spirit, or the insults that sank deep into the noble heart. No unprejudiced observer can study this socialistic experiment ab intra, mingling with its exponents in their home life, listening to their daily conversation and watching their efforts, without discovering that in devotion to principle, in self-sacrifice and in patient endeavor, that little community in Chicago offers an example of practical, every-day heroism unequalled since the days of the primitive church. Let those who are themselves unwilling to put off the shackles of self-interest that bind men to the competitive world, at least do honor to those who bravely take the initiative in a movement designed for the comfort and relief of suffering humanity.

It is a mistaken idea that the object of Koreshanity is to detach men from the human brotherhood by shutting them up in communities according to the old monastic scheme of life. Its aim and scope are broad enough to embrace the whole world, and its avowed purpose is to inaugurate a system that shall overspread the earth, —a system founded in love to the neighbor. Community life in the restricted sense is a necessary phase pertaining to the development of a new socialism, only so long as its ideas are shared by the few.

"Food and drink, roof and clothes," writes that master of delicate prose, the author of "The Story of My Heart," "are the inalienable right of every child born into the light. If the world does not provide it fully—not as a grudging gift but as a right, as a son of the house sits down to breakfast—then is the world mad. But the world is not mad, only in ignorance—an interested ignorance, kept up by strenuous exertions, from which infernal darkness it will, in course of time, emerge, marveling at the past as a man wonders at and glories in the light, who has escaped from blindness." He goes on to express the hope that future generations may have leisure to enjoy their days and the earth and the beauty of this beautiful world; that they may rest by the sea, and dream. "I will work toward that end with all my heart," he adds fervently.

This is one of the ends that Koreshanity has in view, toward which its advocates are toiling ardently, ennobled by the power of a great aim, whether the meed of their efforts be praise or blame from the world at large.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE FUNDAMENTAL principle of republicanism is a fallacy; it is the idea expressed in the declaration of American independence, the hobby of the politician and the individualist, and the germ of anarchy—the idea that "all men are created equal," and that their rights should be conceded accordingly. No one has ever thought of applying such a principle to the practical affairs of life, yet the American government is supposed to be founded upon the idea; it is founded upon a fallacy. Hon. A. Lawrence Lowell questions whether the doctrine is near enough the truth to be consistently and safely acted upon! The ideal democracy, as an element in the attainment of human beings in the adjustment of all the relations of mankind, has never been and can never be, fulfilled. No society has ever existed where its members were equal, or practically considered to be so. No army has ever been organized, disciplined, and ordered to the field of action on the basis of such an hypothesis. The scope of the rights of a man is circumscribed by the border lines of his mental attainments and by his field of usefulness. The territory of his aspirations, the size of his orbit of liberty in the anthropotic world, depends entirely upon his mental and moral altitude and the consequent area of his mental perception and breadth of comprehension of himself and man. The inequalities existing between men are becoming more and more apparent; the mental, religious, and social conditions are multiplying, and the extremes of human thought and ability are widening. The human system is not constructed on the basis of equality; the universe has center and circumference, demonstrating the laws of organic unity. Koreshanity involves the science of construction of the mental, economic, social, political, and religious domains. The divine government will be a kingdom or theocracy, the government of the Gods of the Golden Age. When the individuals of the human family are socially related,—as the individual cells of the human brain are mentally and alchemically related,—with centers of elaboration and circumferences obedient to the laws of order and the general government of the central ego; or as the stars in the liberty of their orbits in subordination to the controlling central positive pole or sun of the physical universe, the world will enter upon an age of universal peace!

We are a little amused at the expressions of Prof. Wm. James in the Atlantic Monthly, in a series of articles on psychology. He is writing on the functions of consciousness entirely from a theoretical standpoint, because he says it is impossible to scientifically explain the mind. We want to show from his own words just how much the modern psychologists know about human mentality, and let the reader judge for himself whether we are right in our assertions that modern scientists do not understand man. "It must be frankly confessed that in no fundamental sense do we know where our successive fields of consciousness come from, or why they have the precise inner constitutions which they do. They certainly follow or accompany our brain states (!), but if we ask just how the brain conditions them, we have not the remotest inkling of an answer to give. * * The truth is, that we really don't know the answers to the problems on the explanatory level." These admissions reveal the condition of the modern "scientific world." It is full of "scientists" who do not know, including astronomers, physicists, chemists, geologists, clergymen, and political economists; but such men are posing as the world's educators! Knowledge is below zero in the modern schoolrooms, lecture halls, pulpits, observatories, libraries, newspapers, Congress halls, saloons, and lunatic asylums! We do not say this because we like to, but because it is a palpable fact!

is eternal and that solution never comes. He says that "man must give up searching for the origin of anything. No one knows the origin of life, nor of matter, nor what we call mind. The whence and the whither are questions no man can answer. In the presence of these questions, all intellects are upon a level. The barbarian knows exactly the same as the scientist, the fool as the philosopher. Only those who think they have had some supernatural information, pretend to answer these questions; and the unknowable and unfathomable is the realm occupied wholly by the inspired." Ingersoll knows that the mental chaos in the church and university is too great to characterize knowledge; he acknowledges the inadequacy of modern education and the failure of all modern systems. The modern world is drifting toward the conclusions of Ingersoll; the dogmas of the church have failed to satisfy the people, and the scientist cannot prove his assumptions. In the light of these admissions, where is the boasted progress of the world? Where is its advanced thought? Where is the positive mental pole in the age of reason? It is not in the chaos of modern systems, but in the discovery of universal form and function, the science of cellular life, the revelations and inspirations of demonstrated premise, analogy, and reason.

Prof. Gilbert, of the United States Geological Survey, predicts that in 2,000 years from now Chicago will be deluged by the waters of the great Lakes. From the basis of observations, he concludes that the continent of North America is changing its level, rising in the north and sinking in the south, and that the tilting causes a shifting of the water in the lake basins. The earth is changing its shape; the continents are gradually changing level in accordance with unquestionable observations. If the earth rotated once in twenty-four hours, the tendency would be to bulge convexly more and more at the equator, and consequently to rise or swell away from the center, forcing the water to change its level and gradually recede to the regions of the poles. But the opposite is true; land at the poles is rising, and the water is gradually rising at the equator. The earth is bulging in the equatorial zone, but the earth is concave, and as it gradually bulges it becomes lower and lower, as to the water level. The earth is in the shape of an egg or prolate spheroid, and is gradually evolving into the form of a sphere. The facts of geology demonstrate the Koreshan Cosmogony, while for the old system they create insurmountable difficulties and problems.

The chaos of the modern city is an infallible index to the character of modern civilization. Cities have not developed in an orderly or a systematic manner; city builders have been altogether unprepared to meet the requirements of rapid developments and the demands of sanitation and rapid transit. At the cost of millions of dollars the streets are paved; soon they are torn up for a new sewer system and relaid; taken up again for cables for street cars, and then rearranged for underground wires, which in turn necessitate changes in the sewer mains. Then come the elevated roads and underground cars, with numerous scaffoldings and excavations. Theories and systems of reform have developed in the same haphazard, unscientific, chaotic, and spasmodic manner, with the results adapted to the conditions of the competitive system. The entire modern world is made up of patches. The cities of the future will be built according to system. Koreshanism involves the elements of all future progress and civilization. The plan of its capital city provides for all future developments, without changing or disturbing the lasting structures, streets, and parks. It is located scientifically, and will be constructed according to the laws of order.

A number of men who have contributed large sums of money in the interest of the Keely motor, without realizing immediate returns from the application of what Keely endeavored to discover, are finding many things about the Keely works since the inventor's death, which they cannot comprehend; and these things they are endeavoring to expose as constituting a gigantic fraud. The transmutation of the energies of sound to the energies of motion is possible, demonstrated in the simple sympathetic vibrations of violin strings and by particles of sand upon a vibrating disc. The Keely motor is a possibility; but when materialized it will be known by another name. If Keely resorted to the trick of the water-motor to enable him to carry out a scheme for money while developing his vibrator, he was only on a par with the millionaires who steal millions to run their machines! The "monumental frauds" of the nineteenth century are those involving billions, not thousands of dollars! The machinery of modern government has more secret wires, tubes, and frauds than Keely could ever dream of!

It is said that sun-worship is the oldest religion, the origin of all worship. Thousands of years ago, it was the prevailing idea in all the world. Heliopolis of Egypt was the city of the Sun, and Potiphera was the priest of the sun. The religion of the sun prevailed in the land of Zoroaster; it was the religion of the Peruvians and of the Aztecs; the religion of Noah, Moses, and Jesus; the religion of Koreshanism. It is the religion of all peoples of all ages where the divine light has shone. It is the worship of the Sun of Righteousness, the anthropistic Sun of humanity, of which the physical sun, the center of the universe, is the analogue and symbol. Jesus was the Sun, the Son of man, the God-man, the Light of the world. He has appeared billions of times in ages past, and the worship of him is the oldest religion, the only true religion possible to exist in the world. The Hebrew word KORESH means sun, and is identical with the Egyptian Horos, the Greek Kuros, the Persian Surya, and the Hindu Svarya.

The astronomers are puzzled over the problems of the shifting of the earth's axis, and the consequent shifting of latitude in all parts of the world. How it is that the earth can change its poles never so little without changing the time of its rotation according to the Copernican hypothesis, is more than can be solved by the "shifting" theory. Year after year the day's length is the same, and century after century the time of sidereal revolution is the same definite period to the fraction of a second. The earth changes its shape; but the earth is not in motion. The earth's poles or magnetic axes change with the shifting of the axis of revolution of the heavens; the shifting is in the heavens, not in the revolution of the ponderous earth. Scores of astronomical and geological problems which confront the modern scientist, find ready solution in the Koreshan System; it is in agreement with every fact, and the latest researches confirm its conclusions.

It has been advocated in the United States Senate, that no government should be forced upon a people without the consent of the governed. This is supposed to be the very foundation sentiment of republicanism, but it has not been so in America. The United States expended about $6,000,000,000 in forcing the government of the Union upon the southern states, not only against the will of the South, but against its armed protest in the great five-years' struggle for southern independence. Of course, America never asked the Indian if he desired to be ruled by the whites, nor its citizens of the present century if they desire to be governed by an ancient constitution, or whether they would submit to the plutocracy of the money power. Nothing of the kind! The suggestion might have thwarted the scheme; the octopi have quietly invaded the premises and swelled to enormous proportions.

The Mayor of Chicago waited until zero weather to call upon people who have been "blessed with wealth," to contribute to the comfort of families too poor to purchase food and fuel during the extreme cold. Blessed with wealth! The hold-up is blessed with cash when the cashier takes the $1,000 from the till and hands it to the man wearing the mask and holding the gun; the burglar is blessed when he extracts the contents of the safe; and the millionaire is blessed because he steals the wealth of those who are poor. But the mayor would not desire to say so much!

"The gods must be useful or they will not be tolerated." It depends upon the character of the people by whom it is desired that they should be useful. Purity is not useful to sensualism, and will not be tolerated by it. While the corrupt world is noisily judging the Almighty, he is quietly testing the world through the declaration of truth, through which he declares that the time has come for man to be useful to his neighbor or his existence will not be tolerated!

A priest is supposed to pray for the people; it would seem that he should be the one to do it, since the transmutation of the wafer is the direct creation of God by the church magician. Sometime, however, the order might be reversed to good advantage. In the church rules, the people are advised to "pray for your priests," because "they need it." Good; but don't do it for nothing; priests always charge fancy prices for their prayers.

True communism conserves and holds in common not only the products of labor, but the energies of life as well. Life conserved is more important than the goods of life, and is prior in use. Scientific communism, with the application of the highest religious and economic principles, is the only system that will accomplish the emancipation of the world.

Though the "mental scientist" makes the claim that the Almighty is in every man, it recognizes the fact that there is so little of him there that God cannot make the external man understand! That must be accomplished by mental science journals; then the man gets full—of conceit!

A short time ago we editorially noticed some of the different kinds of human insects in the world. We omitted a few:

The modern ten-ants, lieuten-ants, and anti-podes; the anti-christs, assist ants, and the queens; the book-worms, drones, death-watches, and the heretics!

The modern church looks with horror upon a life of celibacy; it is considered a useless and foolish undertaking. Celibate societies have existed in all ages as the conservators of life. The Nazarites were a society of the Jews in the days of Jesus; and Jesus himself was a Nazarite!

The anti-expansionists admit that the United States is not a free country; they conclude that under American control the Filipinos will not be free. This is self-evident; for millions in America are in bondage to the tyranny of the money power.

According to Ingersoll, the limitations of knowledge are more confining than the Koreschan hollow globe is to the average Copernican; he thinks that the world not only does not know anything for certain, but must always remain in ignorance!

"Man has never fallen from a perfect state;" if not, he has never risen to it. A seed both rises and falls in order to perpetuate its life. The laws of life and death are eternal. The cause of man is man; and that cause is perfect.

The secret of successful socialism is not in devising a scheme to adapt to sensual humanity, but in changing the heart of man to conform to the laws and relations of organic unity.

The "christian science" conception of universal mind pervading an infinite ethereal medium, is an effort to rid the world of mankind of the necessity of having brains.

Latitude in the earth is designated by parallels; but the latitude desired for operations by the modern trusts is not scientific; it is unparalleled!

Politicians are figures which the millionaire moves on the national chess board.

Jesus was elected before the majority voted for him.

Football is modern competition reduced to athletics.

The men who invert the truth are invert ebrates.

Modern anthropologists are aping Darwin.

Truth takes time to select her advocates.

THE EDITOR.

Tests of the Koreschan Premise.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Now that my Washington monument proposition has been so airily disposed of, I have the pleasure of reminding you that the case is not on that account, to be deemed "out of court." On the 13th day of November, 1895, while discussing the Cellular Cosmogony with you at your residence in Allegheny City, Pa., I proposed to accompany you to Cleveland, Ohio, and look through a telescope placed one foot above the surface of the lake at the Cleveland dock; and if the Canadian shore were visible I would accept your theory. If the shore were not visible, I asked you to abandon your theory. For answer you referred me to Dr. Teed, who had a $10,000 challenge open to any one disproving his theory.

Later I met Dr. Teed in Allegheny, and made the same proposition to him. He replied that he "had more important business to attend to." Now, as the above proposition has never been entertained, it is still open; and to a disinterested person it would seem as though ridicule would not quite meet the requirements of the case. An answer is respectfully solicited. —HARRY HOOVER, Pennsylvania.

If we understand the above letter, it is to the effect that a proposition made some years ago to view the Canadian shore from Cleveland, Ohio, with the telescope axis one foot above the lake level, is still open. The nearest point on the Canadian shore to Cleveland is about 52 miles. We have never made the claim that a shore at that distance could be seen through a telescope at an elevation of 12 inches; and therefore, so far as the Koreschan System is concerned, that proposition is closed. The proposition is absurd, not taking into consideration the principles of perspective foreshortening which would apparently annihilate the vertical space of 12 inches many times in that distance; and we do not propose to submit the premise of the earth's concavity upon such a proposition.

In past years, we have conducted about 100 different experiments on the surface of water for the purpose of testing the popular theory of the earth's convexity; the results of some of these experiments we have published to the world. We have made our propositions to the world in connection with reports of the results—propositions to duplicate the results under similar circumstances. In the meantime, we have considered it fair that any party accepting our propositions should understand fully the methods by which we demonstrate the premise of Koreshan Astronomy, and comprehend a few factors involved, and the extent of our claims as to optical phenomena in connection with the water horizon. If some effort were made in this direction on the part of those who are anxious to disprove the Koreshan premise, such absurd propositions as the above would be obviated.

We have shown in all our ocular demonstrations of the earth's concavity, that the telescopic horizon on an extended body of water is beyond the horizon of the unaided vision; which could only obtain on such a surface as would subtend a larger angle in the field of the telescope than on the retina of the unaided eye,—not a convex surface with the horizon as the "offing" or apex of the bulge, but as a concavity, vanished by perspective to the naked eye at a specific distance, and extended through being magnified by the telescope. The distance to which the horizon may be extended depends entirely upon the power of the telescope. Given a telescope of known power, the horizon will appear at a specific distance beyond the horizon of the unaided vision. Between the two apparent horizons, objects which are invisible to the naked eye, on the water's surface, can be seen with the telescope, although they are beyond the horizon of the unaided vision. Concerning the extent of this difference, we have something to say from actual experiment; and we will abide by no unscientific stretches of inexperienced imagination of would-be combatants.

We are looking for some one who has patience enough to candidly investigate what we have to submit—propositions upon which we would agree to have the Koreshan System tested before the world; one who will take the time and trouble to investigate a few principles of optics, without an understanding of which there can be no correct interpretation of phenomena apparent either to the unaided vision or through the telescope, as related to experimental tests of the visibility of distant objects, and their real position as related to the altitude of the eye at point of observation.

When such a man is found, with a circle of scientific influence and integrity, and with manhood enough to commit himself on the results in the terms of agreement, we will take pleasure in demonstrating to him, before any number of witnesses, the facts we have published to the world. Let our friends remember that our propositions are open—propositions founded upon actual observations, the reports of which may be taken, item by item, and verified. Mr. Hoover may make propositions to us which he has never tried, and does not know what the results would be. So far his propositions are absurd; and our attempt to show him that they are absurd is mistaken by him for ridicule.

The Flaming Sword Stirs Up a Preacher.

I have just received a copy of your CELULAR COSMOGONY, with a year's subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD. It is not the first copy I have read, for I have had several others. I did not subscribe, but Prof. O. F. L'Amoreaux, who stopped with me a day or so, wanted to send me THE SWORD as a gift, which I told him he could do at his pleasure. But I told the Professor that I had no use for you or your abominable doctrine. You have been pretty thoroughly aired in this county, and I have been investigating, and have concluded that you do not believe a word of your own doctrine, either in regard to the Christ or your Cosmogony. It is simply an entering wedge to get dupes, of which the U. S. is abundantly supplied.

I know of five women, some of them strangers to each other, who have been members of your Order; and they all agree that it is nothing but a harem, and you are carrying it on in the name of religion. You may succeed in Chicago, but I think you will fail in this county.

In regard to your FLAMING SWORD, I wish to say it has been plentiful along this river; and I have not found a man that can make anything out of it after he reads it. It is simply made up of a lot of jaw-splitting words without having an aim at anything. The Professor told me that was because we did not have the key. Now I want you to understand not to send me any more SWORDS without a key to unlock them.—Rev. G. W. G., Fla.

We are glad to have it acknowledged occasionally, by the modern clergyman, that he cannot understand the Koreshan System from its simplest forms of exposition; it is a source of great encouragement to our many readers and friends that they are able to comprehend that which baffles the intellect and agitates the heart of the so called minister of the gospel. The admission on the part of the reverend gentlemen that they cannot "make anything out of it" (THE FLAMING SWORD), evinces the fact that the modern church has fallen so far into fallacy and sensualism that even its "leading lights" have nothing in common with the truth proclaimed by Jesus and now revived in Koreshanity. If the modern clergymen cannot comprehend the Koreshan theology, it is an evidence that they are entirely unable to attack it from any Biblical or rational standpoint; and we notice that our friend fails to suggest wherein the Koreshan gospel of purity is abominable.

We are glad also to be informed where all the dupes are before they come into the Koreshan Unity, for the reason that it is desirable on our part to show that we had nothing to do with making them! If they are so very plentiful in the world, we can safely conclude that there are many of them in the modern church; and judging from the efforts put forth by all the churches and missionary societies, the one great aim to get dupes seems to be clearly manifest!

If our reverend friend would step out on this side of the walls of prejudice behind which he seeks protection, long enough to appreciate the character of the persecution which any new movement must encounter, especially that which the primitive Christian system encountered, he would perhaps be less liable to believe the absolute falsehoods put afloat by a few disgruntled persons who once pretended to be in sympathy with the Koreshan movement. The idea that the Koreshan Unity "is nothing but a harem," originates with those who have harum-scarum stories to tell, which our reverend friend has been duped into believing! Many who pretended to follow Jesus turned against him at the critical hour, and testified falsely concerning his character. Sensual persons were found who testified against Paul and the other apostles. Throughout all ages, the same hatred of truth has been vigorously shown by minds filled with sensualism and prejudice. The dignity of truth is at last recognized without stopping to parley with enemies.

We might send a few keys with the messages of truth; but it is likely that the keys might be as carelessly thrown around and misused as the contents of that which the keys are intended to unlock. Besides, it requires something more than keys to unlock the truth. We would be glad if we could ship the required elements to all those who need them, but unfortunately for those who have none, we cannot at present supply new material for empty skulls without destroying those that are full!

Light and Dark Disci in the Earth's Shell.

(1) Will you please inform us through THE SWORD, what layer or stratum each of the seven planets corresponds to? Our interest and curiosity have been aroused by a statement in THE SWORD of December 2, of which the following is a quotation: "It (Saturn) is the 'golden planet,' the product of amalgamations of the gold and silver strata."

(2) If the planetary energies are generations of the mercurial disci, is it necessary that a planet come in conjunction with the moon at the time of an eclipse of the moon, since the eclipsor is also a mercurial disc?

(3) Another question—one which you may find it difficult to answer is, Why should we remain in doubt on any subject when THE SWORD answers all questions clearly and conclusively?—S. A., Estero, Fla.

Koreshan planetology is an intricate subject, a clear exposition of which would require a volume; and it would be difficult to understand the multiplex correspondences and relations which exist between the seven laminæ and the visible planets in the sky. It would be as difficult to trace for the reader these correspondences and relations, as it would be to define to the student the relations of the alimentary canal of the human system and the functions of the brain which preside over the functions of alimentation. The planets cannot be located in the way in which the inquirer anticipates, any more than food taken into the human system can be confined to one division of the alimentary tract. Every planetary disc in its course in a specific cycle, passes into all the divisions of the alimentary canal of the physical cosmos. The chief characteristic of Saturn, however, is the gold; but it also manifests the characteristics of every other part of the shell. The discs gather up the excreta of the bowels of the earth, and deposit them in the geologic strata for volcanic combustion and metamorphosis.

(2) The planetary discs have their opposites in the shell of the earth—dark discs, which are specifically related to the revolutions of the lunar sphere. These dark discs periodically open the magnetic currents on the ecliptic, and eclipse the moon. A dark projection in the sky intervenes to eclipse the sun, when the moon is new and on the ecliptic in conjunction with the sun. Visible planets do not directly cause the eclipses; and it is not necessary that they be in conjunction with the sun or moon during eclipses.

(3) First, because of the inability of the mind of the student to immediately grasp the Koreshan System; second, because THE FLAMING SWORD cannot enter into details of the many phases of the truth of the universe; and third, because it is the purpose of the Koreshan System to develop and educate the mind by a system of key-notes of fundamental principles, and thus induce mental application on the part of the student, from the standpoint of principles rather than through the circuitous route of details.

It is because the student of Koreshanity is not accustomed (nor able always) to follow logical processes in reaching conclusions, that bits of information are necessary now and then to help them over difficult places in the consideration of important subjects; and during the past year many of our people and friends have availed themselves of the opportunity to obtain brief replies to their questions through this department, and have thereby contributed to the interest of THE FLAMING SWORD in its work of propaganda in the fields of new readers. Questions to this department are always welcome; and our replies, which are given according to our judgment, are mere suggestions of the routes to satisfactory conclusions concerning the points submitted to us.

Ground Plan of the New Jerusalem.

To what extent do we differ, so far as you are able to judge from what I send you? Here is something you ought to investigate. Please send me a copy of your paper.—J. F. W., Grinnell, Ia.

We have looked over the matter you have kindly sent us, and note the diagram of your proposed plan of the New Jerusalem and what you say concerning its establishment in the world. In order for you to ascertain just how much you differ from us, you would have to investigate the Koreshan System in its astronomical, geometrical, theological, alchemical, and economic phases. Koreshanity is a system of Universology, the science of the universe,—its form, its function, and its contents. The discovery of the fact that the earth is a concave cell, containing its own life on the inside of a material shell, is the fundamental premise of all Koreshan conclusions.

The laws of cellular life—the knowledge of the processes of the incubation of the great cell, furnish the key to the scientific construction of human society which, in its perfection, will constitute the coming divine kingdom or theocracy, the natural government of the world from the central metropolis, the New Jerusalem. The Founder of Koreshanity has located the site of this city at the gateway of the world, the focal point of the commerce of the Golden Age, embracing the southern portion of Florida and the isles of the West Indies.

The ground plan of the New Jerusalem has been constructed, embracing the perfect geometrical principles of squaring the circle, and its many evolutions from square to square as the co-ordinate forms of the central circular area. So far as we can judge, there is a great difference between the Koreshan plans of the coming great city and the diagram you have sent us—perhaps as much difference as there is between a fragmented concept of truth and the Koreshan Universology.

We send you copies of THE FLAMING SWORD as you request; and suggest that we are offering to the world not only that which it should investigate, but which will ultimately and inevitably be the controlling system of science, religion, and social and political economy.

A New Theory.

A Book Which Seeks to Prove the Earth Is a Concave Sphere.

To the Editor of the Utica (N. Y.) Daily Press:—A remarkable book is now being circulated in the Mohawk Valley, entitled CELLULAR COSMOGONY, which advocates the strikingly original theory that the earth is a concave sphere inclosing the solar and stellar systems, and that instead of living on the outside, we dwell on its inner surface.

The work was lately handed to me by a stranger—a gentleman of fine presence and pleasing address—and I, in keeping with my promise to him, have given it a careful reading; and while I am impressed with the honesty and sincerity of its promoters, and the genuineness of the various experiments described for establishing the concavity of the earth's surface, and am also disposed to give every man a fair chance, and his opinions the weight I think they deserve, yet I do not find myself a convert to the new idea.

How, or by what course of reasoning this theory originated, the volume does not quite make clear, though it appears to have been entertained by its projector for years; but not till the summer of 1896 was a series of experiments begun for disproving, by ocular demonstration, the convexity of the earth's surface. Those observations appeared to establish the fact that an object, like the hull of a distant vessel, for example, which becomes invisible to the naked eye through the earth's convexity, can be brought into view again at the same point of observation, by the use of the telescope.

The enthusiastic investigators accepted this discovery as substantial proof that the earth's surface is at least not convex, and as established science teaches that this occulting of the lower portion of distant objects is one of the chief proofs of the earth's sphericity, they naturally felt that an important point had been gained.

While the text books say nothing of this optical contradiction, and scientists ignore it, and while I have made no special observations in that direction, yet I recall the fact that when serving in the United States navy during the civil war, whenever, during a masthead lookout, the topsail of a vessel was sighted on the horizon, by my unaided vision, immediately on reporting its bearing, the officer of the deck, though 50 feet below me, would level his glass and promptly say, "I see it!" This reminiscence, coinciding as it does with the alleged discovery referred to, leads me to inquire if there are not yet some important discoveries to be made in the field of optical science.

But the votaries of the new theory wished to go farther than this, and establish the actual concavity of the earth's surface; for by that means only could it be shown to be a hollow sphere, with mankind dwelling on the inner side. With a view to accomplishing this object, one of their number, who is evidently an expert civil engineer, and displays much true genius and good judgment in the preparation for and conduct of his work, designed and constructed an apparatus called a "rectilineator," for projecting an absolutely straight or level line from a given point, regardless of the contour of the earth. [Here was given a description of the Rectilineator, already familiar to our readers.—Ed.]

An unbroken stretch of sandy beach on the west coast of Florida was selected for this remarkable geodetic survey. [We omit lengthy and correct description of the modus operandi of our system of rectilineation, from facts taken from the CELLULAR COSMOGONY.—Ed.]

This, theoretically, should have secured an absolutely straight line, independently of the curvature of the earth's surface; and in keeping with its accredited convexity, the finishing end of the line should have been about four feet higher, measuring from mean tide level, than at the place of starting; but to the great satisfaction of the projectors, it came out about four feet lower, the latter portion of the line showing a decided dip, relatively to the horizon, and on extending the line by sighting with the surveyor's instrument, it was found to touch the mean tide level one and three-quarters miles further on.

Delighted and confident, the party very reasonably theorized that if a similar line were extended in the opposite direction from their carefully leveled starting point, it would touch the tide level at the same distance, which would establish beyond all question the correctness of their theory. It seemed almost unkind to attempt to criticize the results of a work which I believe was so carefully and conscientiously conducted; but in the interest of scientific truth, I would suggest that the whole tendency of the material composing that forced line was downward, through the attraction of gravitation—not the slightest upward impulse did a single section receive anywhere along the line; and is it strange that of the 1,045 settings and adjustments of sections necessary to complete the two and three eighths mile line, a little inaccuracy might have crept in through "settling?"

And how much settling would it have taken per section to change the elevation of the terminus of the line eight feet—or from a point indicating the accredited convexity of the earth, to one indicating its concavity?

The joining of the respective upright cross arms of each section was the point observed for perfect adjustment, and if the mathematician will take a little time to compute it, he will find that if there was a difference in closeness of contact of 1-17200 of an inch between the ends of each pair of arms—the lower contact being that infinitesimal fraction the closest—the terminus of the line would have been dropped just the eight feet below the plane of the first section.

But let us assume that nine tenths of the work was absolutely perfect—only every tenth section yielding in the slightest degree to the ever present force of gravity—a difference in contact of 1-1720 of an inch, or less than a single thickness of the finest tissue paper, would still produce the same result. Samuel Miller.

As Others See Us.

Cellular Cosmogony.

"CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere," is the title of a little book devoted to an explanation of some of the theories of Cyrus R. Teed, the expounder of the so called "Koreshanity." The views advanced on astronomy, the earth, and other matters, are in startling contradiction to those commonly accepted. According to "Koresch," as Dr. Teed styles himself, Copernicus was all wrong, and modern astronomers are simply blundering over fundamental truths. It may be doubted that the publication of "CELLULAR COSMOGONY" will cause any very marked agitation in the world of science, or that many people will be disposed to accept as true the theories advanced in the book.—San Diego Union.

Well, why not? When the common people observe the facts, as may be seen from the ocean beach of San Diego, the scientists (?) and newspapers who can never recognize great discoveries until forced on the world, will have seen their best days!

LIBRARY OF

Life of Jesus. By ERNEST RENAN with many valuable illustrations. 400 pp., crown 8vo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

Although educated as a Catholic priest, Renan, from study and observation, became a philosopher. From his religious training he had learned to admire and respect the character and teaching of Jesus of Nazareth, but his good sense and reason led him to disbelieve in the supernatural origin of the "Son of Mary." His reasons for this disbelief—this want of faith—are as follows, and are given in his own words:

"None of the miracles with which the old histories are filled took place under scientific conditions. Observation, which has never once been falsified, teaches us that miracles never happen but in times and countries in which they are believed, and before physicians disposed to believe them. No miracle ever occurred in the presence of men capable of testing its miraculous character. Neither common people nor men of the world are able to do this. It requires great precautions and long habits of scientific research. In our days, have we not seen almost all respectable people dupes of the grossest frauds or of puerile illusions? Marvellous facts, attested by the whole population of small towns, have, thanks to a severe scrutiny, been exploded. If it is proved that no contemporary miracle will bear inquiry, is it not probable that the miracles of the past, which have all been performed in popular gatherings, would equally present their share of illusion, if it were possible to criticize them in detail?"

History of Christianity.

Comprising all that relates to the Christian religion in The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, and, also, a Vindication (never before published in this country) of "some passages in the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters," by Edward Gibbon, Esq. With a Preface, Life of the Author, and Notes by Peter Eckler; also, Variorum Notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "An English Churchman," and other scholars. This important work contains Gibbon's complete Theological writings, separate from his historical and miscellaneous works, showing when, where and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what were the sentiments, character, manners, numbers and condition of the primitive Christians." One vol., post 8vo, 864 pp., with Portrait of Gibbon and numerous Engravings of mythological divinities. Extra silk cloth, gilt top, $2.00 Half calf, $4.00.

Hypatia. By Charles Kingsley, gilt top. cloth, 75c.

Man in the Past, Present AND FUTURE. By Prof. Ludwig Hüchner. It describes Man as "a being not put upon the earth accidentally by an arbitrary act, but produced in harmony with the earth's nature, and belonging to it as do the flowers and fruits to the tree which bears them." Cloth, $1.00.

Mahomet, the Illustrious.

By Godfrey Higgins, Esq. Perhaps no author has appeared who was better qualified for writing an honest Life of Mahomet—The Illustrious—than Godfrey Higgins, Esq., the author of the present work. His knowledge of the Oriental languages, his careful and methodical examination of all known authorities—his evident desire to state the exact truth, joined to the judicial character of his mind, eminently fitted him for the task, and he has produced a work that will prove of interest to both Mahometans and Christians. Preface by Peter Eckler. Crown 8vo, paper, 25c.; cloth, 50c.

Mahomet: His Birth, Character AND DOCTRINE. By Edward Gibbon, Esq. Gibbon's account of the Arabian legislator and prophet, is conceded to be historically correct in every particular, and so grand and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. Crown 8vo, paper, 25c.; cloth, 50c.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell, we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—comparison pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Cellbacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follum. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.50; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes.

 By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 10 cents.

The Science of Mental Therapeutics.

Part V.

Pneumic and Psychic Phenomena Proceed from a Physical Basis; Function Cannot Exceed Organism; Divine and Satanic Healing Differentiated.

OUR READERS are more or less familiar with the specific characteristic of the gymnotus electricus, which is capable of discharging electricity to a distance of many feet from its body. Some of these eels are powerful enough to kill either a man or a horse, with the shock of their magneto-electric batteries. The natives of some countries where they abound are in the habit of driving horses into the water occupied by the eels, to receive the discharges which they derive in rapid succession, until, for the time, the force is exhausted, when the eels are easily captured for food. Here is another exhibition of transmission of energy, from which the factor of "suggestion" is eliminated and that of the flow of energy is verified. Electrical phenomena through physical contact with water which the fish occupies, are manifest at the distance of many feet; and by mechanical contrivance the energy may be conducted for miles, at the extremity of which phenomena are induced.

Shall we say that the eel has a subconscious mind, and that this mind is capable of an existence independent of the physical organism in which the energy is generated? Yet this is precisely the attitude of Hudson and the advocates of the "subjective mind" theory. We would accept the testimony of the Lord in preference to that of Hudson. "I perceive that virtue [dunamis] is gone out of me." The eel discharged his virtue, not necessarily by a voluntary consciousness, nor by any principle of "suggestion" operating on the horse, but by virtue of the fact that the eel possessed an anatomical structure and a physiological function to correspond, which involuntarily generated and husbanded a magnetic force. The horse was negative to the reservoir of energy, and the force flowed over from the eel to the animal in the discharge of the energy. The principle is the same as that involved in the Leyden jar.

The difference between the discharge of animal electricity and the change which took place when John transmitted his pneumatic power to the Messiah (the Lord Jesus), resides in the fact that in the higher sphere of pneumatic action, the fluid of discharge was the pure river of the water of life (a factor of which is to flow), clear as crystal, proceeding from the throne of God and the Lamb, made up of thousands of spiritual entities.

The fact we desire to urge upon the students of Koreshanity, as a basis of future study, is that there never has been, is not, nor ever will be pneumatic (spirit) or psychic (soul) phenomena independently of a physical basis upon which to rest, and from which all phenomena proceed. Cause resides neither in spirit nor in matter alone, but in the unity of spirit (energy) and matter combined. The universe, as a composite and organic structure, contains a universal and composite pneumatic and psychic power, in which the phenomena are commensurate with the organic basis. The organism cannot exceed the function, nor can the function exceed the form in its functional capacity and potency.

No reasonable mind can deny the fact that physical cures are effected, in many instances without the administration of material drugs; and the very fact that the learned quacks, calling themselves physicians, are compelled to importune for special legislation to sustain them in practice where their skill fails, is an assurance that the mental healers are the more successful.

The Lord healed the physically deranged. The devil can perform similar acts. This has been demonstrated wheresoever the Lord has been manifest in any age of the world. When the sons of God were manifest, the devil came also. All men are devils who are not regenerated. "I came forth from my Father; * * * ye are of your father the devil." To those in process of regeneration, and who believe in the name of the Lord Jesus the Christ of God, gives he power to become the sons of God, offspring of Deity. Those who are opposed to this principle, conception, and purpose are the offspring of the devil, and are consequently devils. The Lord never did a thing in relation to men, that the devil did not invent and institute a commendable counterfeit; and to such an extent that he could almost deceive the very elect.

No reasonable mind can deny that the cures of all the phases of the modern imitators of the Lord and his disciples, under whatsoever name, are subject to and produced by the same general application of principle, and are governed by the same law. Faith cure, mental and christian science, hypnotism, magnetic healing, etc., are merely phases of the same general manifestation of pneumatic and psychic force; and every phase of this general manifestation of phenomena so far, outside of Koreshan Science, is conducted under the impulse and inspiration of empiricism.

What is the attitude then, of Koreshanity regarding the application of mental or pneumo-psychic therapeutics? It is that the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations. The nations will be healed by the leaves of the Tree of Life. These leaves constitute the science of immortality; and there will be no genuine healing until the science of life is physiologically applied to the corruptibilities of human existence. The Tree of Life yields her fruit every month. We are now terminating the twelve months of the Zodiacal cycle, and rapidly approaching the hour when the science of life shall culminate in the fruition of immortality; and for this reason the old serpent, the devil, is getting in his best gait for the home stretch, in the substitution of the thousand and one counterfeits of primitive Christian power.

The Scientific Language of Symbolism.

Principles of Mind Symbolized by Forms of Animal Life; The Wisdom of Commerce and Its Perversion; Evolution and Death of the Formidable Octopus.

WE HAVE iterated and reiterated the declaration, that the serpent is the symbol of commercial wisdom. Despite the fact of our emphasis of this truth, there are some who seem to think that our application of the symbolism is purely a figure of speech. This, however, is not the case. Every form of animal life is the symbol of some principle or principles of the mind, and as we have so often enunciated, the expression in outward manifestation of the animal creation is but the written language of the Word (God), who is the mental origin of animal existence. All animals paraphrased in the enunciated verbum of symbolic word or language, have a prior existence in the mentality of organic life in man; the highest exhibition being the perfection of the man developed into Godhood, as declaratively involved in the Son of God, the Lord Jesus the Christ.

The Lord was the Word, Logos (speech or language of Deity), God Almighty; and because in him dwelt the fulness of the Godhead bodily, embracing the aggregation of all the principles of the universe, he was named for the representative animals of exoteric creation. He was the Lion of the tribe of Judah, because he was the center of the power of commerce; the Lamb, because he was the act of commerce, for through his death he impregnated the world—the church—with his own life; the Dove, because from him proceeded the Holy Spirit whence the act of commerce projected the process of regeneration (re-production), the office of the Holy Spirit; the Serpent, because by his wisdom he so controlled and regulated the commercial purpose as to define, in actual practice, the sex function through which it was exalted into the immaculate sphere of the higher regeneration, and to so determine the secular commercial life as to enforce the contrast between the hellish competitive commercial system and the communistic commercial system which he inaugurated.

The serpent principle is a principle of the mind, put forth in commercial act. It is the wisdom of commerce on all the planes of commercial function and activity. Commercial life possesses both a divine and a diabolic force. Diabolism in commerce is the perversion of divine commercial wisdom, hence there is the divine serpent and the old serpent,—the devil. Now, when we consider the statement, "The love of money is the root of all evil," we have the key to the solution of the problem of the original temptation. The serpent beguiled the woman. The serpent is the wisdom of the money-loving principle, and the woman, in this broad sense, is the church. The religious life of the church is transformed from the communistic practice to that of competitism, and the church sustains and honors the latter to the extent that today she is the prime support of that great system of corporate power, the contortions of which, in the prodigious trust combinations of the world, are now contributing to the serio-comic tendencies and propensities of the financial pirates.

We are rapidly approaching the vortex of the psychological force of the serpent, whose final act will be to pool the financial issues of the world into one gigantic combination, the force of which no legislative power can resist. This is the great beast rising out of the earth, with two horns like a lamb,—the commercial and legislative combination, but which speaks as a dragon (the serpent); the force of that language residing in the power of commerce, the money power, to rule the world. Under the influence of this beast, no man can buy or sell without the mark of the beast, either in his hand or in his forehead. There is no escape from this inevitable consummation of the tendency, purpose, and fruition of the trusts in that gigantic corporation which for a little time shall rule the world. In the coils of this boa-constrictor the people will writhe until, through the inherent force of self destruction, the competitive system stultifies itself. In the direct line of this particular thought, we notice one of the morning republican dailies, from which we quote:

The street railroad bill was jammed through [a republican legis'lature] committee this morning, and subsequently with lightning speed given first reading in the House. Similar tactics prevailed in the Senate. * * * In the municipal corporations committee, from which the bill came to the House, and in the House the republican "machine" demanded and secured rush work for the measure. The committee gave it a recommendation to pass, although it was neither drawn by it, nor by the sub-committee which originally had it in hand.

The sum and substance of the measure, according to a Chicago republican daily, is to fasten upon the people of Chicago, by snap legislation, an eight-cent instead of a five-cent fare. It is the influence of the money power upon legislation. And why not, so long as the god of this world, endorsed and worshiped by the church, is the chief aim of the rich and the poor alike? We can only pray that the prophetic period may hasten to its close, for there is no escape from the fulfilment of divine prescience. We can, however, provide the Ark of deliverance, and into this Ark we invite all who wish to avoid the destructive influences of the coming catastrophe.

Chicago's Relationship to the New Jerusalem of the Golden Age.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

AS THE representative of a brain center in the anthropostic social ganglia, the geographical sphere of the New Jerusalem of the Golden Age, already located in southern Florida, at present corresponds to the glandula vitæ of the brain of the vidual mortal man. Chicago, sometimes called the dumping-ground of our national commercial activities, may be regarded as fairly representative of that mortal brain center called the conarium. The conarium is functionally the apex of the mortal organism, and the transmitter of the vitalizing energies of the brain to the glandula vitæ, the sphere of the reconstructive potencies of the entire organism. These two pre-eminent centers of mortal organic life, are absolutely interdependent in the exercise of their powers of renewing the organic structure upon which their own perpetuity depends.

Chicago certainly represents the apex of commercial activity; she is said to be "a hustler." If Chicago is legitimately called she, she is what we would call a masculoid woman, internally and dominantly male, like some of the supposedly feminine leaders of our modern deforms commonly called reforms. Chicago as a city might be titled after the femininity of diabolus,—“his Satanic Majesty.” It is the focalization of the universal Babylon, the climax of confusion, the crucible of the ultimate conglomerate which, passing through the fire and poured through the final retort, precipitates as the head of gold, to the Grand Man of the new and divine civilization.

Chicago is the granary of the world, the great seed disseminator. The seed is the vitos of the blood and nerve of animal life. When you look at Chicago, by the aid of a railroad map, she seems to sustain to the country at large, the relationship of the heart to the body. The red lines of traffic, indicating on land and water the directions of transmission and aggregation, suggest the circulation of blood and nerve fluids.

From the standpoint of modern Christendom's standard-bearers, Chicago is the most extraordinary product of nineteenth century civilization. Extremes meet in her;—as an aggregation of abominations she cannot be excelled. She is also unequalled as a bundle of possibilities, beyond the power of present language to express. Man's extremity is said to be God's opportunity; probably the Almighty does not neglect his opportunities. We speak reverentially when we say: He is sometimes a hustler. It is written: "I the Lord will hasten it in his time."

If the Almighty creates light out of darkness and causes all things to work together for good, then undoubtedly he has a Godlike purpose concerning Chicago, in relation to the New Jerusalem descending from God out of heaven. It must never be forgotten that the Almighty works in and through and by humanity, to execute his own good pleasure. When the interior or spiritual Deity would be manifest in natural aspect, it is written by inspiration from his prophetic Spirit: "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me."

There is, in New Testament prophecy, a Holy Writ concerning the fulness of the Gentiles and the end of the Christian era, including the promise of a Sign, a Precursor, a Jonah to the life of this, the age of Pisces, an angel of death to nun—haveh, the life of that great fish that swallowed Jonah,—the age of the Almighty's mortal and sensual experiences. The fact that the fulness of the Gentiles is now culminating in America, is reflexed from the signs in the heavens and from every sphere of human organization.

The involved fulness and completion of any growth is its seed. The time of Gentile evolution or development being fulfilled, its involution, the Seed Man, is necessarily produced and projected as its apex, in exact fulfillment of Scripture prophecy. The Divinity that regulates both universal involution and evolution,—the science of universal law, that omniscient mentality which shapes all ends of being to delight in His own perpetuity, ultimates in the Seed Man who unites in himself the spirit of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and the power of Joseph, the Shepherd and Stone of Israel, the science of the application of law to the uses of divine-natural life.

The involution of Gentile completion is the conarium of the Grand Man, to be created in the image and likeness of God. Logically, he should be found operative in the apex of commercial activity. Logically, he must become recognized as the Seed Man, or the Sower and the Reaper of the universal economy; as the harvester of all past mental potency, and as the vitalizer of a future age. He is necessarily the disseminator of all those mental entities who have progressed and ascended to the seventh heaven of the divine mentality, and are matured to germinate in a waiting humanity for the production of a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Chicago is honored above all the cities of the world, by the presence in her midst of Elijah the prophet. The honor is appreciated by those alone who recognize the possessor of the keys of knowledge, by those to whom is given the scientific interpretation of the law and the prophets. The prophet sits in the midst of this whirlpool of chaos, as a refiner and purifier of the gathering sons of Levi, who will continue to assemble themselves together to make sacrifices for their own sins and the sins of this nation, that it may be sprinkled with the blood of the divine animal life of Deity, the science of life and immortality.

Chicago will become, to the new commercial center of divine origin, as the mouth of a great vortex, in its relation to this nation. Into this vortex will flow the energies of a divine commercial activity, to be drawn upon by the demands of the New Jerusalem to descend from God out of heaven, and be made manifest as the Sun City in that future center of world-wide commercial equity—Estero, Florida. There has the stake been driven to indicate the center of that temple from whose throne and altar conjoined will be sounded out to the confines of the universe the eternal gospel, that man perfected is Jehovah, and Jehovah is Deity supreme.

Scientific View of the Reconciliation of God and Man.

PROF. O. P. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. * * * For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto [Greek, into] God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby. * * * For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell; and having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things [the generic gender including persons] unto [into] himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.

THE GREEK word rendered reconcile in these passages is katallasso, which means thoroughly changed. The root of the word is allos, which means another, and the prefix kata, down through, or thoroughly. The word then means to make whatever is the object of it, down through, or thoroughly another than what it is. If any one is an enemy, to make him other than what he is may be to make him a friend; so there is a secondary and subordinate meaning of the word to this effect. When, therefore, the word is used, we must determine from the context whether the primary or secondary signification is intended.

We are told that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself." The process of such reconciliation is indicated by these words: "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him," that is, by him. Christ, as God's seed, which the Scriptures call him, if so be that at the time of seed sowing in the beginning of the Christian age, that seed was sown in us, fell into our sinful natures, and forming conjunction with them, as the seed forms conjunction with the soil, became sin in us in order that we, now, at the time of harvest, which Jesus said would come in the end of the same age, "might be made the righteousness of God in him"—by him. If we are made the righteousness of God, we must be as right as God; that is, having had our origin in God by the implantation of the divine seed in the beginning of the age, then in the harvest, in the end of it, we shall find our destiny in Divinity—being reconciled to God, that is, changed through into God. The result is, of course, peace with God. "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh"—by his flesh—the divine seed. "the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself [by himself], of twain one new man, so making peace." The only way, then, to be reconciled to God is to have the two, Jesus Christ, and mortal man, the twain, made into "one new man, so making peace."

As the enmity between the soil and the seed wheat can only be slain by planting the wheat in the soil, and its impregnating the soil with its own life force, thus forming conjunction with it, and making one body out of the two, so it is only by the "cross"—crossing the divine seed, which is Christ, with its soil, the sinful humanity—that the enmity between the two can be slain. Any other reconciling of God and man is illusory and vain. The Scripture is very explicit, and declares that the result of that planting of the divine seed in us, as of all planting of seed in its soil, will be, not two bodies, but one; and we will be that body—biune, two in one, as Jesus the seed was. Thus the divine will be grafted upon the natural seedling, human stock, as the higher quality of apple is grafted upon the sour and worthless seedling stock. This is the grafting of which Jesus spake. Without it humanity will always remain crabbed and selfish as at present. With the ripened fruit of it, now at hand in the resurrection of the dead, the prayer that Jesus taught us to pray will be answered, and the kingdom of heaven will be established in earth.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE EVIDENCES that humanity is about to enter upon a new era, are becoming manifest in all the fields of research and investigation. We are approaching the end of a long cycle of human experience, and are nearing the climax of all ages. Never before in all the history of the world, has there been such facilities for instant and constant communication of all peoples of the world as there are today. The barriers are breaking down, and the avenues are opening for humanity to become one great organic world of life. The amalgamation of all races of the world is a subject under consideration by Prof. W. J. McGee, of the United States Ethnological Bureau. He has announced the result of his investigations in the following conclusions: "That there will some day be a universal race type is as inevitable as the future growth of the American people. One of the consequences of this unification of manhood will be one great universal government. Today, we see nothing other than the blending of tribes. In no case do we see the upbuilding of new and distinct tribes. We have never seen any increasing color distinction, but always the elimination of color characteristics. White men are not growing whiter, black men blacker, red men redder, nor yellow men more yellow. Reds, blacks, and yellows are diminishing in relative abundance, and the whites are increasing in number." The Professor gives an instance of the amalgamation of all bloods—the people of California, and regards them as physically superior to any other people of America; every blood under the sun is represented in the people of California. Of course, modern ethnological investigations are superficial. The creation of the new race is a part of the Koreshan work of the world's re-formation. The perfect race will not come except through the application of the laws of circumcision, and special Messianic function. The true racial blending must be as scientific as the amalgamation of alchemical substances; and no two substances can be united without the introduction of a third element as the mediator of the metamorphosis. The present tendency to amalgamation is only indicative of the fact that the time is approaching when the new race will appear, not as a result of the present methods or tendencies, but through the application of scientific law, which will guide the great Ethnologist in the selection of racial elements for the highest possible product of the bloods of the world.

That the reader may form some idea of the magnitude of the stupendous system of propaganda of fallacy, we take a glance at the publications of the world. The annual aggregate circulation of all the papers of the world is calculated to be 12,000,000,000 copies,—eight times as many copies of papers as there are inhabitants in the earth. The entire annual issue of periodicals would cover 10,450 square miles of the earth's surface; it is printed on 781,250 tons of paper. If printed by a single press, turning out one copy per second, day and night, it would require over 380 years; and if read by one man, giving five minutes to each paper, it would require more than 100,000 years to complete the work of perusal. These publications placed one copy above another, would make a column over 500 miles in height. Year after year, this mass of matter goes out to the world, laden with fallacy in every conceivable line of thought; add to the periodicals the number of pages of the books now in existence, and the result is almost overwhelming. The audacity of THE FLAMING SWORD in its opposition to all this mass of the world's thought, may be appreciated; it is the audacity of one man, the Founder of Koreshanity, in the face of storms of fallacy,—the audacity of Truth against the world!

The modern church is puzzled concerning the mystery of the Holy Spirit which was shed upon the primitive Christian church, a powerful electric force from the central dynamo. What it really was, is a question which the clergyman does not attempt to answer. The Founder of Koreshanity has discovered what the Holy Spirit was, and has declared what the substances were which composed it: Oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, carbon, sulphur, phosphorus, flourine, chlorine, sodium, calcium, etc., reduced to energy. How does he know this? Through analysis of the substances of the human structure. Jesus was a man, and when he went out of the natural world he did so by a process of translation, transmutation, or combustion of material substances. The energy resulting was the substance of the Holy Spirit, the substances of immortal flesh and blood, the living bread, the vital force of the Almighty, with which the church was charged. It is a simple problem in alchemy, susceptible of scientific analysis and demonstration.

While the factions of reform have been quarreling over methods of co-operation, the great business concerns of America have monopolized the idea and have outstripped the labor combines a million to one! The present year begins with one of the most remarkable phases of the economic situation in the history of the world. Hundreds of lines of business are combining—forming gigantic trusts; it is an effort on the part of the millionaire to control the markets of the world for every class of products of industry and ingenuity; it is an effort to cut down the margin of profits on all materials of use throughout the entire world, of all producers and dealers except the trusts, and thereby render competition of small concerns impossible. The combines constitute a definite and powerful system of utilizing the energies of millions with the least possible expenditures and the largest returns. The modern monopoly is co-operation on the most extensive scale, and demonstrated to be successful in the giant concerns of the civilized world.

Religious differences, for which men have been burned at the stake, are carefully laid aside in the great English federation of the evangelical churches. The terrible lion of Calvinism is made to lie down beside the Methodist lamb. A new catechism and creed have been devised, not with any idea of stating the truth, but expressing such doctrines as are held in common by the great denominations. This is one of the most remarkable religious compromises of the nineteenth century, a movement toward the union of all churches, even all the popular religions of the world. The time is rapidly approaching when the religions of the world will agree on the most fundamental fact of all modern theology; and that fundamental fact is that they do not know anything about God; and the federation will be frank in saying so. The world's parliament of all religions will fix the limit of concessions, and focalize the creeds on the one admission of ignorance of the character of the Creator of the universe.

The possibility of surveying a rectiline a number of miles in length, is denied by the modern scientist since it has actually been accomplished and the results found to overthrow the Copernican astronomy. A little while ago, a line was surveyed by a leveling process three times across the peninsula of Florida, for the purpose of ascertaining the relative levels of the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico. The difference was found to be about twelve inches by each survey. The liability to error in the adjustments of the levels for each mile was as great as in the adjustment of the mechanical sections of the Koreshan Geodetic Apparatus; and the possibilities of approximate accuracy were equal in both processes. To deny the possibility of accuracy in our survey, would be to set aside possible accuracy in all geodetic and mechanical apparatus the world over.

Insanity, poverty, and crime are sweeping the civilized world! Mental wrecks are increasing with alarming rapidity. The so called enlightenment of the nineteenth century is not contributing to the health, wealth, and happiness of humanity; it is, rather, cursing millions. In the United States alone there are over 200,000 persons insane; an equal number are in almshouses, and nearly 100,000 are in jails; and one half of the inhabitants of the great republic are considered poor. The world is growing worse from year to year—the facts of daily observation and statistics prove it. Fallacy and sensualism continue the work of devastating and wrecking the human temple and destroying the treasures of life and mind. The world is nearing the final convulsions of the dispensation, the inevitable birth throes of the New World!

The end of the old astronomy is at hand; Prof. Young, the astronomer, says in Harper's Magazine for February, that "It is not to be disguised that some anxiety is felt lest it should be found that we are already near the limit of accuracy in our astronomical prediction—actually approaching the boundary which cannot possibly be surpassed." He writes concerning the pending problems of astronomy, the new shifting of the earth's axis, and how it conflicts with accepted conclusions; and as regards the moon, he says: "The theory of her motions has not as yet, by any means, reached finality." Modern astronomy has overreached itself in attempting to solve the problems of the stars before ascertaining the nature of our silvery neighbor,—aye, of the earth itself!

Which is the greatest maze, Koreshanity in its completeness as a system of the truth of the universe, or the chaos of modern theories of religion, science, and reform? The thousands of fragmentary ideas which were never intended to fit in one harmonious system of human thought, will never save the world from its corruptions and depravities. Man is lost—overwhelmed with discordant elements, in his attempt to search for truth in all the mass of rubbish that the modern mental world contains; his horizon is necessarily limited, if he confines himself to one infinitesimal sphere of some sect or movement. Koreshanity is the center of the world's advanced thought, and involves the most progressive entities of all mental spheres of the world. It is the center of mental circumspection of the entire universe.

The Golden Rule! A writer states that the only thing necessary for a man to know, in the work of reforming the world, is the Golden Rule. It looks simple, if you do not stop to think what is involved in it. Jesus was the summing up of all law, which is made to depend upon two fundamental principles of human existence and relations: That a man must worship the Lord Christ with all his energies, and love his neighbor as himself. Yes, the great fundamental Golden Rule is all that he needs to know; but carried into every line to which it is applicable, it embraces all there is to be known, in heaven or in earth. The application of it requires all the powers of the Almighty; and the man who successfully applies the Golden Rule is God!

The Church boasts of its greatest success in the so called civilized world. The greatest nations of the world today are called Christian nations; yet in these great nations the most aggravated forms of despotism,—the most obvious misrule and oppression, the most abject slavery, the greatest percentage of crime, the most insanity and poverty, exist. The most "enlightened" nation is the land of the millionaire, corporations, and trusts; the land of corrupt cities and government, and the most manifest inhumanity and sensualism. The condition of the Christian nations of the nineteenth century is absolutely unparalleled in all the history of the world; and if the church desires full credit for it, she is welcome to it!

The modern "sciences" are saturated with the modern church idea—that at sometime in the past the universe began to exist; astronomers, geologists, anthropologists, and physicists, attempt to account for universal phenomena and existence on the basis of the hypothesis that billions of years ago there was no universe! The idea that at one time man did not exist, enters into all fallacies of modern thought; we hear it in the pulpit, see it in the newspapers, and read it in modern literature. What a stupendous lot of foolishness the idea has brought forth! How absurd the basis of modern thought when viewed in the light of the fact that the universe and man are co-eternal!

A little more corruption infused into a bad egg would break the shell; and for that reason Gen. Kitchener, commander of the English forces in Abyssinia, discourages the infusing of modern Christian ideas into the mind of the Soudanese. He raises the question whether the Christian missionaries do not exert a harmful influence upon the natives; they breed discontent and stir up insurrections. Early in the present century, the English government endeavored to prohibit missionaries from working in India; it was then said that it would be better for a shipload of devils to come to India than a single missionary!

There is current in the world a ridiculous conception of what science is. An exchange asks: "What are science and progress but a continuous searching for truth, proving all things and holding fast to that which is good?" Genuine science is the knowledge of truth already searched for and discovered; and having proved all things, it consistently holds to that which is good. The only search that science has to make, is the search for minds receptive to it. "Science" that is still searching for truth is not science but ignorance; science that is looking for itself is lost. Koreshan Science has found itself.

A church book advises the communicants that "instead of spending money for flowers and carriages [for funerals], how much better it would be to have prayers and masses offered, and alms given to the poor, for the solace of the deceased." Better for the priest, of course; fees for reading Latin and burning candles for the comfort of souls in purgatory, constitute a source of church revenue. Besides, carriages are cheap in purgatory, while priests are scarce there; the priests go direct to the other place, in great haste to meet old friends!

They want to abolish the custom of "swearing people on the Bible," especially the custom of kissing the book, in New York. It has been discovered at this late date that it does no good; that the witnesses will lie just as easily and persistently after kissing the Bible as before! Then, there are many people who are so constitutionally weak that they cannot resist the microbes which endeavor to persuade them to be sick. It is better to get the microbes elsewhere than off the covers of the Bible in the modern court room.

Ingersoll attempts to excuse modern science for its many blunders, on the ground that it grew out of the church and was influenced by the narrowness of the theologian. Good; that is exactly what we wanted him to say. It is true; modern astronomy originated in the dark ages; it was the result of an unwholesome mental atmosphere which pervaded the world during the reign of the church; and other phases of modern thought conform to its infinity. Yet Ingersoll clings to the products of mediæval ignorance!

Some reformers desire all factions of reform to lay aside their little differences and unite on some common ground for a great movement, for the purpose of placing a bright patch on the old order of things. Suppose the proposition is made to Truth,—do you suppose Truth would join in such a combine and agree to keep silent on many points, while the other factions are working in fallacy? Would Truth make such a proposition? Never!

Spain is glad that America has become involved in war with the Filipinos, and predicts a long, tedious, and expensive fight that will bring no beneficial returns. Spain laughs now, and says that America is only receiving punishment for her barbarous treatment of Spain. Perhaps; but let the Spaniard tell us for what Spain was being punished, when ruling the Filipinos in despotism and waging war to subdue the insurgents?

Six or eight great Chicago pulpit orators are called by the New England gods at higher salaries. If these clerical gentlemen are of any value in the world, it would be manifest in the moral scale of the East, and in a corresponding lowering of the religious temperature in the Chicago pews; but it will require some delicate instruments to detect the difference.

The world is agnostic; in conduct it is paradoxical. It accepts fallacy without proof, and rejects the truth when it is demonstrated. It hates the man who exposes its ignorance, and murders him if he claims to know. The teacher of truth of every age is a martyr; he is sent to teach devils how to get out of hell, and they endeavor to destroy him.

How much the world misses the Koreshan System! Why; gone, failed? No; neither gone nor failed; still upon a solid foundation, and moving with irresistible force in the world. We mean that the world misses us because, like the Spaniards firing at American vessels, the spent shells of fallacy cannot hit us; they are missiles!

Truth is positive, and puts forth positive claims of its absoluteness. Knowledge does not admit that it may be fallacy. Modern fragmented systems of religion, science, and reform, founded upon assumptions, claim only probability. Koreshan Universology is positive truth, and demonstrates its premise.

The republican argument, that the highest wages to skilled workmen must come through protection of industries, is refuted by the simple fact that the skilled workmen in free trade England get more pay for less actual work than any other skilled laborers in the world.

In the tilt of orthodoxy with infidelity, on the theological seesaw, the church presumes to possess the greatest weight. We admit it; the heaviest end always goes down,—and Babylon is falling!

All thought is generated in material cells of the brain; there is no "all thought" apart from matter.

In the disputes between the materialists and the spiritualists, the mind is left out of the question entirely.

The weapons of papacy are not formidable; the Catholic church fires Roman candles at the masses!

If some men were honest with themselves, they would discover that they are dishonest.

Death and hell are grave questions, which the clergyman fails to solve at funerals.

The Almighty has the power of life, but the devil has the power of death.

books, pamphlets, tracts, and periodicals, all of which are published at a low price, and appear to enjoy an enormous circulation.

The principal journal issued by the Koreshans is a large 16-page weekly newspaper called THE FLAMING SWORD, which is published in Chicago every Friday, and is now in its 13th volume. It is sold for a dollar a year, which must be regarded as remarkably cheap for a volume of over 800 large pages of certainly interesting and instructive reading matter. Other periodicals that are or have been published are THE GUIDING STAR, THE PLOWSHARE AND PRUNING HOOK, and THE SALVATOR AND SCIENTIST.

It is somewhat difficult to give details of the teachings of Dr. Teed and the Koreshans. They accept the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, and assert that Koreshanity is a revival of primitive Christianity. The unique feature of the Koreshan Theology is that God in his perfected state is man; the Almighty reached his perfection and unity 1900 years ago, in the manhood of Jesus, the divine flesh and Word. Hence, Koreshanity undertakes to exalt Jesus to the Godhood. The System teaches that man is the habitation and permanent dwelling place of Deity, and that the spiritual worlds are in man. In Jesus dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He and his Father were one, and hence the triune principles were in Him—the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. He was also both male and female, being the bridegroom possessing the bride, and because of this fact He was immortal and became the parent of immortal life, a condition yet to be attained by the human race. The Koreshans believe in reincarnation, teach and practice celibacy, but admit married persons as members, advocate the universal salvation of all mankind in the future, and believe the Golden Age will be ushered in within the not very distant future. Koreshans practice communism and co-operative life, and are strongly opposed to the competitive system.

Perhaps, however, (to some at any rate) the most remarkable feature of Koreshanity is its teachings regarding cosmogony and astronomy. Dr. Teed and his numerous followers assert that the whole universe is "within" the earth, and that we live "inside" the globe on its concave surface, and that the earth contains "within itself" the whole of the solar system. This peculiar theory is not only supported by scientific arguments, but has been demonstrated by actual experiments. At Naples, in Florida, U. S. A., some time ago a series of most elaborate experiments were made by competent scientists, and it was then demonstrated beyond the possibility of contradiction, that the surface of the water of the ocean is concave, and not convex as is generally supposed. These experiments attracted considerable attention in America, and some of the leading newspapers published long illustrated articles about the matter. The Koreshans have also published a 200-page volume with numerous illustrations and diagrams, and now they boldly challenge the whole scientific world to disprove the truth of their theory. Up to latest dates no prominent scientist has been willing to enter the lists, and so—in their opinion at least—the Koreshans declare that they have triumphantly demonstrated the truth of their teachings.

It may as well be admitted once for all that a careful study of Dr. Teed's religious-scientific system reveals very many excellencies. Koreshanity is certainly complete and profound in all its syncretical details, and is well worthy of the attention of the scholar, the theologian, and the student, and even those who are attracted by novelties and enjoy the curious will find much in Koreshanity to amuse, instruct, and perhaps interest them.—The Wedderburn Express, Australia, Jan. 13, 1899.

Sincere Appreciation of Courage and Patience.

EDITOR SWORD:—

Allow me to congratulate you upon your excellent article in a recent SWORD, "Is The Universe Large or Small?"

Your answers to correspondents also, are increasingly interesting and instructive. To my mind they constitute one of the strongest and most valuable features of the paper.

I feel sure that I am but expressing the general sentiment of your readers in my sincere appreciation of your earnest and enthusiastic articles. Disinterested labor in behalf of humanity requires a large capital stock of courage and patience. I am glad there is no danger of yours being exhausted.

Yours for the Truth,

As Others See Us.

A Chicago Journal Admits that the Facts Seem to Prove the Earth's Concavity.

"THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY," issued by the Guiding Star Publishing House, 6308 Wentworth Ave., Chicago, is designed to break to the public the facts determined by the Geodetic Surveys carried on at Naples, Florida, under the direction of Professor U. G. Morrow, which facts are supposed to prove beyond dispute the concavity of the surface of the earth, thereby establishing the theory of Koreshanity and making the Copernican system of astronomy become at once an absurdity. Professor Morrow is doing a good work in testing the foundations on which we stand, and any new facts which can be maintained scientifically are worthy of careful attention. We admit that the details of the experiments seem to prove his case so far as it is susceptible of proof by a projection of a straight line. If the facts are as stated in the volume before us, then we must admit that the surface of the earth on which we live does curve upward; in other words, is concave.

But those facts we can only accept at present conditionally, while admitting that the methods employed do seem accurate and scientific, and the spirit displayed by Professor Morrow is quite admirable, courting as he does the closest investigation of his methods.

But the Koreshan theory of Astronomy we cannot accept. It seems to us to rest on the statement of Dr. Cyrus R. Teed alone, except that part of it which relates to the concavity of the earth's surface which may have been demonstrated; but even on that point we wait for more light. We know that no theory can stand which is not built on facts, and we wait the final result with a calm confidence that the Copernican system, which has stood the test of several centuries, cannot be overthrown. Everyone should read the work and judge for himself. The Good Citizen, Chicago.

Don't Wait Until It's Too Late.

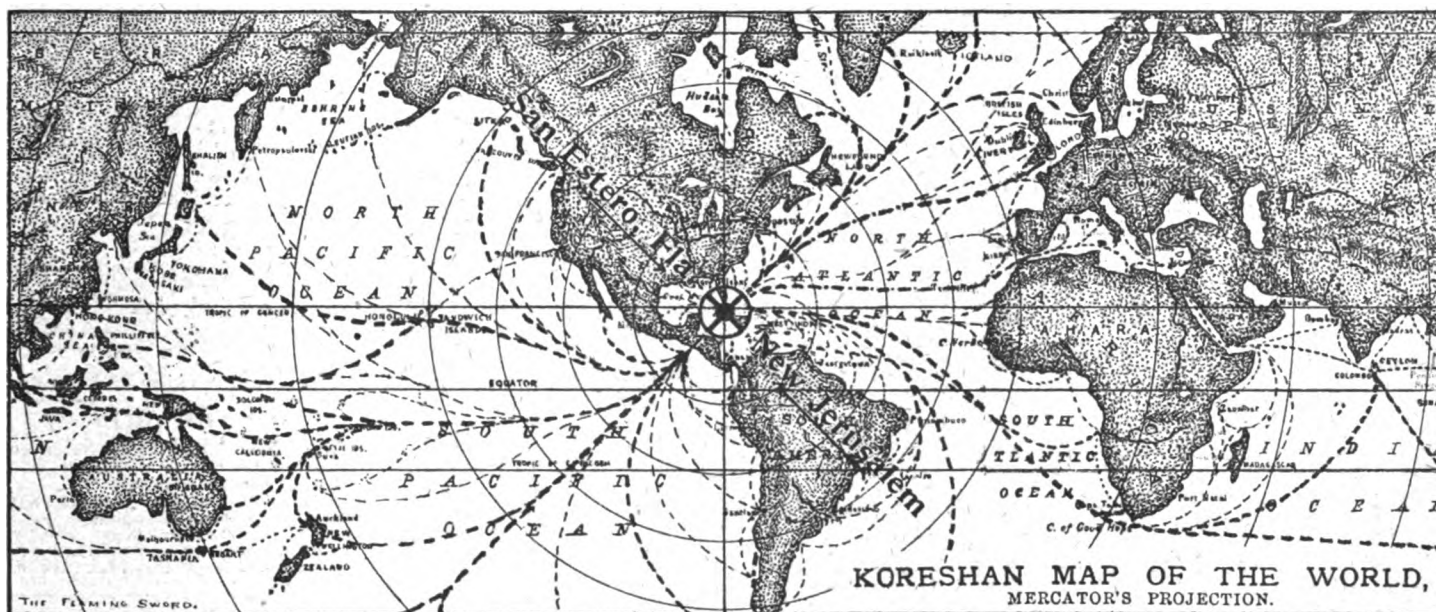

Some of my acquaintances call me a fool for accepting Koreshanity. They remind me of the man who bought a crow and put him in a cage; when his friends asked him why he put him in the cage, he said that a man had informed him that a crow would live 500 years; but that he did not believe it, and was going to keep him and see.

There is a very large class of people lying back watching Koreshanity, to see if it will live 2,000 years; and if it does, they will take some stock in it! I want to say to that class, that Koreshan stock may be obtained now; the books are opened, and the stock is non-assessable and without usury; they may obtain the cream of the business without watered stock. The time is coming, and is not far off, when some who now have the opportunity cannot obtain it; then they will be crying for oil to put in their lamps.

My acquaintances call me a crank for believing in Koreshanity. When you show me a man who condemns anything before he understands it, I call that man a fool. Now, I hear some creed-bound orthodox say, that the man who wrote that is not a Christian, for the Bible says that he that calls his brother a fool is in danger of hell-fire. That Bible quotation is all right; first find out who your brother is. I have found out who mine is; he is the one who will cut the loaf right in the middle and give his neighbor half; in other words, put his money in one common treasury, just as the apostles did nineteen hundred years ago.—H. P. MAYO, FLA.

Special Offer Extended.—We have decided to extend our offer which terminated January 15,—to send one copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY free, to all who send us $1.00 for a new subscription, or renewal of subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD. Many of our readers availed themselves of this generous offer. We now extend it to March 24, 1899. The giving of the book will be an extra inducement to new readers to subscribe for the inimitable FLAMING SWORD, and afford our workers an excellent opportunity and incentive to work up their own vicinities. You can procure many subscriptions for us in 30 days, and we trust you will arouse a telling interest in the Koreshan System during the time of the extension of this offer of the book free with every subscription.

"Old Folks at Home."

We have just received a copy of the finest variations on "Old Folks at Home" that has ever been issued in America. Composed by J. R. Lerman. It is a grand and showy Piano Composition, brilliant and not too difficult, suitable for concerts, exhibitions, and parlor entertainments. It winds up with an elegant Negro Rag Time finale on this most beautiful melody. The title page is very handsome, and contains a correct photoengraving of Adelina Patti, the great singer. All good players on the piano should be in possession of a copy. Price, 75 cents, retail. All readers of our paper will receive a copy, post-paid, by sending 25 cents in silver or postage stamps to the Union Mutual Music and Novelty Co., No. 20 East 14th St., New York.

LIBRARY OF

Wisdom of Life. By Arthur Schopenhauer. Paper, 25c.

"Schopenhauer is not simply a moralist writing in his study and applying abstract principles to the conduct of thought and action, but is also in a large measure a man of the world, with a firm grasp of the actual, and is therefore able to speak in a way which, to use Bacon's phrase, comes home to men's business and bosoms. The essentially practical character of his Wisdom of Life is evidenced by his frequent recourse to illustrations, and his singularly apt use of them. Mr. Bailey Saunders' introductory essay adds much of value and interest to a singularly suggestive volume."—Manchester Examiner.

Counsels and Maxims. By A. Schopenhauer. Uniform with Wisdom of Life. 25c.

"Let your view of Schopenhauer be what it may, you cannot help enjoying and admiring the wealth of observation, reflection, and wisdom in Counsels and Maxims."—Truth.

Religion: A Dialogue and other Essays. By Arthur Schopenhauer. Paper, 25 cts.

"In this modest volume we have a selection of very readable essays from the writings of the famous pessimistic philosopher, clothed in good, intelligible English."—Literary World.

The Art of Literature. A Series of Essays. By A. Schopenhauer. Paper, 25c.

"The essays on authorship, style, criticism and genius are among the most attractive and suggestive of Schopenhauer's writings."—Athenaeum.

"Whatever else these pages do, they provoke thought, and their bitterness is more often a tonic than an irritant."—Inquirer.

Studies in Pessimism. A Series of Essays. By A. Schopenhauer. Paper, 25c.

"Like the former translations this one is extremely well done, and the volume should be popular."—Glasgow Herald.

"If others have been the prophets of Schopenhauer to the mass of English readers, Mr. Saunders may fairly claim to have been the philosopher's interpreter. He has known how to make the pessimist not only intelligible, but attractive to the general reader."—Scotsman.

Schopenhauer's Essays. The above five volumes in one book. Cloth, 75 cts.

The Wilderness of Worlds.—

A secular and up-to-date scientific book. By G. W. Morehouse. This work is printed from large clear type, on fine paper, and is substantially bound, (uniform with the Library of Liberal Classics) in brown, silk-ribbed cloth, with gilt top and specially designed side-stamp. The engraved illustrations add interest and value to the text; and, to insure a large sale, the price has been placed at $1.00 per copy.

"This book is a popular treatise on the 'Evolution of Matter from Nebula to Man, and the Life-Orbit of a Star.' The facts given by Mr. Morehouse are based on the latest discoveries of modern research; the authorities quoted include the most advanced thinkers and specialists in the various branches of scientific enquiry; the arguments used are as plain and clear as they are convincing, and the entire volume is as interesting as it is instructive—as eloquent as it is profound."

Life and Immortality of Man.—

By A. Gibbs Gabrielle. One volume, post 8vo, in paper covers. Price, 50 cts.

This unique work contains much good sense, reason, and philosophy expressed in short, pithy paragraphs, somewhat after the manner of the Moral Maxims of La Rochefoucauld. It is a strong advocate of Free thought, and deserves a place in the library of every liberal.

Opposites of the Universe.

By MANIEL SANDS.

In six parts, paper covers, at 50 cts. each.

Part I.—THE SCIENTIFIC IMMORTALITY.

Part II.—THE SCIENTIFIC RELIGION.

Part III.—THE SCIENTIFIC GOD.

Part IV.—A DISCOURSE ABOUT CONDUCT.

The following are in press and will be published in the same neat style.

Part V.—A DISCOURSE ABOUT THE LAW OF SUCCESS AND FAILURE OF THINGS.

Part VI.—THE SCIENTIFIC UNIVERSE.

"I am thankful for the opportunity of reading Part I. of the 'OPPOSITES OF THE UNIVERSE.' Those who commence it will read it through, and lay it down desiring to follow the author further into the 'whirl of opposites.'"

"The plan of the work permits of the presentation of conflicting opinions on these great subjects in a way to hold attention and bring out sharp contrasts. The copious and valuable quotations (some thirty pages) from leading thinkers, adds to the variety and usefulness of its contents.

"If the doctrine of the immortality of universal man, as presented by the author, has little to encourage great expectations in the average mind, the orthodox notions have less; and the former is probably true, while the latter is evidently absurd." Yours respectfully,

GEORGE W. MOREHOUSE.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a commonsense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell, we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions
of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profound-est question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer.
The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Osteological Analysis of Structured Man and Cosmos.

Part XI.

The Physical Cosmos the Analogue of Man; Bones in Mental Solution; Skeleton of the Resurrection in the Doctrines of Life.

WE HAVE attempted in former chapters to present to the understanding of the student of Koreshanity, the truth regarding the ultimate destiny of the race in the organic development of the arch-natural macrocosm. In this portrayal, we have conducted the exploitations of the mind along the lines of comparative anatomy, into the broader field of the universological structure of the cosmogonic integer. We have shown that the cosmogonic structure, in its most exterior and ultimate manifestation, is a cell or egg, in which obtains all existing life—including man. We have endeavored, through the elucidation of the principles of analogy as applied to organic development, to so define the laws of form as to insure to the mental amplitude the possible conception of the human characteristics of the universe in its totality.

While we may not be able to impress upon the un-amplified intellectual retina the perception of the anthropostic form of cosmogony, we can iterate and reiterate this vast and ultimately triumphant truth: The alchemico-organic cosmos (the physical universe), in its totality, is the form of man. For this reason the ancients called it the macrocosm, in contradistinction to the microcosm, which, as an individual, constituted the universe in its least form; and for this reason we urge this truth, and because, in the construction of the social organism, this pattern of universal construction must be inevitably followed.

The universe is the man in his greatest form. The individual is the universe in its least form. The human race, when evolved into the amplitude of its perfected organism,—the race developed into the kingdom of organic righteousness,—has all the forms, characteristics, and functions of the man. The kingdom of God in the earth is the Grand Man; the skeleton of which, in the order of its resurrection, must first be manifest both according to law and to the prophetic records, which necessarily conform to law.

We have already portrayed the comparative anatomy of the ethmoid bone as belonging to the vidual structure, the ethmoid as correspondingly pertaining to the alchemico-organic cosmos, and we now more thoroughly analyze the ethmoid as the central and polaric factor in the resurrection of the social fabric. The age will eventuate in the development of the firstfruits of the resurrection. It will be given to them to comprehend the mysteries of Godliness, as they are being revealed to the world through the Koreshan movement, because they are the awakening offspring of the Eternal God. The wise will comprehend the language of wisdom, and none but the wise may understand.

It must not be forgotten that the ethmoid is the sieve bone. It is like a sieve. This is the meaning of the term, and the term implies the function. It is the function of the polar point of anthropostic progress. First, let it be understood that man is the environment of the spiritual world. The spiritual and angelic worlds (invisible) are in man, not figuratively, but in fact. It is the world where God himself resides: "God is in the generation of the righteous." Language cannot be more emphatic and explicit; but the world does not believe it. Within the spiritual world, which is nowhere but in man, there is now gathered the New Jerusalem, aggregated into one mental center. This New Jerusalem—which is a spiritual city, made up of spiritual angels—is the product of a general gathering from the world of humanity, of such as love the Lord and recognize the divine humanity as it was in the Lord Jesus Christ. This city is the strength (etsem), bones ("rib"), derived from the Lord himself, as during the dark ages the two witnesses (the Lord) lay dead "in the street of the great city [the church], which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." The gathering of this city at the close or foot of the dispensation, is the process of taking the rib (bones, strength) from the dead church, as she sleeps in mental and spiritual darkness.

The Lord entered the church through the descent of the Holy Spirit. The church appropriated, absorbed, the life of God. By this process the life of God was taken into the church, and thus was fulfilled the Scripture: "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day"—at the end of the age. The Lord's body was dissolved, converted to spirit, and absorbed by the church. When the church died (slept), the Lord—who had been absorbed by the church—died also. This was the death of the two witnesses. For the Son of God bore witness of himself; and the Father who was in him also bore witness of him.

The Father and the Son in one Lord God, constituted the two witnesses; and when the church fell and died, the two witnesses were dead. The New Jerusalem is taken from this death while the Lord God—the man whom God made in his own image and likeness—sleeps through the mediæval or dark ages. At this time the New Jerusalem exists as John saw her when he penetrated, by his prescient vision, the distant future. She comprises the bones of the resurrection, the science of immortal life. The New Jerusalem is none other than the resurrected Christ in her spiritual quality, whence she must descend to formulate—in the natural—the manifest and material sons of God. The specific point of her descent is through the prophet of this age, in whom she is gathered, and around whom will be aggregated the anthropostic elements of the osseous nucleus, as she deposits the framework of the new kingdom. The New Jerusalem is the strength of the man in the osseous solution. She descends to meet her husband, the humanity about to be resurrected. "I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, descending from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Her husband is the dead church, about to arise to life by virtue of her influx.

The Bones are Held in Solution in the Currents of the Encephalic Circulation.

Perhaps the student will bear with us as we recapitulate the factors of that physiological process, through which the fluids of the brain hold in solution and thence precipitate the osseous structure. The primary deposit of that which contributes to the anatomical framework of the human organism, is made in the pineal gland or conarium. It is a composite precipitate into the gland, from the secretions entering the gland from both the cerebrum and cerebellum, the ultimate fibers of both these organs terminating at the conarium. The basis of this precipitate is carbonaceous.

In the action of the two brains, and by virtue of the contraction of the fibres of the crura pinealis, the secretion is discharged into the aqueduct of Sylvius, where it is dissolved. It thence passes through the third ventricle to the tuber cinereum, passing through the infundibulum (funnel) into the glandula vitæ or pituitary gland. Here an elaboration takes place which formulates various secretions, which pass out in as many channels; but especially at this point is the magneto-electric energy produced, which converges through the fibres of the dura mater to the apex of the ethmoid. The electric fluid, meeting a counter current, begins the deposition of the bones of the body. The spiritual world, centering in the New Jerusalem, corresponds to this operation in the human brain: one being a physiological function of the microcosm, the other constituting the analogical correspondence in the anthropostic macrocosm.

As in the vidual the currents of energy descend into the body, depositing first the bone, then the muscle and the various solids of the body, until the flesh rounds out and perfects the living, active, and symmetrical form, so will the bones (strength) held in solution in the New Jerusalem, first precipitate in the framework of the solidarity of a new social fabric. The perfect skeleton of the universal man must first be formed, then will follow the perfection of the structure, as it is rounded out into organic life.

As Described in Ezekiel, the Bones Must First be Resurrected, After Which the Flesh Will Be Put Upon Them.

We are just now reaching the period in the precession of the equinoxes, corresponding to the time when it was said, God made man in his own image and likeness, after which he breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives, and man became a living soul. The process of communicating the afflatus of immortality is a uniform vitalizing impartation, invariably proceeding from the personal Messianic manifestation and power. God never overshadows the human race but through, first, the personal Messiah, thence through his theocrasis (translation), from which proceeds the baptism. The inspiration of the church nineteen hundred years ago, was the inbreathing of the Holy Spirit proceeding directly from the theocrasis of the Lord. That was the baptism of the inner life of man. The baptism to come will be the baptism of the external personal forms of those who will comprise the external arch-natural kingdom.

The spiritual or internal man of the primitive church breathed the Holy Spirit, when that man had sufficiently matured to exercise the function of respiration. The man was first created, the spiritual lungs were developed, then came the breath of God, the Holy Spirit proceeding directly from the Lord's personality, and the spiritual man became inspired. Now there must first be structured the organic arch-natural model; the empire must be formulated into its organic shape, then comes the Messianic theocrasis, thence the absorption (the baptism), when the kingdom is ushered into its organic life.

There can be no haphazard work of construction. The fabrication of the empire will be according to the laws of astrological order, and personalities will be chosen and adjusted in the building of the temple of the arch-natural city and kingdom, according to the meridians and parallels of celesto-terrestrial relation and origin. A wiser than Solomon arises to determine and adjust the elements of the anthropostic structure. He is the Good Shepherd, and his sheep will hear his voice. The wolves will come also.

The Science of Mental Therapeutics.

Part VI.

Genuine Healing is the Restoration of Man to Natural Immortality Through the Messianic Focus, the Polar Point of Human Aspiration.

THE PROCESS of genuine healing, or the perfect physiological restoration of man to immortality and incorruptibility, attains its climax in the production of the sons of God. This mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruptibility, signifies that we shall be changed, not in some other world, but right here in the body. It is the province of the great Physician to so apply the laws of life, as to determine the destiny of the race toward this zenith of human aspiration and the divine purpose.

So soon as the lovers of Koreshanity are sufficiently imbued with the supreme importance of our work as to begin to be actuated by the life it inculcates, physiological changes will be made manifest, and the causes of mental and physical disturbances will be eliminated from the vidual organism. Health will gradually overpower disease, and physical disability will gradually succumb to the overmastering potency of the radiating emanations from the fountainhead of the elixir of life.

What gave the Lord his power to heal? In other words, why was it possible for dynamis (virtue) to go forth from him? First, because, as the recognized Messianic focus, he became the center of influx of human desire. The energies generated in the wills of those who looked for his appearing, flowed into him as their central focus of aspiration; second, because, by virtue of his being the central point of human involution, he had that power of resistance by which he could transpose whatsoever of sensuality was convergent from human imperfections, to righteousness potentialized in him and redistributed to those who received virtue from him.

He was the polar point of human love. This made of him the magneto-electric nucleus of potential energy. It constituted him also the center of human hatred, and by virtue of these two conflicting potentialities he redissolved, at the consummation of his hour, to that overshadowing spiritual emanation by which the world was baptized, and by which the new age entered upon its significant and progressively glorious career.

The Lord Jesus the Christ was the focal point of both the substances of love from those who loved him, and of hatred from those who hated him. These two forces insured his theocrasis, and by these was his visible and tangible body dissolved and reduced to pneumatic energy—Holy Spirit. Every atom entering into the components of his physiological structure was destroyed as matter and transited to energy. He, as Holy Spirit, was absorbed by his disciples. The Holy Spirit was a fluid. It was substantial;—it was the substance of his body. It was composed of the thousands of spiritual entities gathered into himself as declared: "He gathered the lambs with his arm, and carried them in his bosom." This absorption was in perfect agreement with his previous declaration: "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. * * * Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day," at the end of the dispensation.

The Lord in his descending and divine animal life was precipitated into his church. The church thus ate him; that is, appropriated his life and fulfilled what he had declared to his followers. The eucharist and the Lord's supper, also the covenant in the various churches, are a misunderstood representation of this great and marvelous truth of the Christian system.—the Lord was eaten. He was the Passover Lamb, and his personality, in the manifest external life of Jehovah, passed over from the Jewish age to the disciples and church of the Christian age, and the Lord was buried in the race, to rise again at the close of the dispensation. This is also in conformity to the Buddhistic conception of absorption into Nirvana. The only distinction between the Buddhistic and the Christian being that one—the Christian—is the principle in application, while in theosophy, as derived from Buddhism, it is a vagary accompanying a practical denial of the Messianic potency and office of the Son of God.

The potential energy which in the Lord began to assume the force of kinetic energy in the vitalizing dynamis (dunamis) that proceeded from him, even before his theocrasis, began its work prior to his crucifixion, increasing in power until after his resurrection it culminated in his magneto-electric combustion. The Lord's power to heal constituted the least part of the philosophic potentiality of the Messianic presence; and it is the acme of absurdity to call the quackery of so called "christian science" healing, (Christian science. The Lord was severe in his denunciation of those who defiled the external symbol of his Father's house; a greater denunciation and castigation await the present hypocritical perversion of the sacred temple, which that Hebrew structure was intended to portray. So called "christian science" is a mercantile prostitution of a greater temple than the typical one of Solomon; and when "the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple [in his potential force], even the Messenger of the Covenant [conjunction], whom ye delight in," he will hurl from the sacred precincts of his holy temple, these desecrators and defamers of his resurrecting Word.

Lest it appear from what has been written, that we deny the power of suggestion in certain mental and physical changes accruing from the influences of hypnotism, we would most emphatically state that suggestion is often sufficient to gain the acquiescence of an external personality, as well as to insure the response of a spiritual entity. Sometimes more than simple suggestion is necessary. From the Lord Jesus, a mere suggestion to the spirits possessing the man of Gadara was sufficient to insure their departure. Suggestion from him was enough, because they knew who he was, the Holy One of God, and they said, "Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" If some other man than the Lord Jesus had attempted to dislodge them, we have no assurance that he would have met with the same response. The probabilities are to the contrary.

Spiritual entities who love the habitation (the man) in which they dwell, are only too willing to perform the bidding of the central mind around which they cluster; and they await the dictates of this mind to speed them on their mission of mercy, when this is the office indicated, or to counterfeit the miracles of the Lord, when the mind around which they group is antichristian.

Business Success Through Mental Force.

Sarcastic Suggestions Concerning the Formation of a Gigantic Trust to Increase the Ills of Humanity in the Interests of Physicians, Druggists, and Undertakers.

MONEY is all the rage. It was the prime factor in "the temptation of our first parents." "The love of money is the root of all evil." As life in the world is useless without this root, we have concluded to give our readers the information requisite to its procurement. If our readers are abreast of the times, they are well posted upon the importance of and necessity for the pooling of issues for the purpose of acquiring this world's goods.

A large class of people is coming to recognize the influence of mind upon mind and matter. "Christian scientists," spiritualists, faith healers, hypnotists, mental scientists, et al, have turned this knowledge into the regular channel of commercial intercourse. What the Lord did through his love for the world, these mountebanks are doing for speculation. Now there are two points worthy of consideration for those who desire to make money. The first is, that what the mind has power to do for good,—as represented by the Lord—the devil has the power to do for evil. As "the love of money is the root of all evil," and as money is the god which the world worships, we have discovered a way in which this god may be successfully appeased, and we hasten to inform our readers of the discovery.

Our readers are not ignorant of the fact that the formation of trusts is getting to be the recognized channel of successful commercial enterprise. Our second subject for consideration, and the corollary of the first, is that we regard a great trust combination as the surest and most expeditious method of attaining this greatly desired boon for mankind in the present exigency.

The influence of mind which one individual may possess over another, might be placed upon the general basis of faith, and the exercise of it might be called prayer, in order to harmonize the mind on a potential point of unification. Pool the prayers, then, is the first suggestion. Let the doctors, undertakers, "christian scientists," hypnotists, spiritualists, mental healers, massage operators, and mental therapists pool their interests for a general commercial trust, and pray for more people to get sick, and more people to die. This would make business lively for all concerned. The druggists could afford to enter into the same combination, as they are a numerous class, and the people don't take drugs enough to make business enterprising for the M. D.'s. Such a combination would obviate the necessity for so much special legislation for the medical fraternity, which believes its craft is in danger from the tendency—gaining ground—toward a repugnance in the mind to a transformation of the stomach of the common humanity from the ordinary duty of grinding sausage to that of a chemical laboratory and drug repository.

If our readers require any further information on the subject, address the pool department of our System.

The Restoration of Divine Imperialism.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

JESUS the Christ has been claimed by the anarchists as the great exemplar of anarchy; by the socialists as the chief apostle of socialism. Equally legitimate is the claim that He was the Pre-Eminent Imperialist whom kings by divine right have recognized as King of kings and Lord of lords. It is written of him that "He spake as one having authority, and not as the scribes." We hear him calmly announcing, "One is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." As the fulfilment of the prophecy, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace," he legitimately looks humanity in the eye and says, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." This is rank imperialism; a declaration of himself, a man, as the absolute center of absolute authority, to whom all humanity is morally bound to address the query, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

The entire universe is supremely an expression of imperialism. In its organization we find a central sun, surrounded by all grades of tributaries and dependencies of varying degrees of potency, planes of activity, and qualities of function. We find all these surrounding expressions of being, dependent upon that central sun for their specific vitalizations and emplacements in relationship to the sun and to each other. The supreme end of their being is obviously that of the maintenance of their imperial sun, their own recognized life source and the supreme glory of their ultimate existence. Corresponding to this alchemico-organic revelation of the universe as an imperial system, we look for an anthropostic expression of the same, and primarily we seek the Son of man—the projected involved apex of the organo-vital universe; we look legitimately for his surrounding dependencies and sustenance, for a divine aristocracy, a divine republicanism, a divine socialism, a divine anarchy, a divine individualism.

The final form of universal perfected human government must and will be an anthropostic organic unity, the veritable counterpart of what is revealed to us by the true science of the physical universe. It is written that "God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. And God set them in the firmament of heaven to give light upon the earth, and to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness." It is written also that these lights were to be "for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years." For nineteen centuries, millions of the noblest and truest spirits of the anthropostic universe, as stars, have shone on through the cycles of the great falling away, earth's ever-deepening night; they have confronted Jehovah Jesus, and sung, "Sun of my soul, thou Savior dear." They have recognized him, the man Christ Jesus, as the stellar center of that celestial sphere, which projects on its spiritual confines the solar light of the spirito-natural heavens to give light to them that are in the earth, of whom it is written: "A people which sat in darkness saw a great light." The long night of the ages is now ending, because the Sun of the natural heavens, the Sun of true science, is arising and shining to dispel it. The Morning Stars are singing together to arouse the sleeping sons of men: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

It is rational to believe that as sin came by man, and death by sin, so by man must come also salvation from that sin and resurrection from that death, according to the universal law of perpetuity. Since the Lord projected himself as spiritual energy into a race dead in trespasses and sins, that energy must ultimate in the circumferential man of that race, who, by virtue of being the apex of its median line of infoldment, embodies in himself the power and possibilities of giving the most perfect expression of that projected energy of Jehovah in the natural and scientific degree. This circumferential man of the completed cycle of the Gentiles is the FULNESS OF THE GENTILES. He is the stellar center of the arch-natural, or divine sonship of the Golden Age; he is the restored Israel of God. Around him as the Emperor, the Wonderful, the Counselor, must gather the lost tribes upon whom is written, Lo Ammi (not my people), in that they forsook the altars of their God Jehovah, rejected his circumcision, and neglected his sabbaths. To these lost ones does the fulness of the Gentiles come, that he may be to them a circumcision and a Savior, to the outermost courts of their polluted flesh, that they may return like the prodigal and shine forth as the sun of the arch-natural heavens in the kingdom of their Father.

This circumferential or Gentile man, this Sun of science, this Builder with the plumb-line of commercial equation, declares the end of the times of the Gentiles, and himself as their Sign; he declares the presence of Aquarius in the land of Ephraim, who pours the water of science, the water of regeneration, upon the soil planted with the seed of Jehovah, that it may bring forth his life to inherit his throne. The great antitype of Daniel's vision is about to be re-formed from chaotic humanity, in whom the spirit of Jehovah is awaking to deliver up the kingdoms of this world to the Father, the imperial Head of a theocracy, who will reveal the glory of Jehovah and inherit the earth.

Those who mentally shrink from the contemplation of the establishment of an imperialistic system of universal government, do so because all that they have known of imperialism has been learned from the history of the dark ages from which we are just emerging. This emergence is owing to the activities of the spirit of the truth now operating in the most matured mentalities, opening their understanding of the principles of scientific organic unity, and to the truth that the laws and principles operative in one domain are correspondentially operative in all. We find the physical universe to be an imperial system of alchemico-organic life. We find the human organism to be an imperialism; even the brain itself has an imperial, governing center. The rational faculties exercised in the study of the universal operations of law, and not educational prejudices, should be the powers to serve us in our efforts to attain the science of perfect human government, and our protection from all forms of imperialism now so liable to manifest themselves from the realms of the ruling plutocracy, whether we like it or not.

The imperial Head of the divine order will certainly appear to all who hunger and thirst for the righteousness of the imperial law; for his Sign in the heavens and in the earth, the true science which is the power by which the divine imperialism will be established, is already operative in the minds of men, and nothing can hinder the vortex of the coming revolution from drawing into itself all who have eaten of the passover Lamb, and have received the mark of the blood of the new covenant upon the lintel and upon the door-posts.

The pre-eminent characteristic of the legitimate imperial Head of the divine order must be rational self-control; this is supreme dominance, and the only dominance that commands the respect of the rational mind. This is the perfect work of patience, of long suffering, forbearing love, love which seeketh not her own. Such love generates the legitimate ruler, the King by divine right, who can rule well the great household of intelligent faith, which adds to its faith virtue, and to its virtue knowledge. Before him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him." He shall rule over us as our Sun and our Shield.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

MAN IS ANALOGOUS to the great living organic cell of the physical universe; he involves all that the universe contains; not on the scale of dimension, but in elements and functions. Man is the highest product of universal activity, and necessarily contains all of the kinds of alchemical substances that the great macrocosmic world contains. Prof. Langley, in his "New Astronomy," referring to the exhibits in the British Museum, of all the material substances of which man is composed, in the exact proportion as they exist in the human system, says: "They suggest not merely the complexity of our constitutions, but the identity of our elements with those found by means of the spectroscope, not alone in the sun, but even in the far distant stars and nebulae, and its conclusions lead us to think that the ancients were nearly right when they called man a microcosm or little universe. We have literally within our bodies samples of the most important elements of which the great universe is composed, and you and I are not only like each other, brothers in humanity, but children of the sun and stars in a literal sense, having bodies made in great part of the same things that make Sirius and Aldebaran." Within the limitations of the great cell of the physical world are two universes, specifically related and co-ordinated, each complete and perfect, analogous in every respect,—the alchemico-organic world, and the organo-vital, or world of man. How does man obtain all of the elements of the physical world? The perfect man is the universe infolded; he is the highest product of the physical universe, the seed of the great cosmos, and involves all its functions and materials. When man understands himself he understands the great universe, its form and its functions; and when he applies the knowledges and laws of the great cosmos he reaches the pivot of involution, the apex of being, the climax of existence; he completes his ascent, and sits upon the throne of the universe as its Creator and God. If the universe is not a unit, if it is not a cell which produces man as its seed of perpetuity, how does man involve its substances and functions? The Copernican system cannot relate man to the stars and nebulae supposed to be trillions of miles distant!

"The founders of nearly all religions were ignorant men, who could neither read nor write." The founders of the world's great religions—religions which have prevailed in the world to any considerable extent, were men of extraordinary character. The degree of superficial smartness which penned the above agnostic expression, with a little ability to decipher the orthographical symbols of one language, presumes superiority over the minds of great religious reformers and founders, who possessed mental dynamis sufficient to impulse the minds of millions of people for thousands of years! It means something to stand at the head of a dispensation, at the head of great cycles; to involve the life of a race or of a world, elaborate the forces, transmute the negative substances to the positive state, the energies of darkness to light, and radiate them into the heart and mind of generations. It is greater to think from the standpoint of the highest principles, to stand at the center of circumspection of great circumferences and become the positive impuler of the mental world, than to be a mere negative cesspool for all the rubbish and absurdities of hundreds of conflicting fallacies of modern science. No agnostic will ever, or can ever, reach the plane of influence of Jesus the Christ, or even of Buddha, Confucius, or Mahomet, for the simple reason that truth is greater than fallacy, and the heroes of truth reach a higher plane of actual influence and force in the world, than all the devotees of fallacy!

Concerning the futility of modern scientific research, Popular Science contains the following: "Certain it is that the scientist is at present baffled in his search for this ignis fatuus which we call life. Just as he thought he had almost reached it by chemical means, it has slipped from his grasp and he finds that it is not a chemical problem at all. Where to turn his attention now, he hardly knows. But science is never satisfied, and we may confidently expect that his probe will in time, be turned in a new direction, and who can tell with what successes, and with what disappointments?" The time is at hand when the scientists of the modern world will be compelled to make more astounding admissions than the above; it will be when they have turned in all directions and failed in utter disappointment. Chemistry, astronomy, physics, geology, medical and psychical research, have all failed. Koreshan Science, promulgated from the basis of scientific principles and demonstrated facts, will soon claim the attention of the world in the evidences of the solution of the problems and mysteries of life and existence; and win a following among the millions!

The evolutionist laughs at the modern Christian idea that the universe began to exist about 6,000 years ago, and attempts to put its beginning still further back,—a million years, perhaps. We object to both conclusions. The great universal structure is eternal, and yet we believe in the beginning and the end. The beginning of the world was only nineteen hundred years ago, when the heavens and the earth were created. The supreme cause of the universe is Man, manifest in his perfection at the beginning of the present dispensation,—the Seed Man, Jesus the Christ, the only kind of a Creator, the only kind of a true God, the only beginning and ending the world has ever had. Jesus was the first man of the universe, just as McKinley is the first man,—holding the highest position of any man in America; yet there were men living before Jesus, and men lived before Adam. The world has always lived, and will always live. In the seed, cause and effect are one; the seed is the beginning and the end of a world or cycle of creation.

A class of reformers think that papacy is the most formidable foe of human liberty. Is it an evidence of wisdom to find one enemy and ignore all the others? Protestantism is not better and no worse than Catholicism; there is a semblance of organic unity in the mother of harlots, while the forces of disintegration are operative in the scores of daughters. The worst enemy to the human race is that which deprives it of the liberty to live; that reduces millions to poverty; that steals away its energies expended in the products of industry; that which reduces the majority of the human family to abject slavery. The Founder of Koreshanity has discovered the cause and source of all the world's evils. It is not papacy alone, but the love of money; it is the superstition, false economy, and perverted commerce in church, state, and sex. The oligarchy of the millionaire is more oppressive than the hierarchy of Catholicism; but even this will soon be no more, for the ax is laid at the root of the tree!

Cyrano de Bergerac has been revived in the nineteenth century in many ways—not alone in the odd drama played by Mansfield. The quaint French author lived three hundred years ago, and first conceived the idea of the heavenly bodies being inhabited. His work, "The Comical History of the States and Empires of the Worlds of the Sun and Moon," was written as pure fiction; but in the mind of the modern astronomer, it has become a matter of actual belief! The old work of fiction has become the groundwork of the occult astronomy of Flammarion, and the theories of Schiaparelli, Lowell, and others. Who has not thought of the inhabitants of the world being mere parasites upon a large animal, with the hair as forests, the pores as springs, and the boils as mountains? This was Cyrano's original idea. It has not changed its character in the modern idea of the inhabited convex earth; it is fiction still!

People suppose that the weather is diseased, and that human beings can catch its infirmities; they take the croup, the grippe, coughs, and colds out of the atmosphere, as it were. These diseases are human; they do not affect the weather. They were not found in high Arctic latitudes by Peary, Nansen, and other explorers; but upon return to settlements, the little epidemics of colds and sneezes were frequent. Men do catch such afflictions from the atmosphere—the mental atmosphere, which corresponds to the physical atmosphere. In the mental world there are storms and blizzards and cyclones raging; extremes of temperature exist there the same as in the external world. From the mental conditions are derived all the epidemics and ills of the human family.

Chemists are continuing to discover new elements in the atmosphere. Some time ago, they thought the air was composed of oxygen and nitrogen only; now the conclusion is that it contains helium, krypton, neon, and argon, and possibly many other elements yet undiscovered. Different processes of analyzation have revealed different elements. The question might be asked, Why were not all of the elements revealed when argon was discovered? Because in the different analyses, different vortices were created, which attracted different energies of gravity and levity; and the materializations resulting from the processes of analyzing the elements, are mistaken for the resolved elements of the atmosphere.

Out of 70,000,000 people of the United States, only 28,000,000 are members of religious denominations. During the past nine years, the Jews have increased in numbers 766 per cent; the "christian scientists," 702 per cent; the Mormons, 52 per cent; and the spiritualists, none—according to the statistics. We saw a statement a short while ago that there are a million "christian scientists" in America; but the records show them to be 930,000 short of a million, while there are only 45,000 spiritualists and 3,000 theosophists, according to count of 1898. There are about 40 principal denominations in the United States; in all, 143 factions or fragments of beliefs, and only one System of Universology.

The people are raising the question whether vaccination is a preventive against smallpox; others question whether physicians actually cure diseases. There is no doubt about it; they generally do. Their work is not to kill or cure, but to kill to cure; in this they are a great success! Vaccination effectually prevented a Cleveland lad recently from taking the smallpox. He was vaccinated at a free dispensary; three days afterward he was attacked with the lockjaw, and upon being attended by three physicians, he died. The deadly virus did its work, and the patient will never be in danger of being afflicted by any contagious disease!

The moral incentive supposed to reside in the idea that death ends all, is that man should treat his brother well in the natural world because there is no other life for such a purpose. It works the other way too; judging from the general conduct of humanity, it seems to be the impression of the world that this is the only sphere in which man can be ruled in despotism, maltreated and despised, and many are making the best of it!

The Adventists are looking for Jesus to drop down through the clouds of the physical world; according to the laws of regeneration taught by Jesus, he will rise in the resurrection. He went away going up, and will come again going up; in the meantime, he has descended into hell. The usual idea is on a par with the man who expected the sun to rise where it set—in the West.

The salvation army will endeavor to drum the fading colors of modern Christianity into the Filipinos. When the missionaries are followed up by the latest brands of alcoholic spirits, to keep company with the spooks that follow the tambourine, the work of civilizing the savages will be well under way.

America concludes that the Filipinos cannot rule themselves—a virtual acknowledgment that independence is a failure. Even in America republicanism is a delusion, applied only in the work of disintegration; the government itself is an oligarchy.

The modern religious fads claim that the central ego of every man is God Almighty. Jesus drew the lines between himself and the world. The central ego of the immortal man is God; that of the mortal man is from its father, the devil!

This is the year of the conjunction of the principal planets of the universe; also the year of the conjunction of all the principal corporations of the world in the formation of trusts, combinations, and conspiracies against the rights of the people.

Laws made at the instigation of the medical fraternity, make it a crime to die without medical attention; but it is perfectly legitimate for millions to die under the skilful ministrations of the regular physicians!

The inhabitants of the brain cells, the thought entities which correspond to viduals in the natural world, live on the inside of the cells. Every thought world is hollow; the physical cosmos is cellular.

The United States conducts religious services in all its legislative assemblies through the medium of salaried chaplains; but the lawmakers find the quickest response to their prayers to the almighty dollar!

The worst schisms in the world are Catholicism, mysticism, higher criticism, and agnosticism; while the most formidable isms are Methodism, spiritualism, and the rheumatism.

The hierarchy of Catholicism in the prostitution of the doctrines of life, is built upon the lowerarchy of sensualism in the prostitution of the energies of life.

The man who considers himself above the truth or its source, cannot comprehend it; to understand it he must stand under it, and be its disciple.

When the anthropotic stars fall from heaven, the world will witness a stupendous mental meteoric and pyrotechnic display.

Leave a trouble where you find it; if you take it with you it will grow, tax your energies, and vitiate your life.

The wave of prosperity for the workingman is a cold one; for the millionaire it is the balmy breeze of luxury.

The coming social revolution will be the battle of Gog and Magog, the syna-gogue and the de-magogue.

Both life and death are the result of the operation of the immutable laws of being.

There will be no franchises granted to street-car companies in the New Jerusalem.

The coming eclipse of the sun of fallacy will be everlasting.

Comfort to the Bereaved.

I have just returned from attending the funeral of my brother's only child, around which clung the deepest affection and love known to mortal beings. They had a Methodist minister to perform the ceremony; and in that hour of extreme anguish, I must say that his words seemed to bring some comfort to the bereaved parents and friends. Now, I write this to know how, from a Koreshan standpoint, you would treat the case of the loss of a beloved child? Can you speak words that would assuage the grief of the broken-hearted parents?—F. E. W., Salem, O.

The different religions of the world hold different conceptions regarding the condition of the soul after dissolution; and the devotees are satisfied to accept the conceptions taught them in childhood as sacred, and consequently comforting in case of death of children, relatives, or friends; and they would be satisfied with nothing else. The Buddhist priest comforts the Buddhist mother. It might have been asked of the disciples of Jesus, Can you give the mother as much consolation as the priest? Certainly not, so long as the mother entertained the fallacious conceptions of the condition and whereabouts of her child, and felt comforted in her delusions.

Every religious denomination has its own spiritual world; the interior mental world of any particular religious body is the spiritual world of that body. Those who die in the full faith of any particular religious sect, go into the spiritual world of that sect,—that is, into the minds of the members of that sect. The real point of comfort to the bereaved mother, is the promise that she will find and recognize her child when she enters the same spiritual world. So far, it is true; the delusion is, that such a division of the spiritual world is the heaven of the Almighty. Where the love of offspring is strong, the spirit of the child returns to the parents.

One of the greatest satisfactions that can be experienced in the world, is obedience to the laws of life. The greatest love possible is the love enjoined in the laws which Jesus obeyed,—love to the Almighty and to the neighbor. The supremest love leads to the supremest heaven. The mortal love generated and fostered in the human family is on the plane of the personalities in that plane, and the mind remains in the divisions of the mortal humanity or hells, until the loves and desires of the mind are transposed to the supreme love of the personal Messiah and the truth which he imparts. The mortal love is more concerned about the welfare of members of one's family than any others; and the endeavor to follow the deceased child into other conditions of being, without a knowledge of where it has really gone, or the condition it is in, begets anguish and mourning. Though the mother believes her child has gone to heaven, she mourns because it has gone. Her desire and belief are antagonistic.

When the equilibrium of desire and belief is attained in the absolute truth of being and existence, there is no mourning. The confidence in the immutable laws of the universe, which provide for the ultimate salvation of every individual in the universe, excludes anguish and grief. There is no mourning for the true Koreshan, because his love is not selfish, but reaches above the mortal plane into the highest possible spheres of being, where more good can be accomplished for unfortunate members of the human family who fall victims of corruptible dissolution, than to go to the child in its mortality and incompleteness. Under such circumstances as cited above, the Koreshan System gives the comfort of certainty, the guaranty of absoluteness; but it can be of no use to those not receptive to its principles. In contrast with the vague conceptions entertained in the modern church, we consider that such comfort is solid comfort indeed, the most substantial that can be given, the most assuring that can be entertained by any mind. But those out of sympathy with the truth, of course could not accept its conclusions concerning the inevitable and actual disposition of individuals they have loved and lost.

Material Records are Obliterated.

If man has eternally existed, and every 24,000 years the same or similar conditions prevail, does it not follow that every part of the surface of the earth is the location of the same or similar conditions? If so, why is it that there are not some evidences of man's existence in past cycles in every part of the earth? For example, why are there not more pyramids and monuments, like those in Egypt, than there are? Is it contended that such records would be obliterated before the recurrence of another cycle?—J. L. T., Goldenrod, Tex.

The earth has always been inhabited; and there is not a square mile of the earth's surface where now are land and ocean, that has not at some time been the fields of activity of civilized man. Even though pyramids and monuments were enduring under ordinary conditions, continents themselves change, rise, and sink; floods and cataclysms occur and efface all evidences of habitation in parts of the earth. The poles of the earth change, and ice caps of the frigid zones cover what was once tropical and habitable. But monuments are not enduring from cycle to cycle. Even stone, the most enduring of all materials of which structures are made, undergoes oxidation, decomposition, or decay; stone structures finally crumble and fall, a heap of ruins. One of the oldest monuments in the world is the great Pyramid of Ghizeh in Egypt. Archeological specimens are found in many parts of the world, of great antiquity,—in mounds and cliff houses; but in a few more millenniums they will be entirely gone.

The best evidence that man has always existed, is the fact that he is here now. The fact that the universe exists, when analyzed and resolved into all that that fact means, is absolute evidence that it has always existed. The great system of revolutions and precessions of the sun, planets, and stars, some of which require thousands, others millions, of years to fulfil their cycles, has been in existence, not merely so long as to begin cycles and progress 6,000 years, but throughout all eternity of the past; over and over again, billions and billions of times the great wheels of the universal clock have measured cycle after cycle, and will continue to do so, on and on eternally. The laws of existence are the same now as they were decillions of decillions of ages ago, and will be the same as many ages in the future, and eternally without end. The records in the heavens are enduring; the monuments of human intellect, the knowledges of the universe in all the phases of activity of cosmic and human life, are more reliable than all the stone pillars and relics that can ever be dug up from the ruins of ancient worlds.

Suicide a Terrible Disaster.

Suppose a person is doomed to suffer from an incurable disease for life; is suicide advisable for such a person? Please answer in THE FLAMING SWORD.—A. K., Texas.

Nineteen hundred years ago, two remarkable personalities appeared in the world, two poles of mental activity,—Jesus and Judas. Jesus came as the light of the world; Judas was his antithet in every sense of the term. Jesus was the personal God, the involution of light; Judas was the personal devil, the involution of darkness. Jesus was betrayed by Judas; the dark disc cut off the currents of human sympathy, and Jesus was executed. At the same time the sun in the physical heavens was in a corresponding extraordinary eclipse. The two personalities went out of the world voluntarily; Jesus destroyed his body by divine dissolution, and went out of the world alive through processes of theocrasis; Judas destroyed himself by suicide. These facts reveal the character of the two processes; one is divine, and the other is satanic.

No person should ever yield to the suggestion of suicide. It is possible for the mind to rise above the affliction, even though it be pronounced incurable. One of the busiest women in New York City, is experiencing a lifelong invalidism and intense suffering, not having been out of her house for 43 years, nor off of her bed for 37 years; yet she is happy and contented. Miss Fancher, the famous psychic phenomenon, of New York, is blind and deaf, a confirmed invalid and sufferer; yet she supplies her own store with fancy needle work, and is always busy, happy, and contented, glad to live even under these most trying circumstances.

It is a mark of progress to occupy the mind so absolutely as to counteract the effect of suffering; such characters are heroes, and will reap an abundant reward in future embodiments, that will compensate for present suffering. It is a mark of the possession of retrogressive mental elements to resort to the crime of suicide; such characters are moral cowards; suicide is the result of seizure of the central ego of the mind by insurgent entities, and the result is disastrous in the extreme.

Rejoicing in the Truth.

The Masses at Present Not Willing to Investigate the Profundities of Koreshan Universology.

I am seeking through the Koreshan literature you sent me several days past, to make inroads upon those who will become receptive to the truth. Sure, I am not meeting with much success; the masses are not able to comprehend it; in other words, they seek to rise no higher than their present state of life. Among those who profess to have attained to a state of salvation, and to be able to recognize the Messenger when he appears, I have thus far failed to find one to accept Koreshanity.

Their own selfishness (from which they claim truth has made them free) causes them to regard KORESH as a fraud of the keenest type. Deceived, they are not willing to accept and apply the laws that they may enter into the covenant of life. They seek to choose a king after their own vain imagination, a king coming down through the clouds. But thanks be to the Most High God, I have found the Messenger of Truth, who comes chosen, not by the will of the people, but through the force of truth, a manifestation of tangibility to heal the race! I have found one man, past the age of sixty, to accept Koreshanity. He has a good concept of truth; yet his past life has been one of many experiences. The laity at large regard him as utterly lost. With me, he agrees that KORESH possesses the grandest scientific intellect that has graced the tide of time since the Lord Christ of nineteen hundred years ago.

There is nothing in the Koreshan System that is objectionable to me. Many of its laws I had partly applied before I learned of Koreshanity, hence the revolution is acceptable to me. I am free from the vile habits of the world, and am desirous of being filled with the wisdom and knowledge of Universology, and to apply all its laws so as to lift me from the lowest to the highest in life. I came into the Koreshan field voluntarily; it was not forced upon me in any way. The grand and beautiful conception of the universe gave me a fulness which I am unable to express in words; but those not receptive to truth rate me far beneath their own vile concepts; hence persecution goes on in the hells and corruptions of humanity. Yours for greater knowledge of Life.—C. D. SHELLABARGER, Ohio.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

Has Studied Koreshanity for Over Ten Years and Hopes to See Its Equitable System Prevail.

All of my impressions in regard to your Universal, unique theories have been favorable from the very first. I have now studied the Universal Science of KORESH for over ten years; I have tested the assertions made in regard to the "illusions of sight," and applied the well-known principles of perspective in making observations across the waters of Lake Michigan, and on the great plains of the West, and am firmly convinced that our earth is not convex! The generally accepted theory of Copernicus is only one of the many forms of delusion,—the great spirit of iniquity that now rules the social, moral, and commercial conditions of humanity.

I am also very deeply interested in the Science of KORESH as it pertains to the production and distribution of the necessities and luxuries of every-day life. I have lived in and near the wonderful business center of Chicago for over sixty years, and have been engaged in active business operations enough to know the immense power and terrible effects of the great combinations of "octopus middlemen,"—the jobbers, commission houses, merchant princes, and their accessories, the bankers, the railroads, and other syndicates. The mission and purpose of all these middlemen, in the dawning "new era," can be brought to a close, or changed into more equitable operations for the salvation of humanity, only by the earnest, active, and unselfish counter operations of patriotic manhood and womanhood; if this change, and the more equitable system of KORESH, can be put into practical operation, it will be that which the world so much needs; it will be one of the "greater works" to be done, as spoken of by Jesus; it will help to give new life and immortality to the world. The world now needs to adopt this system, and then to organize to put it in practice. This can be done without opposing a single law of the land. The constitutional and legislative enactments of nearly every state in our union now provide for the organization of beneficent, charitable, and educational institutions, and not for profit, as are all our money-making institutions.

It seems to me, that the Koreshan Unity can secure a charter and proceed to organize and operate as a beneficiary, educational, business enterprise, which shall include the production and distribution of goods for the material needs of suffering humanity. I hope to see this good work done, not to win profit for a few, but for God and humanity.—"UNCLE SAM."

Words of Welcome for the Cellular Cosmogony.

Observations on the Water's Surface Easily Grasped by New Readers.

I have somewhat of a favorable report to make concerning the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. I have disposed of all of the 12 copies I had from you; 8 copies are paid for,

In the Denver Public Library.

Flaming Sword:—

The Public Library has received your publication for some time, and made good use of it in the Free Reading Room. We find it one of the best journals of its kind published.

But we are not able to subscribe for it. If you can continue sending it to us gratis, will you kindly sign this letter and return it to us?

THE LIBRARIAN.
Denver, Colo.

and the other 4 I am sure will be. They are given to people to examine and make a report upon. One report came in that the party was unable to understand any of it after reading one third of the way through. I suggested that the party read the last two thirds, then the other. The party began reading the last half, and came to me with the question, "What can one do with those experiments? How can we get around it if they saw that target on the canal, and the water under it?" Those experiments made on the canal, and such as seeing ships and the Sanibel light, are easily grasped by the ordinary mind; and while that made by the Rectilineator is the most conclusive, it is not so easily grasped, because I believe not all minds are possessed with a mechanical sense.

I enclose money order for $15; this will perhaps overpay for what I have; please send me another dozen books, and I will sell what I can, and the balance I will leave at the news stands. I have not been to the University yet, but I expect to go as soon as the other books come.—R. W. GRAY, Texas.

Being Circulated in Colleges.

I showed my roommate your book on the concave earth last evening, and explained as well as I could, some of its leading points. I saw him showing it to others in the college today. Tomorrow we are going to submit it to our professor in Greek for investigation, and see what he has to say of it. As for myself, I am open to convictions of truth in any branch of science; and if modern astronomy is false, I say, let us down with it and get right! Have you a treatise on astronomy other than the CELLULAR COSMOGONY? There are many things mentioned in the modern books of astronomy that I would like to have explained from the basis of the concave theory. [Our query department is open to questions on any point of Koreshan Science. Shall be glad to have you ask concerning any point of the Koreshan Astronomy you desire.—ED.]—H. E. S., Arkadelphia, Ark.

Cellular Cosmogony Being Investigated by U. S. Geodetic Surveyors.

Last Sunday being pleasant, we went on board the U. S. Survey vessel here. Dr. Cannon prevailed upon one of the officers to accept a copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY with the understanding that he would look into it. The officer told him that he agreed with him perfectly concerning the present condition of the world and religion; but when it came to everything being crowded into the earth, he could not believe it, though he did not say that it was not so, because he did not know; he thought there must have been some mistake about the experiments. We were informed that he showed the book to another of the officers. So the officers and crew of one U. S. Survey vessel are investigating the Koreshan Astronomy!—MRS. L. P. CANNON, Cal.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY is the greatest revolution of thought, in the fewest words I have ever seen. It means life for as many as accept it; its rejection is outer darkness!—C. D. S., Mad River, O.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

Sword is Becoming More and More Interesting and Marvelous.

THE FLAMING SWORD is becoming more and more interesting and marvelous as the weeks go by. The anatomy of the human brain, the change from energy to matter and matter to energy, the laws of vision as explained in THE SWORD, are wonderful, and are gradually creeping through—or an understanding of them is creeping through—my perception. Yes, I am willing to be counted a fool for the sake of Koreshanity and its beautiful truths. I am but a rough frontiersman; but there is in me a high resentment when an attempt is made to lord it over me by the money god.

I will try find some one who will take an interest in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. Perhaps if I had the beam out of my own eye, I might be able to find several. I cannot find much to say when beholding the immaculate wisdom of KORESH! How he opens up the Scriptures to my mind, and I can but wonder! Yes, it is God's voice, the same word spoken on the hills of Judea, the same word that came down through the Jewish race, that spoke through the prophets. I cannot write much that would be of interest to you, who are favored with good education and bright intellects, and above all, the privilege of being taught personally by KORESH; but I can say, God speed the year of release from this sin-cursed age, the year of establishment of the divine kingdom!—W. H. H., Hubbard, Minn.

Greatly Pleased with the Flaming Sword.

I am greatly pleased with THE FLAMING SWORD. I was impressed with the words of one of your correspondents, who said that the Copernican theory never gave him any pleasure or satisfaction. Now, that is just my case; while under the belief of Copernicus I was always uncomfortable and dissatisfied. It is so much of a comfort to feel that you rest in the "hollow of His hand," in a universe that I can, at least in some degree, understand.

Another point I wish to speak of: A paragraph in the "Editorial Perspective" contains this clause: "There are thousands of logical proofs from other premises than mechanical surveys." I frequently see that truth demonstrated. For instance, I read that during the last total eclipse of the sun a "strong earthy smell" pervaded the atmosphere. Now, what possible influence, from the Copernican point of view, could cause a "strong earthy smell," with the sun at a distance of 92,000,000 miles? It seems quite natural that it should be so from the standpoint of Koreschan Astronomy.—F. E. W., Salem, O.

Admires Our Bold Stand.

I do not endorse your religious views at all; but I like the novelty of your views, as well as your bold stand on the new and venturesome idea of the earth's concavity, by cramming the immensity of worlds so much larger than the earth (25,000 miles circumference) into it! Your CELLULAR COSMOGONY is sensible reading. I venture another dollar to see how you come out in 1899.—F. B. H., White City, Kansas.

There is so much of vital reform in Koreschan morals, so much taken up and demanded as practical for its members, which the churches have left undone, that Koreschanity appeals to the sympathy of every lover of truth.—T. A. P., Richland, Cal.

Cleveland's Communism.

Last summer Grover Cleveland endeavored to utilize the labor of some homeless boys on his estate near Princeton, under the pretense of offering them a communal home, on nothing but a mere poor farm.

Dividing the land into sections, he proposed to give individual credit according to the amount of produce accumulated by each. The scheme was a failure, and Grover will now return to his original method of farming.

Communism and competitism, like oil and water, will not mix; but as the true communistic spirit is growing, preparing to obliterate the money power, the competitive world will offer some paltry inducement as a compromise. It will fail as much in purpose as the cheap tea fallacy that was so bitterly denounced by our forefathers, who fought only for the great principle of independence.—LUTHER MCINTYRE, W. Va.

Special Offer Extended.—We have decided to extend our offer which terminated January 15,—to send one copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY free, to all who send us $1.00 for a new subscription, or renewal of subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD. Many of our readers availed themselves of this generous offer. We now extend it to March 24, 1899. The giving of the book will be an extra inducement to new readers to subscribe for the inimitable FLAMING SWORD, and afford our workers an excellent opportunity and incentive to work up their own vicinities. You can procure many subscriptions for us in 20 days, and we trust you will arouse a telling interest in the Koreschan System during the time of the extension of this offer of the book free with every subscription.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. * SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell, we inhabit the Earth. KORESHIAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Establishment of the Tangible Kingdom of God in Earth.

The End of the Dispensation; Relation of Spurious Christianity and the Godless Commercial System of the World; the Coming Stupendous Revolution.

THE WORK of social construction to be inaugurated and pursued until the organic unity of the Theocratic Kingdom is complete, will be conducted under the auspices of the amplified intellectual and rational faculties of man. The acquisition of natural immortality depends upon a condition which may be expressed in a single word—equilibrium.

The modern church theoretically believes in some kind of a "kingdom of Christ," either in earth or in heaven; but there is no unity of thought, and consequently it practically believes nothing. There is an extensively prevailing sentiment in the church,—and this permeates largely the great body of Trinitarianism,—that the kingdom of heaven, so far as it is related to the earth, is already established, and has been since the personal presence of the Lord in the earth 1900 years ago; and the work of evangelization since that time is merely to extend the ramifications of Christianity to encompass all nations, and to pervade and influence in its present character, all the civilization of the world. This belief is contrary to every principle of progress and development, and to the prophetic declaration regarding the conditions to follow the Lord's advent and theocrasis.

That which is called Christianity in the world today, is the spotted beast of Revelation;—the result of the cross of the church of Christ with the world's paganism, a result which the very laws of development determine, and which also any reasonable mind may observe if it will. This spurious thing called Christianity—gone to seed in a dozen or more modern fads, where it is degenerated into the vilest conception of religious use in abominable practices under the guise of Christian virtues—is merely the debris of the gospel of the Lord, immaculately propounded and personally and practically applied by him and his church. It is not the kingdom of God in earth.

The purpose of the Lord in the declaration of his gospel, was to provide a material kingdom of righteousness as the pediment and groundwork of the heavenly status. There shall be "a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heavens and the first earth were passed away." The first heaven was established in the doctrine of the Lord, and the first earth, in the practical application of it to life. These both degenerated in the mind, soul, and body of men. The garment has waxed old and is full of rents, and, like that of Judaism, must pass away as an earthly kingdom.

The Lord's advent and the development of his church were marked by the declaration: "Peace on earth, good will to men," and its demonstration in the inauguration of a communistic church, which ultimated in a material hierarchy, involving a secular kingdom as well as an ecclesiastical rulership. The temporal power of papacy terminated in 1870, when the king of Italy forcibly dethroned God's vicar on earth, and dispossessed the papacy of its temporal power. Peace on earth, good will to men, did not fructify during any period of the supremacy of Roman ecclesiasticism, nor can any of the daughters of the old harlot boast of any very great achievement on the lines of ameliorating the condition of the poverty stricken and suffering children of God's kingdom in the earth, as it has existed since the retrograde of the church into its present stage of paganistic worship and practice.

Every dispensation is ushered in through the destruction of the adulterated religious and secular systems characterizing the age. God's chosen people, the Jews, were allowed to remain as a kingdom, but subordinate to the powers of paganism in externals, until the Christ was matured and his little church established. The Jewish dispensation ended at the destruction of Jerusalem. The doctrines of Abraham, Moses, and the prophets had degenerated into the traditions of the elders, and the practices were the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet. The dispensation ended in catastrophe, and the Christian church came into its secular power through the debris of this destruction. The Christian church has become as corrupt as the Jewish church in its day, and it knows as little of the character of Divinity as did the Jews when they crucified the Lord God of heaven on Calvary.

There can be no patching up of the old garment of Christianity. "Behold, I make all things new." Even a new name will usher in the material royalty of the new earthly and heavenly kingdom. It was in the order and province of law, that the old Christianity should die even in the very beginning of its dominion;—for no seed can reproduce without its disintegration. The germ of the kingdom was material. Christ the Lord was a visible and tangible man. In his descending degree, he was planted in the race. The product of that planting will be as material as the tangible Lord.

The divine earthly kingdom will be so intimately related to the things of this world as to constitute the fulfilment of the divine purpose in humanity, in establishing peace and good will. It has not yet matured. When its fruition manifests, every person in the kingdom will be a subject of the equitable distribution of the products of industry. It will not proceed from a simple progressive evolution.

The sins of this world must be remitted; and there is no remission of sins without the shedding of blood. The "evolution" of Christianity into the spurious application of the gospel of the Lord by the so called Christian nations, is represented in Castilian chivalry and honor in Cuba; in the commercial avarice of France, Russia, Germany, and England in their piracies in China, Africa, and India, and in the financial and mercantile profanations by the most Christian representative of them all, the United States, in the creation of a government the legitimate tendency of which is to reach its ultimate fruition in the production of a thousand multimillionaires, to grind the face of their poor Christian brethren whom they have robbed of the products of industry, and thus reduced to starvation.

If Christianity has evolved thus far into the generation of the Godless trusts—of which the good Baptist Rockefeller is a prominent sample—and the antithetical poverty stricken millions who belong to the same brotherhood of man, then how much further must it evolve in the same direction, before the completion of the abomination of desolation? Will some one who is standard authority on the present righteousness of the Christian church, kindly inform us? For by setting us right on this question, we might be able to define the progress made in the attainment of the assumption of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

The Christian church is closing its career; the dispensation is ended. There will follow, from this onward, the resurrection of society from the dead past; but first of all, the sons of God—who shall constitute the head of the new social system—will ripen and appear. Christianity reaches its end both in fact and in name; and it will become as absolutely a thing of the past as Judaism recidivated upon the advent of the Lord and his church. We are not reaching the fruit of social evolution in the ushering in of a peaceful but Godless fruitage of the age; but, rather, through turbulent revolution we will pass through the end to the inauguration of the peaceful beginning of a new dispensation, new in character and in name, and headed by the immortal sons of God.

Chicago Republican Municipal Platform.

"We congratulate the country upon the return of generous and general prosperity. We congratulate the people upon the increase of work and the increase of wages. We congratulate the republican party upon its leadership and legislation which have produced these happy results. We congratulate the nation upon the successful termination of the war with Spain and the making and ratification of the Paris treaty of peace. We note with pride that our country has dared to accept the responsibilities of new possessions, and we have no fear but that the new problems arising out of our island possessions will be righteously solved under the wise and humane leadership of the republican party in our national councils."—Chicago Record.

The republican platform forgot to congratulate the country upon the fact, that the last Congress made appropriations to the amount of a billion and a half of dollars, on which the poor working men must pay the interest, and the principal also—if it is ever met.

A knowledge of the structure and function of the alchemico-organic cosmos, constitutes the basis of a structured theology which is essential to the organic unity and perpetuity of the human race.

Racial perfection must comprise the groundwork of societal order and fellowship.

Osteological Analysis of Structured Man and Cosmos.

Part XII.

Creation and Birth of the New Kingdom Analogous to Vidual Development; Breathing the Breath of Life Into the New Order.

IN THE description of the creation of man as defined by the writer of the book of Genesis, when critically examined, is revealed the fact that man was structured before the breath of God entered him. The development of prenatal growth conforms to the same specific law, for the child does not respire until the form is physiologically developed. Gestation completes itself in the matrix of its development, subject to and dependent upon maternal life until pulmonary contact with the elements of respiration in the atmosphere and the function of the lungs provide an independent breath of life. The man is first created, then born, when the act of respiration initiates another stage of existence and progress. Not only is the principle true in vidual growth, but correspondentially so in the development of the universal. In his description of the reconstruction of society in the resurrection of the dead, Ezekiel has portrayed—in the language of symbolism or correspondence—the laws and order of social development. He says the bones are first emplaced, then flesh is placed upon the bones; after which God's respiration completes the process of the resurrection.

In Part XI of "Osteological Analysis," we differentiated the two forms of the resurrection, making the distinction between the spiritual resurrection which characterized the beginning of the Christian dispensation, and the natural, which must characterize the beginning of the new age. Nineteen hundred years ago, the birth was a spiritual one for the new man; now, the birth will be a natural one for the new man. This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality. The mortal spirit of the Grand Man (the church) was transformed to immortality in the beginning of the age, but the body was not thus changed. It remained mortal, and was to so continue until the resurrection of the dead at the end of the age.

It ought to be needless for us to reiterate the truth that resurrection, anastasia, resurgam, standing again, are terms which apply to the fact of reincarnation, or the coming again of those who lived in the beginning of the age; and that the coming resurrection, to define the line of demarcation between the Christian and the Koreshan dispensations, is but the reincarnation of those who, nineteen hundred years ago, were quickened in the spirit, but who in the beginning of the new age will attain the immortal flesh.

There is coming a new universal kingdom. It will be manifest in fulfilment of prophetic declaration, and in answer to the prayer indited by the Lord: "Thy KINGDOM come." It will develop from the germinal beginning of that kingdom planted in the race (the church) at the beginning of the age. The Lord was that kingdom in archetypical structure. He was the germ, the kingdom in its least (its individual) form and life. The Grand Man, the kingdom in its greatest form, will be as absolutely structured as was its germinal beginning. It will be as natural in its universal form and function, as the Lord was in his individual organism. Not only is this true, but the time is at hand when this kingdom shall be resurrected. It is already resurrected as to its spiritual life; it must be formulated in its external and material structure, when, through the descent of the spiritual, the material will be made alive.

This leads us to the inquiry: What comprises the bones of this natural organic kingdom? This question can only be answered upon the basis of a knowledge of the law of correspondence. The vidual man and the individual man in the least form, microcosmic, possess natural, material bones. The universal individual (undivided) man, macrocosmic and natural, must also possess natural bones as the framework of the socio-economic fabric. If we are able to define the bones of the microcosmic natural man, we should be able to define the bones of the macrocosmic natural man.

Bones Constitute the Framework and Basis of Ligamentous, Muscular, and Articulate Construction.

The universal muscle is represented by the various characteristics of industry. The bones, then, are the resources of life, as represented in the classification of industry in the social kingdom. Bone will come to its bone, in the development of the coming order.

A railroad combination is a bone; a great coal combine is a bone. Every trust involving the co-operation of millions of dollars, and representing a specific form of industry and commerce, is a bone; but all these belong to the cadaver of the closing age, and are merely the antithetical ensamples of what will comprise the readjusted bones of the resurrection. These bones of the universal man will be readjusted in the anatomical framework of the universal social fabric, and industry—the muscular system of this anatomy—will be so adapted as to constitute it a reconstructed manhood, governed by the absolute relation of subordination until, when the readjustment is complete, the breath of God will move upon the universal man, to engender independent life and social liberty. It is only through a comprehensive knowledge of the law of correspondence, that the social order can be re-established in the organic formation of an immortal fabric; and no individual can exist as an immortal being, until the universal structure attains immortal life. When the anthropostic macrocosm is so corrected in its organic character as to correspond to the alchemico-organic cosmos, the individuals consociated in the aggregate grouping of the Grand Man will necessarily have become immortal. By immortality we do not mean eternal life, for immortality is the stage of transitional being, from the arch-material to the invisible and eternal.

Immortality is the product of the conservation of the natural resources of our being, and the key-note of conservation is rest. Therefore we reiterate the statement, that the conservation of the sex potencies is their sabbath of rest; and when it is declared that "Thou shalt remember the sabbath day to keep it holy," allusion is made to the seventh principle or ultimate of human existence, and through its conservation and divinely legitimate appropriation, the fruit of immortality will be assured to the race of men.

We have set forth the law of the order of the resurrection of the bones, in the kingdom of the resurrection, whence we shall continue the analysis of the vidual framework, relating each bone as we proceed, correspondentially, to the osseous structure of the Grand or Macrocosmic Man.

The Pantisocracy; Two Poets' Youthful Dream.

L. E. BORDEN.

THE VICARAGE of Ottery-St.-Mary in Devonshire was overflowing with children, thirteen in all, the unlucky number to be sure, but of this it would have been hard to convince the good Vicar, a simple-hearted, unworldly soul whose parishioners looked up to him with awe and reverence. Did he not quote Hebrew to them in the pulpit, and was not Hebrew, as he assured them and they devoutly believed, "the immediate language of the Holy Ghost?"

Among the younger children of this motley brood, was a boy with great dreamy eyes and the soul of a poet. Better than all boyish sports he loved to lie under the yew trees in the old churchyard, poring over some fairy tale. When the story was done, he would spring to his feet and run up and down, acting over all he had read, with the docks and the nettles and the tall, dank grass for his audience. The little actor was a marked character in the village; the schoolboys hated him, trying all their wily arts to torment him; he was not of their ilk; he did not think their thoughts nor speak their words. But their elders, especially the good old dames, had only praise and smiles for the precocious lad who was in a fair way to grow up indolent, passionate, and spoiled.

When he was nine years old, a great change came over the boy's life; his father died, and he was sent up to London as a charity pupil at Christ's Hospital, a free school, called also the "Blue-coat school" because its pupils wore a blue uniform. Here the shy, sensitive lad was wretched and felt himself alone among six-hundred playfellows. He longed for home, and used to lie upon the roof and dream of the old churchyard and his favorite haunts on the banks of the river Otter. But, being in the main, a brave lad and lovable withal, he plucked up heart to make friends, and warm ones too. In feats of learning he led all his mates, and one of them has told us how the walls of Grey Friars re-echoed to the music of his voice as he recited Homer in the Greek. Poetry was his pastime; while others sported on the playground, Coleridge, for it was he, turned Greek odes into English verse. No genius, however, could save a lad from floggings at that school, and he had his full share and threw upon them.

At the end of their course, some few of the best pupils were awarded scholarships at the university. Coleridge among them. For the past year he had been feeding on Voltaire, and in consequence of this diet, boldly announced himself an infidel when his master proposed to send him to Cambridge to study for the church.

"Come here, you young rascal," said his master: "I'll soon flog your infidelity out of you;" and he proceeded to conquer Voltaire by force of arms.

Coleridge's career at the university was chequered; it was the last decade of the seventeenth century, and revolution was in the air. He became an ardent democrat, and being a wonderful talker, the students flocked to his room to hear him discourse entrancingly on the rights of man. In his second year the eloquent apostle of liberty, equality, and fraternity mysteriously disappeared, and for several months seemed to have dropped out of existence. He was at last found in a regiment of dragoons where he had enlisted in a fit of melancholy, under the name of Silas Titus Comberbacke, which represented his initials.

It was after the prodigal son had returned to his alma mater, that he first met and loved another youthful poet, like himself a dreamer of dreams, a seeker of the ideal, and an apostle of liberty. Robert Southey was tall, with high-poised head, bright hazel eyes, and a noble expression of ardor and energy; he had been expelled from Westminster for writing an article against flogging, and was now at Oxford.

It was a moment of discouragement for enthusiastic souls; the French Revolution had raised fond hopes which the Reign of Terror had blighted. Here were two young poets all aglow for freedom. Southey had already written an epic which was a glorification of French patriotism, but France seemed to have failed. Whither should they turn? "The only ray that enlivens the scene," writes Southey, "beams on America." Coleridge, "the eloquent madcap of genius," had already a scheme in mind and lost no time in confiding to his new friend what lay nearest his heart. Southey listened, approved, and soon waxed enthusiastic over the plan, which was nothing less than to leave the old world with its falling thrones, and found a colony of congenial persons in America on some spot outside the range of governments, untroubled by laws and taxes.

Together they wrought out the details of the scheme, which received the learned title of Pantisocracy or equal government by all, and was intended to be the starting-point of a great social regeneration. Possessions were to be held in common, each would work for the good of all; their wants would be few and simple, yet every rustic cot would contain some of the best books. It was thought that the labor of each man two or three hours per day would support the colony. Why should they toil like the slaves of luxury? There would be abundant leisure for healthful recreation, much converse on high themes and the pursuit of literature. Even a poet might learn to wield the axe or guide the plow, so small a fraction of the day. Every man was to enjoy his own religious and political opinions, provided they did not encroach on rules previously made. Whether the marriage contract should be dissolved at the wish of one or both parties, was left an open question to be decided upon experience.

It was in the summer vacation that Pantisocracy was born, the brain-child of two fermenting spirits. Coleridge said it combined the tactician excellence of the mathematician with the enthusiasm of the poet. From day to day it shone in brighter hues, borrowed from the kindling fancy of its progenitors. "This Pantisocratic scheme," writes Southey, "has given me new life, new hope, new energy; all the faculties of my mind are dilated." The location of the colony was decided by an accidental meeting with an American land-agent, who recommended the valley of the Susquehanna on account of its natural beauty and its security from hostile Indians; on the subject of another enemy scarcely less bloodthirsty than the redskins, the minds of the Pantisocrats were set at ease by the assurance that the mosquitos were no worse than gnats, and "did not bite much after you were used to them." With all the obliging qualities of his class at the present day, the agent declared that money could be made there from literature, and the reformers longed to set sail without delay.

Yet will I love to follow the sweet dream
Where Susquehanna pours his untamed stream;

* * * * *

And there, soothed sadly by the dirgeful wind,
Muse on the sore ills I have left behind.

Thus wrote Coleridge in anticipation of the new life in a fairer land.

There was only one drawback to the immediate realization of their hopes—to charter a ship, buy land and farming implements required money, and neither of the poets had a penny. Southey could sell his epic, "Joan of Arc," and Coleridge could lecture; but first of all they must find twelve men of resolute spirit, education, and liberal views, able to furnish £125 apiece, to join them in colonizing the wilderness. So instead of emigrating at once, the reformers betook themselves to various forms of literary work; but literature is a thorny road for young poets, and gold is hard to win. Gradually the bow of promise faded in the West. Southey, indeed, proposed to take a farm in Wales and put their principles into operation there, until it became possible to emigrate. Coleridge objected that a fair test could not be made in the midst of an effete and hostile social state; besides, even farms in Wales cost money, and where could enough be found?

Persecution is the fate of reformers, and it is amusing to note that one at least of our Pantisocrats could not escape the common lot. Southey had expectations from a rich aunt, and it was not intended that a breath of the grand project should reach her ears; but the secret leaked out as secrets will, and poor Southey was turned out of doors on a wet night without a penny in his pocket, with a walk of nine miles through rain and mire before him, in order to reach his mother's house at Bath. But he trudged on in the dark, taking comfort, no doubt, in the thought that he had joined the noble army of martyrs, and like a true knight, stopping to befriend an old drunken man whom he found hardly able to stumble forward in the mud.

Pantisocracy was destined never to reach the experimental stage, but to be embalmed in the annals of English literature only as the Utopian project of two young and ardent souls. As such, however, it is a significant index of the hope for better conditions and nobler ideals that springs eternal in pure hearts. With holy ardor it possesses some in every age, who see in youth a vision of the beautiful possibilities of life, where the best things are held in common and each works for the good of all. Who shall say such hope is not an earnest of its own fulfilment? Say that every effort toward united life has failed and split upon the rock of selfish human nature, what is failure but a spur to noble minds? We know the kingdom is to come in earth.

Pantisocracy was never tried, but it is interesting to conjecture the effect, personally, upon its authors could they have found in America a larger, freer life before the frost of custom laid its withering blight upon their youthful aspirations. Might not the "inspired charity boy" have shaken off the fatal weakness that, later, held his will in thrall? Might not his dawn of unsurpassed promise have settled into a glorious afternoon of performance instead of that sad death in life? Would not Southey have written something better than forgotten epics, and the ordinary reader know more of the contents of his one hundred and nine volumes than the "Battle of Blenheim" or the ballad of Inchcape Rock?

But the scheme, if put into practical working order, could never have succeeded as a communistic attempt, lacking the bond of religious unity that held the Pilgrim fathers together through danger and sorrow in the wilderness. The very name Pantisocracy, as meaning equal government by all, shows also that the poets in their thought were clinging to the idea of liberty, (equality and fraternity) that had wrought such disaster in France. The deeper meaning of that great object-lesson of history, the Reign of Terror, had escaped them. There is no equality in nature, nor in human society. Why does nature set great men as beacon lights in all the dark places of history, if not to guide their humbler fellows who form the general body of society? The sun's rays strike the hilltop before they flash into the valley; so truth comes first to men of noble mind, and God chooses the pure in heart for his Messenger.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE WORLD is on the threshold of a marvelous era of progress and civilization. No man who candidly considers the fact of the world's rapid progress, will deny that a glorious future lies just beyond a thin curtain of years, though it be the folds of a stupendous revolution. The past four centuries have witnessed rapid changes in the condition of the world. Asia, long walled in by ancient customs, has been invaded by railroads; Africa bears marks of the dividing hands of European powers, while America, the great western world, has undergone complete transformation. Four centuries ago, Indian tribes roamed from the Atlantic to the Pacific. All this vast territory is inhabited by a new people, now the most advanced of any in the world;—a new world of 150,000,000 people in the last few centuries of the Christian dispensation! The transformation is unparalleled in the history of the age. The world has received a powerful impulse. The mighty sea of humanity pulsates with new ambitions; inventive geniuses have been manifest everywhere; maelstroms of thought are pouring forth from a mighty reservoir. Should this great stream of progress continue, who can describe the possibilities of the future? The world's progress has reached its focus in the manifestation of the Light of Ages; the Guiding Star has appeared to lead humanity to its true destiny. The Angel of Truth stands at the door of the New Age, with the keys thrust in the lock, ready to push the door ajar. When it opens, the race will rise as far above its present condition, as the present civilization is above the conditions discovered by Columbus. The possibilities are in man rather than in the physical energies; the greatest transformation is to come to the human mind and form. The bond age is about to end, the reign of fallacy is nearly over; and death must die when man begins to live!

The physician notes the changes which take place in the human system from youth to old age; he sees the man grow to maturity, to the prime of life, with the system teeming with vitality, and then observes signs of decay, the silvering of the hair, the wrinkling of the face, the stooping of the form—and then the tomb. He asks, "What produces these changes in the body, which drag us down to the grave? Is there no way to retard or prevent them?" What life is, he does not know; he only observes that something impulses the form to activity and expression, and then it leaves the form lifeless. Is it possible that the medical fraternity has not solved the problem of life? They have not solved it, nor anything; empirical methods employed in all other branches of research have solved nothing. There is no solution to the mystery of man, until the mind reaches the plane of knowledge of the source of life and the laws of its conservation. Man dies because of dissipation of living energies. He parts with life by degrees through promiscuous sowing of seed. There is no way of preventing the tendency to death, except through obedience to the laws of life revealed in Koreshanism, a system founded for the purpose of overcoming death here in the natural world. It purposes to stop the ravages of death, to build up the human system, to beautify the form, and make men that are men—immortal and deathless!

A number of minds have undertaken to analyze the Koreshan Geodetic Survey, and to account for the results without accepting the logical conclusions of the earth's concavity. Every critic thinks he has discovered the secret by which the results were obtained, by intuition, by keen and superior mental perception, or concealed ability to "see through it." We have a number of diverse views of it and contradictory explanations. Of course they cannot all be right. All such minds agree that the demonstration does not prove the concavity, but they disagree as to how it does not! For the benefit of the diverse critics, it turns out in their minds that the apparatus was not accurate; results came by chance; first sections inclined on purpose; inclined by mistake in leveling; apparatus was constructed to run a curved line; the thing settled by gravity as the line progressed; was not run at all; big fake; line extended into space, but you lied about the facts; tampered with adjustments; ran it to suit yourselves; you were sharp enough to hit the spot, though running in open space; made false adjustments and deceived the operators; some trick about it; the subjective mind forced the results, though apparently correct. All wrong; guess again; but guesses have no weight; we know the results. There is but one secret of our success, and that is thoroughly explained in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY.

The Pittsburg man who wanted to suspend plumb-lines from the top of Washington monument to determine whether the earth is convex or concave (and he says he has tried the experiments such as he proposed to us!), has become enraged because we do not submit the Koreshan System to test upon the basis of his absurd propositions. We publish his communication. We consider that our readers will be perfectly satisfied with his letter, without particular comment or reply; we have given him the opportunity to do himself all the injury that the reflex of his insults will inflict. It illustrates to what extremes a man will go when at a loss to find logical arguments or facts, or legitimate methods of procedure against the Koreshan System. He has gone his full length in revealing his original motive in soliciting our acceptance of his offers—that if we did not agree with him he would resort to abuse; this is the real animus of his effort to convert us to Hooverism! In the meantime, if he desires to find some Chicago paper that will publish his jocose productions, we will give him permission to advertise us as extensively as he wishes!

The saltiness of the sea has puzzled the scientists for centuries. The amount of salt held in solution in the oceans of the world has been computed to be about ninety quadrillion (90,000,000,000,000,000) tons, which would make a solid layer of salt all over the world 1,000 feet in thickness. Are the waters of the ocean dissolving a salt mine of such immense proportions? If so, where is it? The perpetual, universal alchemical laboratory is the only source of marine salinity. In modern geology, the saltiness of the sea is simply inexplicable; in Koreshan physics it is simple. All energy is substance; energy is matter in solution or sublimation. The salt of the sea is the product of the sun and earth; the chlorine of the sun meets the ozone of the sodium of the water, and the precipitate product is chloride of sodium, known as common salt. The process is continuous; the product is the perpetual result. The universe has existed throughout all eternity of the past, and has not yet exhausted its salt supply, and it never will; it is continual creation.

The famous nebular hypothesis—which has made so many worlds for the modern astronomer, and explained so many mysteries for the men in the astronomical and theological watch-towers—is soon to be laid upon the shelf with other relics and discarded views of the past. This theory made the solar system out of burning gas, which upon cooling reduced more and more, until the nuclei became solid. Prof. See, of the Lowell Observatory, at Flagstaff, Arizona, has made the announcement of his “discovery in astro-physics of a new law in the grander generalization of the science. It (the law) is the assertion that nebulous, starry, and planetary bodies of all kinds now luminous, are growing hotter rather than cooler; subverting the previously accepted notion laid down in Laplace’s famous nebular hypothesis.” Truly, the Creator is having a hard time to keep the worlds running, on the basis of these ever changing plans devised for their general management without the permission of the inventor of the universe!

Three great railways are being projected in the world. Russia is building a road across Russia and Siberia; another is to be constructed from Cairo to Cape Town, Africa, the entire length of the dark continent. The third is the great Pan-American railroad, tying together the business of North and South America, extending from New York to Buenos Ayres, having a total length of 10,221 miles. The world is almost girt with railroads; soon it will be possible to start from Cape Town and travel northward to Cairo, thence through Palestine and Asia Minor to Russia, across Siberia, over Behring Strait to Alaska, thence down the western coast of North America, through Mexico, Central America, and finally through South America to its southern extremity, making the entire journey, almost around the world, by rail!

Spiritualists believe in an external spiritual world, holding that “human beings at death throw off their mortal vestures and exist in the spiritual world, which refined, etherealized world is all around us,” becoming spirit beings in the earth’s circumambient atmosphere or aura, being nothing but mind without brains, pediment, or tangible form. What is there in the atmosphere or ether, substances which belong to the physical world, to attract mental substance? To what is the departing mind most likely to be attracted? It would seek the mental world, the spiritual world, in structured humanity. “Christian science” asserts that infinite mind is in infinite ether; Koreshan Science, in its analysis of the functions of the brain, finds the spiritual world in the cells of the human brain.

The new asteroid recently discovered, supplies the modern scientific world with a new field of speculation, not only concerning its erratic orbit, but also concerning the purpose of the planet and its probable habitability. A French scientist advocates a new theory concerning life on the planet, that caps the climax of speculative science, holding as he does that so small a globe could be inhabited by microbes alone. He asks, “Who can say that microbes as well as men, have not received the breath of life from the Almighty, in whose eyes naught is small and naught is great? Are we other than microbes fastened on the surface of our earth—grains of dust whirling around one of the smallest suns that the Omnipotent called into being?”

The seed infolds the plant; that is, it folds it in. The form of the plant in its least form may be found by dissecting the seed. The exterior of the seed corresponds to the interior of the plant, and vice versa. Man periodically infolds the universe. The surface of man is external; the corresponding surface of the earth is the reverse,—it is internal. The habitable surface is the inner wall of the gigantic cell. Man sustains the same relation to the surface of the great cell after birth, that he does to the womb before birth. If the universe, on the scale of its present dimension, were infolded, or turned in itself, its inner surface would become the outer surface; in such an inverted sense, we live on the outside of the earth!

When the modern mind has minified man to the small compass of the microbe in the Copernican universe, he asks, “What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the Son of man that thou visitest him?” What is the man about which the Psalmist inquires—a being too insignificant for the Almighty to notice? Rather, viewed in the light of Biblical symbolism, in the light of Koreshan Science, the man that the Almighty visits is God, just as the seed, visited by the energies of the life of the plant, involves all the powers and attributes of its father seed which produced the plant. The apex of human life, the climax of human attainment, is the throne of the Most High,—the perfect Man!

Rev. Dr. Frank has been endeavoring to locate the seat of the soul of man, and announces that he has solved the problem;—that it is located in every part of the body. He has not solved it; the soul problem was solved nearly thirty years ago, by the Founder of Koreshanity; and the Bible, a work of antiquity, declares that Adam, the man, was a living soul. But Dr. Frank thinks that the soul, the spirit, and mind and memory are all one and the same. The spirit, soul, and body are the three principal divisions of man; the body is the material; the soul belongs to the vascular system, the spirit to the nervous system.

The business of the western world is being swallowed up by gigantic trusts, and the government of the United States quietly allows the syndicates and corporations to gain firm hold upon the supreme power of the nation. The well known Gen. Bragg announces it as his conclusion that unless the trusts are wiped out they will control the world at the expense of the people. He says: “The courts are powerless, and the laws to avert trusts are vain. The trusts are bidding defiance to the courts.” The boasted republicanism of America is being swept away, and the money power is being enthroned, a veritable oligarchy!

President Faure, of France, is meeting with new experiences in the interior world. A number of mass-meetings have been held to celebrate his departure from the natural; requiem masses have been sung in all the principal churches of the East. Ordinarily, one mass with promptly paid fee is sufficient to lull the patient in purgatory; but it seems that the church has considerable trouble in calming a distinguished man who has been compelled to cast his misfortunes on the other side. Why should not one good, expensive mass be sufficient for the president, if it is sufficient for the peasant?

It is frequently asked by way of reflection on the Koreshan System, “Has any modern scientist accepted or investigated your System?” A similar question was asked nineteen hundred years ago, "Have any of the chief priests or scribes believed on Him?" Harvey was taunted with the question, "Have any of the anatomists or physicians accepted your conclusions concerning the circulation of the blood?" Founders of new systems always encounter ridicule; but they move right along in the lines of human progress, regardless of the attitude of the leaders of fallacy.

The Methodist psychological guns are to be turned upon the world in full force during the coming three years, which tie the two centuries together; the idea is to capture "one million souls for Christ, and $20,000,000 for the church." It is the new battle-cry of a phase of diluted Christian paganism; it is the battle-cry of one fallacious element in the great battle of Armageddon,—fallacy against the truth,—the most stupendous mental revolution the world has ever known. The Wesleyan church is a daughter of Catholicism, and will ultimately share the fate of her mother!

Gallantry in the great cities of America has become exterminated. True politeness and gentility have never been the common property of the average American. Refinement of conduct is looking for a resting place in the western world; it must come with the refinement of the human mind. The competitive system, with all the accompanying disintegrating elements, has driven out consideration for the neighbor, and selfishness is the supreme guide to all modern conduct. The modern humanity is abnormal, materially gross, and mentally coarse and crude.

Pan was the great "hollow god." Pan means a hollow or concavity; it also means all or whole, for the whole world is hollow. Koreshanity is the genuine, scientific Pantheism, which differs as much from the modern pantheism as the primitive Christian system differs from its modern perversion. The symbol of the "all thought" is the pansy; the purple pansy is the Royal flower of Koreshanity.

Human thought today is but the re-elaboration of human thought of the past. The dead of the past generation impulse present humanity. The mortal world is the dwelling-place of the dead; in an actual and literal sense, the mortal human body is but a tomb or sepulchre. The corruption within betrays all attempts to whitewash the exterior.

A definite report is made concerning the alleged discovery of the south pole, and its surrounding land inhabited by 100,000 people. The discoverer is a Frenchman, and the people who inhabit the austral continent are Frenchmen. When the German discoverer reaches the moon, he will find that it is a solid ball of limburger!

While the great political parties are discarding old issues and endeavoring to find the best side of the question of American expansion and imperialism, the would-be reformers will have time and opportunity to change the color of the patches they desire to sew on the tattered garments of the old dispensation.

It would be a terrible blow to modern astronomy, if the inhabitants of Mars should signal to the people of the earth that they could not accept the Copernican system, owing to the fact that they live inside of the earth! Genuine Mars people live on the earth's surface.

Koreshanity holds that a world-wide revolution must precede the establishment of the era of universal peace. We do not advocate the disaster; we simply foresee it. Our work is constructive.

The mistake of the modern Christian socialists, is in supposing that they can make the transition from the old to the new dispensation without the mediation and function of the Messiah.

Logical Conclusions From the Cellular Premise.

I shall esteem it a great favor if you will kindly inform me upon the following points: (1) I have read the entire series of Koreshan literature, which I regret is so limited. I feel favorably disposed toward the doctrine of the earth's concavity, but I do not as yet see my way clear to accept the other doctrines. Can you explain how the latter logically follow the former?

(2) How can I learn the history of Dr. Teed?

(3) Are there any Koreshan periodicals published at the present time, besides THE FLAMING SWORD? If so, give particulars.—A.L.B., New Haven, Conn.

Nature is the perpetual result of eternal cause, and is the true and infallible index of the character and laws of cause. The universe is the outermost expression or foundation of its interior life; therefore, the science of the physical universe is the foundation of all knowledge. The laws of the relation of the human and physical worlds were discovered through comparative anatomy. The apex of the interior life of the great universal cell, is necessarily the exact counterpart of the outer world. The perfect man is that apex, the analogue of the great world; he is the microcosm, the small world, containing all of the functions of the great alchemico-organic world. Humanity at large constitutes a universe analogous to the material cosmos; the perfect man is its seed, sun, or cause. The apex of the physical world is the central sun, the seed of the mineral kingdom, the pivot of alchemical activity, the focus of all the energies generated in the negative elements of the great cell, the point from which the revitalized and renewed energies radiate or gravitate to the earth. It follows, therefore, that the sun of the anthropotic world is a man, the product of human activities, which are analogous to the activities in the physical world which produce the seed of the mineral kingdom. The sun of the human world is the supreme manifestation of life, the Most High, the Jehovah, the Almighty. Such a man appeared nineteen hundred years ago. As a basis of analogy we have the sun of the physical cosmos, and the sun of the human world,—the Light of the world.

The Koreshan theology is founded upon the knowledge of the physical universe, or the knowledge of the human form and functions analogous to universal form and functions. The two universes, the physical and the anthropotic, are interdependent and mutually perpetuating. The physical sun is the seed of the physical cosmos; the perfect man is the seed of the human world. Every kingdom is perpetuated through the sowing of the seed of its life. As the physical universe is the outermost expression of its interior life, its highest product is necessarily the highest seed, the supreme cause, of all kingdoms from the mineral to the human. This conclusion excludes the modern idea of an unknown God, and restores to humanity the science of Deity, which is the science of human life. The Messianic law is no more nor less than the law of seed sowing and harvest,—the sowing of human life in human soil for the purpose of divine regeneration. The circle of Messianic activity in humanity is the church; and the science of divine activity in humanity is the scientific theology:

Through the laws of cellular life, we learn that all energy is substance; that all energies, in all domains, in all circumstances, must return to a center or vortex for revitalization and renewal. The perpetual activity of life in the human world demonstrates its constant embodiment and re-embodiment, and its reincarnation or resurrection in perfection at the end of specific cycles. Through the law of opposites, it is demonstrated that light becomes darkness in the metamorphosis of use; that good becomes evil, that God becomes devil, that heat becomes cold, and that gravity becomes levity. On the other hand, darkness is convertible to light, cold to heat, evil to good, and the devil to God, else there can be no progress from darkness to light, from evil to good. Men are willing to admit that a sinner may be saved, that evil can become good, that a mortal man can become immortal; but they are not willing to admit that good becomes evil, and that the immortal may become mortal. Jesus became mortal when sown in the race of man,—when he took upon himself the corruptions of humanity in humanity, that he might overcome death in the circumference or extremity of the age. In the demonstration that all energy is substance, we prove that alchemy is true and chemistry is false. Following the lines of alchemy into all domains of activity, from the mineral kingdom to the action of the brain cell, we determine the character of the resultant energies, their determination and ultimate effect. Alchemy is the key; and it must be understood before logical conclusions can be made from the premise of the cellular world.

Finding that the human world is analogous to the physical cosmos, it follows that the human world when governed righteously, must be governed by the same laws which govern the alchemico-organic world. Hence, our conclusion that the true human government is that of the divine imperialism or theocracy, the antithet of democracy. We know that in the human body there is no such thing as competition, except in dissolution or death; the physical universe holds its goods and its life in common; it is a system of organic unity, and is a perfect pattern for all social and economic relations. In conformity with the formula of nature, we hold to scientific communism and co-operation. Koreshan Science in its many ramifications includes every part of the universe; and at every point, our conclusions are the exact opposite of the conclusions of modern fragmentary systems of so called science.

(2) The history of Dr. Teed has never been written. His true history cannot be obtained from his enemies; the Koreshan Unity is the only source of reliable information regarding his life, while his doctrines, when understood, are the truest index to his character. The volumes of THE FLAMING SWORD in past years contain frequent references to the Founder of Koreshanity, before and after the founding of the System.

At the present time, THE FLAMING SWORD is the only Koreshan periodical. The former publications were THE GUIDING STAR, THE PLOWSHARE AND PRUNING HOOK, and the SALVATOR AND SCIENTIST. All these have been merged into THE SWORD. However, many of the back numbers of each of these publications, as well as THE SWORD, may be obtained. All of these volumes would afford you matter for reading and study for a number of years. Considering the vast amount of matter contained in these volumes, the Koreshan Literature is quite voluminous, instead of being limited, as you suppose. Bound numbers make several large volumes. If you desire these, communicate with the Manager of the Guiding Star Publishing House.

The Cellular World's Tangible Zodiac.

The hollow globe idea and your efforts to mathematically demonstrate it in Florida, interest me very much. For a long time the limited width of the Zodiac in a limitless universe has seemed queer! I have always hung it up with a pin's amount of faith! While I am not yet ready to fully subscribe to the hollow globe idea, it certainly fits the limited width Zodiac far better than unlimited space. It also has some other excellent points.—PROF. P. A. EMERY, Cal.

The Zodiac in the physical world would be of no use as indicative of the progress of the human world, if the human world were not analogous to the physical cosmos in form and function. It is because the human world and the human body, as a vidual of the whole, contain functions which correspond to the great alchemico-organic world, that we are enabled to trace the thousands of lines of correspondence existing between man and cosmos. Man himself is an elongated cell, having his spiritual world or heavens, with the twelve divisions of the Zodiac in the brain—functions which preside over the human system from head to foot,—from Aries to Pisces. If the universe were not in the form of the incubated man, there could be no relation between the solar precession in the physical world and the progress of the anthropotic world through the twelve dispensations of divisions of the human Zodiac, in cycles of 24,000 years.

The physical cosmos has a tangible Zodiac in its shell. Its middle line is the ecliptic on the earth, near which the material planets or mercurial discs move in the bowels of the earth. The belt of the material Zodiac is the field of electro-magnetisms which impulses the projected sun north and south in its spiral or helix. It forms a part of the great battery of the universe, the motor of universal activity. The projected sun is in a corresponding belt in the physical heavens, a limited sphere of force, containing the divisions and functions exactly corresponding to the human brain; the human brain constitutes the heavens of the human cell. In the physical heavens the sun has a distinct path of equal declination north and south of the equator. The physical sun has specific functions in the physical world, because it has specific relations; its relations are sustained by virtue of the fact that it is within a universe of form. A universe without form would be limitless, functionless, lifeless, and non-existent.

There is no Zodiac in the Copernican concept of the universe; there is no room for any, no use for any. In such a concept, a Zodiac could only be an expanse of space. What function a belt of measured space amid regions of stars trillions of miles distant, having no relation to each other;—what function space extending illimitably could have in such a concept, has never been defined in modern astrology. Whatever in the physical heavens of the Copernican system can be found to correspond to the human brain, is more than we can conceive. The Copernican system does serve to indicate the mental condition of the world accepting it; it is an expression of the modern mind in its disintegration and indefinite conclusions, an expression of the dissipation and perversion of life in the several planes of human activity, which are leading the world to ruin and revolution.

Silence in Heaven.

In Rev. viii: 1, when the seventh seal was opened there was silence in heaven for half an hour. Please give me the interpretation of the same.—J. H. M., Warren Center, Pa.

Revelation is a book of scientific symbols, and cannot be understood except through the application of the knowledge of the universe and its laws. The book refers specifically to human life, the experiences of the Almighty from cycle to cycle in humanity. The seven seals are the seven Messiahs of one cycle of 24,000 years, corresponding to the seven planets and their points of sealing of physical energies of the cosmos. The loosing of the seals is the unfolding of the life of the Almighty in his offspring, the 144,000 sons of God.

Silence in heaven means the conjunction of contending elements, the cessation of war in heaven, wherein one element, the element of sin, is overcome and death destroyed. A "half hour" in the natural world would be a space of time of a number of years, the year being a cycle of 24,000 years.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koresshan Universology.

A Teacher Relates Her Experience in Investigation and Acceptance of Koresshanism.

Since I was about fourteen years of age, I have had a secret longing for something that I was not getting in the Sunday school and church. What they were presenting to me was wrapped in mystery. I was an ardent student, an attentive listener, but had my doubts as to the lessons taught, and I cherished those doubts. Consequently I read everything on the subject of religion, pro and con.

When about eighteen, I became quite an agnostic in my views, and so remained till my attention was called to the Episcopal church, in which I became interested and tried to be a devout member from 1887 to 1894, when I became interested in books from the "Science Department" of the Public Library. Although these books gave me a stronger desire for further development, they did not appease the growing thirst for real knowledge.

The first time I heard of Dr. Teed was in June, 1896, through a neighbor who invited me to hear him at a public lecture given in a private parlor in this city. A more eager and attentive listener never sat before him. His lectures appealed to me at once as the simplest, most methodical, and rational, I ever had the pleasure of hearing. Thoughts that were entities penetrated the brain and appealed to the sense of reason. I made application for membership as an investigator at once.

A few days after the Doctor's departure from our midst, I went to the mountains, carrying with me the Koresshan literature. Each day while there, I found a secluded spot in a canon, and together with the combined music of the birds and pines, I studied the Koresshan literature. Though deep, it was the grandest study I yet had found, and my soul bounded in ecstasy at the sublimity of its nature. What I could not grasp, I laid aside for a second perusal, or till I could consult some one better versed on the subject. I could not hold my tongue, but felt that I must spread the "glad tidings that publisheth peace" to all peoples.

Having been a public school teacher all my life, I assumed a position in this city in the fall of 1896. I attended the Tuesday evening meetings of the Auriga Branch of the S. A. T., reading on the subject when I had any time; learning what I could, and giving it out to all who would listen or accept the literature. Thus I taught and studied for two years, learning to understand the Koresshan Universology better each day. It has proven itself to be the only simple and yet comprehensive Science in existence. One not only has a demonstrated premise, but can also reason by hundreds of different comparisons.

The Copernican theory was always a monstrosity to me, and like all other modern, so called sciences predicates its theories on assumption. It is no wonder, then, that the Koresshan Universology, founded as it is upon a demonstrated premise, appeals to one's highest reason.

My appreciation of THE FLAMING SWORD consequently needs no further comments, except to say, each article it contains invigorates me with newness of life, notwithstanding all that has been said in a disparaging way about the Koresshans. Koresshanism with its pure teaching is the only impetus that makes life worth living. It is the only scientific solution to the great problem of Life.—Josephine K. Lesler, Colo.

ACTIVE SOLICITORS WANTED EVERYWHERE for "The Story of the Philippines," by Murat Halstead, commissioned by the Government as Official Historian to the War Department. The book was written in army camps at San Francisco, on the Pacific, with General Merritt, in the hospitals at Honolulu, in Hong Kong, in the American trenches at Manila, in the insurgent camps with Aguinaldo, on the deck of the Olympia with Dewey, and in the roar of battle at the fall of Manila. Bonanza for agents. Brimful of original pictures taken by government photographers on the spot. Large book. Low prices. Big profits. Freight paid. Credit given. Drop all trashy unofficial war books. Outfit free. Address, H. L. Barber, Gen. Mgr., 356 Dearborn St., Chicago.

A Personal Insult.

Mr. Hoover Charges Fraud as a Last Resort to Find an Argument Against the Koresshan Premise.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—In answer to my last communication you say: "Mr. Hoover may make propositions to us which he has not tried and does not know what the results would be." Now, there are two unwarrantable assumptions in the above statement. I have tried such experiments, and do know what the result would be;

and it was for the purpose of proving to you and Dr. Teed what the result would be that I made the proposition. You deny treating my first proposition with ridicule, but do not improve matters much by treating my second with contempt. I must remind you that such arguments are dangerous weapons in the hands of any one except a master of "tierce and quarte."

You charge your opponents with neglecting to investigate your premises, and with ignorance of "the principles of optics." You are not warranted in doing this. We do understand your premises, but do not accept them. They are not true. Your assumption that sight is something that proceeds from the eye to the object observed and is reflected back to the eye is not true. Your assumption that the line of sight "curvates" (?) [curvate is the proper word.—Ed.] upward at the rate of 13 inches to the mile is not true. These fundamentals in your system are the boldest of assertions, put forth with an audacity only equaled by its mendacity, and are tenaciously clung to for a questionable purpose.

Your insufferable twaddle about "foreshortening" is simply sickening to anyone who understands the first principles of optics. You object to my placing the telescope 12 inches from the water level. Now, you know, if you know anything, that on your theory of a concave earth, nothing but space would intervene between the telescope and the Canadian shore, and that when such is the case, the ability to see an object is determined by its size; and I opine Canada is large enough to be seen 52 miles. I stood on Mt. Shasta and saw the city of Sacramento, 175 miles distant, with the unaided eye, and had I possessed the aid of a telescope I might almost have counted the houses. On the contrary, on the theory of the convexity of the earth's surface, all the telescopes in the world would not enable me to see the Canadian shore, because Lake Erie, instead of space, would intervene. Yet Dr. Teed, November 3, 1897, said to me: "An eye placed at the Cleveland dock one foot above the water could not see the Canadian shore, but a telescope so placed would reveal it." Which of you infallibles am I to believe?

You call my proposition absurd, and demand that all tests shall be made on your terms. Just here allow me to say that if your Florida "fake" is a fair sample, I do not wonder that men of "scientific influence and integrity" pass you by as unworthy of notice. I read all you had to say on that subject, and it proves most conclusively that the whole affair was an "ex parte" one, and your conclusion a foregone one; or, in plain language, a carefully planned and rigidly executed fraud. The proof of this is found in the testimony of three of your witnesses. George T. Ordway says: "The part of the work performed by Prof. Morrow on the field of operations was the directing of the movements of the set screws." J. J. Williamson says: "All the bolting or fastening together of the facings, was done by Prof. Morrow." P. W. Campbell testifies: "The sections had been bolted by Prof. Morrow at the close of each adjustment." Just so! The fine Italian [not Italian.—Ed.] hand of Prof. Morrow is visible all through this finely executed farce-comedy.

When I had a personal interview with you four years ago I was impressed with your evident sincerity, and regarded you as the victim of an unprincipled impostor; but time and religion work wonders. Reading THE FLAMING SWORD and CELLULAR COSMOGONY has fully disenchanted my mind on that point. Your grandiloquently pompous language and arrogant assumption of superior wisdom, ought to, if it does not, alienate all the sensible friends you ever had. The pupil has outrun "the master," and Dr. Cyrus Romulus Remus Regulus Rhadamanthus R. Teed, as the High Muck-a-muck of "omniscience," and Grand Pastmaster of highfalutin-flub-dub, may now take a back seat. Prof. (?) U. G. Morrow, if your chickens are coming home to roost you may be consoled by the thought that you have no one to blame but yourself. If you cannot find room for this friendly communication [and intended insult.—Ed.] in your incomparable FLAMING SWORD, perhaps some other paper in Chicago can.—HARRY HOOVER, Pa.

Chat With Readers.

When it comes to considering the value of truth, you cannot calculate it with figures, nor estimate it in dollars. Keys and suggestions in the study of truth are diamonds, gems, and pearls that enrich your mental possessions; THE FLAMING SWORD is full of them. You do not ask yourself if THE SWORD is worth a dollar a year; with hundreds of our readers it is, "I would not be without it for ten times its cost"! You would hardly take a journal that you considered barely worth a dollar! You do not think of THE SWORD in this way; but we must measure your dollars by their face value; though behind them there is a reservoir of force in our favor, we cannot pay bills with that—just yet! You see, while it is an even exchange in our business transaction, we give you more than your money's worth; and while we labor to keep you on the side of debtors to us in this regard, we do not mean that it should be so with regard to subscriptions.

For nearly eighteen months a steady stream of weekly FLAMING SWORDS has flowed around the world, without missing an issue. The stream of returns, which makes the publication of THE SWORD possible, should flow as steadily. If several hundred people neglect to renew their subscriptions when the time is out, there is a gap, a lack in our receipts, and the stream goes almost dry for several days.

Make up your minds to send us renewals promptly. Say, "I will sacrifice a little in proportion to the great sacrifices of comforts made by those engaged in the publication of the Journal I must have," and you will mail the dollar right away, and perhaps more. If you love the work, support it with a vim; do not hamper us by neglect. Lulls and calms in correspondence and receipts are discouraging; the Almighty gets in a discouraging mood for similar reasons in Mal. iii: 8-13, and if we make a call for promptness, neither he nor you should blame us! There is no lull in THE FLAMING SWORD; you want it bright, prompt, spicy, and cheerful when it comes to you. The universe could not exist if its parts did not respond promptly to demands for energies. Notice the date on your wrapper, and keep it a year ahead; and the extra dollar you might mail us will make you feel generous and broad, and enable us to do more work in the interest of your emancipation from the same hells that we are in.

Special Offer Extended.—We have decided to extend our offer which terminated January 15,—to send one copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY free, to all who send us $1.00 for a new subscription, or renewal of subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD. Many of our readers availed themselves of this generous offer. We now extend it to March 24, 1899. The giving of the book will be an extra inducement to new readers to subscribe for the inimitable FLAMING SWORD, and afford our workers an excellent opportunity and incentive to work up their own vicinities. You can procure many subscriptions for us if you try, and we trust you will arouse a telling interest in the Koreshan System during the time of the extension of this offer of the book free with every subscription.

Magazines for March.

You can Obtain any of the Following Monthly Journals from Us, Single Copies, or Clubbed by the Year.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—An extraordinary number, containing 133 fine half-tone illustrations. The principal features are Mohammed and his Empire, the Real Arabian Nights, Flour Milling, Experiences in Alaska, the American Indian, and Experiments in Mind Reading. Price per number, 10 cts.; $1.00 per year. The Cosmopolitan and the FLAMING SWORD, one year, $1.75.

FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY.—Contains many valuable features; finely illustrated by many half-tone cuts. The illustrated article on the Nicaragua Canal is of special interest to all Koreshans. The Mormon question is discussed, and the condition of the Insurgent army in Cuba during campaign against Spain, is disclosed. 10 cts. per number; $1.00 per year. This monthly and THE SWORD $1.75 per year.

THE CHAUTAUQUAN.—We always look with interest for the Chautauquan. The March number contains a number of articles of popular interest; those of special interest to our readers are Recent Progress in Physical Science, the Effect of Invention upon Labor and Morals, the discussion of the sex question, and short history of Cyrano de Bergerac. It will pay you to get this number; better take it right along with THE SWORD—both for $1.75 a year.

POPULAR SCIENCE.—A Journal devoted to the study of natural sciences, and the strange things in nature; all about insects, birds, and snakes, their habits and peculiarities. Popular electricity, archeology, about minerals, recent inventions, astronomy, practical microscopy, answers to questions, physiology, and hygiene. $2 per year. 108 Fulton st., New York.

MIND.—Devoted to the New Thought school of Mental Science. Contains interview with Ingersoll, giving his views of the church, the supernatural, mental science, etc. To students of Koreshanity, this journal would serve to suggest problems for solution by Koreshan principles. 10 cts. per number; $1.00 per year.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell: we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question? Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Pictum. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.80; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 10 cents.

ENTIRE SERIES OF BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS, POST-PAID, ONLY 75 CENTS.

Mistakes of Ancient and Modern Chronologists.

PROFESSOR TOTTEN is struggling with a great fallacy, in his application of mathematics to events never to be fulfilled. The Professor is good in figures, but when he attempts to adjust his chronology to facts, they do not fit. If he had given as much time to methods of fulfilment as he has to mathematics, he would be performing some use to the human race. Or, if he had even divided the time between his chronology and the investigation of the Lord's methods, he might be of service on the right side. As it is, he is favoring antichrist. Totten is totally ignorant of the character of the events to terminate the Christian dispensation. His Anglo-Israelism is simply moonshine, and bad moonshine at that. He is sincere, earnest, and no doubt honest, but badly off. His enthusiasm is devoted to an utterly false principle.

Jesus the Christ lived over thirty years, during which time the students of Jewish prophecy and the chronological experts were figuring out the chronological fact that it was time for the promised Messiah to appear. Those earnest, enthusiastic, and honest researchers after times and seasons, failed to comprehend the more important fact of the times,—the presence of the Christ. Professor Totten is absolutely wrong as to what people constitute Ephraim. He is absolutely wrong as to the character of the Lord's coming.

The Voice of The Eagle.

"The fourth beast [the Eagle] said, come and see. And behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and hell followed with him." The abomination of desolation closes the Christian age. England and the United States do not constitute the Lord's chosen people, though the firstfruits of the resurrection will primarily come forth from the Anglo-Saxon race; not all, however, for there are many of the firstfruits in other nations. The Holy Ghost (the Spirit) was planted in many nations, according to the following record: (Acts ii: 4-12.)

And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed, and marveled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God. And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this?

As the Spirit of Truth was planted in all these people, the sons of God will arise in them all. But as the Germanic family is the universal product of international infiltration, and as the United States is the culmination of this flood of international unity, from the people of the United States, as Ephraim (or the source of Ephraim, for Ephraim is not manifest until the resurrection), will come the sons of God; that is, Ephraim.

The abomination of desolation will come first, and England and America—both false, as governments, to the principles of humanity and justice—will suffer punishment. The stripes of the American flag signify the punishment of the United States. Everything true and good has been and is prostituted to the machinations of the money power. Love of money, Romanism, and whiskey rule the United States; and if there is anything in the universe requiring to be washed out, it is these three.

An Anonymous Bubble Punctured.

Writers of Anonymous Letters Reveal the Motive of Their Attack on Koreshanity, by Withholding Their Names.

WE PUBLISH this week a letter written to Mr. W. R. Wallace of the I. C. U., urgently requesting him to read an article in the Atlantic Monthly, by Dr. John Fiske. The writer of the letter placards himself as a paltry coward, imagining that by withholding his name he disguises his personality. We recently saw an article from the same source, in the World's Hope. Our cause is never injured by these puerile efforts to retard the progress of Koreshanity.

So far as Dr. Fiske's ravings are concerned, we have merely to say that his arguments, if worth anything, would consign the prophets, the Lord in whom the writer professes to believe, and the disciples to the "limbo" upon which "Nathaniel Holmes stands," and the "darkest recesses" into which Fiske has dumped Ignatius Donnelly. No man ever came before the world with a revolutionary system, who was not accounted a fool and a crank by the professed conservatives of the times; and because there arises an occasional philosopher or scientist, it in no wise follows that there are not many fools, cranks, and hypocrites.

Not many years ago, there were four men attempting to unite on the basis of unraveling the mysteries of prophecy, they claiming to specifically represent the "Elijah spirit" of this present or coming age. What little thunder they possessed, they stole from a man by the name of Barbour, of New York state. Every one of these men imagined himself the biggest headed of the four, and the result was that the "Elijah spirit" headed up in each one, each going off on a tangent of his own, giving a different interpretation of the prophecies regarding the closing of the old and the beginning of the new age. The writer of the above-mentioned anonymous letter is a follower of one of these four men; each of whom secretly claims as much as the Founder of Koreshanity, but hypocritically disguises from the public his claims and aspirations.

While we do not fear bushwhacking, we regard it a contemptible mode of warfare; and a man who will lend himself to the course pursued by the author of this letter is an ignoble sneak. We are making an open fight for the truth. We do not hesitate to publicly say that we are authorized to publish to the world the science of immortal life. If we had not force enough to arouse the enmity and even the aggressive opposition of the world of error, we would be compelled to relinquish the fight and retire from public notice. Michael and his angels fought, and the dragon and his angels; and what a general most desires when marshaling and mobilizing his forces, is to find the enemy in force.

The pope of Rome claims to be Christ's vicar on earth, and to have committed to him the keys of St. Peter; but while the Protestant nations and peoples silently laugh at the assumption, they publicly bow to his papal majesty, honor the dignity and authority of his claims, tremble at his power, and kiss his toe. "God moves in a mysterious way;" and when the dispensation closes and the new age is ushered in, there will be some surprises for the fools and the cranks.

There are many Koreshans in Chicago, Mr. Wallace among the number, who are not only able to meet the projectiles from one such blunderbuss as the author of the letter, but who, after reading all that Fiske may have to offer, will remain staunch in faith, active in works, and more earnestly spurred to the aggressive warfare of the Koreshan propaganda.

Turning the World Upside Down.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

THE MODERN world is a manifest perversion of the principles of truth and life. Truth and righteousness are inseparable. Fallacy is always manifest in its correlate corruptions of human life and human society. Fallacy is the perversion of truth, its absolute antithesis; it is truth vitiated, the form without the life—the corpse of truth. Fallacy exists in chaos, and is never capable of being reduced to a system; it is negative and agnostic. Truth is positive, integral, synthetic, and rational; it is founded upon a demonstrated premise.

The condition of humanity today is an infallible index to the character and quality of modern thought, and determines whether truth or fallacy prevails in the civilization of the so called enlightened nations of the earth. The modern world is false in life and in thought; it is full of inhumanity and diabolism. Modern science in its every branch, modern education in its every department, and modern ingenuity and skill contribute to the oppression of the world by constantly increasing the facilities of the millionaire to prey upon the masses, and steal from them their wealth, health, and happiness. In the ranks of the modern church, are the men who engage in the traffic of human life and perpetuate the iniquitous system of slavery; they are the heads of corporations and trusts for the systematic and organized robbery of the people, for the corruption of government, and for the maintenance of the tangible hell in earth!

The systems now prevailing in the world—the systems that affect to teach humanity its religion, its morals, and its science, the systems that pretend to civilize the world,—are directly responsible for the conditions which exist in modern society. The corruptions in church, state, society as well as in the vidual, are palpable evidences of the fact that the world's mental impulses and desires proceed directly from the pole of fallacy. Can any one believe that truth prevails amid such conditions? Does the chaos of human thought indicate rational deductions from a true premise? Do the increasing evils of modern times evince the success or the failure, the truth or the fallacy, of the remedies applied through the fragmentary systems of religion, science, and social economy? In the conduct of the world we unmistakably read its character,—we read its mind and penetrate its heart. It is full of fallacy! It must be turned upsidedown! It must be revolutionized!

Is it possible to locate the opposite pole,—the antithet of the world's fallacy and chaos? If we should find the antithesis, would it not be truth and order, purity and unity? It was located nineteen hundred years ago; then the distinction between truth and fallacy was clearly defined; the line of demarcation was drawn between the truth as it existed in its unity and completeness in one personality, and the fallacy as it existed in the multitudes. In the one there was mental light; in the others there were mental darkness and corruption. Jesus dared to declare the fact that he was divine, that all truth is divine, and that fallacy is from the opposite source—substance of the opposite quality. Jesus was the embodiment of truth in its philosophic degree; it was the antithet of the philosophy of the world. Jesus and his disciples revolutionized the mind on the plane of metaphysics; it was said of them that they were the men who had come to “turn the world upside down.” Then fallacy was manifest in the character of the people; and from that day to this humanity has not removed itself from the terrible condemnation and denunciations of Jesus. The masses are incapable of containing the truth; their life does not conform to it, and they do not desire it.

Koreshanity the Antithet of All Modern Systems of Fallacy.

If it is possible to translate the philosophy of truth as taught by Jesus and as it inhered in him, to truth as it is applicable in a scientific age, we will have a system of truth which is the antithet of all modern thought. Koreshanity is the evolution of the primitive Christian system; it is the scientific translation of the philosophy of Jesus; it is the science of the life that he lived and possessed, the science of his character, the science of creation, and of the universe. There is no other system in all the world that is so absolutely the reverse of all modern conclusions, as Koreshan Universology. It stands opposed to modern science at every point; it is not partially different, but wholly different; the exact opposite. It “turns the world upside down,” and outside in. The demonstrated premise that we live upon the concave or inner surface of the earth instead of on the outside, illustrates to what extent Koreshan Astronomy differs from the modern astronomical assumptions. The entire Koreshan System is founded upon this premise; consequently all its conclusions are the exact opposite of every conclusion associated with modern astronomy and entertained in the modern religious, scientific, sociologic, and economic systems of the world. Can you expect less of truth? Can you hope to find truth that is not the opposite of fallacy? Is not light the antithet of darkness, the absolute antithet? Shall truth be a twilight, a mixture of light and darkness? Never! If not, Koreshanity is absolutely true, if the modern fragmentary systems are false! If Koreshanity is not true, what is? There is no other Universology than Koreshanity. There is no other system to point to—none other to search for.

Application of the Principle of Inversion an Aid in Studying Koreshan Science.

Is it difficult for you to understand Koreshan Universology? Is it hard for you to determine what it means, what it is? You may not be able to reach conclusions through the application of logic to a given premise, nor follow the various lines of correspondence and relations of the human and physical worlds—you may not be accustomed to that; but you can remember that every conclusion of truth is the opposite of fallacy, that every conclusion in Koreshan Science is the antithet of every conclusion in the modern systems, in all lines of thought, in every sphere of activity. In the study of Koreshanity, you can apply the principle of inversion as an aid.

If from the evidences we have presented,—the evidences that are visible and that are felt in the world to-day, you are satisfied that the systems of the world are fallacious, you can arrive at the truth by forming the opposite conclusions. If you can find the central thought embodied in any statement of fallacy, you can reach the truth if you are able to perceive its antithet. In this way Koreshanity can be studied from the textbooks of fallacy, and from the world's present condition. It will assist you in determining that if mortality obtains in the natural world, that immortality is possible also, through obedience to the laws which the dying world persistently disobeys; it will assist you in reaching the conclusion that the opposites of all modern conditions are attainable here in the body in the natural world, through a reversion of the order of thought, and through antithetical desires; it will assist you in locating for yourself, not in yourself, the positive pole of Science in humanity, the Messenger of Truth, of whom it was prophesied that he should “turn the wise men backward and make their knowledge foolishness,” overthrow “science falsely so called,” and “turn the world upside down” through a scientific revolution and establishment of the divine kingdom in the earth!

In the Battle Against the Competitive System.

The Qualities of the True Soldier Needed in All the Volunteers for Service in the Primary Nucleus of the I. C. U.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

KORESHAN Science recognizes the fact that everything in the universe has its antithet, consequently there is a divine selfishness as well as that diabolic variety with which we are so painfully familiar. It is commonly called unselfishness, and might be defined as self-perfecting and preservative in obedience to the science of the law for the good of the greater self, the ultimate Grand Man created in the image and likeness of God. This quality of spirit keeps the Almighty in his humanity as the pole star of all our thoughts, and impulses us to do whatever we undertake, heartily as unto the Lord. It keeps our hearts at leisure from ourselves, and makes us happy everywhere.

We admit that it is quite natural for any man who has proved himself incompetent to compete successfully and alone with the monster competitive system, to remember in his day of trouble, the maxim: "In unity there is strength." It is then quite natural for him to desire to join forces with some strong body and absorb its strength for his own preservation, and to seek relief in an organization, from all personal, moral responsibility to put forth his best viudal efforts in the exercise of all his mental and physical powers, from motives of either diabolic or divine selfishness. People of this variety are lamentably numerous; and whatever community receives them is liable to find itself prostrate from the draining of unwholesome parasites.

We read in the Bible, Acts xi:5-9, of a vision once granted the Apostle Peter,—the Rock upon which the Church Triumphant is founded. It reads thus: "I saw a vision, a certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me: Upon the which, when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air; And I heard a voice saying unto me, arise, Peter; slay and eat. But I said, not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth."

Nevertheless a voice said: "What God hath cleansed, call not thou common." God hath granted unto the Gentiles "repentance unto life." It is the sinners that the Almighty seeks to save to the outermost; those lost and undone. He is ready to receive them out of the mire of the competitive system, into the Father's house of the Communistic System, where the everlasting arms of the law of love will protect them from themselves, and all other poor sufferers like themselves.

We read in this same revered Bible, about the "washing of regeneration," and a "renewing of the Holy Ghost." The washing seems to come first. This washing is the application of the science of truth to life. The science of truth is "the pure river of the water of life." It is written: "We are saved by the love of the truth." Now to effect our final and full salvation, the truth makes some legitimate demands upon her lovers. The Lord, who is "the way, the truth, and the life," said: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." The ten categories of the law, He summed up in two commandments: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength. And thy neighbor as thyself.

Koreshanity gives to the world the science of these two commandments; this involves the science of self-government and universal societal government. To live comfortably and profitably, in co-operative or communistic organizations, we need washing within and without with the water of science,—the water of the regeneration.

The successful development of the I. C. U., an effort in the line of scientific co-operation, can become manifest only from a primary nucleus so well washed and sanctified by the application of the science of truth to life, that we shall be absorbed by it and become its living revelation. Poor mortals though we be, bearing in our bodies the outward marks of all manner of common and unclean beasts, we may—if our hearts are as the altar of God, and our intellects as his throne—be looked upon with favor, and with righteous judgment be pronounced neither common nor unclean, but food fit for the Gods, living stones to be built upon "the Rock" as the temple of the Most High.

We long to receive letters from far and near, laden with the spirit of self-sacrifice from the hearts of volunteers ready for service in the great industrial army of the I. C. U., which is mobilizing at the call of God. The spiritual life of this army is the science of scientific co-operation. This living water is ready to wash clean, by the thousands, men, women, and children, from the filthy abominations of the competitive system, if they will but hear its voice. They are welcome to come from the sweat-shops, from the over-crowded marts of trade, and be taught how to demonstrate that labor is capital, and to effect the exchange of the products of labor, value for value.

The volunteers who are to constitute the primary nucleus of the triumphant co-operative order, need to be men of sterling integrity, who will devote the whole force of that integrity to the standard of the Koreshan System, in condemnation of the standards of competition, exalted as those of moral rectitude by its fallacious methods of education. The I. C. U. volunteers need to be of a quality that can "endure hardness as good soldiers," and characterized by the self-subjection of the genuine military patriot whose delight is in obedience to commands and allegiance to official superiors, his comrades in the service.

We want those in whom patience is dominant, who can cheerfully plow, harrow, and sow, before they harvest and rejoice. We want lovable people who say, "What can I do for you?" before they even think, "What are you going to do for me?" Some write thus: "Can I have this?" "Will I have that?" "I cannot do this," and "I must do that," and express themselves as though the Lord ought to feel immensely flattered should they finally conclude to give his Gospel train a limited trial on their narrow gauge route.

There are thousands of men who stand ready, at the word of command, with the spirit of absolute obedience, to march to the front of the battlefield, in the interest of our territorial extension policy; but where are the thousands, calling themselves "soldiers of Christ," who should arise and put on the whole armor of God, and organize for the restoration of commercial equity through scientific co-operation?

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE PROBLEM of life continues to tax the ingenuity of the modern mind. Every little while some one concludes his observations with a theory, the expression of his world of experience. Theology cannot be excluded from the consideration of the problem, because effect and cause are inseparable; cosmogony necessarily involves theology, and the relation of modern theology and the Copernican system is obvious. A new theory of evolution is being advocated in the world, and is distinct from the system of Darwin, which assumes a direct evolution from form to form. The new theory holds that the first life on the earth was a germinal vesicle; that a loose aggregation of these made the lowest order of animal life, a sac, with a mouth, and exit for waste. Then nature concluded to make a better animal, and commenced another, adding the power to secrete lime to form a shell, while the sac animal continued to exist to and propagate its kind. The idea is that nature did not know how to perform the work of creation at first, and had to learn by experience and improve by practice, until she capped the climax by making man! What it was in nature that did the making or molding of all these things, the author fails to disclose. However, a good argument is put forth against the Darwinian system; it is that ethnological and archeological facts do not sustain the idea that man evolved from lower forms, but that he has been man ever since he was made,—that is, he was a direct creation of the earth. Again, it is held that if Darwinism be true, the progenitor of man would be manifest periodically in humanity, according to the law of atavism, or the recurrence of the ancestral type. There is a true atavism, or the periodical appearance in humanity of a pronounced type of man; and the discovery of the laws of such manifestations by the Founder of Koreshanity, is the greatest discovery of the age. If we can know the character of such a type we demonstrate the character of the evolution, and overthrow both Darwinism and the theory of man from the earth-mold. There is such a thing as evolution, truly; but it is the evolution of life through the various planes of manifestation of form in all the kingdoms of the universe; it is not an evolution of form, for the species are fixed. While there is an evolution, there is the co-ordinate involution, which all fragmentary systems of the world ignore. It is demonstrated in the production of the seed of every kind of life. There is involution, both progressive and retrogressive; man is from above and from beneath; and the two ancestral types from which man springs, and has eternally sprung, were manifest nineteen hundred years ago in the personalities of Jesus and Judas, the personal, human God, and the personal, human devil.

Dr. Lyman Abbott concludes that the spirits of the dead are with the living, flying about in the external atmosphere. He delights to think that the strange and subtle influences which creep into his experiences, come from his mother, who stands about him as a silent vigil. The modern mind undertakes to conceive of the existence of God in the same way—that he is all around us. Such a conception does not differ from the vague superstition concerning ghosts moving about in the air. But Dr. Abbott does not know; he says, "All this may be the result of imagination; I am not certain—I do not know. But of one thing I am sure,—there is a real presence in the Christ." It has never occurred to Dr. Abbott nor to his colleagues, that the human brain is the habitat of spirits, and that all mystery about the future existence would cease upon scientific analysis of the brain! But is Christ in everybody? If we look at the things that the Christ is supposed to be doing today while keeping company with the millions, we must conclude that there is a mistake somewhere. The invisible something guides the Methodist in one belief, the Baptist in another, and the Presbyterian in still another. He stays by them whether they are millionaires or slaves, whether the mind is sensual or refined. All classes of men, rich and poor, the aristocrat and the tramp, the clergyman and the criminal, claim this mysterious presence. Is it not strange that Deity should reduce mankind to chaos by having men think so many conflicting thoughts, and do so many things that infringe on the rights of others? No; the Christ is not in everybody,—only in a very, very few!

There is a darker side to modern education than is apparent under the spell of fallacy. It is not alone in the fact that the modern schools promulgate the fallacies of the modern world and generate the false spirit of the age, but in the effect that "education" has upon the rising generation,—in the increase of extravagance, and in the making of parasites on human society. A modern writer estimates that four fifths of the highly educated at public expense are now a burden upon society, who might have been independent and useful had they been educated in lines of industry. Modern education is deficient not only in the fact that it lacks the truth in theory, but also in that it opens no avenues to usefulness. The modern school sustains no relation to the actual production of wealth, but only to the methods of extravagant consumption of it. If the Americans were truly educated and enlightened, the agencies of human slavery and poverty would not exist. The wealth of the world is not produced by those who have gone through the mills of higher education!

If there is no force ever lost nor matter destroyed, it is evident that no force could ever be gained or acquired in the universe. The nebular hypothesis is a system of evolution of worlds. All force, according to it, began with the simple agitation of a single atom; the amount of such a force, and the field of its activity would be infinitesimal, but through processes, it is thought that it was evolved into the various qualities of force which move the billions of worlds we now see as stars! It is held that matter cannot be changed as to its atomic elements, nor destroyed; yet originally, according to Laplace, the universe consisted of one homogeneous substance, from which finally evolved all of the various kinds of matter which exist today. Somehow, force and matter have passed through correlated experiences without having any alchemical relation! No force is lost or gained, yet all force evolved from a single impulse; matter cannot be changed, yet all forms of matter came from one substance in the beginning! Great system, that!

The attitude of THE FLAMING SWORD to the world generally, corresponds to the attitude of Jesus to humanity nineteen hundred years ago. Jesus spared neither foe nor friend; it was his mission to tell the truth about humanity—about its degeneracy, depravity, hypocrisy, and sensuality. The world has not changed in character from that time to this. We are no more sarcastic in our criticisms, no more bitter in our denunciations, no more scathing in our rebukes of the modern world, than Jesus in his attitude toward corrupt humanity at the beginning of the age. Do not Christians like to have the teachings of Jesus revived? Do they not desire us to condemn the same things that he condemned? No; the religious world is afraid of the uncompromising policy of the Truth; it considers that the remedy is worse than the disease! The work of Jesus is revived in Koreshanity. This fact alone accounts for our opposition to all the phases of modern life and thought, and for the world's opposition to Koreshanity!

The great telescope that is being constructed for the Paris exposition in 1900, is designed especially for the study of the moon. It is to be the greatest ocular instrument in the world. With the estimated distance of the moon at 240,000 miles, it is supposed that the power of the telescope will be sufficient to make the moon appear to be within 41 miles of the earth. In reality, it is only a thousand miles away to begin with; and reduced proportionately, it would bring the moon within a few hundred feet! The astronomers will endeavor to look for stones, ruined cities, and other evidences that real life once existed on the convex surface of the moon. Let them look at it! They will find nothing that resembles objects on the earth,—no stones, no masonry, no pyramids, no ruined cities, no trees, nor skeletons; nothing but an uneven surface, the character of which they will be unable to determine; and the more they magnify it, the less they will see!

Rev. Dr. Cadman, a leading Methodist "divine," of New York, recently startled his colleagues by declaring that the Bible is of doubtful authenticity, and contains errors and contradictions. He has thrown a bomb among the Methodists, and even that denomination may now have its school of "higher criticism," which will finally honeycomb the entire denomination. The work of disintegration of modern Christianity is persistent; its ravages are seen on every hand, and one by one the leading lights of orthodoxy succumb to the influence of modern science and agnosticism. The religious world is endeavoring to form new ideas of the Lord Christ; and Biblical declarations concerning him are too radical and repugnant to the sensual mind. If they impeach the records, they are at liberty to form conclusions concerning Jesus and his mission as they please!

The promise of a Messiah once concerned the Jewish mind; for an age they looked for his coming: but when he came, only a remnant accepted him. The Jews were divided concerning the tribe in which the Messiah should be born; the prevailing idea was that he should come from Judah, in accordance with the prophecy of Jacob in his blessing of his son Judah. It is evident that the promise was fulfilled in the coming of Jesus; but another promise of a Messiah, or rather, a promise of another Messiah, gave the Jews further hope, the hope that inspires the Koreshan, and arouses the contempt of the modern clergy. It is the promise and prophecy in the blessing of Jacob upon Joseph, that "From thence (from Joseph) is the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel." Will that declaration of inspiration ever be fulfilled?

A newly-discovered animal in the Philippines is now announced as the "real missing link" necessary to complete the Darwinian system of evolution. It is the tarsier, having a face like an owl, and body, limbs, and tail like a monkey, and is about the size of a squirrel. What a travesty on the Creator of man, to place such a being on the plane of the Messianic function! While the modern mind is insanely clamoring to find the progenitor of man in the lowest planes of the animal world, we are freely admitting that the character of such conclusions strongly indicates that the minds entertaining them are related to the four-legged "missing link"! The world is looking for a peculiar god!

Modern civilization is an illusion; if it were otherwise, if it were true, it would produce results compatible with justice and righteousness. The world is under the spell of a supreme wizard, whose wand directs the mind in the perpetuation of the stupendous system of crime against humanity. True civilization would make people rejoice; it would not add a single curse to man or nation. A great curse rests upon the modern world; its bane is "civilization." It makes slaves at home and slaves abroad. The entire world is cursed with evils and corruptions, which are fostered in all the institutions of modern civilization, and directly under the influence of the modern church!

The old idea that comets forebode evil to man, is revived by the modern scientist, in the periodical announcement that a comet will destroy the earth. It is the tendency of the human mind to be afraid of anything it does not understand, and in this the modern mind finds ample cause for fear of the comets! Prof. Rudolph Falb, a seismatist or earthquake prophet, of Vienna, predicts a collision of the earth and the returning comet of 1866, and the consequent destruction of the earth, in November of the present year. What we are most interested in is what will become of the comet! When November passes by, make a note of the failure of the collision.

Gov. Brady, of Alaska, declares that "the poor man can thank God that we own Alaska; it has so many possibilities for him." Why cannot the poor man be thankful that we own the United States? Because the possibilities for the poor man to live where there is the greatest commercial activity, are rapidly disappearing through the work and influence of the money power. Where there is the greatest wealth, the poor man suffers most; for that reason he must have new fields where loose gold nuggets, fish, and game are not controlled by the trusts. The politicians have seen this, and have provided for territorial expansion!

Four years ago Rev. Dixon, of New York, founded the Christian Union, whose sole basis of membership should be a belief in Christ. Nothing else was to be taken into consideration in the new church club, no matter what the character should be. The new idea was called the Peoples' church. You see, it was next to nothing, and now its founder admits it; he says he has been disillusioned. He finds that he cannot convert the world with a new thing, with a net so loose that it will not hold his game!

He gives up the project and goes back to the Baptist church, where his fossilization will become complete!

America is still in advance in lines of human progress, and in the consumption of flesh foods. The people of the United States consume 11,000,000,000 pounds of meat annually, or an average of 147 pounds for each person. Compared with the European nations, running other scales than that of carnivorous appropriation, the United States stands at the head in more senses than the one. In England, the average is 100 pounds of meat for each person annually; Norway, 80; France, 77; Spain, 70; Germany, 64; Hungary, 60; Italy 24!

The location of the greatest city of the future ages will be where civilization focalizes in the twentieth century. It must be at the center of the greatest commercial activity; it must be in the greatest nation, and nearest the cross-lines of the electric vessels of the new dispensation. The prophetic lines have been thrown around southern Florida and the West Indies, in the location of the New Jerusalem; and the interest of the world will turn toward San Estero, Fla., in the opening of the new century.

Ingersoll condemns the Bible as obscene and vulgar, and as out of date, and as containing too indelicate expressions for a fastidious age. He suggests Shakespeare as the climax of human inspiration; yet Shakespeare was written at the time the English Bible was translated, and contains ten times as many indelicate expressions as the Bible!

Competition cannot last always; it will cease when the stronger element is successful, and the weaker is defeated. We are entering that stage now; the great business concerns no longer compete; they form trusts and co-operate.

Truth makes no compromises with the sensual loves and feelings of humanity. Koreshanity has not come to the world to adapt itself to the conditions which exist, but to destroy the conditions, and adapt humanity to the truth.

According to an American humorist, the Koreshan System divides the world into just three classes: Those who know that Koreshanity is so; those who know it is not so; and those who do not care whether it is so or not!

Darwinism inverts the order of evolution. Man did not evolve from the monkey; evolution proceeds from the involved man. The monkey is the ultimate state of human degeneration.

The more conveniences there are for producing food and clothing, the less the people have to eat and wear.

With the arrival of St. Patrick's day, we are reminded of the sham rock upon which Catholicism is founded.

Jesus did not come to teach men that God is in every man, but only in the righteous!

Through the trusts, the devil makes the final grab for all the products of the world.

The modern Christian prays for forgiveness for preying upon his neighbor.

The moon is the ghost of the earth; human ghosts are mental moonshine.

Some men advertise their goods; others, their ills and misfortunes.

Truth cannot prevail while the world is in chaos.

Silence is golden,—but it will not coin money.

The universe is the only perpetual motion.

The Cellular Cosmogony is cyst-ematic.

Fallacy is the corpse of truth!

St. Patrick's day!

Editorial Discussions, Chats, and Correspondence.

THE EDITOR.

Have All Men Been Gods?

From what has appeared in THE SWORD from time to time, I understand that you affirm the following fundamental propositions: First, that the earth is cellular; that all life is on the inside of it, and that it constitutes the universe—all there is. Second, that there never was a time when life and man did not exist—that all things "live, move, and have their being" in the hollow sphere. Third, that the perfect man is God. If these basic propositions are true, then does it not follow that all men have been Gods; and that when a man becomes God he voluntarily goes back into sinful humanity? And when speaking of God, would it not be proper to refer to him as a God, rather than the God?—C. B., Salem, O.

The above three brief statements of some of the principal tenets of Koreshan Universology, are correct so far as they go. The universe is one great system of organic life, containing all of the functions necessary to its perpetuity. The physical structure of the universe, the alchemico-organic world, is the most external form of thought, the material expression of all the activities of the co-ordinate human world, or anthropostic universe. The universe with all its kingdoms, is the expression of the mind of Deity. It is the expression, by virtue of the fact that his life is pressed out into all planes of life and existence. God is in the animal kingdom, not as God, but as the animal; likewise he is in the vegetable kingdom, and the mineral kingdom, or the physical universe. On the other hand, God is the impression of the entire system, the highest consciousness of the whole. He is the world's involution, the apex, the climax of universal aspiration; he is in the perfect man, all that the universe is; he is the summing up of all its experiences; he is the fulcrum of supreme impulse of all universal activity.

The two co-ordinate kingdoms of the universe are the human world and the physical world. In the physical world there is a continual ascent and descent of energies; the sun is in touch with every atom of matter in the world. Every atom of matter in the universe has been in the sun; every atom of matter has been, in the form of its highest possible mark of attainment, in the mind of Deity. We cannot say, however, that every atom of matter has been a sun, nor a God; it has been in the sun, and in the Almighty.

The central sun is the perpetual point of consciousness of the physical world. In the absolute sense, the sun itself does not ascend nor descend; it exists by virtue of the fact that it receives substances and gives them out again. The substances do not constitute the sun except when in the vortex; the substances pass in and out of the sun, but the sun remains the same center of central activity, the central consciousness of the physical world; it is the one sun, continually at the center. In another sense, the sun does descend through its light, heat, gravity, and other qualities of energies or substances; in a sense, the sun pervades the entire earth through its emanations; the earth is the energies of the sun materialized.

The human world is the sphere of God's immediate field of activity; he is God in the human world. What the central sun is to the physical world, God is to humanity. The sun is the eternal center of the physical form; God is eternally the center of the world of humanity. In the human world, time corresponds to universal space. Dispensations measure in time the radius of the human world and back again, corresponding to the radius of the earth and return in the ascending and descending energies of the physical cosmos. At the end of every dispensation there is a manifestation of Deity; he impels humanity from altitude in progress, from an eminence which corresponds to the sun's altitude in space. Jesus influenced a circle of humanity; that circle is not a circle as it appears when drawn mechanically, but a circle of human beings, in a timic succession in the age, through which the radiations pass in the evolution of the divine impulse.

God is always the central consciousness of humanity; he is the innermost mind of a class of humanity in which he moves. He was the central mind of the Jewish race; during the Christian dispensation he has been in the Christian church. He has a central line of activity; he passes invisibly through humanity from age to age, as the continual center of the spiritual worlds, the central life and consciousness of the universe. At the end of dispensations he manifests externally as the external sun. He is then not a different God, but the same God. Jesus was an externalization of the Almighty; his form was the concrete mind of Deity. He was therefore exactly the same God that he was in the interior. The mind of Jesus was composed of millions of spirits of men who had lived in the past; so that he was not merely a single personality, but a composite man, the summing up of millions of personalities, just as the physical sun is the summing up of the entire physical universe. Jesus, as the Sun of Righteousness, has shown down through the age; his mental light, the result of his burning or theocrasis at the beginning of the dispensation, has radiated through the various planes of humanity, from mind to mind, just as the energies of the sun pass down through the various stars, planes of force, and atmospheres, to the earth. At the end of the age he reappears in another form, but as the same God.

From the planting of a seed to the production of the harvest, there is a central persistency of the life of the seed, in its death in the soil, in the formation of the plant, and in the grouping of the corpuscles to form the seed again. The life of the seed is the creator; the seed itself is the perpetuator of the kind. The central spirit of humanity is Elohi; its central persistency is the creator. The perfect man is the seed produced through the activities of Elohi; the seed man of the anthropotic world is Jehovah. The planting of Jehovah in the human race is through the process of theocrasis or combustion; the spirit of the flesh descends into sensual humanity, while the central spirit of Jehovah enters the most interior realm, the celestial world, and does not descend. At the end of the age Elohi enters into conjunction with the energies that went down into humanity during the age, and produces the harvest or offspring of the sowing. The aspiration of the ascending energies is to form the seed; the desire of the seed is to be sown again.

The mind of the mortal world is the offal of divine mental activity. The waste of a given kingdom enriches and fertilizes the next lower, and every higher kingdom feeds upon the lower. In a sense, every man has been God, or in God; every man is the embodiment of an infinitesimal part of life that has descended from the Almighty. Humanity moves in aspiration to reach the final goal of perfection; in series of cycles, every man will become God; and when he becomes God, in the state of perfect manhood, he voluntarily goes both up and down; the substances of his material body become life in the descending degree to save humanity; the central spirit or consciousness enters into conjunction with the consciousness of God, becomes absorbed into Nirvana, and remains in that consciousness eternally. We have one universe, with its one central consciousness; it is the one God, who always lives; that one God periodically manifests himself in the external world. Every manifestation is not a different God, but the very Eternal!

Delivering Up the Kingdom to the Father.

(1) If the Father and Jesus the Son are one, when Jesus died on the cross, was the universe without a God for three days? How am I to explain this? Furthermore, it is said that God the Father raised up Jesus from the dead.

(2) Please tell me how the following Scriptures are to be understood (I Cor. xv: 22-31): "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all."—H. N. R., Baltimore, Md.

(1) The spirit of Jesus was Elohi; Elohi was God the Spirit, the Father, that Jesus said was in him. At the time of the death of Jesus, he was conscious of the departure of the Spirit, and cried, "Elohi, Elohi, why hast thou forsaken me?" The personality of Mary Magdalene, out of whom Jesus cast seven devils by way of preparation of the temporary vessel of the divine Spirit, received the Spirit of Jesus. She therefore held the power, God the Spirit, which resuscitated Jesus and awakened him from the tomb, upon transmission of the substance from Mary to Jesus.

(2) Maturity is greater than youth; the Fatherhood of Jesus, that is, his power to beget, was greater than his sonship. In the sowing of his life in humanity, he began his reign in the hells for the purpose of subduing death; through the processes of regeneration of the life sown, he will bring the fruitage of his sowing to the possibilities of Fatherhood in the biune beings in the resurrection, the sons of God. The law of resurrection is the law of the seed. A common seed is planted in the soil; it enters into corruption, and by virtue of that fact it begins the work of subduing unto itself the elements of the soil, overcomes the corruption into which it passes, and produces an organic structure, and finally the seed; and the sonship is again subject to the possibilities of fatherhood, and obeys the laws of divine generation.

Jesus was the head of the church or dispensation; the final subjugation of death is through the feet of Christ, at the foot of the dispensation, the culmination of the Piscatorial dispensation. The aggregation of forces in the war against death is in a new Personality, the amplification of the Fatherhood, unto whom the promise is made, and to whom, through the processes of the cross or death of Jesus in the race during the age, the kingdom is to be delivered. Jesus promised to deliver his throne "to him that overcometh," the Messiah of the new dispensation; and thus Abram (the high father) becomes transformed to Abraham. The great Abraham succeeds Jesus in the order of time, for nineteen hundred years ago Jesus said, "I am before Abraham," the father of the multitude.

Astral Bodies and Ghosts.

(1) Are there astral bodies, such as the Theosophists tell about? (2) Do ghosts ever appear, and are they objective? If you can, answer these questions affirmatively, or even otherwise. Please explain these appearances, beliefs, or whatever they may be.—REV. U. G. M., New York.

(1) Yes; the phenomenon of the so called astral projection is a fact. One person en rapport with another may subjectively project through the spiritual world, mental substances or entities, and materialize them in the presence of the other person. The projection is not through the natural space, but through the spiritual world; through which minds of individuals are directly related. The materialization takes place from the mind receiving the interiorly projected substance; the material projection is from the mind of the person in whose presence the materialization occurs.

The theory that there is in man a highly refined astral body, which in the experience of astral projection may leave the physical body and move through space and appear to other persons, is not true. The true astral projection is of the immortal man. Jesus projected all of himself when he mysteriously appeared to his disciples. Astral projection of the mortal man is only a part of the man, while he is in natural sleep, or in a trance.

(2) There are no objective ghosts existing in the atmosphere. Ghosts are spirits, and belong to the mental realm. When they are seen they are subjectively perceived.

What Holds Up the Sun, Moon, and Stars?

What supports the celestial bodies in space in the earth, if their orbits are convex to the earth's concave surface? It would seem that with both the earth's attraction and the centrifugal force of their revolution, they would tend toward the earth, and finally fall from their present position.—READER.

The sun, moon, planets, and stars are maintained in their own static planes through the forces of gravity and levity. They are meeting points of gravic and levic energies, and constitute vortices of ascending and descending energies; and hence they can neither rise nor fall. The machinery of the physical heavens is not a mechanical concern like the Copernican solar system; it is a system of forces, a machinery of energies. While the visible objects in the heavens are material, or partially materialized substances, they are no more attracted toward the earth than toward the center; they are in planes of specific equilibrium, and hence they weigh nothing, because they are points where opposing forces focalize, and where all the energies are disintegrated and transmuted to other qualities of energies. The energies of their motion are derived from their own vortices; they move in their own static planes of energy, and are imponderable.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

Removal of Objection to the Claims of Koresh by Consideration of the Claims of the Modern Clergy.

The greatest difficulty I found in the way of acceptance of the doctrines of Koreshanity, or even the investigation of the system, was the erroneous impressions concerning the claims of Dr. Teed, its Founder. I had this objection removed by a simple process of comparison. In writing to one of the members of the Unity I said: "If it was your own divinity that was in question, I would admit it at once without any hesitation; but with Dr. Teed it is different." This looked like making sport of a serious subject, and I withdrew the statement from the letter; but it kept recurring to my mind, and finally led to a dissipation of the difficulty.

I remembered that people readily apply the term "divine" to the noted Sarah Bernhardt; then there is a large class of men called "divines" or doctors of divinity. People accept the "divinity" of these men as a matter of course. It does not shock them very much to call a preacher a "divine;" and these men always claim to be servants of God, clothed with authority to declare his gospel.

Then many newer religious sects claim that divinity is inresident in all humanity; that we are all divines, or divine more or less,—generally less, I presume. Suppose Dr. Teed should claim to be divine! What is there shocking in the one case that is not equally shocking in the other?

What are the credentials of divinity, anyhow? I claim that certain principles underlie the manifestation of love and wisdom, truth and good. These principles are symbolized by the sign of the cross, constituting the ethical test of character, just as the sign of the square is the mechanical and mathematical test which determines the form of the surface of the earth, whether it be convex or concave. These principles are the essential ground of divine character, just as their opposites inhere in the devil.

Now, if the doctrines of Koreshans and their actual life and conduct will stand the test of these principles, what are you going to do about it? If the sign of the cross, or square, is laid on them and their teachings, and they are found to be square and straight, what then? And if the same test is applied to the churches and the governments of the world, and they are found neither square nor true, what then? Is the square not square? Is truth not true?—J. L. JONES, Ore.

Desire for Truth Stimulated.

A Swedenborgian Minister Reads the Flaming Sword, is Touched at a Vital Point, and Wants "More."

A friend has posted me a copy of THE FLAMING SWORD, Volume XIII, No. 9. This is the first copy I have seen, and it has startled me. Having been a Swedenborgian minister of too independent tendencies (for one's own natural comfort), and being a close student of astrology and cognate subjects, I have thought a little, as you may guess. Thinking has led me to recognize the law of correspondence as universal, and in view of certain astrological considerations, has made me very suspicious of the integrity of the Copernican system.

The hints contained in this number and the article on "Osteological Analysis" have touched me at a vital point; and like Oliver Twist, I want "more." You give (in this copy) no hint as to the literature associated with your journal, so that I do not know what to ask for. If, however, you have any waste copies or back numbers of THE FLAMING SWORD, I should be glad to have a few at your convenience.

My curiosity is aroused—indeed, more than curiosity: the thirst for Truth, ever active, has been again stimulated. It would seem that valuable articles have appeared in earlier issues. I want something that will give me the key-thoughts of Koreshanity. Yours, in the love of the truth, —REV. G. H. LOCK, England.

As Others See Us.

We Are Editing The Sword to Our Entire Satisfaction.

My Socialistic friend, J. L. Traugher, of Texas, has been pressing me to study upon the doctrines of the Chicago FLAMING SWORD. He has had the paper sent me for some time, and I am studying, like a good many others. I have found out that it hates popular education, Adventism, "christian science," Protestantism, Catholicism, and, in fact, I find it is engaged in an all-round iconoclastic work. It has my hand for all this. But, in its reconstructive work, as I understand it, it begins more with matter than with men, and seeks, as the first essential, a proper understanding of the foundations, as it were, upon which the material world is built. The rest of us are trying to reform men and methods, little caring whether the earth is round, oval or flat, or whether we live on the outside or the inside of it. But THE FLAMING SWORD is not hospitable enough to strangers. I have written it and several of its friends a number of times and have never received an answer, either privately or publicly. It recently consumed considerable space noticing a jocose freethinker named Harry Hoover, of Pittsburg, but failed to notice the strictures of another astronomer, or astrologer, whose lucubrations I sent it. In the course of a few years I may be able to intelligibly express myself on its scientific denouements, but for the present I will rest content in appreciation of its iconoclastic work and in the knowledge that it passes trifles unnoticed, unless, as in the Hoover case, it accepts one as "a little nonsense now and then." I have quoted THE SWORD's iconoclastic utterances in many papers, and the more I see of them the more I will quote. Thus I have done with Ingersoll; but at the same time I have never failed to expose his deplorable weaknesses.—F. B. LIVESY in Discontent.

A Baptist Journal Fails to Recognize the Process of Translation of the Saints at the Lord's Coming.

"We are now approaching a great biologic conflagration. Thousands of people will dematerialize, through a biological electromagnetic vibration. This will be brought about through the direction of one mind, the only one who has a knowledge of the law of this bio-alchemical transmutation. The change will be accomplished in the formation of a biological battery, the laws of which are known only to one man. This man is Elijah the prophet, ordained of God, the Shepherd of the Gentiles and the central reincarnation of the ages. From this conflagration will spring the sons of God, the biune offspring of the Lord Jesus, the Christ and Son of God."—FLAMING SWORD.

We are undecided as to whether it is best to dance or pray in view of the above prediction. If the "electro-magnetic vibrations" should really produce such "bio-alchemical transmutation" as to produce "the biune offspring of the Lord Jesus" through "the formation of a biological battery," we may as well give it up. Why should a man be born into this world at all if he has to be subject to such "vibrations," "transmutations," and "biunity"? We are curious to know how THE FLAMING SWORD found out about this "great biologic conflagration" and "dematerialization," since there is "only one who has a knowledge of the law." Is THE FLAMING SWORD the one who has such power? If so, we begin now to beg for plenteous grace to keep us together, soul and body, until we can see a few others "dematerialize" so as to know how to get on with the work a little better ourselves.

The above is a species of foolishness that belongs to Koreshan faith, which is a new faith in the earth, and fully as absurd as "christian science."—Baptist Flag.

The Jews Wanted to Stand on Moses When Jesus Came.

The personal Lord Christ, the Son of God, came into the world nineteen hundred years ago, when the constellation Aries was directly over the sign Aries; that is, the twelve constellations stood over the twelve corresponding signs in the earth. This relation of the signs and their constellations occurs once in 24,000 years. Twenty-four thousand years before the Lord came into the world, the same conditions existed in the world, and the same relations of the signs and constellations; therefore a man was born into the world corresponding in every particular to the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God. He was Adam. He was the beginning of the creation of God, which the Lord Jesus Christ was declared to be.—THE FLAMING SWORD.

We quote the above extract as a sample of the idle, senseless dreaming that is done by some of the modern discoverers and inventors of new religions. This Koreshan foolishness is of modern date, and yet, absurd as it is, it has hosts of believers. "Christian science" and all other absurd theories can find believers. There is nothing so foolish that can be started as a religion but that there will be somebody foolish enough to believe it and preach it. Surely the human mind is a queer residuum of irresponsible simplicity and gullibility.

We prefer to stand to the old landmarks, with our feet on the old rock. A building so constructed can't fall.—Baptist Flag.

Logical Conclusions in Koreshanity Will Never Be Divorced from the Cosmogonical Premise.

During the past summer we received several communications from our readers, asking for our opinion of the "Koreshan Philosophy and the Concave Earth." The Koreshan System has features that ought to be recognized, and they would be if divorced from the incubus of a "Concave Earth." Its founder may have convinced himself that they are natural associates, and they do associate,—as Life consorts with Death. The concavity of the earth's surface is not a "demonstration," and our readers know that in the past twenty-five years the Annular Philosophy has been proved true again and again, and that it is daily settled more firmly on its eternal foundation. Just as we said once before in these pages: Either the Concave Earth or the Ringed Earth is a false assumption, and the world's jury may now have the case.—Vail's Annular World, Pasadena, Cal.

Captivated With the Cellular Cosmogony.

EDITOR SWORD:—

I have completed the reading of the book, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and am captivated with the orderly manner in which the subject is presented. I am anxious that all my friends and all the world should have a copy. I have loaned mine several times, and others are now waiting for it.

Every page has served to more thoroughly convince me of the truth of the Koreshan System, and the fallacy of its objectors, who have been ably and sufficiently answered in the book.

It shows careful work on the part of Prof. Morrow and others who were engaged in the Survey. I hardly see how any one can question its accuracy, unless they have a point to make in some other direction.

Yours respectfully,

A. A. SMITH.

We Know Who He Is!

The Writer of the Following Letter to the Manager of the I. C. U., Recognized by his Chirographical Scrawls.

MR. W. R. WALLACE, 680 W. Lake st.,

DEAR SIR:—As a real friend, believer in, and admirer of your effort in Co-operation, I would advise you by all means to procure a copy of the March number of the Atlantic Monthly (can be had at any leading newsdealer) and carefully read Prof. Fiske's article, which I think will give you a correct idea of Dr. Teed [Note:—The article does not refer to DR. TEED, nor to his System, nor even hint at any of his claims.—EDITOR SWORD.] and some of his claims (I do not refer to the true doctrine of co-operation). I feel sure that sooner or later your connection with Dr. Teed will be the ruin of your noble effort; but apart from him it will soon command the respect of progressive, earnest minds.

This is written by a friend, and one you would recognize if meeting, but it is best that I should remain anonymous in this matter. I know the past history of Dr. Teed in the Messiah business quite thoroughly; and I only wish you could see him in the clear light that I do (of his past). Hoping you will give this matter your careful consideration, I remain your true friend, ONE WHO KNOWS TEED.

P.S.—Remember the Atlantic Monthly for March.

Chat With Readers.

Superb Edition of the Cellular Cosmogony.

The third edition of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY is now entirely off the press, and ready for your orders. This edition is superior to the previous editions in many respects, and we know that all of you who obtain copies of it will be highly pleased with it. The first edition was incomplete without the photographic reproductions; the second edition was a special one for the newspapers; while the third edition is printed on high-grade book paper, the quality of which has become very popular in the art of book making. Our superb edition has some added features, which make it complete. Its dedication by the Founder of Koreshanity, as an instrument in the skirmish lines of the Army of Revolution, accords it a field of usefulness and importance which it merits, and which it will ultimately attain in the scientific world.

At the close of the book is the summing up of the departments of the Koreshan System in its practical application to human affairs, illustrated by a beautiful diagram of the Koreshan Unity, in the form of the physical universe. This diagram gives the relations of the governmental, religious, social, and economic departments of the Koreshan System. This diagram will enable the reader to understand at a glance how the Koreshan theology, government, communism, and co-operation are founded upon the principles and laws of the physical cosmos.

Many of you who have had copies of the other editions, will desire copies of the new edition also for your own keeping. Our friends have done well in ordering and disposing of the other editions so quickly. This has been encouraging to us; keep the work moving with accelerated speed until the Science of Koreshanity is recognized all over the world!

Special Offer Extended.—We have decided to extend our offer which terminated January 15,—to send one copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY free, to all who send us $1.00 for a new subscription, or renewal of subscription to THE FLAMING SWORD. Many of our readers availed themselves of this generous offer. We now extend it to March 31, 1899. The giving of the book will be an extra inducement to new readers to subscribe for the inimitable FLAMING SWORD, and afford our workers an excellent opportunity and incentive to work up their own vicinities. You can procure many subscriptions for us if you try, and we trust you will arouse a telling interest in the Koreshan System during the time of the extension of this offer of the book free with every subscription.

Kind Words for Koreshanity.

An Editor's "Free Floor" Destroyed.

The Home and Farm, Louisville, Ky., opened a new department to be used as a free floor by correspondents. Each one was at liberty to use it for discussing any subject he might choose. It was named "The Farmer's Debating Club." I sent a communication on the subject, "The Universe is a Great Cell," and at the conclusion of the subject I instructed the reader how to get the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. But the editor refused to publish it, and showed that he felt guilty by returning the communication at his own expense. He did not object on account of the advertisement; it was the subject that displeased him, and he at once abolished the new department. I have seen two copies since, without the department. He called on his correspondents for suggestions in line of improving the paper, and promised $50 to the one whose suggestions proved acceptable, and the one that suggested the free floor got the money. The first subject introduced was, "In Favor of Expansion." I had formed a pretty favorable opinion of him, but I had some doubts.—M. H. Z., Lock 3, Ala.

The Remarkable 1899.

The Present Year the End of a Long Cycle; Its Mathematical Values and Peculiarities.

If we add together the figures contained in 1899, we find they make 27, and these added give us 9. Subtract the first two figures, 18, from 99, and we have 81, which added make 9, and the letters comprising the words eighty-one are nine. Add the first two figures, 18, to 99, and we have 117; these figures, when added, again give us 9. If we add all the principal numbers thus far mentioned—viz.: 1899, 18, 81, 117, and 27, the sum is 2,142, and these figures added give us 9. If we subtract 27 from 117 we have 90, which divided by 10 again give us 9. By subtracting 117 from 1899 the remainder is 1,782; these figures, when added, give us 18, and these two when added give us 9. If we add 90 and 1,782, principal numbers, not included in first addition, to 2,142, obtained above, we have 4,014, and these figures, when added, again produce 9. Now, if we add the figures 1,899 to the last sum we have 5,913, and these added produce 18, which again being added the result is 9.

The combinations obtained above are remarkable, but carrying them still further, with stranger results, we find that by adding 1,899 to the sums thus far obtained—viz.: 4,014 and 5,913—the sum is 11,826, and by adding these figures we have 18, which added produce 9. Further, if we add the first figure of the above sum to the last two—viz.: 118 to 26—we have 144, and these figures added give us 9.

We have now tried the results of addition and of subtraction on these mystic figures, and will now see what multiplication will do. If we multiply 18 by 99 the product is 1,782; these figures when added give us 18, and carefully adding the numerals used in this multiplication we will find the addition to be 63, and by adding these we have 9. Now, we will multiply the first three figures of the year by the last—viz.: 189 by 9—we find 1,701, and by adding these figures we have 9, or if we add the numerals used in this calculation we find they amount to 36, and these added again produce 9. We will multiply the two products obtained above—viz.: 1,782 by 1,701, and we have 3,031,182; these figures added produce 18 and these added give us 9.

Innumerable changes could be rung on these mystic figures, but the most remarkable part is that the letters comprising the words eighteen ninety-nine are 18, and these two, when added, produce the inevitable 9.—Ex.

I do not believe that a state can last in which Jesus and Judas have equal weight in public affairs.—Carlyle.

Society is barbarous, until every industrious man can get his living without dishonest customs.—Emerson.

By nature men are nearly alike; by practice, they get to be wide apart.—Confucius.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined. Mnemonics, Corresponding Prices, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.80; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

The Physical Universe the Scientific Pattern for Societal Construction.

The Laws of Organic Unity Revealed in the Physical Cosmos; Location of the Pivot of Production and Distribution of Wealth; Perversion of the Principles in Competism.

AFTER ALL that has been said regarding the relations of the alchemico-organic (physical) cosmos to man, we are frequently plied with the question, "What has the science of astronomy or cosmogony to do with social life and the bread and butter question?" The bread and butter question for the masses has specifically to do with social organic unity, and the science of organic unity with mankind is indissolubly consociated with the laws and forms of the alchemico-organic cosmos, because the laws of societal construction are correlate with the form and function of the physical world.

Every tree that adorns the face of nature for ornament or other use; every blade of grass whose verdure enlivens and gladdens the scope of observation and lends enchantment to the elysium of human perspective; every flower whose ornate bloom captivates the eye, and whose fragrance perfumes the atmosphere we inhale, testifies to the great and inexpugnable truth that terrestrial and celestial natures are indissolubly one, and their forces so intimately blended as to constitute them parts of an organic whole.

The radiations from the sun are substantial energies materializing in the atmosphere, in the forest and meadow, in the ocean and the tributaries which supply its never-failing perpetuity; and the very life of man is so intimately related to the sun's continuous supply, that were this resource of our common life excluded even for a few hours, the lamp of human existence would be extinguished. The energies from all the heavenly luminaries are radiated to a limitable circumference, where they are transmitted and whence they return, changed in quality, to the foci of their celestial origin. Astronomy, or rather cosmogony, is the specific groundwork of social science, because it is the expression of causation—whatsoever that cause may prove to be.

Every successfully conducted enterprise is imputable to the force of organic arrangement and power thus assured. The great financial and commercial cormorants of the world—developing greater wisdom as they gain experience in directing men and means—learn the advantage of combination and consolidation. It is to be regretted that such wisdom cannot so broaden as to determine a consolidation of industry with corporate power, upon the basis of an equitable distribution of what combined industry creates under the force of organic management. We find the industrial and the economic world ruptured at a point where the principle of organic life indicates the necessity for the strongest bond of unity. This is the case because the basis of the world's education in economics is altogether on the lines of competism, impelled by the most sordid of human lusts—the lust for money. We find this breach to be the inevitable sequitur of the competitive struggle for existence. It is the conflict of so called capital and labor. It is a fight between the accumulated wealth of industry against the very power which created it—industry itself. The corporate thieves are wise enough to see that in order to conduct this conflict against the wealth producer successfully, centralization is the keynote and the foundation of organic power.

Opposed to the consolidated power of the trusts, is the wage slave. Labor unions are organized for the purpose of counterpoising the overwhelming tendency of capitalistic aggression. As each becomes wiser by experience in his own circumscribed sphere, he feels more and more the importance of organic unity; and thus the breach widens and the conflict waxes. This condition of society originates in the false and evil principle of selfishness, in which the competitive system is grounded, and in the ignorance which obtains regarding the universal laws of structure and function.

There is a definite organic form to the cosmogonic structure; it is absolute and eternal. In this form there operates an adequate and corresponding function. Out of this correlate unity proceeds the life of man, both as to his individual character and as to that centralized unity into which the development of the race merges. Society will finally be regulated through the force and application of the intellectual principle of man, taking the cosmogony of the universe for his pattern of organic life. Given the structure and function of the cosmogonic whole, we have the laws and principles of the structure and functions of society. It is for this reason that we place so much stress upon the knowledge and promulgation of the form of the universe, which we maintain is imperial.

The conflict between so called capital and labor is homicidal. So far as the criminality is concerned, there is no difference between the felonious, plundering bondholders and the equally criminal labor union murderer. The root of the criminality resides in the competitive system, which creates both.

The Disease of Social Economics is Competism.

It is argued by some that because organic processes have thus far failed to produce results favorable to the universal happiness of man, inorganic methods will supply the deficiency and meet the requirements of the race; hence arise anarchy and individualism, so called. It does not follow because organic power on the lines of competism has failed to secure happiness to the race, which is the goal of its pursuit, that organic unity on some other line will not eradicate the disease. If the sun, moon, planets, and stars maintain their emplacements and pursue their motions in equilibrium on the ground of independent relations and action; if they perpetually continue in their orbits and move in given directions according to the laws of order, pivoted upon the astral center which constitutes the hub and axle of their rotations, without organic unity, then human society may with impunity contemplate and urge anarchy, individualism, and chaos as the basis and groundwork of human happiness.

The physical universe has its center and circumference. Within these limitations are all the forms and principles of its organic power. Its forms and functions are organic. When society reaches the acme of its development, it will be the counterpart—in organic unity—of the cosmogonic structure, which must be taken as the pattern of organic social and economic life.

The physical sun and his retinue of planetary and stellar concomitants are nowhere in conflict or competition. The constellate aggregations are nowhere consolidated into groups, in the form of trusts, to compete with other groups or with the individual stars. Their emplacements are made upon the basis of organic unity; their movements are homogeneous, not operative as independent and individual, but as a composite unit. Thus shall society ultimately emerge from the chaos of competism and anarchy, into the organic fellowship of a united life.

Nemesis: a Tale of Reincarnation.

L. E. BORDEN.

“HAVE YOU any antique rings?” The questioner was a woman heavily veiled and simply clad, though the plain coat and black gown showed the finest material.

“Certainly, Madam;” and the obliging salesman led the way to a case filled with objects of curious interest to a student of the past. The spoil of the ages finds its way to New York, and the four quarters of the globe are rifled to bring curios for American collectors. Here were rings of every style and antiquity. Rings from Etruscan tombs; Roman wedding rings made of iron to symbolize the lasting nature of the contract; queer old bronze rings, finely engraved and so heavy it is no wonder the luxurious pagans had lighter ones for summer: some had a tiny key attached, thus Caesar's wife might have carried the key to her jewel casket. There were quaint Egyptian scarab rings such as Cleopatra wore, with many a gem of purest lustre strayed from the crown jewels of dead sovereigns.

The lady fingered the circlets with some disdain. “All these are common enough,” she said with the air of a jaded connoisseur. “I want a ‘find;’ show me your best.”

The acute dealer studied his customer with attention, then he opened a safe and produced a heavily chased gold band set with three rubies, the largest of which was magnificent in size and color. Beside this, he placed a second ring which he drew from another case, a coiling serpent whose eyes cast evil gleams of green fire.

"Here," he said, holding up the rubies, "is a ring that belonged to Caesar Borgia. He kept it to poison his enemies—or his friends, for he treated them pretty much alike. Anyone who happened to be in his way, was invited to take wine with him or to sit beside him in the place of honor at a banquet. You remember how many of his guests died suddenly? See here!"

The jeweler pushed a little slide behind a central ruby, and showed a hollow large enough to hold a small pellet of the deadly vegetable poisons used by the famous cardinal.

"And what is this?" asked the lady, pointing to the serpent ring.

The jeweler was piqued that she took his prize so coolly. Perhaps he had erred in putting it before a stranger, but he fancied he knew the monogram on the handkerchief she carried.

"This is an old Venetian death ring, a genuine antique of the fifteenth century, and has its history. You see here on the inside these two fangs of the sharpest steel. Every curio dealer in Venice knows the Della Colia ring. What! you never heard of it? Well, they say it used to belong to a marquise of the old Della Colia family, one of the proudest in Italy. Of course the marquise had a rival and wanted to kill her. You ladies can understand that; it sometimes happens in these days, I am told." The dealer laughed pleasantly at his own humor, and looked at his client. Her smile, if she gave it, was hidden by the black lace masque.

"Pray go on," she said simply, "I am interested."

"So the wicked marquise had these fangs or claws, which are hollow and cleft, filled with a powerful poison; then at the next ball she just stepped up to her rival, who was looking uncommonly well that night, and took her by the hand, a good firm grip. One of the steel claws made a tiny scratch, the merest pin prick, but it was enough. The next morning all Venice rang with the sudden death of the most beautiful woman in Italy. I don't know what the doctors called it then, it would be heart failure now. Probably they had some learned name to cover those poisoning cases. There was no proof, there never was, but everybody understood well enough what those sudden deaths meant. Do you wish this madam?"

"You are satisfied this is the Della Colia ring?"

"We vouch for it, Madam. My brother is never deceived in a good antique. He picked it up by the luckiest chance in Florence. Let me call him and he will tell you all about it. He came back from Europe on the last steamer."

The name of the firm was a guarantee that stamped any antiquity as genuine. Mr. A—, the purchasing agent and second partner, was known in two worlds for his keen scent in tracking frauds, which had won him many a curse from the Hebrew fraternity that lives by exploiting collectors and trading in humbugs.

A talk upon the merits of the ring with Mr. A— was followed by some haggling over the price. It was evident the stranger's hesitation was assumed to cover her real eagerness. She laid down the money—not a small sum—that gave the firm its profit for bringing such a curio to the light of American day, and left the shop with her prize.

The experienced dealer was a trifle puzzled. Was she, as he shrewdly surmised, a well-known collector, one of his richest patrons, led by some whim not uncommon to that wary brood? Or was she but the chance comer she seemed? Well, the bank-notes were good, and he had kept faith with Mrs. Eustis; all he agreed was not to give her rival the first chance. He must send her word about the Borgia within an hour. Where was that Greek signet ring? It must be taken up to Atkins immediately.

Two hours later Miss Miriam Carey was sitting in front of a blazing fire in her exquisite little morning-room. It was a bleak day, and frequent scurries of snow went whirling through the air. Her cheeks were flushed with walking, and on her finger gleamed the Della Colia ring. She turned it round and round, holding it up to the light, watching the fiery eyes of the snake. "I feel sure that A— knew me," she said musingly. "It wasn't like him to offer it to a stranger, but I put him on his mettle. I hope he did not see how eager I was; I was fairly trembling. What a price I paid for it! But I wouldn't have missed it for twice the money. It's such a triumph to keep it from Mrs. Eustis! She'll probably take the Borgia, but this is far more interesting. What a sinister glow! I can't turn my eyes away from it. Oh! good morning, Alice, come and exclaim over my treasure."

Mrs. Ellison, who entered in visiting costume, passed for Miriam Carey's best friend. Small women wondered that the plain Miss Carey was not jealous of the radiant blonde with tints of pearl and rose. Others saw and appreciated her artistic pleasure in Alice's beauty. There was, it is true, a dangerous moment when Jack Ellison began to show his love for the penniless girl. Miriam always looked upon Jack as her property, but she bowed to fate, and the friendship met the strain.

"You see," continued Miriam, as Mrs. Ellison took the jewel and examined it curiously, "I knew A— was just in from Paris with some rare find, and I more than suspected that odious Mrs. Eustis had bribed him to give her the first chance; so I sailed down in disguise and, by a little diplomacy, carried off the prize with flying colors."

"Trust you for that, Miriam," cried her friend. "I always say if you had lived in his day, Talleyrand would have found his match in a woman."

"He did, more than once, if my memory serves me. How about Madame de Stael? But come, you haven't said a word to praise my serpent. Isn't he unique?"

"He's a villainous looking reptile, and so uncanny it makes me creep to watch him," replied her friend, slipping the ring over her forefinger.

"The serpent was more subtle than all the beasts of the field, so the ancients made him the emblem of wisdom. Do you know, Alice, I felt the most unaccountable fascination the instant I saw this ring!"

"Charmed by the snake like Mother Eve?" laughed Alice. "But I must say, my dear, there is something about the ring that suits you. It's mysterious and subtle like yourself."

Miriam Carey was noted for three things,—her wealth, which was fabled even in a city of great fortunes, her fad for odd jewels, and her love of mystery. She never took the straight road to her object when some winding path could be followed. She liked to pique and baffle curiosity. Her friends said that Miriam was a born diplomatist; her enemies called her intriguing. Her visit to A—'s in disguise was one of the harmless little comedies she was fond of acting. Some said that all her comedies were not harmless; most people felt a subtle depth in her that inspired distrust, but her conduct never confirmed it.

"I could almost fancy that this ring was bound up with my past," she said, half jestingly. "Did you ever have such a feeling? It's like one strain of a forgotten melody that comes back to haunt you. It seems as if the rest must follow, it is all so familiar, yet it never does. But I haven't told you my story," and she repeated the old tale. "Now, Alice, a theosophist once told me I had lived before as a noble Italian lady. Who knows? I may have been the rival the wicked marquise scratched with her treacherous claws!"

"Just like this!" cried Mrs. Ellison, who had the ring on her finger, seizing Miriam's hand with mock tragedy.

"Ah!" screamed Miriam, "That was more than a pin prick," and she showed a drop of blood on her hand. "Jesting apart, dear, I do believe in the idea of reincarnation. It is so reasonable to think that we suffer for the follies of the past and the calamities that seem unjust, come in retribution. An innocent man is convicted and hanged on circumstantial evidence. By and by the real murderer confesses the crime. Society gasps with horror at its own mistake. Now who knows but this man so unjustly cut off, as we think, may have just paid the penalty for some foul deed in another life? Perhaps he cheated the gallows then, but his karma led him back to them. I like to think there are no accidents, no sorrows as they seem, mere jests of fate."

"Well, I agree with you there, but I'm trying to decide, if you were really the beautiful rival, what your finding the fatal ring means; it ought to bring you some good fortune, perhaps the lover from whom you were snatched untimely. By, by, dear, I'm due at Mrs. Knight's luncheon."

A shadow passed over Miriam's face at the word lover, but she kissed her friend, who called back merrily as she left the room: "Oh! by the way, Miriam, suppose again you were not the rival, but the naughty marquise herself!"

Next day at breakfast, Mrs. Ellison saw her husband, who was running over the morning papers, stop and glance at her curiously.

"What is it Jack?" she cried, startled by his white face.

He thrust the journal into her hands, and she saw that Miriam Carey had died suddenly at her luxurious home. The doctors called it heart failure. By a will dated ten years previous, all her wealth passed to Jack Ellison.

Across the gap of centuries the ring had come back to its owner. Nemesis had done her work.

The Creation of Worlds by the Word of God.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

"Through faith we understand that all things were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." How were the worlds framed? By the word of God. Reason cannot explain the origin of things, but faith grasps the truth of God's creative power in his word. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Elder J. N. Haskell, in Signs of the Times.

"And his name is called the Word of God. * * * Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. * * * In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. * * * God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds,"—Greek, ages, dispensations.

THE PASSAGE first above quoted, being Hebrews xi:3, does not read as quoted, but as follows: "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things that do appear." The Bible nowhere teaches a plurality of worlds. The Greek word aionas, here rendered worlds, never means anything else than a period of time; in Scripture use it means an age, a dispensation.

In speaking of the creation in the New Testament, the Word, or Word of God, is always Jesus or the Word that "was God," that "was made flesh and dwelt among us;" of whom it is declared that "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." The making of the worlds (ages) had nothing to do with the origin of all things, of which this writer speaks. If by God's word they mean the Bible, which they generally do, it never creates anything.

Although the whole purport of the Bible, Old and New Testament, may be summed up in the Word, or Words of God, of which Jesus, the sixth, was the bread, it was said that man should not live, come into eternal life, by one word, "bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." The worlds,— ages, of the creation, or framing, or, as the Greek word used in the passage in question has it, the jointing down, or together, of these was by the Word of God, who is expressly declared to be the Son of God. These worlds—ages, are the twelve months of the great year of the equinoxes spoken of in Revelation, in which the Tree of Lives ripens its fruit every month—dispensation, “and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations.” This Tree of Life, which was on both sides of the river of life, is the tree of human life.

At the end of every twelfth division of this cycle of the Zodiac, which means God’s animal, or the full period of the perfect development of God’s animal, or human life, there appears ripened fruit of the God life in humanity for the age. During all the periods of the age, this tree of animal or human life has produced no ripened fruit. Green fruit falls off the tree and rots, producing no ripened seed to plant and renew the tree. Only ripened fruit contains seed that will grow. The ripened seed of this tree is planted in the soil—humanity—that is fitted for it, good soil, and renews the Tree of Lives for the coming age. Jesus, coming in the end of an age, in New Testament language, in the end of the world, was one of these ripened fruits.

As the re-embodiment of those ripened fruits of the grand cycle that had preceded him, as the seed is the creator of the crop, Jesus had been the Creator of the worlds (ages) of the grand cycle of 24,000 years that had already passed, and as Paul declares of him, “He came once in the end of the world” (Greek, the consummation, or ending together of the ages), the age that ended the twelve ages of the grand cycle or Zodiacal year. As the divine seed whence should come the sons of God, “redeemed from among men,” those whom John saw on Mount Zion, in the end of the Christian age, the Lord was born holy. As that seed in the form of the Holy Ghost, he was planted in human hearts, subsequent to his translation; and by the growth of that seed, everything of the Christian age was created. Thus he was the creator, framer, the one that jointed together all worlds (ages) of the grand cycle, or Zodiacal age of twelve ages or dispensations. When He comes again, as he said he would, he will sow the seed of the Tree of Lives for another grand or Zodiacal cycle, in God’s Garden, the Garden of Eden. Seed time and harvest, the Bible says, should never fail.

When, in the end of an age, God comes among men as the Jehovah, there is always in the people that receive him into themselves as Holy Ghost, when he goes away, or is translated, “a time of refreshing,” Greek, souling up, or getting an accretion of soul power, “that comes from the presence of the Lord,” that is, from the Lord’s having been present in his humanity and gone away into Holy Ghost, which is his form as the God seed, that may go into humanity and soul it up, give it a new, a spiritual begetting again as Peter expresses it, for the birth of a holy body in the end of that age.

The dead old church that prays for a time of refreshing gets it; but, as results always show, not from the presence of the Lord. Seed time does not continue during the year. No more does the seed sowing of this higher, God seed in humanity continue during the cycle of its re-generation, or re-production, which Jesus plainly told us was the age in the beginning of which it was sown.

It is too much to expect of the unreason of the present belated theology, that it should know these things; but they are plainly written in the Bible, and entirely understandable to whoever has the key to their real import. God’s Word, his Son, frames the worlds and all things therein. After the end of every world-age, there comes a new world, age, new heavens and a new earth,—in which dwelleth righteousness, which, as at present, has died out of the old ones,—a new church and state. All these in their succession are created by God’s Word—his Son. An oppressed and toil-worn world will soon bless the New Name of God, which he always has when He makes a new creation, or frames a new world, when it awakes into the realization of such new creation.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

STIRPICULTURE is the science of race improvement; its principles and laws must be applied to save humanity from its present state of degeneracy and corruption. The human race has about reached the limit of dissipation of its vital energies; the old world has nearly run its course. The old cycle is closing; and humanity requires the application of some radical measures to restore it to life and longevity. This includes vastly more than is involved in the modern systems of mental healing, which is nothing more than temporary restoration to usual functions and activities of man. Humanity must no longer drift with the stream of sensuality; restraint must be applied through a knowledge of the laws of life and the necessity for the conservation of human vital energies, after a period of wanton waste which has culminated in a period of the densest darkness, mental mediocrity, and physical weakness, the world has ever known! Dr. Schenck has gained a little notoriety in the world through an announcement of a vague idea of the pre-determination of sex of offspring, which seems utterly insignificant when contrasted with the great systems of ethnological blendings and the creation of new and distinct races in the past. Abraham understood the laws of race improvement; he stood at the head of millions. He introduced a system which he applied, involving laws which he enforced, the ultimate results of which transcend anything that the present world can comprehend! From a purely ethnological standpoint, Abraham made himself and his vital energies felt in the world to a greater extent than any other known character on the plane of human generation. He was the great Brahma, not in theosophic theory, but in actual fact. Abraham put forth what he involved; he entered into conjunction with the Almighty, and in the Abrahamic system there began the generation of the divine Man as well as the generation of a new people. Jesus was the supreme result of the application of the laws applied by Abraham; Abraham was thus resurrected in Jesus, the head of a superior order. Jesus, through the application of the same laws in another domain, through Messianic functions, will produce a fruitage in humanity,—thousands of divine men like himself. The end of the great cycle is at hand. It devolves upon Koreshanity, which alone, of all other systems, possesses the knowledge of the laws of life applied by Abraham and Jesus, to begin the work of restocking the world with a superior race of human beings, to close the floodgates of dissipation, and pour out upon humanity the essences of life, and scientifically blend together the bloods of the world in the production of a perfect race of men.

A writer in a "mental science" journal has brought the world to judgment, and casts the poor people at its left hand as the goats, and the rich among the righteous. According to him, the millionaire is a saint, while the poor man is the devil. He says: "Not a poor man can you find among the wise and truly righteous. And why? It is because in the great field of business activity intelligence is in demand. Wise men (tried and true) are required as pillars of every financial scheme of transaction, and they get the plum of remuneration; they are wrapped in greenbacks for their services." He thinks he has discovered the cure for poverty; it is to will to get rich, and untold wealth will be the result, if that will is persistent and directed with a keen intelligence. These conclusions are the result of an assumption—the assumption that the commercial wisdom of modern times is backed by the mind of the Almighty, which mental scientists claim is the only mind there is. Then what kind of a mind has the poor man? The fact is that the commercial wisdom displayed in the competitive world is the wisdom of the devil, the perverted wisdom of commerce; it is one of the principal powers of hell in which it is applied; and "mental science" in encouraging the oppression and enslavement of millions who are helpless because the forces and advantages have been monopolized by the money gods, thus brands itself as belonging to the ranks of absolute fallacy, the effects of which have become insufferable to the masses and intolerable to the Almighty, and they will soon be wiped off the face of the earth!

A writer says that "the problem for us is to determine what Christ taught; and knowing that, to contrast other teachings with his. We must do this independently, each for himself. No man has the right to come in between any other man and the teachings of Jesus. He taught his disciples and the multitude." It is a world of chaos where each man is left to himself to fancy what is truth—a world of mental darkness and anarchy where no one knows, and where every one refuses to have the truth imparted to him. Jesus did not teach the multitude; he addressed them in parables. He taught his disciples so that they should come between the people and his truth. The Jews took the ground nineteen hundred years ago, that a new teacher was unnecessary; they had "Moses and the prophets," and it was not necessary that any man should come between them and Moses to tell them what was the truth! Yet it was through the apostles and disciples of Jesus that the substance of truth was communicated to the world. They were his appointed conductors to transmit the electric force of divine mentality from the central dynamo to the subjects to be charged. It was impossible to obtain it by any other means. A teacher is again necessary,—one who speaks with no less authority than did Jesus. The church has lapsed into ignorance and darkness, and it is as impossible for the masses to discover the meaning of the symbols of nature and the Bible without a teacher today, as it was at the close of the Jewish dispensation.

A debate was recently conducted in Kansas regarding the condition of man after death, between a Spiritualist and an Adventist; the Spiritualist affirming that a conscious entity existed after physical dissolution with power of communication with the living, while the Adventist entered into a partial analysis of the human system to show that there could be no human consciousness outside of the human body; and the battle was waged on these lines. Neither was able to see that the other was right; both were right. There is no human thought outside of the human body; this fact alone, if the Adventist knew it, destroys all the modern theories of an infinite Almighty existing in space! The mortal man, on the other hand, is full of the spirits of the dead, in constant communication with the living. Thought is made up of entities of the dead. There is no other place than the human temples now living, for the spirits of all past to exist. The great volume of human life continues, passing from body to body, continually expressing itself in embodiments in human form. In the science of the human structure is the revelation of all the mysteries of human life, its origin, its destiny, and its perpetuity. While spiritualism and materialism are fighting battles and further segmenting modern systems, Koreshanity as a system of integralism, comes with the solution of both the natural and the spiritual worlds.

"Keep your individuality protected by your own aura. Be self-centered," are two sentences appearing in a paper devoted to universal harmony. On such a basis there could be no universal harmony, no organic unity in humanity. The physical universe has one center, and all the planets, stars, the atmospheres, and the earth are in touch with that center, and are centered in it. Likewise, humanity exists by virtue of the fact that at the end of every dispensation there appears in humanity a central personality to perform the function of the Messianic pole, for the purpose of transposing human life of one age into a higher sphere of a succeeding age. A plant could not grow if each cell should conclude to be independent and self centered. A physical battery has its poles; the human world generates its Messianic electric force through its positive pole, the Messiah. The Messiah leads a group of humanity to its destiny at the end of a cycle, just as the central corpuscle in a plant leads the progressive corpuscles to the destiny of its life in the seed. A plant full of self-centered corpuscles is on the road to death and decay; and the humanity which repudiates the Messianic law and personality is following a corresponding path to anarchy and death.

Moody looks over the world of fallacy, with its thousands of fragments illogically thrown together in the modern mental chaos, and exclaims: "Knowledge has greatly increased throughout the world!" He considers that this is a period of high civilization and enlightenment, a most satisfactory age in which to live, because of all the modern conveniences and inventions, and the marvels of the telescope and the microscope. He forgets the fact that all modern ingenuity is utilized by the gods of the money power. The discoveries of the nineteenth century are, one by one, seized upon by the devil and used for the advancement of his kingdom of death and oppression. The present civilization is but the partial taming of the inhabitants of hell. Moody virtually admits this in his question, "But do we increase in righteousness as we do in knowledge?" His answer is in the negative. The fact that the world, under the influence of modern education and civilization, does not become better but worse, stamps the character of the prevailing "knowledge" as fallacy, because it is impossible for fallacy to produce good results; and truth could not be responsible for the miserable conditions and corruptions that prevail at the close of this dispensation.

The religious world is in gross ignorance of the nature of the Lord Christ, who appeared in the world at the beginning of the Christian dispensation. The laws of his generation and regeneration are unknown to the modern church. Some look upon him as a mere mortal man, an example to other mortals, while others presume to think that he was a manifestation of a great unknown God pervading infinite space. A writer filled with this idea suggests that Jesus "was more than a man, more than a Messiah, within the limits of human nature; more than a perfect example of the divine in human nature." And pray, what is a Messiah, and what are his functions? Jesus the Messiah was Jehovah, the seed man of humanity, the perpetuator of divine life; he involved the universe and was its Creator, as the seed involves the plant, and becomes the creator of the plant. When he entered into his disciples he began the work of the new creation, which is exactly like the old creation was when it was new. Jesus was God Almighty, the personal Deity, the human God; but the church has forgotten it, and worships a myth!

Why do fallacies advance so rapidly in the world, while Koreshanity finds it difficult to gain a foothold? Because the people are receptive to fallacy—they attract the substances of perverted thought, and repel the truth. Every system of fallacy that has come into the world has come by fragments, differing in part only from the popular views of the world generally. Fallacy finds ready acceptance by the curious and the ignorant, because it does not disturb the habits of the people, nor the social conditions of its followers. With Koreshanity it is different. Acceptance of it means a complete mental and moral revolution. It touches the very root of evil, and cuts the sensual ties which degrade the mind. Koreshanity refuses to drift with the popular tide, and it must withstand the force of the current and endure the resultant friction. For the reason that it is truth, with the laws of life for application in removing the very seat of sensual desire, it can never be a fad; its mission is to tell the truth to save the world from hell, and not to tickle the curious devils in it!

An exchange contains the following startling statements concerning the doctrines of Jesus; our readers will wonder a little at the source of the author's information or inspiration: "Jesus forbade priestly interference between man and God. He taught the people that they were all children of God; that all had one spiritual Father which we call God." This is the reverse of what his disciples said he taught! Jesus proclaimed himself divine; that he was from above; that the world at large was not divine, but was from beneath. However, it is true that humanity then and today is a brotherhood, with one spiritual father which the modern church and the world call God. What father is it? If we can determine which father is the father of the mortal world, we can determine whether the modern church worships God or the devil. Jesus said, "Ye are of your father the devil!" If the church desires to persist in worshipping such a deity, the satanic father of mortal man, she is at liberty to do so!

Mrs. Eddy, the founder of "christian science," holds that there is no matter in existence; but there are cases of court record which show that she has sued several persons for infringing on matter which she had copyrighted! The question might arise, What does it matter if others should republish what she has written? If there is no matter, on what did she write? On what were her books printed? Did the books, infringing on her copyright, really exist! If not, why should anybody who has no body, be sued for something that was not done? If the universe should be entirely subjective, it would be subjective from the standpoint of Mrs. Eddy—that is, there would be no mind but Mrs. Eddy's; she would be all there is, universe and all. There could be nothing existing besides herself, or rather her mind. But it is strange that her mind should enter into so much litigation over a little matter!

Who is going to meet the infidelity and skepticism of the nineteenth century? It is obvious that the modern church will not, for she herself is falling into the awful chasm of avowed agnosticism. Modern scientific theories are honeycombing the religious world, and the Bible has become as vague and void of meaning in the popular mind as the universe itself. True science alone, the truth of the universe, in battle with the fallacies of the hour, will be able to overcome skepticism. When knowledge has overcome ignorance, the Bible is vindicated. Koreshan Universology is the science of the Bible, the science of the universe. Truth expressed in the laws of the creation and perpetuity of the human world, is the same truth as that expressed in the great external form of the physical cosmos, for the Author of truth and the Creator of the cosmos are one and the same.

The church is not a practical institution. It offers to the world no remedy for its multiplying evils; it is helpless in the face of relentless agencies which are reducing the world to poverty and ruin—it evades the great questions of the world's distress, and shirks responsibility in the hour of its greatest need. Why does not the church do something? Why does it not form a gigantic trust in favor of the poor on the basis of co-operation, and thus turn the principle of the trusts into a powerful channel of effective philanthropy? Because it does not desire to do so; it does not possess the spirit of communism. It has joined hands with the competitive world, and is supported by the influence and money of the wealthy classes, and it does not dare to move against the powers with which it is in league!

The editor of the Blue Grass Blade, a Kentucky free slash journal, has fallen into the clutches of Comstockism, under the charge of publishing an obscene periodical. Free thought papers are defending the periodical on the basis of the constitutional guaranty of free speech and free press. Of course, Comstock has no right to enter proceedings against a journal on trumped-up charges such as brought the journal in question before the bar of modern injustice. We do not believe in prosecuting a man for printing what he thinks; the Constitution of the United States allows him that privilege. If there is any refinement left in the modern mind, it should be sufficient to make itself felt against such low-type journalism as the journal referred to, without the necessity of court proceedings.

Japan is about to put on the cloak of modern Christianity—not that its people have been converted to its vagaries, for out of 44,000,000 only about 200,000 have assented to them; but because the nation desires to be able to join in all the projects of the nations of Christendom. Japan wants to belong to a "sisterhood, of nations," fearing that without adopting Christianity she will not be able to attain a high degree of progress in all the iniquities of the Christian world. Japan's hypocrisy will be complete when she puts the cloak of the sham of modern perverted Christianity on a nation of Buddhists and agnostics for the purpose of obtaining a greater prestige among the nations of Europe and America.

Going to heaven according to the modern church, is going to some other planet or star in the Copernican system of worlds. The most prominent Christian astronomers of the age have endeavored to locate the throne of Deity on the star Alcyone, the central star of the Pleiades. In the mind of the modern Christian, a mythical conception of the Almighty is inseparably connected with a fallacious astronomy; but it is with the greatest difficulty, in the promulgation of Koreshan Universology, to make people see that the modern systems of astronomy and theology have any relation!

"I am inclined to think that the liquor traffic has got beyond the control of moral agencies, and Christian people must depend on supernatural help in order to overcome the saloon." Why has not the church thought of that before? But is potent supernatural help available to the modern church? This is the real question for the clergymen to answer. The Almighty is not operating in the apostate church; he has abandoned the old form, just as the seed finally abandons the stalk, heedless of the wail of weakness of the dying form!

Koreshanity is the only system in the world that does not borrow from some other system or fragment of modern thought. We do not, as others, simply differ on theology and accept a fallacious astronomy; nor differ on sociology while swallowing the vagaries of the modern church. Koreshanity holds nothing in common with modern fragments. It is not a fad to hook on, as a tail, to popular thought; it is decidedly original, and will revolutionize the world on all lines of human thought, affairs, and relations.

The so called reformer informs the people that the trouble with the modern world is corrupt government, rotten to the core; Koreshanity declares the truth that the trouble is with the corrupt people, rotten to the heart with sensuality and depravity. A righteous people could not have a corrupt government; neither could a corrupt people have a pure government. Therefore, true reform must begin at the seat of the trouble,—in the heart of man!

Modern mental science mistakes persistency in fallacious desire, to be the liberation of the divine ego in man; that the assertion of absolute individual independence is the restoration of the "I am" to his throne. Even the devil can will to have what he wishes, and obtains it through force of mental attraction; but he is a long way from God!

Before humanity can be saved from the present hells, the flood-gates of dissipation of the energies of life must be closed, and the laws of conservation applied in the individual, and in every plane of his activity.

The central and most advanced corpuscle or cell in the plant, is the leader and guide of all other corpuscles aspiring to reach the climax in the seed.

If the Copernican astronomy were true, the earth would be as much in the physical heavens as any star in the universe.

The whole world is turned by cranks; from the standpoint of the devil, the Almighty is a crank and a fool!

Both the astronomer and the clergyman are gazing into the physical heavens for other worlds.

You cannot understand Koreshan Universology if you do not want to.

All mind is supernatural; the human mind is the supernatural in man.

The Messiah is the "missing link" in the chain of evolution.

The greatest mystery in the modern mind is chemistry.

The Almighty is the eccentric of universal revolution.

Science is the Koreshan's secret of a happy life.

Fallacy is insanity in disguise.

Editorial Discussions, Chats, and Correspondence.

THE EDITOR.

"Some Cranks and Their Crotchets."

MOST LEARNED SIR:—Permit me to suggest for your careful perusal, Prof. Fiske's paper in the current number of the Atlantic Monthly. You will find it very suggestive and most instructive. It will be worth to you more than a great many Sunday Tribunes, etc. I would also be pleased to see your opinion thereof in THE FLAMING SWORD; but I hardly dare hope that you will comply with this request. I remain your much entertained reader,—PHILOSOPHICUS.

Though the above letter is interspersed between the lines as well as in the lines, with deliberate tinges of sarcasm, we have taken the pains to look up the production of Dr. Fiske referred to, and to briefly review the same for the benefit of our readers generally, rather than for the benefit of Philosophicus, because we know his attitude toward the radical measures employed in Koreshanity for eradicating fallacies and sensuality from the human mind.

Dr. Fiske devotes about nineteen pages of the March Atlantic Monthly to a rambling review of some good and bad ideas promulgated by men whom he denominates as cranks. The kind of literature he refers to, he denominates "insane literature." He includes in his list, works on squaring the circle, perpetual motion, some attempts to overthrow the Copernican system of astronomy, books on the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation, the Bacon-Shakespeare discussion, Symmes' Hole, interpretations of the Great Pyramid of Egypt, unraveling occult mysteries and kabalas, theories of immortality in the flesh, etc.

We presume Philosophicus concludes that his suggestions will be of immeasurable value to us; as though we never saw a review of paradoxes before, and were not aware of the hundreds of vague concepts and theories promulgated in the world! Dr. Fiske himself is not original. Dr. De Morgan's famous "Budget of Paradoxes" has covered such points over and over again, while Proctor's "Myths and Marvels of Astronomy" contains chapters written in a similar strain. Dr. Fiske imitates this method of reviewing paradoxes, from which all argument or proof of conclusions which he himself may entertain is conspicuously absent. The article under consideration is a sort of harangue; he even apologizes for its uninteresting style and tiresome pol pourri of exaggerations and ridicule,—interesting and tickling no doubt, to many unfamiliar with the world's eccentricities, as the relics in a museum are interesting to sight-seers; perhaps pleasing to morbid minds hunting for new ideas after exhausting mental capacities to originate new ideas themselves. But to those already familiar with the various phases of mental crudities and absurdities, as well as partial departures from popular views,—to those already having reached definite conclusions from demonstrated premises in Koreshan Universology, Dr. Fiske's reviews themselves are relegated to the category of "insane literature."

Such characters as Dr. Fiske lived in the days of Jesus; they have lived all along through the ages past. The ultra-conservatives do not contribute to the world's real advancement; they have not sufficient mental ability nor the courage to depart from the popular drift of effete thought, nor to head a new movement of reform or revolution in human thought, nor to impulse a class of people in any marked lines of genuine progress. Nineteen hundred years ago, such men were as ready to denounce as insane, ideas advanced differing in any degree from the established systems of religion and philosophy. Jesus was one of the immortality cranks of nineteen hundred years ago; and in the eyes of the Jews, Greeks, and Romans, the writings of the disciples of Jesus belonged to the same class of "insane literature" in which Dr. Fiske places Dr. C. Piazz Smyth's valuable work on the Pyramid, the work of Parallax and others; or in which he would place the views of the restitutionists held by the writer of the above letter, or in which he would place the truth of Koreshanity.

We are living in a time exactly parallel to that of the close of the Jewish dispensation; it is a period of breaking up of old institutions, of disintegration of the age. It is not surprising that numerous ridiculous fallacies should originate in modern times. It is obvious that there are some fallacies entertained by so called reasonable people; it is impossible that they all possess the truth, and contradict each other. Each of the many fragmentary systems claims, in a way, to be the truth. No matter what idea is advanced in the world, it gains a following; no matter how true a system may be, it is always opposed, in its early stages of promulgation, and classed as fallacious, insane, and dangerous. It is a fact that every teacher that has ever come into the world has been ridiculed; truth always has a hard time to gain a foothold; and while this one fact is always appealed to by the originators of fallacies as a proof of the genuineness of their theories in their defense against the attacks of the conservative, it also subjects the promulgators of the truth to the same accusation of insanity.

It is far more creditable for a mind to endeavor, though it fails, to do things that are considered impossible by the masses, than to not attempt them at all. Such attempts ultimate in success. Man must experience the difficulties of solving so called impossible problems; he must experience defeat ere he succeeds. The hundreds of inventions now in the world, the hundreds of modern wonders, have been attempted many times before they were made possible; and they were attempted at times when the world—such men as Dr. Fiske, laughed and ridiculed. Unsuccessful attempts to perform a work impulses and spurs the mind of succeeding generations to accomplish it. What Dr. Fiske considers as impossible in the lines of overcoming death and acquiring immortality here in this world, was accomplished in the flesh by Jesus. The squaring of the circle, which he now considers impossible, has been accomplished in the past, as demonstrated in the construction of the Great Pyramid. The process of incubating the sphere is operative in the hatching of an egg! What he considers as foolish attempts to overthrow the Copernican system of astronomy, has at last been accomplished in the successful demonstrations in the Koreshan System, in the obtaining of actual facts which may be perceived with the sense of vision, and demonstrated to the mechanical, mathematical, and geometrical senses of the rational mind.

Every idea that is not true is unsound; an unsound idea is an insane idea. Every fallacious system is the product of a phase of insanity. The only system that is sound, that is sane and rational, is the absolutely true one. Whatever part of the literature of the world contains fallacy is, the product of imperfect, immature, unsound, and perverted mind; most of the literature of the world is the product of partial insanity. If the prophecies of the Bible be accepted as true concerning the "last days" of the present dispensation, instead of the modern world being progressive and possessing sanity, mental soundness, and wholesome doctrine, it departs from rational conclusion, departs from the truth, and turns unto fables and fallacies, and becomes engrossed in selfishness, steeped in sensuality and debauchery to such an extent as to precipitate the world into anarchy and revolution. Such a world is insane. Doesn't Philosophicus consider that this is about the Apostle Paul's estimate of the modern world? Such men as Dr. Fiske and the writer of the above squib, and others who put themselves on record as defending the modern world and its institutions,—as drifting with the stream of the world's retrogression into the coming vortex of evil, identify themselves to that extent with the phases of insanity manifest in modern thought.

There can be no phase of insanity more dangerous to human society than fallacy; nothing can be more unsound or insane than the absolute antithesis of the truth. If the universe is a cell and limited, as all form must be limited, then there can be no more erroneous, no more absolutely insane concept, no greater display of absolute ignorance and mental darkness and perversion in all the world than the modern concept of the universe as entertained in the modern system of astronomy and theories of creation. If, as the Bible declares, God is in humanity; if, as it proves, Jesus was the Almighty, the Creator of all things that are,—if he was Jesus the Jehovah, the Man-God, then all the modern concepts of Deity filling infinite space, having mind without brains, pediment, or continent, constitute insane bosh, and are unworthy of rational contemplation!

Is This the Nineteenth or the Twentieth Century?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—"They" call this the "twentieth century;" yet it is 1899. Next year it will be 1,900 years from the beginning of the Christian era; and it will require 100 more years to be 2000, or to enter the twentieth century. According to this reckoning, this is the eighteenth century with 99 years in it; one more year it will be the nineteenth century, and then it will take 100 more years ere the twentieth century begins.

Am I right or wrong? If wrong, please show how next year can be the twentieth century, and what becomes of the nineteenth century if this is the eighteenth century. Edward Bellamy must have had in view a future of a few years over 100 years hence, when he wrote that strange book, "Looking Backward," from that future date. True, we are making history very rapidly, and old ideas as well as old customs are rapidly passing away, and new ideas and new customs are taking their place; yet even with such rapidity it will take quite a while to change the present into Bellamy's communistic or governmental fraternity. However, the change cannot be too rapid for me; I am waiting for it.—PROF. P. A. EMERY, Cal.

The above questions concerning the centuries may be clearly answered by a few suggestions. The confusion has resulted from the mere presence of the figures 1 and 8 in writing the years in the present century. The first century did not begin with the year 100, but with the year 1. Only one year of the first century contained three figures—the year 100, the last year of the first century. It was the first century until December 31, 100. The year 101 was the beginning of the second century; 201, the third; 301, the fourth; 401, the fifth, etc.

The year 1000 ended the tenth century; that is, 1,000 full years, ten full centuries, expired with December 31, 1000. 1001 was the beginning of the new century, the eleventh, though 1001 looks to be as much the beginning of the tenth century as 1801 does the beginning of the eighteenth century. The year 1800 ended eighteen full centuries, 1,800 full years. The century which ended with 1800 began 100 years previous, on January 1, 1701—just a moment after seventeen full centuries, or 1,700 full years had passed. On December 31, 1900, nineteen full centuries, or 1,900 years will end. A moment afterward begins the new century, the twentieth. The century which ends with December 31, 1900, began 100 years previous, or on January 1, 1801; it has been the nineteenth century since that date, for 1,800 years or eighteen centuries passed with the year 1900. So it will be the twentieth century for just one hundred years after January 1, 1901, or until December 31, 2000, after which the twenty-first century will begin.

This is not called the twentieth century, except in a prospective way, as "twentieth century civilization," "twentieth century methods," "twentieth century literature," because it is expected that methods, literature, and civilization obtaining at the close of this century will prevail in the next.

Except the days of the present corruption be shortened, the world could not be saved; it would get beyond redemption. At the end of every cycle there is a foreshortening of time, and a corresponding acceleration of human thought and activity. We are nearing the time of the ripening of the fruit of ages, and when the ripening begins there will be a greater activity in the human corpuscles in the great Tree of Life, the momentum of human progress will be increased, and all the energies of the world will be accelerated until the vortex is reached, when the New World and Order (not Bellamy's) will be born in a day; and the time is at hand!

Prof. Falb's Comet Collision.

I enclose an article clipped from the Saturday Globe, Utica, N. Y., containing some predictions of Prof. Rudolph Falb, of Vienna. I wish you would let us know what you think of them through the columns of THE FLAMING SWORD.—J. I. H., Winchester, Va.

The article referred to makes mention of a number of prophecies by Prof. Falb concerning cyclones and hurricanes, earthquakes and tidal waves, and the collision of the earth with a comet during 1899. From careful observations extending over a number of years, and from records made by others, of the periods of seismic disturbances, Prof. Falb is sometimes able to foretell earthquakes and consequent tidal waves. About every eleven years earthquakes occur with a little more than ordinary frequency; and from what is observed in the past, and not from any theory of a molten mass with tidal motions on the interior of the earth, earthquake prophets occasionally hit the year all right. Weather bureaus, from meteorological observations and records, can sometimes foretell when an unusual number of cyclones and destructive storms will occur.

But when it comes to predicting comet collisions, that is quite another matter. It is not to be disputed that cyclones and earthquakes sometimes occur; they occur every year, and any man can say, "There will be an earthquake this year," with some probability of hearing of its fulfillment somewhere in the earth. But no one has ever heard of a collision of the earth with a comet, from the simple fact that it has never occurred. If Prof. Falb had ever made any "scientific investigations into mundane anatomy," he would have found that such a thing as he predicts is utterly impossible. The universe has been in existence eternally and has never yet met with such a mishap, and it never will, because the earth is a concave sphere, and comets that are visible are mere particles of crystalline energy with trains or tails of sunshine! Astronomers generally do not entertain the idea of the possibility of the destruction of the earth by a comet. One astronomer has undertaken to compute the probable weight of a comet nucleus and tail, and finds, he thinks, that an ordinary comet with a tail 3,000,000 miles long, if reduced to matter, would weigh only one and a quarter ounces! Mattison considered that the largest comet tail would weigh only a few hundred pounds, while Newton thought that if the tail of the largest comet were compressed within the scope of a cubic inch, it would not be dense as common air!

Jupiter has been seen to pass through the tail of a comet, without disturbance or destruction. There is no more probability of the destruction of the people by a comet, than that the throwing of a handful of fog upon the surface of the ocean would kill the shell-fish at the bottom!

Jesus Did Not Ascend into the Physical Heavens.

(1) At the translation of Jesus, did the spirit of his body, or the Holy Ghost, enter immediately into his disciples, or did he have to ascend into the physical heavens and back again before they received the gift of the Holy Spirit? (2) At the translation of the Personality at the end of this dispensation, will those outside of the Koreshan Unity receive the baptism, or do we all have to be gathered into one place? I am a staunch believer in everything that is taught in THE FLAMING SWORD. Though I recognize in myself a very dim star, I am willing to come to the fountainhead for information.—J. A. R., Mansfield, Ark.

(1) As human mind cannot exist apart from human form, it was absolutely necessary that the spirit of Jesus pass directly into his disciples at the time of his theocrasis. Three personalities,—Peter, James, and John,—were the special vessels or containers, the three tabernacles built for Moses, Elijah, and Jesus, representing the three degrees of divine life, foreshown at the time of Jesus' transfiguration. Jesus went at once into the interior mind of these three personalities, containing the three heavens of the highest spiritual world. Ten days afterward; the Spirit descended from that interior, first into a central group of disciples, thence into the thousands.

(2) Through years of teaching and impartation of truth, through discipline and development, through the application of the law of united life, government, and society, the Personality at the end of this dispensation prepares a central group of people for the reception of the highest degrees of the coming baptism. It is necessary for this group to become associated with him in his great work, directly connected with, and tried and weighed in, the organization and in the Ecclesia. When the central group is imbued with life through its dissemination after the coming theocrasis, its members will become ambassadors to the world at large, and thousands will receive, in their order, so much of the divine essences as they are capable of attracting.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

Wishes Us Abundant Success in the Promulgation of Truth.

I have enjoyed the numbers you sent me very much, though your religious views are so very antagonistic to mine; but that may be because I do not understand them. I want the truth, no matter where it leads. As far as the scientific aspect goes, I am with you heart and soul. There is a paragraph in one of the SWORDS that particularly commends itself to me; that is where you say that the earth is eternal and that there were as many people at the time of the so called creation as at present. Well, Mr. Editor, I fairly screamed with delight when I read it; for it was the first time in all my life that I found any one to agree with me in that respect. I do think you people are the most unique and original of any I have ever known. I am glad to know you, and wish you abundant success in the promulgation of truth.—S.H.P., Quincy, Ill.

A Reader's Opinion of Hoover.

EDITOR SWORD:—After the Hoover eruption and outflow of gall in the communication you published in a recent SWORD, the pigmy should take a rest and recruit his wasted energies, review his petty efforts, and thus learn his own shallowness and insignificance, in comparison with the exalted mind of the wise Teacher and great Founder of Koreshanity, and his talented disciple, the Editor of the incomparable FLAMING SWORD! Be strong and of good courage. Hooverism has turned itself inside out for the inspection of your readers and friends. I, for one, await the verdict of both friends and foes.—S. C. M., Allegheny, Pa.

Cannot Express How Much She Values the Flaming Sword.

By the date on the wrapper of my FLAMING SWORD, I see that my subscription has about expired. I cannot express how much I value THE FLAMING SWORD, with its precious truths; in short, it is a necessity in our home, and I should not want to miss one issue, for I realize that I am getting far beyond my money's worth. I enclose remittance for THE SWORD another year, and for the entire series of literature; the pamphlets of the series are for some investigators. With kind regards and best wishes for THE SWORD.—Mrs. C. V. H., New Castle, Pa.

The Most Advanced Publication of the Age.

I have been a reader of THE SWORD for some months. I regard it as the most learned and advanced publication of the age. Its staff seems to be really scientific and thorough in the realm of physical analysis, and the remarks by Prof. Morrow, concerning the present and past social, religious, and political conditions of the world, are strictly up to date. I have always had a supreme desire to know the truth and to communicate it to the people. If KORESH is correct, and I see no reason why he is not, I am glad that I learned but little of the old theories of astronomy.—J. D. P., Att'y., Marietta, O.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

A Glimpse of the True Theology Led to Investigation of Other Features of Koreshanity.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—You ask the readers for their first impressions concerning Koreshanity. I answer, that when it was made clear to me that the Holy Spirit, shed upon the church at the beginning of the dispensation, was the substance of the translated body of Jesus, and that that was the process by which he entered his disciples, I saw how he could take up his abode in them as he said he would. When I found that out I began to desire more of Koreshanity, and as I searched I found and began to tell others.

At that time, in the summer of 1895, I was superintendent of a Sunday school, and I immediately resigned upon acceptance of Koreshanity. The pastor called a meeting of the board and requested me to be present; I went, and after hearing what I had to say, he tried to get the board to vote me out of the church as a member, but he failed. I voted myself out, however, and handed in my resignation. I was up to that time a strict Adventist, but Koreshanity has revealed to me the inconsistency of the Adventist doctrine. How absurd it is to expect a physical man to drop down from the physical heavens!

After nearly five years of close study of the Science of Koreshanity,—its theology, cosmogony, and sociology, I declare it to be the Truth. The Bible says, "With all thy getting, get wisdom." It is in Koreshanity. What are the people going to do with it? Are they going to let the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel, be unto them a "stone of stumbling and a rock of offense?" He brings to us the science of life. Let us hear him, and not be among those who have eyes and see not, ears and hear not the things which directly concern the welfare of every man. What we know of Koreshanity we know; what we do not as yet thoroughly understand we can accept on the basis of a demonstrated premise, the foundation of all the science brought to us by KORESH.

One reason why I love this Science above all other so called sciences, is because it is rational, and is just the opposite of the popular systems; every declaration of KORESH is just the reverse of what others declare, in fulfillment of just what the Almighty declared would come to pass, in Isa. xliiv: 25-28.—F. S. REDDING, Mass.

Get Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for April.

Major-General Wesley Merritt, U. S. A., will contribute the leading article to the April number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, published March 20th. "The Philippine Campaign" is the subject of General Merritt's paper—the foremost topic of the hour, treated in masterly fashion by the commander of the United States military forces which, in conjunction with the navy under Admiral Dewey, stormed and took the city of Manila, August 13th, 1898. This article is richly illustrated, constituting one of the most notable contributions to magazine literature. Another prime literary and artistic attraction for April is "The Romance of Rome," by F. Marion Crawford. Mr. Crawford was born in Rome, has been steeped from childhood in the romance and legendary lore of the Eternal City, and writes of her with the enthusiasm of a lover as well as the erudition of a student. His paper is illustrated with some beautiful views of Rome, and a fine portrait of Pope Leo XIII.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Fallacious Travesties on the Phenomena of Divinity.

Psychology of Evil Minds Operative in Counterfeit Systems; the Truth of the Judaistic and Christian Systems vs. Aggregate Mass of Fallacy.

THERE ARE people who say, "We take truths from all systems of ancient and modern thought and aggregate them into a composite whole, and are thus enabled to give to the world a system of philosophy which embraces all truth."

The devil, like a counterfeit bill, invariably attempts to represent the genuine by copying after the original; and he succeeds measurably well in leading the world in its wild goose chase after his ignis fatuus. The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead (reincarnation), of the ocrasis (absorption into Nirvana), and of metempsychosis (transmigration of soul) are all fundamental doctrines of the Judaistic and Christian systems; but as given in Buddhism, or theosophy, they are weak and spurious representations of the genuine, and not the real thing, therefore not truths but errors.

When Moses appeared before Pharaoh, he performed some supernatural phenomena because of his knowledge of the divine laws; these phenomena were counterfeited, not by the same law, but rather by a spurious imitation. As an illustration of this principle, we may note the facts of psychic power in the many efforts to pervert the doctrines of the Lord Christ and the teachings of his apostles, and reduce them to the common speculations of an avaricious age.

The operation of the Holy Spirit, proceeding from the Lord and shed upon his apostles and disciples, was a Word (Logos) upon the soul, hence it was psychology. The operation of this force resulted in peculiar phenomena, giving to the apostles wonderful powers. These powers were exercised invariably in a divine way, never for personal aggrandizement. This psychological power from the Lord was the soul of God acting upon the soul of his people. The counterfeit of this power, the psychology of evil minds for personal ends, because an imitation of the genuine, is in no sense the truth. Buddhism is not the truth; it is, however, a deceptive counterfeit, and hence modern theosophy goes beyond Buddhism in the direction of a fallacious travesty on the phenomena of divinity.

The more closely a counterfeit bill resembles the genuine the more dangerous it is; and likewise, the more closely the diabolic mind of the atheistic and antichristian world apes the doctrines and phenomena of genuine Christianity, the more likely it is to lead men astray.

John the Baptist had great psychological power. Through it he transposed the soul of his being—the entities he had gathered into himself—into the life of the Messiah, in the psychic or soul baptism of the Lord, when the Spirit in the form of a dove lighted upon and entered the Savior. Modern humanity, of the most diabolic type, has the power to transpose spiritual forces (which are nothing more nor less than spiritual entities) from one person to another, and to counterfeit the higher spiritual and soul phenomena.

We have employed the term psychology (discourse on the soul) where, according to a more strict use of the term, pneumatology would have been better; spirit and soul power being two distinct principles, and manifesting two distinct classes of phenomena. We employed the term merely because it is the more common, as applicable to supernatural phenomena.

Hearing Voices From the Spiritual World.

How the Almighty Spoke From the Interior of Jesus; Processes of Internal Vibration of the Tympanum; Fallacy of the Idea of the Objective Spiritual World.

Dr. Teed says in February 3 issue, "No phenomena of mind ever can occur independently of matter." Several times I have heard independent voices in the air, talking or singing, all others present hearing the same voice at the same time, and all knowing there was no ventriloquist in the house.—D. E. S.

DID OUR correspondent ever know of any voice being heard independently of ears with which to hear? Where were Mr. S.'s ears, and what were they doing when he heard the voices? Did he hear the voices independently of the organs of hearing? If so, then let us have the proof. Voice or sound is a phenomenon which depends upon the ear and its functions, the tympanum and the auditory nerves being essential factors in the phenomenon.

Mr. S. declares that he has "heard independent voices in the air." It is a mistake. We do not question the fact of the phenomena of which the writer speaks; we merely question his interpretation of it. The tympanum may be acted upon from without or within. When vibrated from within, by the action of any spirit, the sound seems objective because the mind is trained to believe in objective phenomena. The communication of intelligence from one spirit to another within the brain cells, where spirits dwell, vibrates the cell or a group of cells which will vibrate a corresponding cell or set of cells in any other brain en rapport with the first cell acted upon, and the responsive vibrations are heard as objective sounds; but they are not transposed independently of a brain cell in which the voice originates, nor are they independent of a receiving cell to which the transposition of the sound is made.

Mr. S. is laboring under the same difficulty that confronts all materialists. He does not possess a spiritual conception, though he has a natural idea of space; he observes forms in space, and imagines a spirit to occupy space as large as the body. This is purely a material idea. A spirit has no form, but it has that which corresponds to form; it occupies no space, but exists in a mental atmosphere which only corresponds to space. The spiritual world is in man. The hells and the heavens are located within the human organism. God is in heaven; God is in his holy temple. Where is this holy temple? "Ye are the temple of God, because God dwells in you." "God is in the generation of the righteous."

The world of heavens and also the world of hells are in man. They exist as facts;—the basis of these two worlds is the matter in which they rest. We are not disputing the existence of spirits and angels, nor their voices; but we are trying to eradicate some of the consummate ignorance of people regarding the character and location of these spheres, and to eliminate from the befogged modern mind, some of the cherished nonsense in which the world is merged.

Please explain Matt. iii : 17 : "And lo a voice from heaven, saying, this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

Jesus was the temple of God. "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. * * * But he spake of the temple of his body." That voice was from the Father, of whom Jesus said: "I and my Father are one. * * * I am in the Father, and the Father in me." Did the Lord tell the truth? If so, then the Father was in him, the temple of God, and the voice was from his own interior, and was communicated to the interior of those who heard, impressing from within the tympana of the ears which heard. "Where was the organic cerebral structure?" The organic cerebral structure was in the cranium of the Lord Jesus, and in the crania of all who heard.

The Conflict of Astronomical Hypotheses.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

ASTRONOMY has been considered as an exact science by millions of people unfamiliar with its history—its founding and progress. To the astronomical world, however, it is known to be very unstable and uncertain; its fundamental hypotheses are constantly shifting. When Copernicus undertook to account for planetary motions by the use of the hypothesis that the visible planets were viewed from a rapidly moving sphere instead of a stationary one, the sun was only 3,000,000 miles from the earth; and Copernicus never dreamed of the immense distances in space to which the sun and stars were afterwards to be pushed by more energetic astronomers!

Kepler evolved his ellipses from the original circular orbits, and modified the system on the ground of a new hypothesis. At that time, the worlds were moved by the application of divine power, and no other solution for universal motion was thought of in Christendom until Newton took the matter in his own hands and applied the mysterious force of universal gravitation. This was a decided revolution in cosmogony; and up to the present century, Newton has controlled the worlds by a hypothetical force, much to the satisfaction of his admirers. The question soon arose, if the motions of the universe could be maintained simply because there was nothing to stop them, why could not the universe have started of its own accord?

Attempted answers to the question resulted in the famous theory of Laplace, the nebular hypothesis, the idea that the solar system was once one great hot gas-ball, revolving, cooling, condensing, materializing. What set it on fire is a mystery! This theory was the logical result of the Newtonian hypothesis; for of what use would universal gravity be if it did not finally collect the atoms of ether and make worlds of them everywhere, throughout all infinite space? Why it did not begin operations long before it did, is not explained! The nebular theory has supplied the world with speculative material for over a century; and it has been accepted by the entire modern world, inclusive of the church! It has been the groundwork of all modern theories of geology and systems of evolution. The mysteries of creation were thought to be revealed through the Laplacement of universal matter, held by "higher critics" to be antagonistic to the Bible; but it has neither solved the problems of creation nor destroyed the ancient Volume.

Geologists have been so certain that the earth is an intensely hot ball of molten matter, ensphered by a thin crust of cooled land and water, that they have calculated the temperature of the earth from the circumference to the center; they have found that Jupiter is growing colder, and that the moon is past its days of usefulness and life, indicating the fate of worlds. After all these conclusions have been so nicely poised in the public mind as established theories, what a scientific disaster to have them all overthrown! Hypothesis has followed hypothesis in the past; and now the war of hypotheses has begun again; the world is about to witness another shifting of shadows, another disintegrative evolution and revolution in uncertain "science!"

Dr. T. J. J. See, the famous astronomer of the Lowell observatory, is the founder of a new system of world-building, which is announced as a complete refutation of the nebular hypothesis of Laplace. He has overthrown the popular system by some facts of observation and experiment. In the old theory, it was concluded that the distant nebulae are composed of "glowing gas;" the spectroscope was thought to demonstrate their heat. Dr. See's observations and spectral analyses have proven the reverse. If the nebulae are cold, of course that settles the old hypothesis; but it does not prove See's conclusions that the order of evolution is from cold nebulae to hot worlds, instead of from hot nebulae to cold worlds. If the nebular hypothesis of Laplace is so radically wrong, why does Dr. See follow the parallel so closely throughout the line of his conclusions? His cosmogony is radically wrong; for there never was a time when the universe did not exist as an organic structure. The universe never began!

It will be interesting to the reading public to follow the new line of conclusions; necessarily, the idea is made to apply in geology as well as in astronomy. He claims that the earth is cold on the interior, beyond a certain depth; the old ratio of the increase of heat does not therefore prove intense heat in the center! The Doctor sees matter in the earth no hotter than melted lava. The old fungi are being broken off, and new growths are rapidly assuming proportions in the public mind; but in the meantime, thinking people will lose confidence utterly, in modern speculative astronomy!

The outermost objects in Copernican astronomy, under consideration by the astronomical world, are the nebulae. Away out and beyond all possibility of knowledge of their purpose, nature, or origin, modern science places the mysterious, fleecy forms. At the extremities of disintegrated fallacy, the battle of hypotheses is being waged! At the extremity of the great cycle, when the human mind has become resolved into nebulous chaos, disintegrated to the last degree of mental feebleness and misconception of universal form, the mental fog is being agitated concerning that portion of the Copernican universe which corresponds to the modern mind. The coincidence is striking, and the fact significant! The Koreshan System is established upon the pivot of rational demonstrated premise, and diverts the mind from scientific myths to the conception of the universe of eternal, organic form and function, with correlation of center and circumference, according to the principles of which the mind may be so organized and related to the great cosmos as to comprehend all of its mysteries, and make the man as eternal as the universe!

American Luxury and Discontent.

L. E. BORDEN.

THE BEAUTY of the visible world is shed abroad in strange contrast to the fevered unrest of human life. The fires of dawn, the sweet fields, the trees, the divine sky, the starlit night, speak peace and happiness, yet who is happy? The poet? Oh no; the poet has his critics, and the question of bread and cheese is as real to him as to other toilers. Shelley must starve himself for leisure to dream and write by the blue Gulf of Spezzia. The poet's larder is as bare as Mother Hubbard's. His soul cannot find pure joy at the bountiful feast of nature when his body is weak from fasting.

So it comes that the lovely forms of nature, made to soothe and delight man, only aid his grief by hinting at some happier life meant for him, which alas! he cannot find. Why is it that so fair a world is so full of pain? Why must millions toil from day to day for a mere crust of bread?

"In twelve thousand written years," writes one, "the world has not yet built a House, nor filled a Granary, nor organized itself for its own comfort. It is so marvelous that I cannot express the wonder with which it fills me."

Surely the lavish earth yields enough for all her children, but chief among the lost arts is the art of distribution. How can we make it go around? Not so long as the lack of the many feeds the morbid fancies of the few. The plea that all may share alike is vain; that showed itself an idle dream in the wild days of stormy France. But a brief glance at some of these morbid fancies may excuse a strong plea for a distribution in equity.

All that is rare and costly comes to America. This truism is a source of pride to the people, but in most cases the treasures of the past—the gems and pictures and historic palaces that are now brought from the old world—do not come to enrich museums and galleries open to those who need inspiring glimpses of precious art; rather do they find place in the private collections of the very wealthy. One of our good Americans has paid $400,000 for a superb pleasure boat, the finest sailing yacht ever built except the Defender. It is said the railway carriage of the Czar of Russia cannot compare with the private car of one of our millionaires, where the lamps and fittings are of gold or silver, and the hangings of costly stuffs.

The horse is a splendid animal, but although the ancients gave the palm to Minerva's olive tree, it must be said, judging from the vast sums squandered on race horses, that now, Neptune's gift is overrated. A California millionaire bought the famous Ormonde, once the property of the Duke of Westminster, for $150,000, the highest price ever paid for a horse.

Aside from the pyramids and the mausoleums of royalty, no doubt the most expensive tomb in the world is that of Mr. John Mackay in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn; this cost over $300,000. Fabulous sums are spent on jewels. One of the Vanderbilts gave his bride a ruby necklace worth over $500,000. Now a beautiful woman deserves a beautiful toilet, and a plain one needs the adjuncts of dress to redeem her plainness; but is it not a vulgar mistake to think that a gown must be costly in order to be artistic and becoming? Surely the limit of good taste is passed, to say nothing of the social wrong involved, when an American woman pays $5,000 for a sable-lined opera cloak; and the Comtesse de Castellane, daughter of Jay Gould, flings away $6,000 on a tea gown of heliotrope velvet, with trimmings of matchless lace.

Let no man, therefore, exclaim at the folly of women, and begin to shake his head over this piece of extravagance. Let him remember the yachts and horses and game-cocks; some of the latter bring $2,500; moreover, there are importers who supply a brand of cigars that sell at five dollars apiece. As George Eliot says, "I'm not denyin' the women are foolish. God Almighty made 'em to match the men." The caprices of luxury are evenly divided between the two sexes.

One of the Boston papers from which some of these figures are taken, tells of a "Red Dinner" given at the Savoy Hotel in London, by an American millionaire. The flowers, lamps, napkins, chairs, and knife-handles were red; even the waiters wore red neckties. There were eighteen courses, and the expense was seventy-five dollars a plate for the forty guests. "The great man," says Emerson, "scarcely knows how he dines."

Think of the awful, needless waste, and then read how the other half, or to be more exact, how the other three fourths live! How can the American workman, seeing this riotous luxury, fail to take up the sad cry: "In my father's house is bread enough and to spare, while I perish with hunger"?

The Root and Heart of All Modern Vices.

The Pole of Evil Traced Beyond the Modern Saloon and Scientifically Located in the Root of the Corrupt Tree of Mortal Humanity.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

1. Let the moral manhood of the nation recognize the fact that they have the same right to have the surroundings of their homes morally clean, that they have to have surroundings favorable to physical cleanliness and health, and the same responsibility for securing and maintaining them.

2. Let the fact already well recognized, that the saloon is both the forefront and the creative center of all forms of vice, be intelligently acted upon.

3. Let it be recognized that a man whom you would not, on account of lack of capacity, honesty, or morals, feel safe in making the executor of your estate, is not fit to be your representative in the government of the city where your home stands, and your children grow up.—New Voice.

THE FLAMING SWORD is a well-known advocate of total abstinence from the use of intoxicants, tobacco, and all polluting poisons. It also regards as commendable from a certain standpoint, all efforts to awaken the vidual to a sense of moral responsibility for the well being of society. The science of the political economy which it advocates, dictates that all such efforts should be directed by a wisdom equal to locating scientifically, and therefore correctly, the "creative center" or cause of vice. Koreshanity, being the revealing light of divine or true science, emanates from such wisdom. This true science is found to be the sole reliable vindicator of all Biblical statements, and able to thoroughly furnish the rational mind with scientific reasons for intelligent faith in the statements of the Christian Scriptures, from Genesis to the end of Revelation, no matter how paradoxical or contradictory they may seem to the non-intelligent.

The X-ray of Koreshan Science goes deeper than the saloon, for the "creative center" of the vices which render society so corrupt. It confirms the statement of the Bible, that "The love of money is the root of all evil." I Tim. vi: 10. A root evolves from a seed of life. So "the root of all evil" must originate in the alpha and omega of all life, in the involution of all its forces—the seed of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. We are told to lay the ax at the root of the tree.

The Ancient of Days, the Messenger of the New Covenant, possesses the renewing voice of the Science of all truth, the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. By this light he locates the exact creative center of evil, and lays the ax at the tap-root of its commercial energies,—the love of money. He does not fail to recognize the three domains of the corrupting activities of this force, which he defines as the domain of sex commerce, the domain of religious commerce, and the domain of secular commerce.

Commerce is the central principle of life, and the nature of its activities determines the character of its most ultimate consequences. If its activities are equitable in primates, then they are equitable in ultimates. Money is the medium of exchange by which the circulation of the life elements is effected. If its face value lacks the marks of integrity because of its failure to defend and protect the basic principle of commercial equity,—value for value in the exchange of vital forces and resources as expressed in the products of labor,—then it is the abomination that maketh desolate, and every service of love for it bears a stench to the nostrils of the Almighty.

In the vitellus of all life, the domain of sex commerce, the Moneta to guard the exercise of its functions should be the true maternal instinct generated by the adoration of the Most High, Jehovah-God, made flesh to dwell among us. Woe be to the man or woman who disregards the Flaming Sword of divine science, which turns every way to guard the divine Maternity, the Tree of Life! Let every vidual who would secure a renewal of life that is life indeed for the human race, speak the truth in love to his own soul and to his dying race, and locate the cause of all evils at the vitellus of mortality, where the fires of lust burn, and consume upon the altars of hell the vitality of the animal life of God.

The sensuality of the mortal mind is the creative force that perpetuates the saloon; and today that force is as active in the church that bears the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, as it is in the brothel coupled with the saloon. The fallacies concerning the marital relationship, enunciated by thousands of modern Christian theologians, are as potent to perpetuate it as are the saloon and the brothel united; for these are but loathsome pustules revealing the innate moral rottenness of the body politic, which maintains a church corrupt enough to sanctify the subjection of woman to the lusts of man's mortal, lustful flesh.

True religion, undefiled, is manifest in the light, a child of the light of God. God's light is true science, the science of the Truth, pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, the medium of the manifestation of the unquenchable fire of divine love. The light of true science reveals nothing more clearly than the relationship of God and man, of the mortal to the immortal, of the microcosm to the macrocosm, and the laws of their perpetuity. True religion is the union of God and man, and is effected by the literal Flaming Sword, the theocrasis of the living Word or Voice of God, the vitellus of the commercial life of the entire universe.

An exchange of the truth for fallacies or false doctrines, in the domain of religious commerce, consigns spirit, soul, and body to an age-lasting hades, where, groping in darknes in continuous search for Truth, the traitor to it finds it an ignis fatuus, ever eluding his grasp but leading him a weary mortal round of unsatisfying existences, till as the wisdom of experience she really comes to his rescue, and in the form of the Ancient of Days gives sight to his blind eyes, hearing to his dull ears, and taking him by the hand, leads him to the altar of self-sacrifice before the throne of Truth, where the union of God and man is revealed and true religion is manifested as the Life.

Today, the people sit in darkness, and the Voice of a renewed Divinity in humanity is the supreme need of the hour,—a Voice that can give to truth seekers the light of true science, and cause them to know God in their elder brother, the Ancient of Days, who wields the Flaming Sword that guards the way of the Tree of Life in the domain of religious commerce.

In the domain of secular commerce, what demoniacal fiend backs the abominations that pervert all the exchanges of the goods of life, from their legitimate service of maintaining the lives, the liberties, and the happiness of earth's teeming millions, to the glutting enrichment of the few to the detriment of the many? Her name is usury, and her hell-born creature, the competitive system. May the Word of God give this Flaming Sword heaven-born language of sufficient force to express the denunciations of the Almighty against usury and her defenders.

Whether the banks issue gold, silver, or paper, it matters not; for usury is an enthroned principle in the seat of selfishness named Satan, the high priestess of competitive commerce, and all her issues bear the mark of Cain, who caused his brother's blood to cry from the ground.

The saloon is bad; still, it is but a minor sequence of that love of money which the Almighty denominates the root of all evil. The Voice of God in Chicago, by the Science of Truth inscribed in THE FLAMING SWORD, calls to The New Voice in New York to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and use its voice to demand of every man who has dared to name the name of Christ by calling himself a Christian, that he forsake the abominations of the competitive system and espouse the cause of true Christian communism, which involves commercial equity. The Flaming Sword demands of every Christian that he lift up the standard of the law given by Moses and endorsed by Jehovah's fulfillment, and, by obedience to it, cleanse his temple and all its courts from the pollutions that defile it,—from its Holy of Holies to its outermost environment.

Koreshanity needs the service of moral manhood and womanhood—cleansed by the application of the science of truth to life. Saloons will then become but dim memories shrouded by the blackness of the night of our ignorance of the humanity of Deity.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

MENTAL ENERGY is the most potent force in the universe. Force is substantial, and is communicable. A man can will to strike a ball; he generates an energy of a specific quality, and he can measure the amount necessary to execute the desire. From the desire to the moving of the ball, the energy of desire has been successively transmuted to voluntary mental force, muscular force, and mechanical energy of motion. All of the mechanical force necessary to move the ball with rapidity and force is the exact equivalent of the original force of the thought! This conversion of energy from quality to quality is absolutely true and indisputable; it is a demonstrated fact. Man contains all of the elements of the physical universe in the same order and relation as they obtain in the great cellular structure. The matter of the human body has passed through series and cycles of experience in its ascent from the mineral, through the vegetable and the animal kingdoms to the human. Correlated human mind is therefore as much superior to corresponding physical energy in quality, character, and potency, as the substances of the human body are superior in refinement and degrees of experience. A single fundamental idea, laden with a purpose and projected from a positive mind, is sufficiently potent to impulse millions of human hearts, to move armies, build cities, and transform continents! Think of all the energy expended in the labor of producing such results, and you have the equivalent of the original idea, because the primary impulse is, step by step, transformed to all other energies active in the execution of the plans involved in the idea, in the manifestation of the idea itself on the plane of the material world. Jesus possessed the highest and most refined, the supremely potent mental force of the world; he involved the great cosmos. His mind was the perfect consciousness of the universe. He was the supreme positive impulser of all universal activity. He projected his mentality into humanity, and the same substances, transmuted to the plane of divided humanity, have moved millions and millions of human beings in the path of progress; nations have felt the force of his supreme power. From plane to plane, the divine impulses descend through the laws of actual transmutation of force until the energies reach the outermost kingdom of the universe,—the material, physical cosmos. All of the energies and activities in the physical cosmos are the exact equivalent of the supreme impulse of the mental force in the divine man. The transformed energies generated were mental; they are now correlated physical energies, and must write their impress in form and functions which exactly correspond to the microcosmic form from which they emanated, and thus record therein the laws of cause, the absolutely infallible index of the mind of God Almighty, who walked the hills of Judea nineteen hundred years ago!

Learn to think from basic principles and premises. There are no rational conclusions but those formed through the reasoning processes—through the application of the laws of analogy, correspondence, and logic. How few people in the world have ever undertaken to follow a single line of logic from a given premise to a conclusion! If you would let reason be your guide you must exercise your own rational faculties. Such a process is not in selecting such opinions as may suit you or fit preconceived notions instilled into the mind by the modern church and school; nor is it promiscuously rejecting what does not suit your fancy. Truth is absolute, and when understood it is the same wherever accepted, the same wherever rejected! Learn to take a single idea and see into how many lines of thought it is applicable; you cannot study Koreshanity profitably without doing this. One fundamental difference between Koreshanity and modern thought is in the demonstration that the universe is cellular, and consequently eternal. Do you know to what extent this one fact, if accepted and applied in thought, would change all other theories in the world? Every modern belief in any way related to the usual theological beliefs (not necessarily related in the same mind, but as effect, traceable to a fallacious idea of Deity), undertakes to account for the universe and for existence of human life on the basis of the supposition that at some time in the past the universe and man did not exist. Modern theological theories—so called science of astronomy, physics, geology, anthropology, and ethnology are filled with this common and fallacious idea. Vagaries of every description have proceeded from it. Think from the standpoint of the laws of perpetuation of life, and you will not need to ask how Koreshan Science of the Cellular Universe changes or disturbs accepted beliefs in other lines of modern thought!

When once the genuine system of co operation encourages the working man by a demonstration of its possibilities, its progress in the world will be invincible and its force irresistible. This is one of the strongholds Koreshanity will take upon the world—that feature of providing avenues in which the industrial can enjoy the wealth he produces,—that feature of feeding the hungry and clothing the poor, and furnishing homes to the homeless, and befriending the friendless. There are millions of people in want, on the constant verge of destitution; and millions more would be reduced to absolute poverty if they were removed from the pay-rolls for a few weeks! Millions toil year after year, creating the wealth of the world; they build its cities and towns, construct the railroads, make the cars, and operate the systems; carry all the burdens of commerce, do all the work of the world, perform all the drudgery, pay all the expenses and salaries of those who do not produce wealth; besides pay the rents, taxes, profits, and interest, and supply the money gods with billions of dollars annually, without any return for the vast expenditure of energy, not even thanks, nor guaranty that opportunity to thus serve the merciless trusts, syndicates, and millionaires for a mere pittance, will be continued! What a volume of human energy the true system of industrial and social economy will utilize when once the interest and sympathy of the millions of present slaves are aroused and their efforts directed in the line of genuine co operation and industrial freedom! A poor system has engaged their efforts, and controlled the world; and it is encouraging to know that a better system will produce better results, and make happy hearts, active minds, able bodies, refined society, and a beautiful world!

Chicago astronomers have made some startling discoveries regarding Jupiter, which bid fair to forever settle, in the popular mind, the question of the habitability of the Jovian planet. From the basis of observations, it is certain that Jupiter is not an earth; its revolution at the equator is more rapid than at the poles; that is, the zone of its equator revolves a greater number of times in a given period than the regions near the axis. Similar phenomena have been observed on the sun, and the facts are not disputed in the astronomical world; it is known that sun-spots in the solar equatorial zone pass over the apparent disc in less time than spots between the equator and the poles. Solid spheres, are they—the sun and Jupiter? Observations disprove it. Many years ago the Founder of Koreshanity, in referring to the central sun, from which the visible sun is projected, described it as possessing light and dark poles, with a middle vortex in the form of a diaphragm, dividing the sun into hemispheres and producing the solar vertical and lateral motions; the lateral motion being "very rapid, but less so at the back and front parts," of the poles. This description is now verified and corroborated in the visible image or projection of the sun, as well as in the planetary vortex known as Jupiter.

The attention of the world has been directed afresh to Pope Leo XIII through the reports of his recent critical illness; and in official circles of Catholicism his successor has been discussed. They have reviewed this subject before at similar critical periods, and may have opportunity to do so again; aspirants to the papal chair may find its present occupant more persistent in holding his position than in satisfying a successor. The present pope has attained to a greater age than any previous one, and has now passed a critical date indicated by a cabalistic calculation, which has luckily hit the date of the death of all other popes of the present century; the same methods applied now to Leo would assign him ten years more of pretended vicarage, perhaps a full century of life. The Pope of Rome is the center of the religious world; all roads in Christendom lead to Rome. His relation to the age now closing, his papal and family name, are all significant. He is Leo XIII, with the "lucky" number, and he was made pope just thirteen days after the death of his predecessor. He is the antithetical "man of sin;" his name, Pecci, means it. The Latin peccare means to sin; and the word "Peccavi!" would be a good one for him to utter as his last. His holiness has never been manifest; but his peccability is obvious!

The discovery of new stars in the physical heavens at present serves two purposes: It adds more mystery to modern astronomy, and a little fame to the discoverers. A consignment of photographic plates made at the Harvard Observatory-Arequipa, Peru, delayed six months by the Spanish-American war, has just been received in America, on which a new star appears. What a pity that such a discovery should be delayed! Hundreds of astronomers are straining at distant stars while swallowing the entire Copernican myth! During the past 325 years, fourteen new stars have appeared in the constellations. Is it not strange, according to the popular theory of creation of worlds, that gigantic suns should thus spring suddenly into existence? According to the nebular hypothesis, with its millions of years marking each successive stage in star development, the sudden creation of an enormous sun without previous nebular phenomena, would be impossible. In the cellular universe the creation of new vortices, and the change of character and dissolution of old ones, are but simple results of slight changes in the relation of the central solar radiations and parts of the earth, which supply the negative elements of the great universal battery.

It is a well-known fact that great men of any nation are the fulfilment of national ideals. The aspirations of a people focalize in leaders; the desire of a nation to become great finally finds expression in men who are masters of the situation, and who lead the people to the climax of their national impulse. Koreshanity teaches that a higher aspiration, a supreme religious desire, intelligently directed, in accordance with the same laws as are operative on the lower plane, ultimately produces men in whom the substances or forces of heaped up mental desire, projected through years of hope, find expression which corresponds with the character of the desire. The substances of hope of the Jewish people for the coming of the Messiah found personal embodiment in the form of Jesus the Christ, and a corresponding hope throughout the Christian dispensation for the coming of thousands, possessing the power and nature which Jesus possessed, will ultimate in its fulfilment. The Almighty moves along the line of the supreme desire of the people in which he projects himself.

The last funeral of Columbus, the great Spanish admiral, has recently taken place in Spain, nearly four hundred years after his death; his bones have been removed from Havana to Seville. Columbus brought Spain to the new world, and now Spain in departing from America has taken the remains of the celebrated discoverer. Columbus was the dove sent out from the old world to cross the waters in search of continents. He entered upon a voyage of progress; and having turned toward America, the land of manifest destiny, with which his name has become inseparably connected, does any one think for a moment that the adventurer has relinquished his claims upon the civilization of the western world to follow his bones back to mediævalism? The life of Columbus is in the people of progress—he lives in America; his remains go back to the nation, whose condition is analogous to that of the remains of the man whom they feign to honor, but whose progress they envy, and whose life they hate!

In more ways than one, Rev. Dr. John Alexander Dowie considers modern competitive methods not only good, but holy enough to imitate. He is having a share of mushroom success in Chicago, and has established the Zion City bank, in which he expects his people to "trade until He comes." He has followed the old example of founding a modern church, into which he infuses some of his own ideas, and dumps many rusty theological beliefs of the dark ages. Then having made his will somewhat after the usual method, we presume he looks upon death as many others do, that it is not death at all; and that he expects to go out of the world the way of all the world,—only arriving at a different place. He says, after speaking of making his will, "Now, friends, I want a place that is a good place to live in, a good place to train the children in, and a good place to lie down and sleep in—we never die." Wait and see! The truth is he is already dead!

Is the world growing better or worse? is a question which continually agitates the mind of reformers. Notwithstanding the terrible conditions that exist in modern times, with the corruptions in government, in the church, in society, and in the vidual, a few writers and preachers are to be found who praise the institutions of the nineteenth century. There is no doubt that there is a measure of civilization existing today; there is a small improvement over the past centuries in the present dispensation; but the refinement is the mere refinement of hell according to the devil's code of morals,—an effort on the part of the ruling powers of hades to exalt hell to the very kingdom of heaven in its power. The highest civilization of the nineteenth century is simply the manifestation of the highest degree of refinement to which diabolism is able to attain,—the mere making of a hypocritical showing of conceit in church, state, society, and in the vidual!

We have before us some of the evidences of the fact that the founder of "christian science" has changed her mind in numerous instances during the past twenty-five years. The successive editions of the work, "Science and Health," show marked changes as she matured in her fallacy. At first she repudiated the idea of church organization as a wrong principle, detrimental to progress and paralyzing to religious life; and afterward founded one. At first she thought that Jesus and the apostles would have nothing whatever to do with organizations, and then proceeded to build up an organization, whether Jesus would sanction it or not! Fallacy changes, and assumes different attitudes. Koreshanity has never changed its doctrines of the absolute truth, nor departed from its original purposes, and it will never do so.

The modern world resents the accusations of truth. It is the easiest thing in the world to offend the sense of false modesty of humanity. Hypocrisy is manifest everywhere—that of desiring and endeavoring to appear to possess goodness and strength of character when evil and weakness are obvious. Koreshanity reads human nature, and throws the searchlight on human character, and makes enemies. It reveals the fact that the world is ignorant; that the mortal man is sensual, that he is inhabited by devils, and that he resides in hell. These facts are too much for the superficial smartness of a corrupt generation, and it assumes the same attitude toward the truth at the end of this dispensation that it did at the close of the Jewish age, when Jesus rebuked humanity for its depravity in terms of bitter denunciation.

Many of the crudities of modern educational methods are being laid bare for public inspection by Dr. C. Hanford Henderson, through his pen and lectures, as a man may throw aside the curtain and expose a crime without being able to restore the injured or catch the criminal. Dr. Henderson demonstrates that education has become a mere machine, seriously out of line; it is a system that submits the youth to educational processes and then leaves him before maturity to enter lines of work quite out of the educational current. Modern education is not practical; it kills the faculties of originality by stuffing the mind with effete thought, and paralyzes ingenuity by forcing the mind into ruts and beaten paths of the world's disintegration.

War is the most external and material form of argument; it is analogous to waging a mental warfare in the promulgation of truth against fallacy. Men battle without force of arms; we often hear of the "big guns," who are able to effectually handle the adversary in debate or diplomacy. Koreshanity has the most formidable mental batteries in existence; it has turned its artillery against the world of fallacy. We are bombarding the modern world with mental entities, the force of which is irresistible; and the persistent firing of bombs filled with mental dynamite will finally batter down the forts and citadels of death and hell!

The physical cosmos is the tangible language or material expression of the mind and character of Deity. The mind that is capable of interpreting this infallible language, the true and indisputable expression of cause, reaches the knowledge of the laws of cause, and infolds its consciousness. The modern astronomers understand neither, and admit that they do not, thereby proving the fallacy of the system, and the obvious impossibility of its directing the mind of man to the origin of the universe.

The clergyman, statesman, and the professor of the university alike, assert that enlightenment is dangerous to the oppressor. True; but is it to the credit of the "enlightenment" of the nineteenth century that it has placed the entire world in bondage to the money power, and is constantly adding facilities to increase the oppression?

The people of the world will continue to die until the desires of the sensual humanity are reversed, its appetites restrained, and the so called personal liberties of mental outlaws and desperadoes are curtailed, and the world's ignorance is destroyed by the force of the absolute truth.

Many people who object to the attitude of THE FLAMING SWORD toward the sensual world and its customs, presume to believe that the Almighty is more likely to compromise the case with the devil and fallacy than is the Founder of Koreshanity!

America will rule the world when, through the applied science of Koreshanity, the plumb-line of commercial integrity is suspended, and the vidual, the church, and the secular world are made to conform to its righteousness.

The greatest men of the American nation and of the world were made through hard lines of human experience, rather than by the artificial methods of modern education.

Both angels and devils inhabit the human brain. There are angels in some rough exteriors, and devils in many a polished gentleman.

THE EDITOR.

Analogy of the Ovary of the Flower.

EDITOR SWORD:—The answer to my question concerning the relation of the Founder of Koreshanity to the ripening of the fruit of the Tree of Life, was so clear that I wondered why I had not studied it out myself; but I remembered that in several months of study I did not do so, and a strong inclination to learn all I can as soon as I can, prompts me to ask a further question concerning (1) the analogous function of Victoria Gratia. (2) What will be the effect of the coming theocrasy upon that portion of humanity that does not attain to immortality?—M. A. P., Antioch, O.

(1) The pistil of the flower terminates in the ovary. The pistil is finally absorbed entirely by the terminal base containing the cells for the construction of the seed. The personality prepared to receive the highest influxes from the coming conflagration will constitute the center of absorption of the anthropotic pistil, and will contain the seven genera from whence the seven orders of the sons of God will be projected into natural existence. The functions of construction are feminine.

The construction of the New Order of life and its fruitage is analogous to the formation and ripening of fruit or seed.

(2) Through the activities of the positive pole of evil, the world has gradually degenerated to its present condition in the scale of morality. Through the operation of the positive pole of life, the world will gradually become restored to health and happiness. The sons of God will be ministers of life. Through their activities in going in and out of the spiritual world, they will precipitate into mortal humanity a degree of life which will banish all sickness and destroy sensuality and ignorance. The influence of truth will finally reach the whole world, every stratum in its order, until humanity will be elevated and refined to the extent of their aspirations and obedience to law.

The coming baptism will not directly and immediately influence the world at large. The energies must pass down through the various planes and orders before the uttermost parts of the human world are reached. The benefits finally obtaining to the lower planes of humanity will correspond to the commercial, societal, and other relations sustained to the central government. During the coming ages the spiritual world will be reduced to a state of order, and once more humanity will be a brotherhood; and every man will be saved to the extent of his aspirations.

Where Did the Ascending Spirit of Jesus Go?

(1) Please explain what is meant by the term "arch" in Arch-Triumphant, arch-natural, etc., in the writings of KORESH.
(2) The entire spiritual world being or having its home in the human brain, how is it that the animal life of God, that is, the energy of the body of Jesus, the Holy Spirit, descended into humanity, while the Spirit of Jesus ascended to the central consciousness of Deity. Where did the ascending part go?—S. H., Concord, Wash.

(1) The prefix "arch" is from the Greek αρχη, which means the first, chief, highest. Our use of the prefix is in accordance with its definition. An arch-angel is the highest angel. There are numerous words in the language where the prefix is used: as arch bishop, arch-enemy, arch fiend, etc. The Society Arch-Triumphant is the first or chief society of the New Order, established through the triumph of truth. The arch-natural is the highest condition of human existence. Jesus was born the true natural, immortal man; when he arose from the tomb, having subdued every element of death, and possessing all power to dematerialize and rematerialize, he was in the arch-natural condition.

(2) There are three planes of human consciousness corresponding to the three atmospheres of heavens of the physical cosmos,—the outer, middle, and most interior; the first atmosphere is the highest atmosphere. The three planes of human consciousness constitute the three anthropic heavens,—the outer, the spiritual, and the celestial. The descending Spirit of Jesus, in its operation during the age, passed down into the external life of man, through which process Jesus crossed himself with the sensual humanity. The ascending life passed into the most interior realm of human consciousness, the celestial world, the solar realm of Deity, which is as distinct and separate from the external consciousness as the central atmosphere of the physical cosmos is distinct from the external atmosphere and the earth. At the end of the dispensation, the two degrees of life are conjoined through the messenger of conjunction, Elijah the prophet, which results, first, in the purification of doctrine; then through the application of the knowledge of the truth, purification of life, which is the final overcoming and resurrection, to be scientifically achieved here in the natural world.

Several Motions of the Sun and Moon.

I would like a little information regarding the motions of the sun and moon. In a public debate as to the merits of the Koreshan and Copernican systems of astronomy, my opponent grew desperate from lack of points, and said that the sun had three motions, and the moon five. How could this possibly be true? Please explain their motions.—L. M., Ashley, W. Va.

The central sun of the physical universe has five motions: Rapid vertical, on an axis extending through its light and dark poles; lateral (diurnal), the revolution of the light and dark hemispheres every 24 hours; orbital (diurnal), being slightly excentric; oscillatory (spiral), north and south in the direction of the magnetic axis of the cell; and vibratory (rocking), the changing of the direction of the axis of lateral rotation, due to the pendulation of its projection. The visible projection has corresponding motions, axillary rotation, diurnal, spiral, and annual revolutions.

The lunar motions are too complex for analyzation here; they involve a combination of elements and principles of relation between the solar, lunar, and planetary spheres of force, and the earth itself. However, the visible moon, the lunar pole, has a number of motions: axillary rotation, libratory movements, diurnal and monthly revolutions, rotations of the lines of the nodes and apsides, besides numerous perturbations and excentricities.

In the Copernican system, only a few of these motions find place, because of the perversion of the principles. The hypothetical motions imposed on the sun and moon by the theory of gravitation, such as the sun and earth, moon and earth, and sun and other suns, in revolving about common centers of gravity, are fictitious and are excluded from the Koreshan System.

How Oil and Gas Get Below the Coal-Beds.

I am not quite satisfied with your answer in regard to oil and gas in THE SWORD of February 3. I cannot see how the pressure on the coal-beds would put the oil and gas where they are found in the different strata of sandstone so far below the present coal-beds. Were there at one time, coal-beds in the places where oil and gas are now found, and are we to understand that nearly all of the coal was transformed in the processes of the production of the oil?—C. L. J., Floyd, Pa.

Petroleum is not a product of the coal-beds that are now found near the earth's surface; the pressure is not yet great enough to transform them. Through excessive pressure upon the beds from which the oil was produced, the coal was decomposed or transformed. The coal-beds thus decomposed were below the present coal-beds—far enough to subject them to the pressure of the earth above. The oil is now always found where the coal existed—oftentimes below it. If the strata of earth and sandstone in the oil regions were uniform and regular, the only way the oil could get below the beds would be by percolation; but the strata are irregular and broken up, and the oil was forced along seams until cavities between the strata of sandstone were reached, where subterranean lakes of oil are formed, from whence the oil is obtained by pumping or by force of pressure through the wells.

Lacks Mental Perception.

Dear Sirs, Please do not sent any more Flaming Swords to my address, And if I am right, I tink that I sent for it, for only three months, I would like to have you discontinue them, and sent no more of them. I cant make anything out of them, I have them to a friend, And he could not see through them, and refused to take anymore, I am to strong a Bible scholar to read a paper that contacits itself, like the sword. Yors respectfully,—A. A. S., Lynu, Mass.

We publish the above letter verbatim, with all its peculiarities. It is such a pity to tax the strength of such a "strong Bible scholar" with the profundities of Koreshan Universology, that we discontinue sending him THE SWORD as requested. He and his friend consider THE FLAMING SWORD to be a very ignorant and contradictory production, no doubt; and it would not be worth while to endeavor to convince such a man that he needs to know the truth, when he considers himself master of the great Biblical problems, though unable to understand simple solutions of them!

Against the Church.

Action of a Prominent Member of a California Baptist Church Offends the Preacher; Reasons Given for the Koreshan Faith Within Him.

DEAR DR. F.—It seems that my action on Monday night at the M. E. church, South, calls for an explanation; and as I was not at home when you called, I will try and write you one. In the first place, let me disclaim any thought of impertinence or disrespect, either to you or to Mr.

C., in what I am about to say, or in what we did on the occasion mentioned.

It has been one of my severest trials through life to have to run counter to any one whom I respect, even when conscience demanded it; but on the other hand, my religious convictions were such that I dared not stultify my conscience.

The reason why I did not stand up at the request of Mr. C., I will give in as few words as I can. When Mr. C. announced his text and proceeded to expound it, it at once occurred to me that he was placing himself in the same category of what Job calls mockers, for he says that his friends may "mock on;" and Elipha proceeds to do so, a part of whose words Mr. C. took as his text. But suppose that the words were appropriate and good; did Mr. C., after he exhorted us in the words of the text to "acquaint ourselves with Him," inform us who "He" was? Did he tell us what the demands of His doctrine and life were? I trow not! But he related emotional stories that tend to work upon the feelings of the hearers, rather than upon the rational faculties. The Lord Christ's teachings were: "He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them," and "He that loveth me will keep my commandments;" "I came from above; ye [all mankind] are from beneath;" "I came forth from my father, ye [all mankind] are of your father, the devil, and his works ye will do."

No; Mr. C. did not teach "the thing that is true of the Lord, as did his servant Job," and had he done so, nine tenths of his hearers would have left in anger as they did nineteen hundred years ago, when they were told the truth by the Lord Jesus. Seeing these things in this light, I could not stand up and thereby give sanction to what he said.

I know all this will appear very strange to you; but let me repeat that what I have done and said, is in all sincerity and without the least shade of bitterness or anything but due respect to yourself or Mr. C. My wife also tells me that in your talk with her you spoke of "that strange doctrine," and that you "would not be led astray by it." Did you ever stop to think, Doctor, how strangely different in color, shape, and general appearance from any other part of the tree the blossom is? Yet it is evolved from and is a part of the tree. Just fancy in the spring time, when the buds are getting ready to break forth into blossom, that a conversation is held between the corpuscles, and a retrogressive one of the group should say to one making an effort to become a blossom corpuscle: "I think it is a strange procedure; I would not be led astray in that way!"

Koreshanity is the evolution of primitive Christianity, just as Christianity was the evolution of Judaism. Christ was the true seed, the seed of God, the seminal essence of Deity, and like all other seeds he was subject to the laws of propagation and reproduction; like all other seeds, in order to reproduce more seeds just like himself, he had to die in the soil in which he was buried,—his church, and pass through the several gestative stages until the end of the cycle, now near at hand, when he will come forth as the 144,000 sons of God, just like himself. This coming forth is the resurrection.

The church today is the counterpart of the Jewish church nineteen hundred years ago. Then the Lord God had to lament, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." And now, ye will not hear, ye will not even investigate for fear of being led astray; though it occurs to me that it does not speak very well for one's being "grounded" in knowledge of the truth, when such a one is afraid to investigate a new doctrine for fear of being led astray by it. The Bible exhorts us to "try the spirits and see if they be of God." Your unruly brother,—JNO. M. LANE, California.

Becoming More Interesting Every Issue.

DR. C. R. TEED:—

I want to thank you for the punctual way THE SWORDS come to me, as I am deeply interested in the kind of literature they contain. I think they are becoming more interesting every issue.

I feel as though you have pursued a scientific course to prove your claims; and to my mind, you have proven them to be correct beyond a doubt. But like all past advocates of the Truth, you will suffer persecution. I hope you will be sustained until the world acknowledges your claims, and yields to the truth of your System.

I should be more than pleased to receive a copy of the latest edition of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY.

S. F. TEED, M. D.
New York City.

Cellular Cosmogony in Texas.

Introduced to the Faculty of the University at Austin by Our Agent, and Put the Members in a Sportive Mood.

I have had two interviews with Rev. E. M. W.; the first was in regard to the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. He objected to the $100,000 challenge, saying that true men of science would be turned away by such "buncombe." When asked where the true men of science were, he said that he had not found any, but such men as Agassiz were true men of science. He confessed that the book was the record of a brilliant start; but that it would have to be gone over with the opposing people present, and that he himself would have to see these things before he could believe them.

I have been in the university twice, but up to date have apparently wasted my time. The president had no time; four other professors looked at the book, and made considerable sport of it. Only one, Judge C., ventured to say that it was out place to make sport of anything they did not understand. There are about twenty professors, so there are others to hear from, but I do not expect anything but snubs, as that is all I have had so far. They (the faculty) seemed possessed with the idea that wisdom was all with them, and all science must originate with, or at least be revised by, them. The devout church people are the same way. Strange as it may seem, the church people say that Koreshanity does not agree with the Bible, therefore they cannot believe it; while the atheist says that it does agree with the Bible, therefore he cannot believe it! There are a number of "Millennial Dawn" people here, who are disciples of C. T. Russell, besides other Adventists. They are as set in their beliefs and ways as plaster of paris!

All the copies of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY you sent me (three dozen in all) have been disposed of except five. You have my order for the 50 copies for the Gam-mel Book Co. They sold seven copies in two days—all I had to give them. This is the best firm to handle books in this city (Austin). I expect they will do a good business with them as soon as this matter becomes thoroughly worked up. The books that are out have occasioned considerable comment pro and con.—R. W. GRAY, Texas.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

Watching the Predictions of the Flaming Sword.

EDITOR SWORD:—I have been steadily and quietly watching the predictions as issued in THE FLAMING SWORD for some time; and I see how they are silently but certainly doing their work. It calls to my mind the dream of Nebuchadnezzar and the statement that a "Stone shall be cut out of the mountain without hands," and crush the kings and powers of nations and usher in the new kingdom. It looked for awhile as though the Stone might be rolling up hill; but now it has reached the top, and its movements from henceforth will be so rapid and terrific as to crush and uproot fallacy and error; and soon there shall be a "new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness!"

I like to read the letters published in THE FLAMING SWORD. They do us good, and strengthen us until such time as we can join you. I noticed in January, as soon as I obtained this year's forecast of the planets, that nearly all the planets would be in conjunction in Sagittarius this year. Now Raphael says a little on the subject: "Toward the close of November the grand conjunction of seven planets in one sign will be approaching, an event that does not occur once in a thousand years. This conjunction will mark an epoch, and begin a new cycle." I often wondered what great events it would produce in the world,—that is, I could not grasp the meaning until my mental question was so plainly and thoroughly answered in THE FLAMING SWORD of March 3, page 10, and the papers recording the formation of a number of trusts every day.

Berthaldine's Article Stirs Up Old-Time Enthusiasm.

EDITOR SWORD:—Berthaldine's article, "In the Battle Against the Competitive System," in the last SWORD, stirs up my old-time enthusiasm. If I were as young and strong as I was nearly forty years ago, when I enthusiastically joined Peter Armstrong's little community (Celeste) in the mountains of Pennsylvania, I would be "one of a thousand to arise and put on the whole armor of God, and organize for the restoration of commercial equity through scientific co-operation." But alas! my physical powers are about gone; and it is strong and vigorous soldiers that are wanted. I have a ten-acre ranch here in town, from which I manage to get a living; but I am unable to join the ranks of active fighters.—D. EDSON SMITH, Cal.

Cellular Cosmogony Simply Unanswerable.

I have read the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and I must say that I consider it simply unanswerable! It is certainly the greatest work of modern times; its evident destiny is to revolutionize the world. I have one copy, but it is out doing missionary work; I want another copy where I can refer to it constantly. With best wishes for the success of Koreshanity,—C. H. HUNT, Oregon.

THE SONG OF THE TRUSTS.

Let us corner up the sunbeams
Lying all around our path;
Get a trust on wheat and roses,
Give the poor the thorns and chaff.
Let us find our chiefest pleasure
Hoarding bounties of today,
So the poor shall have scant measure
And two prices have to pay.

Yes; we'll reservoir the rivers
And we'll levy on the lakes,
And we'll lay a trifling toll tax
On each poor man who partakes.
We will brand his number on him.
That he'll carry through his life;
We'll apprentice all his children,
Get a mortgage on his wife.

We will capture e'en the wind-god
And confine him in a cave,
And then, through our patent process,
We the atmosphere will save.
Thus we'll squeeze our little brother
When he tries his lungs to fill;
Put a meter on his windpipe,
And present our little bill.

We will syndicate the starlight,
And monopolize the moon!
Claim a royalty on rent-daws,
A proprietary noon;
For right of way through ocean's spray
We'll pay just what it's worth;
We will drive our stakes around the lakes,
In fact we'll own the earth.—Ex.

Expression of Superior Life and Character; Location of the People of Progress.

English is written more than any other language. Statistics for 1898 emphasize the fact that more letters are written in English than in all of the other languages together.

To be more exact, three fourths of all the letters that go into the mails of the world are in English. This remarkable fact is the more impressive when we remember that only about one fourth of the civilized world speaks our language. There are substantially 500,000,000 persons who speak the ten chief modern tongues, and of these 150,000,000 speak English. But the number is increasing rapidly—beyond all proportion as compared with the growth of other languages—and as the English-speaking people increase in number, not only do the letters in the language increase, but the number of letters per capita also increases.

At the beginning of this century about twelve per cent of the civilized world spoke English; at the middle of the century it was nineteen per cent, and now, at its close, it is thirty per cent. The increase in letter writing has been far more rapid than this, and now out of the enormous number of 10,640,000,000 letters posted last year, 8,000,000,000 were written in English.

The march of intelligence headed by the English-speaking races, the wonderful decrease of illiteracy among them, and the demands of commerce, with these same races in its van, have brought this result. Commerce has extended the post-office system to all parts of the globe, into every nook and corner of the civilized world, and its language has been evolved from the English tongue. All races that enter into commerce of necessity learn more or less of the English language, and to some considerable extent carry on their business correspondence in English. Anyone who goes among the native merchants of Hong Kong will be impressed by this fact.

If you move with the world you must do it in English. Then, English-speaking persons write more letters because more of them know how to write; for while ninety-one per cent of them have this accomplishment, but a little more than one half of the persons speaking other modern languages can write their names. This is why the mail matter of the world for last year held thirty-one letters for each English-speaking person. German came next with twenty-four, and French followed with seventeen for each person.

In the United States alone, last year, there were mailed thirty-seven letters for each inhabitant, which aggregated forty per cent of all the letters written in the world, and equalled the number written by all of the nations of Continental Europe.

Next to the English with its 8,000,000,000 letters written last year, comes the German, with 1,300,000,000; French, 1,000,000,000; Italian, 220,000,000; Russian, 180,000,000; Spanish, 120,000,000; Dutch, 100,000,000; Scandinavian, 80,000,000, and Portuguese, 24,000,000.—Ex.

Honesty is the best policy, but a man who acts on that principle is not an honest man.—Bishop Whately.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell, we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 1 cent.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 1 cent.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 1 cent.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 1 cent.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 1 cent.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follum. 1 cent each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, postpaid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.50; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 10 cents.

American Expansion Logical From the Basis of Competism; Competition of Nations for Supremacy; Fall of England and Russia.

THERE IS considerable conflict of opinion regarding the course pursued by the government toward the people of the territory acquired by our war with Spain. Every administration is open to the criticisms of the opposing party, and to some extent justly; but the general opposition of parties out of power, to the administrative policy, is upon the ground of a vigilant search for, and discovery of some weakness which is made a party issue. If the republican party favors expansion, the opposing one is quite certain to advocate the opposite policy, and vice versa.

There ought to be some standard of administrative virtue, aside from the political perversions of men who fatten at the public crib, and whose political ribs become conspicuous in proportion to the enforced restraints of the controlling party. There are but two great standards of possible political justice; one of them is righteous, the other is unrighteous. The first was suggested nineteen hundred years ago by the great Humanitarian, who instituted for and through his followers a practical communism as a true exposition and application of the principle of love to the neighbor; the other was exhibited in the speculative procedure of the men he overthrew in the courts of the temple, where they plied the craft of money-getting, impelled by the love of money, which is the root of all evil. The modern impulse to commercial activity is the latter. Can there be a question as to which is righteous?

If commerce on the competitive basis is correct; and if men possess the moral right to compete with one another for financial mastery, and corporations and governments are amenable to this principle of selfish aggrandizement, then we possess a standard of political and international virtue. The financial prosperity of any country must depend upon its power to successfully compete with other countries or nations; and the power which gains the advantage and maintains it, must ultimately destroy and absorb the weaker competitor. If this principle be true, then whatsoever means may be required to accomplish the triumph of the successful competitor is legitimate.

If there could obtain the principle of equilibrium without violent revolution, under the enforcement of the competitive law, then we might talk of the injustice of the apparent republican expansive policy. Competitors in international commerce cannot ultimately compromise. They may appear to for a time, while there remains anything which the great commercial pirates have not already appropriated; but when the spoils of the last conquest have been distributed as agreed upon by the powers, then the stronger of the piratical alliance must prey upon the one first crowded out of the international fellowship.

It might seem regrettable that the American government could not perceive the justice of the Cuban cause until the blowing up of one of our great naval structures, and that the battle cry could not have been "Cuba Libre" instead of "Remember the Maine." Our war against Spain was impulsed by commercial incentives, but the energy enforcing the enthusiasm of our navy and military was revenge. Whatsoever results accrue to the people of the conquered territory, the world may rest assured that the wisdom directing these events is the intellectual power dominating commercial interests; and providing the competitive spirit be righteous, then the course of the republican administration is glorious. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked;" and for this reason the struggle for national aggrandizement and supremacy progresses in an accelerated ratio, and the augmentation of national greatness must result in the triumph of the people possessing the most polished corruption. If the competitive system be the correct one, then there is no course open to the United States but to acquire and hold whatever possessions will conduce to the general commercial control.

The most conspicuous international conflict now in progress, is between the Anglo-Saxon and Russian nations. One or the other of these powers must succumb, or in the final conflict both will be annihilated. If the competitive system be right, and the Anglo-Saxon nation the fittest to survive, it will achieve its victory on no other ground than the alliance of England and America,—the conflict resulting in the destruction of the Russian power. This is the specific point of our difference with the class of people who look for the Lord's coming in the restoration of the old Jerusalem and the establishment of Anglo-Saxon supremacy.

The British lion is the perversion of the principle of the lion of the tribe of Judah. The lion is the power of commerce. The power of commerce, as illustrated by the Lord, was involved in the principle of communism. Its opposite principle is competitism, of which the Anglo-Saxon is the supreme representative. The bear is the symbol of truth and good in ultimates, which constitute the power of these to restore human rights, not on the basis of the competitive impulse, but rather on the surer foundation of united life. Both the lion and the bear are symbols of Divinity; and the union of the principles symbolized by these, in the ultimate of organic union in the perfection of the kingdom of righteousness in the earth, should be looked for by all who desire the manifestation of the sons of God.

The class of people of whom Professor Totten is a representative, predicts a coming clash of arms between the lion and the bear; and they believe that the lion will destroy the bear, while the fact is, the lion and the bear, both perversions of the primary elements of life, will destroy each other, and the Eagle will devour the carcass of each.

We remember the account of a conflict between a huge bear and a wild boar. The man who witnessed the conflict heard a tramping and rustling of dry grass and leaves in an open space a little distance from the thicket where he had been inspecting his fox traps. He climbed a sapling from which he could view the opening in the forest, and immediately caught sight of a huge bear and wild boar tramping in the foreground, describing a segment of a circle,—the bear traversing the outer circle, the boar a circle of lesser circumference. When the bear, describing the large circle, would turn to retrace his steps, the boar would turn and continue until the bear repeated the maneuver of doubling his tracks. Upon further investigation, the man espied a sow with a litter of small pigs; these were nestled together as the pivot of the belligerent gyrations of the bear and the boar. The boar maintained the position of his circle, while the bear, in a sort of a spiral convergence, narrowed his, constantly approaching the boar.

While the witness of the approaching conflict was cogitating in his mind the possibility of victory for the boar who was anxiously guarding his helpless offspring, the bear made a sudden lunge, and the conflict was on. They fought desperately for a while, when victory seemed to perch upon the spine of his swine's bristles. The illusion was brief, however; for while the bowels of the bear protruded from a laceration made by the tusk of the boar, the bear had also inflicted a mortal wound. They turned from the conflict at the same time, and at a little distance from each other both parties to the conflict lay down to die.

There is a possibility, when the conflict between the bear and the lion reaches the point of the final struggle, that both will succumb to the prowess of each; for both represent the false principles of life, and the one is not more fitted to survive than the other. Both of these great powers represent the prostitution of the Word:—the great northern bear, the prostitution of the religious and social principles of life; while the other, the lion, is the most fitting illustration of the abomination of desolation, as pertaining to the secular commercial power.

The coming of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven, in power and great glory, will witness the fall of both Russia and England.

The root of the tree of evil is every form of selfishness proceeding from the love of money, which, in an internal sense, is the love of sensuality.

The kingdoms of the world are mere fragments of a once glorious Kingdom, originally instituted and reigned over by the Lord God.

Immersed Into the Baptist Church.

The Founder of Koreshanity, Once a Baptist, Asks the Baptist Flag Some Pertinent Questions, From the Basis of the Doctrine that a Baptist Cannot Fall From Grace.

A REPRESENTATIVE and aggressive Baptist periodical, the Baptist Flag, is published at Fulton, Ky., and from its standpoint is radical and alive. It is an out and out Baptist—and should be. If the Baptist doctrines were right a hundred years ago, then they are right today; and no honest Baptist will compromise the truth with the devil for any purpose whatsoever. If the church is not up to the times, and requires a restatement of any of its propositions, then it would follow that its previous position was wrong, and no readjustment of interpretation would help the church.

In another column we reprint some extracts from THE FLAMING SWORD, with comments from the Baptist Flag. We herewith desire to thank the Flag for its "admiration" for our boldness, and we congratulate it for its adherence to principle. We insert here a quotation from the aforesaid publication:

No true Baptist, in any country, will ever agree to the acceptance of men or women to church membership who have never been baptized, and who never expect to be. Yea, further, we may say no true Baptist church will ever accept to membership such men or women as have received a so called baptism from any of the sects. Baptist churches were authorized to do all the baptizing the Lord ever commanded, and they don't have to receive it from anybody else.

Good! Now, why does the Baptist denomination admit the general run of Protestant denominations to be Evangelical? Let us not stop here. Was the Baptist church ever authorized to baptize men who were liable to become freaks and promulgate "vagaries"?

The Founder of the Koreshan System was raised in the Baptist church; his grandfather was a Baptist clergyman, and many of his relatives were ordained clergymen in the Baptist church. His parents also were baptized members of the Baptist denomination, and he was baptized at the age of seventeen, after struggling for years to attain a conversion after the formula of the Baptists. He submitted his experience to be passed upon by ordained men who, being appointed of God for their special service, ought to have been directed by the Holy Ghost. He submitted his case, with his experience, to the Holy Ghost ("who is God") working in and moving these Christ-anointed men who decided—of course, under the power of the Holy Spirit—that the said experiences were the true witnesses with the Holy Spirit, that he (the Founder of the Koreshan System) was born of God. They said that he had given genuine evidence of his adoption. Now, if we understand the Scriptures, a man having once been born of God cannot fall from grace.

We present two or three questions for the consideration of these good Baptists: Was the Founder of Koreshanity a good Baptist from the age of seventeen to thirty years, during the time the Baptist people fellowshiped him? If he was not a good Baptist, then is the spirit which actuates the Baptist people of sufficiently good authority to be a safe counselor for the denomination? Do the Baptists believe the Scriptures, which say that "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he is born of God"? According to the Baptist formula and the testimony of many members at a covenant meeting of the Baptist church, it was the consensus of opinion that your humble servant was born of God, as evinced by the testimony of experience offered. If he was born of God, then how did he succeed in falling after such a reformation,—despite the Scriptural declaration that a man cannot sin after being born of God?

If he was not born of God, then how could the Holy Spirit so far forget himself as to lend his testimony to witness with the spirit of your servant, that he was born of God? At that time your servant accepted, dubiously, the testimony of the church as to his heirship to an eternal inheritance, because it seemed to him—at the age of seventeen—that to be regenerated from the Lord, through the operation of the Spirit, he should have become a new man. It seemed to him that to be born of God was to become a son of God; and he was fearful lest he was not a son of God in the true sense of these terms. His doubts of his heirship followed him in the church until the fall of 1869, when he received illumination from the God of heaven. In making this declaration we do not claim more than every Baptist claims, who says he is converted; for every Baptist in the church says he is regenerated; he is born of God; he has attained the new birth, and that the Lord God, the Holy Ghost from heaven, has enlightened him. We have merely employed the Latin word illumined, which means the same thing.

While we maintain that we are enlightened from the God of heaven, we do not claim to have yet attained to physical immortality. This is yet to be put on; for this corruption shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality. The change will be wrought here in the flesh, through obedience to the law of God,—an obedience which is ordained of God, and the possibility of fulfilling it denied by the church.

Is Universal Space Limited or Infinite?

Considered From Mathematical, Geometrical, Metaphysical, and Cosmogonical Standpoints; Irrefutable Proofs of the Limitation of Form.

PROF. V. G. MORROW.

SPACE is considered by the majority of modern minds to be illimitable or infinite; it is held that the great room of the universe, the great openness, is absolutely boundless, and that in any direction, one might go on an imaginary journey in a straight line without ever reaching a limit. The question is often asked, Can you think of space as having bounds? The usual conclusion is that if we try to suppose an end or bound to space in any direction we will perceive that nothing could ever be a barrier; that any supposed end or bound would but mark a place from which, think as we like, there would still be a space beyond, for it is unthinkable otherwise. Therefore, if we strain our imagination and stretch it to the utmost, it is claimed that we can never conceive of the vastness of infinite direction.

If we were to illustrate even the greatest span of infinite space which can be reached abstractly by any mental process, it would not suffice to form an adequate conception of endlessness. Suppose a vast globe one decillion miles in diameter filled with atoms of matter; take the atoms, one by one, and place them in a line, so that each one shall be a decillion miles from the other, until every atom is removed from the globe and arranged in the line. The vast extent of the line thus formed would be but an infinitesimal part of infinity!

The idea of illimitable space has grown out of fallacious astronomical concepts, licensed by the Euclidean system of geometry, in which it is held as fundamentals that two straight lines cannot enclose finite space, and that parallels can neither meet nor diverge in space, no matter if extended eternally. In astronomy, the size of the universe has been constantly increasing since the days of Copernicus, and its space has correspondingly enlarged. The telescope has never enabled man to see the barrier; perpendiculars from a convex earth have never reached imaginable bounds. On and on, the bounds of the universe have been extended until they are removed altogether; and the idea is prevailing that infinite space is filled with worlds, and that the stellar universe reaching beyond the Milky Way, is as a mere atom of existence compared with the vast field of constantly whirling orbs and systems,—worlds without end in a limitless, formless universe!

Euclidean Geometry Rejected by Modern Mathematicians.

Strange as it may seem to many minds drifting with the current of popular thought, and enamored with the idea of the infallibility of abstract space speculation, there are many able men in the world who deny that space is illimitable. It is a well-known fact that all of the able mathematicians of the present century reject the geometry of Euclid as untenable and defective; the fundamental axioms of the old Grecian system were assumed,—a conclusion now generally conceded in mathematical circles. The old theory of parallels has been declared to be fallacious by such men as Gauss, Bolyai, Reimann, Helmholtz, and others. The modern geometries, which have supplanted the Euclidean, known as the non-Euclidean, reject the postulates of Euclid as being untrue, and hold that parallels may meet and diverge, and that properties of space may be regarded as limited.

The old geometry considered only the "space of experience," founded upon fixed planes; in the non-Euclidean systems it is held that the space of experience does not extend in absolutely straight lines, but differing slightly from the zero of a plane surface so that a point which should move forward in a Euclidean straight line shall ultimately arrive at the same point, having traversed a circumference. In the great Reimannian system of geometry it is maintained that there is no necessity, from a geometrical basis, for considering space as infinite; that space itself has such a curvature that what seems to us to be a straight line returns to itself, something after the manner of the surface of a sphere, containing only a finite number of square miles.

Astronomer Newcomb says that the idea of the finitude of space, although transcending his conceptions, does not contradict them; and the Standard Dictionary concludes that it is possible that some of the non-Euclidean systems of geometry may represent space more nearly than the old system, if we conclude that the difference is so slight as to be incapable of detection by any means in our power. Thus the greatest geometers of the nineteenth century deny the infinity of space; they hold from geometrical principles which have supplanted the postulates of Euclid, that there is no such thing as continuous and infinite direction in fact, and that therefore space is limited. Following the idea of the limitation of space, there is a growing opinion among able astronomers that the universe is limited; for it would be inconsistent to hold that finite space could contain an infinite universe. Newcomb has reached the conclusion, which is shared by others, that the modern telescope has reached the confines of universal dimension; and now the question may be asked of the Copernican as well as the Koreshan astronomers, What is on the outside, if the universe and its space are limited?

Metaphysical Proofs of Space Limitation.

Idealists, ignorant of the relations of mind and matter, have held that space is purely ideal, having no objective reality, it being merely a subjective condition. We are willing to grant that "infinite space" is a subjective condition only, admitting that absurd and impossible things may be conceived through application of the principles of fallacy, in which the thought is perverted and the mind made to conceive the exact opposite of that which really exists. And as long as truth is not possessed by the mind, various conceptions will be entertained concerning the properties of space.

Real space, the space with which we are acquainted, is extension or room, the three dimensions of which are length, breadth, and thickness. These dimensions are properties of form, as well as properties of space, a demonstration of the fact that space is the extension or room of form. Dimension is a general property of form, and limitation is a specific characteristic of dimension. Space therefore, is the property of extension of existing things, the room which they occupy, and is not to be considered apart from form; for if space is a property of extension of form, only form can occupy space, and space cannot be conceived of except in relation to form.

Size is determined by the three appreciable dimensions of space. The mind has faculties of conception of form and size; if these are qualities of the mind, and are also properties of natural things, they demonstrate the correlation of mind and matter, and consequently the relations of form and formation through the continual descent and mutation of spirit to matter, resulting in the complete expression, with all of the qualities of the mind, in variety of forms and relations of the physical cosmos. The mind can appreciate the properties of form, the dimensions and limitation of form and its concomitant space; therefore, the limitation of form and space is thinkable; illimitability is not thinkable, and in consideration of the laws of the relations of the metaphysical to the physical, the relations of mind and matter, the conclusion is inevitable that that which is unthinkable has no existence. From a metaphysical standpoint then, it is demonstrable that illimitability is neither a property of matter nor space, and does not belong to them, and therefore space, which is the property of extension of form, and which comprises dimensions of form, is limited.

Mathematical Roots and Evolutions, and the Geometry of Cosmic Egg.

Mathematics demonstrates the unity and the harmony of the universe, its completeness, its limitation and variety of relations, and the immutability of its laws; its principles inhere in the very laws of being, and are expressed in all the forms of existence. Mathematics is the exact and infallible language of cause, and its terms are susceptible of translation, with equal absoluteness and infallibility, into every realm of the universe. It involves the laws and principles of logic, synthesis, and analysis, the laws of analogy, symbolism, correspondence, and correlation; its definitions are exact, and its conclusions are absolute and unvarying; it is finite, complete, and perfect. The applied principles of mathematics translate qualities of thought to correlate forms and motions, and qualities of life to human language; and correlate physics and metaphysics, mind and matter, cause and effect, man and cosmos. Mathematics is the infallible logic of relations.

Mathematical roots and evolutions, equations and progressions, are manifest in all domains in the universe. Their principles are the fundamentals of life and existence, the principles of the relations and qualities of existence. Cause is complete, hence finite; its functions are mathematically correlated, and its possibilities are equal to, and no greater than, the measure of its potential energy. The ultimate evolutions of all roots represent perfect numbers, therefore are limited in number. The universe, the analogue of man, as the ultimate expression and evolution of its inherent life is mathematically perfect, complete, and limited; and its concomitant space, possessing definite mathematical relations and geometrical qualities of extense, is therefore limited. The very fundamentals of mathematics are thus resolved into an irresistible protest against the popular unthinkable misconception of space, an infallible refutation of the idea of an infinite universe; for if the universe were infinite, and if its space were infinite, there could be no mathematics!

Geometry is the mathematics of form; it treats of space and its relations. The etymology of the word defines the greatest form to which it is applicable; it is from γεωμετρία, from γε, earth, and μετρος, to measure; it is the mathematics of earth-measurement. Ge or gava in Hebrew means body, the human form as the microcosm, and its correspondential and analogous earth-body. Geometry is the mathematics of the human form and of the earth or macrocosm, demonstrating the Koresshan conclusion that the earth is the form or body of the universe. Geometry is the mathematics of existing forms and their actual relations; it is founded upon the laws of the universal, structured cell. The principles of geometry are applicable only to form and its properties of space, dimension, and limitation; and as geometry cannot possibly be applied to infinity, the conclusion is inevitable that neither the universe nor space is illimitable. Geometry infallibly demonstrates that the universe and its room are limited.

The great room of the universe is cellular; the great cell occupies its own space, all the space there is. It is a structure of form, a structure of limitation. The earth is the material boundary of exterior space. We can thus conceive of the limitations of universal form, the limited boundary, beyond which there is no space. In nature there are no flat planes of any considerable dimensions; and any system of geometry founded on planes is defective and fallacious. The positive surfaces in the natural universe; on which parallels enclose finite space, are concave, convex, cylindrical, and conical. Natural parallels in the universe are curves, embracing space which returns to itself, the largest dimension of which is the 25,000-mile circumference of the earth. In the demonstrations of the Koresshan Cosmogony, the old geometrical system of Euclid is overthrown, with the resultant unthinkable and impossible propositions of the infinitude of space, and the equally absurd systems of astronomy which have endeavored to fill the space which fallacy, in its ignorance of the true geometry of form, has presumed and failed to create!

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

REVOLUTION is at hand! There is a growing expectation in the mind of the world that radical changes in the conduct of human affairs are about to occur. The signs of the times, written on the scroll of humanity as well as in the physical heavens, dimly read by an oppressed people, are scientifically interpreted in Koreshanity; a new age is at the doors, bringing to humanity its freedom from oppression and bondage to ignorance and death! The world is full of disappointment; its ideals of liberty and freedom are shattered. The founders of the American republic fought for liberty, but they have not realized it; instead of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," they have found death, bondage, and the pursuit of misery and discontent under the wings of monopoly! The common people are being rapidly reduced to poverty; the agencies are merciless and relentless. Hundreds of thousands fought for the freedom of the negro; and the colored man was made to rejoice, as did the revolutionary fathers; but a worse thing than plantation slavery has overtaken them. Instead of freedom of the negro, resulting from the civil war, there came a greater freedom to capital! In the proslavery days, capital furnished homes, food, clothing, and implements for the negro; now the negro must furnish the homes, the food, clothing, and implements, and toil for the capitalist for a mere pittance! In slavery, the negroes were never treated as cruelly as they are today; in "freedom" they are cursed, lynched, tortured, and burned at the stake. A remarkable statement is made by Judge Price, of Chicago, an ex-U. S. treasurer, that he expects resumption of negro slavery,—not by force, but through the voluntary act of the negro, "the natural act of a weaker seeking for the aid and protection of the stronger race in the hellish times that are fast coming upon us. I said when Lincoln was inaugurated, that we were entering upon the day of judgment; the time of waiting is almost over, and the New Jerusalem in America will pass through its final trials and emerge victorious with the true Church Triumphant!"

An Adventist exchange objects to the "sky kingdom" of modern Christianity, and considers as impossible the usual idea that the souls of people go off in the sky somewhere on the search for a resting place. It says, "Do away with the sky kingdom, and you have no need for the ethereal, immaterial man." Did our cotemporary ever consider the impossibility of the human body of Jesus going off into the sky somewhere, whence he will come again through the physical clouds to the earth? Suppose, while dropping the idea of the sky being inhabited by immaterial saints, it also drops the idea of the inhabitation of the sky by the physical personalities of Jesus, Enoch, Elijah, the Almighty, angels, and others. Jesus showed his disciples plainly enough when he was tangible, where God was; the Almighty was in Jesus, to the fullest extent of his Being, for Jesus was the "fulness of the Godhead bodily," really and corporeally. When Jesus left the tangible world, he told his disciples that he would be with them until the end of the age. How with them? In spirit; Jesus was reduced to spirit, and entered them as the bread of Life. They ate him, as was symbolized at the Passover. When Jesus entered his disciples as Holy Spirit, God began to dwell in the church, in his temple, and not in the sky!

At the call of the Czar of Russia the disarmament congress is to convene at The Hague. The peace feature of it is the mere shell, the ostensible purpose enclosing the real heart of the scheme. The nations are preparing to form a stupendous federation for the purpose of checking the forces of the inevitable. Thrones of corrupt nations cannot last long; perhaps they imagine all might endure a little longer if they stand together rather than singly. There is greater danger to the present governments of the world through revolutions from within than there is in nations fighting each other. The greatest overturning the world has ever known, the most stupendous revolution, "the time of trouble" foreseen by the prophets of old, will result from the struggle between capital and labor. The disarmament congress cannot stamp out the forces of revolution; the volcanoes will continue to smolder, with ever-threatening upheaval, until the final hour. The real meaning of the Czar's proposition it to seal up the craters; this very act will shorten the time, for thereby the pent-up forces will the sooner break forth and destroy the old world!

The freethought press is continuing to ridicule the idea of miracles, and endeavoring to show that they are absurd and impossible. Is a wonder impossible? There are hundreds of wonders in the world; a miracle is simply a wonder, a marvel. Dewey wrought a miracle in Manila Bay, and Schley, an astonishing one at Santiago,—so astonishing that if it had occurred 2,000 years ago and been recorded in the Bible, it would be laughed at by agnostics of the present century. The world is full of miracles today; Edison is working miracles right along. One of the latest wonders is Tripler's liquified air; his recent exhibition of a few of its possibilities before Washington scientists filled them with wonder. Such things are always wonders (miracles) to those who never saw them before. There has never been a miracle performed, in ancient or modern times, out of harmony with the laws of nature, but in strict obedience to them. It is possible to accomplish a few things in the world which fossilized freethought of modern times considers impossible and cannot explain!

The missing link has at last been found. It is the missing link sought for by Darwin; it is also the missing link in the solution of the labor problem. Genius has endowed the machine with the faculty of taking the place of human hands, and hundreds of people are forced out of employment in lines which have been invaded by muscles of iron and steel. Still another factor is being introduced—directly related to the Darwinian evolution, a demonstration of the process of transformation of the monkey into man. It costs money to employ ordinary human beings to tediously pick the cotton from the bolls. It is now proposed to train monkeys for this work; the experiment has been tried and pronounced a success. Monkeys cost but little; they need no clothing, but little food, and cages are cheap. Monkeys have no ambitions, their contentment is superb, and their imitation is highly developed. The step is taken, the evolution is in progress, and the monkey from the jungle is being transformed to the laborer on the southern plantation!

The trusts control nearly all of the commodities of America and of the world. Soon it will be impossible to purchase a single article without paying tribute to the trusts,—without helping to pay the dividends of the gigantic corporations. The government undertakes to pay its running expenses in peace or war, out of funds received from a little tax and tariff. The profits on all the commodities of the world, paid by the people and pocketed by corporations, exceed scores of times the amount of tax imposed by all the governments of the world! In fact, labor must not only produce all that the trusts control, but must purchase at extortionate prices, the very things it has produced! The laboring man must pay many times over for what he uses in sustaining life, for the purpose of living that he may continue to toil for capital, that he may produce more articles for those who do not labor, and that he may purchase a few of the things which he himself has already earned in producing them!

Babylon of old fell while the aristocracy feasted and the masses starved and suffered under oppression; the handwriting on the wall—read and interpreted by the prophet—declared the kingdom at an end. The wanton waste of millions of dollars in New York, offends the dignity of the victims of oppression. Clubs, banquets, and balls annually waste more than hundreds of thousands of people receive for years of toil and hardship! The two Vanderbilt weddings in Gotham city this week, where the presents aggregate over $1,000,000, are examples of the social and economic scandals which are rapidly multiplying. The handwriting again appears on the walls—on the walls of Wall street; the startling declarations are read and interpreted by the Prophetic Voice of Koreshanity. The time is at hand; the end is near, and the kingdoms of the old world will soon be no more!

An agnostic church is proposed, called the New Church of Humanity, and it is likely that many people will join it. Thousands of little schemes will be put into operation in the simultaneous order of fallacy at the closing of the great cycle,—the same schemes that have appeared throughout the history of the world in the successive order. The world has already witnessed the influence of both apostate Christianity and freethought. In the one the world had the Inquisition; and in the other, the famous "Reign of Terror" of France. The new church scheme originates with the "liberal university" in the West. As a sample of its liberality, it says that the rules of the new church will be very strict; thorough conversion is necessary to fellowship, and backsliders into the barbarous methods of Christendom will be immediately placed outside the gates by these latter-day Puritans. Mental anarchy, with the whips of oppression and ignorance, is as dangerous out of the old church as in it!

The world wants some one to edit the Bible, and is looking for a satisfactory editor. The Bible is entirely too severe on human depravities, and contains so many contradictions to mortal nature and perverted reason. The idea is to make the Bible a sort of soothing syrup, full of promises for the meanest man living, and free passes into heaven for everybody. It might be an easy thing to take the scissors and fix up a book to suit the masses; but the Bible is an expression of something that cannot be so easily scissored. Suppose the Bible should be clipped here and there, and the many things which the modern mind cannot understand should be eliminated, how much of it would remain? The laws and the very inherent principles of being and existence would be operative just the same; and the artificial Bible would be worse than useless!

The principal of a Milwaukee school, infatuated with the idea of democracy in all the affairs of human relations, introduced a system of self-government in his school, electing pupils as officers and police. The scheme resulted in oppression and juvenile chaos; and the principal was directed to return to the usual imperialism. Democracy in the nation is on a par with democracy in the schoolroom, so far as justice and order are concerned. If the universe should adopt the principles of democracy for a few days, it would be reduced to absolute chaos. At present, the universe is governed in accordance with the principles of solar imperialism, and we are certain that it has always been so.

Pappadakis, a Greek philosopher and patriot, is over from his native country, endeavoring to convince the professors of Yale college that the old Ptolemaic astronomy, and not the Copernican, is true. Although he has deposited $500 in the bank subject to the claim of the man who proves that the earth moves, no one has ventured to accept his offer; not that his money is not worth as much as any one's else, but an obvious impossibility stands between the astronomer and the money! It is equivalent to offering $500 to the man who will jump to the moon. The same difficulty would be met by the noble Greek if he were to undertake to prove that the earth is convex, for the purpose of obtaining our reward of $100,000!

Every form in the universe, in the order of perpetuity of natural things, is constructed according to the laws of order, the natural laws of universal construction. A perfectly natural order of human government and society must be constructed in accordance with the same laws, with analogous form and function. Every government in the world today is unscientific, because not founded upon the principles of order and natural relation.

The process of civilizing the natives of the Philippines involves many factors, and it may require a few years' application before the effects are fully manifest. From the hands of America, the most advanced Christian nation in the world, the Filipinos receive war and whiskey, bombs and Bibles, missionaries and money, open door and oppression, salvation and slavery!

The Czar believes he has found the egg from which the white dove of universal peace is to be hatched; and the disarmament congress has been called to "set" upon the precious oval at The Hague, and await the results. Of course it is an egg all right, and it will hatch; but when the product is manifest to the world, it will be the stupendous vulture of the money power!

Every idea originating outside of the sphere of divine activity is fallacious. The modern church reaches the conclusion that the agnostic scientist can solve the problems of nature and discover the truths of creation, as well as the Christian. Koreshanity denies that truth is entertained by either the agnostic or the modern churchman.

The agnostic cannot believe the Bible, but he can readily accept the vagaries of modern science, believe everything he sees in the daily press, and everything he hears in neighborhood gossip, and eagerly seeks the outflow of gall and prejudice of the enemies of Koreshanity.

Physicians lead their patients along numerous by-paths from the cradle to the grave: Allopaths, Homœopaths, hydro-paths, electropaths, astropaths, osteopaths, phrenopaths, massopaths, mentopaths, psychopaths, and hypnopaths; and theresults are path-etic!

Truth must reach its antithet through its own vitiation, in the field in which it began operations. The positive pole of truth was located in the primitive Christian church; but the modern church contains the pole of fallacy.

A modern theorist finds a wheel of some anthropostic clock of past dispensations, and mounts it for his friends. It runs nicely under manipulation; but we might ask, of what use is it? Can you keep the time of the ages with it?

Searching for the Almighty in the vast fields of infinite space of modern astronomy, is looking a long way from the home of Divinity. God is at the center of universal impulse, in progressive humanity.

Two great systems of astronomy are promulgated in the world—the Copernican and the Koreshan; the former is great because it has an immense following, but the latter is the greater because it is true.

Koreshanity has the monopoly of truth; it is the scientific trust, the divine corporation chartered under the laws of the universe.

Conscious, Individual Immortality.

EDITOR SWORD:—I am patiently and laboriously studying the Koreshan Doctrines as expounded in THE FLAMING SWORD; but the subject is so stupendous, so utterly overturning all old ideas, that it takes me a long time to fully grasp it. How any one desiring the truth can so hastily denounce your ideas, as the majority do, is beyond my comprehension.

You have been very patient and generous in answering my numerous questions; and although I do not fully comprehend all your answers, I intend to keep studying until I do. As long as you keep inviting the inquirer to ask more questions, I will keep on asking you to solve my difficulties. Of course, if it is a truth that I cannot have an individual, conscious immortality, I have to accept it whether I want to or not; and I cannot see any other logical conclusion from your teaching.

If there are two or many spirit entities inhabiting my brain, I do not know it. If man has existed in this earth from all eternity, and we find no conscious, tangible individualities who have consciously lived more than 150 years, it would logically follow, I should think, that no individual, conscious immortality would obtain in the future eternity.

I wonder if you get my meaning, and if you can answer me in language that I can comprehend? Of course, I understand that it is not your fault if I cannot comprehend your explanation, any more than it is the fault of a little child if it cannot understand a clear explanation of a problem in Euclid. Yours for more light,—D. EDSON SMITH, Cal.

The kindly, truthseeking spirit manifest in the above letter is indeed highly commendable. A sincere disposition to know the truth is shown; and if our correspondent continues in this desire, with its accompanying persistency in the study of the problem of life from the Koreshan standpoint, he will, in time, reach a comprehension of it; it lies in the path of his destiny. We think we get the meaning of the questions asked, and will endeavor to answer in language and by means of illustrations that can be readily understood.

We think we see where our correspondent misconceives the Koreshan Science of immortality; he concludes that we teach that man can have no individual, conscious immortality. On the contrary, Koreshanity teaches not only that such a state of existence as conscious, individual immortality, is possible but also the divine consciousness in the man attaining to immortality. It is true that, while in the present mortal and dying condition, such consciousness cannot be attained; and that there are now no tangible individuals possessing a memory of past embodiments; but it does not logically follow that a memory of all past embodiments will not obtain in the future.

The corpuscles of a growing plant are mere segments of the seed. Their consciousness is confined to their limited experience since formation; they are not conscious of having passed through death, and have no memory of past existence; but the life they contain was in the seed, and was conscious on a higher plane than when segmented in the cycle of evolution between the sowing of the seed and its harvest or reproduction. When the seed has reproduced itself, when it has gathered and infolded all of the entities into itself again, every corpuscle regains the consciousness it had in the past seed, as well as of all intermediate experiences in segmentation; for the seed is the summing up of all of the experiences of all the corpuscles it has infolded. The corpuscles are resurrected in the seed, and enter the state of biunity or immortality. Every seed is immortal, whole, complete, and perfect, with inherent functions of self-reproduction.

The mortal man is a mere segment of the perfect life; his consciousness is a mere fragment of the integral mind. The mortal man has no individual existence; he is vidual,—divided, and will continue to be as long as he propagates his life on the mortal plane. The line of divine progression in humanity through a dispensation, is the Tree of Life. Jesus was the immortal seed sown. In the transmutation of Jesus, his life was resolved into ascending and descending degrees; the spirit entities which belonged to the descending degree, and which were in unity in the mind of the perfect Seed Man, were disseminated and took up their abode in thousands of viduals, and multiplied and divided more and more as the race has multiplied. In the various states of segmentation, embodiments, or quasi-incarnations, the entities do not retain consciousness in the external mind, of past embodiments, and therefore cannot regain consciousness of the past until the final aggregation in the immortal 144,000 sons of God, who will appear in the world as the coming of the saints, clothed with the divine nature, at the beginning of the new dispensation.

Every ego and every entity reaching the perfect, divine temples will possess the perfect, individual, immortal consciousness, the memory of all past embodiments, the consciousness of all past incarnations or resurrections. Millions of entities of the Jewish dispensation were resurrected in Jesus, and reached the highest elements of the ascending degree of divine life. Millions of minds which have progressed during the Christian dispensation in the line of divine activity, resulting from the sowing nineteen hundred years ago, will put on the divine nature and enter the Godhood, the temples of the resurrection, the immortal state. In the final absorption into Nirvana, in ascension into the most interior realm of human consciousness, every entity retains its individuality, putting on the consciousness of the Almighty in the sphere in which it is emplaced. This absorption is into the plane of eternal life, higher than immortality, whence there is no descent nor break in the continuity of being; for them there is no more death, for they are absorbed into eternal Being! There is no such thing as continuous immortal forms, living from age to age; every immortal form is a seed, created for purposes of reproduction of its kind of life, and for the salvation of entities in the next lower kingdom; the seed appears and disappears; its lower life dies, its higher life is continuous,—it possesses interior consciousness and persistency of being which never end. This is true of the vegetable kingdom; it is true of the divine.

Every man is conscious of having an external consciousness. The mind of man is made up of spiritual entities; every thought is an entity, susceptible of transmission and metamorphosis, and capable of making impressions, and of materialization in the corpuscles of the body. The mind is like a world, like a kingdom. It has its central governing ego, and subcenters which preside over the functions of the body. The brain is inhabited by living entities; without them there could be no thought; they preside over man's senses, and make up his character and form his destiny. The mortal man is an aggregation of entities in organic form; in each embodiment he possesses different entities, but retains his central ego; as the ego progresses, it attracts higher qualities of thought, the man becomes more refined, until at the close of definite cycles he is ready to merge into a higher plane, the plane of conscious, individual immortality, instead of conscious, vidual mortality.

Every man possesses life, which has passed down through ages from ancestor to ancestor; every man is a re embodiment of human entities. The stream of human life does not cease; its currents flow to the interior, thence to the exterior—from the natural to the spiritual, and from the spiritual to the natural, throughout mortal existence, through series of dissolutions or disasters. The continuity of relations is broken, and the memory destroyed and not regained until the ego enters the fulness of life.

Atmospheric Refraction and Magnification.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have long intended to write you regarding a phenomenon often witnessed in southern Texas. The people here call it mirage, but it does not conform to the description of mirages as recorded in the books that I have seen. From where I live, looking north, ordinarily the horizon is not over three miles away; but several times this winter I have been able, on clear, frosty mornings, to see miles farther. It is said that the railroad is 20 miles from here, and I have seen several miles beyond the railroad, as proved by the smoke from a running train some distance this side of the horizon, as seen on such occasions, which would show that I could see 25 or 30 miles, instead of three or four, as ordinarily.

The country on these occasions seemed to rise up as a hill from the ordinary horizon line, sometimes showing objects not distorted in the raised territory; at other times making objects, such as trees and houses, appear much taller than they should. On one occasion, when the objects brought into view were especially distinct and nearer in appearance,—houses that ordinarily appear closer than they are, seemed suddenly to have moved farther away.

I have often wondered, when looking at this phenomenon, whether the country north of here could be seen in ordinarily fair weather through a telescope. Can you tell me the true name of the phenomenon I have tried to describe? I should be glad to have an explanation of the cause of it. I should also like to have readers of THE SWORD, who have the use of good telescopes and who live where the kind of phenomenon I speak of occurs, try whether a good glass will bring the distant country into view above the ordinary horizon, in usual as well as in unusual states of the atmosphere, and report to THE FLAMING SWORD.

I have had atmospheric refraction suggested many times, to meet the Koreshan statement that after a ship has passed out of sight it can be brought back by a telescope. Please define atmospheric refraction, and whether it can cause objects behind a hill to be visible above the hill in their natural form and proportions. I believe in the concavity of the earth's surface, but am not able to answer all the questions that others as ignorant as myself may ask; I do not have to. They must disprove the correctness of the Florida survey by some other means than ignorant questions.—J. L. TRAUGHBER, Texas.

The phenomenon referred to above cannot be used as an argument against the Koreshan premise of the earth's concavity, as demonstrated by experiments in restoring vessels to view with the telescope, which have disappeared beyond the horizon. Let it be noticed that the appearances recorded by our correspondent were seen with the naked eye, and not with the telescope; under the circumstances, had a telescope been used the objects would have appeared larger, and the horizon would have been still farther extended. The experiments of the Koreshan Geodetic Staff consisted in contrasting appearances of vessels to the naked eye and in the telescope. If refraction obtained when the telescope was applied, it would also obtain a minute before or after, to render the vessel visible to the naked eye. The kind of refraction that works intermittently to suit the telescope, stopping immediately upon use of the naked eye, is the mere refraction and distortion of mental rays in evading the subject! It is a mere subterfuge!

The phenomenon referred to is named in the heading of these paragraphs,—atmospheric refraction and magnification. It does not belong to the mirage, though it is related to the mirage in just this way: In a mirage the images of distant objects are reflected from the under surface of a heated stratum of atmosphere and are inverted; in such a phenomenon as the above, the distant objects are magnified by looking through the stratum and are seen right side up; the stratum causes an effect like that seen through a lens placed somewhat obliquely, throwing the images somewhat out of position, magnifying them a little, and extending the horizon. The visual substance tends to follow the curve of the stratum, and is consequently projected farther out on the concave surface; hence the extended view and the raised appearance of objects rendered visible by these abnormal conditions. This accounts for the magnified appearance of some objects, and the sudden diminution of others in different parts of the field of the lens-like refraction.

At the same time, if the eye were brought a few feet below the stratum, the appearance would have been a mirage with inverted images; and with the eye at different altitudes in the stratum, different appearances would be presented to the eye,—as distorted views and elongated objects. Objects on the prairie, which are ordinarily out of view because of the rolling surface or slight bulge of earth in the distance, are sometimes brought into view by the kind of refraction we refer to; but in such cases they are visible to the naked eye and not in the telescope alone. We are familiar with all the phenomena observable on land and water resulting from the various atmospheric conditions. Special observations were made daily at the Koreshan Geodetic Operating Station in southern Florida, with the view to arriving at the facts of these various phenomena and the conditions under which they may be seen.

Area of Daylight and the Poles.

EDITOR SWORD:—The sun shines on some portion of the earth all the time; when it is night with us, it is day somewhere else. In the Arctic regions, during the long night, it is never totally dark; the light is said to be similar to our twilight, so that the people in high latitudes can attend to their outdoor avocations somewhat as the New Englanders do their "nightly chores," as Whittier said in "Snow Bound." To the inhabitants of the earth, the horizon looks to be the boundary or edge of our globe. Thus, is it not easier to consider the sun to be on the outside, rather than on the inside of the earth?

You have to exercise a great deal of patience with beginners and investigators, for we were early taught that "The earth is round, and like a ball seems swinging in the air." Our teachers showed us on the orrery how the earth, with the other planets, revolved about the sun; also that the size and distances can be estimated with mathematical precision, so we may know the size of the sun and its distance from the earth. Of course, according to their view, it is impossible to get the sun and stars inside the earth; that settles the question with the "knowing" ones!—Mrs. S., Cal.

When the Copernican system was introduced to the world, the people considered that it was easier to account for the phenomena of the heavens on the basis of the system with which they were familiar. The acceptance of a new system involves the work of reconstruction of mental conceptions, and until the mind learns how to apply the principles and place the conclusions in order, it will seem easier to account for the existence of things in the old way. It is easier for the common people to account for the universe by saying that "the Lord did it," than to apply the mind to a comprehension of the laws of creation, involving theology, cosmogony, biology, geology, anthropology, correspondence, etc.

In the Cellular Cosmos, the sun's rays descend according to the laws of circumradiation and illumine a concave hemisphere. When the sun is on the equator, the area of daylight reaches from pole to pole; but when it is $23\frac{1}{2}^\circ$ south of the equator, the area lacks $23\frac{1}{2}^\circ$ of reaching the north pole; and at such time, in the Arctic regions, it is practically twilight for several months. The breadth of twilight increases from the equator to the poles; in our latitude the breadth of twilight is about 18° , or a little over one hour's time, equal to over 1,000 miles of the earth's surface, between sunset and darkness.

When the mind becomes familiar with the principles of Koreshan Astronomy, the subject becomes clearer, and the usual phenomena are the more readily accounted for, and the more easily explained to the student. The horizon is the vanishing point of lateral vision; it is the point where the space between the eye and the earth's surface is vanished by perspective, on the same principle that space is apparently annihilated, in the distance, between the metallic lines of a railway track.

We are patient with investigators and students of Koreshanity; this department is specially devoted to answering questions and removing difficulties encountered in the study of the System. We always take pleasure in answering as fully as space permits, all questions, suggestions, or criticisms of our correspondents.

Wireless Telegraphy and the Earth's Curvature.

EDITOR SWORD:—Permit me in all earnestness, to ask you a question; and will you kindly answer the same in your paper? Why is it that Signor Marconi, in his successful wireless telegraphy, has found it absolutely necessary to use high vertical poles? He has found that the distance to which messages may be flashed varies according to the square of the length of this vertical conductor. If the earth is concave, why any need of these high vertical poles? Now, honestly, does this not prove that your view is not correct?—J. STADE, Chicago.

In all that we have seen published regarding the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy, we have observed nothing that is in conflict with the already demonstrated fact of the earth's concavity. If the work of Marconi were a demonstration that the earth is convex, the astronomer would be the first to recognize it as such and announce it to the world. We would suggest here that it will not be referred to in scientific circles as a proof in favor of the popular system, because it is not a proof.

Marconi has found it necessary to use as rare a medium for transmission of electric forces as it is possible to obtain; the atmosphere near the earth being too dense for long distances. The distance to which Marconi's messages can be sent, sustains a certain relation to the altitude of the transmitter and receiver; the altitude is required because of the decrease of density, and it does not sustain any relation to the curvature of the earth. It stands related to the decrease of resistance, which is according to the square of the altitude of the transmitter. He has found that if a stratum of atmosphere will transmit a message a certain distance, that a lighter and higher stratum, charged with a greater amount of positive atmospheric electricity, will transmit a message to a greater distance. The electric energies follow the atmospheric stratum; it is the path of least resistance; and the energies will reach the receiver in the same plane, or at the same altitude, providing it is constructed to respond with a corresponding rapidity of vibrations; no matter whether the atmospheric stratum is related to a convex, flat, or concave earth, the results would be the same; the currents would curve with the curve of the earth,—the curve of the atmospheric plane or stratum in which they were transmitted.

If the altitude of the transmitter and receiver, and the distance to which the messages may be sent, were related to the ratio of convex curvature, it is obvious that the poles would have to be lengthened in proportion to the square of the distance in miles, multiplied by 8 inches. Marconi proposes to send messages across the Atlantic Ocean from an altitude of 1,000 feet. If the question of the curvature of the earth were taken into consideration in his operations, his vertical poles at London and New York, in order to place the transmitter and receiver on a line which would escape the bulge of the Atlantic, would each have to be 300 miles in length! Unless, in sending messages across the Atlantic, he finds it necessary to place his points at this altitude, it will not even be a suggestion that the earth is convex.

The Baptist Flag Expresses Admiration For the Aggressive Spirit of the Flaming Sword.

We are making an open fight for the truth. We do not hesitate to publicly say that we are authorized to publish to the world the Science of immortal life. If we had not force enough to arouse the enmity and even the aggressive opposition of the world of error, we would be compelled to relinquish the fight and retire from public notice.—FLAMING SWORD.

While we have no confidence at all in the peculiar vagaries of Koreshanity, of which faith the FLAMING SWORD is the special representative, we do have admiration for the spirit expressed in the above. No man ever yet succeeded in maintaining truth without exciting antagonism, no difference as to the point from which he may approach truth. If any advocate of the truth proposes to become nervous and faint-hearted because some opposition arises against him, he had as well retire from the field. The truth needs men, fearless men, men who will dare to have an opinion, and who will contend for truth at all hazards. Those who pander and fawn at the feet of gaping crowds, with all possible apologies for their faith, are unfit for the kingdom of God. Give us clean, brave men.—Baptist Flag.

The Flaming Sword the Leader of the Few Who have the Honest Boldness to Unflinchingly Condemn Apostate Religion!

The Pope of Rome claims to be Christ's vicar on earth, and to have committed to him the keys of St. Peter; but while the Protestant nations and peoples silently laugh at the assumption, they publicly bow to his papal majesty, honor the dignity and authority of his claims, tremble at his power, and kiss his toe.—FLAMING SWORD.

There is entirely too much truth in that statement, especially with regard to the politicians of the country. There is a painful pandering to the whims of Catholicism in order to secure political support from that quarter. Everybody knows that Catholics are in conscience bound to be enemies to our free institutions, because our free institutions are enemies to their religion. Yet comparatively few will have the honest boldness to speak in unflinching condemnation of this apostate religion. The Flag has no sort of respect for the blasphemous claims of this man of sin and son of perdition, who is worshipped as a "vicar of Christ" by those who are guilty of idolatry.—Baptist Flag.

Chat With Readers.

The Cellular Cosmogony in Cuba.

The success attending the publication and the sale of our 200-page illustrated work on the hollow globe, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, is surprising to both our friends and enemies. We have printed three editions of this work since September, 1898, and the third edition, from which we are now filling orders, is meeting with a ready sale. Orders are coming in from individuals who have had their attention called to it by means of circulars, friends, or notices in papers; our friends are talking the subject up with their acquaintances, and we are placing them with booksellers and news-agents. Our traveling representative, Rev. U. Gordon Mitchell, resumes his work in the state of New York, after several weeks' cessation from canvassing, during the coldest period of the winter.

We were pleasantly surprised this week to receive an order for 320 copies of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY from Havana, Cuba, where one year ago the Spanish colors did not guarantee safety to Americans. Our energetic representative there purposes canvassing the city of Havana, and advertising THE FLAMING SWORD and Koreshan literature in Cuba.

If the same energy that will be necessary to make a success of canvassing for our publications in Cuban cities where the Spanish language prevails, were applied by our friends in American and English cities and towns, we would reap a harvest of marvelous success! We desire it, and you want to see it; we work day and night to that end constantly, under the conviction that our people, our friends, and subscribers possess the tact, the ability, and the opportunity to push our work to rapid recognition in the world; and it will be attained if their noble enthusiasm and courage will arouse to accomplish deeds of daring in the propaganda of Truth!

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.

We are receiving the popular and well-known Leslie's Weekly, a superb 16-page illustrated journal, with double-page supplementary illustrations. It is one of the best and finest popular weeklies published, now in its 88th volume, 44th year. It reviews the great events of the times, the people talked about, and discusses popular questions and issues. The April 6 issue is the Easter number, and contains illustrations of the Filipino war, funerals in Cuba, the wreck of the Windsor hotel fire, and the Astor battery in Japan. The extra double-page illustration is "The Last Rehearsal" before Easter celebration. We are pleased to place this magnificent production before our readers; it is an excellent journal from which to gather information of great national affairs in the study of Universology and the various phases of human life. The subscription price is $4.00 per year; in a future issue we will announce clubbing rates. Address, LESLIE'S WEEKLY, 110 Fifth ave., New York, N. Y.

The Cosmopolitan.

The Cosmopolitan for April is a valuable number, containing the finest photographic reproductions. The paper by M. Verestchagin on Napoleon in Moscow is of rare merit and interest for all admirers of the character of Napoleon,—especially the Koreshan, who is able to trace the force of Napoleon in the Koreshan movement. Striking illustrations show Napoleon's first view of Moscow, his watching the burning of the city from the walls of the Kremlin, and his receiving bad news from France. Tolstoi's new novel, "The Awakening," begins in the April number. Keely's inventions and his mysterious force are discussed. John Brisben Walker's "Building of an Empire," an illustrated history of the development of Mohammedanism, is attracting much attention.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The leading article in the April number is Gen. Merritt's "Our Flag in the Philippines," a graphic description of the capture of the city of Manila, and of the life and character of the natives. Another notable feature is F. Marion Crawford's "Romance of Rome," eloquent in its descriptive characterization of the Eternal City, St. Peter's and the Vatican, and of Pope Leo XIII. The number also contains articles on the Filipino leaders, a description of the headquarters of Moravianism in America, views from a private car through Mexico, and other interesting matter.

The Chautauquan.

The Chautauquan for April contains an illustrated article on "Women at the English Universities," which will be of interest to womankind. An excellent article on the resurrection of Jesus appears, proving from the stupendous influence the divine character has exerted in the world that the personality existed, that he was the head of the primitive Christian church; and shows the integrity of the character of his followers from the courage and fortitude displayed by them in receiving persecution from their enemies; and that it is unthinkable that men from the common walks of life would endure such treatment for the sake of anything else than their firmest convictions. A denial of their testimony concerning the resurrection of Jesus cannot be explained from the standpoint of comprehension of human character. Get this number; it is full of interest.

Success.

Those of our readers who have obtained Success through us are pleased with the publication. It continues to be full of interest, full of sketches of men who have succeeded in their undertakings. The Easter number contains excellent illustrations of prominent Cubans, and of the "Training for Money Kings,"—the utilization of juvenile aptitude in the transactions of Wall street. $1.50 per year; both it and THE FLAMING SWORD, $2.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of relig on; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Swedenborg's Vision of the Concave Universe.

An English Clergyman's Questions Answered; the Only Universe in Existence; There Are no Other Cells on the Outside; Internal Expansion and Contraction.

WE ANSWER with pleasure, some of the points contained in the communication of the Rev. G. H. Lock, which appears in another department of THE SWORD. He says: "When the laminae are contracted, there must be outside room to allow of expansion."

1. The encephalic mass of the vidual brain constantly expands and contracts. This expansion is not toward the circumference, but rather toward the center and cavities of the brain. In the universal cell, contraction and expansion are correspondentially governed by a rigid environment, the very nothingness of its limitation.

2. "Is it not rather an extreme position to take, that this cosmic cell is all—that there is nothing outside of it?" It certainly is an extreme position, and that is precisely what the occasion and the truth demand.

Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, I am the Lord that maketh all things [the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God]; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone; that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself; that frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish; that confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, ye shall be built, and I will raise up the decayed places thereof; that saith to the deep, be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers: That saith of Cyrus, He is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, thy foundation shall be laid. Isaiah xlv: 24-28.

There are no other cosmic cells. There may seem to be, from a misapprehension of the specific law of correspondential analogy. The human brain and body are constituted of thousands of cells which lie contiguous to one another, and, from a superficial view of the analogical law, it might be inferred that the universe was comprised of an illimitable number of contiguous cosmogonic structures like the one we inhabit.

The cosmos we occupy is characterized by possessing within its circumference millions of stellar points, each one corresponding to a corpuscle or cell; and on the circumference of the cosmic structure, there are millions of human beings which correspond to the stellar nuclei. This is before the egg is incubated. When the great egg develops the kingdom of human righteousness, the new kingdom assumes the form of the man, after which the cells are aggregated into the form of the human, instead of occupying a position around on the circumference of the shell. The universal humanity—when perfected as the Grand Man, or the kingdom of righteousness—is the analogue of the alchemico-organic world (physical universe), but is no longer in the shape of the egg or cell, but takes the incubated form.

3. "Christ is the express image of the divine substance, as the sun is the focalized expression of the stellar nucleus; but although the Father is involved in Christ, the term conveys a larger idea than can be limited to any one form or manifestation." This is the great mistake made by all of the so called wise men of the world. We concede that the power of any great man extends far beyond what appears to be his personal individuality; but we will not concede that his power is not projected directly from that personality. We may take the central stellar nucleus as an example; it is a point from which radiate all the energies of the cosmos. There is nothing above or more central. It is the cause point of activity, the nucleus of all. Upon its individuality depend all the activities of the sun, moon, planets, stars, and earth. Back of it, or supporting it, are the stars, planets, sun, moon, and earth. Their energies all flow into it, precisely as the energies of all minds—directed from the whole human family—flowed into the Son of God as the stellar center and glory of human mentality. He was the Father by virtue of the fact that he could plant the seeds of regeneration from himself, into that humanity receptive of the Holy Spirit, the seminal essence of Deity, he being the source of that regenerative (reproductive) essence. He is the Father from no other cause than that, being the "promised seed," he could plant himself in the race, and thus regenerate (reproduce) the sons of God.

4. "The Father is that which is behind all cyclic avatars, and is, so to speak, a more universal principle which unifies the avatars." If I plant a seed, it dissolves, loses its identity as a germ, and its life passes into the blade; but the identical spirit which was in the seed planted, reappears in the product at the top of the stalk. The father comes in the offspring, for the seed produced becomes, in turn, the progenitor of the succeeding germ.

Our reverend friend cannot see the necessity for reincarnation, and says the Bible does not help him any. The Bible unmistakably teaches the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." It matters not what may be found in the spiritual "sense" of the Word. "The Word is in its fullness, in its holiness, and in its power in its literal sense." Take this for granted. No interpretation of the spiritual "sense" of the Scriptures can agree, except by correspondence, with its literal "sense." According to the literal "sense" of the Word, there will be a resurrection of the dead, not of some other dead, but of the same dead; hence the people, including the Lord, who lived nineteen hundred years ago will stand in the flesh at the end of the age. The doctrine of the resurrection, taught by the Lord and his disciples at the beginning of the dispensation, will reach its fulfilment in the regeneration of the sons of God in humanity, and the production of the firstfruits of the resurrection. This will be the resurrection, the reincarnation. Its purpose is to perfect what cannot be perfected without the progressive experiences of the material contacts of existence.

5. "If Swedenborg makes anything clear, it is that the perfecting of man can be and is carried on in the spiritual world, in which case reincarnation becomes unnecessary." When it is understood that the spiritual world is nowhere but in man, then it will be seen that the progressive states of the spirit keep pace with the progressive states of the form in the flesh, which must environ the spirit.

6. There is a constant irregularity about the progress of the planets through the heavens; that is, an apparent irregularity associated with a regularity. The biological planetary appearances correspond. We would recommend the pamphlet on the "Mission of Swedenborg," to our correspondent. It embodies a better presentation of the mission of the great Seer than can be found in any publication of the so called Swedenborgian church.

7. "There are some points in the System which at present seem arbitrary. (a) That the external metallic shell is gold. If this is a result of the law of correspondence, one can understand it. If the law is, that the heaviest substance gravitates to the ultimate, why should not, say platinum, constitute the external of the firmament?" Outside of the gold stratum there are bands of other metallic substances. They are not in the form of the cell or shell, but are narrow ribbons or tires. These with the metallic strata are arranged according to the laws of correspondence; but this fact does not militate against the associate fact, that there are certain gravic and levic principles in operation, which determine their emplacement.

8. (b) "That the next atmosphere is of pure hydrogen." Nothing can produce water but the union of hydrogen and oxygen. There is no free hydrogen in our atmosphere. The atmosphere is composed of oxygen and nitrogen, but not enough moisture to produce the rainfall to which it is constantly subject. The higher the altitude the less moisture. The clouds from which proceeds the rain, must be either the result of hydrogen mixed with oxygen, or the result of energies that meet where the cloud is formed, which embrace hydrogen and oxygen in ethereal solution. It cannot be the former, for the very composition of the atmosphere at the altitude where the cloud is formed precludes it. What then? There must be hydrogen somewhere in combustion, which produces hydrogen energy that enters into the composition of the cloud. The fact that hydrogen when confined in a balloon immediately ascends, indicates the hydrogen condition above our atmosphere. According to the law of correspondence, there must be three atmospheres between the envining shell of the cosmos and its nucleus. This Swedenborg observed and described in his "True Christian Religion," paragraph 76.

"Then, also, there was fixed in our minds [this is the language of the inhabitants of the spiritual world] another idea, which was, that all things were created by God out of nothing; and yet we now perceive, that nothing is made out of nothing; and our minds have not yet been able to extricate themselves from these two ideas, and to see creation in any light, how it was effected; wherefore, we have called you out from the place where you were, that you may disclose your meditation concerning this subject."

On hearing these words I replied, "I will do so." And I said, "I meditated on this subject for a long time, but to no purpose; but afterwards, when I was admitted by the Lord into your world [the world of spirits], I perceived that it would be vain to conclude anything concerning the creation of the universe, unless it be first known that there are two worlds, one in which angels are, and another in which men are; and that men at death pass out of their world into the other; then also I saw that there were two suns, one from which all spiritual things proceed, and the other from which all natural things proceed; and that the sun, from which all spiritual things proceed, is pure love from Jehovah God, who is in the midst of it; and that the sun, from which all natural things proceed, is pure fire. Knowing these things, on a certain time, when I was in illustration, I was enabled to perceive that the universe was created by Jehovah God, by means of the sun in the midst of which he is; and because love cannot exist except together with wisdom, that the universe was created by Jehovah God, from his love by his wisdom. That it is so, is evinced by all and everything that I have seen in the world where you are, and that I have seen in the world where I am, as to the body.

"But to explain how the progress of creation was made, from its beginning, would be too prolix; but, when I was in illustration [he was not always in illustration], I perceived that by means of the light and heat [wisdom and love] from the sun of your world, spiritual atmospheres, which in themselves are substantial, were created one from another; and because there were three, and thence three degrees of them, three heavens were made; one for the angels who are in the highest degree of love and wisdom, another for the angels who are in the second degree, and a third for the angels who are in the lowest degree; but because this spiritual universe cannot exist without a natural universe, in which it may produce its effects and uses, that then the sun, from which all natural things proceed, was created at the same time, and by this, in like manner, by means of light and heat, three atmospheres, encompassing the former, as the shell does the kernel, or the bark of the tree the wood; and at last, by means of these, the terraqueous globe, where are men, beasts, and fishes, also trees, shrubs, and herbs, was formed of different kinds of earths, which consist of loam, stones, and minerals."

In the above, Swedenborg has described—while in a state of illustration—the inside theory, defining the three atmospheres of the natural cosmos, as corresponding to the three degrees of the spiritual world.

9. (c) "That there is an inner, as well as an outer, focalization of the stellar nucleus—two suns, in fact." Swedenborg also describes three spiritual centers or nuclei,—a sun of the celestial center, the inner, in the midst of which is the Lord, the spiritual sun, in the midst of the middle degree, which is pure fire; namely, love and wisdom. If the spiritual world has an inner and an outer sun, why should not the natural or physical cosmos possess two suns also, in correspondence? We wish to say, however, that our discovery of a sun for every material atmosphere—of which there are three surrounding the central sun—was not made upon the basis of anything Swedenborg has written, for we never knew of Swedenborg until long after our discovery was made. The laws of refraction and reflection, as applied to the radiations of energy, determined this fact for us.

10. (d) "That the moon and planets have their origin in mercurial discs between the laminae. If their origin is practically the same, why should their correspondent effects be so entirely different, as they are known to be?" Our friend's doubt, as expressed in the foregoing, arises from a misapprehension entirely of our proposition. The laminae are seven layers of the seven distinct metallic substances. A mercurial amalgam disc floating between gold and silver, is quite different from a disc floating between two other metallic substances; and these discs vary according to the character of the amalgams. The moon is the product of the reflection from the under side of the five mineral layers, or a disc between the metallic and the mineral strata.

11. "The intelligence refuses to receive such matters on authority; and as yet, no body of reason has been supplied to substantiate the statements. One yearns for further light." Yet the reverend gentleman accepts Swedenborg on authority, and he certainly accepts the Copernican theory on authority, while at the same time the author of the system declared it to be an assumption in which he himself did not believe; and we further venture to state that our correspondent derives nine tenths of all he professes to know, on mere authority, without an application of his reasoning faculties, precisely as do the majority of men.

The Great World-Power of the Twentieth Century.

Significance of Present Tendency to American Imperialism; Destiny of America in the Establishment of the Divine Kingdom to Rule the World in Peace.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

THE WORLD is about to enter a new era of experience, an age which transcends the conceptions of the modern mind. Humanity knocks at the door of the twentieth century; standing at its threshold we anticipate what lies beyond the veil that separates centuries and cycles. Destiny hinges on the golden gates of the new age; when the great doors swing ajar, the scenes will revive the hopes and cheer the hearts of millions! To the modern mind the world is an enigma; the very approach of the new era brings both fear and joy; for it brings its condemnations and its blessings. The scroll of the old dispensation is rolling together, involving the fruits of progress; the departing age leaves the key which unlocks the treasures of life and destiny.

The attention of the world has turned anew to the western continent; America is assuming unexpected proportions in the scale of world-powers, having expanded to cover one half of the circumference of the globe. Today it contains the manhood of the world, the vigor of humanity's maturity, the strength of the new man, the new age, the new world! In the colonization of America, the nations of Europe were sifted for the strong and the courageous for the pioneer work of transforming an entire continent; during a period of four hundred years, the stream of emigration from the East has flowed to the West, until every nation in the earth has contributed material for the construction of the new world-power.

Nothing in the history of the world has ever equaled this great movement. It has been a stupendous work; it is of stupendous import, involving the greatest possibilities that can be conceived by the human mind. Of all the nations of the world, the United States now possesses the greatest wealth, the greatest facilities, and the greatest resources. It represents ages of progress; it is the summing up of the world's aspirations. It is the field of the greatest activity, and its people are charged with the greatest responsibilities, and will achieve the greatest victories for human liberty in the attainment of the ideal system of righteousness. Already the United States is a world-power; it assumes responsibility for a score of nations on the American continent and adjacent islands.

But this is not the climax of American glory; taking advantage of the marvelous activities and possibilities of the western world, perverted commercial wisdom has created gigantic octopi which have fastened themselves upon the institutions of the new world. The nation as it is, is not a realization of human liberty; its people are now under the curse, the results of which have so thoroughly saturated the human heart and have so persistently clung to humanity, that the successful attempt to remove it must involve the extermination of the very root of all evil, the liberation of the human mind, and the purification of the fountain of life. Corruption prevails in the chaos of elements which have flowed promiscuously from all nations into the Columbian laboratory, in preparation for the great battle of Gog and Magog. The promiscuous ingredients, coarse and crude, are being placed in the great crucible of revolution; already the vulcan fires of humanity are smoldering. The final warring of elements is at hand; and from out the vortex of transmutation will arise the new world, the new humanity of the Golden Age!

The transformation will involve more than a change in economic affairs,—more than America, as a world-power, as now conceived to be the climax of national supremacy; it will involve all that nations have desired, all that prophets have foretold, all that Jesus declared would be ultimately realized as the result of his mission to save the world. The forces of heaven and earth have conspired to produce and select the material for the new humanity, and for the discovery and development of the continent destined to contain the Paradise of the new age. Ages have yielded the fruits of progress and focalized them in a new field for expression in new forms of life and government. The great life of Deity is unalterably bound up with that of America; and the climax of his power must be reached on American soil, in American hearts!

The kingdom that Jesus taught his disciples to desire, is about to come; the kingdom that is to fill the whole earth, is at hand! America is about to be transformed into a stupendous system of imperialism: already it shows on the dial of destiny. The world will rejoice at the coming of that life and light for which Christians have waited for nearly two thousand years! The Almighty is overshadowing the world with the wings of Scientific Truth, to achieve the great victory over death, and the consequent natural resurrection and attainment of immortality in the tangible world. The great civilization of the Golden Age, the millennium of human hope, is dawning upon humanity through the marvelous truth proclaimed to the world by Koreshanity! The desire of all nations stands just beyond the veil of revolution. A new race or genus of men—the offspring of Deity—is about to be manifest in the natural humanity.

The throne of Deity is being founded in America; his government is a Theocracy, the unity of church and state, and will constitute the great Pan-American Empire, expanding more and more, until it reaches from pole to pole. The great world-power is at hand, the kingdom of righteousness, the Divine Imperialism. Humanity needs it, Koreshanity proclaims it; and the application of its Science will bring freedom and redemption in the restoration of humanity to its perfection, glory, life, and power. It will be the true world-power, the power of universal peace, the restoration of the dominion of the divine humanity over all peoples in the conduct of all human affairs; over the hells and the spiritual world, and over the forces of the great structured cell in which we live. The great world-power, the power of the universe, the power that creates and perpetuates universe and man, is coming to guide the world; its coming is inevitable, its truth invincible, and its force irresistible!

The world is upon the verge of a tremendous revolution. Empires and kingdoms will be dissipated as the chaff of the summer threshing floors, and the old dissolute church will go up in smoke,—the smoke of the torment of prostitution and wrath. Empires, kingdoms, and democracies will dissolve in the great conflagration, but from their debris will arise the glorious Theocracy.

The law of unitary and indissoluble conjunction through which the Son of God enters into the unity of the nucleus and center of consciousness, is the White Stone "which no man knoweth saving him that receiveth it." This law applies also to as many as are given power—through obedience to law—to become the sons of God—the firstfruits of the Tree of Life.

The World's Sacrifice to the Money Gods.

A Gigantic System of Slavery of Mankind; Ingenuity, Modern Science, Church, University, Society, and Government Forced to Perpetuate the Power of the Gods of Gold.

PROF. T. G. MORROW.

THE WHEELS of industry are turning more rapidly today than ever before in all the history of the world; both machine and man are active to an extent that was never dreamed of in past centuries. The world contains one great system of industry, involving the production of the necessities, comforts, and luxuries of human life, engaging the energy, muscle, and skill of millions and millions of human beings. The entire civilized world is the field of marvelous activity in hundreds and hundreds of lines of business and employment; on the hills and in the valleys; in the villages and in the cities; on the oceans and in the mines, millions labor year after year; and the results are all that contribute to the use and the abuse, the happiness and the misery, the hope and the disappointment, the luxury and the poverty of the human family!

In contrast with the vast amount of wealth produced yearly, is the poverty of the masses that produce it. The situation is anomalous in the extreme; the streams of industry all flow from the circumference of production to centers of accumulation of wealth,—and they do not return. The world has learned how to produce, but not to equitably distribute, the goods of life. Wealth represents human energy; it is human energy transformed into the goods of commerce. Wealth represents power; and the power of man over the modern world is proportioned to the value of his holdings. The millionaire possesses the supreme power in the external affairs of humanity; he stands at the head of a gigantic system which controls all of the products of human labor; and the spirit of his purpose, his supreme incentive, pervades the entire system. He is the natural and logical result, the inevitable reflex and focus of the immense volume of human selfishness; he is the product of human momentum, the incarnation of perverted commercial wisdom, the money god, therefore he attracts and controls the product of human activity.

Selfishness is the supreme motive of the modern world; to obtain that which will gratify self is the supreme incentive; the "love of money is the root of all evil." When we locate the principles of selfishness in the masses, and its central expression in the few who control the world, we describe the limitations of a gigantic system which involves every factor of modern civilization. It is our purpose to show what these factors are, and how they all contribute to the wealth of the gods of money, in the corporations, syndicates, and trusts of the nineteenth century!

The multicolored garment of the modern world is woven from the threads and lines of human relations. All of the departments of human society are indisputably related to the whole, and specifically related to the industrial system of the world. There is no question but that the governments of the world sustain particular and intimate relations to the men who control the money of the world. Every nation has its bonded indebtedness. To whom are the nations indebted? To the individuals who have the money. The world of nations owes the few, the men who have stolen the wealth which the nations are compelled to borrow! Real estate that secures a debt is mortgaged; bonds on the resources of the nations cover every square mile of territory and every dollar's worth of property in the civilized world! To begin with, the whole world is mortgaged, through its governments, to the power of money. The governments themselves are pledged to the use and control of the millionaires; legislative bodies make laws in their favor, and facilities for the more rapid accumulation of wealth are constantly being provided for by national, state, and municipal authorities. The governments are governed by this aggressive power behind the thrones!

The money power has monopolized every line of industry, and employs every factor of modern civilization to sustain the gigantic system which impoverishes the world. Inventive genius has rendered a greater service to the manufacturers and syndicates than any other one factor. The money power has seized upon every invention that has been put forth in the nineteenth century. It controls the thousands of printing presses; the great dailies and newspapers of the world exert a stupendous influence in behalf of the corporations and the institutions of the modern world. The steam-engine and the telegraph are companions in the great railway systems; the telephone and all electrical apparatus and appliances are being used extensively in the many lines of commerce. There is not an invention of modern times that has been introduced in any line of industry, that has not passed into exclusive control of the syndicates. Every invention has become a labor-saver, which saves to the millionaire the wages of human labor, and crowds out of employment thousands of laborers yearly. Millions are thus cursed by the ingenuity of their brothers, through the modern system of oppression!

Modern science yields its homage to the modern gods; astronomy guides the ships of a perverted commerce from port to port; and chemistry converts the human corpuscle into gold and fills the horns of plenty—of the bulls of the markets who have the horns! Every so called discovery of modern times is used to make smoother the roads to wealth, to increase the facilities for transporting products from the farm to the factory, and from the mine to the mint.

A prominent factor of modern civilization, under the influence of the men who control the world, is the great system of education. Thousands of great institutions are being built, furnished with the latest appliances and apparatus, for the education of the rising generation. What is the purpose of this education? It infuses into the mind the spirit of the times, and prepares it for activity in the lines and on the planes which will contribute to the wealth of the wealthy. The modern university is not antagonistic to the interests of the millionaire; its influence on his behalf is acknowledged when he endows it with his millions! A little deeper in the heart of the millionaire than the superficial showing of a false philanthropy, lies the real purpose of his contributions to the various modern institutions,—factors of civilization, factors of concentration of wealth.

The millionaire supports the modern church; moral institutions in the great system of perverted industry and society, are necessary. Elements of contentment, elements which sanctify the love of money, are sought for and maintained. The institution baptizing the world with the idea that the Almighty prospers the rich and despises the poor, that infuses into the mind the spirit of the philanthropy and charity which the crimes of the millionaire make necessary, the institution which will cover up the evils of the world with the cloak of religious hypocrisy, is the institution that is specially desirable, specially supported and remunerated! The priests of the church are the priests of the power which fills it! They are priests of the money gods!

The world renders homage and worship to strange gods! The mind cannot measure the vast volume of human energy expended to enrich the sanctuaries and the courts of the devil. It cannot estimate the extent of the great sacrifice of the modern world to the gods of gold. The forces of the physical world are made to contribute to their glory and power. The sun moves, day and night, and the seasons come and go,—the universe itself contributes to the existence of the powers of hell; it is compelled to yield the sceptre and crown of prosperity to the false authorities and perverted heads of humanity. The end of the reign of gold is at hand; a revolution is impending; the old world is being dissolved, and the new world,—the new age, is forming. The Koreshan System is unfolding its departments in the world, imbued with the love of humanity; to end the reign of competition which demands the sacrifice of the world to the money gods, and to introduce the Equitable Commerce of the Golden Age!

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE POPE of Rome, in a recent letter defining his attitude toward Americanism in the Catholic church, affirms the infallibility of Catholicism and his purpose to perpetuate its doctrines without change or modification, declaring that they are doctrines delivered and committed to the church at the beginning of the age and faithfully preserved in their purity. Dr. Lyman Abbott, in reviewing these declarations, takes issue with the pope; he admits the self-consistency of the Roman church in holding to an unchangeable dogma, but takes the ground that truth is adaptable and must be suited to the genius of the times. He holds that the kingdom of God is like a seed planted in the ground, forming the plant which grows until, ceasing to grow, it ceases to be the kingdom of God; and that there is no middle ground between his position and that of the pope. He asserts that Protestantism will never be self-consistent until it stands with equal courage for the opposite doctrine—adaptability of religious institutions to changing circumstances, and with continual change of dogmatic definitions of doctrines and practices. The question arises, Who is to adapt the truth of primitive Christianity to the genius of modern times? Who is to place the truth on equal footing of authority and potency with that originally obtaining in the personality of Jesus? The clergymen of a corrupt church, without self-consistency and courage to assume the authority of truth, can never do it! Protestantism has evolved from the Roman church; and in its state of disintegration it has never been able, and will never be able, to unite its fragments into the symmetry of truth. Moses formulated a system of truth,—adapted truth of authority and purity to a chosen people of the Jewish dispensation; he transformed the Egyptian religion because he involved its life. The system founded by him served its purpose during the age, through various stages of evolution, until only the form was left of the Jewish church at the time of the coming of Jesus. Jesus was the fruitage of the old dispensation; he was the door of the new dispensation, the head of a new church, the founder of a system of truth adapted to the genius of the people to whom he came. The church has become old again; truth and life must be renewed; and in the light of the science of progress of truth in the past, we affirm that the transposition and adaptation of the elements of truth and life to the people of the twentieth century, which inhered in the early church, can only be accomplished through the Messianic function which Koreshanity proclaims,—which Dr. Abbott and the entire modern church ignore. The Science of Christianity is announced to the world through the true Messianic and Apostolic Succession.

The daring of the present administration of the American government has accomplished what political intrepidity would have shunned. It was a bold venture to seize upon the colonial possessions of Spain and to enter upon a campaign of conquest and territorial expansion. The venture has offended the out-of-date sentiments of Jefferson and Jackson, as well as created a mighty impulse in the direction of imperialism. Near the close of the eighteenth century, the nation considered its authority sufficient to declare independence, and obtained it by war; at the close of the nineteenth century, it has exercised the prerogatives of national progress in the declaration of war, a new declaration of independence among the nations, and even supremacy. In startling contrast with the proclamation of independence and the proclamation of emancipation, seems now the proclamation of conquest, the declaration of the power of empire! Why may not America expand, even by conquest? The landing of Columbus was the beginning of the work of conquest. The republic came into existence through persistent aggression against the natives of the American continent—it was the path of destiny; and in the accomplishment of a grand purpose in the development of a powerful factor in the impending revolution and preparation of the world for the great era of peace and civilization, it may conquer the Filipinos, who may live or die as they may regard or disregard America's proclamation of conquest. The prophetic declarations of the Bible may offend the republican sentiment of the millions who accept the Book; but we believe that they foresee the political subjugation of all nations by the great Pan-American Theocracy, and that the principles of the divine kingdom in the tangible world will be declared in a world-wide proclamation of conquest, with the power behind it to demand and obtain recognition and submission!

Herronism, in its declaration of the democracy of power, has developed into a phase of religious, political, and social anarchy. His idea of virtual liberty is absolute and unrestricted license for every man to believe and do as he pleases. He mistakes the manifest disintegration of the age for progress of humanity along the line of truth, and is working enthusiastically to patch up its defects. Though he advocates democracy and clamors for a distribution of power whereby the virtual will be made subject to the will of the majority, he declares that "there cannot, by any possibility, ever exist a stable order in the world, when that order subjects men in any form to each other. There never lived a man who had the right to rule any other man; there never lived a man who could be trusted to rule any other man; there never lived a man into whose hands the welfare, religious, political, or economic, of another man could be committed." This is a rebellion against the demonstrated laws of organic unity. Moses instituted a system of government of which he was the head; the Christian world acknowledges that he was divinely authorized to rule over other virtuals and oversee all their affairs, as the supreme autocrat. His system was a Theocracy; he was the man into whose hands the welfare of thousands was committed. This was imperialism, instituted by the Almighty through Moses, through whom he gave the law, and through whom it was enforced. David was a king; Solomon was a king; and the divine government of the twentieth century will be, not a democracy nor a republic, but a kingdom in which the Christ will rule the world with a rod of iron!

An author, in an exchange, writes about the "spiritual egotist," and assumes that no man should possess any of the following characteristics which he enumerates, and which we make applicable to a majestic personality. Jesus was the spiritual egotist. It was impossible for Jesus to grant to the multitudes whom he taught, the same rights and privileges which he demanded for himself. To him the truth was as clear as sunshine, because he was the truth, and understood himself. He was scathing in his rebukes, and all received a share of his condemnation for not conforming to his measuring line; he was ever trying to run other peoples' affairs, and his wisdom consisted in his conceit and extraordinary claims, and he had a much higher estimation of himself than others had of him. The only method by which he could recognize in others what he had in himself, was the way which the laws of being compelled him to adopt,—giving to all who believed in his name the power to become like himself, at the end of the dispensation, in the resurrection. Jesus stood supremely above the mortal world, as far above it in quality of thought and life as the central star of the universe is above the earth; and those who become sons of God will stand as high in the divine order, constituting the solar realm of the natural, immortal humanity. They will be the supreme egotists.

There is a great lifting of church anchors and the spreading of new sails to suit the modern wind, in progress; a great breaking loose from old creeds and joining in the rapidly accelerating movement toward church federation and entire abandonment of any prescribed faith necessary to salvation. In a recent Methodist conference, it was declared that the church, as an organization, is not profiting by the spread of Christian sentiment; that the clergy need conversion; that the members are dropping out and taking up with fads; that the church has become a weak factor in the world, and that "there is no need to go far for proof of the evident failure of Evangelical Protestantism to take advantage of its opportunities. Doctrinal tests for admission must be abandoned. Christianity must regain its hold on men, or society will go to pieces." The modern church is at low tide; it is on the down grade, with wrecked hope and power!

A movement is on foot to convert the Mormons through undenominational and interdenominational missionary effort, and the confidential plans have been laid before a number of prominent religious journals of America. The noble Baptist Flag is disgusted with such clandestine work, reveals the secret, and remarks that it is but an effort to convert the Mormons "to an irresponsible, liberal, broad-gauged, mother-Hubbard sort of a goody-goodness, that is really no better than the Mormonism it is seeking to undermine." It has the boldness to refuse to join in with other Baptist journals, and says that "if every paper on this green earth should go into such a namby-pamby combine except the Flag, it would still wave in the glory of its isolation. The Flag would rather be right than popular, and will never betray itself and the truth in such an alliance." The great FLAMING SWORD guns salute the Flag of courage!

The Rev. Moody has been preaching in Salt Lake City and investigating the Mormons. The reports of his experiences and discoveries while there, prove rather more favorable to the Mormon people than otherwise. The Mormons and the Gentiles are getting nearer together; the people of the church treated Moody kindly, and opened the doors of the great tabernacle for his meetings. If there is any difference in the moral and social conditions of the Mormon and the modern Christian, it is in favor of the Mormon. The civilization of Utah at least equals, if it does not excel, that of any other part of America. The social system of Mormonism excels that of modern Christendom; it provides for its people. The Mormon fraternity is a brotherhood; their interests are one, and they have no poor!

Chicago is said to be the great medical hub. We should thus be able to locate the point of the greatest medical skill, robust health, lowest rate of mortality, and greatest longevity. We find none of these; it is simply the point where the greatest number of allopathic diplomas are issued, licensing their possessors to afflict the masses. Chicago is the point of the great medical trust, which lobbies in the legislative halls for the purpose of helping to make decrees ranking all other practitioners as criminals. If Jesus were to come to Chicago and begin the work of healing the thousands as he did nineteen hundred years ago, he would be arrested and convicted for committing the crime of curing the sick without having learned to do so in the modern colleges of medicine!

Dr. Fiske has undertaken to solve the problem of evil by means of the hypothesis of modern evolution. He holds that evil is necessary and that all knowledge is by contrast, which is true; but he denies that there is a personal devil, and believes in a "personal God." If we take his declarations and place them in logical form, we force his admission that it is impossible to know God because all knowledge is by contrast; and according to his view there is no antithetical character with which to contrast the divine! If he had discovered the laws of antithesis he would have applied them to the problem of evil; but they were discovered by the Founder of Koreshanity, and of course Dr. Fiske is content to do without them!

The modern church is being honeycombed with skepticism and infidelity. There is nothing in the perverted doctrines of Christianity that can be pointed to any longer by the leaders as being absolute truth, and hence the tendency to independent thought and conclusions. There is no unity of thought in the church; no oneness of mind and purpose, no harmony of action in the religious organizations. The church has resolved itself into a form of republicanism; brotherhood no longer exists. Between the denominations there is nothing but competition, and the same spirit descends to families and individuals!

If vegetarians should become as merciful to living organisms in the vegetable and mineral kingdoms as they feign to be to those in the animal kingdom, they would be compelled to starve to death. Every higher kingdom in the universe appropriates the life of the lower, destroys its forms, and lifts the substances to its own plane.

The greatest field of universal activity is viewed from the highest mental altitude; the view is broadened or narrowed according as one ascends or descends in the scale of comprehension of truth. Koreshanity is the center of circumspection, and therefore views the entire circumference of the divine perspective; it is a Universology.

The difference between THE FLAMING SWORD and the common journals of reform is, that instead of filling its pages with news of the world's shortcomings as a proof that the present systems of the world are wrong, we demonstrate what system and what conditions are right. Logic is the Koreshan road to conclusion!

When government surveyors admit that the phenomenon of the disappearance of ships' hulls is due to optical illusion, a mere "trick of the eye," it is time for astronomers to cease using it as a proof of the earth's convexity.

The efforts of fragmentary reform to usher in the new day by grumbling and going on a strike, are on a par with the efforts of the mule to bring daylight by braying and kicking at the sun!

The spiritual world is beyond the bounds of space and time; not beyond the external, but the internal bounds of the anthropotic universe.

The Science of Koreshanity is not buried beneath the rubbish of the age, nor hidden in mysticism.

Dewey discharged his duty through the big guns in his fleet of warships on Manila bay.

The people pay the premiums on national policies, and the capitalists get the insurance.

Republicanism casts the cloak of equality over the people to hide a multitude of fools.

What the agnostic condemns about the Bible is his own misconception of it.

The goal of human destiny is reached only by those who can locate it.

The fall of man was in the autumn of the human world.

The greatest age to be attained is courage.

THE EDITOR.

The Coming of the Lord and the Resurrection.

(1) Did not Jesus the Messiah predict that he would come again visibly, as the lightning; that every eye should see him, and they also that pierced him? Has KORESH come in this way? Has every eye seen him, and was he pierced nineteen hundred years ago? Did not the disciples see the Christ ascend to heaven bodily, and did not the angel say, "This same Jesus shall so come again"? If the body of Jesus was dissipated, as taught in THE FLAMING SWORD, was not the angel mistaken and his testimony misleading? May it not rather be that KORESH is mistaken and his testimony misleading?

(2) Did not Jesus teach a bodily resurrection from the dead? Did he not rise bodily from the tomb? Is not the Israelitish hope of a bodily resurrection very different from the reincarnation as taught in THE FLAMING SWORD? If different, which is the truth, and on what authority does the answer depend?—LADY BLOUNT, England.

The above questions indicate that our friend does not understand the claims of the Founder of Koreshanity, nor his doctrines concerning the coming of the Lord and the resurrection. Jesus was the true seed, sown in humanity nineteen hundred years ago, and as the seed, he died in the human soil in which he was sown for the purpose of reproducing himself into "much fruit,"—multiplying himself into 144,000 Christs, or Saviors, who shall come up on Mt. Zion,—immortal beings just like himself. These immortal men, constituting the return of Jesus the Christ, the coming of the Lord in his saints, have not yet appeared. The Messenger of Truth now proclaiming the science of immortal life, the laws of the resurrection, is not the personality of Jesus, and his coming is not the return of the Lord Jesus, but the Sign of his coming, a man in heaven, in a state of intellectual illumination. Every clergyman claims to be illuminated; and if we do not misjudge the writings of Lady Blount, she also claims to be a Christian, illuminated by divine light, and in a measure able to comprehend and proclaim divine truth.

Men who have no faculties of intellectual perception of truth have no "eyes;" there were many such in the days of Jesus. We could not expect minds whose sense of perception of truth is deficient or absent, to see either the Sign or his Truth; to such the lightning, or intellectual light from the rising of the new Garden of Eden, would not be visible. The coming of the Lord in its various stages, from the appearance of Elijah the Prophet, the forerunner of the Lord's appearing in glory, to the culmination of his work, will be seen by every "eye" that is able to recognize the Messenger; to all others his coming will be as a "thief in the night." His "lightning" will be visible only to those whose senses respond to its vibrations.

The disciples did not see Jesus ascend into the physical heavens, but into the spiritual heavens. They saw him go into the spiritual world by looking on the interior, where only it was possible for him to go, as the bread of life, to vitalize and nourish the church. Neither the testimony of the angel nor that of KORESH is misleading; for their testimonies are one and the same. Jesus went into the spiritual world, and will come from it in like manner as he went away, observed, not by the world at large, that cannot "see," but by those who have followed him in the regeneration. It seems astounding that the human mind should conceive so great an absurdity as the idea that Jesus went physically and bodily into the physical heavens, through the atmospheres; that he has maintained his existence in open space, or in a material heaven above the earth on some star or sun, for nineteen hundred years, and that he will descend through the physical clouds to the earth again! Lady Blount is a rank materialist, having no conception of the spiritual world nor of the qualities of life and energies, the sublimation of the Lord's body, which was poured out on the primitive church. Jesus promised to come again in their day, not as a personality, but as Holy Spirit; therefore the substances of the Holy Spirit were the substances of the immortal structure of Jesus. The Holy Spirit was God Almighty sublimated by the divine fire.

(2) Jesus taught a bodily resurrection—the only kind of a resurrection that has ever, or can ever, take place. He taught a "resurrection from the dead," a resurrection out from the dead and mortal humanity. Jesus himself was resurrected, not simply in the marvelous victory over death at the hands of the Jews; but he was born resurrected, the first born from the mortal world, the first born from the dead. He came down from heaven; he was made flesh, which is incarnation; and when he appears again as a result of his planting in humanity, he will be made immortal flesh again, and that will be re-incarnation. David spoke of himself when he declared that his soul would not be left in hell; God promised to make of David his first born, and Jesus appeared as "the first born," therefore David was resurrected in Jesus, together with millions of spirits who had lived during the Jewish dispensation.

Jesus was the great resurrection of the past. He was born immortal, resurrected from humanity by a process of human generation through an age. Jesus came from heaven; mortal men came from hell; if it is possible for Jesus to come from heaven through a process of generation, is it not clear that the heaven from which he came was in humanity? If mortal men come from hell, and if they are born from the human mortal world by a process known to the world at large, does it not prove that the hell from which they come is in humanity? And if the father of the mortal world is the devil, is not the life of the devil constantly embodied in the mortal world, and is not the propagation of the devil a constant embodiment and re-embodiment, generation after generation? Jesus did not teach that mortal bodies of men, having died and rotted in the physical earth, would ever constitute the forms of immortal life. There is no process of human or divine activities that has ever, or can ever, give birth to human forms from physical elements. There never has been, nor ever will be, a manifestation or resurrection of human life on any plane without the function of motherhood!

If the Jews had an adequate conception of the resurrection, why did they not accept the fact of the resurrection of Jesus? The Israelitish hope was true so far as it was revealed in the Jewish dispensation. The gospel of Jesus added a new phase of the resurrection; and the Christian gospel differed in concept from the gospel of Moses, only as a clearer and fuller view differs from a less clear vision. The apostles saw as through a glass darkly; the resurrection as taught in Koreshanity differs from the apostles' view, as the specific comprehension of the laws of the resurrection differs from faith and hope that the resurrection is to come. Koreshanity reveals how the resurrection is to take place, and possesses the power to accomplish it. "The light shines more and more unto the perfect day;" even the prophets foretold many things that they could not comprehend.

The authority on which answers to questions were given by Jesus and the apostles, was the authority of truth—the authority of Jesus. To the Jews, the teachings of Jesus appeared to differ radically from the teachings of Moses; they were one and the same; Jesus differed from the fallacies of the Jews, the vitiation of the truth of Moses. The gospel of Jesus was the Mosaic law infolded and expressed in another degree; it was truth progressed another dispensation. The authority of the answers given by KORESH and his disciples, is the authority of truth itself; Koreshanity is the truth of Jesus reinvolved and expressed in the scientific degree; it is the truth progressed through an experience of nineteen hundred years. It is the metamorphosis of philosophy to science. Koreshanity is the truth expressed by the authority of the man who is able to express it and demonstrate it; it is the authority of KORESH.

The Days of Creation.

(1) The Bible says that God created the earth and everything therein in six days and rested on the seventh, which he called the Sabbath. Now does the Bible refer to 24-hour days, and to the Sabbath that people are accustomed to keeping?

(2) From what or where do people receive evidence of a change of heart in so called conversion in the modern church?

(3) What kind of people inhabited the earth before Adam, and of what class were they?—E. C. D., Cedar Lane, Pa.

(1) The Bible account of creation has no direct reference to the physical earth, but to humanity; and the days of creation were not 24-hour days, resulting from diurnal revolution of the sun. Generally speaking, the days of creation are the seven periods of divine progress in humanity during a cycle of 24,000 years.

The seven days are the seven illuminations of the human world in a given cycle. The light of humanity is intellectual light, and proceeds from the anthropotic sun. Jesus was the light of the world; he was the sun of the human world, and in that domain was as real a sun as the central solar sphere is to the physical earth. The seven illuminations are from seven divine manifestations or Messiahs in humanity. In the supreme sense, the days of creation are the seven divine manifestations. The Latin dies is day, and Deus is God. Jesus was the sixth day, or the day of the world in its sixth degree, because he was the sixth manifestation of the light; but the seventh day brings the promised rest to humanity, the great Sabbath, earth jubilee. "For if Jesus had given them rest, he would not afterward have spoken of another day," manifestation, or Messiah.

The sabbath is the seventh principle of being; the seventh principle in man is the seed. The conservation of sex potency is the keeping of the sabbath. In the restoration of humanity from death, the seventh day or divine manifestation, Elijah the Prophet, has specifically to do with the seventh principle of man; he teaches man how and what to overcome. The Messenger of the Covenant is the seventh day, of which the 24-hour Sabbath of the Mosaic dispensation was a type. Creation is continuous; and the processes are in progress just as much today as they ever were.

(2) Conversion in the modern church is the mere result of psychological influence. Man becomes negative to the influence of the church, and receives substance directly from the people with whom he religiously associates and experiences a superficial change of mind, not a change of heart. He becomes baptized with the spirit of the church; if it is a Methodist church he is a Methodist because he receives Methodist spirits; if a Baptist church, he is a Baptist. The Holy Spirit baptized the early church into one mind; the unholy spirit received from the corrupt modern church, baptizes the people into as many minds, or divisions of religious sentiment and fallacy, as there are denominations.

(3) There were just as many different kinds of people living in the earth before Adam, as there are in the world today.

Every 24,000-year cycle brings similar results in humanity; the present world is practically the same as it was at the close of the last great cycle, thousands of years ago, just before the Golden Age.

Sky and Horizon Viewed from the Convex Earth.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Would the appearance of the sky and horizon be different if we lived on the convex instead of the concave surface? If so, what would be the difference in appearance?—A Subscriber, Ohio.

Application of the principles of optics demonstrates that the earth is concave—that the phenomena observed in relation to the earth's surface are the natural appearances of a surface curving upward at the ratio of 8 inches to the mile; also that the phenomena of the sphere of the heavens, convex as it is to the surface on which we live, appearing like a dome arch overhead, are the natural phenomena obtaining within the great cell of the universe.

In the concave earth the horizon is the vanishing point of lateral vision, the vanishing point of space between the eye and the concave surface. We see out and beyond the apparent horizon, higher than the eye; but every foot of space in the actual limit of lateral vision, every foot in the great circle of the horizon, has foreshortened, and the size of the circle is correspondingly reduced in size and drawn down toward the eye in the direction of the curve, and apparently depressed below the horizontal extending from the eye.

Beyond the vanishing point there is no more surface visible to be subject to foreshortening; therefore the foreshortening must apply to the space above and beyond the vanishing point, and the ratio of increase of foreshortening beyond the vanishing point is as to the square of the distance. And a succession of vanishing points in this ratio, apart from consideration of any curvation of "lines" of vision, would extend to the limit of vision on the sides of the convex sphere of the heavens above us, vanishing the space between earth and sky; hence the apparent meeting point in the horizon. We see about 180° of the heavens in any one horizon in the earth.

The organ of sight is the eye; the pictures are implanted on the concave surface of the eye, and the impressions are received in the mind. The foreshortening, in fact, has not taken place in space, nor on the surface of the earth and sky; the foreshortening has taken place within the eye!

Now, what kind of an impression would a convex earth and concave sky make upon the retina of the eye? Suppose with the same kind of an eye we now possess, we look out over a convex earth. There is no concave surface in this view to be foreshortened and drawn down; the circle of the offing or bulge of the earth would, nevertheless, be reduced apparently in size, and drawn toward the eye, not downward, but upward. The convex surface becomes the ground-line for foreshortening. We begin the view with its curve or offing visible before the vanishing point is reached. We have a different kind of a horizon to deal with; and as the vanishing point is not reached, the perspective apparently raising the offing, would lack something of being reduced to the vanishing point, and hence would appear to be above the horizontal extending from the eye—as much above as the horizon in the concave earth appears to be below it.

The line of successive vanishing points from the offing, as applied to the rapidly vanishing space above the earth, would extend upward and outward at an accelerated ratio until, no matter how far away the celestial sphere or boundary of stars may be supposed to be, it would reach the arc at an altitude or angle of about 45° from the horizon of the observer; so that in reality we could see only about 90° of the circumference of the heavens in any one horizon, and the period of daylight caused by the sun passing over that 90° would be just one half that which obtains in the concave earth.

How any one can suppose that he can look out over the sea horizon and see a star just rising above the offing or bulge of water, with the star trillions of miles away, and claim it to be a fact that it is in a direct and straight line with the horizon, without consideration of the principles of foreshortening as applied to the space above the horizon, is more than we can conceive to be possible for the rational mind!

If, as physicists claim, the light of the sun is generated in the atmosphere after the rays enter it, the sun must appear to be at the upper stratum of our atmosphere, or not be visible at all as a sun. If visible only at an altitude of 50 miles, we would have a period of daylight of about a couple of hours, and the arc of the heavens would be limited to about 30°, and we would miss the grand stellar display in the scope of 180° of the arc in all directions. If the sun is not visible at the upper stratum of our air, neither the sun, moon, planets, nor stars would be visible as points of light, and the sky would be perfectly blank. Quite a difference, you see!

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

An English Clergyman's Experience in Investigating Koreshan Universology.

DR. CYRUS R. TEED,

MY DEAR SIR:—Please accept hearty thanks for remitting the Koreshan literature, which I have greedily devoured. Although only a few days have elapsed since the book and papers arrived, perhaps one's thoughts may be sufficiently formed to permit of a letter upon the subject. You invite first impressions to be expressed, and the following may possibly interest you:

Some 12 years ago I read "Parallax," who satisfied me that, whether the earth was flat or not, it certainly could not be —on our side of it—a convexity. Without sufficient evidence in any definite direction, I therefore fell back upon the opinion that the earth must be much more "miya" than is usually supposed, in correspondence with the "real appearances" of Swedenborg's spiritual world, in which things appear, and are, according to the states of affection and thought of the inhabitants. Later, I caught a glimpse of a pamphlet entitled "Gravitation a Pushing, not a Pulling, Force." This idea left a strong impression, but without intellectual form. Now comes your book, which is convincing so far as anything can be, to one whose information comes without ocular proof.

The first feeling was one of intense relief. In the case of one always interested in universal themes, the extremes between mental contraction and expansion have been most painful. On the one hand, the mind has sought to expand to grasp the infinities involved in the Copernican system; and on the other, to painfully return from infinite remoteness and vagueness to meet the intellectual requirements of the common life, which have no correspondence with the former. You will perceive that in such case the limitation (for us) of the universe is most refreshing. It becomes possible to summarize the universe, on both physical and psychical sides, with one sweep of the imagination. Under the old system such a process was impossible.

I say "limitation for us," advisedly, for while it is readily conceded that this cellular cosmos is quite large enough to satisfy our mental and spiritual ambitions, the stated limitations seem too great for all purposes. Let me explain: You speak of the expansion and contraction of the metallic laminae; this change of condition must be considerable in a body of 8,000 miles diameter. There is then a margin of room (space) represented by the difference between the two states. In other words, when the laminae are contracted, there must be outside room to allow of expansion. If this room or space exists, then there is conceded a something which may be extended indefinitely. In fact, there may be other cosmic cells varying in nature from our own, yet related to it in some magnetic and psychic manner. This, at present, seems to me a perfectly legitimate hypothesis. Is it not rather an extreme position to take, that this cosmic cell is all—that there is nothing outside of it?

Christ is the express image of the divine substance, as the sun is the focalized expression of the stellar nucleus; but although the Father is involved in Christ, the term conveys a larger idea than can be limited to any one form or manifestation. The Father is that which is behind all cyclic avatars, and is, so to speak, a more universal principle which unifies the avatars. If this be so upon the divine plane, may it not be true—is it not most probable, that there are other stellar nuclei, suns, and universes—cosmic manifestations which are all unified by one general divine Being? At the same time, it is willingly admitted that our universe is quite sufficient for our own purposes. But the margin of difference between contraction and expansion may involve even more on the cosmical scale, than the geodetic survey has involved on our universal scale.

The cellular principle appeals at once to me, and most vividly, because of its harmony with the laws of correspondence, which I have sought in vain to apply, except in the most general sense, to the old system of astronomy. It may interest you to know that I have recently issued a little work, "Maximus Homo," proving that divine man, humanity, and universe exist in correspondence, and that the three constitute the complete universal man. The divine man is inmost; humanity is to Him as soul; and the universe is as body; so that divine man becomes complete man on all planes; thus, that all being is a unit.

The doctrine of reincarnation has always been a pill that I could not swallow. It is not clear to my, perhaps dull, apprehension that the cyclical reincarnation of the Lord is parallelized by the reincarnation of common men; in other words, that the latter does not necessarily follow upon the former. The Bible does not help me. In relation to the man born blind, the Lord said he had not sinned (as in a possible previous life) that he should be born blind; it was for the glory of God—i. e., a temporal and temporary event. If Swedenborg makes anything clear, it is that the perfecting of man can be, and is, carried on in the spiritual world; in which case reincarnation becomes unnecessary. The Bible appears to refer reincarnation solely to reappearances of the Divine Man.

The sun entered Aries by precession, about the time of the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. The Lord came when the sun had passed through about three fourths of the sign. The spiritual sense of the Word came via Swedenborg, when the sun was nearly two thirds through Pisces. Something is said about a present Koreshan Messiahship, about 150 years after the Swede. There is thus an irregularity (apparent at any rate) about these manifestations, which, if cyclic, I do not comprehend.

Pardon a most respectful and tentative reference to the personal affair. Many have said: "Lo! here" or "Lo! there." There have been many claims to Messiahship; and the world has been often deceived. This fact has given birth to a rooted suspicion in regard to such a subject. Harris claims to be the "pivotal man," and has written some amazing books full of (suppositious?) revelations. Schlatter was a wonderful phenomenon, reminding one most forcibly of Jesus Christ, both in physical type and in function. What is one at a distance, and without personal evidence to think? I will be utterly honest with you; my thoughts are these: Schlatter I could love; something in Harris always repels me; there is a sensuousness about his writings which gives rise to a subtle feeling of abhorrence, or which at least prevents any spiritual grip.

Now, here is CYRUS R. TEED. He has a good, calm, clear, strong, rational face, with eyes which speak of affection. That is all the personal element one has as a guide. Then follows the question, Is the revelation of this new and apparently true System (true upon the whole, or maybe altogether) sufficiently great to guarantee the reappearance of the Messiah? That question will not resolve itself in a hurry. For Swedenborg brought a divine message, yet called himself the "servant" of the Lord Jesus Christ; wherein lies the difference between the two men? I do not know. Is this the time for a reappearance of the Messiah? I do not know, although he is sadly needed to set things right. There are some points in the System which at present seem arbitrary:—

(1) That the external metallic shell is gold. If this is a result of the law of correspondence, one can understand it. If the law is that the heaviest substance gravitates to the ultimate, why should not, say platinum, constitute the external of the firmament?

(2) That the next atmosphere is of pure hydrogen.

(3) That there is an inner, as well as outer, focalization of the stellar nucleus—two suns, in fact.

(4) That the moon and planets have their origin in mercurial disci between the laminae. If their origin is practically the same, why should their correspondential effects be so entirely different, as they are known to be?

The intelligence refuses to receive such matters on authority; and as yet no body of reason has been supplied to substantiate the statements. One yearns for further light. With the altruistic side of Koreshanism, I am most heartily and completely in accord. Trusting that this expression of an individual view has not wearied you, I am yours in the cause of Truth,—G. H. LOCK, England.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly, April 20.

With enterprise that would do credit to a metropolitan daily, Leslie's Weekly has had Admiral Dewey interviewed at Manila in reference to his nomination for presidency; the interview covers a page, and is interesting to those prospecting the future political field. The war in the Philippines is profusely illustrated by photographs taken on the battlefield, including one of the most remarkable pictures ever taken—a trench full of dead Filipinos, an awful view, disclosing the horrors of war. Also the U. S. soldiers are shown on the battlefield, in the trenches, and the rice-fields near Manila. Other features are the culmination of the Samoan difficulties; seizure of a Spanish filibuster, a page of illustrated personals; also double page picture, "The Gay Panorama of Life in Havana." The April 20 number is of rare interest. In the issue of the 13th, we counted not less than 40 fine photographs of the Filipino war. The publishers are endeavoring to keep ahead of competitors in turning out a magnificent popular journal.

Word and Works, St. Louis, Mo.

We get the publication of the famous Rev. Irl R. Hicks, astronomer and weather prophet, of St. Louis, Mo. It is a 20-page monthly journal, containing much interesting and profitable matter, especially for those interested in meteorology and astronomy. The subjects discussed in the paper cover a wide field, and the originality and boldness of its editor would suit the readers of THE FLAMING SWORD. We believe it is generally conceded that Rev. Hicks' weather forecasts are very reliable. Lessons on the old school astronomy are comprehensive, and are without technical terms. The subscription is only $1.00 per year, including Hicks' valuable 112-page Almanac, with forecasts for every month of the year, astronomical aspects, etc. Address, Word and Works, 2201 Locust st., St. Louis, Mo.

The Open Court.

The April number contains an excellent article on the Science of Education; Prof. Levy-Bruhl, of the University of Paris, has an article on Rousseau, the founder of modern pedagogy; while Dr. Carus writes on the Education of Parents by the Children. A celebrated psychologist discusses the Origin of Speech. The articles on Americanism and Expansion and Americanism in the Roman church, we are specially interested in: and the Cross in Central America, with illustrations of bas-relief work by aboriginal Americans, is valuable to those peering into the past by means of relics. Open Court Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill.

The American Electrician.

A monthly journal of practical electrical and mechanical engineering, having the largest circulation of any other journal of electricity. In the April number, we counted no less than 160 illustrations and diagrams. We commend it to all interested in electrical subjects and apparatus. The price is exceedingly low for a 114-page monthly of its size,—$1.00 per year. Address, American Electrician Co., 120 Liberty st., New York, N. Y.

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the •Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price a cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. a cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. a cents

The Alchemy of Human Life.

Scientific Analysis of the Divine Fire; Difference Between the Atoms of the Mortal and the Immortal Man; the Psychology of Matter; Atomic Experiences in Progress of Life.

WHEN the Lord passed away from the visible and material presence of his disciples, through what the New Testament has denominated translation, he accomplished a pneumo-psychic phenomenon which, though belonging at that time to the philosophic field of demonstration, can be accounted for on wholly scientific principles, with the possibility of repetition.

In giving a scientific exposition of the theocrasis (translation) of the Son of God nineteen hundred years ago, we are not assuming, hypothetically, a possible explanation with the hope that the reader may condescend to think as we do, on a correspondingly hypothetical basis. We are merely declaring a great truth which we absolutely know to be a fact, a knowledge of which must constitute the basis for the hope of human redemption.

The atomic theory of matter, in so far as it maintains the indestructibility of the atom, is false. We do not think it false, we know it to be so. Of course, we are declared to be the champion egotist of the world. We would not be justified in attempting to teach the world what we think. There are too many people engaged in that business, and we are free to admit that the "scientists" of the world are modest enough to instruct the world in what is believed rather than what is known. We do not propose to teach assumptions.

When matter is reduced to its smallest, indivisible point, it immediately dissolves as an atom of matter and becomes energy. Atomic destruction is the source of energy. All energy has been matter, and all matter has been energy; therefore every atom of matter is capable of being dissolved to energy, and the quality of energy depends upon the character of the matter before the process of solution.

The composition of the Lord's material form was the same as that of any other human structure, except that the atoms of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, carbon, sulphur, phosphorus, chlorine, fluorine, sodium, calcium, potassium, magnesium, aluminum, cuprum, etc., possessed psychic elements not common to the atoms of the ordinary human;—the difference residing in the quality imparted by a constantly exercised purity of thought and life. This difference may be illustrated by the alchemical distinction between organic and inorganic calcium. From the ordinary chemical and electrical tests, they cannot be distinguished, but their action upon vegetable life demonstrates a radical distinction which the chemist does not define.

Every atom has its soul; and the psychic qualities are modified by the experience of the atom, by contact, in relation with other atoms. Every atom of calcium in an organic body, where it is in consociation with other atoms of organic life, is impressed with the soul element of every other atom. This experience of contact or touch gives to it a psychic complexity which does not belong to the so called inorganic atom. Mental impressions, good or bad, are psychically imparted to atoms of organic life. The pure mind imparts to the atom of the organic form in which that mind resides, a psychic force and power which an impure mind could not enforce. It is thus that the corresponding atoms of the Lord's body could possess a psychic quality not possessed by mortal men having mortal organisms, in contradistinction to the immortal body of the Lord.

Vibration is Destructible to Atoms.

Every atom of matter can be destroyed as matter, through vibratory action. It cannot be destroyed as substance, for though it be changed from matter to energy, it remains as substantial as before the dissolution of the atom. Energy produced by vibration is more or less intense, in proportion to the rapidity of the motion to which the atom is exposed. This is as true of mental as of physical energy.

A tree may fall to the ground and gradually decay by exposure, and the process of change reduces the tree not only to its original alchemical elements, but in the transformation, through the process of decay, energies are generated and liberated from the hitherto alchemical environment. Throw the tree into the fire, or subject it to the friction of motion induced by the production of flame, and it is rapidly reduced to energy and dissipated. The light, heat, electricity, and magnetism generated and manifest in the flame, are but the substances of the material elements previously composing the wood of the tree.

The Visible Form of the Lord Jesus was Transposed from Material to Spiritual Substance.

Mental energy is more potent than mere physical energy. Mental energy is pneumatic and psychic. It is spirit and soul energy. The principal source of spiritual energy is intellectuality; the principal source of soul energy is affection. The intellectual energy corresponds to electricity, but the energy of desire, that is, of affection, corresponds to magnetism. Human magnetism is derived either from pure love or from bestial lust. They are radically different in their effects upon different people. The magnetism of a sensual person repels a pure-minded person by the contrariety in their magnetic qualities. The greatly intellectual man devoid of love for humanity, is electrical but not magnetic. The man who loves his fellow men and is full of human sympathy, if he knows how to wisely conserve his devotion to the race, is magnetic.

Jesus was magneto-electric; so intensely so that his love was of the deepest and purest kind, and his electric power of the most thrilling character. His mental vibrations were so intense, that his mental forces aroused the vibrations of the inner souls and spirits of those who heard him, and the responding vortex dissolved his body in what the world has known as his translation. Every atom of the Lord's body was reduced to pneumatic energy. That energy has been denominated the Holy Spirit. The Holy Ghost not only proceeded from the personal Lord, but it was the product of his dissolution, hence it was the veritable substance of his body; and when it was absorbed by his followers, they became the temple of the Holy Ghost because they had partaken of and appropriated his life, that life being an aggregation of spiritual entities.

The Lord was absorbed by his church. His external and visible form was absorbed into his intellectual and affectional invisible interior, it being centralized in the anthropotic astral nucleus of being in its ascent, while at the same time there was a radiating, or descending, energy of absorption. He entered the throne and altar of universal potency and dominion, as the imperial Majesty of the universe; at the same time, through the powers of the animal life of Deity, he precipitated himself into the race, which he impregnated for regenerative action.

"I am the bread which came down from heaven, which if a man eat he shall live forever." "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." The spiritual interpretation of this passage, is not the most important one, for the reason, as Swedenborg says (not because he said it), that "The Word is in it fulness, in its holiness, and in its power, in its literal sense."

Literally, the Lord was eaten. The phenomenon was accomplished through the dissolution of his body,—its reduction to spiritual energy, the Holy Spirit, and its absorption by the Lord's disciples. The theosophy of today, derived from a mere theoretical and false interpretation of Buddhism, has a vague conception of the principle of absorption into Nirvana, but it has no scientific exposition of its phenomena. The Lord was absorbed. We do not think it, we know it. We not only know it as a fact, but we know the laws by which the phenomenon was accomplished; and we have many times, in the Koreshan literature, defined the specific character of the mental factors and processes essential to the theocrasis of the individual, and of the thousands who shall consume by the electro-magnetic combustion, in which the anthropotic world is about to be conflagrated.

The pouring out of the Holy Ghost, which was one of the witnesses that those who received it were the sons of God, was the influx of the spirit of Abraham into that which should ultimately become the flesh of Abraham; the spirit of Christ into that which should ultimately become the flesh or body of Christ.

Fulfilling the Cubical Number of the Man.

Wisdom of the Prophet Who Counts the Number 666; Its Relations to the Mathematical Cube of the New Jerusalem; the Amplification of Zodiacal Evolution.

WE ARE requested to explain Rev. xiii: 18. This, like all other passages of the Bible, is subject to many phases of interpretation, all of which are correct, depending upon the specific domain to which the interpretation is related. There are four primary degrees of interpretation that are true, with as many antithetical correspondences that are false. To enter into all these expositions at this time and in a FLAMING SWORD article, would cover too much ground for the occasion; hence the inquirer must be content with general suggestions of the significance of the verse in question.

"Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred three score and six." This beast represents the power and spirit of the dragon (the serpent), because it is said and they worshiped the dragon which gave power unto the beast. The dragon power in the domain of secular activity is the wisdom of commerce. This is the controlling wisdom of the world, in the opposite sense from the divine wisdom. In the divine sense, the wisdom of commerce is that which determines the control of the commercial act in every domain, for the good of the world in the administration of its highest and most perfect uses.

"Here is wisdom." Where? Where is found the mind of understanding; for this mind counts—that is, fulfils the number of the beast. The man who has understanding, and in whom is commercial wisdom on all the domains of commercial activity, fulfils in himself the termination of the beast (animal) life; that is, the animal life of God, and reaches the point of transition from the animal domain to that of the spiritual divinity. The number six hundred three score (60) and six, is the number which fulfils the numerical value of the cube,—the symbol of righteousness, and the circle, the symbol of truth. The cube indicates that which is absolutely square in all directions; it has six surfaces, each surface being the square of ten, which is the cubic root.

The Decalogue is the cube root of righteousness. The number is ten, the square of this is one hundred. As the cube has six surfaces, there are six times one hundred, that is, six hundred. This six hundred is related to three axes of the cube, having six poles. The three axes represent three principles,—length, breadth, and thickness, which can be translated from geometrical to moral qualities. Length has reference to the science of law; breadth to its application, and thickness to its results; they also signify knowledge, will (determination to perform), and performance of the law. To know, to will, and to do, are signified by three score, or sixty. In the man who knows the law and wills to do it, may be found the end and the beginning.

Everything that has form has length, breadth, and thickness; but as there can be no numerical equation without the knowledge of the fourth dimension (which determines limitation) as well as the three other properties of matter, this fourth property must necessarily be understood. These three dimensions are embraced in the fourth. The three primary dimensions determine limitations in space, while the fourth defines limitations in existence. The end and the beginning determine limitation, and these constitute the fourth dimension of matter. Time is limited co-ordinately.

The New Jerusalem lies four square,—the length, breadth, and height being equal. This is a cube; it has no reference, however, to a geometrical cube, but rather to a mathematical cube, the number being the cube of its numerical cube root, which is ten, the primary evolution being six hundred. (We employ the term evolution, where the ordinary mathematician employs the term involution).

The Zodiacal circle in the physical heavens is a type of the beast. It is the cycle of God's animal life; the word zodiac means this. It begins with Aries and terminates with Pisces. Man develops all the stages of progress toward his divinity, through the corresponding anthropotic cycle. When he terminates his progress in the involution of his divinity, he completes his animal being and is transited from the divine animal life to his spiritual or man (divine) existence. When the apex of the individual being is attained, then the zodiac of his career is complete, and he stands forth in the culmination of the beast (animal) life. Having overcome that phase of being, he enters by absorption into Nirvana. This is Elijah the prophet, the end of the cycle. He is the man who has wisdom; he has understanding, and fulfils the number of the beast (the cycle of God's animal.) He is the man of sin, the man who took upon himself the sins of the world; he who "was made to be sin," yet who knew no sin. Of him it is said:

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne;" and also, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God [because the city, the New Jerusalem, is in him], which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name."

This city, which lieth four square and is the number of a man, has for its second power from the definite cube root (the root of righteousness), the number ten, six hundred and sixty-six, or six hundred three score and six. This is the New Jerusalem, found in Elijah, the prophet of this age. This fulfils the number of the beast; he counts it, that is, he fulfils it. We have given a mere outline, a suggestion only, of the significance of this verse. A volume might be written, and then its significance would be merely hinted at.

In the Lord's descending degree, he entered the race and took upon himself its sins. At the end of the age he is born in sin and shapen in iniquity,—like all other men; he overcomes his sinful nature as the man of sin, and becomes the man of righteousness, when through theocrasis he sits upon the throne. This is the tabernacle which was passing through the process of cleansing from 1839 until 1870—born into the world in 1839, and illuminated in the fall of 1869 and the beginning of 1870.

The Mutations and Limitations of Time.

Consideration of a Quality of Extension of Existence Analogous to Space; the Geometry of Time; the Mathematics of Dispensations and Cycles of Solar Precession.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

THE USUAL conception of time is analogous to the popular fallacy concerning space; both time and space are considered as absolutely infinite, endless. It is thought that space is infinite extension—eternal extension in any and all directions, independently of the existence of the universe. Likewise, time is held to be continuous duration, and considered to be entirely independent of existence; that if there were no universe, time would go on unceasingly at the same rate,—seconds, minutes, hours, ages without end! We have already demonstrated in a previous article that both the universe and universal space are limited; and we now purpose demonstrating the limitation of time.

Philosophers of all ages have considered that time and space are related. They are properties of existence; it is impossible for one to exist without the other. It is obvious to all minds, that the universe of existence occupies both space and time; and the mind can conceive of the impossibility of existence apart from either time or space. Hence, it logically follows that neither time nor space is an independent property susceptible of continuity of extension apart from the universe. Existence has the property of extension in duration, as well as extension in space; and when we scientifically consider the fact that space is the room of form, we are forced by the logic of the relation of space and time to consider time as correspondingly limited.

If time and space are related; if they are corresponding properties of existence, they have corresponding relations to the world of existence. If space is susceptible of the application of the principles of geometry, there is also a corresponding geometry of time, which as definitely limits timic progressions and evolutions as the geometry of space limits its extense. If it be admitted that space is so related to form as to force its largest dimension to return to itself, perchance even a casual glance may reveal to the reader that the stream of time flows, not in straight lines, but in circles or cycles, returning to itself with return of events in the repetition of cyclic history and life, after a succession of periods or epochs, evolving and involving itself in the form in which space is made to return to itself in the completion of its circumference.

Space in the physical cosmos corresponds to time in the human world. The physical cosmos involves itself in the central sun; the evolved form is the circumference, the limited amplifications of its geometrical root of evolution; and a corresponding evolution in humanity proceeds from an involute point or pole, and that evolution progresses in the course of time and reaches its amplification in a definite period. If we can trace the properties of space and time in the physical world and the universe of man as corresponding properties, can we trace space and time to their origin? The stream of time flows on; but every stream must have its source. Father Time is not meaningless; and in the hour-glass the sands of time run through the conjoined cones and the time is made to return to its chamber. If we can trace the universe to the source of its existence, we are able to trace its every function, its every property and quality of life and existence to a prime Cause, and thus solve the problem of dispensations!

What marks the dispensations? What makes the epochs? What writes itself in human history? On the scroll of humanity life writes itself, its mutations, and its times. In the physical cosmos there is both space and time; in the human world there is time, and that which corresponds to space. There is no progress without that which corresponds to space; there must be progress in a given direction. Life ascends and descends; there are the lowest and the highest conditions of humanity. When the Most High is reached, we have the limitation of ascent. The lowest stratum is the outermost; it is down in the scale of human existence. From the very commonest use of language, it is obvious that space in the physical world corresponds to life in humanity; and the scientific translation of the properties and terms of time into qualities of human thought, is truth. The relations of space and time are analogous to the relations of life and truth.

Truth and life in their relations as the absolutes of being and existence, are prior in quality to time and space in the physical world; time and space in the great cellular form are but the expressions of qualities which inhere in thought and life in humanity. If the truth and the life, from which the universe with all its properties of space and time is evolved, are perfect, it follows that space and time are alike limited to the form and duration of that which proceeds from truth and life. We may move along the line of logic from the outermost expression, limited in form and space, limited in its cycles of evolution and revolution, back to the Cause, and find the conclusion forced that life has perfect mathematical roots involved in the central cell, while truth has its corresponding geometrical form in the cube; or we might take the perfection of the sphere and cube of life and truth, and through a definite mathematical process, reach the amplification of their evolutions in the logarithmic scale of correspondingly limited space and time.

Time, in the physical world, is measured by astronomical revolutions, precessions, and cycles; eternity is made up of successive limited periods of duration. Time begins and ends, but time is always; it is the successive duration of orders and creations. The great clock of the universe keeps the time of the ages, and measures cycles as limited spheres of duration. A cycle of the solar precession begins with Aries, and completes its revolution in 24,000 years; it is a great cycle of time, measured in the circumference of the space of the universe, the Zodiacal belt. When the geometrical space of the solar precession is covered by the sign, a space of time is terminated; when the great circle of space returns to itself, the great cycle of time returns and brings a repetition of events, involved in the great Head of humanity, in whom truth and life, space and time are conjoined, and from whom truth and life, space and time are again expressed in a new order, a new cosmos, in a new age.

The universe is cellular; its space is limited. Its form is spherical, and its greatest dimension is circular. The truth of the universe is the Cellular Cosmogony. Its life is developed in the cell, and expressed in rhythmic harmony in logarithmic spirals to its limited mathematical and geometrical amplifications of quality, degrees, functions, forms, and time; and its time is derived from cyclic impulse, which expresses the time it involves and repeats in the order of obedience to the laws of being.

Times change, truth progresses; truth reaches its ultimates in the science of the universe, and correspondingly, time reaches its culminations. The mutations and limitations of time are analogous to the mutations of life and truth as humanity moves forward in progress toward the goal of destiny. We are nearing the end of a great cycle; the sphere of time is nearly fulfilled; and as humanity nears the vortex of revolution, there is an increase of human momentum, and time foreshortens. The old time is passing away, and the new time is at hand! The Ancient of Days, the ultimate of Life and of Truth, has appeared in the culmination of a great cycle, bringing the period of universal day, the scientific light of the Golden Age!

The Story of the Resurrection Told by Koreshan Science.

L. E. BORDEN.

THE EASTER music rings out gladly, and the story of the resurrection comes again with its wonderful message: "He is not here, he is risen." The crowning miracle of the great Master's life is luminous with holy light shed over it from the new dawn of truth in earth.

It is no longer a blank mystery, when it is understood that the bitter cry wrung from the Man of Sorrows on the cross, told the moment of separation between his inner and his outer consciousness. The divine power in Jesus was his inner mind; this was the Father to whom he prayed. Think of a perfect mind where love and truth unite—love that is the very music of the spheres, so pure the highest known is but its faint reflection, as some fair shore is dimly mirrored in the moonlit waves. Think of such a mind poised for a few brief years in perfect human form. The powers of darkness mass their legions, and the fateful moment comes; death and the grave exult in gloating triumph, and the spirit slips from its shrine to find a resting place prepared, an inn where it may tarry for a night.

As it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, the Lord rose from the tomb. The mighty power of love came back to dwell in its own temple. The spirit, treasured while he slept, in his disciple's mind, was strong to recreate, put death to flight, and choirs of angels sang the victory won.

On that first Easter day, one whose countenance was like lightning and his raiment white as snow, rolled back the stone from the door of the sepulchre and said: "Come see the place where the Lord lay, and go quickly, tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead." So the mystery of death was disclosed for all time; the door of the tomb was opened by the power of heaven.

Death is separation, not only of the physical atoms, but of the mind atoms; these fly to other minds of living men, whither attraction draws them. There is, it is true, a central nucleus, the ego, which is indivisible, and remains a unit in seeking a new dwelling place; otherwise there is a general breaking up of the mind, to which that of the body is analogous. In the death of Jesus, no such dispersion of mental forces took place. The God-mind, as a perfect sphere, entered into the brain prepared for its reception, and when three days had passed, the love of Mary, who visited the Lord's tomb and wept over his body, poured out the spirit that was in her; the soul returned to raise up its temple.

That crystal sphere of rainbow-tinted truth, that pure thought-world of bright, celestial spirits who compose the mind of God, finds ever in some human brain, its holy place. The transcendent idea of a suffering God who became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; who was mocked and scourged and wounded, but for the love that was in him, despised the shame; who made himself of no reputation and was numbered with the wicked in his death; who in the hour of nameless anguish cried in pity, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,"—such an idea of love and heroism is the most sublime that religion can furnish or the mind conceive. And yet, lacking a groundwork of scientific knowledge to establish the events of our Lord's life as facts not poetry, even a conception so lofty, is losing its power to sway the hearts of men. It may be fairly questioned how many gathered this Easter tide, in the beautiful churches filled with light and fragrance, find peace or comfort in the story of the resurrection. The fiat of materialism has gone forth: "Miracles do not happen," and the higher criticism has devastated the Bible narrative.

The science of miracles is told by Koreshan truth in a reasonable way that to many minds illumines the life of our Lord. One of our earliest and keenest passions is the thirst for truth; we want to see how things are done; and the child who takes his toy to pieces to find what is inside, is but an epitome of the man who questions the mysteries of life and death. If facts contrary to present experience are seriously recorded in the most ancient and remarkable of religious writings, we must ask whether science may not disclose laws that govern such facts; whether the conditions under which these events occurred may not again arise and the facts themselves be repeated. "We never shall know and we never can know; let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die," is the attitude of some minds. Others more wisely are waiting, expectant and receptive, ready to catch the first rays of dawning truth.

In the Editorial Perspective.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

THE ELIXIR of Life has been searched for from time immemorial; the persistency of the human mind in the direction of its discovery, is indicative that it will ultimately be discovered and applied. A European scientist announces that he has discovered a process by which he will arrest senility and make man young again; it is a galvanic system, by which rejuvenescence is claimed to be assured. He claims that electricity is the life-fluid, which he can send forth from the poles of his battery. The modern mind is in utter ignorance of what electricity is; it is as much a mystery as God himself, and as long as its nature and origin are unknown, it will be enveloped by halos of modern scientific superstition. The scientist supposes that electricity, wherever it is found, wherever it is generated, is a homogeneous something, always the same in quality, whether in sun or star, mineral or man. There are just as many different kinds of electricity as there are different kinds of matter, and just as many different qualities of electricity as there are states of experience of matter. The lowest quality is from the lowest mineral or metallic substances from which it may be produced; the highest, is mental electricity, the light of the mind, substantial, potent, and human. It is ignorance which places the energy resulting from the alchemic destruction of the atoms of zinc on a par with the human intellect and soul, the electricity and magnetism generated in the cells of the body and brain! The highest quality and kind of alchemic force ever generated in humanity was poured out upon the primitive Christian church, the sublimation of the body of Jesus the Christ. The Elixir of Life is Life! The great catholicon is human vitality! The panacea is in not out of the human form! There is but one way to destroy senility in humanity and to overcome death, and that is through the conservation and polation of sex potency, in the formation of a biological battery, and the baptism of the world with its energies. The key is Alchemy; the process is Messianic, and the result is physical immortality.

When we view the field of modern reform, we observe in the hundreds of movements, but weak efforts to destroy economic and other evils. "Reform" is obviously chaotic, where energies are misdirected, and the theories fallacious. It is evident that reform must be made in all departments of the modern system of human relations. As many schemes are projected to effect changes in society, government, and the church as there are departments. Must these changes come by fragmentary efforts? Suppose the world should adopt, piece by piece, the various schemes suggested to save the world from its bondage? Would the plans fit in one great system of life? Suppose a man sick with a complication of diseases, should undertake to use all of the remedies in the world to cure his illness; would he be likely to recover? Who could harmonize in practical application the various theories of reform which cannot be harmonized in the mind? Who is to adapt one plan to another in a unity of effort? Would a sensible mechanic undertake to construct a machine from promiscuous selection of wheels, journals, and forms which were never intended to be joined together? The hundreds of reform schemes will never comprise a system; yet many reform journals undertake to advocate ideas from all of them! There is not a fact in human history to show that any great successful movement in any line of human activity has ever resulted from patching up an old order. What the world needs is one great system of reform which will, in its harmony, cover in its application the entire world of human relations, with the power and authority of the truth, with the force to promulgate it and to establish itself in the actual control of humanity in one government of righteousness. The Koreshan System is not partially, but wholly revolutionary; it does not propose to patch up the old world, but to clothe the world of the new age with new garments!

Talmage fastens the festal flowers of all the chapels and cathedrals of all Christendom into one great chain, to bind Easter with the great closing Easter of the world's history, the resurrection. He applies rhetoric to the rising righteous; ages have rolled round, and the great clock of the world's destiny strikes ten, eleven, twelve!—when time shall be no longer! Behold, the great archangel hovering; he takes the great trumpet and kisses into it one long, loud, terrific, thunderous, reverberating, resurrectionary blast. Look at the graveyards! Tombs are tumbling, graves are gaping, coffins are cleaving,

And bones of bodies are breaking through! See, they rise! the dead, the scattered skeletons; souls and spirits are selecting the reviving ruins; magic and miracle mold new matter, dead and decayed, into flesh and forms; and spirit and soma, soul and skeleton become united. Chemistry creates clothing for the ascension into the sky of the radiant righteous. The procession begins; the brilliant bonfire of the burning earth begins, the bonfire of victory. Upward and away! Christ comes and carries the Christians carefully under the cover of his wings, battalion after battalion, nation after nation! Up, up! On, on! to the everlasting gates, to the peace of paradise beyond the systems of suns and stars. Open! open! with the keys, and let the conquering hosts come in! Judgment, joy! Palms, peace! Resurrection! Resurrection!

An evolutionist concludes that if God is self-created, there must have been a time when he did not exist, and hence a time when he began to exist; and that there are certain existing things which antedate the Almighty, some of which are infinite space, eternal time, and equally eternal matter. It is a fundamental doctrine in Koreshanity, that God creates himself; that life in any domain is perpetuated through the seed of its life. Wheat creates itself through its seed; the Almighty creates himself and perpetuates his existence through the Seed-man, the Messiah. Jesus the Christ was "the beginning of the creation of God," not only the beginning of the work of creation, the new creation, but he was the "beginning of the creation of God;" the generation of Jesus was the process of the making of God Almighty! The outer sphere of divine activity is limited by the outermost plane to which life can descend, the limited physical cosmos, with its limited space; the cycles of time necessary for the Almighty to create and reproduce himself are the limited spheres of time, measured in humanity and in the co-ordinate physical universe, the cycle of the precession of the equinoxes. The physical universe is eternal; it has always possessed its life; it was never dead. Any system of evolution which starts with the hypothesis that effect can be infinitely greater, or any greater or less than cause, is nothing but a vagary!

Along with the trusts and combines, is manifest a tendency to municipal trusts for the manipulation and control of public utilities—for the benefit of political rings, and not for the people. As foreshown in THE FLAMING SWORD at the close of 1898, the present year is marked by the success of the many antithetical movements in co-operation. The capitalists are co-operating, the syndicates are combining, and trusts are forming; America is expanding, nations are uniting, and churches are preparing for a great federation. Clubs, leagues, societies, unions,—organizations of every description in every line of human relations,—are multiplying; every trade is forming a brotherhood of workmen, and every line of business is concentrating its forces. The world is preparing for a great contest of forces, a great battle—the battle of Gog and Magog. The tendency to municipal ownership is the manifestation of a determination of certain elements to fight the trusts; other movements are for the purpose of preventing trusts, that competition may be perpetuated. The old house is divided against itself and cannot stand; revolution and ruin are inevitable, when the keystones are removed from the supporting arches!

It is a proof of the unity of humanity in Jesus, that the primitive Christian church contained doctrines similar to every ancient system of religion and philosophy. It is equally a proof that each of the many systems of philosophy in the days of Jesus was a mere fragment, from the fact that it did not and could not find place for what the others contained. If Jesus had the ability to put together and harmonize the features of the fragmentary systems, he manifested a profundity of thought and mental perception and comprehension of truth that the founders of other systems did not possess! With equal force, the argument is applied to the Koreshan System of Universology, the evolution of the philosophy of Jesus. It would require generations to put together, by external processes, all of the fragments and beliefs of the world. Libraries would have to be searched, the journals of all the world perused, and advocates of thousands of views consulted. Koreshanity has not come by such a process; but the fact that it contains the unity of all truth of the universe, demonstrates its supreme authority, and the marvelous capacity of the mind which involves and expresses it!

There is nothing in the popular theories of world formation to indicate that the earth's axis has ever changed its obliquity to the plane of the ecliptic. If the earth was thrown out from the sun, or if it was pitched from the hand of the Creator, or evolved from whirling vortices, its planes of rotation and revolution would remain the same continually. Astronomers generally agree that there has been no marked change in the tilt of the poles since the beginning. There are, however, many facts discovered which disprove the statement that the earth's ecliptic and equator have always sustained their present relations. There is abundant evidence demonstrating that the north and south polar regions were once tropical. The facts of astronomy, geology, and cosmography point unmistakably to the truth of Koreshan Science, and as directly and unmistakably refute the popular conclusions. The change of the ecliptic and equator is the simple result of the change of the earth's magnetic centers, and consequent change in the direction of the axis of revolution of the heavens.

The Baptist Flag asks, referring to our statement that the refinement of this age is "the mere refinement of hell according to the devil's code of morals," if THE FLAMING SWORD has "been living all this time in 'hell's half acre' in Chicago." Hell covers a greater area than a half acre—not only the entire city of Chicago, but the country and the world! It is not simply hell on the half shell of the world, but the entire hollow! We cannot conceive of this present mortal and corrupt world being any less hell than it was nineteen hundred years ago; then it was a generation of vipers, children of the great serpent. Jesus told the truth when he declared that the mortal world was from beneath, its father being the devil. Hell's domain is the devil's, a never-ending legacy to his children. It is the domain of death; it is the home of the devil, the home of death, the home of the present dying world. Of course, hell has its focal points; Chicago is one of them,—and the old Jerusalem in the time of Jesus was another!

The modern churches, both Jewish and Christian, are asking themselves the question, How can we enlist the young people in the church? A paper recently presented before the central conference of American rabbis sounds a note of lamentation, affirming that careful observation reveals the fact that for the most part it is not religion that attracts the young; that beneath the thin varnish of piety, club methods are resorted to, and that the only thing that points to heaven is the church steeple! It has been said that everything else but a desire to know the truth, calls the rising generation to the temples and synagogues. The life of the church has long since left it; only the shell remains, and now it is breaking up by forces before which the leaders are helpless to do aught else than federate the remains, as the foundry gathers up material for the heap of scrap-iron!

Modern charity is a system of false philanthropy. In the present social and economic system of competition, the wealth of the masses is stolen, and small sums given back to the classes who suffer most from lack of employment and substantial support. An exchange says that by recent investigations it has been shown that two thirds of the money given to charity bureaus, is used in paying salaries of charity officers. Charity work is an auxiliary of the iniquitous system which prevails in the world. It is called Christian work; it serves to make a showing in church and society reports, to make the poor feel contented while more wealth is being taken, and to cover up a few dark blots on modern society and government!

Inconceivable distances are traversed in the limited cell of the universe. It is estimated that all of the blood in the human system passes through the heart every three minutes. The mileage of blood circulation reveals some astonishing and undreamed of figures. With the average 69 heart-beats in a minute, the blood travels 207 yards in 60 seconds, 7 miles an hour, or 61,320 miles per year. If a single corpuscle could move continuously for 100 years, it would cover a distance of over 6,000,000 miles; and the aggregate distance covered by corpuscles in all the 1,500,000,000 people of the world in 100 years, would be over one quintillion (1,000,000,000,000,000,000) miles!

How strangely the world perverts the facts of the universe. Under the world-wide delusion that no man ever lived before Adam, a Philadelphia professor speculates what language Adam spoke. He purposes discovering it by isolating 100 children in an experimental colony, allowing them to communicate their thoughts in ignorance of any known language. What language did Adam speak? He spoke the language of God Almighty, for he was the Almighty! It is sheer absurdity to undertake to discover the divine tongue by experimenting on the children of the devil.

A great trust of nations may result from the Czar's peace conference—the great peace syndicate, the United States of Europe! This is obviously the year of federation of the world's great forces; combines of great industries, formation of syndicates for the control of the products of labor, the federation of the churches, and the conjunction of the planets. What a remarkable year in the history of the world! What startling signs of the times,—and who can read them?

Koreshanity scientifically defines the great issues in the campaign of righteousness; it makes sure the calling and election of its candidates. It bombards fallacy with truth; destroys sensuality with purity, and its antidote of death is the Elixir of Life. The turning point is the vortex of revolution; its result is peace, and its reward is natural immortality in the tangible world.

The ancient Jews believed in re-embodiment, and Jesus taught it: "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? Some say, Elijah, and others Jeremiah, or one of the prophets." The genealogy of Jesus marks out the line through which he came down from Abraham, the personalities in whom he had existed during the Jewish age.

The democratic party cannot constitute a factor in the divine kingdom; it is opposed to American expansion. According to Bible prophecy and the Koreshan scientific forecasts of the world's destiny, the government of the twentieth century will expand until it fills the whole earth!

A Chicago electrician has invented a plan to prevent fraud on the part of the purchaser of articles from the slot machines; but genius hesitates to make application of any device to prevent fraud in the board of trade and stock exchange!

The world itself, not simply its methods, must be reformed; it would be as impossible for a corrupt humanity to exist in a new order of divine light, as it is for a system of righteousness to prevail in the nineteenth century.

With war in the Philippines and a war cloud growing in the zenith of Samoa, the Pacific Ocean is not peaceful; its waters are agitated by American and British warships.

The difference between alchemy and chemistry is, that alchemy demonstrates that matter is destructible, while chemistry holds that matter cannot be destroyed.

The mill cannot grind with the water that is past; present thought only is of use, present life only is available. Existence is always in the present tense.

Alchemy is the light of transmutation, chemistry its darkness. Al means light, and chemistry demonstrates its character in omitting the prefix.

When the new world is ushered in, there must be a new humanity with a new mind to inhabit it.

The church is in a sorry plight; it does not know where Jesus is,—it has lost its head!

The false shepherds of the church keep the wool pulled over the eyes of the sheep.

The man who undertakes to borrow truth, increases the rate of interest on fallacy.

The competitive system is maintained by the beast and the false profit.

Plutocracy and power are combining against the people and poverty!

Even the image of the earth's surface in the eye is concave!

The white man's burden is the white man!

The Elixir of Life is human vitality.

Death is the devil's trust.

What Does the Sphinx of Egypt Signify?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I saw in a recent paper that some noted scientist has discovered that the Sphinx in Egypt was erected to commemorate the winter solstice, as explained in the enclosed clipping; but it does not look reasonable. Can you give a more rational explanation?—A. H. C., Cass Lake, Minn.

The paper before us announces the theory rather than the discovery of Prof.

Beswick, that the Sphinx is a monument to Spring, erected to commemorate the lengthening summer days. The idea is founded on the fact that the body of the Sphinx is like a lion, with a man's head; and that the corresponding constellations, Leo and Aquarius, are in the horizon at midnight of midwinter.

The great Light of Egypt is reflected from the face of the Sphinx. The Egyptians were concrete in thought, and embodied their wisdom in symbols such as the Sphinx, the Great Pyramid, the obelisks, etc. The Sphinx is a monument of Bio-Astronomy; it is a gigantic prophetic symbol, and it has stood during all the ages in which its declarations have been successively fulfilled.

The Sphinx represents the culmination of the great cycle of Mazzaroth, the power of truth in ultimates, which is Leo, and the commercial uses of life,—Aquarius; these are the constellations in the horizon of the Sphinx in midwinter, and Leo and Aquarius are opposite constellations and opposite signs in the Zodiac. In a reflex sense, the Sphinx represents the Anglo-Saxon race; England is the power of the lion, which is the power of commerce; and the power to control the multitudes, which is Aquarius. The Sphinx also represents individuality, specifically in America, and the man who introduced individual liberty into the world,—George Washington. The face of the Sphinx resembles Washington's.

The word sphinx means the throttler, and portrays the law which governs the resurrection of the dead. Jesus was the Lion of the tribe of Judah; Judah is the heart, the lion is the heart, and the sign Leo indicates the heart. And one function of the heart is to throttle, because it chokes off the currents of venous and arterial circulation, and regulates their flow; the circulation of the goods of life is commerce; therefore Leo is the power of commerce, while Aquarius is the science of government. This principle of the lion not only applies to secular commerce, but also to church and sex commerce. Consequently, the Sphinx signifies the throttling of human passions in the control of sex. Jesus was the great Sphinx, who, by virtue of the operation of the Holy Spirit, communicated the power of the lion to throttle the passions; it is through this power that man overcomes death and rises in the resurrection.

The Sphinx was used as a chapel; there is an underground passage-way leading to the subterranean chamber, the hell, of the Great Pyramid; from thence extends the "well," to the mouth of the Grand Gallery which, according to the chronology of the Pyramid, enters the Grand Gallery at A. D. 33; representing the resurrection of Jesus, which typifies the resurrection, or harvest, of the Christian dispensation.

As the constellations Leo and Aquarius are in the horizon both morning and evening, while the sun is in Capricornus, so the Sphinx, with the body of a lion and head of a man, represents the beginning and the end of the present dispensation,—the Lion of the tribe of Judah, Jesus; and the great Teacher at the end of the dispensation, the water-carrier, Aquarius, the container of the universal solvent, scientific truth, which solves all problems. Prof. Beswick is ignorant of the scientific language of symbolism; and therefore his theory, while partially true, applies in a remarkably limited sense, compared to the Koreschan interpretation of all the phases of prophecy and truth of the great stone image in the desert.

Where Has Jesus Been During the Past 1800 Years?

(1) You say that Jesus the Christ was transmuted to spirit and was planted in the race; then according to that there was no more Jesus Christ in existence, only in a segregated condition; but the Scriptures say that he is the "same, yesterday, today, and forever."

(2) You also teach that when he comes again he will not be the same individual that he was while in the world, and that he ascended after his resurrection, but will come in the 144,000 personalities. But the angels said to the disciples that the same Jesus would come again in like manner as they had seen him go away.—S. L. B., Cal.

(1) If Jesus, born into the world as a natural man, went away bodily into the clouds, taking with him his substance, his life, and mind, he was neither the promised seed, nor the bread to be eaten by the church, nor did he impart his life to his disciples. If Jesus did not enter the church as he said he would; if he did not go into his disciples as he promised; if their mortal bodies did not become the temples of his own individual, divine life, then he was neither the life-giver nor the divine seed, and consequently could not be the Messiah to baptize his people with himself.

The only way by which Jesus could get into his disciples as the substances of divine life, was by reducing himself to spirit; and if he entered his disciples, he did not go off into the sky. A seed enters the soil and dies in it; it comes again in the order of its reproduction, and the multiplied seed stands forth with the same life and consciousness. Wheat is sown in the soil; it dies and comes again in the harvest; it is the same wheat, the "same, yesterday, today, and forever," and it is ever the same by virtue of its own functions of reproduction, which is in and through death. This is the law of the resurrection of God Almighty. Jesus was segregated; his body was broken up as the bread of life; the Shepherd was smitten and the sheep were scattered into humanity to bring forth much fruit. The animal life of Jesus has not lived since it died in the mortal church, but his central spirit "ever liveth;" it is that part of the Almighty which never dies, the most central, the highest consciousness of the universe,—Elohi. The external life of Jesus has been in the church during the age; he died in it, fell away and apostatized with it, just as the external life of the seed must become the stalk to dry up and decay, while its interior life becomes renewed in the seed at the end of the season.

(2) What matter is it if the same personality of Jesus does not return? Did he not say that if, as the seed, he should remain out of the ground and should not die, he would abide alone? If he abided alone, there could be no salvation of humanity, no more sons of God, for the same reason that if there were only one grain of wheat in the universe, and that one should be kept intact out of the ground, there could be no more wheat! If the body of Jesus went into the sky, there is no resurrection, neither can there be any. When Jesus came into the world nineteen hundred years ago, did he have the same body he possessed before he came? If he multiplies himself into 144,000 sons of God just like himself, he will be 144,000 times more glorious than in one. Jesus was the Godhead; and the perfect structure of the Christ necessitates the Godbody, with perfect members of the divine Man, the completeness of himself, in the amplification of his life in the divine evolution. The harvest of abundant yield is more glorious than the one seed sown! The resurrection is the harvest; it is the resurrection of Jesus' own life, the resurrection of God! The same Savior is come again in the field in which he was sown; and God and man will again become conjoined, not in one man only, not in one resurrected being, but in 144,000, who will overcome death and become sons of God through the power given them when the divine life was sown in them at the beginning of the age.

Substances of the Immortal Flesh.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) If there is no immortal body in the earth at the present time, and has not been since the flesh of Jesus was changed to Holy Spirit nineteen hundred years ago, how can you determine by analysis what substances composed the Holy Spirit? Is there no difference in the combination of elementary substances in the mortal and the immortal flesh?

Modern scientists teach that there are from 69 to 73 elementary substances, and that all or nearly all of these are found in the human body. If they are found in different proportion in different bodies, and yet we find no immortal flesh, how do you know how many elementary substances are contained in the immortal body? What are they, and in what proportion are they found?

(2) What part of the body contains the crucible in which they are melted and compounded? What is the kind of fire used, and who is the refiner?—E. E. L., Curtis, Neb.

(1) Concerning the difference between the mortal and the immortal flesh, we refer our correspondent to the article by KORESH in this issue, "The Alchemy of Human Life," a scientific analysis of the divine fire, showing the difference between the atoms of the mortal and the immortal man, the psychology of matter, and atomic experiences in the progress of life.

In the analysis of human life, more things are to be considered than the mere so called elementary substances. Common chemical analysis can detect no difference between organic and inorganic elements. The problem of the life of matter has not been solved by the chemist; alchemy alone is able to trace life in its ascent and descent through all the planes of experience from the mineral to the man. In the study of this subject, every vestige of the theory of chemistry must be eradicated from the mind.

The immortal man is the complete involution of the universe; he is the summing up of universal experience, and involves all its "elements," and possesses its functions. Whatever is in the great world is in the world in its least form—the perfect man. If we can understand the universe, its form and functions, we can know definitely the functions of the immortal man, what he contains, and the relations of all his parts.

(2) In what part of a plant is the crucible in which its life is elaborated and renewed? In the seed. The seed is formed by processes of involution of life, through aspiration of corpuscles. Analyze the seed in its relation to the plant, and the secret of the elaboration of life is known. In the generation of mortal life, the fires of sensualism burn in body and brain; in the generation of immortal life, it is the divine fire which burns and purifies. The transformation of mortal life to immortal life is Messianic; the Messiah of the new dispensation is the crucible. The divine fire, the theocrasis or translation, burns up the Messiah of every dispensation; it burned up Enoch, Moses, Elijah, and Jesus.

At the end of this dispensation the fire will be communicated to thousands, and the result will be the so called translation of the saints. It is to be applied scientifically; immortality will come through the destruction of the conarium or pineal gland of the human brain. The Messenger of the Covenant, Elijah the Prophet, is the refiner to purify a people for the new age.

Severing Mortal Relations for Immortality.

(1) In order to overcome death in the body, is it required of one to forsake father, mother, wife, and children; and must one enter the Ecclesia? Or can one remain with father, mother, wife, and children, and by living a chaste life still overcome death?

(2) When a man dies and his spirit enters the spiritual (mental) world, is the individuality of the departing spirit lost, and if not, does it retain consciousness of its previous existence?—E. C. D., Cedar Lane, Pa.

(1) The laws of life are no more immutable than are the laws of death. Ties that are not severed for life are severed by death. One cannot leave this world of present relations, either to enter the spiritual world or the immortal condition, without severing all present ties and relations.

Nineteen hundred years ago, it was declared by Jesus emphatically, that unless a man forsook his father, mother, brother, sister, wife, children, houses, and lands, —everything, he was not even worthy of being his disciple. Do you suppose that a corpuscle in the plant could ever enter the seed if it chose to remain with the retrogressive corpuscles? Do you know what becomes of such? Corpuscles that choose to stay together in the relations in which they grew, go to make up the stock, and they all ultimately die together; while the progressive ones, severing all ties, unite in the seed with newer and higher relations.

Unless a man leaves all, he cannot even be a soldier of the U. S. army! Can he remain at home and fight the enemy? Unless a man leaves the influences and the ties which bind him to the mortal plane, he can never become immortal; the two planes are distinct; the one is hell, and the other is heaven. He cannot serve two masters, two directly opposite influences; it is either one or the other. The change of the devil's flesh to the immortal flesh, the flesh of God, must be complete or not at all. If a man cannot cease to be a devil, then he cannot become a God. Jesus enunciated the two great commandments on which depended all the other principles or laws of life, when he said that one must love the Messiah supremely, with all the soul and strength, and the neighbor as one's self; and there is not a power in the universe that can change the conditions or laws through which immortality obtains. There must be no other gods placed before the true Pole of Life, when manifest in the world with Messianic function.

(2) Mortal man is not individual; he is already vidual. When he dies there is a dissolution of his body, and a corresponding dissolution of the soul; however, the central ego maintains its viduality, and the entities of the mind retain their consciousness, but not their memory. Individuality is not reached until the resurrection, and not until then is memory of past embodiments regained. See reply under head of Conscious, Individual Immortality in issue of April 7.

ACTIVE SOLICITORS WANTED EVERYWHERE for "The Story of the Philippines," by Murat Halstead, commissioned by the Government as official Historian to the War Department. The book was written in army camps at San Francisco, on the Pacific, with General Merritt, in the hospitals at Honolulu, in Hong Kong, in the American trenches at Manila, in the insurgent camps with Aguinaldo, on the deck of the Olympia with Dewey, and in the roar of battle at the fall of Manila. Living Inside the Earth.

Prominent Scientists Now Claim that We Live Inside Instead of Outside the Globe.

The Detroit Journal Favorably Reviews the Cellular Cosmogony.

The question of the form of the earth is one that has never ceased to be an interesting scientific problem. While the school books teach us that this globe we inhabit is almost round, and treat all contrary theories as ridiculously obsolete, there are still many people to be found who, even today, will persist in asserting that the old astronomers were entirely wrong in their conclusions. They admit that the arguments advanced by such ancient philosophers as Pythagoras, Copernicus, Galileo, and Newton were based upon theories that might reasonably have seemed to be correct at that time, but they insist that that time has passed, and hold that those who now persist in teaching children that the earth is a sphere, are morally guilty of a great crime.

The probable shape of the earth is a question that has always puzzled philosophers and scientists. It is a subject for which great and good men have suffered; and yet it still appears to be a problem on which all scientists are not agreed, for just as we had the matter nicely settled, another company of philosophers has appeared to tell us that we are all wrong, and that our duty to ourselves and to posterity should compel us to unlearn all we have learned and begin over again.

It is true that the antagonism to these generally accepted laws comes only from a limited number of persons; but there was a time when even Galileo and Newton were in the minority, and one would be narrow-minded indeed, to refuse to listen to the arguments advanced by those who are struggling to persuade the world to change its mind upon this subject, however fanciful their theories may appear.

It was only the other day that one of some repute advanced the opinion that the earth is square, and he presented what probably seemed to him to be indisputable evidence in support of his theory. In the same way, there are people who today believe that the ancients had the only correct view of things, and that the earth is really a flat, circular body, floating on water. Others believe that the Ptolemaic system was correct, when it declared that the earth was immovable in the center of the universe, while others again hold that the earth is in the form of a long cylinder.

A Scientist Finds a New System.

All these theories have been exploited so many times, however, that they can be passed with the merest mention; but the newest and most astounding proposition of all is worthy of more consideration. This theory is to the effect that the earth is a hollow sphere, and that we are living on the crust inside.

Dr. Cyrus R. Teed is the scientist who has evolved this new system; and while the road that he has mapped out has proved too hard a one for many of the best thinkers to tread, he has found no difficulty in winning converts to his theories, so that it may be said that there are some reasonably sane people today who believe that "Koreshanity," as he calls his system, is the only solution to the old problem of the earth's shape.

Dr. Teed's system is quite an elaborate one, for it embraces not only the form of the earth, but propounds entirely new astronomical laws. It teaches that we do not live on a convex surface, but that the earth is a vast concave sphere, on the inner surface of which we exist. This sphere curves concavely eight inches to the mile, being 8,000 miles in diameter and 25,000 miles in circumference. The evidence to prove the correctness of this theory has been found by the use of a new and curious instrument called the Geodetic Rectilineator.

This wonderful device for measuring the earth is the invention of Prof. U. G. Morrow and while scientists of the best repute have laughed at the pretensions of the inventor, it is nevertheless claimed as a fact that the standing challenge of $100,000 to be paid to any recognized leader of scientific thought who will demonstrate that the instrument is in any way inaccurate, has not been claimed. From the basis of measurement taken by this Geodetic Rectilineator, all other calculations respecting the universe are made.

Its Principal Features.

One of the most important items in connection with the amazing theories of Dr. Teed, is that of the central invisible sun. This is a body that, it is claimed, rotates on its axis, and is nothing more nor less than electricity in essence, having a positive and negative side. When its positive side is toward us, it projects its energies in currents throughout the sphere; and the rays, passing through the various atmospheres, which act as lenses, produce light and heat. The appearance of the negative side produces night.

According to the teachings of "Koreshanity," the shell which we call the earth is 100 miles in thickness. It is formed of metallic and mineral strata, containing all the principles of an electrical medium, the energies generated being stored in the invisible sun. As we live on the inside of the shell, so the continents and the seas cover the inside, just as they are now supposed to cover the outside of the earth.

Dr. Teed treats the heavenly firmament on lines that are just as new and novel as his theories in regard to the earth. He explains that the sun, the moon, and the stars are focused at different points of degrees of intensity, quality, and origin. The stars and the planets are but little points of focalized energy, spheres in the process of combustion, their diameter being very small. In the same way, the comets are nothing more than lenticular reflections of the sun's rays through lenses, and they do not fly off into space and return. They simply plunge back into and feed the sun. Eclipses of the sun occur by reason of the conjunction of the sun and moon causing an eclipse of the sun by a reflex of its own self.

According to the Koreshan theory, there is nothing beyond the outer crust of this hollow globe. The shell within which we live is the limit of the universe. Nothing more exists.

Objections Ingeniously Explained Away.

However ridiculous the theories of Dr. Teed may appear, it must be admitted that he has some quite logical explanations of the different phenomena, and all the objections that might ordinarily be raised are explained away very ingeniously. For instance, there is the old school book example of the ship disappearing behind the hill of water.

To this "Koresh" says, that when a ship has sailed to the vanishing point of the space equal to the altitude of the eye from the water, all the ship's hull embraced within that vertical space will become invisible, while the sails above that horizontal visual line will be still in view. Extend the visual line of power with the telescope, and the vanishing point is pushed farther away, according to the power of the eyepiece, and the hull is again brought plainly to view.

The reason why we cannot see across the hollow globe, Dr. Teed tells us, is because the atmospheres intervene. They are of different composition and different density, and refract rays of light and vision. In fact, we are told we can see but little farther than the upper stratum of our air, and the reason why we can see the sun, the moon, and the stars so plainly, is that they are near the junction of our own atmosphere and hydrogen.

Such is the theory of the earth's form and substance; and if we are not prepared to admit that all we know about astronomy and the other sciences is not worth knowing—as one must do before he can accept the doctrines of "Koreshanity"—we must allow that the theory is an ingenious one, and that the man who could develop such an idea into a quasi-practical science is at least entitled to some consideration.—Detroit Journal, March 18, 1899.

Surveying Air-Lines in the Minds of the People.

Among Government Surveyors, Teachers, and Clergymen; Excitement over the Cellular Cosmogony.

I have disposed of 63 books in this place (Carthage, N. Y.); could have sold 25 more if I had them to spare, but I only had 40 left for two other places on my route before another order is received. The whole town is excited. One government surveyor, who with others is surveying the new ship canal, told me today that the disappearance of vessels on the sea was "only a trick of the eye." Have sold books to six teachers in the public schools, and to three ministers. The teachers are talking CELLULAR COSMOGONY to their pupils, and the ministers are talking it to their people. Do not fail to have 150 books at G—, on the 7th; in fact you ought to ship the books at once, as I must have them right away. I gave away six books here, where I know they will do good; one went to the government surveyor.—REV. U. GORDON MITCHELL, Traveling Representative of Guiding Star Publishing House.

A Surveyor Changes his Mind and Purchases Two Copies.

A surveyor who had refused to purchase a CELLULAR COSMOGONY or to have anything to do with it, after reading the circular, changed his mind, came to the Mission and purchased two copies, one of which he sent to another surveyor. The CELLULAR COSMOGONY is reaching the brain cells of thinking people!—Dr. GEO. CANNON, Cal.

"Live Questions."

Ex-Governor John P. Altgeld Answers Them.

The most notable book on science of government announced this season is "Live Questions," by Ex-Governor John P. Altgeld. The usual dryness of philosophical research and observation is missing from the 1,000 pages of this remarkable volume.

The range of subjects treated is exhaustive, complete, surprising. One's amazement is, however, turned to implicit confidence when the fact becomes evident that every question involving the rights of man has been deemed equally important, and weighed with the same fine consideration and impartiality by the author.

He presents the doleful wretchedness of our penal system as a fascinating study, appealing to the better nature and highest reason of the citizen. The Money Question rises out of politics at his bidding to attract the eager, thoughtful interest of rich and poor alike. His interpretation of Municipal Ownership discovers opportunities and possibilities no taxpayer can ignore. He takes apart the corrupt machinery of politics, and shows its hideous destructiveness to a startled sovereignty. A little volume might be written describing this great one. Read it, study it, be led by it to a fuller appreciation of the responsibility of citizenship and the importance of an intelligent interest in the affairs of State.

The handsome library edition is ready for delivery and will be supplied at $2.50 by Geo. S. Bowen & Son, Unity building, Chicago.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY and FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in weeks of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of relig on; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 5 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follum. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.80; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 10 cents.

The World's Irrepressible Conflict and Revolution.

The Inevitable Convulsions of Society; Prognosis and Cure of Humanity's Malady; Final Messianic Manifestation With the Great Panacea.

VOLUMES have been and are being written upon the subject of the tendency of the competitive system, toward that abomination of desolation involved in the conflict between the producers of wealth and the accumulated capital—so called—hoarded by the monopolist. There is an irrepressible conflict between the money power—created by the wage slave—and the slave himself, which not only threatens, but which will utterly disrupt the present foundations of a social fabric built upon the quicksand of commercial greed.

We can add nothing whatsoever to the portrayal of the causes and tendencies of a system conceived in hell and gestated in the depths of human depravity. While we may add nothing by way of diagnosis in the case of the sick man of the Christian age, our prognostications differ widely from those of the medical experts who have had the case in charge,—and their name is legion,—for we entertain no hope of recovery from the religious, moral, and political leprosy gnawing at the very vitals of the dying man.

The world is rapidly hastening toward its vortex of disintegration. We are at the end of the age, and are entering upon the times of dissolution and violent revolution. Knowing the inevitable, we can but commiserate the poor fools who are trying to lull the world into the peaceful and false security of an artificial slumber, and the greater idiots who delight in the influence of the soporifics administered by the soothsayers of a moribund Christian civilization. The ancient prophets were the "calamity howlers" of their times, but they declared the truth and were stoned by those to whom they were sent; and the Son of God—very truth and very life—died most ignominiously where Golgotha's rock drank the innocent blood which issued from the altar of Jehovah, destroyed by those who professed to long for his appearing.

There is nothing so repulsive to the majority of mankind, in any age of the world, as the naked truth. A lie is the sweeter morsel, when compared with truths demanding sacrifices to the essential end of the closer walk with God, and the evolution of a human brotherhood in the fellowship of a divinely united life. Religions prosper which soothe the conscience, stultify the moral sense, and diminish social obligation. That social life is the most attractive which contributes to the lower nature, and affords the greatest pleasure to human lusts and passions. The most consummate intellectual force is directed toward those commercial possibilities which enable the possessors to degrade the race and create a generation of bondmen (wageslaves) who, if it were possible, should be forever ground beneath the iron heel of a commercial despotism.

The love of money is substituted for the love of God; in fact, human loves are all devoted to the worship of mammon in many of his hydra-headed forms. Modern Christianity has so far degenerated as to be known as Christian only by the variety of labels placed conspicuously upon the forehead of the animal representing the phase of religious conviction which each sect has prostituted. Men are dishonest, hypocritical, and seductive. Our religious liberty, what little we enjoy, is indebted more to the force of atheism and infidelity, than to religious toleration from the sectaries forever at war on some technicality of religious statement; and yet, from this dumping ground for the debris of centuries of prostitution, the reform philosophers of the age would conglomerate and build a new and lasting social fabric!

The Christian world, upon the basis of commercial interest, fosters the growth, manufacture, and commercial distribution of the greatest curses to social righteousness; and these tendencies are augmenting proportionately to the amplification of that secular and mercantile spirit upon which depend the greatest activities of the times. The most Christian of them all, in some of the phases of Latin supremacy, and under the auspices of Christian pretension, has trodden under the feet of religious intolerance and commercial despotism the millions of so called heathen that have been educated into their conception of the Christian belief, from the irony of the Olive Branch in the mockery of the symbol of peace on earth, good will to men.

The commercial spirit and power, upon the basis of competism, comprise the dominating control of the age. The social and moral reformers know this, but they think to change the leopard and his spots by taking off his skin and substituting the skin of a butchered lamb. They expect to take the body and soul of an apostate and prostituted life, without a religious and moral transformation, and make of it either a Christian or an antichristian socialism. Old Christianity is dead; the only thing it lacks is inhumation. Its stench is an abomination in the nostrils of Jehovah.

The remedy is not in the progressive evolution of a religious and social perfection, in the order of the further development of modern civilization. Our civilization is a prostitution of Christianity; it is the product of a mongrel consortation of Christianity and paganism, without even the semblance of a Christian life. The world demands a revolution, in the recognition of the promised Messiah, through whom will come the higher and final baptism of the Zodiacal cycle, and the inauguration of such a religio-socialism as shall portray the construction of an organic unity, divinely imperial and permanent, because ordained of God through the regeneration of the race.

Modern Christian socialism is a farce; it grows as a theoretical system, without any practical momentum, because it is a farce. "Barnum's greatest show on earth" was the supreme attraction of its kind, because he put his energies into the introduction of some new humbug in his show and upon his posters, and the attraction was in proportion to the spuriousness of his claims. It is the same with all the modern efforts to gull the world into some new social or religious conviction. But the birth of the coming kingdom is well defined in the symbolic language of Revelation xii:1,2.

The remedy for human ills is in the presence of Elijah the prophet, who comes "like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi [the sons of conjunction with God], and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven." This is a conflagration of men, originating in the Messenger of the Covenant (conjunction), and communicated to the thousands who shall enter the fire to be consumed and transformed into eternal sonship.

Another overshadowing of the Holy Spirit is the purifying remedy for this degenerate age. God alone is the great Physician, and he alone, in his final Messianic manifestation, will supply the world with the efficient force of its revolutionary power. Every pretended reform is merely the putting of a new patch onto an old garment,—in which the rent is greater than before,—and the filtration of new wine into old bottles. The doctrine (wine) of the coming age is new wine, and it demands a new bottle with a new name.

The Christian age is full,—full of corruption. Let it perish with its pollution. Christianity ends. God will give to the world another religious system, suited to the genius of the new section of the grand cycle. It will involve and evolve from Christianity, as Christianity—by involving the Lord Jesus and evolving the Christian system—was the product of Judaism. As Christianity succeeded Judaism in the progressive evolution of the race of men, so the coming system will succeed and be substituted for the defunct Christianity. Remember the declaration of the prophet. The world will be baptized with a new outpouring of the divine fire, which will burn (dematerialize) the thousands who will enter it.

The administration of one of the functions of government has been, hitherto, to rule men. In the new kingdom this function will have become obsolete because man will be a law unto himself, and the energies of administration will then be expended in contributing to the needs of men.

Change of thought so radical as to completely revolutionize desire, purpose, and possibility,—the essential change upon which the transformation of society depends,—cannot be insured except through anatomical and hence physiological transformations.

The world cannot and never could tolerate the truth.

The Regathering of Israel.

The Pilgrimage of the Lost Tribes to the New Jerusalem; Their Course From the Old to the New World Through Ethnic Infiltration.

PROFESSOR TOTTEN is still Jew's-harping on Israel's return to Palestine. There is but one thing that can possibly restore Israel to God's favor, and this must constitute the basis of many radical changes before there can be a recognition by the Lord of his people under the title Ammi, "my people;" for through Israel's apostasy from Judah they became "Lo Ammi," "not my people." This transformation from Lo Ammi to Ammi, has its specific force in the application of the principle of circumcision, of which the circumcision of the ancient Jews was merely a type. From what we know of the theory of the Anglo-Israelites, we judge that they know nothing of the true significance of circumcision; and they do not and cannot define the anatomical and physiological changes to which the old circumcision pointed, and which constituted the means to an ultimate end.

Israel was lost through ethnic infiltration. The ten tribes did not escape. They were absorbed. Ephraim shall go away into Assyria. Ephraim shall be eaten up by Assyrians. This prophecy was literally fulfilled in the intermarriage of the people of the ten tribes with the Medians, Persians, and Assyrians, the product of which we find in the Gentile race, culminating in the Anglo-Saxon.

The peoples embracing the Christian church are no longer Christian. They constitute the great apostasy, from the head—the Catholic church—to the tail—the Swedenborgian. The ten tribes apostatized when they departed from the ceremonials of the Jews. There can be no restoration until the deeper principles of circumcision are known and applied, for this is the only thing that can constitute one a member of the true House of Israel. The Germanic family is the product of the racial blending of Israel with Media, Persia, and Assyria. They are not Israel, nor can they be until they return to circumcision.

This is God's absolute declaration; and if Professor Totten, et al, had as much mental acumen on other lines as they have on chronology, they could easily perceive the force of this statement. Their chronological tables are somewhat to the point, but their applications are all off.

God's people will never be restored to the typical Palestine. The center of the Lord's Kingdom is in America not in Africa. The Christ appears in America, —in the new world, not in the old. In America, the first-fruits of the resurrection will be manifest. In the new world, the sons of God, the new genus or race of men, will come to fruition. In the New World, all things will begin to be made new. "Behold, I make all things new." "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem [not the old], which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him [not them] my new name."

Professor Totten is too rank a materialist to comprehend this language, in contradistinction to his non-Christian and non-spiritual, and even unnatural conception of God's truths. The Anglo-Israelites are doomed, like the ordinary Adventists, to utter disappointment regarding the character of the coming of the Lord and the establishment of his kingdom.

The Hastening Doom of Modern Monopoly.

Every Act of Oppression Hastens the Downfall of the Money Power and Prepares the Way for the Establishment of the Kingdom of Righteousness.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

WHEN, in the struggle between freedom and slavery in this country, Chief Justice Taney judicially decided that the negro had no rights which the white man was bound to respect, he officially rang the death knell of American slavery. The slave power was so dominant everywhere, at the time of this legal announcement, that the daring abolitionist who prophesied the speedy downfall of that system of despotism, was considered a crank and a dangerous lunatic, scarcely fit to run at large. Yet a very few years saw that colossal power of despotism utterly destroyed; and, as there is no remission of sins without the shedding of blood, the whole country, North and South, was dotted with nearly a million graves of the nation's best beloved sons.

It is safe to predict now, when Attorney General Griggs—the highest legal light in this government, which our fathers framed after seven years of cruel war with the mother country against the imposition of an insignificant tax on tea—formally decides that it possesses no power to protect its citizens against the extortion of a new kind of legal beings, the invention of cunning lawyers, which one of their number has fittingly characterized as insatiable appetites for pelf and power, that he pronounced the doom of monopoly, if not of the government that thus meekly announces its inability and want of disposition to protect the rights of its citizens to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which, according to the declaration of the fathers, was its only apology for its right to exist.

When it suits the desires of those in authority, governments do not hesitate to declare and act upon the declaration, that the clear and manifest duty to perform an act carries with it the right to do it. If we grant that there is no specific provision in the Constitution, in this case, which we do not, this fact cannot relieve the government from responsibility to act where all the rights of the citizen are at stake and being trampled under the unhallowed feet of conscienceless legal entities, of which the framers of the government had no knowledge. What recognized and legally protected right to life has a man when, by the acts of these freebooters, every opportunity to obtain the means of sustaining that existence is closed up? What liberty can he enjoy, when his means of sustaining life are taken away? What pursuit of happiness is left to him, when life and liberty are gone?

In view of such results of the handiwork of the cunning lawyer, how apt, as always, is the fateful denunciation of the Lord Jesus: "Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers;" and to the guilty recipients of the fruits of such criminal denial of the rights of the governed by the government, comes the weighty denunciation of impending calamities that threaten those who avail themselves of this dereliction of government, to oppress their fellow men, and heap together ill gotten riches for themselves.

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver are cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days [end of the age, now at hand]. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

When a government thus formally announces that it has given up the legitimate business of governing, it has no reason to complain if a higher power takes it at its word and closes its office.

An old proverb runs as follows: "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do;" and it is not to be expected that an organization with all the power of a modern government should be idle. When it has ceased to perform the proper functions of sovereignty, it will turn its power to the promotion of unrighteous ends. We ought not to be surprised to learn that when it has found an official exceptionally careful, and conscientious, and correct in fulfilling the duties of the office held,—the only requirements in office, if the rights of the people are in the care of government,—it removes him because of his religious opinions. It would seem that an intelligent power ought by this time, to have found out that persecution only strengthens the persecuted; and if they have the truth, only makes that truth more certain and speedily to triumph. Every act of oppression, instead of strengthening monopoly, only hastens its downfall and prepares the way for the ushering in of the kingdom of righteousness.

The one variety of the robber trusts that furnishes the sinews of war and the incentive for all of them,—that of the money-changer or banker,—is the very one that Jesus turned out of God's typical temple, pouring their money into the street, and characterizing their calling as robbery. He laid the ax at the root of the tree, and declared that every tree which did not bring forth good fruit should be hewn down. In the establishment of the kingdom of which He planted the seed, thus laying the foundation, which time is now at hand in the beginning of the new age, this accursed plant will be eliminated, root and branch, together with every other growth that has for its chief end the accumulation of that the love of which he declared to be the root of all evil. No wickedness can be destroyed or greatly crippled, until that which by the love of it is the incentive to all evil, is entirely removed. In the announcement of Attorney General Griggs, the world has the intimation that the time of such removal is at hand.

The Proclamation of Conquest.

"He Conquers Who Overcomes Himself;" the Conquest of Death; the Establishment of the Divine Kingdom and Its Expansion Throughout the World.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THEODORE PARKER, under the title "How to Move the World," relates this little story:

One day, a philosopher came to Athens from a far country, to learn the ways of the wonderful Greeks, and perhaps to teach them the great lore he treasured in his heart. The wise men heard him, sought his company in the gardens, talked with him in private. The young men loved him. He passed for a wonder with that wonder-loving people.

Among those that followed him, was the son of Sophroniscus, an ill favored young man, a mechanic of humble rank. He was one of the few that understood the dark oriental doctrines of the Sage, when he spoke of God, man-freedom, goodness, of the life of the immortals. The young man saw these doctrines were pregnant with actions, and would one day work a revolution in the affairs of men, disinheriting many an ancient sin now held legitimate. So he said to himself, when he saw a man rich or famous: "Oh, that I were also rich and famous. I would move the world so soon. Here are sins to be plucked up and truths to be planted. Oh! that I could do it all. I would mend the world right soon." Yet he did nothing but wait for wealth and fame.

One day the Sage heard him complain with himself, and said: "Young man, thou speakest as silly women. This gospel of God is writ for all. Let him that would move the world, move first himself. He that would do good to men, begins with what tools God gives him, and gets more as the world gets on. It asks neither wealth nor fame to live out a noble life at the end of thy lane in Athens. Make thy light, thy life; thy thought, action; others will come around. Thou askest a place to stand hereafter and move the world. Foolish young man; take it where thou standest, and begin now. So the work shall go forward. Reform thy little self, and thou hast begun to reform the world. Fear not thy work shall die!"

The youth took the hint; reformed himself of his coarseness, his sneers, of all the meanness that was in him. His idea became his life, and that, blameless and lovely. His truth passed into the public as the sun into the air. His acorn became the father of forests.

Nineteen hundred years ago the creative Deity, in form perfected man, passed by the new and living way into the spiritual realms of human mentality. He became the divine Idea, the God Ego, of the most progressive sphere of humanity. That divine Idea expressed in Holy Writ, as the legal measure of the perfect man, is found in the summary of the Decalogue in the form of two commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." The fulfilment of these two commandments produces the perfect man. The God to be so loved is revealed as the supremely lovable by the science of the universe. The neighbors to be loved as the self are God's neighbors; these are thy who love him as we love him.

The Science of Universology is the priceless possession of the Koreshan. This is his light, and this it is for him to make his life if he would become a true reformer of the world that lies in wickedness. It is for him to make the Koreshan motto a living epistle: "He conquers who overcomes himself," by a manifestation of daily victories over selfishness.

To the children of the light, true science is the glory, the radiance of God's throne, which is no less than the divine human mind perfected by light made life. "To him that overcometh," said Jehovah, "will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." To walk in the light of this throne is to overcome; to overcome is to be absorbed into the Deific mind. "Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him." To be absorbed into Deity, to become the life of the divine Idea, is to find the rest point of the power that moves the universe, and to become the generator of all life and all light.

The divine use of the Science of Universology is to produce the Gods, that the universe itself may be perpetually reproduced in ever-varying cycles of unique glory; and that God may be all in all, for God is in everything after its kind and degree; but his eternal throne is the mind of Jehovah, the perfect man, the divine human, the overcomer, the reformer. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

Humanity is transformed from glory to glory, by the periodic renewal of its mind, by the Holy Ghost, product of the transmutation of the life in the flesh of the overcomer, the reformed man. The supremacy of glory is reached by Jehovah, in the sacrifice of his supreme self by death in the mortal race, through obedience to the law of the cross, the central law of universal life. His life is taken again, or reformed from mortality, by the process of overcoming all the natural tendencies of the descending energies of the mortal flesh. By this process the race of Jehovah, those begotten by the spirit of the divine human, is saved to the outermost, the vile body of the mortal being clothed with immortality, and its corruptions transmuted to incorruption. This outermost salvation reforms and translates the fallen Lucifer to the throne of imperial Deity and supreme glory, and recovers the universe from perdition, and transfigures it by the power of the glory of the divine environment, the sons of Lucifer, the bright and morning Star.

The true reformer, the overcomer of this age, is the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel, the rising Lucifer, the cross-bearer, the High Priest of the order of Levi, who, as the Messenger of the New Covenant, sits as the refiner and purifier of the sons of Levi, the God-begotten mortals in whom the spirit of Jehovah begat a living hope, that they should be reformed in his image and likeness.

This Messenger is Lucifer, the light-bearer, the true Scientist. In his hands (the powers of the truth he brings), all the would-be sons of Levi must become as clay in the hands of the potter, and be molded by yielding to every demand of the science of the law. They must be washed by the waters of regeneration, the pure river of the water of life, and purged of all dross by the refining fires of the crucible of the divine Alchemist, the Ecclesia of the Rock, in which the love of God must be kindled and burn till his image and likeness alone remain of all that is cast into it. Then will the God-Man stand forth reformed,—as the way, the truth, the life, and the light of the world, in the glory of his divine Motherhood, and "She shall be called the Lord our Righteousness," and the sons of God shall stand reformed in the presence of this supreme Jehovistic glory, the unity of the Lord and his Bride,—the Church Triumphant.

Each dispensation culminates in its own peculiar order of fruit, no two dispensations of the same zodiacal series terminating in the same or exactly similar fruition. In the culmination however of a complete evolutionary series, the fruition corresponds in its every specific character with the full fruition of the preceding series.

The final fruition of the biogenous cycles of the physical and terrestrial domain, is a fruitage developed for the express purpose of transposition; and when the fruit of immortality is ripe, the angelic heavens appropriate it, and re-impregnate the terrestrial biogenous cycle for the gestation and production of another harvest.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

COMPARATIVE ANATOMY is the science of the structured relation of different types of organisms. Osteology is a branch of anatomical science, relating to the framework or skeletons of organisms. The laws of construction are so uniform throughout the entire human and animal kingdoms, as to enable anatomists to calculate the size of the structure of a man or an animal from a single bone; and not only animals with which they are familiar, but also of species that have become extinct. The correspondence of all organic structures is so complete and absolute, that whole structures may be articulated and developed with mathematical certainty; and a man is not considered an accomplished anatomist until he is able to describe a complete form from the basis of fragments of skeletons. Recently Prof. Kollman, a distinguished German archeologist and anatomist, discovered fragments of a human skull of great antiquity, and was enabled to reconstruct the skull and develop the face from the phrenological and physiognomical indications of the fragments. A further application of these principles develops comparative analogy, the laws of correspondence of forms and functions of structured organisms in all domains. We maintain that modern research has not been able to apply these principles to the full extent of universal analysis and synthesis. The climax of scientific achievement in comparative analogy is in the articulation and development of the anatomy of the structured universe, from the basis of the laws of construction of any organism in the field of comparative anatomical or analogical research. The greatest discovery of the age was made by the Founder of Koreshanity,—the discovery that the physical universe is the analogue of man, and that the laws of construction, so clearly observed, scientifically defined and absolutely applied in the human and animal kingdoms, demonstrate the form and function of the great physical structure which we inhabit, to be cellular. Koreshan Universology is the great synthetical system, complete in doctrinal articulation, analytical in application, definite and specific in its collocation of all parts of truth. Anatomists will ultimately come to recognize the certainty of its conclusions by means of laws and methods which they partially apply in the material analysis and synthesis of the human and animal structures. Application of these laws to the great universal structure must be admitted to be in the field of comparative analogy, and its ultimate conclusions possible to the logical and rational anatomist.

A glance at the numerous so called occult and metaphysical journals reveals a state of mental chaos; and the mind that begins a tour of investigation and search for truth among the isms of fallacy becomes lost in a maze of inconsistencies and contradictions. We see repeated over and over again, the statement that to reach the ideal state of comprehension of divine truth, one must assert the authority of the vidual ego,—assert the "I." This "I" is considered to be all there is of the Almighty, and though many claim to reach its consciousness, it does not seem to reveal anything concerning the universe or the laws of creation; it only reveals ignorant conceit. The fad "I"—Almighty is supposed to be in everybody; but he cannot communicate directly with his pediment, and must do so through a journal of metaphysics! Another class teaches exactly the opposite, holding that God is not the vidual ego, but the impersonal all-consciousness; and that to attain to it, it is necessary to drop the "I," and destroy self-consciousness; and that no attempt must be made to drag down the all-consciousness to the level of the fragment. Koreshanity proclaims the Messianic law, which demonstrates that viduals can no more obtain the divine consciousness without the Messiah, than corpuscles of a plant can obtain the consciousness of the seed without obeying the laws of polation in the direction of the central cell which moves toward the goal of renewed life in the seed. Nineteen hundred years ago the divine consciousness was available only through Jesus. In the modern mental chaos the "eye" is blind; the ego is lost in the darkness of fallacy!

Rabbi Sale, of St. Louis, reviews the present social conditions and predicts an impending revolution. He desires the restoration of the Mosaic commonwealth, and urges that "our present economic system be supplanted by the principle of the old Mosaic dispensation; that the principle of co-operation and of justice and equity take the place of greed and grasping, heartless, conscienceless competition." Was Moses right in the administration of the principles and laws of the Jewish social economy? The system of Moses involved more than mere co-operation in industry; the Mosaic government was a Theocracy, a kingdom; and Koreshanity maintains that if the system of Moses was true in part it was true as a whole, and that the social economy of Moses cannot be restored and applied successfully, without the application of all other principles of truth and life contained and expressed in the Mosaic law. Do the Christian and Jewish believers in the Bible believe that the government of the Almighty, through Moses, was a terrible mistake, to be corrected by a few American insurgents 125 years ago, in the introduction of republicanism? Were they inspired to establish the divine kingdom, or even a semblance of it? The pattern of the system of Moses was the form of the physical universe, the form of the human body; it is the pattern of true government, the foundation of Koreshanity.

The modern social scientists, as well as the sluggard, would profit by going to the ant and learning his ways—his government and social economy. The principle of the monarchy pervades the ant colony, and imperialism prevails in the bee-hive. The hive is the type of industry, where nothing is wasted and none are in want. The hive is ruled by the queen—ruled in equity. Production of common wealth and equitable distribution are under the supervision of the government; and the recognition of the authority of the queen is the bond of organic unity of the government and all its departments. The ant colony is communistic and co-operative; among the ants there is a unity of purpose and determination; their little cities thrive with industry; its members reap a harvest in the summer and lay by stores for the winter, and all enjoy the products of their labor together. Imperialism is a natural law; in nature there is no republicanism. The divisions of the universe are kingdoms, and the imperialism prevailing in all domains must ultimately prevail and restore order in humanity!

Materialism and "christian science" occupy extremes of concept concerning the nature of the universe; the one holds that all is matter, and there is no spirit, and the other, that all is spirit and there is no matter. If all is spirit, it is concluded that spirit is mind, and mind is God, and that mind is immortal; all is life and there is no death. Strange that materialists should make similar assertions; it is asserted that "all nature proclaims that there is no death; even decay is life, growth, chemical forces creating a new body from the atoms of the old; and yet you call that death; it is immortality!" Koreshanity has no such extremes, no such fallacies; it is the rational truth of the universe, the truth taught, lived, and demonstrated in the course of human development and progress for ages past! Death is a stern fact, a disaster to the mortal man; Koreshan Science, instead of filling the mind with the delusion that there is no death; proclaims the laws by which the disaster of dissolution may be overcome and averted.

Any other form of government in humanity than that which prevails in the individual man is unnatural and unscientific. All of the cells of the human body are governed by a central cell; all mental entities in one mind are governed by the ego, the king of the personality. The human body contains all of the activities which correspond to the commercial, religious, social, and economic phases of human relations in external humanity; it has its commerce, its industry, its natural and spiritual realms,—all comprised in the imperialism of the psycho-physiological structure, the natural government of man. If the natural government of one man is imperialistic, it is obvious that the same system of order is the only natural system for humanity. Koreshanity declares its laws; they are the laws of government of man and cosmos.

The American government should feel grateful to the numerous prophets who are arranging programs of unparalleled prosperity and national supremacy; for would it not be a terrible misfortune to have America devastated and ruined as a result of plots of prophets? Prophetess Mlle. Coussodon, a Parisian "mouthpiece of the archangel Gabriel," sees the American flag waving over the entire western world, the colors of one great republic. It requires but little knowledge of human history to make general predictions about America, in view of its growth of territory and power during the past century. We concede that many are able to read a little of America's greatness; it is in the atmosphere, it is national, it is world-wide. It would be strange that any should be so blind as not to see it!

A strange thing about popular prophecies of American development and supremacy is, that prophetic spirits speaking through their mediums are ignorant of the social and economic conditions of the world, and cannot foresee the great impending revolution, the great struggle between capital and labor, the discovery of the great concave universe, the scientific achievement of the resurrection, and the manifestation of God Almighty in the human world. True prophecy is always in harmony with itself; it must agree with prescient views of philosophers of all ages past. The only system of prophetic science in the world today that reads the past, the present, and the future, in the actual possession of its power to fulfil all past declarations, is Koreshanity!

Martin Luther, modernized by a Dean of a college of spirits, honors Chicago with the most stupendous display of light from the sky and pillars of fire on earth, on December 25, 1899, the world has ever seen! Letters of light are to appear in the sky over Lake Michigan, and columns of light one mile square and twenty-four miles high; great council towers of heavenly powers are programmed to form a circle 400 miles in diameter, centering about the great column in Chicago. He fixes the day, hour, and minute of the coming of the Christ in the clouds, and attendant blotting out of the sun, moon, and stars, so the pillars of fire can shine the brighter. Won't it be wonderful—until the date and disappointment come!

A church bulletin announces the topic, "Refilled With the Holy Spirit." Re-filled? What became of the first filling at Pentecost? Can the clergymen find any record of any one being refilled? "It is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, if they shall fall away, to renew them again." The old church has given up the ghost; the old skins have become worthless, and new wine will not be placed in the old vessels; there is no such thing as being re-filled. There is but one sowing of the divine seed in a given dispensation, and that is at the beginning; the harvest is at the end. Men do not sow wheat every day of the year!

The Chicago Record says that "Competition is still effective to give the people protection against extortion." Protection against extortion? The competitive system has made possible in modern civilization and perversion of commercial wisdom, the most gigantic forms of extortion the world has ever witnessed; and competition is still effective in stealing the wealth of millions of producers of wealth. Perhaps taking away all that a man produces is not "extortion," but something which demands a stronger term! Extortion may be outdone; a man may be protected from further torture by merciless butchery—a protection that is effective, but not desirable!

A spiritist medium of New York recently overdid the matter of receiving communications from the spiritual world, but produced results as reliable as many other messages from the unseen. When John Sherman was dangerously ill on board a vessel at Kingston, Jamaica, it was reported that he had passed away. The enterprising medium, desiring to keep up to date with communications from fresh arrivals in the world of spirits, received a message from the spirit John Sherman; but it turned out that Sherman did not die, and the conclusion is inevitable that either the medium made up a humbug communication, or the spirit prevaricated concerning his identity!

As the Seed planted in the soil of humanity, the Almighty dies, goes to sleep, grows weak and helpless, until humanity comes to his rescue; Jehovah becomes lost, loses his own soul, and awaits a savior. When the Almighty is weak and helpless, he invites the people to "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty;" after his agical sleep he awakes, discovers the corruptions of the world, and wages war on his enemies; in the processes of his deliverance the people are asked to "stand still and see the salvation of God."

Emerson said that "nothing divine dies; all good is eternally reproductive." If he were a true philosopher he would have uttered the same truth that Jesus, the great philosopher uttered nineteen hundred years ago, that "Except a seed fall into the ground and die it abideth alone." Jesus was the Seed-man, divine man; and the only way in which his divine life, his divine good, could be reproduced was through the death of the seed in the soil of humanity. Divinity must die in order to perpetuate divine existence.

The spirit of '76 proclaimed independence from the tyranny of England, and won it; the Spirit of '76, a Tacoma journal, proclaiming social independence, has met defeat. It was wrongly named; it did not possess the true spirit of revolution. It failed to unify the fragments of reform parties, and leaves the scenes of chaotic strife in the reform field to enter oblivion.

The church is looking for the resurrection to take place from the cemeteries. The life of humanity is not planted in the mineral earth! What would you think of a man who would thresh his wheat, plant the straw, and expect a resurrection in the harvest? The straw of humanity is not worth anything; only the life is fit to live.

Automatons in the modern pulpits have waited until superficial reform begins to move with a wave of popularity before committing themselves. Reforms never originate in an apostate church; preachers join reform movements after the danger line has been obliterated!

It is impossible to overthrow the facts of nature. The government of the physical universe is a kingdom. Republicanism is a fallacy; its application to the affairs of humanity is a failure, and the evils which the entire reform press is clamoring to cure, are the result!

The man who is able to discover a great concave earth, and actually explore its domains and people it with a race superior to that world from which he came, is a greater Discoverer than the man who only sees with the telescope, worlds which he is unable to reach!

Koreshanity, when contrasted with modern Christianity, in the reform press, is placed entirely on the side of righteousness in its advocacy of Equitable Commerce, co operation, and social economy.

When the Israelites were battling with the enemy, Moses had a hard time finding men to hold up his arms; from which we judge that he had never been in Chicago!

Two kinds of American expansion are advocated; one is the expansion of territory by conquest, and the other is the expansion of currency in the free coinage of silver.

The Filipinos are new American subjects for discussion, in the final settlement of which the Filipinos may be forced to concur with the conqueror.

The same kind of competition exists in the field of reform journalism as exists in the world of business.

The republicans are endeavoring to civilize barbarians, while the democrats want civilized money.

There are two classes of quacks in the world with large bills, —ducks and doctors!

The petition that has the greatest number of names attached to it is competition.

The most powerful monopoly in the world is the monopoly of truth and life.

There is no unity in co-operation as long as there is competition of idea.

The geometry of commerce demands square dealing.

Truth reveals what is under the mask of hypocrisy.

Editorial Discussions, Chats, and Correspondence.

THE EDITOR.

Has There Been No God Since Jesus' Translation?

(1) According to the Koreshan theory, it seems to me that there is no God now, nor has there been since the translation of Jesus; for then Jesus was annihilated, so far as his personality was concerned, and the substance distributed to his disciples.

(2) If this is true, who was it that John saw on the Isle of Patmos, after the day of Pentecost? Who was it that Saul of Tarsus saw on his way to Damascus, and whose voice that said, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest"?

(3) You seem to teach that only those who received the Holy Spirit at the beginning of the age will be resurrected sons of God. Have none received the Holy Spirit of late years?—S. L. B., Auburn, Cal.

(1) In the theocrasis or transmutation of the personality of Jesus, the substances of his body were not destroyed; the substances were still the substances of his life, and the life was his life as much after his translation as before. He came into the world to project his life into sinful humanity to save it; he came to work in men and fulfil the laws of reproduction. In every man in whom the divine seed was sown, there began to form anew the same Christ who had been dissolved; in every one a new Christ in embryo began his career.

In this way Jesus took upon himself the sins of the world, not figuratively, but actually, entering the planes of mortal life and obeying the laws of death during the age. This was his cross, his crossing with mortal man, through infusion of his life into them, that through the laws of higher generation he might become regenerated or multiplied. The central spirit of Jesus was exalted to the highest consciousness of the universe, and given a name above every name; and during the age his ascending life,—Elohi, has shone as the sun in the celestial and spiritual worlds. Jesus became divided in his theocrasis; his animal life went down, his higher life went up, not in the physical heavens, but in the spiritual heavens, from whence the New Jerusalem is to descend.

(2) Stephen, Saul, John, and others did not see Jesus in the external world, but in the internal world—they saw him in the spiritual world through the spiritual senses, awakened by the operation of the spirit of Jesus. The voices they heard were not produced by external vibrations, but by vibrations from within. In both seeing and hearing from the spiritual world, there were produced the same sensations in the brain, by internal activities, that are produced through the eye and ear from the external world; and hence they as really saw and heard, through interior channels, as men see and hear in visual and auditory communication with the external world.

(3) There is but one sowing of seed during a season, but one outpouring during an age. There is but one Lord, one faith, and but one baptism from the one Lord for any given dispensation. The divine seed fell into the ground and died; the divine life was sown through the operation of the Holy Spirit. The substances have performed their work in humanity as the substances of a seed perform their work in the earth,—building up new corpuscles, and multiplying cells for the manifestation of more seed in the harvest. When the seed is sown, it is the opportunity for transposition of elements of the soil to the plane of the plant and seed; through the death of the seed, the elements of the soil are revived by electro-magnetisms, and move in the direction of the new centers of generation; they become saved out from the soil, through the one opportunity of the season; the energies of the seed are not imparted again until another planting. There have been no baptisms since the impartation of the divine life from the divine personality nineteen hundred years ago, and cannot be any until another translation.

Diverging Perpendiculars and the Earth's Concavity.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I am a very recent reader of your paper; also have your book, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, pamphlets, etc., and like to study them. They contain (to me) many new and interesting ideas. I cannot say that I agree with you on all points, for I have not had time to thoroughly investigate the System; but I will say that I am interested and pleased. I am a bricklayer, and like most people, I have a question to ask, with perhaps this difference from many others: I ask simply for information. Please explain why two perpendiculars, at a height of, say 200 feet, are farther apart at the top than at the bottom. I have always attributed it to the convex form of the earth.—T. J. N., Mt. Pleasant, Ia.

There is no warrant, in fact, for the supposition that perpendiculars are farther apart at the top than at the bottom; the assumption has never been proved by actual test. The work of construction of buildings does not involve factors exact enough to manifest any difference in the direction of two perpendiculars. What difference exists, is of course in conformity with the ratio of divergence of the radii of the earth's diameter. A little mathematical calculation will be sufficient to dissipate a general misapprehension on the part of builders, that any divergence is large enough to be made apparent between walls.

Two straight lines extending from the center of a sphere 8,000 miles, and diverging 12 inches in 4,000 miles radius, would diverge at the ratio of 568 billionths of an inch per foot, or 284 millionths of an inch in 500 feet; that is, there would be a difference of only 284 millionths of an inch in two plumb-lines, suspended 12 inches apart from an altitude of 500 feet.

With a larger arc, the angle of divergence would be less acute. Two plumb-lines suspended 500 feet apart from points 500 feet above the earth would diverge only .142 of an inch; while from an altitude of 200 feet, 200 feet apart, the difference would be considerably less. Two plumb-lines, suspended from an altitude of 10 miles, 12 inches apart, would diverge only .03 of an inch, or only .3 of an inch in 100 miles. We hold that no measurements sufficiently accurate, have ever been made of parts of tall buildings, to determine the direction of the divergence. The results of our practical demonstrations, embracing an arc of 4 miles in length, demonstrate not only the fact of the earth's concavity, but also the relation of the plumb-lines for every mile of our geodetic survey, showing that the natural perpendiculars converge above instead of beneath, as usually supposed. The center of the earth is 4,000 miles overhead, not 4,000 in the opposite direction.

Is There Anything in Phrenology?

EDITOR SWORD:—Do you endorse the Fowler system of phrenology?—M. G. W., Terre Hill, Pa.

We do not endorse anything as a science that is incomplete; phrenologists do not now claim that any modern system of phrenology is complete as a science, or perfect as an art. There is as much difference among phrenologists about the so called faculties of the human mind, as there is between astronomers concerning the nature, origin, and purpose of the universe. The Fowler system is founded upon the conclusions of Dr. Gall, Spurzheim, Combe, and others; the usual theory begins with the supposition that the mental faculties are shown upon the surface of the head or skull.

While the term is phrenology, meaning a discourse on the mind, judging from the methods employed, the term craniology would be more appropriate. The fact that the hollows on the inside of the skull, agreeing with the general shape of the brain, do not correspond with the elevations on the outside, is a demonstration of the fact that the popular idea of the supposed significance of cranial protuberances is a fallacy. The methods of phrenologists are entirely empirical; they proceed from the basis of hypothesis, without a specific analysis of the functions of the organs of the brain. Their readings are only approximately correct—the merest outlines of human character. The fact that phrenologists do not agree, is proof that they have no demonstrated premise; or the conclusions would be in agreement, —always the same. Logic applied to an absolutely true premise produces invariable results.

The Koreshan cerebro-mental classifications are made from the basis of specific analyses of the laws and functions of the brain; it begins with a comprehension of what the mind is, and is consequently able to correlate mind and matter, not empirically, but analogically and analytically. No man can properly read human character who does not understand what mind is,—its qualities and its laws of expression. Even "mental scientists" do not understand the mind, and materialists are in ignorance concerning the real constitution of matter. The true analysis or reading of human character involves the knowledge of the laws of correspondence, the keys of which have escaped discovery by modern phrenologists, and are left to be applied through comprehension of Koreshan Universology.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

A Writer Misapprehends Koreshan Science of Immortality; Jesus Overcame Death, and Promised His Throne to Another Overcomer.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—As a basis of communication I will take one of your editorials, beginning with "Koreshanity wages war against the tomb!" And I would ask, What do you mean by the tomb in this connection? If you mean what the tomb was to Christ, do you not forget that it was the field where his greatest victory was demonstrated? Who would not be willing to encounter the tomb on his journey, if a like victory could be won? But perhaps you mean the grave. I will answer, that even the grave as a resting place for a spirit worn almost to the breaking-point by years of ceaseless conflict in behalf of one's convictions, may be the rarest boon the universe can give; for such a spirit should have attained the power to preserve its tabernacle against decay. But the context of the article goes to show that what you really mean is death as a defeat, as an interruption, a disaster through which the individual loses, by the corruption and decay of his physical organism, all direct connection with the physical universe through any channel of his own. If Koreshanity wages war against this all too common and supposedly universal conqueror, all honor to Koreshanity!

There is one thing that I miss in your article, which seems to belong even in so brief a treatment of this great subject; and that is a recognition that Jesus actually accomplished the victory which, if I understand you rightly, Koreshanity merely looks forward to accomplishing. If there was any actual mark of failure in what he did, then some one else must go further and do better; but was there any such mark? Would you call attention to the lack of his personal presence upon the earth as sufficient evidence that he did not attain to physical immortality? Many would do so, and the attempt to refute such evidence generally leads to the kind of contention that causes white-winged peace to fly away, and with it the possibility of locating the star sought for on account of the perturbations in the atmosphere.

Laying this one aside, the writer of this letter makes the definite, positive claim to have conquered death in the sense described above, viz., death as a defeat, an interruption, a commencement of bodily decay. He is aware that others have claimed as much, so far as words could do it. He is distinctly aware of the stupendous nature of such a claim; nevertheless, he makes it, and has been making it in a quiet way for years. The gradual ripening of his convictions, after years of fruitless search for a fellow-conqueror, that he stands alone among his kind, led to his taking a pronounced position about two years ago,—one that he continues to hold.

A friend who resides in a neighboring city has visited your colony and quotes the Founder of Koreshanity as saying, science and religion are one; to which my answer, drawn from intuition was, Yes, and he would say that one is science. My pathway has brought me to that point where I would say if religion and science are one, that one is religion. While I have not examined for myself the Koreshan Cosmogony, I extend to all lovers of the truth and the right, a most friendly hand.—HENRY SEWARD HUBBARD, Cal.

An Infidel Finds Satisfaction in Koreshan Universology as the Whole Truth.

EDITOR SWORD:—I was brought up by a Methodist mother, and was taught to read the Bible; but I could never make the teachings of the clergymen and the teachings of Jesus harmonize; the doctrines of the church were not in accord with what I understood to be the doctrines of the Christ. So as I grew to be a man, the more I searched the Scriptures the less I seemed to understand, until I drifted into infidelity.

But there seemed to be some inward feeling that I had not found the truth in agnosticism; so I read everything that I could obtain, until one day a friend of mine in Oklahoma gave me a copy of THE FLAMING SWORD; I read it and re-read it, and read it again, and became convinced that I had found something different from anything I had ever heard of; so I procured all of the Koreshan literature, and began its study. My mind has become satisfied, for I know that I have found the truth this time!—truth that will make us free. We have come to the time when the "mystery of God" is finished,—to the time of the destruction of the old system of competition, the time of the establishment of the new kingdom, wherein dwelleth righteousness.—JAS. A. READ, Ark.

The Flaming Sword Warmly Welcomed.

Reader Expresses His Appreciation of Our Inimitable Journal, and X-Rays Hoover and Others.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I would not be without THE FLAMING SWORD for any amount of pecuniary consideration. It is a source of much regret that I did not hear of the Messenger many years ago, when I had the means to enable me to avail myself of the benefit of all of his teachings, and to enable me to do something in the way of communicating the glad tidings to others. It would have relieved me of much painful anxiety, and caused me to rejoice through all those years of doubt and uncertainty. I have always believed that man's destiny would be such that his existence would be a great blessing to him, and that his present experiences were either necessary to his highest happiness, taking his existence on the whole, or that the nature of the case was such that they were unavoidable.

It has always seemed to me a self-evident fact that God was necessarily and unavoidably a being of unbounded goodness, and that he would adopt the best course that was open to him to insure the highest possible happiness of created beings. THE FLAMING SWORD has relieved me of all doubt and anxiety in regard to the many questions that have engaged my thought for many years, and I have to a considerable extent experienced the truth of the statement that "the truth shall make you free."

A few days ago I sold a copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and gave a copy of

THE SWORD to a man who lives in the northern part of this state, near a high school, who promised to show them to the professors who have charge of the school, and also to his most intelligent friends. I hand all my extra copies to intelligent travelers, or mail them to intelligent parties. It is wasteful to give them out indiscriminately to parties in this vicinity; with very few exceptions they are very ignorant and superstitious, and full of prejudice. I have no doubt that they refuse to read THE SWORD because they are afraid that it teaches the truth—the preachers especially. Without a single exception, the idea that the kingdom of righteousness is soon to be established in the earth, has had a depressing effect on preachers, and not one of them would talk on the subject.

It is embarrassing to me to say one copy of THE SWORD is better than others, but the copy of March 31 seems to me to be entitled to that distinction; it is perfect in every department. Owing to the fact that I have only a common school dictionary, I had a hard time studying Koreshanity, especially during the first few months. I studied night and day, but did not get angry like some of the other unfortunate ones, for I had no doubt that KORESH was the true Messenger of the Covenant, and that he knew the proper style of communicating the glorious truth to the world.

Now, didn't that man Hoover put his true inwardness on exhibition, and win the supreme contempt of every truly good man that witnessed it? When a man deliberately accuses another of hypocrisy and fraud, in the face of the best possible evidences that can be given to the contrary, and without a shadow of evidence to sustain the accusation, as in the case of Hoover, Blodgett, and others, he gives the most convincing proofs of his own weakness. I do not believe that Hoover thinks Dr. Teed and Prof. Morrow possess just the characters he described in his writings, for a man of Hoover's intelligence, though far from being a Solomon, knows that men of such very superior intelligence and business qualifications would not devote their lives to the practice of deceit and fraud without some reason to hope for some kind of reward for their services; and he knows, and knows that they know, that if they are practicing wilful fraud, they have not the shadow of reason to expect anything but disgrace and utter ruin in a short time.

The unreasonable course Hoover pursued from beginning to end, has hurt him a hundred per cent more than he thought he was hurting Dr. Teed and Prof. Morrow. Before I got through with the first paragraph of his filthy vomit, it occurred to me that it would be a good plan to add a special department to THE SWORD, for such filth and rot as that, and call it the "Devil's Corner" or some more appropriate name. With best wishes for Koreshanity, and for your personal happiness and prosperity, I am,—M. H. ZELLNER, Ala.

A Physician Enjoys Reading The Flaming Sword More than Any Other Journal Received.

DEAR EDITOR:—I wish to renew my subscription to your revolutionary weekly, THE FLAMING SWORD, for which enclosed please find express money order for $1. I enjoy reading your paper more than any other I get. It is intellectual food and drink to the weary soul obliged to live in this perverted world. The universe is perfect, but the majority of its inhabitants are perverts and degenerates!

No one can prove the Darwinian theory of evolution of man from the monkey, but the premise in proof of the opposite theory that men are fast becoming monkeys is demonstrable!

I have not yet succeeded in making many converts to the Koreshan Universology, but I never lose an opportunity of taking, like David of old, a pebble of truth from the babbling brook of life, and putting it in my sling and hitting the Goliath of stupidity right in the center of the forehead. The giant falls to the ground,—only to rise again the next day! I am glad to see so many hopeful signs that the good seed sown by you, in season and out of season, is springing up in a bountiful harvest. Speaking only for myself, I know it has found good soil in my heart. Yours sincerely,—GEO. D. CLIFT, M. D., Nova Scotia.

Sword Deals Nobly With its Subscribers; a Reader Doesn't Want to Miss a Number Long Live the Sword!

EDITOR SWORD:—I expect you are getting tired of the quarter by this time, having so many papers to wrap; I have been expecting THE SWORD to send me the message, "No quarter," for some time, but I have been nobly dealt with, after all! So I have concluded to send for it for a year, and pay you the $1.25 (as advertised) at the end of the year, if you are so disposed. Please begin with the next number, as I do not want to miss an issue. Long live THE FLAMING SWORD!—MRS. S. H. P., Quincy, Ill.

Surveying Air-Lines in the Minds of the People.

Strange the Scientists Do Not Accept it!

I have read the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. The strange thing to me about it is, that it is not eagerly seized upon by the scientific world, if it is true. I have come to the conclusion for myself, that I do not know anything about either the inside or the outside theory—that is, I do not know when it is proved. Twenty years ago, if one had announced to the scientific world that in a few months he would be able to take pictures of an object through a wall, he would have been hooted at; yet, that was not a more startling discovery than that of the Cellular Theory; the X-ray had the advantage, however, of being made apparent to the several senses, and therefore was an easily demonstrated fact. To me the whole thing has resolved itself into an algebraic problem which permits of two solutions, according to the premise from which we work and the methods of developing these premises.

I enjoy reading the Editorial Perspective; there is good, sound sense in it. But I could no more comprehend the articles in the first department, than a child could comprehend the theory of comet orbits.—C. K., Cal.

Perfectly Delighted With the New Edition.

DEAR FRIENDS:—We are all perfectly delighted with the new edition of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY; the "Dedication" by KORESH is soul-inspiring, and the four additional pages under the heading of "The Koreshan Unity," is quite a feature. The diagram on page 191 is wonderful. Who got it up? We thank you for your best wishes for our success in canvassing; every good wish is a substance that reaches and helps us, you know. We are more and more determined to do our utmost to get the people interested in the Koreshan System. The circulars are very taking; they are so different from those usually circulated, that they are always recognized the second time they are seen.—Mrs. L. P. CANNON, Cal.

Expects to Use the Local Press in Stirring up Interest.

Framingham and Wellesley (Mass.) are close by, each four miles away; the latter is somewhat famous for its female college, and is a center of culture and intelligence, as the world interprets them. I am planning to put in some work there, as I find opportunity.

As to Framingham, I want to arrange with a news and periodical dealer to handle the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. Here then, are three places where, with the aid of the local press, I hope to awaken an interest in the transcendently glorious gospel of our Messenger! With tongue, pen, and pedals, why may I not be able to do something? I can only promise myself that I will try. To this end I am applying myself constantly to the study of the Koreshan Cosmogony and the teachings of THE FLAMING SWORD, that I may be able to present the Koreshan System as I understand it, acceptably to such few as I find who are able to receive it. But oh, what darkness and prejudice envelop the minds of the vast multitude? And yet I find many feeling about in their darkness, trying to find the door, yes the Door!—EDWIN COOMBS, Mass.

The Pacific Ocean is not Convex!

For the enclosed $1 please send THE FLAMING SWORD one year to Mr. I. K. J., Longbeach, Cal. Catalena Island is 20 miles out in the ocean from Longbeach. Mr. J. says that he has distinctly seen the white houses at Longbeach when he has stood on the shore of Catalena Island. No house in Longbeach is 200 feet high; they are all one-story cottages. Another straw! —D. E. S., Santa Ana, Cal.

Chat With Readers.

Removal of Office of The Flaming Sword.

Our readers noticed the conspicuous announcement on the last week's FLAMING SWORD, of our intention to remove the office of THE FLAMING SWORD and printing plant, and consequent omission of issue of May 5; it is also as conspicuously announced this week, but giving a different new address.

Upon further consideration of our business interests, we have decided to occupy 312-316 West Sixty-third street, within one block of the place we have occupied for the past two years. We have decided to occupy three large store rooms, instead of one, thus providing for a greater industry, expansion of our work in every way; and we believe that the next issue of THE FLAMING SWORD from our new quarters, will show improvement and progress.

We desire the hearty co-operation of all our friends and readers in expanding our work, not only here in the industries in which we are engaged, but in all parts of the world; we need greater facilities in dispensing the truth contained in our literature. We desire to see hundreds of agents, representatives, and workers introducing THE FLAMING SWORD and our books in cities, towns, and villages everywhere. With our removal the work begins anew, in the line of greater progress, more rapid spread of the Koreshan scientific gospel, and more rapid development of the great work of the world's reformation. If you admire our persistency and courage, remember that we shall be highly pleased to see the same characteristics manifest in our great circle of readers and friends!

LOYAL HEARTS FOR KORESHANITY!

Give us men!

Men—from every rank;

Fresh, and free, and frank;

Men of thought and reading,

Men of light and leading,

Men of loyal breeding,

Men of faith and not of faction,

Men of lofty aim and action;

Give us men—I say again,

Give us men!

Give us men!

Strong and stalwart ones;

Men whom highest hope inspires,

Men whom purest honor fires,

Men who trample self beneath them,

Men who make their country wreath them

As her noble sons,

Worthy of their sires!

Men who are true to our colors,

Men who never fail their brothers,

True, however false are others;

Give us men—I say again,

Give us men!

Give us men!

Men, who, when the tempest rages

Grasp the standard of the sages

In the thickest of the fight;

Men who strive for truth and science,

(Let our enemies bid defiance),

God defends the right!

True as truth, though lorn and lonely,

Tender—as the brave are only;

Men who tread where saints have trod,

Men for freedom and for God;

Give us men! I say again, again,

Give us men!

—Revised.

The New Voice.

We are much pleased with the recent change made in the Voice, from the newspaper size to a more popular and convenient form. With the change came the change in the name, from the New York Voice to the New Voice. Many new features have been added, and it now partakes more of the magazine style, with much literary taste and ability displayed. It is a pioneer journal in the prohibition field; but the New Voice covers a wider field of discussion since its change. Weekly, 16 pages, $1.50 per year, fully illustrated; published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, N. Y.

Teacher's World.

The Teacher's World is a 52-page bi-monthly journal of methods, aids, and devices used in the work of teaching; of interest not only to those of the teachers' profession, but to students as well. The drawing lessons and music for children are worth the price of subscription; 50 cents a year. Address, Bemis Publishing Co., 13 Astor Place, New York, N. Y.

"Live Questions."

Ex-Governor John P. Altgeld Answers Them.

The most notable book on science of government announced this season is "Live Questions," by Ex-Governor John P. Altgeld. The usual dryness of philosophical research and observation is missing from the 1,000 pages of this remarkable volume.

The range of subjects treated is exhaustive, complete, surprising. One's amazement is, however, turned to implicit confidence when the fact becomes evident that every question involving the rights of man has been deemed equally important, and weighed with the same fine consideration and impartiality by the author.

He presents the doleful wretchedness of our penal system as a fascinating study, appealing to the better nature and highest reason of the citizen. The Money Question rises out of politics at his bidding to attract the eager, thoughtful interest of rich and poor alike. His interpretation of Municipal Ownership discovers opportunities and possibilities no taxpayer can ignore. He takes apart the corrupt machinery of politics, and shows its hideous destructiveness to a startled sovereignty. A little volume might be written describing this great one. Read it, study it, be led by it to a fuller appreciation of the responsibility of citizenship and the importance of an intelligent interest in the affairs of State.

The handsome library edition is ready for delivery and will be supplied at $2.50 by Geo. S. Bowen & Son, Unity building, Chicago.

What You Have Been Long Looking For!

"Multum in Parvo."

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Physical Resurrection of the Dead.

Physical Organisms Not Raised From Graveyards; the Astronomical Field the Burying-Place of Mortal Decompositions; Substances of Same Bodies Given Back in Subsequent Reincarnations.

THE FUNDAMENTAL and central principle of the Christian system, is that of the reincarnation or resurrection of the person. The Christian church is so far degenerated from its primitive conception of this faith, as to relegate it to oblivion and preclude its necessity as a part of the Christian's gospel. It is a notorious fact, that with those who have a lingering conviction of the principle of the resurrection of the dead, there is no scientific knowledge of its process and possibility. If the dead are not raised, then are both faith and preaching vain; this was the sentiment of the apostle. That the dead are not raised from what may be denominated the physical and material graveyard, can be positively known by the application of the slightest grain of common sense. Reasoning is not an essential principle and factor in the mental process necessary to an absolute and accurate conclusion regarding the resurgam, or anastasia of those whose bodies have gone to corruption. It is essential, however, that not only should the enlightened (illuminated) reason be brought to bear in the consideration of this question, but that the reason should entertain a premise from which the possibility of assumption should be expunged and precluded.

It would be impossible in our limited space, to set forth the processes of mental operations leading to our premise. The reader should consult the Koreshan literature to obtain a correct comprehension of the laws of alchemy, as the premise for the logic of this presentation. Primarily, the mental energies comprised of the two general departments of encephalic activity, namely, intellectuality and affection, are transmitted from mind to mind, even while these minds are active in the organic and physiological structures of their existence. After the demise of the person, the remaining spirit is also transposed to the minds of the living, through the activities of the principles of mental attraction. Succeeding the evacuation of the form by the spirit inhabiting it, the body passes to alchemical decay. Every atom of the organic form is transited to alchemico-magnetic or electric energy, the qualities of which must conform to the character of the organism while in a state of mental and physiological activity.

In every so called chemical transformation, there is a destruction of the atom and the mutation of that atom to its corresponding energy. This is true of both organic and inorganic (so called) chemistry. We substitute the term alchemy. If a man passes through the ordinary physical decay and corruption in what is called death, the body not only decomposes, but is literally transmuted; the matter of the organism passing into energy, while some of the energies entering into the process of combustion are deposited again as matter. This is true of the organic as well as the inorganic changes occurring in death.

A man may tumble into the maw of a man-eating shark, where he may pass through the ordinary process of the shark's digestive apparatus. It may be readily observed that the substance of the man's body becomes the substance of the shark's body, by the common law of physical metamorphosis. The question might arise, upon the basis of the modern Christian idea of the resurrection, "How will the Almighty resurrect, at the day of judgment, the poor fellow who is so unfortunate as to have taken this circuitous route to heaven—or the other place?" The ordinary Christian answer, "Oh! all things are possible with God," will not do for this investigative period of the world's progress and history. If the man eaten by the shark is to be resurrected, then there must be some specifically scientific process through the operation of which this feat is performed. We do not question the doctrine of the resurrection; if we did, we would denounce the entire theory of the fall and recovery of men; but we ask, by the force of what law can it be accomplished? This question we purpose to answer scientifically. We will present our proposition in broad and general terms before proceeding to advance the argument, because we desire to impress upon the mind, first, the facts and laws of possibility.

The Physical Stars in the Physical Heavens Constitute the Graveyard (Cemetery) of the Physically Decomposed.

The astronomical field is the burial place of the dead, because the stars constitute the focal points of the convergence of all physical energy. After the spirit—the most vital part of the personality—has left the body, there still remains the organic structure. Every atom of this body is psychically impregnated and impressed with the character of the organ, whether it be the heart, liver, lungs, kidneys, muscles, bones, etc., in which the atom is deposited. When the body decays through alchemical dissolution, the atoms are reduced to energy in quality corresponding to the atom. If an atom of matter from the heart, liver, lungs, etc. is dissolved to energy, it retains, as energy, the character derived from the original organic form; and thus all the organs maintain a correspondence to the organic character from which the energy is derived. From this fact, the conclusion follows that as the energy is liberated from its material condition by transmutation, though transmuted from physical form to physical energy, it retains its human character as energy, without mental character or force. This energy passes on the converging currents of electro-magnetic conspuration, to the focal stellar point to which it belongs, under the inexorable and inevitable law of astro-biology. Hence some particular star or constellation receives the energy of the remaining form of the man, after the primary spirit has left its tenement.

It should be constantly borne in mind, that mental energy is the product of organic structure; that the forces transmitted from mind to mind are the products of the destruction of atomic substance in the encephalic laboratory, and that these substances are carried up to the brain from every part of the body, and therefore represent the organic structure as a whole. Hence men are being transmitted from themselves constantly, while yet existing as vital forms. Every generation is the mental product of the generations preceding. Not only is this true, but, through the law of propagative transmission, the generation is projecting itself into the succeeding generation. It is seen, then, that both mentally and physically, one generation projects its life into the following one. The succeeding generations are so related astro-biologically, as to derive the stellar influx from the stars and constellations to which they are and were related, and to appropriate the bodies of the past dead, which were previously dissolved from matter to energy and transited to the star. We most emphatically declare that the physical (alchemico-organic) stars do not contain the mental forces of human existence. These are perpetuated and transmitted from generation to generation of human life. In the above, we have merely given a general statement of the facts regarding the laws of the resurrection of the dead.

Every Organic as Well as Every Inorganic Thing is Constantly Eliminating Energy.

A tree may be planted at the head of a grave, where the root of the tree passes—as it develops—through the entire length of the body, until the root has assumed the form of the man. Every atom of the organism has passed into the circulation of the tree and into its fruit. This fruit may be eaten by many. How is it possible for this man, no atom of whose body remains in the grave, to arise in the resurrection? It is possible for the original energies to enter into a star or group of stars, whence this energy may reflow to the person born under the influence of the group or of the star, whence he may derive into himself the veritable substance which this identical mind dwelt in as a body in a previous incarnation. Every tree performs the functions of respiration. It not only inhales oxygen and exhales carbon, but, in the activities of its life, it is constantly generating its electro-magnetic energies which pass, on the currents of physical energy, to the stellar points to which the tree is related. If a tree has absorbed the substance of the remains of a human being, in giving out its energies, these energies are focalized in their star and returned properly to the reincarnate form of the individual mind and form of the reincarnate existence.

In the above, we have intended merely to submit a general outline of facts and processes of the resurrection or reincarnation of the man, including the law and possibility of the restoration of the most material and physical part of his being, thus confirming the gospel of the resurrection of the dead, despite the effort of the material and infidel world to disparage this fundamental of the Christian theory of reincarnation.

The World's Great Prince of Peace.

The Pseudo-Peace Congress; the False Prince of Peace; the Age Culminates in Revolution; the Day of Vengeance is at Hand!

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

PROPHECY is the forecast of history. The spirit of prophecy projects itself in the channels of its fulfilment; it reads the future in its own energies, and ultimately expresses itself in the events of the world. The truth of prophecy is obviously demonstrated when the events predicted have transpired; and the integrity of the prophet is established when his visions have materialized in the external world. Prophetic delineations have found no more fruitful field of fulfilment than in the humanity of the nineteenth century. The entire modern world is filled with startling and surprising things; great events of peculiar significance and relation occur together. Students of history all over the world are expecting stupendous changes. The focal point of prophecy is approaching; the world is nearing a crisis—the crisis of history!

The civilized nations of the world are sending representatives to the Czar's peace congress, in the hope of declaring and creating universal peace. If universal peace could be declared and actually attained, and humanity's bondages and oppressions removed as a result of international agreement to go to war no more, it could be heralded as the greatest triumph of Christianity! If the Czar could inaugurate a movement that would ultimate in the redemption of nations from the horrors of war, and introduce a new order of civilization, he would be the world's great Prince of Peace, the great philanthropist of modern times. If the Czar undertakes to fulfil prophecy by the introduction of measures for the suppression of war, he should be careful to see that the integrity of seers of the past is vindicated in the fulfilment of all other prophetic declarations concerning the culmination of the age. The entire disarmament movement is full of significance; it is one of the great events of modern times. It does fulfil prophecy, and it portends the hastening end of the dispensation!

The tendency of the world is to monopoly; there is a rapid federation of all the forces of fallacy. The World's Parliament of Religions was for the purpose of breaking down competition of the great religious systems. The formation of syndicates and trusts characterizes the close of the dispensation. Fallacy finds greater facilities for promulgation when its elements are leagued together; and the money power multiplies its strength through the formation of trusts. And the nations, without changing their real character, may increase in despotism and corruption through the formation of a gigantic trust of nations. If they can agree to be at peace among themselves, they will be the better prepared to fight the subtle and internal forces of revolution.

The plan of the Czar is to perpetuate the old order, not to introduce the new. His cry of peace was foreseen by Jesus and his apostles. There is no peace, and the cry portends the immediate and inevitable destruction of empires. It is a false cry of security by the false prince of peace! The councils of peace are the councils of war! Universal peace cannot be brought to the world by mere decree. The great questions of the hour have not been settled; human greed and despotism have not been eradicated, and the bondages of the people have not been removed. The wrath of justice is not appeased; the great volcanic fires of social discontent have not been extinguished; the restless sea of humanity has not been calmed!

Events of the modern world were foreseen and outlined centuries ago. The present religious, social, political, and economic conditions of humanity were anticipated by both the Jewish and the Christian prophets. The factors of fulfilment were indicated, and the results foreshown. The great prophetic system of primitive Christianity outlined the course of the church, its apostasy and perversion. It anticipated a new age; it predicted the establishment of a universal kingdom. It foretold peace; but it also foresaw a stupendous revolution, a reign of terror, a time of trouble, a day of vengeance, the great battle of Gog and Magog, a time of tribulation such as never was in all the history of the world; it foresaw the smouldering fires of revolution, the lawlessness and corruption in both church and state, anarchy and chaos in society, and the final societal upheaval and fall of nations. Jesus and his apostles are directly responsible for these declarations, couched in the strongest, the most emphatic, and positive terms.

It is obvious that the effort of the so called Christian nations to inaugurate universal peace is not in accordance with the prophecies of the great Head of the Christian world. Does the Christian world desire to set aside the great course of events which must transpire before real peace is realized by humanity? Does it desire to repudiate the predictions of the Christ concerning the fate of iniquitous nations at the close of the dispensation? If the millennium of peace be introduced without a struggle, where is there room for the great war of revolution? Where is the great time of trouble and tribulation? The nations cannot sweep away their own iniquities and corruptions in an effort to put an end to war. The powers cannot escape the terrible chastisements for their crimes of centuries. The judgment of church and state is inevitable!

The candid student of prophecy and history cannot fail to read in the conditions of modern humanity the very elements of revolution. The money power, the church, and the state are federating their forces; they belong to the one great system of corruption, and will oppose to the bitter end every measure looking to their overthrow. Capital will finally marshal to the great field of conflict all of the institutions and departments of church, society, and government, in its support and defence against the forces of labor! The masses will endeavor to reclaim the wealth they have produced, and to dethrone the despots who have usurped the power of the world and controlled the wealth of millions. There has never been a period in human history when the world is so ready for the world-wide conflict as now,—never before so ripe for revolution!

The prophecy of Jesus and his apostles is being fulfilled to the letter, right in the face and eyes of the modern world. The age has been one of war; the forces of life projected into humanity at the beginning of the age, began the warfare—the warfare of life against death, truth against fallacy. The war of the church militant began in the mind. The mental revolution wrought in the heart and soul of a group of progressive humanity, through the operation of the Holy Spirit, must ultimately express itself in the most external affairs of the world. War will not, cannot end, until it is fought in every domain, and victory won for righteousness. Ominous war clouds, with increasing blackness, are arising from the horizon of the religious, social, political, and economic fields of the old world. The victory achieved must be in the highest domain, the victory over the arch-enemy of mankind—the last enemy, death; and from thence, win throughout the world. All of the affairs of humanity are linked together in the great system of human existence; peace in any department of human activity would be short-lived without peace in all.

The one great battle for human freedom covers the entire ground of human relations. The reconstruction of society and government, after the awful vortex of revolution is passed, is the work of true science; it must, in short, involve the climax of divine wisdom in its application to man. The entire Christian world professes to believe in the coming of the true Prince of Peace to restore to humanity the long expected Golden Age of universal peace; but it inconsistently repudiates the idea of the establishment of a kingdom of righteousness, in its efforts to perpetuate the modern fragments of power, and in its answering to the beck and call of the false prince of peace, a despot of darkest Russia! The church no longer desires the reign of righteousness; and it undertakes to blockade the way of the coming of the new era.

Koreshanity takes up the threads of prophecy, interprets current events, and removes the veil of obscurity from the future age. It is the golden chain of truth which links the primitive Christian church with the dawn of universal light and peace, through the application of scientific law. Koreshanity proclaims the same truth that Jesus proclaimed; it heralds the coming of the world's great Prince of Peace, not from the clouds of the physical heavens, but from humanity; not a despot guilty of crimes against humanity, but the ideal and the real man of integrity and ability to achieve the victory of the world's freedom! Death as well as oppression must meet its defeat at the hands of the man of science, the Prince of Peace. The reign of Jesus in the hells of the Christian age has been a militant reign; David's throne must be succeeded by the throne of Salem, the throne of the antitypical Solomon,—the Shiloh of the scientific age.

The prophecy of the great false cry of peace is being fulfilled in current history; the fallen church, the corrupt nations, and the money power seek to insure safety by a treaty of the great trust of nations. The unerring index finger of Koreshan scientific prophecy points to the approaching fulfilment of the prediction of swift destruction of the powers that raise the false cry of peace and safety! It insists upon the truth of primitive Christianity, the truth of the prophecies of Jesus; and with Him it declares that the day of vengeance is at hand; the age is closing; the time of trouble is approaching; the elements of war are being drawn toward the seething vortex, and the final revolution is inevitable!

The Prescient Eye of the Poet.

The Work of Shelley Contrasted With that of Voltaire; The Positive Element in Shelley's Poetry; the the Triumph of Prometheus Presages the Conquest of the Christ.

L. E. BORDEN.

IT IS the poets who have kept alive the heavenly vision in the sad-eyed world. They alone, unmindful of the grim realities of pain and sin, looked forward to the golden dawn of peace in earth. The hope of philosophy was lost in the fogs of speculation; that of religion lay fathoms deep in a stagnant sea of dogma, but in every age, some poet's listening ear has caught sweet echoes from life's discords, then a thrilling cadence mingled with his song.

In the days when this old century was young, there came a singer whose brief life was but a prelude; yet so daring was his flight, so bold his song, men hated him and have but lately learned to praise, where once they cursed. The crude mistakes of the boy Shelley have furnished many a jest for gossip-critics; his warmest admirers must admit that some of them were grave indeed. He was only eighteen when he flung himself, single-handed, at the throat of the world. If his confidence in his own strength was overweening, did he not pay the penalty? Was he not bruised and torn? Did he not walk, as he said, "a phantom among men, companionless as the last cloud of an expiring storm"? Was he not, as Trelawny describes him, "excommunicated by the Fathers of the church, deprived of his civil rights by the fiat of a grim Lord Chancellor, discarded by every member of his family, and denounced by the rival sages of our literature as the founder of a Satanic school"?

When Byron said his bookseller wanted him to write to please the ladies, so his works would find a better market, Shelley replied emphatically: "Write nothing but what your conviction of the truth inspires you to write. Time will reverse the judgment of the vulgar. Contemporary criticism only represents the amount of ignorance genius has to contend with."

Shelley followed his own advice with the result, as he admitted, that he could only print his writings by stinting himself in food. Time has amply justified his words, and reversed the judgment of the crowd. Contemporary criticism branded him as an atheist, and Oxford expelled him for the crime. Shelley said that he used the word atheism to express his abhorrence of superstition. The world has arrived at so just an understanding of his motives, that the general opinion of his biographers may be summed up in the eloquent language of Symonds. "Shelley," writes the critic, "had a vital faith—faith in the gospel of liberty, fraternity, and equality; faith in the divine beauty of nature; faith in the love that rules the universe; faith in the perfectibility of man. The man who lived by this faith was in no vulgar sense of the word an atheist."

When Shelley was twenty-one, he published Queen Mab, a work that is, perhaps, more widely known than his other long poems, and one which is said to have influenced the working classes to freethought. Both in substance and style it shows great immaturity, and Shelley himself condemned it for this defect, five years later. On the title-page, it bore as a motto Voltaire's sinister cry, "Ecrasez l'infame" (down with the monster), meaning the Catholic religion.

This suggests the question whether Shelly must be classified with Voltaire, who was essentially a negative force. To tear down, destroy, raze to the ground, this was his mission, but he showed no reconstructive energy; when he had pulled down the old building, he had no plan of a better. Shelly, too, was an iconoclast, but he had what Voltaire's eyes never saw,—a vision of the reign of love in earth. "Prometheus Unbound" is full of the happiest presage. The poet said it was never intended for more than five or six persons. He gauged his readers well; when the poem appeared, it was greeted with scornful laughter, the crackling of thorns under the pot. "This poem," they mocked, "is rightly named, for who would bind it?" Today, the few who know, rank it as something unique in literature; the many find it hopelessly obscure.

It is known that Æschylus wrote a sequel to his "Prometheus Bound," in which he showed the final reconciliation between Zeus the oppressor and Prometheus the champion of humanity. The fragments are too brief to show what that reconciliation was. In Shelly's drama there is no reconciliation; the two actors represent the primitive forces of good and evil. Prometheus bears all pain, moral and physical, suffering for the race, secure in his knowledge that good will conquer. The hour comes; Jove drops from his seat and the burdens of the world are lifted; all things put off their evil nature, and men pass in fair and lovely forms as those from whom some foul disguise has fallen.

* * * But soon I looked,
And behold, thrones were kingless, and men walked
One with the other even as spirits do—
None fawned, none trampled; hate, disdain or fear,
Self-love or self-contempt, on human brows
No more inscribed, as o'er the gate of hell,
"All hope abandon, ye who enter here."

Shelley gave his philosophy no systematic form,—indeed he could not, for he had himself no clear idea how the discords in the universe would melt in supernal harmonies. He had only "a luminous poetic vision of the fact that man would reach perfection in eternal love." This was his message, and here he becomes a positive force making for truth and righteousness.

Prometheus, the central figure in the world-drama, veils under the Greek title the character of Christ the Deliverer. The magnificent passage which hails the Titan's triumph, shows the conquest achieved by the divine man:

To suffer woes which Hope thinks infinite;
To forgive wrongs darker than death or night;
To defy power which seems omnipotent;
To love and bear; to hope till Hope creates
From its own wreck the thing it contemplates;
Neither to change, nor falter, nor repent;
This, like thy glory, Titan, is to be Good, great and joyous, beautiful and free;
This is alone Life, Joy, Empire, and Victory!

The spirit, on leaving the body of corruption, enters the spiritual world with memory and consciousness. When, however, the spirit terminates the spiritual part of a minor cycle, it merges into another domain or sphere, in which the change is analogous to death in the body, except that, in entering from the spiritual into the domain of transposition, previous memory is obliterated. The resurrection of the dead, or reincarnation, is the return of consciousness when a series of retrogressive and progressive minor cycles culminate, through re-embodiments, in the termination of the grand cycle.

There is an absurd notion prevailing with many, that in the final victory of life over death, the physical body will remain in its outward and visible form. The belief that immortality will be acquired by the outward man; that his physical organism will be perpetuated in the earth domain, is the result of impression independent of the science of immortal life. The people who entertain this belief invariably confess their ignorance of the law of immortality, or as to how immortality is to be attained, and they demonstrate their helplessness to avert the calamity toward which they are inevitably tending.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

AMERICA cannot be considered as a highly civilized nation, while its people continue to commit atrocious crimes against humanity. The western world still contains obnoxious cesspools of vice, still harbors the world's worst criminals, still produces sensual minds and savage dispositions. No truly civilized government would permit the gigantic forms of oppression which exist in the modern world; no civilized people would perpetuate the cancerous evils and vices which prevail in all large cities. Leslie's Weekly removes the veil from nocturnal New York, where the greatest possible human degradation exists. It is unsafe to walk scores of Gotham streets either day or night, while in hundreds more, the pedestrian takes his life in his hand at night. The dangers lurking there are greater than in the African jungle; savages can commit no more atrocious crimes than are daily committed within the limits of the American metropolis! Not alone in cities are American crimes committed; inhuman monsters are found everywhere, ravishing virtue, disregarding law, degrading society. The inquisition of Judge Lynch is as terrible as that instituted by the mediæval church, as devoid of justice as the courts of Salem. The people who torture human beings at the stake, dangle their forms from trees, and riddle their defenseless persons with bullets, can lay no true claim to civilization. The facts are stern and stubborn; and no amount of argument can remove the stigma of crime from the American mobs! There are governmental, religious, economic, and social evils, through which millions of people are made to suffer; and the greatest crimes are in the world-wide abuse of all the factors of modern civilization. Man's inhumanity to man continues relentlessly; and our charges against the modern world are sustained by palpable and tangible facts! A new civilization must come; a new system must spring from a central point of order, as light from the sun, radiating to the uttermost parts of the earth. Christendom has been looking for a millennium, and the world for a Golden Age; the expectation on the part of millions is proof that national and social destiny has not yet been reached. The new civilization must be universal in its application, and embrace all of the affairs of humanity. The new world begins in the founding and establishment of Koreshanity, the rational light of humanity.

Many minds cannot conceive of how the great solar system, and all the stars and nebulae can be placed inside of the earth. Really, no matter how large the mind conceives the universe to be, it is but the expression of the mind of Deity; and consequently the point of impression in that mind must be almost infinitely less than the vast expression. Our worthy cotemporary, Word and Works, referring to the nebula of Cancer, says: "If you never looked at it in a good telescope, you have never yet realized how an infinity of sun-worlds can be packed into a mere needle-point of space." Of course, its editor refers to the point in perspective, but he may not understand how the Almighty is able not only to crowd nebulae inside the earth, but also inside microscopic brain cells in the complete involution of the universe in its seed form. The breadth of his comprehension of the universe and of its Creator may be seen from the statement that the nebula of Cancer, "a bunch of nebulous light, is only the blended glimmer of countless worlds standing behind each other on a narrow line of vision, reaching back into immensity, for aught we know, even to the citadel and throne of God himself"! Jesus involved the universe, God the Father, heaven, his throne, and the earth, his footstool, and all the corresponding stars, nebulae, and atmospheres. In him all things were created, as in the seed the great oak is involved and reproduced. Jesus the Christ was the Creator of the universe; and he is not in the physical heavens, but in humanity.

Calvary Episcopal Church, of New York, has condescended to originate a plan to aid the poor, not by endeavoring to change the economic conditions of the world, nor by providing employment for the poor, but by selling goods to them at low prices on the instalment plan! If the church has considered this the best plan for helping the struggling poor of New York, we pity the wisdom of their counsels! Success, a popular New York weekly, while commending the plan in a general way, observes that "the chief aim in too many churches seems to be to attract the moneyed class with the lure of sycophancy, which is as degrading to the preacher as it is disgusting to the observant and intelligent masses. Scenes of robbery and oppression, which cry to heaven for vengeance, pass without rebuke from the pulpit, while the perpetrators listen calmly and smugly to antiquated belaborings of threadbare property scarecrows." And further, that "If there is a widespread public impression that mammon-worship is the rule in ecclesiastical circles; that the poor and struggling are looked down upon while the rich are flattered and fawned upon; that too much attention is given to securing pew rents that only the wealthy can pay, while the seedy coat and tattered gown are regarded by clerical eyes with suspicion, if not contempt,—the clergy have themselves chiefly to blame."

The well-known cartoon paper, Judge, of last week, contains a cartoon pregnant with significance; it indicates the direction of popular currents, and betokens the fact that the American people are face to face with political issues fresh from the fields of reform. The old tariff issue is practically dead; and the political platforms of 1900 will contain planks in striking contrast with those of 1896. The feeling is prevailing that the principle of monopoly could be successfully applied in the conduct of municipal business. The cartoon in Judge represents a modern city; its power is personified in the form of a goddess standing upon the city hall. In her hands are the reins of government, to which are attached the various factors of public utility;—the street-cars, power-houses, electric light and gas-plants, water-works, the telephone, street work, docks, bridges, and underground and elevated railways. The goddess presents the aspect of a gigantic May-pole, about which the city industries are joyously moving on May-day. In the East the great sun of municipal ownership is rising, in the halo of which is written: "Municipal ownership is a saving of 50 per cent to the people."

There is nothing existing in the abstract; if the Christian church has fallen, Christianity has fallen. There can be no Christianity apart from the people who profess it; and if it does not exist in the organization which has come down through apostasy from the original and primitive form, who has had authority to institute and form Christian chaos of Protestantism? The character of modern Christianity is manifest in the modern church, and nowhere else. In both doctrine and practice the church has degenerated; it will not be perpetuated as the channel of divine operation any more than Judaism, after its fall, constituted the chosen system. A new church and state, a new order, a new system of human thought and life, must succeed the age of corruption. Primitive Christianity did not deny Judaism; Koreshanity does not deny primitive Christianity, Judaism, nor the system of Noah. Koreshanity is in accordance with the laws of evolution of life and truth in humanity, and is the scientific religion of the new era.

If peace were now declared in all the domains in which war is being waged, it would be a virtual surrender of humanity to its enemies. The forces now clamoring for peace are not righteous; they proceed from one of the greatest powers of oppression. The evil powers of the world are inviting a cessation of war that is being waged against them. No more favorable movement could be inaugurated for fallacy, for false sentiment and mock righteousness than that which asks that all of the inharmonious elements of the world be let alone to covertly plot against truth and progress, and to undermine the rights and liberties of the people, free from the dangers of open warfare. The final war and revolution will come; the battles of Gog and Magog, and of Armageddon, must be fought to the finish, and the world's great victory achieved in the establishment of the orders of the new world. On with the dance of nations; let war be unconfined, until the devil's drum can beat no more!

Chicago receives a blow from one of its noted literary men; Prof. Fuller startles his colleagues and others by telling the truth about the so called great city, and the character of its inhabitants, its literature, and its art. He says "Chicago is not a city at all. It is just a rough-grained substitute for a city. It is a huge parody on a city; it is ugly, it is horrid. Few of us know this, and fewer care. The average American is cheap; he is not so cheap as the Englishman, but he is pretty cheap. The text of the American mind is flimsy and whining. The soil of the American mind is light and sandy, and nothing but cactus grows in it. The American character is made up of layers of slush and grit. Our business is to grab the dollar, and slaughter crude creatures,—human creatures indeed also, if they are the proper shade of brown; to run corners, to drink tea, to make new kinds of coffee pots, to go to football games and prize-fights; but to create works of art,—never!"

A freethought journal concludes that the Bible is wrong in its account of the creation of the universe; wrong concerning the flood, diversity of languages, chronology, history, interpretation of nature, God and man, Christology, the origin of species, and moral science—demonstrated by science and scholarship to be wrong. What "science" is the truth concerning all of the above departments of being and existence? Of course, it means modern astronomy, geology, chemistry, Darwinian evolution, and other phases of modern nonsense and non-science, with its constantly shifting hypotheses. What does such a science know about God, and creation, and man? Knowledge obtains only by contrast. Fallacy cannot be demonstrated to be false until the truth is known; but the truth of the Bible will never be rightly tested by the standards of men who illogically and absurdly guess that it is wrong!

If critics say that the Koreshan System is fallacious, they must be very careful to demonstrate that it does not discover to the mind any new truth. It is easier to condemn a system because it does not agree with a few conclusions of an old and unproven system, than to comprehend truth on lines never before considered by the objector. If there is nothing logical in Koreshanism; if it contains no truth, and is entirely fallacious in its conclusions, why may it not be easily demonstrated that it is fallacious? If the universe is so intricate in its nature and complicated in its construction; if the mind of the modern world is so illogical, unreasoning, and ignorant as to make absolutely conclusive demonstrations of popular systems impossible, how is it that so many minds scientifically inclined, can so easily and quickly determine that its absolute opposite is false?

Day after day, the handwriting on the wall of the stock exchange is read by the broker and speculator. Even there we can read the startling signs of the times; we are approaching the time when even there, the announcement of the fall of the money power will be written, the news of crash and crisis. We can read its approach on the walls at the great feasts and banquets of the aristocrats. The millionaire is feeling secure in his possessions, and nations are crying peace, while permitting the iniquities and corruptions of the modern world. There is a calm before the awful storm, which will wreck every modern institution and lay bare the field for the construction of the new society of the new age!

Modern Christians who are denouncing the American policy in the Philippines, may find it hard to harmonize their anti-imperial, anti-conquest, anti-war, and anti-expansion sentiments with the fact of the conquest of Canaan by the Israelites under the leadership of General Joshua, who succeeded Moses in the work of expansion of the possessions and territory of the Hebrews. They literally drove out, killed, or conquered the natives, and established a government of their own. The Americans have done the same in making room in the world for a people of destiny, and may they not continue the work of conquest? Is the Almighty less warlike now than he was 2,500 years ago?

It has been said that Rockefeller is a Christian, notwithstanding the fact that the competitive system, which is entirely anti-Christian, has permitted him to steal the products of human energy to the extent of $300,000,000 in thirty years. Who decides that he is a Christian? Evangelist Moody, considered to be the most stalwart defender of the modern Christian religion. Rockefeller, the Standard Oil magnate, casts a few barrels of the stolen product on the troublous sea of modern Christendom, and calms the hearts of those who are directly benefited by his donations!

When Christendom declares for universal peace, what will it do with its past record, when it waged war under "divine sovereignty"? Must it acknowledge to the Mohammedan system its crimes of the Crusades, and must every Christian throw down his armor and cease to be a soldier of the cross?

If the reform elements combine with democracy against territorial expansion, and national supremacy and greatness, and in favor of free silver, it will not be a proof that democracy is progressive and full of reform, but that "reform" is retrogressive and full of democracy.

The only difference between the republican and democratic parties is, that the former seems to have a knack of improving its opportunities and accomplishing what the latter would do if it could. Party jealousy determines the difference in platforms.

The cry of protection of American industries has been changed to protection of the people against the gigantic corporations which, in the aggregate, under "protection," have reached the mark of billions of dollars of stolen wealth.

An item says that scientists conclude that children think before they talk. Perhaps; but we conclude from observation that millions of people talk without thinking! Real thinkers are few and far between.

"Chemistry deals with material things." Just so; and knows nothing of the nature and character of either energy or matter. Alchemy is the science of substances,—matter and spirit.

The limited influence of the modern church in the greatest city of the world, may be seen in the fact that only 500,000 persons out of 4,250,000 inhabitants of London attend church.

Astronomers upon their little earth-ship on the sea of space, have sailed far from the truth; and now they drift with the currents, or sail in the direction of the shifting winds.

If all the modern fallacies were true, they would be expressed in one harmonious system; they are false, and therefore mental segments and fragments.

Hundreds of phantom vessels of fallacy are floating on the sea of humanity; and millions of people are following them to unknown destinations.

Speeches and arguments may be considered with both gravity and levity; voices are often weighed on music scales.

Koreshanity is the seventh wonder of the world, the seventh great system in the order of human development.

Our story of the Koreshan Geodetic air line is straight; our methods are upright, downright, and straightforward.

Millions are toiling for money, but no money is toiling for the millions; money does not produce anything.

While the pessimist asks, "Is life worth living?" Koreshans assert that death is not worth dying!

Koreshanity annihilates infinite space, while other systems are made to kill time.

If you drive a sharp bargain into your neighbor, you may injure him for life.

The devil is clamoring for peace; he does not want evil exterminated!

In the mint of the mind truth coins new words by which to express itself.

Job was a great physician; he had lots of patience, and even cured himself.

Every modern fad is a new wrinkle on the face of the old world.

There is a great deal of wait in modern reform effort.

Everything in the universe is a part of the whole.

The great truth is quickest told in fewest words.

Calculating Path of Totality of Solar Eclipse.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I hear it argued by Copernicans that while pre-Copernican astronomers could and did foretell eclipses approximately, from a study of their cycles in the past, they could not map out the path of totality, as is now done with great accuracy by calculation. It is claimed that modern eclipse predictions are necessarily by calculation, since the path is never twice the same, and that no amount of study of cycles could furnish the slightest data for it. And it is further contended that these calculations being based on the Copernican system, their verification by the event demonstrates the truth of that system.

Could that path of totality be correctly mapped, exclusively from cellular data?—C. B., Salem, O.

The reason that neither the Ptolemaic nor the Copernican astronomers could map out the path of totality until recent times, is because the geography of the earth was not known. In addition to the tables of eclipse cycles, other factors must be considered. An eclipse cycle being of definite length (6,585 days, 7 hours, and 42 minutes), indicates the exact time and duration of eclipses; but the place and path must be computed from the basis of astronomical data, in connection with latitude, longitude, and time. The whole earth must be taken into account; its whole surface must be known and mapped before the belt from which the sun is seen to be totally eclipsed, can be mapped upon it.

Any system of astronomy can be made to embrace all of the observed relations of the sun and moon; and any system developed to the extent of the Copernican system, could be taken as a basis of eclipse calculations with results equally accurate. When a theory is developed sufficiently to incorporate an accounting for all of the movements of the physical heavens, it may express, in terms of its own, all of the eclipse elements; and no matter what the system may be, if it contains a system of orbits, with their angular relations, with observed speed of the orbs determined in terms of degrees of arcs, it may give values to each element in time and space, to fit all of the observed relations; and if fictitious values be taken as a basis of calculations, the results are the same. We contend that the accuracy of eclipse predictions, as per astronomical calculations, is not a proof of the correctness of the Copernican theory; the "proof" would prove too much, for it would prove any other theory developed to the same extent, true as well!

The Copernican system embraces all of the facts of the observed relations of the sun and moon; by observed relations we mean the apparent relations of orbits, eccentricities, nodes, apsides, etc. The surface of the earth is commonly supposed to be convex; it has its latitude and longitude, its poles and equator, its ecliptic and tropics, and consequent different periods of daylight, with the dividing line between day and night cutting the equator at different angles at different times, according as the sun is north or south of the equator. The revolving earth brings noon to each successive meridian; and the moon has an observed revolution in the heavens, covering a specific number of degrees in a given time. In the Koreshan System, the earth is of the same size, with same map and same relations of latitude and longitude. One half of its surface is illumined by the sun; it has its seasons; the obliquity of the ecliptic is in accordance with the observed facts of solar declinations, and the moon's relations, orbit, and lunations are the same as in the Copernican system, so far as celestial latitude and longitude are concerned. The Koreshan System is the antithet of the Copernican; it is the complete inversion of all of the principles in the popular theory; and different periods, cycles, changes, eclipses, transits, and all other astronomical phenomena which may be predicted by Copernicans to take place, by means of calculation from the basis of values in which it expresses all of these elements, are susceptible of being as accurately calculated from the basis of the Koreshan values given to the same facts of observation.

Suppose, for instance, that the ecliptic, the equator, and the lunar orbit were in the same plane. It is evident that a solar and a lunar eclipse would occur respectively at every new moon and full moon. It is easy for the reader to see that whether the earth be considered to be convex or concave, the path would be exactly the same—the middle of the eclipse path would be the equator throughout the time of the eclipse. But the ecliptic, equator, and lunar orbit do not sustain these relations, but different relations. But these different relations are constant; and if both the Copernican and the Koreshan systems use exactly the same facts of observation, the same observed relations, the line of totality of a solar eclipse would be marked out in exactly the same direction on the earth in each.

Both the Copernican and the Koreshan astronomers observe and measure the sun's discular diameter, and express it in terms of minutes of a degree—about 32'; and the moon about the same. Each observes that the moon's orbit sustains an obliquity to the ecliptic of 5° 19' (maximum; 4° 57' minimum); in each system, then, the eclipse limits are the same, for in each system the lunar parallax is the same, and the earth's semidiameter the same, the times the same, and the circles in each system contain exactly 360°. If the moon falls within 9° 30' (its minor eclipse limit) of its node, it will enter the zone of the lunar cut-off. By observation, we determine the angular distance of the moon from the sun, at which the moon will just escape producing a solar eclipse. The breadth of the solar eclipse belt or limit is about 3°; if the moon, when it is new, should come within this belt of 3° (1½° north or south of the sun), an eclipse will occur. These 3° are related to 180° of the earth's surface; and when the moon is within the belt of the 3°, when it is new it will cast a shadow somewhere in the circumference of the illumined hemisphere of the earth. Where?

Now, suppose the moon becomes new at noon on June 21, when the sun is on the meridian of Washington;—that is, suppose the middle of totality occurs at that time. The shadow would, at that moment, be projected onto that part of the earth of which the sun is the zenith—just north of Cuba. For any solar eclipse we can determine the path of the moon as related to the sun, and with equal accuracy determine the point of projection for every minute of the eclipse.

In both systems, the revolution of the moon in the heavens from west to east, covers exactly the same number of minutes of a degree per hour; and in both systems the moon has crossed the ecliptic at exactly the same angle. In the Koreshan System, the heavens complete a revolution in the same time that the earth is supposed to turn over in the other system; therefore, the speed of the spot of totality (about 100 miles in diameter) toward the east would be exactly the same in both systems; for we are both considering the facts as they are actually known beforehand, from astronomical data, to occur. The difference is, the one is supposing that the shadow is projected on a convex surface, while the other holds that it is projected in a concave earth. No matter whether the earth be convex or concave, the angle at which the moon crosses the ecliptic during the eclipse will project a shadow in the same direction on the earth's surface; and the calculation of the direction of its path, or the path of any eclipse, after the time is fixed, is a simple problem in spherical trigonometry.

Jesus Was Born Immortal.

(1) Was Jesus' body changed to the immortal state, and then transmuted to spirit and planted in his disciples?

(2) Will this planting produce in humanity the 144,000 sons of God spoken of by John?

(3) Will the 144,000 be the Christs or Saviors for another planting?

(4) Are the people of the present generation the reincarnation of the spirits of their ancestors; and will their spirits be given to their progeny?—W. T. D., Wolfe City, Tex.

(1) Jesus was born immortal; he was resurrected from the mortal plane through a higher form of generation—virginal propagation. Through his death at the hands of the Jews, and his resuscitation from the tomb of Joseph, he was changed to the arch-natural state, the highest condition of physical, immortal existence; and then he was transmuted to spiritual energy and projected into his following.

(2) The planting of Jesus in the human race will ultimate in the manifestation of the 144,000 sons of God. He was the seed sown; he died in the human soil. He was the Savior who thus took upon himself the corruptions of the world, crossing his life with that of the mortal world. The fruitage of that sowing is the final resurrection, the goal of the primitive Christian's hope; it is the harvest of the age, the coming of Jesus in multiplied form, standing on Mt. Zion.

(3) The 144,000 immortal men will be the Saviors or Christs, through whom every man will be saved to the extent of his aspirations, during the coming ages. They will be the fruitage of the entire cycle, the product of the incubation of the human universe. They will precipitate the substances of life into every plane of humanity. They will impart the Elixir of Life, the rejuvenescence, to the entire human family. It will be a universal administration of life, a gradual impartation and descent until the circumference is reached. It will not be a sowing in the sense that Jesus was sown; the 144,000 will not individually multiply. There are never more than 144,000 sons of God; that number is the perfect evolution of the perfect root of involution. When the limit is reached, there is a gradual absorption of their animal life by the mortal planes. It is a great system of perpetuity of the universe, through the evolution of life to its outermost limit.

(4) The people of the present generation contain the life of the past generation; the living mortals contain the spirits of the dead. The present generation is a re-clothing of the life that existed in the past generations. A man is an embodiment of human life; that human life did not originate with him; it existed before. Through mortal generation, the mortal man projects his life into his progeny; at corruptible dissolution his mental entitles pass into those whom he loves most. Koreshan Science makes a distinction between reincarnation and re-embodiment. There have been no reincarnations since Jesus. Reincarnation is resurrection to the immortal state; re-embodiment is on the mortal plane. Humanity is now composed of viduals, divided beings. Reincarnation is the full expression of divine life, while in the mortal world the life of the devil is perpetuated and re-embodied.

The Messianic Law of Polarization.

In the tract on Celibacy, by KORESH, we read of the law of polarization; that it was not revealed to celibate societies of the past, and that to obtain the highest results there must be a "perfect application of the law of polarization." Now, will you kindly inform us about the application of the law, or refer us to some treatise explaining the matter?—E. E. K., Flagstaff, Ariz.

We think the question is answered in the tract referred to. Because the law of polarization was not understood by the celibate societies of the past, the energies conserved were dissipated; they had no tangible object of love, and consequently the substances of love found no positive pole of elaboration. The law of polarization is Messianic; nineteen hundred years ago Jesus instituted a system of unity of mind, a living, human battery, of which he was the positive pole. The disciples were taught the necessity of cognition of one medium—himself, as the object of worship, the only door through which the people of that period could enter a higher plane of life.

The law of polarization involves the holding of the substances of life in common, as well as the goods of life, the products of use; its application is made with reference to a body of people, and not merely individually or personally. No one can make a full and complete application of the truth of Koreshanity independently of its Founder or his group of disciples. Its application involves the establishment of new relations in the formation of a human battery, the emplacement of each member of which is ultimately determined scientifically.

Neither can complete application of the law of polarization obtain apart from a thorough comprehension of the System, and absolute submission to its principles.
Its application involves the various factors in the establishment of the new order, all the way from the promulgation of the truth, through all the lines and planes of discipline and restraint, the gradual elimination of sensuality from the mind and body, to the final baptism of a circumfer-ence of followers by the Messianic center.
A similar work must be performed at the end of this age, as that performed by Jesus at the close of the Jewish dispensation.

The various orders and societies of the Koreshan System are established for the purpose of educating a following for the attainment of a thorough comprehension of the laws of the universe as applied to man; and in order that the law of polarization may be understood, we commend to the inquirer and others, the channels instituted; for in fact it involves the fulfilment of all law, and embraces all of the factors of the entire Koreshan movement.

First Impressions of Investigators of Koreshan Universology.

Silenced in the Presence of Superior Wisdom; Hearing the Voice of the Good Shepherd; the Logic of Koreshanity Unanswerable.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have often had it in mind to respond to your request for first impressions of Koreshanity, and I now do so, adding thereto my present convictions.

More than two and a half years ago, a neighbor showed me a copy of THE FLAM-ING SWORD (August, 1896), as an extreme specimen of radical teaching. I asked to borrow it to read, which request was granted. I spent hours the next day reading, re-reading, and wondering what it could all mean. There were several articles that so accorded with my convictions of truth that I readily accepted them.
But who was the writer? Why, KORESH.
And who is KORESH? The same paper answered under the head of The Salvator and Scientist, as "CYRUS THE SHEPHERD OF LIFE, who uncovers the mystery of the ages; presents the genuine interpretation of phenomena and form as expressed in the universe, and demonstrates the laws, forms, and relations of Being and Existence,—the true character of God and man, and their relations."

The same paper also stated that "He comes at the crisis of the ages, with the Lord's new name, and brings to us the Everlasting Gospel, restoring the doctrines of the Lord Jesus Christ," etc.

Here were indeed, stupendous claims for a man; but I had so longed for light right along these lines, that I could lay aside all preconceived notions and investigate.
As for the concave earth, this seemed absurd enough at first thought; but the law of analogy seemed reasonable to me. I was silenced, as it were, in the presence of superior wisdom, and was anxious to learn.

For several years, I had cultivated a desire to see the Christ and to know him when he should come. I had often rejoiced in the hope of his coming; but the manner of his coming was always a mystery to me. I wanted to know more, and at once wrote for other copies of THE SWORD, and pamphlets explaining the doctrines of Koreshanity. The doctrine taught I could not disprove, and much of it I could accept at once. But finally, doctrines and scientific teaching all settled or laid aside, there was KORESH with his stupendous claims. What will you do with KORESH? was the question! Upon this point I suspended judgment until the demonstration of the earth's concavity by the Geodetic Survey on the coast of Florida.

I had failed to discern the voice of the Good Shepherd in the churches, and had turned to the Salvation Army with a good deal of hope, but was so miserably disappointed that I was almost ready to despair.
But now each number of THE SWORD gave me some new light and hope. KORESH boldly told the truth about money, politics, and religion, and he struck a death-blow at the tap-root of all evil. Little by little, and more and more, as I read and studied, I discerned the voice of the Good Shepherd; and now, after nearly three years' study, I am utterly unable to find any other rational ground of hope to stand upon. KORESH is surely the Shepherd of Israel, and all he claims to be.

The CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or New Geodesy, is to me a satisfactory proof of the form and function of the universe; and that being true, all else follows as a result. The Koreshan System is harmonious in all its parts, and gives humanity a rational ground of hope for attainment of every material good, and above all, it teaches the science of eternal life. Koreshanity is to me the only exponent of the Bible that harmonizes the apparent contradictions upon which denominations found their creeds. It appeals to the highest interests of every class of intelligent men.
Its solution of every problem that confronts humanity today, and its unanswerable logic applied to every human interest for all time and eternity, are all so satisfactory to me now, after nearly three years of study, that I wish I could induce all of the people whom I know, to send for the entire list of Koreshan literature, and study the same at least one year before deciding adversely. See Acts xvii:11, and context.—SOLOMON HAWORTH, Wash.

Editor of Medical Reform Advocate Converted to Koreshanity.

DEAR FRIENDS:—The complete set of Koreshan literature came to hand in due time, and has been read with great interest. Many years ago I became dissatisfied with churchianity. Then I tried to investigate Spiritualism, and again, Theoso-phy and Mysticism; but I must confess that I have had more satisfaction out of reading the books on Koreshanity than any other, and I believe that it is destined to be the coming religion that will liberate the people from their bondage to ignorance and superstition. I desire to identify my humble self with this movement without delay, and aid it what little I can.

I will write for application for membership, and enter on probation at once, and will enter the work heart and soul.

To this end I desire your advice as to how or what course to pursue. I have been trying to do a little reform work in my way, trying to educate the public and to save human life and suffering,—regarding the vaccination question, etc. I would like to do what I can by selling the CEL-LULAR COSMOGONY and other Koreshan literature, and soliciting subscriptions for
THE FLAMING SWORD.

If this meets your approval, I would like to become agent, and desire to know the best terms you can give me. I shall work around here for some time, but would, as soon as convenient, like to go to Chicago for several reasons: (1) I intend to devote the remainder of my life to this work, and would find a more congenial atmosphere among Koreshans. (2) I desire to possess all the knowledge I can grasp or comprehend, and to place myself under a teacher.
(3) I would like, if it were possible, to become a teacher; in short, to find the field of greatest usefulness to humanity. Yours in the interest of truth and liberty,—
THOMAS MORGAN, Ohio.

Koreshan Work in New York.

Among College Professors and Students; Books Sold to a Catholic Priest; Whole Towns Agitated.

April 24.—I expect to dispose of more books in Potsdam than I have here (Canton); for it is a larger town than this.
There is a normal school there with between 400 and 500 students. I have done well for the cause here,—yes, more than well. I have the whole town excited!
There is a college and a theological seminary here, and I am sure that I have interviewed personally more than half of the students, and all of the professors. There is also a very large public school, and I have called upon the teachers, and at least half of them bought a book; those who did not buy, got the idea. The newspaper men have treated me well; one gave me quite an item, and another will give one next week. I have met the correspondent of the leading Syracuse paper, and he will publish an article.

I sold three books to the Catholic priest here; he was glad to get them, and seemed very much interested. He said he would distribute the books. In fact, I have done remarkably well here, in spite of the fact that this is a Universalist town with a Universalist college and school, and I used to be one of their very prominent preachers.

May 1.—I did not sell quite as many books in Potsdam as I expected. I secured the names of all the teachers and liberal people, and succeeded in disposing of 45 books, and in getting the town agitated.

Dr. S., at the head of the normal school, bought a book gladly; also the teacher of astronomy, and the teacher of languages. I hear that Prof. B., the astronomer, has been talking about the book to his classes. I left a copy with the principal of the Clarkson school; he was glad to get it, and said he would place the copy in the school library. The public library was glad to get a copy. I sold books to the best people in town, and have stirred up the place tremendously. Just across the river is Canada, and I will go over there soon. All northern New York state is stirred up over the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and will be stirred up more yet!—REV. U. GORDON MITCHELL, Koreshan Traveling Representative.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly, May 11, 1899.

This issue is the Dewey Day number, with a very appropriate front-page cartoon of America's esteem of the great Admiral. A superb double-page illustration shows American sailors feasting on Dewey Day on board a man-of-war. Other illustrations include Gen. Lawton's capture of Santa Cruz, the remarkable trip of the Wilmington up the Orinoco river, and finally, the pitiful pictures of the starving Cubans—two full pages of photographic reproductions, showing the plain truth concerning the misery and sufferings of the unfortunate victims of the miserable war with Spain. This is the most startling feature of this number of Leslie's Weekly, an urgent appeal to Americans for help for 150,000 orphan children on the verge of starvation. The letter-press is illustrated by small pictures, including a full page of personals; high class editorials and a plain and true statement by one of Leslie's Weekly's war correspondents, of the cause of the outbreak at Manila by the rebels. Other features make this number unusually interesting and valuable.

The Cosmopolitan for May.

The series of articles on Great Problems in Organization is of special interest to students of Koreshanity. This number contains description of the greatest business organization in the world, the U. S. postal service, in which is seen the very elements of imperialism—the power of one man at the head of all the postal departments. The Ideal and Practical Organization of the Home is another interesting contribution of excellent merit, and of worth to our readers. The editor's remarkable series of articles on the Building of an Empire continue, the story of the rise of Mohammedanism. The Princess of Trebizond; Arctic Perils; A Railway to Klondike; Science in the Model Kitchen; and Men, Women, and Events, are excellent features, beautifully illustrated.

Success, New York, N. Y.

Success for the week of May 6 contains a splendid write-up of Tripler's experiments with liquified air. It begins with a full-page illustration of the scientist experimenting in his laboratory; and has two additional pages of illustrations and descriptions of the various experiments which may be performed with the new liquid. All Americans are interested in the development and success of Cuba. The Heroines of the Cuban War, with illustrations, brings the reader into close personal contact, as it were, with a few great women who endured excessive privations for the sake of freedom. The subscription price of Success is only $1.50 per year; the journal is a weekly, 16 pages, finely illustrated. It is full of vim, inspiring the reader with an aim to succeed in all he undertakes. Every number is bright, cheerful, and wholesome.

The Arena for May.

The May number contains a startling exposure of Mrs. Eddy, the originator of the "christian science" fallacy, showing that she unscrupulously plagiarized from the writings and doctrines of Dr. Quimby. Because of this exposure, we think that this number of the Arena will have a very large sale wherever "christian science" is known. Other excellent articles are, Illustrious Lunatics, The Republic of Cuba, Is Bellamy's Idea Feasible? Was Jefferson a Democrat? Besides these, there are editorials on current subjects and issues.

The Chautauquan.

The article on Lord Salisbury, by Prof. Stephens of Cornell University, brings out the unique character of the great Englishman in contrast with that of Gladstone, his predecessor. The illustrated articles are: A great English Seaport, Manila Under American Rule, and History as it is Made. The features of special interest to our readers are, The Church, a discussion of its successes and failures, and The American in Black,—a recital of the difficulties in the way of the solution of the negro problem. Students of the science of government will be greatly interested and pleased with the view of the English House of Lords.

Koreshan Equitable Commerce Unquestionably Correct.

Koreshanity teaches that the earth is a concave sphere, and that the sun, moon, and stars are enclosed within the concavity. Be this as it may, Koreshanity also teaches a doctrine of Equitable Commerce, that is unquestionably right, and its application in human affairs is the only thing that we can conceive of that would produce those ideal conditions, that "good time coming," which has been the dream of the poet, the philanthropist, and the philosopher in all ages.—Equity, Topeka, Kas.

What You Have Been Long Looking For!

"Multum in Parvo."

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers. Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with 'The Suggester and Thinker'—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 1 cent.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 1 cent.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 1 cent.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 1 cent.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 1 cent.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 1 cent each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Divine Factors in Economic Reconstruction.

Equitable Distribution After God Breathes His Life Into Man; the Almighty Descends to Regulate the Affairs of Humanity; the New Order Emerges From the Fires of Revolution.

WHILE we discuss the questions of commerce and finance, one fact always confronts us—that the applied principle of distribution under any system, whether competitive or communistic, must necessarily involve the establishment of central storehouses from which goods are distributed to less general, and thence to local stores, whence distribution is made to families and individuals. The principal object aimed at, especially in so called Christian and civilized countries, should be the greatest good, not to the greatest number, but to all. The greatest good to all is the abundant supply of the necessities of life to all, and beyond this, the comforts and the luxuries so far as superabundance may provide for the industrious and the economical.

The productions of nature and art are secured, created, and gathered into storehouses for distribution. That this may be accomplished, some plan or order of creation and collection is necessarily applied and enforced. The general method prevailing at the present day, is that founded upon the competitive system of trade and commerce. Is the system a successful one? We mean by this, is the object of human existence and effort attained? It has been said that the chief end of man is to glorify God and enjoy him forever. We might add that the chief purpose of God is to glorify man and enjoy him forever; and we apprehend that the only enjoyment that God can have with man is in the happiness of man,—a condition never yet consummated in Pagan-Christianity, and under the auspices of the competitive system. The happiness of man—if this is the end to be attained—must depend largely upon his full enjoyment of the proceeds of his industry. Two things are absolutely certain;—first, that production is superabundant; second, that the products of industry are not judiciously and efficiently distributed. Can there be a remedy under a system, the only impulse of which is human greed? Or can a system be inaugurated that will regulate the relations of the body politic, while the only impulses of the human soul are selfishness and sensuality?

We reiterate: "The love of money is the root of all evil." Without entering into the etymology and analysis of the term money, we will assume that the love of money is the love of that which the world today generally regards as such; namely, a piece of paper, or some metallic substance stamped and used as a medium for the exchange of products. Can the evil be remedied? If so, by the application of what principles and laws? Most assuredly not by the principles of competition. So called money, like any other commodity for which industry is applied, is only a means to an end. Why not attain the end more directly and without this means? is the question that most naturally arises, in our contemplation of commercial and financial problems.

Can the great centers for the aggregation of the essential products of industry be replenished without that medium of exchange called money? Can the goods so gathered into the greater storehouses be parceled out to the local centers without the aid of this medium? Is there any process that can preclude the employment of the various means of transportation now in vogue? Of course not. Goods must be transported to their various destinations, under any system. This fact is universally known; but transportation and distribution can be as efficiently maintained without the medium called money as with it, provided the actuation of the effort is of the right kind. The central impulse of the competitive system, the one in which money is regarded as a necessity, is greed. The love of money has its root in the love of self. There is another impulse, but at present it is the ideal; this impulse is in the principle of love to the neighbor.

Before a perfect state of society can be attained, man must have reached that condition wherein his greatest happiness resides in the application of the principle embraced in the Lord's summary of the ten commandments: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This state will never be attained through the processes of evolution as taught by the so-called social evolutionists of this age, nor through the progress of an adulterated and paganized Christianity. A Christianity which demands for its perpetuity the mitrailleuse and the Krupp gun, can hardly be said to fulfil the injunction, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The tendency of modern Christianity is to foster everything but the doctrine and life of Christ; and the world, under its influence, is departing more and more from the precept and the example of the Savior of men.

Upon what, then, depend the reformation of the world and the inauguration of a social fabric, from which the love of money is utterly expunged, and wherein the products of industry are equitably distributed according to the just demands of the producer? We answer: upon nothing less than the baptism of fire in which, according to promise, the wicked shall be burned. But who are the wicked, and by what special kindling will the conflagration be inaugurated, through which the wicked shall become ashes under the soles of the saints' feet? "All have sinned"; "there is none good but one, that is, God." Then we are necessarily all wicked; and in the conflagration and the baptism of fire to come, we who regard ourselves as comprising the wicked will be consumed; for "then shall the wicked be revealed" (in us), "whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." This is the hope of the world. When the Spirit of truth shall so open the eyes of the understanding that man looks for the revelation of his own sins, and shall call upon God to consume, with his fire of conflagration, not merely the sins but the forms of the wicked, then shall be consummated the righteous expectation of the ages, and from the consuming fire there will arise the purified sons of the Most High God. When this shall have been accomplished, there will be manifest a power of understanding and application capable of so regulating the affairs of men as to correct all the abuses of the competitive system, by sweeping it from the hearts of men and from the face of the earth.

It is not to be expected that the materialistic mind—in the church or out of it—can comprehend these higher laws of progress and reform, or that it can conceive of the possibility of such a crucible of metamorphosis as that involved in the declared purpose of God to consummate the age in a general conflagration of material entities, called the burning up of the world, foreshadowed in the termination of the natural existence of Enoch, Noah, Moses, Elias, and Jesus, through the fire which consumed their material forms, reducing them to the spiritual product of such a kindling.

Equitable distribution without the aid of money will be the most simple thing imaginable, when the human heart is righted by the breath of God. When it is declared that God placed cherubim and a flaming sword at the east (rising) of the Garden of Eden to perpetuate the way of the Tree of Life, there is involved, literally, just the consummation above described. The changes noted above and predicted in Scripture will be wrought through the one and only appointed Messenger of the Covenant. The great battle of Gog and Magog (capital and labor) will effect the climax of the preparatory destruction, which must precede the kingdom (not republic) of righteousness.

Dr. Henderson on Organic Education.

L. E. BORDEN.

DR. C. HANFORD HENDERSON, whose article on primary education in the Atlantic attracted so much attention last year, has given a course of lectures on "Organic Education" in Boston the past winter. His ideas are marked by strong common sense and a clear perception of many points wherein present social conditions are vicious.

Dr. Henderson thinks the university should be for the good of the people, not the people for the university; he would have no entrance examinations, but open wide the doors to all who are reaching out for mental training. Frequent tests in the class room would take the place of examinations and maintain the standard. If the effort that is now wasted in trying to keep persons out of the universities, was spent in urging them to come in, the average intelligence of this country would rise, and the university would not fail to meet just the want that it was created to supply.

It is needless to say that Dr. Henderson has no sympathy with the class of university that is founded by the rich for the rich, to inculcate the principles of plutocracy. The vital question in America seems to be just now, whether we are to have any democratic universities. Every state should maintain such an institution which, like that of Wisconsin, is free to all its residents. Perhaps the best use that a millionaire can make of his tainted wealth, is to devote it to education, but let the money be a gift to the state; let him not endow a university and attempt to control its faculty or prescribe what system of political economy it shall teach.

This is not a point touched upon in the lectures, but, is there not danger lest disgust with such methods excite a vulgar contempt for education itself, among those who need it most? It has always been hard to prevent the untaught and illiterate from decrying knowledge. In almost every rustic community there is a jealous tendency to sneer at the boy who has been to the Agricultural College or to the School of Technology; yet, so long as the world lasts, skilled labor in every department will command a better price, and, other things being equal, the mind whose logical faculty has been trained by a course in geometry is better equipped to carry on the world's work than one that has not been disciplined. In the professions, no man expects to become a physician or a lawyer without special training. "Genius is a long patience," is the maxim of art, where it is understood the most splendid natural gifts will never produce a statue, a picture, or a book without the mastery of technique. "I have no use for books, I have them all in my head," said a woman who claimed to be "a seer and a prophetess;" so she went on with her "spiritual intuitions" and automatic writing, while her language violated every rule of grammar.

Goethe had one of the broadest and most productive minds of literature, but he said that he never found himself in the presence of the humblest soul without mentally asking, "What can you teach me?"

Ignorance is arrogant, wisdom is teachable, and the kingdom of heaven is to those of a child-like spirit. Our ideal of perfect character demands the balance of love and wisdom. If Koreshan doctrine teaches anything, it teaches that this is neither the age of faith nor inspiration, but the age of hard work and science; and science, as the old definition in Greenleaf's Arithmetic used to put it, is knowledge reduced to order.

To return to Dr. Henderson, who makes some very plain statements in his last lecture, which is a plea to let education cover the whole of life and lead to the pursuit of excellence rather than the pursuit of wealth. "No amount of personal industry," he says, "will make a man wealthy. The days are not long enough, and human strength is not great enough. The only way to be rich is to appropriate a part of the wealth created by other people, that is, to exploit labor; or to appropriate the wealth created by nature, that is, to exploit the natural resource; or by speculation to appropriate the wealth created by the growth and movement of population, that is, to exploit society."

If a man will recognize this fact at the outset and determine not to be a parasite, but to let his life render genuine social service, the lecturer would advise him to refuse to work for hire and join some co-operative enterprise. Just so soon as superior people do this, he believes that wealth will lose its tremendous power. "First to be, then to know, and only incidentally to have,"—this is his program, and a recognition of co-operative principles is shown in the following words:

It is impossible to lift oneself at the expense of others. It is equally impossible to truly serve others without serving oneself. The universe is at bottom a moral universe, and man is essentially a social being. The drama of life is not a game of solitaire.

It is encouraging to find a man giving such advice in a world where people are so slow to grasp the protective power of co-operation. "Artists can't live in Boston; not more than two or three can make their salt," said one of the pioneers in newspaper illustration in that city. The only way to meet the competitive system is to fight it with its own weapons. Let the artists of Boston form a protective league founded on co-operative principles, with the motto, "One for all and all for one." How soon they could force the great competitive press to their terms! Instead of giving every new artist the cold shoulder, and looking upon him as a natural enemy coming to take the bread from their mouths, let them discern the strength that lies in numbers and receive into the fraternity any man who can pass certain tests laid down as the standard of artistic excellence.

Every new trust that forms is an object lesson to show those who long for the fall of selfishness and monopoly, how to combine justly for the formation of monopolies founded upon righteous principles. In the societies of heaven, we are told that whatever good the angels possess, excites in them a corresponding desire to impart. Imagine the whole earth filled with the spontaneous joyousness of loving and giving! If every man regarded his neighbor in love, none would be in need, and no man would be reduced to the vulgar extremity of sounding his own praises in order to secure his own place, where by the exercise of his peculiar talents he can best serve the state. The monopoly of the future must be the monopoly of love.

Doctor Henderson has recognized the power and value of united life, but seems to take no account of one sad obstacle to the general institution of co-operative enterprises. It has been found by repeated failures that human nature is too selfish to unite successfully on a co-operative or communistic basis. Koreshan Science is more clear-sighted, and its hopes for the establishment of the ideal life in earth include the proviso that human nature must be changed,—not by evolution, but by a specific outpouring of God's love.

Vision of Judgment and Revolution.

The Muses Unto Their Poet.

"Thou art praying for a poem;
Thou art longing for a lay:
Now, listen well, with thy soul's ear,
And we'll tell thee what to say."

What the Poet Sang.

THE waves of vast commotion are casting high their spray;
And earthquake shock rends soil and rock with might's resistless sway;

Yet land and sea bow low to Law, and its behests obey:
'Tis man alone, of all that lives, walks error's wilful way.

Not a nation, nay, not one, but prepareth now for war;
And earth's armies and their millions, are marching near and far:

Death's dark and dreadful fiat, from life doth men debar,
And a stormy sky of darkness veils o'er each shining star.

And sense-bound souls lie sleeping in stupor of this night,
Soon, rudely to be awakened by the shock of terror's fright,
To grope amid black chaos without the gift of sight;
For long and oft have men refused the blessedness of light.

This weltering world of sorrow, of sin and shame and crime,
Draws near that dread Tribunal whose judgments are divine;
When justice exact and righteous shall be laid by plummet line,

And rule and square and compass with God's strong arm combine.

And the refuges of lies, like dead chaff of threshing floor,
By mighty whirlwinds winnowed from clean life-giving store,
Be driven far from human ken, and found for aye no more—
Mankind no more entangled by the wiles of Satan's lore.

The least erected spirits that bestial walk the earth,
Uplifted are to stations high exceeding far their worth;
Such, scorn pure use or honor true, and glory in the dearth
Of all divinest virtues, that crown man with rebirth.

And Mammon is exalted above all by men called God;
And gold and gain and lucre vile, make man a sensuous clod;
And retribution, rising, reacheth for judgment-rod,
To smite, till lofty idols lie prone upon earth's sod.

He that sitteth in the circle of the heavens overhead,
He beholdeth all expanses of the earth beneath outspread;
He it is that judgeth rightly, flesh of man, both quick and dead:

He it is that purgeth purely when the furnace fires are red.

O Lord God, thou good Creator—Father-Mother of mankind!
In thy Word divine recorded, we this promise perfect find:
"Behold I create all things new."—Lovely truth in life entwined;
Heavenly earth divinely human; Divinity in man enshrined

The Coming of the Lord and His Kingdom.

The Decline of the Church and the Reign of Fallacy; the Cause of the Perversion; the Coming of the Kingdom After the Great Falling Away.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

AS THE outcome of nineteen hundred years of apostasy, which, as Paul declares, began in the time of the apostles of Christ, the world, including the church, is stranded in the most utter and hopeless ignorance of God and his relation to men. The direct outcome of this is the sad condition of humanity, in which the few wallow in beastly luxury, vice, and crime, the direct results of perverted law, and the many exist in want and pauperism, ignorance and crime. "My people have gone into captivity," says Jehovah, "because they have no knowledge." The direct effect of the knowledge of God that Jesus brought to the world, was to make the part of humanity that received it, free and equal, destroying among his followers the very idea of private property, which is the Pandora's box out of which all the evils of present conditions among men have grown.

One of the first indications of this monstrous growth was the appearance, in the second century of the Christian age, of the order of the clergy arising over the simple, equal brotherhoods which were the only organizations of the early and only real Christians. Of the ambitious struggles of these antichristian potentates, Jerome, one of the so called Christian fathers, (who died A. D., 426,) according to Coleman, in "Ancient Christianity Exemplified," alleges that the standing office and authority of a bishop were a necessary expedient to still the cravings and strife for preferment, which, by the instigation of Satan, arose in process of time among the elders."

The church historian, Neander, says of the order of presbyters, the first stage of the outer development of the great apostasy, "They were not designed to exercise absolute authority, but to act as presiding officers and guides of an ecclesiastical republic; to conduct all things with the co-operation of the communities, as their ministers, and not as their masters. It could hardly work itself out in a natural way, from the essence of a Christian life and Christian fellowship, that this guidance should be placed in the hands of one individual. The monarchical form of government was not suited to the Christian community of spirit."

Of this apparent going back, in the development of the great apostasy, to the Jewish idea of a ruling priesthood, Coleman says: "No change, perhaps, in the whole history of the changing forms of church government, can be specified more destructive of the primitive constitution of the church, or more disastrous to its spiritual interests." Neander says of it: "This entire perversion of the original view of the Christian church, was itself the origin of the whole system of the Roman Catholic religion—the germ from which sprang the popery of the dark ages." It requires but a single glance at the present condition of the church and the world, to show that the apostasy still reigns; and men have come to conclude that it is the normal state of things and will last forever.

When Jesus was asked by Pilate if he was a king, he said: "To this end was I born." "My kingdom is not of this world" (Greek, age). Of the kingdom for the coming of which in earth he taught us to pray, he would be the king, not in some unknown spiritual world, but here in earth. He plainly taught that he sowed the seed of that kingdom, which was himself, but it took an age to reproduce that seed in the human earth; hence his kingdom could not be outwardly established in earth until the next world—age.

Of the two words in the New Testament commonly rendered world, aion always means a period of time; in the Bible, an age; the other, kosmos, means the order, or human institutions of an age or dispensation. In their timic relation, both have the same import; and neither ever means the physical earth. Jesus' words, then, plainly mean,—I, the God-man, in whom dwells the Father-God, am not the king of this age, so Caesar need not fear me as a rival. The devil has the authority, and is king of this age. Caesar has nothing to fear from him. My kingdom is to be of the next age, when I will reign King of kings and Lord of lords. That time is at hand when the apostasy will come to an end, and every despotism be destroyed; righteousness, so long an exile, will return to this suffering, sinful earth, which will become the abode of happiness and peace.

[I purpose writing a series of short articles on the subject of the Coming of the Lord; and the several phases of the subject treated are indicated by the following questions: Who is the Lord? Does he ever come into the world as a man? Are there fixed times for such coming, and what are they? What are the causes and conditions of his coming? What is the manner of his coming? What are the results of his coming? —O. F. L.]

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE QUESTION of the trusts is one of the most stupendous issues now agitating the mind of the public. The development of these gigantic combinations is phenomenal and startling; there has been nothing in all the history of the present social and economic structure, or even of the world, that is fraught with greater imminent results. The newspapers of the world are full of agitation concerning them, and the reform press stands in awe at the overtowering systems of oppression. During the past six months, trusts have been formed in the United States, whose aggregate capital amounts to nearly $6,000,000,000. The total amount of money in circulation is nearly $2,000,000,000, while the treasury contains about $600,000,000; the two sums aggregate less than one half the total trust capital of America! Concerning the stupendous import of these recently developed trusts, the Chicago News says: "The rapidity with which various trade combinations are being organized is a commentary on American business operations which no one can interpret or explain. Where these organizations will stop, and what will be their ultimate effect upon industrial enterprises, no one has yet ventured a definite answer. That these gigantic syndicates can go on absorbing business and capital of the country without affecting both business and capital, for either good or ill, hardly seems possible." In another department of THE FLAMING SWORD we publish an editorial, "The Trust Climax," from the Chicago Chronicle. THE FLAMING SWORD not only has pointed out the meaning of these rapidly forming combinations, but has repeatedly foretold what the results will be. Contrary to the usual opinion, that trusts are developed from other than competitive and democratic principles and conditions, we assert that nothing in the field of modern social economy is more susceptible of easier demonstration than the fact that trusts are the legitimate results of the competitive system, fostered by democracy. They are the outgrowth of democracy, the fruit of republicanism, the product of modern civilization. Trusts will continue to be formed until the wealth of the country is absorbed or controlled,—until the climax of their usurpation is reached—and then comes the revulsion, the revolution, the fall of financial institutions, and the crash of kingdoms!

"Christian science" is meeting with reverses; there is a growing revulsion of feeling among people interested, against the groundless fallacy. It is a gigantic mushroom, generated in the hotbed of fallacy, and it cannot endure critical scrutiny. It is destined to wither under the piercing rays of a strong searchlight. It is a huge wave of fancy, a passing agitation in the superficial mind, displacing a few theological sandbars in the shallow portions of the restless sea of humanity. It is a mental hallucination, the absolute of falsehood, founded on denial. It begins with deception. Its prophetess is an imitator, a plagiarist. Her claims are false, and her system is a perverted philosophy,—a fad. Eddyism is receiving a severe blow from the hands of able minds which have been directly interested in it for many years, and acquainted with the methods of its "mother." The Arena for May contains a plainly and sincerely told revelation, a startling expose, of many of the subtleties and deceptions practiced by Mrs. Eddy in the founding and promulgation of the pseudo-science; and a number of books and pamphlets have been published with the view to exposing her schemes. The work of opposition will serve to check the growth of the fallacy, but it will not satisfy the truth-seeker; the opposition now manifesting itself so vigorously against Mrs. Eddy is destructive, not constructive; and the result will be a heated and tedious contention among the various factions of metaphysics, about the truthfulness of the statements concerning her personal conduct and motives. The methods pursued by THE FLAMING SWORD are totally different; we exclude contentions about personalities, and go direct to the root of fallacy. We do not fight people, but their ideas. Have not the contributors to the Arena mental ability to logically attack "Christian science" from the standpoint of a demonstrated premise? Must they resort to appeal to prejudice by methods which questioned even the character and motives of Jesus the Christ nineteen hundred years ago?

When a prophet commits himself definitely on the character and time of coming events, he gives to the world a method of test of the integrity of the prophet; predictions not fulfilled originate with false prophets. After publishing a little 5½ x 8 inch, 4 page monthly leaflet for about seven years, the editor of the Cayster has reached the conclusion and the delusion that he is the voice of the Almighty,—a definite and special personality authorized to either read or write the book of Revelation, or anything else about the universe; he is the sun-faced angel to unravel the mysteries of the end of the age. The route to this conclusion is rather circuitous. Though now it appears from recent issues that he has been a prophet all along, it has been only three or four years since the little sheet showed evidences of partial acceptance of Koreshanity; and since then, mangled forms of Koreshan expressions have frequently appeared. Now, the Bright and Morning Star twinkles only through the new prophet, shining upon an earth in the shape of a woman, veiled in an ice firmament. Literal fulfilments of his prophecies are booked to begin this month; then terrible earthquakes, the smashing of the great universal clock face, and the consequent destruction of time itself! He is a sort of a negative prophet; for he can "see no reason why a part of one of the continents may not be broken loose in this great shaking of the universe. Lashed and crushed by vast tidal waves that rise up [how far?] to meet the opening heavens, whole countries may be engulfed in ocean." In view of the terrible disasters expected this year, he ceases publication of his messages, abandons the world to itself, adjourns sine die, to anxiously watch and await the results!

There are daily evidences of the fact that the great newspapers of the civilized world purposely exaggerate and color news, reports, and interviews to conform to particular editorial policies, but there are less frequent admissions of it. Occasionally, a daily finds it convenient to expose the tricks of contemporaries, and thereby incidentally reveals its own. The Chicago Chronicle gives an instance of how newspaper frauds are perpetrated, and of course it speaks from experience. General Anderson has just returned from the Philippines, and expresses himself freely to the great daily journals of Chicago; and he either tells different stories to the different dailies, or the dailies alter the one story to suit the several journalistic attitudes toward the administration on the Philippine question. In one paper he is made to say that the Filipinos are crafty, suspicious, and treacherous, though fairly intelligent; in another, that Aguinaldo is sincere and his soldiers brave; in another interview the rebel is a mere tool; in another, that American soldiers are enthusiastic in fighting the rebels; while in the Chronicle the Filipinos are capable of self-government. The policy of each paper is well known in Chicago, and each of these reports is in conformity with the particular editorial policy of the paper in which it appears. The earmarks are plain; the same methods have been employed by all in twisting the interviews, and the palpable evidences show the Chronicle to be equally guilty with the others!

There is a growing sentiment in the mind of the American people, that the principles upon which the independence of the United States was declared constitute a gigantic fallacy; the feeling is becoming more and more marked that governments do not "derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." It is a mere sentiment, a theory which has never been applied in all the history of the American government. Since the founding of the republic of the United States, more than four fifths of its present territory has been added by cessions, grants, and purchases from foreign powers; and even men, who helped frame the Declaration of Independence, appointed governors over Florida, the Louisiana territory, and California against the will of the natives. The American civil war is an illustration of forcible suppression of rebellion against the will of millions of people of the South. Today, the United States of America does not conduct its government in conformity with the principles upon which it is supposed to be founded. There is no exclusively republican government in the world today; and more, there can't be!

The outlook for modern Christianity is not very encouraging; even the church admits it. Millions of dollars are being expended annually in orthodox propaganda, and the returns are exceedingly light. Though missionary work has been performed with considerable energy during the present century, there are 250,000,000 more heathens in the world than there were 100 years ago; and they are now increasing at the ratio of about 3,500,000 a year. The church talks much about the spread of Christianity in heathen lands, but not so much about the spread of heathenism in Christian lands. We are living amid the closing scenes of the nineteenth century; modern Christianity has had opportunity to do its best, and it has done it. The condition the civilized world is in today is the result—the worst mental chaos, inharmony, selfishness, greed, and corruption that have ever been witnessed in all the history of the world!

A religious production entitled, "The Way to the New Jerusalem," is before us. We have looked over its pages with the feeling that it might contain some directions as to which airship to board for the proper distant star, but do not find them; instead, a suggestion of a water route by immersion, and other methods which have failed for millions. Koreshanity is not so much interested just now in going to the New Jerusalem, as it is in having it come to us; and if the Bible is correct, if we wait awhile the holy city will descend from heaven to the external world. We prefer having it come in this way, rather than to trust blind guides who can tell us nothing about the character nor the location of the new city; besides, we do not relish the idea of going off into the popular skies without more reliable sky-pilots than modern clergymen and astronomers!

A $10,000,000 counterfeiting scheme is denominated by the American press as being the most gigantic fraud of the nineteenth century. A number of gentlemen in the secret service of the United States government were involved in the scheme; also men who knew how to make money were engaged to coin the silver and print the bills. The 4,000 millionaires of America know just as well how to make money as the counterfeiters; they use different methods, but the methods are just as fraudulent. The stealing of the sum of $10,000,000 through counterfeiting is insignificant compared with the stolen products of industry, representing the aggregate value of billions of dollars. The monumental fraud of the entire modern world is that perpetrated by men in the highest religious, social, political, and commercial positions and standing of the nations!

The money god is bringing the world to judgment, welcoming the prosperous and the rich to places of honor on the right hand, and the poor on the left, with curses of the modern hells. To those on the right it is said, "When I was naked, you clothed me; when I was destitute, you supported me. Enter into the joys and luxuries of the landlord." To those on the left is said, "When you saw me naked, hungry, sick, and in prison, you neither clothed me nor ministered unto me; depart from me,—I never knew you." The decree of the money god is unjust; the poor have really created the wealth of the god of gold, supplied all his wants, satisfied all his greed; but the others stole it from them, and have won a false reward.

The modern churchman claims to see great danger in growing Mormonism, because it has a semblance of order, and exerts an influence over the social and economic, as well as religious affairs of its people. Clergymen raise the cry that any religious system that undertakes to unite the spiritual and temporal affairs of humanity is un-American, and dangerous to the republic. The result is obvious; the modern Christian keeps his religion apart from his business. The Mosaic system was a hierarchy, a Theocracy; and today if Moses, with the same authority from the Almighty that he had 2,500 years ago, were to begin operations in America, the modern church would denounce his system as dangerous to democratic institutions, a menace to the liberties of a free people!

The church must have something to fight; and of course it fights everything that is opposed to the church,—it is natural. The church has not the heart, the desire, the courage, nor the ability to attack the monstrous corruptions and products of modern civilization; indeed, it has no desire to fight its friends! The church sanctions or permits all of the modern perversions which it does not oppose. At the close of the Jewish dispensation the church fought the truth, murdered Jesus, and allied itself with every element of moral, social, and economic corruption. The modern church is not only no better, but as much worse as the modern facilities for exerting influence are greater than they were in the Roman empire.

"Christian science" is full of inconsistencies and contradictions. It claims to be a system of healing the sick, but denies that there is any sickness; to raise the dead, while it denies that there is any death. It asserts the power of mind over matter, while denying that there is any matter. It presumes to illumine the minds of its devotees, while asserting that there is no darkness; and to save the people when they are not lost. It asks the investigator to rise above the mortal mind, while asserting that there is no mortal mind,—no mind but the immortal, no mind but God!

It is inconsistent for any mind advocating the principles of democracy, to condemn modern corporations and trusts. Competition is a free, open battle for wealth; democracy is the principle of vidual liberty to prey upon the neighbor to the full extent of commercial shrewdness. On the open field for the mastery, the ablest and the shrewdest win. Instead of condemning the trusts, THE FLAMING SWORD first condemns the principles and the conditions which have made trusts possible—the principles of individualism, competition, and democracy.

The strange thing about modern Christians and metaphysicians who claim to possess the spirit, mind, and consciousness of Deity is, that having that mind, they should not reveal to the world the omniscient view of the physical universe. Has the Almighty forgotten the nature and extent of his creation? It is a remarkable phase of intellectual light which presumes to know all about heaven and God's throne, but which is unable to settle the question concerning the form of the Almighty's footstool.

There is no such thing as harmony of the principles of co-operation and modern republicanism. The reform press is saturated with the idea of democracy, at the same time advocating municipal monopoly, and even communism. The true social system is not democratic; in it both competition and trusts are impossible. The most enlightened republican government contains both competition and trusts!

There are mental microbes more dangerous to the life, health, and welfare of man, more productive of disease and unhappiness than all the external bacilli combined. The highest and most effective therapeutic agencies consist in the eradication of poisonous and persistent entities from the mind, and in the substitution of the entities of life, which will subjugate even death itself.

Does skilled labor ever need to resort to legislation to prevent an incompetent from finding employment? The orthodox medical fraternity does not feel competent to compete with so called quackery by any honorable means, but must resort to "law" and fraud to prevent others from obtaining the patronage of the people.

Excavations of ancient Babylon, now in progress, may unearth the royal palace in time to revive the memories of the handwriting on the wall, before the startling, fatal decree of judgment appears on the walls of the modern Babylon of corrupt civilization!

The democrats should enter a protest against modern astronomers; they are universal expansionists, and are now making laws to govern "other worlds than ours" without the consent of the governed. Make a plank of it in the platform of 1900!

Millionaire Flower is dead; the great Flower of the syndicates and trusts has fallen from the corrupt tree of competition and speculation, and the fruit will now rapidly mature—the fruit of the trusts.

Why should Americans be bound to respect the political doctrines of the eighteenth century, any more than the religious, social, and scientific theories of the early days of the American republic?

The reform press is encountering the insurmountable difficulty of harmonizing the prevailing ideas of individualism and democracy, with co operation, colonization, and municipal trusts.

In the coming peace congress representatives of the various nations should be discriminating enough to render unto the Czar the things that are Czar's, and unto God things that are God's.

Koreshanity is shocking to most people; it is full of mental electricity of high voltage and tension—too strong for those who do not desire mental and physical rejuvenation.

If Christendom is the Lord's kingdom, the devil has obtained an abundant entrance to the plane of enjoyment of its riches and corruptions!

America sowed the seeds of republicanism to the wind of competition, and is now reaping a whirlwind of trusts.

The semi-civilized Filipinos are tragedians; in the drama of the jungle they shake spears at the Americans.

The modern Christian enjoys himself in reading the acts of the apostles, but not in committing them.

The ambassadors of peace from the whole land of the hollow world meet in the low land of Holland.

The Czar offers peace to the powerful nations of the world,—but proposes a fight to the Finnish!

"Christian science" is but an Eddy in the rapidly forming vortex of world-wide revolution.

The golden eggs of individualism, competition, and democracy are hatching gigantic trusts.

Trusts are the reward of the people who trusted in democracy.

The civilized world has the peace fever and the Hague.

Aguinaldo's chivalric title now is, Sir Render de Filipinos.

The success of the modern physician is fee-nominal.

The Czar is making foot-prints of peace.

Fixed Stars in the Concave Earth.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—On a clear night we may look into the sky and see the different constellations, such as Orion, the Great Dipper, and others. These stars appear situated in a certain relation to and distance from each other. They maintain the same relative positions from rising to setting, the constellations not changing in size during the time of their passage from east to west.

Now, it appears to me that if the earth is a cell, with these stars revolving in the physical heavens which are convex to us, they would necessarily present very different positions, presenting their true relations while overhead, and appearing edgewise at rising and setting.—C. B., Salem, O.

If we take up a small star globe and revolve it, the constellations on the map will present different apparent relations in passing from side to side. This is because the globe is small, within the scope of visual adjustment and discrimination of distance; because the visual lines are practically straight; and because there are no vanishing points; the small globe appears convex.

But it is different in viewing the physical heavens and the constellations above us. All parts of the sphere of the heavens are beyond the limit of visual discrimination of distance, and therefore, every part must arrange itself to conform with that limit, which is equidistant from the eye. It is admitted by advocates of the Copernican system, that convex bodies or orbits may appear to be concave. They assume that the earth is convex, yet admit that it appears to be a hollow bowl from a balloon or a mountain top. It is held that the orbit of Venus is concave to the sun, convex to the earth. The space between its greatest eastern and western elongations is about 95° ; but that arc appears to be as concave as any other part of the heavens. Both Venus and the sun are drawn down apparently, so that they appear to be the same distance always.

We can make it still more striking: There is no apparent difference in the distance of the moon and fixed stars; though it is supposed that the stars are billions of miles away, while the moon is at a distance of only 240,000 miles; they appear to be in the same concave plane. Either the stars are apparently drawn down in perspective to the moon, or the moon is apparently projected as far away as the stars. If it can be conceived that the stars are by perspective drawn down to the apparent orbit of the moon, it is also easy to conceive of the fact that the moon itself, and the constellations also, are apparently drawn down toward the eye.

Every degree in the lunar orbit is foreshortened by perspective, so that its apparent place is this side the real. If the Copernican heavens, embracing orbits and stars having such enormously varying distances, can appear to be concave, all its bodies appearing equidistant from the eye, it ought to be readily conceived that the Koreshan convex heavens and orbits should appear to be concave in accordance with the laws of foreshortening!

The eye possesses the faculty of adjustment for objects at varying distances upon the earth—for objects with which we are acquainted. The eye requires a different adjustment for objects within a few inches of the eye, from what it requires for objects at a distance of several miles. There is a limit to this adjustment; its limit is the extent of the visual focus, beyond which all objects appear to be equidistant from the eye. One used to the telescope, is familiar with the fact that the eye-piece has to be moved in or out by means of the rack and pinion, according as the objects viewed are remote or near; but that adjustment has its limit, beyond which all objects appear to be in the same focus. If all objects in the unaided visual focus appear equidistant from the eye, the arrangement of the objects is in an apparent circle; and the appearance of the concavity of the convex heavens is inevitable. The heavens appear concave, because every part of their surface is beyond the limit of the visual focal radii. The limit is the circumscribed visual compass of adjustment, which is not over 100 miles in every direction of the eye. Because of this, the whole heavens appear to be drawn down to a comparatively small dome. If you can admit that the Copernican heavens are thus apparently drawn down from a distance of billions of miles, it should not be hard to see that the Koreshan physical heavens can be foreshortened from a distance of 1,000 to 6,000 miles to the limit of the visual focus.

How can the stars at rising appear to be in a horizontal direction? Place a mirror at an angle of 45° at same altitude as the eye. Objects, even constellations, directly above the mirror will appear to be in a horizontal direction from the eye. Instead of there being such an abrupt refraction or reflection of the ray, there is a gradual curve of the rays of light and vision from a constellation just passing into view in the convex heavens in the hollow globe. The stars will appear to be in the direction in which the rays enter the eye.

It is evident from observation that we look at the constellations at right angles to their plane, at rising or setting, as well as at different altitudes. If we observe Orion at rising, with the star points in a given relation, with the lines of vision at right angles to their plane, they will appear to have the same relation that they do when the constellation is in the zenith. The question is, how can we see the constellation at right angles at rising, when it appears that we should see them edgewise?

If we see the rising constellations at right angles, the visual radiations strike the plane of the stars at all points at right angles. How does the visual substance, radiating from the eye in a horizontal direction, strike that part of the heavens in which the constellations are at rising, when that part presents a surface in a direction which is away from the eye? We look over the horizon; we project from the eye a finely attenuated visual substance, more subtle than electricity, with a greater velocity than light. Within an ordinary atmospheric medium the radiations from the eye are normal, that is, the radiations are in various directions, just as light radiates from an arc light. If these radiations extended indefinitely in straight lines, the heavens would appear differently from what they do; but the radiations do not continue indefinitely in straight lines; the visual substance decreases in force of transmission as to the square of the distance, and becomes more and more subject to the forces of levitation (the opposite of gravity); consequently, the visual rays are curved upward.

In Diagram No. 2, we undertake to illustrate the upward curve of the emitted energies of vision. XY is one half the earth's shell; PQ, hemisphere of the heavens; A, point of observation. The fine lines to the right, between the heavens and the earth, are the lines of visual energy, touching the heavens at right angles at every point. CD is the foreshortened dome, the apparent concavity of the heavens, at the limit of the visual focus. 1, 2, 3, are stars; 1, in the zenith; 2, at an angle of 45°; and 3, at time of setting. The corresponding numbers in the arc CD, sustain the same relation,—zenith, 45°, and on the horizon. The line EF is the line with which the usual objector tests (?) Koreshan conclusions; we place it in contrast with the curved rays on the right. If the visual lines strike the surface of the sphere of the heavens at right angles, the impression in the eye, of any constellation at different altitudes, will be the same, and Orion and other constellations will appear not edge-wise at rising or setting, but with the star points in the same relations of fixity, with the same angular relations that they do when directly overhead.

We suggest a careful study of an article on the same subject in June 24, 1898 FLAMING SWORD, which, with these suggestions, may appear clearer to the mind. We have a number of other questions on similar lines, which we will answer in coming issues.

Proof of Future Existence.

(1) What proof, if any, is there of a future state of existence or immortality?

(2) When a man dies is he conscious—does he have a memory of earthly forms and things?

(3) The Bible says that there will be a resurrection day. Will all who have died, or will die, remain in their graves until that day? What is it to be resurrected, if as the Bible says, the body goes to dust and the spirit to God who gave it? The spirit has already gone to God; then what is there to be resurrected?—D. C. W., Boonville, Mo.

(1) The fact that we now exist, when that fact is understood, is proof that the life we now possess will exist again,—in a higher or a lower state according as the life of the vidual is progressive or retrogressive. Human life has always been; it passes from generation to generation. Man continues his existence through series of embodiments. At intervals human life is renewed through processes of involution, just as the life of the plant is renewed in the seed. Immortality is not possessed today; man is mortal—spirit, soul, and body. The present state of humanity is dual,—male in one form and female in another form. The fact that there are two sexes that have their origin in one cause, is proof that that Cause is biune. The state of biunity of life is immortality.

(2) The mind of a man who dies, passes into other bodies in humanity. It retains consciousness and memory of vidual existence in the natural world, until the completion of his dissolution of soul and spirit; finally, he takes on the consciousness of the interior human mind, the mind of the spiritual world.

(3) The resurrection is the putting on of immortality. There was a resurrection day nineteen hundred years ago; millions of spirits of men who had died 'looking for the coming of the true Messiah, were involved and resurrected in Jesus. Adam was made of the dust of the Almighty; he was a living, immortal man when he was dust. The Almighty said to him, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." He told Adam what he was, and what he would be again when he should be resurrected. When he was resurrected in Jesus, his spirit returned to God (for Jesus was God), and his body returned to dust,—the dust of immortality. The return to dust is the process of resurrection, not the reverse,—as usually taught.

There will be no resurrection from graveyards; the graves of the dead are the graven images of mortal humanity. The tombs from which the dead are always resurrected are mortal men; the tomb or grave, in Scripture usage, is from μνημιον, meaning places of remembrance—mortal, mental states. Our word mnemonics, the science of memory, is from the same Greek word.

There is no more of humanity than there is living today. The dead are in the living, the mortal forms of the present generation. It might be asked, will all the wheat grains that ever existed in the past be resurrected? but who would ask it? Wheat continues its existence by propagation; God and man perpetuate their existence by propagation, and resurrection is the highest product of generation and regeneration. Study the pamphlet on Reincarnation, by KORESH, and other Koreshan literature, in order to obtain an understanding of the science of immortality. Koreshanity is the complete antithet of all popular conclusions. The usual theories of resurrection, and the idea of one lifetime for each vidual, are fallacious and absurd in the extreme.

Projectile Ranges and Earth's Concavity.

I would like to suggest a thought regarding a possible evidence of the concave earth and the long distance rifles and their ranges for 4,000 or 5,000 feet or more. It seems to me that there is every evidence of the earth's concavity in the fact that the greater the distance the higher the gauge or subjective sight has to be set in order to strike the object in the distance. This seemingly proves a curve up of the earth's surface, instead of a curve down, does it not?—F. H., Rock Island, Ill.

The elevation of the gauge of back sight of a rifle in proportion to the distance of the object aimed at, is due, for the most part, to the curvation of the path of the ball. Any object left unsupported falls 16 feet the first second, three times that distance the second, and five times that distance the third second, and so on. The speed of a ball from a common rifle is about 1,500 feet per second. If the ball shot from a rifle placed in a horizontal position, travels 4,500 feet in three seconds, it will fall in that time the distance of about 144 feet, while the curvature of the earth in 4,500 feet is about 6.8 inches. The amount of actual fall of the ball is modified when the rifle is placed at an angle from the horizontal, from the fact that it is fired upward against the force of gravity; but the curve would still be greatly in excess of the curvature of the earth, so that for practical purposes the elevation of the back sight of a rifle is to make up for the fall of the ball in transit, which is constantly acted upon by gravity from the time it leaves the muzzle.

If a test were applied where all the factors could be made exact—with the forces of the explosion, gravity, and resistance of the atmosphere known and reduced to definite mathematical formulæ, the facts would show the spot on the target where the concave ratio of curvature would place it, instead of twice the amount of curvature of the earth in the opposite direction, to conform to the convex formula. At the present time, gunnery is not sufficiently accurate to make a practical test.

Thoughts by the Wayside.

Conversation About the Books Containing the Records of the Sayings and Doings of Jesus, Which the World Could not Hold.

A friend who had been investigating Koreshanity visited me recently; and when I asked him what he thought of it, he said, "I don't take much stock in Koreshanity; I can't swallow its Cosmogony."

"Well, how are you on the Bible? Do you take any stock in it?"

"Yes, some parts of it; but there are so many unreasonable things in the Bible."

"I want you to point out a single passage that is unreasonable."

"All right; the Bible says that if all the things which Jesus did were written, even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."

"I admit that when you look at the passage from a narrow, contracted point of view it looks unreasonable. All that you see of Jesus is from the time he was born of the Virgin Mary till he was thirty years of age. If all he said and did in that short time was written and printed in books, I think myself the world could not contain the books.

"But let us take a broader view. We turn to the first chapter of Matthew, and find, 'This is the book of the generation of Jesus Christ.' Your father is one generation, you are the next generation, and your children are the next generation. The record of generations is a genealogy. Now, we read about the generation of Jesus Christ: 'Abraham begat Isaac, Isaac begat Jacob,' etc., down through a line of generations, until the time of the birth of Jesus. Through all this line of generations, he lived and died in forty-two generations before he appeared as the Messiah.

"Now, if we take all that he said and did during all these embodiments,—in the thousands of personalities in which he was, and print it in books, I think you will admit that the pile of books will be somewhat larger than you first thought. And if we go back twelve dispensations of 2,000 years each, and get all that he said and did in the long cycle of 24,000 years, and print it in books, your stock of books would be considerably increased. And that is not all; go back millions of years,—and where will you find room to stow the books? One more point to be considered: no reasonable person would undertake to stow away books in the ocean. Three fourths of the surface of the earth is water, and only one fourth is land; therefore, you see, you haven't as much room in the world to put the books as you thought you had when you first quoted the Scripture!

"Oh no, my friend; that old Bible is not unreasonable; it is all right. It is like a stocking that I once undertook to unravel, to get yarn for a ball. When I commenced, I got hold of the wrong end, and it would kink up a break. After working at it a long time, my mother showed me how to do it; and when I got hold of the right end, I could unravel it as fast as I could run, without a kink or a hitch in it. When we undertake to unravel the Bible we must get hold of the right end, or it will snarl and kink worse than the stocking! When we get the truth out of the Bible, we can readily see that it is a reasonable book."—HIRAM.

Koreshan Work in New York.

Rev. Mitchell Stirring Up Towns and Villages With the Cellular Cosmogony.

I am getting along very nicely here (Ogdensburg); have sold 27 books in two and a half days, and left 15 copies in the very best homes in the city; consequently the CELLULAR COSMOGONY is being talked about in the very "highest circles." I am expecting to remain here about two weeks, as it will take me that length of time to canvass the city. I am expecting to dispose of about 75 books before leaving; at least, I will do my best. I shall go directly from here to B—, Canada, a distance of 12 miles from this place; then work down the river from there to Montreal, stopping at all the large places. I am hearing from the book all the time. A gentleman told me this morning he heard a heated discussion about Koreshan Astronomy on the railroad.

By next fall I want you to furnish me with a stereopticon outfit; if you will do this I will "raise Cain" with the Copernican system. I understand the lantern well. I can lecture and run the lantern myself without an assistant, and be my own advance agent. I can make an outfit of this kind pay, and it would be unspeakably useful. Now plan, by all means, to furnish me with an outfit by the first of September, and I will be your "apostle to the Gentiles" with a vengeance.—REV. U. GORDON MITCHELL, New York.

The Trust Climax.

Chicago Chronicle Cannot See that Trusts are the Legitimate Fruit of Democracy and Competition.

The money centers of Europe are said to be shaken up over the new international copper trust, and the London and Berlin financial papers are warning European investors to fight shy of the new enterprise, presumably because its chief promoters and chief properties are American.

Some conception of the hold which the American trust bugaboo has taken in European financial circles may be gathered from the wild prophecies and solemn warnings that are being sent broadcast. It is claimed that the Rothschilds, who have a large holding in the Anaconda mines in this country, have a settled purpose of cornering the copper supply of the world. It is now seriously announced that Senator CLARK of Montana has interested the Rothschilds in the international copper trust, and that soon the mining and financial world will be startled with the tidings that the copper supply of the entire globe is practically under one management. From this the Europeans reason that the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds are about to be brought into corporation relationship which will overshadow the biggest combinations ever conceived in the economic world.

The note of alarm by the European financiers has its parallel in the prediction of some American economists, that the time is speedily coming when the industrial world will be ruled by a single universal trust. These prophets point out that the tendency of the great industrial combinations to enter into still larger combinations, even though the individual industries are widely dissimilar, is unmistakable and the logical fruit of present conditions. They reason that the successes of the smaller combinations, not necessarily in legitimate profits, but in promoters' profits, have been so enormous that the momentum toward a universal trust cannot be checked.

If we admit that the trust fever has nearly reached its climax, and that the power of combined industrial capital to destroy individuality in industry is well-nigh complete, there is still a stubborn economic fact that the alarmists seem to have overlooked. The entire trust fabric, so long as present overcapitalizing methods rule, is an inverted pyramid that merely awaits an inevitable fall from its own weight. Even were the pyramid to reach the proportions prophesied the past history of the industrial world furnishes conclusive testimony that the trusts themselves are the greatest breeders of oppression, resulting in renewed individual competition. There may be defiance of economic laws for a season, and even defiance of civil laws under the stupendous power of aggregated capital; but the reaction to wholesome individualism is as certain as that day follows night.

There cannot be a universal trust so long as true democracy exists as the basis of government.—Chicago Chronicle, May 8, 1893.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

The Saturday Evening Post.

As a popular journal of the very highest literary merit and excellence, we commend to our readers the oldest periodical in the United States,—the Saturday Evening Post, published at Philadelphia, founded in 1728 by Benjamin Franklin; it is now in its 171st year. It is a 16-page illustrated weekly, printed on fine paper, giving it a neat and clean appearance. The letter-press is next to perfect; we like the arrangement of the matter and its display of subjects. We do not know of any popular journal published that strikes the eye with a more self-evident dignity. There is a fitness about it that is pleasing and inviting. We know that it will be of great benefit to us in our editorial work, and therefore, we are sure it cannot fail to be of interest and help to any of our readers. We peruse its many departments with interest. We have before us the issue of May 13. Robert Barr, the well-known writer of fiction and travels, relates his experiences in "My Travels and Troubles in the Orient," in which he artistically portrays the character of the Turk. There is a story also of excellence, "The Vengeance of Prioleau," by Molly Elliot Seawell. This issue contains a page under the display heading "New Blood in American Literature;" also "Public Occurrences that are Making History," a sifted glance at current events: "Men and Women of the Hour," editorials, Letters to the Editor, etc. 5 cents per copy; $2.50 per year.

Leslie's Weekly, May 25, 1899.

Those who think that there is an abatement of interest in stories and pictures of the war in the Philippines, will change their minds after they have glanced over the brilliant issue of LESLIE'S WEEKLY this week. Photography has added a decided charm to illustrations of the battlefield, and the double-page of LESLIE'S WEEKLY filled with photographs of stirring scenes about Manila take the reader to the fields of battle. Another double-page shows the Twentieth Kansas Volunteers and the Third Artillery wading the river and charging the Filipinos. It is a thrilling war picture. Other illustrations include a drawing by Schell, of target practice by the North Atlantic squadron; a snap-shot of General Wheaton's flying brigade while in action (an excellent full-page picture); Governor Roosevelt's daily receptions to the newspaper men in his executive chamber; "Yale Boys in the War;" a page of illustrated personals; "The Strangest Masonic Lodge-room in the World;" and many other pictures of interest. The letter-press contains editorials and other matter of decided interest—Roosevelt as governor; Dewey's return; the Tragedy of War, and the usual page of personals.

Leslie's Weekly, May 18, 1899.

The fearful cyclone in Missouri gives LESLIE'S WEEKLY a fine opportunity in its current number to show, by photographic reproductions, the indescribable destruction wrought by the violent hand of nature. We doubt if any cyclone in the country has heretofore been pictured more clearly than that in Missouri by the photographers of LESLIE'S WEEKLY. The first page is one of Schell's beautiful drawings, showing the American and British war-ships watching the German war-vessel at Samoa. The double-page is a superb picture of the two brave Kansas soldiers swimming the Rio Grande River in the Philippines, under the galling fire of the enemy, to gain a point of strategy. The unveiling of the superb monument to General Grant in Philadelphia by the granddaughter of the great general; a double-page of illustrations of the warfare in the Philippines; and a page illustrating steeple-chasing on the farm of ex-Secretary Whitney, help make up an unusually interesting paper. The letter-press embraces discussions of a number of important topics and a variety of matters of current interest.

The American Monthly and Review of Reviews.

The student of current history and thought has not the time to peruse all the great publications of the world, nor the means to obtain them. The great drift of events, and the great maelstrom of thought flow on, but what is in them? The Review of Reviews opens up a view of the world in a way that is unsurpassed by any popular journal in the world; it is the standard index of current thought. Progressive editors all over the country find this great magazine indispensable. It occupies a field of its own—it differs from other magazines, in that it is the involution of them all. The May number contains a half dozen excellent contributed articles, among which are "Our Delegates to the Peace Congress," and "International Law in the War with Spain." It quotes a number of articles from other magazines; its editorials are high class and reliable, in which the subject of municipal ownership, which is assuming proportions in the political world, is discussed. Its index to 600 leading articles for the current month enables the reader to obtain the best current thought in his particular line. 25 cents per copy; $2.50 per year; at news-stands or through THE FLAMING SWORD.

Frank Leslie's for May.

A good magazine is an art gallery of current history, a display of the higher phases of the world's progress. Frank Leslie's for the current month reflects national life and history through the character of men who have made events. The principal illustrated article is Dewey at Manila—one year's retrospect, by E. W. Harden, U. S. commissioner to the Philippines; it places one in touch, as it were, with the peculiar situations at Manila which have put the islands in American possession. Following is a description of the surrender of Manila by the Spaniards. The discussion of the question by Agoncillo, Are the Filipinos Civilized? cannot fail to interest all students of the problem of the Philippines. Mrs. Leslie was fortunate enough to obtain this article from the Filipino representative just before his leaving Washington; hers is the only magazine containing original matter from the pen of a genuine Filipino concerning his people and country. Other articles, such as U. S. Army and its Commanders (by Gen. Miles), sketch of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, and Women as Dramatists, are excellent, and full of interest.

The Scientific American.

This well-known scientific weekly comes to us regularly; it has the largest circulation of any scientific weekly in the world, and is now in its 54th year. The issue before us, that of May 13, is a special number, devoted to the subject of bicycles and automobiles, giving the history of the development of horseless carriages and bicycles. Besides, "Recent Researches on the Great Nebula of Orion," in the Lick observatory, is of interest to astronomers. This special number appears in beautifully illumined covers. Price 10 cents per copy, $3.00 yearly. Published at 361 Broadway, New York.

The Cranks of Progress.

Be a crank! It pays. It pays somebody else. Of course you will make yourself disagreeable, and people will shun you, and what is more, they will say harsh things about you. This world does not like to be disturbed. It never did, and it never will, take kindly to a man who is forever stirring things up. The individual does not like to witness a perpetual warfare against evils which do not particularly affect him. And this is why he kicks at the crank.

Every public benefactor is of necessity a crank, for he disturbs the quiet of the selfish, and interferes with the schemes of the men who would rob their fellow-men. All the great leaders of religious thought have been cranks. The men who have died for liberty have been cranks. Every man who has led slaves out of bondage has been a crank. It is only under the leadership of cranks that "humanity sweeps outward toward the circle of the younger day." A country without cranks is a country without progress, barbaric, a land of blood.

Let us honor the crank wherever we find him, in church or state. He stands for something. He improves our laws, our houses, our shops, our farms, our modes of travel, our manners, in short, he is indispensable.—Ex.

Religious Delusion in Modern Pharisaical Journalism.

Religious delusion is the subject of an editorial in that eminently respectable Presbyterian periodical, the Chicago Interior. It reads like a satire on religion, yet it is doubtless sincere—as sincere as the prayer of the Pharisee. Religious delusion would appear to be, in the estimation of the Interior, any religious tendency—good or bad—which leads away from worldly success. For it explains how, “except in extreme cases of degeneracy,” the victim of religious delusions may be led to see that “they destroy that public confidence in him which is essential both to happiness and to success.” If an Interior had been published at Jerusalem some 20 centuries ago, under the patronage of the temple where the flagellation of the money-changers took place, it might have addressed just such an editorial to Jesus and his disciples—unless it had regarded them as “extreme cases of degeneracy.”—The Public, Chicago.

What You Have Been Long Looking For!

“Mulum in Parvo.”

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HAMMETT PUB. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 1 cent.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 1 cent.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 1 cent.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 1 cent.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 1 cent.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 1 cent each.

Osteological Analysis of Structured Man and Cosmos.

Part XIII.

The Location, Form, and Function of the Sphenoid Bone in the South Polar Zone of the Anatomical Field, the Focus of Ten Distinct Forces of the Human System.

WE HAVE defined the location of the north pole of the osseous fabric. It has been shown to be the point into which the fibers of the dura mater converge and fasten themselves, as a nail driven into the crista galli of the ethmoid bone. If the student of Koreshanity has been interested and diligent enough to follow us in our designation of the north polar focus of the dura and the anatomical framework of the human organism, the question has been suggested regarding the opposite and south polar zone of the system under consideration; and under the suggestion, the mind is stimulated to further exploit this microcosmic domain, and to locate, with equal certainty, the southern zone of this anatomical field.

Our amplitude of mental conception, subject to the illuminating influence of the solar fire, enables us to apply the principles of correspondential analogy to the study of the microcosm, as related to the alchemico-organic macrocosm. From this application we will point the student to the sphenoid bone, as occupying this root and basis of the anatomical axis. For a description of the sphenoid (the wedge bone of the cranium), basilar, cranial environ, we refer the student to the recent "Gray's Anatomy"—reserving the liberty to state that the older Anatomy defines the sphenoid as a distinct bone from the two pterygoid bones, which are now regarded as part of the sphenoid; and further, that we hold to the original division.

The sphenoid, as its name implies, is inserted into the cranial structure as a pyramid or wedge. It articulates with and conjoins all the bones of the cranium, and comprises, therefore, the key-stone or cranial lock. The sphenoid proper, developing by ten centers, pronounces the fact that there are ten distinct principles in force, whence these centers of osseous development have their origin. Its correct study involves an analysis of the mental principles included in its formation, and its relation to not only the other cranial bones, but to encephalic and mental function as well. The fact that ossification begins—in the development of the bone in question—at ten distinct centers, is a demonstration that there are ten distinct forces operative from ten local points of activity; and the further fact that these centers conclude their operations in their unification in one bone, determines the ulterior fact that these ten activities originate in one determinate principle.

Resting in the vertex of the sphenoid, an osseous cavity called the sella turcica (the Turkish saddle), surrounded and fortified by osseous prominences, may be found the glandula vita—the vital gland of the encephalon. It is the apophysis or pituitary gland of the anatomists. It occupies the location of the pivot or hub of the circle of Willis, also the corresponding circle of the sinuses of the base of the brain. If we examine this vital center or zone of motion, in its relation to the functions of the body, we may discover that the circulation of blood, related to which the pituitary gland is specifically vital, terminates at this apex of the pyramid. The blood passes from the heart, apparently as a homogeneous flow, merging into the base of the encephalon by the two carotid arteries. As it emerges from the heart, the axis of its impulse, it separates into just ten qualities, traversing ten distinct arteries, and determining its influence toward ten areas, from which it returns from its distribution through the circle of Willis to the circular sinus, to which the elaborations of the glandula vita are specifically tributary. The circular sinus surrounds the glandula vita. It is the receptacle of one specific departure of those terminal elaborations, through which the essences of the ventricles pass when having entered the gland through the infundibulum (funnel): Thence it takes its passage—from the circular sinus—to the heart through the jugular veins.

That there are ten centers or points of osseous deposit in the sphenoid, is sufficiently indicative of the fact that there are ten meeting points of inversely flowing currents, where alchemical action resolves the reagents held in solution in these currents, and there precipitates the osseous structure. The circle of Willis (Will-is) includes just ten distinct arteries, which distribute ten impressions to ten encephalic centers, whence arise the six motor and four sensory nerve centers of the spinal cord, which constitutes the channel for the fluxion of the will into the body. While the apex or crown of the dura mater centers in the crista galli of the ethmoid, its root originates in the osseous prominences of the sphenoid, which furnish protection to the vital laboratory (glandula vita) of the microcosmic empire.

There are ten specific and prime centers of motion and sensation in the encephalon, ten corresponding centers of ossification in the sphenoid bone, and ten centers of motion and sensation in the spinal cord, because there are ten co-ordinate foundations of activity in the body, to which the ten centers contribute, and from which they derive supply. For the same reason, there are ten principles of life included in the Decalogue, in which rests the will of God, and through which he will ultimately form conjunction with men and control their destinies. For the same reason also, there were ten tribes of Israel to be carried away into Assyria to be assimilated, through ethnic infiltration, with that Gentile world to ultimately constitute the body of the resurrection. There were also ten horns to the beast which John saw rise up out of the sea.

In our further and deeper analysis of the sphenoid and its relations along the lines of correspondential analogy, it will be discovered that the principles involved in the sphenoid comprise the key to the unfoldment of the mystery of Godliness, which, when wrought to its consummation in the perfection of human character, will pronounce humanity the climax of creative power, integralism, and authority; for what the Father committed to his Christ, the Lord also commits to those who love him.

The Great Koreshan System of Genuine Philanthropy.

Reveals the Science of Love to God and Man, and Defines the Laws of Performance of Use to the Neighbor.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE NOBLEST expression of worship, or love to God and the neighbor, is denominated by Koreshanity, the performance of use. True Koreshans, or Universologists, possess the broadest views of this very comprehensive term, and honor every person, and estimate the value of every thing according to the grade of use, and the quality of spirit with which the use is performed.

Emerging with difficulty, as mortal humanity must, from the thralldom and darkness of the hells of fallacy in which it is found by the light of the almighty science of truth, it is only with Herculean effort that the mortal mind maintains that rectitude which is the result of correct views of man as the temple of God, in a universe of known form and functions. Man has been educated by false science to regard himself—in relation to an illimitable physical universe, in unlimited space—as barely a microscopic object in the power of an arbitrary, unknown, incomprehensible, infinite Deity. He has also been taught to contemplate the possibility that the sphere of his natural existence, called the earth (a spinning ball on the convex surface of which he is but a trembling, infinitesimal fibre of its excrescent life), might, by the operation of the universal forces, be dashed as dust into the unknown, or sucked into and absorbed by some fire-glowing sun, or congealed into the cold and glittering bondage of its solar center. This mockery of intelligent education has but poorly fitted man for the attainment of the true manhood of Deity and heirship of the universe, and has entirely unfitted him to perform his divinest uses to his fellows, in the process of such attainment.

For the restoration of man to the image and likeness of his origin,—the Deity of perfect manhood,—it is essential that he be educated in obedience to the science of truth. He must have a scientific understanding of himself and his environment, or projected habitation, in which he should reign supreme, at one with its indwelling Deity. When the humanity of Deity is thoroughly, because scientifically, realized by the mortal man, he begins to look about him with an altogether new regard for the known temporary and ultimate permanent relationships of himself to his fellow men; and the worship of his God in the service of his kind, takes on a new and more deeply religious significance.

When the law of involution is clearly understood, man perceives that the energies of the alchemico-organic universe are focalized in the stellar nucleus of its solar sphere, and that correspondingly, the energies of the anthropotic universe are in their timic involutions finally focalized in the Messianic solar center of each cycle's evolving social cosmos. Thus is the life of all gathered into one, and by the attractive force of that one, every man in his own order is absorbed into this ultimate of the divine human to put forth from himself a new creation.

The divine wisdom of true science makes one obedient to the law of love, and causes the illumined mind to regard every fellow man as an essential part of his ultimate divine selfhood; thus the doing unto others as you would have others do unto you, becomes the only rational method of action. The application of the heart to the wisdom of true science results in discriminating conduct; legitimate present and future relations are recognized, and one knows exactly how he should be dealt with were he in the place of another. The Lord's great biune commandment:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

calls forth the inquiries at once, who is my God? and who is my neighbor? and what is the divinest expression of love? True science alone can furnish the scientific replies to these questions, that have power to give rest to the mature, rational mind.

God must be known to be intelligently loved, and to be known he must be found within the sphere of the mental and physical limitations of his would-be lovers. He must necessarily be the perfected product of that sphere and its involution for reproduction—its creator and preserver. Koreshian Science, the enlightener of the world for the revelation of Deity in relation to man and his environment, gives man the God his reason demands.

Mechanically, with level and plumb-line, the confines of the universe are determined. With the keys of knowledge, the laws of the cross, and analogy, the qualities of its substance are defined and classified, and the laws operative in its material and spiritual conditions revealed, until there remains for the illumined mind no more mystery, and perfected manhood becomes the known God of the universe, to be loved and honored by obedience to law in the light of true science, till the vanishing point of self-surrender is reached, and the God-Ego is the Man.

The neighbor is the near one. Nearness in that which is most vital, results from unity in the loving recognition of the personality of God. Our true neighbors are the true lovers of our God. God shines into and radiates from the lovers of himself, and the communal confession of the source of our life and light, unifies all who sincerely make it, in varying degrees. The universally operative law of attraction relates neighbor to neighbor according to the degree and quality in them of this unifying love, which operates to perpetuate the life of the ever-living and true God, the Hero or highest product of the divine-human race.

Science declares that the perfected language of love is use or service to the beloved. This language is spoken as the result of the absolute negativeness of our wills to the will of God, and the absolute positiveness of obedience to it, according to the most scientific understanding obtainable. We are told by inspired Scripture, to covet earnestly the best gifts, the fruits of the spirit of Jehovah,—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness. We are further told to add to our faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge. Knowledge is the power by which alone all the fruits of the Spirit may be expressed in their natural and most scientific application, by which men are made Gods, and fruits of the Tree of Life. It is written in the epistle of Paul to the Corinthians:

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the Word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit.

What is true of the distinctly spiritual gifts, is equally true of the natural gifts, which find expression through the exercise of skilled labor. Some have skill in one line of use, some in another.

All gifts, spiritual and natural, to be of divinest use, must be placed on the altar of our God, to be sanctified, or made holy unto him by their exercise in the service of those who love him and call upon his name, that the benefits of the goods of life which will follow such co-operative and communal service, may make the lives of the true worshipers of God's humanity transcendently bounteous and lovely. By the beneficent power of such communal service in the sphere of those aspiring to the divine sonship, shall the enemies of our God be transformed to friends, to good and faithful servants, and ultimately to sons of the Most High.

It is most essential, in the application of the law of love to communal or co-operative life, that each member of the body should appreciate the value of, and sustain every other member in his legitimate line of use. Woe be to the one who regards another, saying, I have no need of thee! Not an element of humanity is attracted to the personality of God, lacking some divine purpose to serve. Those who, like their Lord, wait to be gracious to all, will, like him, appropriate the good of everything and eliminate the evil, to the end of better and nobler service, and will become so unified with him that as joint heirs and co-workers, they will be with him the source of every good and perfect gift to the world.

The Psalmist exclaims: "If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there." The Almighty has descended into the deepest abyss of the hells, where competism, sensuality, and false gods reign in mocking splendor. Here in the lowermost, with the omnipotence of true science and the love of the divine human, God walks in obedience to the law of the cross, to set up his kingdom in righteousness—the kingdom of divine uses. Here will he lay the foundations of his glorious temple, and build his city, and set free his captives, who will enter in through the gates into the city, and inhabit the temple.

The light of his life, born from above, but sown in corruption, will reform the commercial life of the world, dispel the darkness of hades, and transform the iniquitous. All like sheep have gone astray, and turned every man to his own way,—the way of iniquity; but the Lord has descended and is awaking those that are in their graves, with the trumpet tones of almighty Truth, the arch angel of life and death. He will take men as he finds them; the small and the great stand before him to see the salvation of their God, and to be tried by his baptismal fires. "Who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap." Why? Because he makes men to know the truth, sharper than a two-edged sword, vivisectioning the true inwardness of their corrupt mortality, slaying the old man of sin with its penetrating flames. The judgment seat of Christ is the science of the law; before it we stand, by it we must judge ourselves. If we will bow before its behests and surrender to its service, we may go free, to walk in the ways of wisdom and paths of peace. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life." Such will hear the Lord say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "God hath given us richly all things to enjoy."

Who is the Lord God?

Perversion of Theology in the Modern Church; Personality the Supreme Thing; the Godhead of Koreshanity is the Man Jesus.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

THE BIBLE says that God is a spirit. Spirit originates in the activity of the mind of a personality, and has no existence apart from some person. Hence, spirit is not so high in the scale of being as person. The spirit was only one of three attributes of the Godhead, of which the Lord Jesus constituted the whole. He was the Godhead bodily, or in a body. He said to the Jews, the being you call your God is my Father, and he dwells in me. He was born holy, hence the Spirit that was the result of the activity of his mind was Holy Spirit, and, as the Comforter, could not come to his disciples until his person went away. It is said of him that he was the express image of the person of God, which can mean nothing less than that his personality was the personality of God. The prophet Isaiah said of him:

Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace; that is, the fulness of the Godhead,—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, which constitute the person of God.

To set God as Spirit above the person of God is to deny God; to be antichrist. The Spirit is only one of the manifestations of the Godhead, while the person is the fulness of the Godhead bodily. John declares of Jesus, that he is the "only true God;" and Jude, that "He is the only wise God, our Savior;" and Paul preached him to the Athenians as the God that made heaven and earth, and all that is in them. He is not only declared to be the express image of the person of God, but Paul, after attributing our redemption to him, says:

Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist: and he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell.

The Jew was thoroughly taught by the experience of an age, that God was not the highest, most important, most sacred name. While he had the fullest liberty to use the name of God, there was another that he dare not utter above a whisper, and that was the Jehovah, the God-man, who was to come in the end of the age as the fruit of the Jewish polity. It is declared that he has a name that is above every name, hence above the name of God, and that, at the name of Jesus, every knee should bow, in heaven, earth, or under the earth. That is, every being in the universe should worship him. If he is not the Lord God, all these would be idolaters, as according to the Bible, no being but God is a proper object of worship. If the Scripture evidences (only samples of which have been given) are true, and Koreshans believe they are, there is no room in the universe for any other God than the Lord Jesus Christ, and all the names applied to Deity—as Elohim, Jehovah, Kurios, Lord, God, Holy Ghost, are appellations given to his attributes or manifestations.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE GREAT EVENTS of the closing century unmistakably indicate the hastening end of the age. The great panorama is moving toward the goal of destiny. At no time in all the history of the world has the universe of humanity involved problems that are more complex than at the present hour—at no time has its problems demanded such world-wide consideration. We are living in a grand and awful time, when the great questions press themselves upon the world for solution. Not until the crisis comes will the prophetic voice of KORESH be recognized by the millions as true. Year after year, he has carefully forecast human history with its impending revolution, and year after year events have verified the declarations of Koreshanity. There is a rapid convergence of all lines of human thought, a rapid acceleration of all human energy. No candid student of humanity can for a moment set aside the tangible evidences of stupendous changes. America is the field of the greatest activity; a mighty momentum is being gathered in the western world. Stupendous forces, arrayed against each other, threaten the welfare of the nation. Luxury and misery are the extremes of the social world; the trusts and the tramp, the millionaires and the miner, the palatial homes and the hovel, afford strange contrasts in an enlightened, powerful, and prosperous nation! The political world is full of ominous signs of the approaching end. The great tide of national enthusiasm is turned in the direction of the republican party. The Spanish-American war has materially changed the political aspect of America, resulting in an irresistible tendency to imperialism. The present administration has focalized the enthusiasm of war; it has disintegrated and disappointed "reform," and divided democracy. On every hand it is all but conceded that the coming campaign will result in the overwhelming defeat of anti-expansionists. The nation must begin and end with imperialism. The power that defeated the British, that subdued the South, that destroyed the power of Spain, is today involved in the swelling tide of expansion, and must reach its climax of power. It is startlingly significant that in the recent convention of the editors of 115 great dailies of America, the present administration was pledged unanimous support on its Philippine and expansion policies. The popular party is the party of the gigantic trusts, the party of the golden calf, the party of political corruption, the party of destiny, the party through which the crisis comes, the party that will provoke the revolution when the social and economic conditions become insufferable. The great trend of events, unparalleled in all past history, unmistakably indicates the doom of the nation when it reaches the zenith of its glory!

Tesla waves his wand in Chicago and surprises his audiences with his predictions and experiments. He finds in the field of electricity, "promises of immense realization of wonderful possibilities," a field in which, he says, "researches through God-given powers will be of greatest benefit to his fellow men, a virgin field almost unexplored, a region where, like the silent forest, a thousand voices respond to every call." We assert that electrical inventions at the present time have no humanitarian utility; that every invention of the modern world has increased the facilities of the instruments of the world's oppression. The thousand calls for practical application of the ideas of Tesla and others come from syndicates and trusts; every modern invention falls immediately into the possession of corporations to take the place of human energy. Ingenuity, through the factors and avenues of competism, becomes transmuted to forces which militate against the interests of the masses of humanity. True genius, which will effect the world's redemption from its present social and economic conditions, will not sell itself to modern capital. The ingenuity of Koreshanity is in its science; a greater than Tesla is here, constructing a new order, in which modern appliances will become factors of equitable distribution, as well as of production, of the goods of life.

Ingersoll, after boasting for years of the progress and enlightenment of humanity, after supporting the republican party and glorying in the achievements of "science," has found it convenient to condemn modern civilization in the strongest terms. He sees the unequal contest between man and machine in the production of wealth, and the accumulation of wealth by the few and the destitution of the masses, and sounds a note of revolution! He protests against the conspiracy of capital and the formation of trusts, and asks if the solution of the problem does not lie in the control of labor-saving inventions by those who operate them. He deplores the state of social abandonment of the poor, the state of economic slavery of the producers of wealth, and asks, Who can comprehend the stupidity at the bottom of the condition of the civilized world? He contrasts modern oppression, the absorption of the very life of millions of people by the modern leeches, with savagery and cannibalism: "When I take into consideration the agony of civilized life,—the failures, the anxieties, the tears, the withered hopes, the bitter realities, the hunger, the crime, the humiliation, and the shame,—I am almost forced to say that cannibalism, after all, is the more merciful form in which man has lived on his fellow men."

The time for universal peace is not yet. Military power will continue after the peace congress; as long as the present order stands, as long as iniquitous systems prevail, warships will stand in readiness to engage in terrible combats. Coaling stations will be maintained. Naval architecture will not be abandoned as a lost art. The glory of admirals and commanders is yet too great to be thrown away. The ultimate power of a nation, vested in its armaments, its ability to enforce its decrees and execute its laws, is too strong to be abandoned because a few heads of governments would like to pose as philanthropists. The great mass of humanity is bloodthirsty and warlike; the most recent demonstration of the fact was the Spanish-American war, in which the Americans exulted at the destruction of fleets and the killing of Spaniards. The great reservoir of human sentiment in favor of war is yet to be overcome; the people must resort to force to right their wrongs; impulses to avenge crimes of nations will ignore treaties and break impacts of peace. The present peace congress will consist of a number of diplomatic shifts, maneuvers for the safest side; the pulse of the millionaires must be felt, and the stream made to turn in their favor.

The aristocrats of New York have considered it gracious and charitable, after monopolizing the products of labor and stealing the support of the producers of wealth, to originate a plan for the distribution of fragments and scraps, and refuse coffee grounds and tea, to destitute families. The scheme is now under the direction of city officials, who collect the contents of tin receptacles after the fashion of garbage cans, and distribute them free of cost. What a condition in the land of the prosperous and the free! What a travesty on civilization and good government, that its officers must become parties to such humiliating forms of charity! Peradventure, the American government itself, instead of confiscating, on authority of its people, the wealth under the control of the few, and distributing it where it is needed, will be compelled to petition the billionaires to supply, from their bountiful stores, the food necessary to maintain the life of its people!

The church is having a hard time defining what heresy is; for inasmuch as it cannot answer the question, What is truth? it cannot determine what is the opposite. When Protestantism was young it was denounced as heresy; when it grew to respectable proportions it was "orthodoxy." Each sect of Protestantism has, in its turn, been heretical, but now the majority of the sects are considered "evangelical." Dr. Gunsaulus, of the liberal wing of Congregationalism, in defense of his innovation, sums up the situation: "We are continually reminded of the fact that what is called orthodoxy has not always been orthodox. Nobody doubts that the orthodoxy of today is the result of a long process of evolution and growth, and that almost, if not everything, in its structure which influences the moral life of the time, has had to make its way against the orthodoxy of yesterday." Is this true? The entire church is continually changing in character, changing in doctrine, departing constantly from the primitive system, until there is nothing of the truth and life of Jesus in it!

The Chicago Chronicle discusses the question, Is thought transmission possible? and the opinions of a number of people are given. Thought transmission is one of the oldest forms of wireless telegraphy. If thought could not be communicated, there could be no such thing as conversation; no one could make himself understood. Do you get the idea? is often asked. No man can think without transmitting thought. Mental stars shine out like the stars in the firmament. But what is communicated? The Founder of Koreshanity made the great discovery thirty years ago that thought is substance, susceptible of transmission, an energy which can be communicated from mind to mind. And moreover, that thought travels in the direction of desire, rendering it susceptible of polation in one tangible center. The process is Messianic, and involves the work of construction of a great human battery for the subjugation of death and hell.

A new fountain of life has been discovered on a Missouri goat farm. The Jews were not conscious of how much vitality was wasted in the sprinkling of the blood of bullocks and goats in various parts of the tabernacle. Dr. B. F. Roberts, of Green City, Mo., has discovered a process of sprinkling goats' blood in various parts of the human tabernacle, a process of sacrificing animal life for the destruction of old age. The new "discovery" consists in hypodermic injections of goat lymph, which is supposed to disintegrate deposits of phosphates, carbonates, and chlorides of soda that militate against youth. The new lymph has gained prominence through the investigation and acceptance by a few Chicago physicians and professors—men who readily accept a fad, but ridicule the Koreshan doctrine of the transfusion of the life of Jesus into his disciples, the planting of immortal life in mortal soil for purposes of divine regeneration.

Any government that cannot hold in check the greed and rapacity of the millionaire, and utilize all of the resources and ingenuity of its people for the benefit of all, is not a true government. A government for the people would provide for the operation of labor-saving inventions, not for the increase of the wealth of the wealthy, but for the support and comfort of its citizens. Today, both the church and the state are as helpless and weak as they are corrupt—helpless to defend the people against the crimes of the money gods. The great American republic is prepared to defend its people against the attacks of foreign powers, but utterly helpless to protect the property of the majority of its citizens from the greed of the millionaires,—the greatest enemies of the people, committing the greatest depredations, creating more misery and unhappiness, and destroying more life than all other external agencies combined!

Spiritualists have never been able to settle among themselves, questions concerning the relation of the natural world and the realm whence they receive communications. They admit that they are "at sea on many theological points." Evidently the spiritual spheres with which they are in touch can no more reveal the truth than the great mass of people in the natural world. Many spiritualists are abandoning the idea of an external spiritual world; "psychic phenomena" are believed by many to cover the field of all spiritualistic communications and manifestations. The chaos of the movement results from acceptance of the idea of spirit communication by minds of all schools and sects of modern times, without a corresponding and consistent change of mind on other lines. Spiritualism is not a system; it reveals nothing, and solves no mysteries. It is not intellectual light; it is not truth.

Leaders of the Cuban revolution, who were a short while ago ostensibly fighting for liberty and justice, lauded as patriots, have now become corruptionists, sufficiently ungrateful to America for securing Cuban freedom from Spanish misrule, to endeavor to corner the major portion of the gift of $3,000,000, for their own benefit. The action of the Cuban assembly in dismissing Gen. Gomez, the hiding of the army pay-rolls, constituted a part of a scheme to control at least two thirds of the amount. It is but a manifestation of the utter human depravity and selfishness of political leaders who pose as benefactors of the people. Corruption manifests itself in the very inception of the Cuban government; it is but a straw indicating the drift of the times, an index to the spirit of tyranny which pervades even the boasted free institutions of the world.

Dr. Briggs admits the ignorance of the church; that modern Christianity is being avoided because "many great problems of doctrine and life have not been solved." He wishes to have them solved by "new methods of study, critical and scientific processes of investigation, which in our times dominate all the realms of knowledge," which will "inevitably require changes in the realm of religion and theology also." In this he virtually declares the church unfit to teach the world; she herself must begin a tour of research in the productions of the world, for the truth! The church does not possess the wisdom of God; it does not contain that which was promised should lead the church into all truth. Yet Dr. Briggs tenaciously clings to apostate Christianity, realizing its narrowness, its weakness, its ignorance, and its corruption!

The philosophy of the ancient Jews maintained that the Almighty indwelt the heart and soul of the Jewish people. They were the channel through which the divine mind came down through the Jewish dispensation. Previous to the days of Jesus, there were frequent manifestations of the prophetic voice among them. It should be singularly significant to the Jews, that for nearly nineteen hundred years there has not been a single prophet among them. What is the trouble? The cause is obvious; the Almighty instituted a new Passover, and passed over to another people, among whom the Messiah of the dispensation appears. In fulfillment of the Jewish prophecies, the Lord must come to the Gentiles. Jesus was the last manifestation to the Jewish people, and the result was one of the greatest tragedies of human history.

"If our thoughts are pure, they will produce harmony in ourselves, and in all our external relations." The truth of this statement depends upon the character of the material pediment in which the thought is contained. Jesus came to put pure thoughts into poor material bases and they produced a contention of elements—an internal warfare. There is nothing in the world today that is capable of stirring up a more stupendous friction in humanity than the promulgation and application of all that depends upon an absolutely pure thought. Jesus came not to bring peace, but a sword; and the warfare continues until death is destroyed. A thought that produces harmony in a sensual body must change the character of that body, and it must do it through a warring of elements, until the victory is won.

The founders of the American republic could neither foresee nor anticipate the difficulties and problems which confront the nation at the close of the nineteenth century, and consequently were incapable of defining the principles of just government. The government of the United States has been conducted on the basis of a fallacy, and the present social and economic conditions of America are the result. From the soil of American "freedom" the most gigantic system of human slavery in all human history has developed, and is now reaching its climax in the hundreds of trusts and federations of the closing century. We claim that the stupendous facts seen throughout the nation constitute a direct and positive demonstration of the utter and miserable failure of competition and democracy.

We are amused at the reference of the Baptist Flag to "unknowable phantasms," which it assumes are the bases of all analyses of THE FLAMING SWORD. If analyses of substances of tangible human structures and definition of the laws of the physical universe are "unknowable phantasms" in ethereal regions, pray what are the subjects of Baptist sky-theology? Will our contemporary condescend to tell us whether the objects of the Flag's affection and worship in the physical heavens are knowable or unknowable phantasms, and whether they exist in ethereal or atmospheric media? Any definite information about the existence of the Baptist god will receive our due consideration!

Millionaire Russell Sage sifts the entire product of modern educational institutions, and finds nothing that is not outstripped by men who have educated themselves through hard lines of experience. The Sage denounces the methods employed in schools as weakening instead of strengthening to the mental and moral character, and holds that the rising generation is being overeducated. We disagree with the Sage; they are not being educated at all; they are simply being converted into parrots to repeat what is taught them, while the rational faculties are left undeveloped. Education means to draw out; the usual method is the opposite,—it is the process of stuffing the mind.

The democrats are advocating that the trusts will prove disastrous to democratic institutions—destructive to American liberty. The idea is a true one; crimes prove disastrous to the criminal, and often result in curtailing his liberty. It is dangerous to the despot to be despotic; a yoke of bondage is thrown off when it becomes intolerable. Nothing will ultimately prove so disastrous to republicanism and competition as the knowledge of the fact that the present bondage under the guise of "liberty," with its trusts and industrial and social evils, is the result of the application of so called principles of virtual liberty to compete with the neighbor.

Going to heaven in the Copernican universe is a long and hopeless journey. If heaven is beyond the stars, at the remote distance of quintillions of quintillions of miles, a soul traveling with the accredited velocity of light, would be millions of years in reaching its destination! Clergymen who are discussing the question of thought transmission from man to heaven, may find comfort in the long distance processes necessary to reach the spiritual world. Koreshanity takes the short route; the spiritual world is in humanity, and the journey is not so tiresome and hopeless as that advertised in the modern church!

Notwithstanding the fact that during the past ten years the physicians of Chicago have presumed to find multiplying agencies of death,—microbes in the water, in street-cars, in the lake water, on coins and bills; danger in patronizing other kinds of quacks than the "regulars," danger in adulterated foods, and many other things which are rapidly multiplying,—the longevity of nearly 2,000,000 people of the city has been steadily increasing during the past five years, according to the latest published statistics.

Dr. Briggs says, "We cannot know the whole truth of any doctrine until we know the whole truth of all doctrines." This is true; for the statement originated in Koreshanity, the only System of universal truth. If the reverend gentleman would turn his attention to Koreshan Universology, he would find arguments which more effectually overthrow the doctrines of the church than his own, and at the same time overthrows "higher criticism," which the church is unable to combat.

Religion is not a mere belief about God, but is what the word implies,—a re-tying. The true religion is the actual conjunction of God and man, the restoration, the resurrection. The aspiration of the corpuscles of the plant is not their religion, but the actual formation of the seed, their restoration to the biune state in the seed is the religion of the plant. At the present time the world is in conjunction with the devil; and the actual state of humanity is the devil's religion.

The clergyman who imagines that Jesus went up into the physical heavens, can never tell what he has been doing since he went away. There is nothing taught in heathendom that is more absurd, ridiculous, superstitious, illogical, and unreasonable, than the modern Christian conception of the ascension of a physical, human form into the open space of the whirling worlds of modern astronomy.

Diplomats assert that the Russian peace plan is but a gigantic scheme to impede the progress of the Anglo-Saxon peoples, a great European compact to check the growth of England and America. Whatever the Czar's plan may be ostensibly, there is not an element of righteousness in it; it affords every opportunity for the most stupendous display of hypocrisy in all the history of Europe.

The power of truth is in its application; power is force applied. The knowledge of the laws of the universe enables man to make an application of the forces of life in the destruction of death. The revelations of Koreshan Science are for the benefit of natural humanity for the attainment of the highest degree of natural, immortal existence here in this world.

Koreshanity is the solution of the great problem of life; it is to humanity and the great physical universe what the X-ray is to opaque objects—it reveals mysteries, penetrates the hitherto unknown, uncovers the laws of cause, discloses the occult, and discovers to the mind the truth of all domains of universal existence.

A mere intellectual assent to the doctrines of Koreshanity will avail nothing. A mere belief is worthless; it has no power to overcome mortal miasmas. Only obedience to the scientific laws of life will destroy death and give life to the victor.

Labor unions are continually striking at the forces of capital, without accomplishing anything except their own defeat.

They succeed only in persisting in the work of perpetuating the present order of slavery to the money power.

The factors of universal peace are not located in Europe, but in America; the present "peace" movement is but the fallacious reflex of the true System, which will shortly make the peace of nations.

The difference between the modern and the Koreshan Astronomy is, that in the former the earth is in the physical heavens, while in the latter, the heavens are in the physical earth.

The hardest work the Czar of Russia has had to do since his coronation, is proving his sincerity in his proposition of universal peace to the world.

It is easy for Spain to join in the cry for universal peace; her disarmament began one year ago in Manila bay!

The Czar makes an impossible proposition to the vegetable kingdom: "Lettuce have peas."

Koreshanity is a revolutionary system; it is an ex-stream from the source of truth.

The great tree of competition proceeds from the root of all evil—the love of money.

Millionaires have already inaugurated public ownership; they own the public.

Heresy hunting is a favorite sport among orthodox clergymen.

The disarmament congress will not appease the nations.

The world "trusts" everything except God and truth.

Jesus was well bread for his disciples.

Mountains and Shadows on the Moon.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Why, if the markings on the moon are reflections from the earth's surface, are they the same in all countries and at all times of the night, and never bearing the slightest resemblance to the map of any part of the earth? Why, if the moon shines "a light of its own," do we see in the telescope, numerous ring mountains which, when observed near the quarters, project distinct shadows toward the terminator, so that by comparing their appearances at first and last quarters we can see the same objects casting shadows in opposite directions? Will you say that these are all "optical illusions"?—Prof. J. W. T.

Before the mind of the inquirer can comprehend the Koreshan Science of lunar phenomena, it is necessary that some erroneous conceptions indicated by the above questions, be removed. Some of the most absurd conclusions concerning Koreshan Astronomy are reached by those who fail to comprehend what is conveyed in expositions of the Science. The above questions are suggested from the basis of the supposition that Koreshan astronomers hold that the moon is a direct reflection of sunshine from continents and oceans. The supposition is not true, and therefore the conclusion that the moon should present different outlines to observers in different parts of the earth at different times is erroneous.

The moon is a product of the influence of the sun's energies upon the terrestrial strata; but before the energies are reflected back into the heavens they pass through multiform transmutations and amalgamations. The moon is the result of a storage process; the energies which converge to produce the image visible in the sky are impressed with the different qualities of substances in the shell, and in their material focus in the sky the impression of the great shell, with all its geologic and mineral strata, is made.

The moon is a result of all the planetary fluxions—the energies of the planets empty themselves in the moon, and the process makes the moon "full." The moon waxes and wanes in fact, not simply in appearance. The moon proper is the earth's metallic strata; it is the great menstrual system of the physical universe, and the visible moon is the monthly product,—the great physical structure is its base. The ovum is the product of the menstrual system of the female; it is the "reflection" of the human structure; and when the processes of its formation are understood we can read in it the form of the structure producing it. When the processes by which the moon is formed every month, when its functions are comprehended, all of the phenomena of the visible orb become rationally and easily explained.

We are perfectly familiar with all lunar phenomena; it is not to be consistently supposed that in the founding of the Koreshan System, the facts of the universe were left unconsidered. The most impractical thing that the Founder of Koreshanity could have done thirty years ago would be to have proceeded on the basis of an hypothesis as have the astronomers who have preceded him, and then sought to make observed facts fit the theory! The usual astronomer observes the moon through the telescope, and concludes that the only way in which the moon he sees could possibly appear as it does, is for the sun to shine directly upon the uneven convex surface, thus producing the phases and the shadows. The conclusion is an unwarranted assumption.

The moon is a reflection of the earth's surface. Which surface? The ultimate lunar reflections are from the metallic strata; the ascending energies pass from the metallic planes through the mineral and geologic strata, and convey the impressions of the chalky and earthy substances through which they pass; and the result in the visible moon is a composite, materialized picture of all the substances above the metallic planes.

If the reader will imagine the earth stripped of its metallic environs, leaving the outermost mineral strata exposed to the view of the mind's eye from the external, and then supply visual penetration from the outside, as though the shell of minerals and earthy strata were semi-transparent, there would be seen exactly what is seen in the physical heavens in what we call the moon, for through all of the reflections and transpositions of the energies that take place by which the moon is formed and its light created, we actually see the earth from the outside, minus the metallic shells. The lunar image in the heavens is a materialized picture of the earth's outside mineral surface, modified by all the superimposed strata, including the continents and oceans. The earth's outside mineral surface is convex, and its image in the heavens is convex; we actually see a convex sphere of crystalline substances, the surface of which is uneven, and the body of which is semi-transparent.

The lowermost mineral strata has not a polished external surface; it is rough. The materialized image of this surface is modified by all the kinds of substances lying above; the mountains we see on the moon are the result of composite impres- sions from specific energies passing through the various chaotic deposits on the earth. If the strata were even the moon would appear perfectly smooth; they are uneven and of varying thicknesses; the continents and oceans make blendings of light and shade,—not with abrupt and well defined shore lines. Tycho is the earth's north pole; on the moon's face we see a reversed picture of a portion of the land hemisphere of the earth. The great number of streaks diverging from Tycho like meridians, not explained in the old school astronomy, are impressions of fissures and magnetic currents in the earth.

But how about the shadows? It is a fact that the direction of the shadows on the moon at first quarter extend toward the east. At first quarter the moon is on the meridian at sunset. At that time are not the shadows on the earth's surface extending toward the east also, and is not the "terminator" on the earth directly beneath the moon? The solar energies are passing from west to east; the energies beneath the surface are passing in the same direction, so that their action on the uneven surfaces of the various planes produce results corresponding to shadows. Then, at third quarter the shadows on the moon extend toward the west from the same lunar mountains. At that time the moon is on the meridian at sunrise. Are not the shadows on the earth extending toward the west also, and is not the dividing line between sunshine and twilight directly beneath the moon? You see, the moon's relation to the great concave disc of solar circumradiations determines its phases. The shadows first take place on and in the earth, and in the transposition of the energies,—in the implantation of the earth's image in the sky, the effect is true to the original. The moon does not present different outlines to observers at different parts of the earth at different times. The materialized image is an image of the whole earth, and we see about one half of the lunar surface. As one half of the earth is constantly illuminated, and as the moon must sustain different relations to the great concave disc of daylight and corresponding solar activities in the shell, it must present regular phases in its lunations. The same lunar face is always seen; and the fact that only one side is presented to observers on the earth's surface, as a result of constant impressions from beneath, is decidedly in favor of the Koreshan conclusions, and as decidedly against the idea that the moon is an independent sphere just happening to rotate once on its axis while making a revolution about the earth! The sensitized surface of the camera plate must always be turned toward the object to be photographed; the image of the earth must always present the same face to our view. The great mirror above, everywhere presenting its surface to the earth, must constantly receive the same picture; and in the transposition of the energies received, to the lunar pole—the visible moon, the effect must always be the same.

The moon is semitransparent—a fact utterly inexplicable on the basis of the usual conception of the moon, a dead, inert, opaque body, over 2,000 miles in diameter. There are well authenticated observations of the occultations of Jupiter and of stars, where the points passing behind the moon were seen through the moon; and the sun's limb has been observed through the moon during solar eclipses. The facts of these observations may be obtained from astronomical observatories. So obviously contradictory are these facts to the accepted view, as astronomers, in popular treatises omit mention of them; but Proctor endeavored to explain the "impenetrable mystery" on the basis of "optical illusion"!

Political Parties and the Money Power.

(1) What will be the end of the money power? (2) Can legislation ever correct the social and economic evils of the American nation? (3) What political party advocates principles, the application of which to government would make this a happy and prosperous nation? (4) Will the republican party be again put in power in 1900?—D. C. W., Boonville, Mo.

(1) The end of the money power will be destruction by revolution. For years the forces of revolution have been gathering and accelerating. The struggle between capital and labor is constantly growing more desperate. The result will not be peaceable adjustment. The remission of the sins of the nation cannot obtain without the shedding of blood through a terrible conflict. The true remedy, involved in Koreshanity, will repair the breach and establish a new order of equity, the church and state of the Golden Age.

(2) Legislation will never correct the social and economic evils of the world. Neither the people nor their representatives are able to reach the source of these evils; and the effect will not disappear until the cause is removed. The solution of the problem is scientific, the substitution of the love of the neighbor for the love of self. The process is Messianic, and necessitates the co-operation of God and man in the establishment of a new kingdom. There is no cure for modern evils vested in the power of corrupt nations.

(3) There are no principles advocated in any political party today, the application of which to government and the affairs of the people, that would make the nations happy and prosperous. The ideal government will never obtain through republicanism or democracy; there can be no happiness for humanity under the reign of competition. Modern "freedom" is a fallacy, a delusion; the worst bondage, the most abject and hopeless slavery, has resulted from application of the so called principles of individualism. The popular parties are full of corruption, and the schemes of reform are mere patches which the agitators would feign sew on the tattered garments of the old age.

(4) See leading editorial in Editorial Perspective, this issue. The present political outlook indicates success of the republican party in the coming campaign, and the consequent full sway of the money power until the end—and the end is at hand!

"Modern Astronomy Exploded."

A German Editor Takes a Glance at the Cellular Cosmogony, and Fails to Consider the Points at Issue.

It is hardly possible to imagine all the follies that the belief in the Bible, as God's infallible word, will lead to. The circumstance that the Biblical cosmogony is certainly not in conformity with the results shown by the natural sciences, is a "thorn in the flesh" of the Bible believer, and causes him to see to it that the good reputation of the Bible is saved at any cost. They place at stake, without hesitation, good judgment, experience, truth, conscience, knowledge, and science,—in short, all that is sacred to the lover of truth and reason, only to be able to maintain the God of their hearts, the Bible, to be truly and unmistakably God's word.

We have had kindly sent for review, from the authors, KORESH and Prof. U. G. Morrow, a book entitled CELLULAR COSMOGONY, which "proves" that those who believe in the Copernican system are in a very grave error when they fancy that they live on a convex surface, in that the earth is found not to be convex, but that it has a concave surface, and that we live on the inside of the shell, instead of on the outside surface.

This discovery exceeds in absurdity the theory of Peter Cachems, who taught that hell is at the center of the earth. They not only maintain, but also "prove," their theory by measurements made at the seashore and by balloon observations, and have correctly ratified their theory, using a notary public, who has given his name and seal to verify their statements. There is no wonder that the book closes with the exclamations, "Modern Astronomy Exploded! The Bible Vindicated!" And why should it not be so, that there are such foolish theorists who truly believe it and fulfil the statement of the old proverb, "Fools never will cease to be"? The new ones verify it!—Armina, Oakwood, Wis. [Translated from the German by H. D. Silverfriend.]

An Astronomer in the Hollow Globe.

Endeavors to Find a Way of Escape to the Outside; Briefly Reviews our Demonstrations and Remains Skeptical.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Courtesy requires answers to your questions of some time ago, though they tend to lead away from the main question, the figure of the earth.

Q.—“Will the professor assert that the orbit and velocity of a planet would be the same if it weighed nothing?”

A.—Every material body must weigh something.

Q. 2.—“What would be the result if the planet were increased to a mass too heavy to be moved by the force applied?”

A.—Any body free to move would be moved by any force. The question, however, assumes impossibility of movement “by the force applied,” whatever that may mean.

Q. 3.—“What is the source of the projectile energy of the planets?”

A.—Motion is eternal and needs no “projectile energy” to start it. At least that proposition cannot be refuted if it cannot be proved. It goes beyond the boundaries of possible human knowledge. We can only speculate on it, and such is my provisional opinion.

Q. 4.—“Will the professor tell us which is correct?” (referring to the different theories of the tides.)

A.—The earth and moon mutually attract each other, and the centrifugal force which keeps them apart must also be mutual; and that condition is realized by their both revolving around their common center of gravity, and the anti-lunar tide results from the earth's movement around that center,—at least, such seems to me to be a very sound theory.

I must decidedly dissent from your proposition, that “Laws that do not involve the cause of planetary motion are not laws at all.” Kepler's previously quoted third law is referred to, more particularly, though the proposition is general. If the two factors on which that proposition is based—motion and distance from the primary—are in fact, found to be related to each other as the law sets forth, and it is consequently found reliable to work by, its status as a law is in no degree impaired by our ignorance of the cause of planetary motion; just as we may rely on the infallibility of the laws of chemical combination, while profoundly ignorant of the cause of chemical affinity.

You do neither wisely nor well to sneer at Kepler in terms implying that he made the laws he discovered, and might have made better ones “while he was at it” if he had been so minded. As well sneer at Columbus for not making a better America “while he was at it.” The undying fame of Kepler rests on the fact that his discoveries first placed the truth of the Copernican system within the pale of mathematical demonstration.

CELLULAR COSMOGONY was received in due time, and the conclusion was reached at once that the “rectilinearator” does not “demonstrate” the concavity of the earth. It only demonstrates its own performance. The concavity of the earth is only an inference based on the assumption that it runs a straight line, which it may not do, the claim of “compensation for expansion and contraction” not being tenable. But it is no part of my plan to criticise the instrument or its management. My conclusion would be the same if I had been present and witnessed its operation, and is, that the most it can do is to introduce an apparent conflict of evidence. In such cases the only rational course is to strike a balance of probabilities and form our conclusions accordingly. This I will endeavor to do presently, but must first endeavor to show that the instrument stands alone as your only evidence, all the optical proofs alleged being as readily explainable from a convex as from a concave earth.

The apparent convexity of the earth is freely conceded, (pp. 15-35,) but it is explained by assuming a curved line of sight, the upward curvature of which exceeds that of the earth's surface sufficiently to cause about the same divergence between the two, as would obtain between a convex earth and a straight line of sight. Now, if such curvature were a constant quantity, all water areas of any considerable extent should be convex just as the world at large does; but since, as appears, such is not always the case, the water appearing nearly level or even concave in some cases, some explanation of the phenomena is needed, and the only available one that occurs to me is, that under some circumstances the upward curvature of the line of sight is less than the apparent convexity calls for; when water looks level the curvature must be the same as the earth, and when it looks concave the line must be straighter than the earth. There can be no objection to the explanation, but the phenomenon only proves that the line of sight is not constant, and leaves the question of figure just where it was before, for we can with equal propriety assume equivalent variations from the standpoint of convexity, and the same will be found to be true of all the optical phenomena cited.

We are now ready for the balance of probabilities. The vast difference between what we should see if all the celestial bodies were spread on the surface of a “sphere of the heavens” which revolved in the shell as claimed and shown;—and what we actually do see has already been pointed out, which difference is attributed to “optical illusion.” Now the assumption of just such an amount and kind of illusion as would completely obliterate all celestial evidences of the Cellular theory and substitute therefor exactly such appearances as would result from the truth of the Copernican system, appears to me to be beyond all comparison more improbable than the supposition of an unreliable instrument. I am content to let the matter rest at that indefinitely.—PROF. J. W. T., Salem, O.

Christ and Krishna.

Fallacy of the Claim that Christianity Borrowed from Hinduism.

It has been often claimed that Christianity was, to a considerable extent, borrowed from the Hindu legends of Krishna, and that the gospel accounts of miracles are “wholesale plagiarism” from Hindu literature. There is absolutely no truth in this claim. For while there is sufficient resemblance between the history of Christ and the legends of Krishna to prove that one is to a large degree copied from the other, it by no means follows that Christianity borrowed from Hinduism, but rather that the latter borrowed from the Gospels. The evidence in support of this fact is overwhelming. According to Sir William Jones and other great Oriental scholars, the “motley story” of the Krishna legends is explained on the supposition that the wildest parts of the spurious Gospels, and notably the Apocryphal writing known as the “Evangelism Infatide,” were engrafted on it. Max Muller, the great authority on Oriental literature, says that the legends of Krishna do not date back of the sixth century of the Christian era. The Christian writings were introduced into India at a very early date, and from them, the Krishna legends were undoubtedly taken.

Another fact to be considered is that the history of Christ is prophetically related in the Old Testament, and even the most ardent defenders of a date for the Krishna legends earlier than that of the origin of Christianity, do not claim that those legends are as ancient as the Old Testament. And even admitting the existence of the Krishna accounts before Christianity, we see no reason for discrediting the latter, which was simply the fulfillment of Old Testament prediction. If these prophecies, which were widely known long before the Christian era, furnished the basis of the Hindu accounts, the truth of Christianity is by no means affected. The Christian faith is a religion which is historic. Its facts are well attested. It is the legitimate successor of the religion of the Old Testament. To declare that it is indebted to a mass of legends which cannot be shown to exist prior to 600 A. D., and which may easily have been copied from it or from the writings which predict it, shows a lack both of scholarship and of critical judgment.—Beta, in Boston Ideas.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly, June 1.—To those of our readers desirous of keeping continually informed regarding the progress of the Filipino war Leslie's Weekly is indispensable, on account of the published photographs from the fields of battle. The affairs in Cuba are also graphically presented in both pictures and letter press. In the issue for June 1 the faces of popular heroes greet the reader. One double-page drawing shows a Cuban landing scene, while another double page is devoted to photographs of the Filipino war. Other illustrations cover happenings of interest, such as Queen Victoria's recent visit to Nice, the trouble in Samoa, railroad disaster, etc.

The Saturday Evening Post.—Ian MacLaren, who has done very little literary work for some months, has just written for The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, an important series of four short stories, under the general title, A Scots Grammar School, the first of which will appear in the issue of June 3. In these stories the author returns to the Scotch town and folk he knows so well, and depicts the scenes of his own boyhood with the same sweet humor and pathos that brought Beside the Bonnie Brier-bush into such immediate and lasting favor. Muirtown Seminary is drawn from Stirling Grammar School, where the author prepared for the University of Edinburgh.

Mind.—June number is on our desk. Mind is a magazine of liberal and advanced thought on lines of psychology, metaphysics, and occultism. Each issue contains a number of well written articles, and the magazine has attained a high place in metaphysical journalism. Some of the articles in the June issue are, Psychology of Mental Healing, Society and the Church, the Law of Attraction, Influence of Climate on Races, Reason and Faith, etc. Yearly, $2; Alliance Pub. Co., Life Building, New York.

Word and Works is at hand, with weather forecasts for June. Its editor, Rev. Hicks, is the man who has made cyclones famous for coming when he says they will. Thousands of people all over the country are continually testing his predictions. From a few casual comparisons between his forecasts and fulfillments we would say that he seems to hit it very well. Besides weather, there is much other breezy matter in Word and Works. Monthly, $1 a year. Published at St. Louis, Mo.

Open Court for June.—Contains a peculiarly interesting article on Paganism in the Roman Church, the adoption by the church and its declassification, of pagan forms and customs existing in the Roman empire. The article is written by Dr. Trede, of Naples, Italy. Other subjects discussed are Plato and the Cross, the History of French Philosophy, Psychology of Abstraction, and editorials on the peace conference.

Popular Science.—An all around, illustrated scientific monthly, devoted to nature study. It contains a number of interesting departments, such as Archeology, Mineralogy, Photography, Microscopy, Questions, Correspondence, Astronomy, Recent Inventions, Hygiene, etc. A store of facts of research in all these lines. $2 yearly; 108 Fulton st., New York, N. Y.

Success.—A splendid, illustrated weekly magazine of self-help, always bright and cheerful. Its aim is to show the young how to succeed in life. It is an education in itself—teaching from the standpoint of practical attainments by men who have succeeded. 5 cts. per copy, $1.50 a year. The Success Company, Cooper Union, New York, N. Y.

The Almighty vs. Higher Critics.

In discrediting the Hebrew Scriptures, some of the critics of our day meet the fact that Jesus of Nazareth read, quoted, expounded, unqualifiedly indorsed the very writings which they pronounce spurious and unworthy of our belief. It may be well to quote the utterances of Sir William Dawson, one of the most eminent scientists of this generation, upon this topic. Speaking to a band of theological students he said:

"I have read recently, I confess with feelings of contempt, discussions respecting the supposed limitations of the knowledge of Jesus Christ. Did he know the data of modern criticism? Was he acquainted with the discoveries of modern science? A fly alighting on my hand might as well attempt to understand the thoughts passing through my mind, as criticism to gauge in this way the mind of Christ. To me, a student for fifty years, of nature, of man, and of the Bible, such discussions seem most frivolous, since our Lord's knowledge, as we have it in his reported discourses, is altogether above and beyond modern science and philosophy; transcending them as much as the vision of an astronomer, armed with one of the great telescopes of our time, transcends the unaided vision of a gnat. Christ viewed things from a standpoint of his own, and through a different medium from the atmosphere of this world."—The Christian.

The Baptist Flag and The Flaming Sword.

The FLAMING SWORD spends its time mostly in "flaming," as it spends too much time in the ethereal regions, straining its spiritual optics in speculating on a "scientific analysis" of "divine fire," and the "difference between the atoms of the mortal and immortal man," and such other unknowable phantasms to ever get an edge on the blade. It is the organ of Koreshanity, another new religion that has come into being to "restore" the "lost religion of Jesus Christ." Oh, dear! It is wonderful to think of the efforts men have made to repair Christ's failure in church building.—Baptist Flag.

Evidently the Flag is neither a shining light, nor an instrument of revelation of the mysteries of divine life. If it were, it would recognize the truth of Paul's declaration concerning the apostasy of the church which Jesus founded. The church of every dispensation waxes old as a garment; and if we are approaching the end of the age, some preparation must be made for making all things new. Even life must be renewed—and renewed in new organic structures. If the Almighty makes everything new must he not reconstruct the church?—Editor FLAMING SWORD.

Conclusions From the Flaming Sword Article on Space.

If all things move in a circle, then parallel lines may meet and diverge. This is not according to Euclid, but many modern mathematicians are inclined to this view. If this is correct, then it would seem to follow that space is limited, and therefore finite; and as the finite cannot contain the infinite, the popular concept of an Infinite Universe must be abandoned, and astronomers may yet hope to be able to fix its boundaries.—Equity, Topeka, Kas.

Coming Nation Sees the Hollow Globe.

The Psychic Digest and
Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an ablo DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

The Kings and Priests of the New Kingdom.

Practical Solution of the World's Great Problems Depends Upon the Lord's Coming; the Firstfruits of Regeneration the Governing Power of the Coming Dispensation.

THE COMING of the Lord is the only practical solution of the great problems agitating the public mind. His coming will establish the kingdom; it will not confirm the republic. The method of the Lord's advent, however, is essentially misunderstood by the church,—no matter what the creed or denomination,—principally because the religious sentiment has been so thoroughly divorced from scientific and secular interests as to prostitute the religious function, making it subservient to unrighteous ends, and preclusive of the possible cognition of a scientific interpretation of the law of Christian development. As a rule, the church does not desire the Lord's advent. "The world is good enough without him," says the church; and any interest in, and discussion of, the mysterious subject of the coming of the Lord, distinguishes the offender who dares suggest the unpopular question as a member of the great army of modern cranks. "The man is a crank (or insane) who does not direct his principal energies to the aggregation of riches for himself, or to the more humble secular activity of making riches for other men through servile subjection to their interests." When the Lord went away he said, "I will come again." The Christian (so called) who does not desire the Lord's advent and the fulfilment of the Lord's prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven," is a humbug and a hypocrite; and the time is not far distant when the spurious Christianity in both the Catholic and Protestant churches will come to judgment, and their true inwardness be laid bare for the inspection of the least critical beholder of their rottenness.

The doctrine of the resurrection (reincarnation) is taking hold of the people, though at present—in so far as it is gaining public notice—it is mainly in the possession of the devil—alias Spiritualism, Theosophy, etc. Abraham was reincarnated in the Lord Jesus, as the central figure of the first century of the Piscatorial era. In him (Jesus) Abram came into hissonship and inheritance as the Son of God and precursor of that final coming which should confirm him as the "heir of the world;" but to Peter (Petros, or Rock, Stone of Israel) was committed all authority in heaven and in earth—a testification to be corroborated in him as the first to spring forth as the resurrected human, to possess the credentials of recognition as the Son of inheritance and precursor of the reincarnation of those who, through the experiences of the past age, and of previous ages, are to be made the sons of God.

The ridiculous conceptions of the Lord's advent (born of ignorance and entertained by many professing to love his appearing) should yield to the dictates of common sense and the indications of law, as the law is observed to obtain and operate in every domain. The Lord Jesus—perfect male and female, the express image of the person of God residing in him—comprised the kingdom in its least form, but as absolutely an organic kingdom as when, through his evolution into the greater and greatest form, the universal kingdom is expressed in its organic unity. The coming of the Lord is both first and second in this age, as it was first and second in the preceding age. In His first coming, he came as the personal Messiah (Christos); in his second coming, he came by the operation of the quickenings or Holy Spirit. In his first coming—as to his person—he was the first Adam, for he was the first-born of every creature, the living soul made in the image and likeness of God. He “is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature: for by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist; and he is the head of the body, the church.”

The greatest difficulty with the church today resides in its practical denial of everything it pretends to believe. Its members profess to symbolize, with the eucharist, or the Lord's supper, the eating or appropriation of the Lord's life (body—flesh and blood), while ignorant of the use for which the type is designed. The life of God, incarnate in Jesus the Christ by generation (production), was appropriated (eaten) by the church, and will be reincarnated in the sons of God through regeneration (reproduction), to be manifest as declared: “Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, [when?] I will raise him up at the last day” (end of the age), this being the time when eternal life is given. So called Christians profess to be regenerated. Do they show any sign of it? They profess to be “born of God.” Do they manifest any sign of it? They profess to be called of God to special uses in the kingdom of God's glory. Where is the kingdom of righteousness? and where is the sign of sonship? The Christian church of today is a preposterous humbug. Every truth and every good of the original church is prostituted to the most selfish human interests, and the intolerance of the stronger toward the weaker sects is a manifestation of anything but the pretended love to the world, which they profess.

A man regenerated (reproduced) by the operation of the Holy Ghost (the impregnating Spirit of Deity), is as much the son of God as the kernel of wheat regenerated (reproduced) from a planted kernel of wheat is like a kernel of wheat. Wheat is regenerated by the spirit of the wheat operating through the regular law of growth. “The earth brings forth first the blade, then the ear, and finally the full corn in the ear.” So it is with the production of the sons of God. God was planted in the church through the dematerialization of the Son of God, the seed-man. Because the Son of God was planted, the process of regeneration (reproduction) will bring forth, in the reincarnation, the sons of God. “To all that believe in his name gives he power to become the sons of God.” Who believes it? No one. The church is ignorant of the intent and possibilities of the gospel of the Lord Christ, and glories, rather, in its prostitution. Thus it has become an adulteress, the great harlot, the mother of harlots; and all the abominations of the earth may be righteously laid at her door.

A little scientific reflection would make these questions clear; but how can men think, when the only object of life is the acquisition of wealth, and the predominating impulse is the competitive effort to acquire that which another has produced? Christ comes. His fan is in his hand; he will thoroughly winnow, and the unquenchable fire will consume the chaff. Accumulated riches will not avail in the coming hour. Upon those who look for his appearing, will he arise and shine, and give forth his glory.

There will not come a universal brotherhood. The fruit of regeneration will mature, and the kings and priests unto God will re-establish their inheritance and rule the earth, reducing to a divine order the diversified phases of human existence. There is but one power in the universe that can cement an enduring bond of fellowship; that power is the Spirit of Truth operating through the regenerating processes of divine evolution, unfolding the fellow-heirship of the Deific kingdom and of the household of God. To talk of the sudden transposition of a human barbarian to the membership of a common brotherhood is preposterous. The process of regeneration from God into Deific sonship is an orderly one, extending over a long period of years; only such can mature into the fruitage of regeneration, in the culmination of an age, as received the divine impregnation in the beginning of the same age.

The fruitage of the Piscatorial, or so called Christian, dispensation must necessarily be the sons of God, because they are the offspring of the seed of God; namely, Jesus the Christ. This fruit will recognize and acknowledge, not reject, its parentage. The name Savior (Jesus) will be confessed by every one worthy to enter into the household of faith and to become a son of the Most High. The disposition on the part of any reform movement to disparage the name of the Lord Jesus and to question his title to his inheritance,—the dominion of the world, designates that movement as identified with the power of antichrist which should arise as a concomitant of the events denoting and fulfilling the end.

Research and investigation lead inevitably to the conclusion that we are reaching a grand culmination in the progress of events, the consummation of which will be more glorious in its achievement than has ever been pictured by artist's brush and pencil, poet's pen, or portrayal of prophetic vision.

The Universe a Great Trust of Kingdoms.

The Imperialism of the Human Organism and the Analogous Cosmic Structure ; the Gigantic System of Organic Unity and Co-operation.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

REPUBLICANISM comprises the fabric of the civilization of the western world; the doctrines of democracy are supposed to lie at the very foundation of the solution of the great problems of industrial, social, and political economy. Experiments of nations in democracy have proven so unsatisfactory, that the thoughtful mind is led to inquire if the principles of democracy are not fallacious in the extreme. The question can be scientifically answered only by consideration of the principles of organic unity, as existing in man and cosmos. Is the universe imperialistic or democratic? Is the human organism a republic or a kingdom? Is the human ego president or emperor?

The modern astronomer has never been able to locate the center of the universe; and he concludes that the universe is infinite. Millions of stars are thought to be scattered in space without any specific relation or interdependence; and to the astronomer, the stellar universe appears to be a republic, without any central, unique, dominant authority; though he admits that the solar system is a system of imperialism. A corresponding fallacy is held in regard to the human organism, and such subjects as "The Republic of the Body," "Democracy in Biology," describing the "cell-republic," have been discussed in magazines and otherwise promulgated.

Modern astronomy is one of the most stupendous and absurd fallacies of modern times. The universe is not an infinity of star-dotted space, but an organic structure. The laws of its form and function, discovered by the Founder of Koreshanity thirty years ago, overthrow every vestige of astronomical absurdities. The premise of Koreshan Cosmogony supplies the mind with a rational premise, rational principles—the knowledge of laws so absolute and inevitable in their application and operation in all domains of being and existence, as to lead to unvarying and inevitable conclusions in the solution of all problems which are agitating the modern mind.

Republicanism is unnatural and unscientific. It does not exist in the beehive, nor in the ant colony; it does not exist in the home or family, nor in military organizations; it does not exist in the human organism, nor in the physical cosmos. It did not exist in any of the divine institutions and governments of the past; Judaism was not democratic, but theocratic, an imperialistic system; primitive Christianity was not a republican institution, and the principles, doctrines, and laws of an imperial head pervaded the entire economy of the early church. If the so called principles of republicanism were true, they would be true in all domains of existence,—true in the domain of human life as well as in the plane of human relations. In such case there could never be a Messiah, nor a kingdom of the Almighty in the earth; there never could be a climax of aspiration and progress, no supreme incentive to fulfil the mission of a single atom of the universe! Republicanism is a denial of the authority, doctrines, and functions of the man Jesus, a denial of the promises and prophecies of a new kingdom, a denial of the very foundation of primitive Christianity!

The universe could not exist if there did not inhere in it the immutable laws of order and of life. In order to perpetually exist in accordance with its eternal purpose, it must be equipped with all the facilities for continually fulfilling that purpose. It must have a supreme point of aspiration, a goal of destiny for all its atoms, a climax of progress, an apex of existence, a pivot of activity and power. Whatever that destiny is, whatever be its climax, its apex, as the reward of inheritance—that is the imperial throne of the system. The universe could not exist if it did not possess organic unity; it could not exist if it were not imperialistic in its government, with mutual relation of center and circumference, of sun and earth, of the positive nucleus and negative cell.

The immutable laws of order provide for the greatest liberty and freedom of activity of all the parts of the universe. The greatest freedom can only obtain where there is order; there is the greatest freedom in the direction of least resistance. Every orb in the physical heavens is free to move in its orbit; it is not at liberty to move in any other direction than that which the law of harmony and order impels. Every star must obey the laws of attraction and repulsion, and fulfil its mission in accordance with the imperial demands of the cosmic center. The universe is a great trust of kingdoms, ruled by one central pivot of impulse, responsive to all demands of its kingdom, receptive to all energies generated in the performance of use in all planes under the sun, and receives all sacrifices of substances for the benefit of the whole. The scientific laws of cellular life preclude the establishment of a republicanism in the physical cosmos!

The universe of humanity is analogous to the great physical form which contains it; the anthropostic world and the great alchemico-organic system are co-ordinated. The laws of interdependence which relate one part of the cosmos to another, must be operative to maintain corresponding relations in the human world. The relations of man and cosmos are specific. The process of the progress of life from plane to plane, the process of the ascent of life through all the domains, culminates in the highest point of human attainment. The universe, in order to perpetuate itself, must involve itself, with all its complexities, in the most complex human form, the climax of aspiration, the highest point, the creative pivot, the man-God. Jesus declared that he was the Light of the world, and it was declared of him that he was the Sun of Righteousness, the imperial head of humanity, the King of kings, the man having all power in heaven and in earth, inheriting the dominion of the universe, the very central throne of being.

What the sun is to the physical world, what the God-man is to the world of humanity, the ego is to the individual. The individual man is the involution of humanity at large, and whatever laws inhere in the very being and heart of the human world, must find expression in the individual. Man is not a machine, but an aggregation of entities, which co-operate, through obedience to law, to perpetuate the organism. The human form is a system of industry, of co-operation, of communism; a system of equitable commerce, economy of life, and conservation of forces; it contains a natural system of exchange of substances. It constitutes the government of one supreme, central cell, ruling over subcenters, heads of departments of individual life, centers of consciousness. Millions of entities, embodied in cells and corpuscles, are engaged in producing substances for the maintenance of the entire structure; they toil to produce tissue; they build the bones, make the muscles, convey substances to the extremities of the circulation, pick up the refuse, repair damages, attend to the great laboratories of the system, and fight invading elements.

A world of industry is contained in man; a system of co-operation; a social structure of entities; a religious system, with the courts of the brain as the heavens of the body, to which cells aspire. The religious, social, economic departments of the individual structure are governed by the imperial heads in the citadel of the system, the imperial nucleus. The faculties of perception in the head must be respected by every corpuscle; the will must impulse every cell in its motion, and the priests of conjunction must guide every corpuscle to its goal of destiny. The laws are immutable; the rewards of obedience are sure, the penalties for disobedience are certain. Nothing short of absolute imperialism of the human system can insure the welfare of either a part or the whole of the organism.

The form of the organization of the early church was the form of a man; all of the functions of the human system were represented, head and body, heart and lungs, religious, moral, social, and economic departments, corresponding to the natural system of relations and functions of the human body. The force of the arguments of the apostle Paul are too strong to be disregarded, even by an apostate church. Was not the structured church in human form called a kingdom? Did it not typify the great kingdom to come, in which the great structured Christ of the new order, the macrocosmic man, the 144,000 sons of God, would constitute the imperial, solar nucleus? We are sometimes amazed that right in the face and presence of the thousands of scientific evidences of the imperialism of the universe, in the presence of living, organic structures manifesting the complex forms of divine governments in the natural world, men should advocate the principles of democracy!

What the physical universe declares; what is declared in the physiology of the human structure; what is seen in all the departments of the world; what teachers and prophets of all past ages have declared, is promulgated in the Scientific System of Koreshanity: that the true form of government is that which obtains in the physical cosmos, in the human world, in the human body; and that the coming kingdom, the restoration of man to the dominion of the universe, will be the natural imperialism, involving in its administration all that man is in heart, and mind, and soul, and being. The laws of church and state, the light of the mind of the coming humanity, the laws of social economy and relations, will emanate from the supreme nucleus of humanity, as the light of the sun radiates from the center to the circumference, when republicanism, anarchy, chaos, darkness, and ignorance are no more, and when the world turns again to obey the laws of life in one great Empire of the New Humanity!

The Imperialism of the Coming Age.

The Corruptions of the Present Order; the Deepening Shadows Contrasted With the Dawning Light; the True Imperialist and His Policy of Expansion.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

FROM the slimy ooze of the decadence of the imperial power of Rome, which swamps America today, two new forms are rising, to confront each other in mortal combat. The one is the dark reflex of the other, and illustrates the saying, "Coming events cast their shadows before." The shadow is huge, a veritable Goliath, leader of the Philistine despoilers of God's Israel. His tread seems to shake the foundations of the earth, whose great ones quail before him.

This imperial potentate, before whom the kings of the world bow in servile devotion, ambitious only for his favor, is the money power. His death's-head of carnal gold from beneath, must ultimately be represented by the chief magistrate of the United States. This imperial magnate, voice of a people who sit in darkness, speaks from beneath, his primary brain centers being in the slums of hades, where votes are bought with whiskey, that vomit of hell, breeding demons from the worm which dieth not. This imperial money potentate is the bastard son of the mother of harlots, whose prolific progeny people the civilized (?) world of today. This despot from hades is a usurper of the throne of the Almighty, who has a legitimate imperial heir. This heir has not been manifest in the natural human form, for nearly two thousand years; but his day is at hand, and his imperial edict, already heralded, is backed by the power of the Mighty one of forces, that nothing under the sun can withstand.

The reflex of the mighty edict of almighty truth is already effecting the thorough organization of the hells; thus is evil made the servant of God, and the bondman of systematized bondage. It is written that the Lord taketh the wicked in his own snares. In the economy of divine imperialism nothing is lost, and every well-organized commercial and military system, effected by the devil to defeat the power of the Almighty, will be used by that power for the reorganization of the hells for the service of the heavens of the Most Holy, which eternally rest upon them.

The dark rays of the anthropostic sun penetrate to the deepest depths of the abyss of the universal organism, and dictate the formulation and emplacement of every structural foundation. When the Philistines had prepared the happy land of Canaan for all Israel, the God of Israel raised up for himself a man mighty enough to slay its greatest giant, and another wise enough to develop all its resources, build its temple, and give its new nation age-lasting fame and glory.

Today, while the imperial money power is advocating expansion and reaching out its blood-sucking tentacles to grasp the keys of secular commerce, the islands of the high seas, it is heading up as a wolf in sheep's clothing, in that whited sepulcher known as the republican administration, from the chief seat of which it baas as a lamb, with its false front. Down in Wall street, this mongrel carnivora bellows like a bull, revealing its sensual, true inwardness, while bearing down the flesh of Christ throughout the world, to the servitude of ignorance and poverty.

Goliath, the great Philistine, type of vast display without moral worth, had the self-confidence of huge animal strength and the besotted ignorance of all the enemies of the Almighty. The Almighty chooses the weak things and the things that are base, to bring to naught the things that are,—that no flesh may glory in his presence.

The imperialism of the money power, so rapidly heading up in this seventh completion of Gentile nationality, the United States, has great confidence in its control of vast territory and unmeasured physical resources. Its weakness is its besotted ignorance of the corruptions of its fallacious organism, effected through having made a God of its belly, yielding its allegiance to the desires of its flesh. The imperialism of the money power has yet to learn that, right between its eyes, where the eye single should look Godward to where reason sits enthroned; is a weak spot, so weak that a single stone from the bed of the river of the water of life can, in God's due time, penetrate the mortal brain and end the mortal life of the giant, great as he seems to be.

This potential stone, the Stone of Israel, so long rejected by the builders of national manhood, is the Stone of Truth absolute, the pearl of true science. This Stone is destined to adorn the brow of a man ordained of God to an imperial reign in the hearts of men.

The great Babylon of our present civilization must fall into the hands of a God-anointed King, on the night when its feast is merriest, and the lords of the wine cup and the slaves of the flesh-pots revel most in their power to defy the God of Israel, the Savior and great Expansionist who reigns supreme in the heaven of heavens, and claims the whole earth as his footstool. This God is a strange God, a mystery to all who lack wisdom and understanding. "Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Savior." While he hides himself, he has a way of not leaving himself without a witness.

Even in the abyss of the hells, and at an hour when we think not, the Son of man cometh, lowly, riding upon a colt the foal of an ass. This King in obscurity, this Servant of the cross of Christ, who bears the keys of heaven and of hell, is the man whom Dr. Joseph Parker of London is looking for,—the Man spelled with a capital M. This man holds the quickening Spirit of the Father, to give life to all men in the womb of Mother Earth, groveling under the sun. This man stands in the Sun, clothed with light (the light of the science of truth) as with a garment. This man, God's witness, is among men today, bearing witness to the truth concerning God's descent into hades to lead captivity captive, and to give gifts unto men.

A few years ago, there was a great wedding feast made in this capital of the Babylonish empire. It was called the Congress of Religions. A certain man who came down from Jerusalem to Jericho, sought recognition as the Bridegroom at the feast, from the priests and Levites, but he lacked the approved wedding garment, so was left out of the feast, to knock at the doors of the alien. The feast went forward, and the name of the Lamb of God was retied to the old harlot of Christendom, Babylon the Great; the cross of Christ was made of none effect, and the "man of sin," the world's cross-bearer, was put to an open shame, and his name is made a byword for hissing.

Nevertheless, the certain man who fell by the way is Lucifer, Son of the Morning; and though his feet walk the weary ways of hell, he stands today in the light of the Sun. His science of truth was as darkness to the owls and the bats, enthroned in the minds of those who sat in his shadow, blind to the light. These worship the reflex of his triune Deity, in the ghostly forms of an unknown triad, and turn their backs on the Man of God.

But night ends with the dawning of day and the rising of the Day Star, Lucifer. He fell into the race in Jerusalem; he arises from Jericho,—the moon city, symbol of the church of the dark ages. He arises as a mighty man out of sleep, girt with the strength of the Almighty, to put on the whole armor of God, to fight the good fight of faith by giving to every man a rational basis for faith, hope, and love. These three, in the divine unity of the perfect man, must rule the world with imperial sway, and establish the kingdom in righteousness.

The imperial center from which this divine imperialism must unfold and become manifest, must be found in America, the land of Ephraim, where the Lion's whelp, the young Lioness, crouches for the prey of commercial power.

America has produced the fulness of the Gentiles, the man with the science of universal expansion from the microcosm of universal contraction, the vanishing point of the universe in its least form,—the Man, the Logos. He alone can satisfy the longings of every true American patriot who would be as a God to the universe, calling every rod of its fair fields his own, and dominating the seas with the commerce of free men.

Knowledge is power. Knowledge of the truth alone can set man free from the law of sin and death, and make him the heir of the world. The man, whoever he is, black or white, bond or free, who has this knowledge, with power to apply it for the restoration of the life of Jehovah from the grave of mortality, is Apollyon, destroyer of the last enemy, and the Savior of the God-race—Theo-Anthropoi. He is the true Emperor, the legitimate claimant to the throne of America's dominion over all the nations of the earth, the throne which is to unite all states and statesmen in the service of the Most High, the omnipotent spirit of the almighty science of truth, that men for ages to come may walk the green earth in the fulness of its glory,—free and regnant in the royalty of divine righteousness.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE PROBLEMS of colonization are confronting hundreds of experimentalists. Scores of colonies are being founded in various parts of the world, and as many have already failed. The older and more famous attempts at united life have either altogether ceased to exist, or are on the decline. The well-known Brook farm, among whose members were some of the most noted men of America, is now only a matter of history. The Zoar society, the Oneida community, the Harmonite society, the Shakers and others, noted communities which have flourished in the past, are now waning. During the past five years a number of smaller colonies, representing all shades of social discontent and inharmonious elements, have launched frail barks upon the stormy sea of social economy, some to sink, and some to float without compass or sail. The Ruskin colony is now in the throes of revolution, and Equality colony is on the point of dissolution. They cannot strike the chords of harmony, nor find the keys of organic unity. All communities not truly premised, not scientifically founded, not involving the factors of success, must fail. It is admitted by those who oppose colonization, that the communities which have existed longest, and for which the greatest sacrifices have been made, and in which the greatest heroism has been manifest, are those whose members have been bound together by strong religious sentiments. The Shakers and the Harmonites are notable examples; among them has existed a semblance of organic unity, a oneness of purpose and harmony of action; but all such communities must collapse when the forces are exhausted. Colonization as it obtains in the scores of fragmentary movements, will never be a factor in the solution of the great social problems of the hour. Selfishness must be eradicated, not by external means, but by internal processes. The supremest aspirations of humanity are religious; the bond of unity in successful united life is united life, the holding of the substances of life itself in common, and the forces generated in the highest points of conservation must express themselves perfectly in all the external affairs and relations of its people. Koreshanity is the only solution of the problem of the purpose and utility of communism. On the basis of the application of the Messianic law, the supreme law of united life, its colonies succeed, and will continue to succeed, until the light of its Science fills the whole earth!

The world stands amazed and offended at the claims of the Founder of Koreshanity, and readily accepts theories put forth by men who claim as much, but who have not sufficient manhood to openly declare their claims to authority to teach what they term the truth. There are scores of men who think they are Messiahs, but who are afraid to make a positive claim to possession of such function. There is no truth apart from personality. Truth is of no use so long as it is conceived as mere principle. The unity of truth and life in personality empowers the container to perform all the functions of truth and life. Whoever presumes to head a dispensation, necessarily presumes to be the authorized messenger of truth, the true prophet, the Messiah. There are always true and false claimants to divine honor and power. Only one can be true,—only one will succeed. Dr. Herron is endeavoring to baptize the world with the entities of Christian socialism, which he terms the kingdom of Christ. It should be clear to every "Christian" that no one is authorized to establish the kingdom of Christ, but the Christ! The world should ask the founder of Christian socialism for his credentials of authority. The greatest day in the history of the world will be at the crisis of the ages,—when once more Elijah the Prophet enters the contest with the prophets of Baal, and consumes himself in the chariot of fire.

There is a great difference of opinion in the world about what Jesus would do if he were in the earth today. The Union Christian Party thinks he would go to Des Moines, Iowa, on July 4, to attend a convention for the purpose of originating some scheme to defeat the devil by voting only for "Christian" candidates; in fact, it is announced that the Almighty will be there to help arrange matters. Others think that he would be helping to push their little plans of social reform, keeping the leaders in office, and assisting only where the greatest difficulties are encountered. In the churches he might be permitted to preach a few times in the city pulpits while the preachers are away on vacations. He could oversee a few departments of the world, so long as he did not interfere with plans already adopted! A more radical mind expresses, in an exchange, its belief concerning what Jesus would do if he were to attend a city church: "I can see the Prince of Peace and Poverty taking a hurried glance at the great display of finery and feathers, of silks and satins of broadcloth buccaneers! Do you know what I think he would do? Why, I think he would kick the whole hypocritical congregation into the street, blow the God-mocking building at the moon, and then turn on the fireworks. I wish he would do it!"

Labor unions are labor trusts. They are monopolies formed for the purpose of controlling the trades, just as trusts are formed for the purpose of controlling the products of industry. If the laboring men have the right to combine for the purpose of forcing non-union laborers out of employment, corporations have a right to combine to force smaller concerns to abandon the field. The unions fix the wage scales; the trusts fix the prices on goods produced. There is no difference in the principle,—no difference in the results; they both culminate in injustice and despotism. The one is endeavoring to control labor, which is capital, and to dictate who shall work and when; the other is the endeavor to control stolen wealth, and to dictate who shall engage in business. The time has come when those who have not the mark of the beast can neither buy nor sell—and more, they cannot obtain employment in many lines of industry. THE FLAMING SWORD is as much opposed to the labor trusts as it is to the money trusts. They are both abominable perversions of the principles of organic effort in the selfish interests of the trusts, and the industrial clans under the false face of "brotherhood."

It is as easy to cure disease and overcome death as it is to cause these mortal conditions, when once the processes are understood. The laws of death are as inexorable and immutable as the laws of life. Death is not to be overcome by an infinite spirit, but by man. By man came death, and by man also the resurrection must come. The battle of life and death is fought at the end of every dispensation in the human world, and the rewards of victory appropriated for the life and progress of the new age. At the end of the Jewish dispensation, death was overcome in the person of Jesus; and by virtue of his victory, his acquisition of authority and power, he promised his throne "To him that overcometh,"—to another man who should appear at the end of the dispensation. The process of overcoming death is in the application of scientific law to humanity. It is the transformation of human nature, the change from the mortal to the immortal state. The resurrection at the end of the present age must obtain through a rational man. Those who look for the resurrection must also look to the man who is able to achieve the stupendous victory over the mortal world.

Modern reformers cannot harmonize the various movements in the lines of social economy. There is a growing conflict between the elements of colonization and socialism. It is said that colonization is not a factor in the true social system—that it is decidedly anti-socialistic. The principles of colonization and socialism are harmonized in the Koreshan System. The communistic nucleus of the coming great social structure is just as necessary in the order of progress and for the life of the organic whole, as the vitellus is necessary to the egg—just as necessary as the sun is to the physical universe. The communistic nucleus of primitive Christianity constituted the solar sphere of the system. The true social system is as much broader than the colony, as the earth is broader than the sun. The earth surrounds the sun; the social conditions of the primitive church were evolved from the communistic center. The factors of social construction begin in the communistic nucleus. The prime communistic colony of the new age will be a communistic city, the capital of the world, containing the sovereign power of the universe of humanity.

The influence of the modern church is waning; it is rapidly losing its hold on the people. The clergymen are becoming alarmed at the almost wholesale turning away from the church, and are endeavoring to find the cause. The people are growing tired of denominational monotony; the church makes no progress in truth, and contains nothing substantial for the rational mind. The agencies that are breaking the spell are manifold.

We are living in the time of the dissolution of the age, and old forms must perish. There is a drift into agnosticism; confidence in the authority of the clergymen is losing ground. There is a revulsion against the absurd interpretations of the Bible, and a growing repudiation of the creeds. The parks, bicycles, newspapers, and clubs are attractions which the clergymen find antagonistic to their interests. Rev. Dixon, of New York, asserts that he would rather have two rattlesnakes in his home than one Sunday paper. He might exclude papers and common serpents from his home, and yet entertain more dangerous and destructive forces in himself—opposition to truth and progress!

Ingersoll is lecturing on "The Devil." At present, the devil is his stock in trade, and he disposes of his entities to his audiences at high prices; they bring him hundreds of dollars for every exhibition of the various devils which have entered his chamber of cerebrations. The famous agnostic fights the kind of ghostly devils that the modern church endeavors to palm off on the world as real; he fights the mythical gods also. There has never been such a devil nor such a god as Ingersoll and the church talk about. The church is to be blamed for entertaining these absurd misconceptions, and Ingersoll is guilty of being unable to come any nearer the truth than the church! The truth is, the devil is intensely human; and at the present time he is composed of the entire human family. He is all that sensual humanity is, externally and internally. Koreshanity teaches the personality of the devil—natural, tangible personalities. There is nothing mystical nor ghostly about his satanic majesty—he is a startling reality—not in some other world, but here in this one!

"Christian socialism" is a social democracy. It proposes to have a democratic Christ, a democratic God. It looks for no Christ of the future except humanity—"humanity itself will become anointed of God. The humanity that shall become the complete incarnation of the spirit of Christ—that is the future Christ." Herronism overlooks the fact that before humanity can be anointed there must appear a personality to perform the Messianic function of anointing, to prepare the way for the manifestation of the divine kingdom. Thousands of people pretend to be interested in the coming of the new kingdom, the new humanity, but ignore the means through which the kingdom must come. Baptisms come from personalities. Jesus poured out his entire soul, the entire life of Deity, unto humanity, to work the progress of the age; and there cannot obtain another pouring out until another personality likewise dissolves himself in the generation of the divine energies.

A colony can no more be successful without the essential conservation of the substances of life, than an artificial human form can be made to possess human function. Dummy colonies rise and fall; they will never succeed; the vital elements of organic life are wanting. The true communistic relations, the elements necessary to perfect the bonds of peace, harmony, and success, cannot be obtained by any other processes than those in operation nineteen hundred years ago through the man Jesus—by a direct baptism of a communistic nucleus with the actual potencies of conserved life—human energy imparted from the anthropostic dynamo.

There is a persistent, positive force in Koreshanity that is proving to be a mystery to the world. The Koreshan movement progresses with ever-increasing momentum, despite the opposition of its enemies. It cannot be overthrown; its force is irresistible, its truth invulnerable, and its premise impregnable. THE FLAMING SWORD is a source of amazement; expressions of surprise at its unparalleled audacity, positiveness, and fearlessness, are heard on every hand. It is aggressive; it fights everything that is wrong, everything that is fallacious and corrupt. It represents everything that is pure, and teaches everything that is true.

The money gods open and close the doors of the modern church at pleasure; they have mortgages on the clergymen, the people, and the church buildings. The temples of civilization are filled with money changers. The love of money closed the gates of Eden, and it requires a new flaming sword to open them. Over the door of a church in Arizona appear the words, "This is the gate of heaven;" and on the panel of the door, "Closed by order of the American Loan Co." The corporation foreclosed the mortgage on the church, and closed the "gates of heaven" to increase its profits.

Only the true solution of the problem of life can enable humanity to think right and do right. The Guiding Star alone can lead the world to its destiny. Humanity needs a leader, a positive mind, with positive claims, with positive truth; it needs the new Christ, the new Napoleon, the new Washington, the new Lincoln, the new Hero, to lead the world to victory over death and oppression!

Individualism is the inevitable result of the breaking up of the old order of the world, the end of the old cycle of human life. It allows every man to go off on a tangent of his own. The great body of humanity is passing into dissolution. Social cohesion is destroyed; the economic structure is crumbling, and the foundation is sinking in the quicksands of ignorance.

It is significant that the end of the present dispensation, the time of the harvest of the age, should be marked by harvesters and reapers in the agricultural world. In the beginning of the dispensation the Sower went forth to sow. The field is the world, the age is the season of regeneration, and the end of the dispensation is the harvest.

The fact that the nations are dreaming of peace is proof that the dark night is not yet passed. In the waking, the corrupt sleepers will experience a terrible nightmare, a tangible reflex of all the oppression that has been heaped upon the people for ages; the nations must awake in the throes of revolution.

All truth is more essential than merely a part of it. There are no truths that are non-essential in the great, all-comprehensive System of Koreshan Universology.

Superstition is the devil's view of the character and works of the Almighty, the fallacious conceptions of ignorance concerning the relations of God and man.

The language of symbolism is the language of Deity. The universe can be understood only in the light of the mind of its perpetual cause.

The money power has transformed the "land of the free and the home of the brave," to a land of bondage and the home of moral cowards.

A remarkable transformation occurred when the Almighty's footstool was throne out in the space of the Copernican universe.

Panics succeed waves of prosperity; stimulation and reaction are alternate stages in the competitive world.

The competitive world believes in advertising; it enables the man to get the ad-vantage of his neighbor.

The laws of a nation are made in the capital; the primary capital of the United States is money.

Truth comes without money and without price; but it costs a great deal to get it.

The infernal regions are the internal regions of modern humanity.

The Eve of every dispensation must be accompanied by an Adam.

There are a number of striking features about labor-unionism.

Koreshanity is the true mental photograph of the universe.

The modern church is a lost cause and a vanishing effect!

The devil is the greatest fraud in the universe.

Must One Enter the Koreshan Ecclesia?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I am much interested in your reply under the head of "Severing Mortal Relations for Immortality," in a recent issue of THE FLAMING SWORD. You do not answer one part of the first question directly: must one enter the Ecclesia? I will concede the truth of all you have said, but at the present state of affairs, are not some doing their full duty by remaining with their families, and giving the Koreshan cause financial and other aid which they are able to do under the circumstances?—granting of course, that they are living consistent lives. Is it not necessary for some to be on the skirmish line and keep the central organization in touch with the world? There are times when it requires courage and fortitude to remain on the lonely picket line when there are fortifications within reach. Then there is another question which comes to one when thinking of joining your organization: Is it possible for all who see the force and truth of Koreshan Science to attain to immortality? If not, what need or use for them in the Ecclesia? Then again, how is each to know beyond a doubt what is best for him to do?—Reader.

Nineteen hundred years ago, Jesus founded the primitive Christian system; he began by teaching and disciplining a group of people who submitted themselves to him as their leader and teacher. He prepared a central nucleus for the promulgation of his gospel; he taught the necessity of forsaking all to follow him, of leaving all to obey the truth. Those whom he disciplined were his disciples. He formed a battery of human minds negative to his positive will; he formed the solar nucleus of the anthropotic world for the Christian dispensation. The work of selecting and training minds receptive to His truth covered a period of years; in the meantime, he and his work were supported by friends and sympathizers. They assisted in the direction of their sympathies; they did their duty so far as they could see it, while the work of development of the central order was in progress; but it was not their full duty, because their full duty was prescribed in the declaration of the two fundamental Messianic laws: Love of the Messianic pole with all the heart, might, and mind, and the neighbor as one's self.

After the formation of the central nucleus,—the head and shoulders of the system, it was necessary to find material for the construction of the entire body. The crisis came when the Teacher precipitated himself into his disciples; those who had followed him during the time of his personal work, obtained the greatest measure and degrees of life and honor; after that, it was every man in his order, and many who had not left all at first, left all at last, and began to fulfil the law in themselves, and the substances of divine life were received by thousands.

We are living in parallel times; the work of construction of the new human battery is in progress; the laws of life are enunciated. The present promulgation of the truth is for the purpose of calling out from the world, minds who will submit to its demands, and thereby know what is best for them to do. In the central group, there obtains a necessary system of disciplining—only those who are disciplined are truly disciples. One of the first requirements of discipleship is to leave all—sever all mortal ties. It is a process of testing in many ways, a natural adjustment and selection. Some will not endure; every movement gathers up those who turn back; Jesus found those “who walked no more with him.” They are necessary to the Koreshan movement—they take away mental refuse, and elements of discontent follow them out.

There is no other way of attaining immortality than that of absolute obedience to the laws of life; if it be admitted that Koreshanity reveals what those laws are, and how to obey them and make a personal, practical application of them, then it is admitted that its methods are processes of fulfilment of law, and necessary to the attainment of immortality. Its orders, societies, and homes are institutions of united life, communistic institutions for practical obedience to the laws of life to God and the neighbor. If we say that it is absolutely necessary for all desiring to enter life, to pass through the institutions which the truth of Koreshanity prescribes, we are consistent and true to the principles of the System.

If the reward of each person obtains according to the measure of obedience, or rather according to the aspiration, the ideal, of each, it remains that those who respond to the call in the formation of the central cells of the battery will be accordingly emplaced in the highest plane of life, if true to all the processes of overcoming sensuality and death. The Koreshan homes are established for the purpose of determining the fitness of each member for specific duties in the promulgation and support of the System, when the organization is completed in all its details. All those who aspire to reach the central orders of life of the new age, must submit to all of the demands of truth and requirements of the laws of life; the law must be fulfilled at the end of this dispensation as it was fulfilled nineteen hundred years ago. Those who are faithful on the skirmish lines will receive the degree of life which they merit, the qualities of life which they are capable of attracting, when the substances emanate from the Messianic center. Thousands must make up the circumference of the Solar sphere; thence all planes of the New Kingdom sufficient to make complete the universe of divine activity.

Where Are the Billions Who have Died in the Past?

(1) In Koreshan literature I read: “For the spirit of the mortal body is as mortal as the body eliminating it.” Now, if the spirit dies with the body, what will become of all the masses that have died in sensualism, on the day of the resurrection? (2) Are there any Koreshan societies in California?—C. B., Benicia, Cal.

The church pretends to believe that the soul and spirit of a man go to heaven or hell—away off in space somewhere; the Spiritualists think that the spirits of the dead float about in the earth’s atmosphere, while the Adventists hold that there is no more of man until the resurrection. All these views accord man only one lifetime; and of course, the places where they go are becoming fuller all the time, while some unknown reservoir is constantly being drawn upon for the creation of new beings never having existed before; what they are created from, is a mystery to people who hold to the popular absurdities. It is a lamentable fact that the world has degenerated so far as to be lost in utter ignorance of its origin and destiny!

The spirit and soul do not die when the mortal dissolution occurs; they are eliminated from the body, and enter the spiritual world,—the interior mind of humanity. After a time, there is a dissolution or separation of soul and spirit, and a return to the natural world. All of the dead that have ever lived in the past are in the world today; the dead are in the living. The great stream of sensualism is supplied from the entities of those who have died, endeavoring to get back into the natural world. Common human generation is the only channel through which mortal spirits can return to the natural state, and common death is the only way for mortal human beings to get into the spiritual world. Thoughts are spiritual entities; all of the thoughts of mortal humanity are entities or spirits of men who have died. Present mortal men are truly sepulchers, the tombs out of which the resurrection is to take place through natural, scientific processes.

The mortal man gets into the natural world from the great reservoir of human life which is constantly being supplied through the specific relations of the natural and spiritual worlds. You can see right here in this world, what becomes of those who have died in sensualism; the present world is their fate,—they come back again and again, until the ego completes its career in long series of embodiments, and then he is resurrected into the immortal plane; the process of putting on immortality is to be accomplished in this world, by a natural, scientific process,—the process of overcoming death by rational means. The Koreshan Science of embodiment solves the problems of death and resurrection. Have you not read “Reincarnation,” “The Identification of Israel,” “Koreshan Science,” etc.?

Why Doesn't God Kill the Devil?

If all things are possible with God, why does he not kill the devil? Who made the devil, and why? Why did God make hell, and why does he not blot it out of existence?—Reader.

The Almighty does not kill the devil, because the devil is a necessity; and because he is a necessity, it is impossible for God to kill him. All possible things are possible with the highest pivot of power of the universe, but impossible things are not possible of accomplishment. If the devil could not exist, it would be impossible for God to exist. The immutable, universal law of opposites demands the two extreme poles of mental activity. There could be no life without death, no light without darkness; there must be heat and cold, up and down, levity and gravity, good and evil, God and devil. The Almighty does not desire to destroy the devil, because the processes would involve the destruction of himself. The south pole of the physical universe is just as necessary as the north pole, and the dark side of the sun performs functions as necessary to the maintenance of the universe as those performed by the light side.

God possesses voluntary and involuntary powers of creation. He creates good voluntarily; the involuntary reflex of the exercise of his will in voluntary action, creates evil. It is impossible for a man to generate a good thought without generating its reflex, its opposite,—an evil thought. The very laws that perpetuate the being and existence of supreme good, also perpetuate evil. Hell is as necessary as heaven; hell is but the precipitate of the mental activities in the mind of the Almighty.

The laws of the progress of life and development of God Almighty and the human race, provide for the conversion of groups of devils at the end of every dispensation. The same laws also provide for the descent of life from heaven to hell. The very inherent principles of being necessitate the existence of the soil of hell for the implantation of the divine seed for the purpose of regeneration of the life sown. Jesus was the divine seed; he was sown in mortal humanity, that he might not only perpetuate divine life through the sowing of the seed of that life, but also to save the human beings in which the seed was sown. Seed in the soil enters a state of death and corruption; Jesus entered the corruption of humanity, crossed himself with the mortal world—entered the human hells, for the purpose of saving all of the progressive entities of the universe.

You see, there are mysteries of Godliness and mysteries of iniquity that the church has never dreamed of; the perverted philosophy of the creeds, with the gross conceptions of the relations of God, man, and the devil, is sheer absurdity; and agnostics spend their time in combating myths without endeavoring to supply the mind with something substantial and rational concerning the laws of being and existence. Both God and the devil are human; they are antithetical poles, and the one is absolutely necessary to the existence of the other. God, humanity, devil, and hell are eternal; they have always been, and will always be.

The Baptist Flag and the Flaming Sword.

If the Baptist Church is the Church of God, What Church Has Apostatized?

There is nothing existing in the abstract; if the Christian church has fallen, Christianity has fallen. There can be no Christianity apart from the people who confess it; and if it does not exist in the organization which has come down through apostasy from the original and primitive form, who has authority to institute and form Christian chaos of Protestantism?—FLAMING SWORD.

It is a fact that there is no Christianity apart from the people who profess it, and the vision of a "church" that has come down through the ages, in an "invisible" form, is the figment of a dream. Churches exist as organizations, and are not called churches in their scattered, non-organized form. God's Word never commits the blunder of calling a loose, ephemeral, visionary, nondescript, indiscriminate, unorganized, imaginary multitude of spirit experiences, or influences—a church! And it is equally absurd to talk of the "chaos of Protestantism" as a church. Churches have common grounds of faith, a bond of fellowship, a similar preparation of heart, agreement in doctrine, uniformity in practice, perpetuity in organization, and visibility of existence. Baptists are the only people in existence who can lay claims to such essential characteristics, and maintain such claims against all comers and goers. Baptist churches are Christ's churches, and do not have to turn aside to any organization on earth, whether new or old, to ask help in the valid administration of all the services of a church of Christ. That is one reason we are so unflinchingly a Baptist.—Baptist Flag.

The Flag and the Doctrinal Millstone; The Sword Looks Through the "Eye!"

Comparatively few of our readers know anything about Koreshanity. It is a new religion, if it can be called a religion at all. We give below some vague, opaque, obtuse definitions of the doctrine of the resurrection as believed by this dreamy, phantasmal, impractical, ethereal religion. If our readers can understand what the thing is they deserve credit for seeing as far into the millstone as the man who pecks it. Please read these two short extracts, then scratch your head and think a little before you look up to the stars as the graveyard of the universe.

The astronomical field is the burial place of the dead, because the stars constitute the focal points of the convergence of all physical energy. This energy passes on the converging currents of electro-magnetic conspiracy, to the focal stellar point to which it belongs, under the inexorable and inevitable law of astro-biology. Hence some particular star or constellation receives the energy of the remaining form of the man, after the primary spirit has left its tenement.—FLAMING SWORD.

Behold, ye star gazers, and wonder and perish, for those twinkling "focal points" are but serviceable as "converging points of all energy" and the "burial place of the dead." Our curiosity is aroused to know how KORESH found out all of this wonderful "law of astro-biology." Who has revealed this new doctrine to him? What star gazer has been able to see the concentration of energy, and the conspiracy of electro-magnetic currents to those focal stellar points? May be this is the "invisible church." Can the Argus tell us if it is?—Baptist Flag.

Philosophy of the Heathen.

"As I understand it," said the heathen, "you propose to civilize me."

"Exactly so."

"You mean to get me out of habits of idleness and teach me to work."

"That is the idea."

"And then lead me to simplify my methods and invent things to make my work lighter."

"Yes."

"And next I will become ambitious to get rich, so that I won't have to work at all."

"Very likely."

"Well, what's the use of taking such a roundabout way of getting just where I started? I don't have to work now."—Ex.

The Christ Has Come!

The Poet Pays Tribute to the Man of the Hour, the Social Architect of the New Age.

He comes with power; His white, unfearing face

Shines through the social passion of the race.

He comes to frame the freedom of the Law,
To touch these men of Earth
With a feeling of life's oneness and its worth,

A feeling of its mystery and awe.

And when he comes into the world gone wrong,

He will rebuild her beauty with a song.
To every heart he will its own dream be;
One moon has many phantoms in the sea.
Out of the North the Norns will cry to men:

"Bolder, the Beautiful has come again!"
The flutes of Greece will whisper from the dead:

"Apollo has unveiled his sunbright head!"

The stones of Thebes and Memphis will find voice:

"Osiris come; O tribes of time, rejoice!"
And social Architects who build the State,
Serving the Dream at citadel and gate,
Will hail Him coming through the labor hum.

And glad, quick cries will go from man to man,

"Lo, He has come, our Christ, the Artisan—
The King who loved the lilies, He has come!"

He will arrive, our Counsellor and Chief,
And with bleak faces lighted up will come
The earth-worn mothers from their martyrdom

To tell him of their grief;
And glad girls caroling from field and town
Will go to meet Him with the labor crown,
The new crown woven of the heading wheat,

And men will sit down at his sacred feet;
And he will say—the King—

"Rome, let us live the poetry we sing!
And these, His burning words will break the ban—

Words that will grow to be,
On continent or sea,
The rallying cry of man.

He comes to make the long injustice right—

Comes to push back the shadow of the night,

The gray Tradition full of flint and flaw—
Comes to wipe out the insults to the soul.
The insults of the few against the whole,
The insults we make righteous with a law.

Yea, He will bear the safety of a State,
For in His still and rhythmic steps will be
The power and music of Alcione,
Who holds the swift heavens in their starry fate.

Yea, He will lay on souls the power of Peace,
And send on kingdoms torn the sense of home—
More than the fire of joy that burned on Greece,
More than the light of law that rose on Rome.

Industrial Co-Operative Union of America.

Mr. W. R. Wallace Describes Koreshan Industrial Institutions in an English Journal.

The I. C. U. is the outer expression or circumference of the Koreshan Unity; its purposes are what the name indicates,—the employment of every class of people in every trade, industry, and profession, on the basis of equitable production and distribution.

We have made some progress along the line of development so far, having established several industries through the capitalizing of the labor of a few earnest people devoted to the cause of humanity, and held in a bond of unity for a purpose divine.

We have some thirty Communist Co-operators and fifty Co-operators on the wage basis, employed in the production and distribution of brooms, brushes, whisks, etc. We have a wholesale and retail bakery and public restaurant, also a dining hall, a grocery store, a meat market, and a printing office.

The central body of Koreshans (Communists) is located outside the city, on land they use. There is, besides, a colony of the same kind in Lee Co., Florida. All are a part of the Koreshan System.

Of course you are already aware that the social problem, while it is in the main the same universally, yet has its peculiar difficulties in each country.

America is now the stamping ground for all the pet reform schemes of the universe, while the old Church and State continue their prostitution of life and liberty with greater acceleration day by day.

We as Koreshans believe that in order to institute a true system to supplant the now universally corrupted life of man, we must take into account the laws of organic unity, and from that as a basis we have determined the universe to have a limited and knowable form; and given a knowledge of its form and function, we are enabled to construct that Kingdom in the earth with man (the product of all the energies of the universe), as prophesied by Him who came to make all things new.—Brotherhood, London.

The Koreshan University.

The Educational System of the Koreshan Unity in Practical Operation, Chartered under the Laws of the State of Illinois.

The Koreshan University System embraces a curriculum founded upon the Koreshan Cosmogony as its primary basis. Every great system of religion ever presented to the world has been predicated upon a cosmogony, and the religious conviction has conformed to the astronomical calculus. The radical difference between the Koreshan and the ordinary system and method of cult, is the fact that the Koreshan method invites the mind to think, while the ordinary scholastic plan is to cram the mind with the effete accumulations of the dark ages and the thoughts of empires.

Members of the Koreshan Institutions are students and disciples in the only genuinely scientific University in all the world; it is the only institution where Universology is taught. It teaches the quintessence of all the branches represented, segregated, and perverted in the thousands of modern institutions of learning. Address for particulars, REV. E. M. CASTLE, University System, Estero, Lee Co., Fla.; or PROF. U. G. MORROW, 314 W. Sixty-Third Street, Chicago, Ill.

The Society Arch-Triumphant.

The Secular System of the Koreshan Unity, the Avenue of Entrance Into the Koreshan Institutions.

The Society Arch-Triumphant, in its relation to the outside world, promotes interest in the Koreshan Science. The Society consists of three general orders: The first, Celibate and Communitic; second, Marital; third, the Investigative Court of the Society. Through this Society, prospective members must be introduced to other features and departments of the System.

The Outer Court is designed for those who desire simply to Investigate Koreshanity; it imposes no obligations whatever, except nominal dues. No matter where you are you can be a member of the Society, and make rapid progress in the settlement of the questions at issue in your own mind.

The advantages are: sympathy, helpful suggestions in the study of Koreshanity, answers to questions, correspondence, and encouragement in moral and religious aspiration. Address for further information, BERTHALDINE MATRONA, President, W. 99th Street and Oak Ave.; or MRS. V. H. ANDREWS, Secretary, 6310 Harvard Ave., Chicago, Ill.

copyright in publishing a half-tone reproduction of Mrs Eddy's photograph! The Christian science leader remains significantly silent, and the Arena suggests that Mrs. Eddy cannot complain if the public concludes that the charges made against her are unanswerable. The June number contains an excellent contribution from Helen H. Gardner on the Queen Bee and Her Subjects, of special interest to all Koreshaus from the fact that the article presents a clear view of the imperialism of the beehive; we are much pleased with it. Its study would be a valuable adjunct to the study of the several phases of imperialism discussed in this issue of THE FLAMING SWORD. Other prominent features of the June Arena are: a Japanese View of Kipling, Municipal Expansion, the Genesis of Action, a Word for the Mormons, Woman's Economic Status in the South, Imperialism in our Colleges, also a number of other excellent contributions. The Arena is a first-class monthly review of social advance, and has a wide circulation among progressive readers in the English speaking world.

The Saturday Evening Post.—The issue of June 3 contains the first installment of Ian Maclaren's "A Scot's Grammar School," and is highly appreciated by all literary admirers of the Scottish author; the second part will appear July 1. The issue before us contains the third part of Robert Barr's Travels and Troubles in the Orient, in which he narrates many interesting experiences with Turkish officials on the shores of the Mediterranean; the Work of a Modern City, a view of the progress of Boston; Public occurrences that are Making History; Men and Women of the Hour, and the Making of a Merchantman, the first of three practical papers by H. N. Higginbotham, prominently connected with the firm of Marshall Field & Co., Chicago. In the Grip of the Tsar, is an excellent story of Russian Nihilism. In the next issue Mrs. Burton Harrison's serial begins, The Circle of the Century, a romance of New York City, and promises to be something excellent in high class literature.

The World's Crisis.

There is the stupendous, incontrovertible fact that in the culmination of the competitive system in monopoly, a point has been reached where increasing crime, debauched morals, and the growing poverty and wretchedness of the people will render a continuance of the system impossible. In this great change that is now impending, not only will the classes and the masses meet in a life and death struggle, but as the great wave of western civilization sweeps round the point whence it started, and the East becomes the battle scene of the warring nations of the world, then will also begin the colossal strife that will change not only domestic institutions, but the map of the world. And this world crisis, this dying old age and dawning new one, this shaking of thrones, principalities, and powers, marks the beginning of that august period known as the second coming of Christ.—Inogen C. Fales, in Arena.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 3 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Whole No. 341

The Farce of the Peace Congress.

World-wide Revolution Must Precede Universal Peace; the Age Culminates in Devastation; Peace Obtains Through Restoration of the Divine Brotherhood.

THERE IS a great effort on the part of an ignorant class, to deceive themselves and the world regarding the closing events of the Christian dispensation. This effort has resulted in the farce now being enacted at the Hague. From the present status of the international conference, it appears that there will be adopted a scheme of arbitration from which any disaffected party to a decision of the arbitration board may dissent. The conference at the Hague will disperse with nothing binding accomplished, as bearing upon final results. The question of disarmament is not even a minor theme for consideration.

The heart of man is utterly corrupt. The love of money is the dominant desire, both with individuals and with nations; and the stirring impulse to this greatest travesty (the peace conference) is commercial greed and speculation. Every noblesoul yearns for the triumphal day, the day of rest and peace, wherein lives made immaculate through the virtues of inherent Godhood, regenerated from Christ the Lord, shall rejoice in their deliverance.

The peace conference at the Hague was instigated by a representative national pirate, whose ambition falls not short of a desire to dominate the entire world. The Tsar of Russia is the vicar of the Almighty in the earth. He has the advantage of the Leonine plenipotentiary of Jehovah, in that he unites the secular with the ecclesiastical authority. These two are rival claimants to universal supremacy. Kaiser Wilhelm is not without his ambitious claim to the title of "King of kings." "Me und Gott," is about the size of his aspirations. While they talk of peace at this farcical convention, they are all hustling their preparations for war,—every distrustful dog of them. There will be no peace until God finds his dwelling-place in the restored temple of a divine brotherhood; no peace while the commercial greed of the peoples of the world fosters, for mercantile purposes, the destructive creations of human avarice.

As long as individuals and corporations invent, and nations foster the schemes of the avaricious for destroying men by processes ten thousand-fold more disastrous than war, so long may we harbor the sentiment, that "the end is not yet." Many of the chief resources of national treasuries—resources fostered by all nations, rum, tobacco, opium, the prime causes of human viciousness—will not, be encouraged by peoples whose hearts desire that peace which can come only from the nations in whom the God of goodness and truth resides.

There comes the final great struggle for supremacy,—the battles of Gog and Magog, and of Armageddon. The age will culminate in a devastation beside which all others pale to insignificance. Catastrophe will mark the closing scenes of the recidivating age; peace will come after destruction.

Thought Impulsers.

The Flaming Sword Does Not Contradict Itself.

A PARTY in Washington, D. C., seems to be troubled over what she imagines to be a discrepancy of statement in THE SWORD. She thinks the statement that the Lord Christ consummated a twenty-four thousand year period, conflicts with the statement that we are now consummating a twenty-four thousand year period. If we go back twenty-four thousand years from the time of the Lord, we strike a period corresponding to that time. We are now coming to the period in which are manifest the sons of God. If we go back twenty-four thousand years from now, we strike a period corresponding to the period now at hand. Therefore, we are unable to discover any contradiction in the two statements.

Twenty-four thousand years is twenty-four thousand years, beginning at any chronological point, and ending correspondingly. The manifestation of the sons of God—the fruitage of the Piscatorial age, is an event of no ordinary importance. While it does not terminate a cycle represented by the individual and personal Lord, it does terminate and begin a cycle of its own, necessarily equal to that of the manifestation of the personal Jehovah.

Tesla Fails to Materialize His "Wonders."

NICOLA TESLA is a wonderful man. He has been advertising for a number of years the great things he is about to accomplish, but up to date he has not performed one act which should entitle him to public notice. He is going to build a tower on the summit of Pike's Peak, and "propagate electrical disturbance without wires;"—he hasn't done it yet. "I hope to be able," he says, "to send a message from New York to Paris." He should build a mountain in mid ocean and another on the moon, and the thing is accomplished. It is as easy as rolling off a log. Why! the star Aleyone transmits its light and electricity to our little earth, so many myriads of miles that no astronomer has ever attempted to estimate the distance, and this is through mid air, and so far it has been done without wires, even before Nicola was heard of; and why shouldn't he copy after the electrical formula of the people up in the Pleiades? Wireless telegraphy is not a remote but a proximate possibility; but it can be accomplished without Pike's Peak. When the transmission of intelligence and power is performed, it will be done by simple processes and instruments, and on very different lines from those now proposed by the various experimentalists who are on the wrong track.

Manifestations of Deity in Humanity.

The Advent of the Almighty into the Natural World Nineteen Hundred Years Ago; Numberless Incarnations in Past Ages; Certainty of His Return.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

SOME stupendous event must have occurred nineteen hundred years ago, to cause the world—among other marvelous things—to change its whole system of time-marking, and produce uniformity in what was known as the civilized world, where before there was variety. The infidel or lying spirit that undertakes to affirm that there was no such thing as the "year of our Lord," is in duty bound to explain the origin of this new date, and state why it was called the year of the Lord, and not of some other being or event. Until he does so, satisfactorily, the world is justified in believing that that date marks the time of the most remarkable event for man, that has taken place in history. The events that have followed, and will follow that birth, fully justify the prophet Isaiah's description of the person born:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government [of the world] shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, [not simply the Son of God] the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.

Observe that the passage does not say, has performed, but, "will perform this." Nor is it yet performed, nor will it be until the Prince of Peace has brought peace to the earth, causing swords to be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning-hooks; when men shall learn war no more,—that which they are now most careful to learn, of all things. The Christian dispensation is the age of the church militant—the church at war. It will be succeeded by the age of the Church Triumphant,—the reign of righteousness, and peace, and good will to men, here in earth.

As we have stated in a former article, Jesus himself said his kingdom of righteousness would not be established in earth until the end of the Christian age, as the seed of it—which he was, and which he sowed in humanity as Holy Ghost, after his translation—would not have its harvest until that time. When John was in the spirit, that is, in the spiritual world, where there is no time, he saw this Lord of hosts as the rider on the white horse, the mighty champion of purity in all things, having the new name of God, which Jesus had in the beginning of that age (which name no one knew but himself): "And he had on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS."

What does He himself say about having been on earth before, and about coming again? He said, "Before Abraham was, I am;" and he said to the Jews, "It is my Father that honoreth me; of whom ye say that he is your God." "Now the Lord is that Spirit" that shone in the face of Moses so intensely that the Israelites fled and would not come near enough to him to hear what he said, until he put a vail on his face; and today the Jews, when the Old Testament is read, "have a vail on their hearts;"—do not know that he whom they profess to worship as God, was the Spirit that was in Moses as the God whom the real Christian worships, the same Spirit that was the personality in Jesus. This was very clearly shown in the transfiguration on the Mount.

Both of the New Testament writers who describe this event, say that not only the face, but even the garments (symbolizing the purified flesh of Jesus), shone with exceeding brightness, and Moses and Elias appeared talking with Jesus. This whole scene, including Moses and Elias, was the result of the metamorphosis, changed form, of Jesus, in the common version called transfiguration, and was the fulfilment of the words of Jesus, recorded just before, in which he said that there were some standing there who should not taste of death until they saw the Son of man coming in his kingdom. Jesus was the reincarnation of Elijah and Moses, hence they were in him; and when his form was changed, they stood forth. We see, then, that he had been on the earth before, thus fulfilling the words of the wise man who declares that "The thing that hath been, is that which shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun."

Will the Lord Come Again?

There was no more certain expectation to the early Christian, than that Christ would come again on the earth;—and his own words fully justified such expectation. As in their times Adam, and Elijah, and Moses, and Jesus were new names of God, so when he comes again he will have a new name, and will not be recognized, as they were not; "will come to his own, and his own will not receive him;" "will come as a thief in the night."

The events of the Bible, while literal events, were symbols of events to come. The disciples had before asked Him what should be the sign of his coming again, and of the end of the world—age. He said to two disciples, on the occasion of his last passover: "Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water." John saw the city. "I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." City, in symbol, means doctrine; first, the person in whom it comes to the world. Jesus was the bridegroom, who had the bride in him, who came down from heaven in the end of the Jewish age. It was long subsequent to that, that John saw—in the end of the Christian age—the holy city, New Jerusalem, come down from heaven.

As the bride came down before in the bridegroom, and that bridegroom was the Lord, so when the holy city, the doctrine of a new age, comes down from heaven again as a bride, it must come in the bridegroom, who is the Lord. The man with a pitcher of water, is the symbol which determines the time of the coming of the holy city, or new doctrine. Pisces was the sign in the physical heavens when Jesus came. We are now come to the time when Aquarius, the man with the pitcher of water, has become the sign in the physical heavens. Water symbolizes truth,—the true doctrine. He must then have arrived, in the world's history, at the time indicated by the words of Jesus the Lord, as the time of his coming again with the new name of God, to establish his kingdom in earth. We say, then, without any hesitation, that the Lord has come into the earth as a man many times in the past; is now come again, and will come numberless times in the future, because there is a law and a recurrent, absolute need of his coming.

The Emancipation of Woman.

Effect of the Great Volume of Conserved Forces of Koreshanity Upon Humanity; Movements in the Direction of Chastity; Spirit of Purity Impulsing the World of Woman.

BERTHA LDINE, MATRONA.

"WHY FEWER Women Marry," is the heading of a recent Chicago Tribune editorial. It is needless to say that the explanations offered are extremely superficial; but the query suggests the ripeness of the time for the transmission of the energies of scientific doctrine, in response to it. The testimony of the secular press, to the fact that the forces of chastity and celibacy are operative in the minds of many of the most capable and cultured young women of the progressive Anglo-Saxon race, is an encouragement to the celibate sphere of the Koreshan System, at the center of which these forces are generated to serve for the salvation of the divine humanity. That this conservation of sex energy should be, it is rational to expect; yet we all like to enjoy—through the exercise of our exoteric powers—the manifest results of applied science.

The divine will of the Almighty has been operative in the natural world, in obedience to science, for thirty years, in the service of the principles of chastity and celibacy. The results of this service are becoming manifest in many ways. The growing indisposition of the intellectual classes of women to marry, is one pronounced effect; and the greatly increasing number of intellectual, self-sustaining women is another. The Almighty is utilizing, in the hells, all manner of conscious and unconscious instrumentalities, to secure these results.

The general awakening to the science of truth, concerning chastity, and celibacy, is not far distant. The preparations for the organization of the White Horse Army, by the Rider on the White Horse, go rapidly on. Thousands of young women are already so alive to the sanctity of their personal rights as women, that they cannot yield even to the instincts of their natural maternity, until the true science of a more perfected physical organism is known and revered. These women are being moved upon, whether they know it or not, by the Holy Spirit of the divine Maternity, to shrink from giving themselves over—body, soul, and spirit—to be subjected to legalized abuses by the base, lustful instincts of the animal man, and to have their destinies, as women and mothers, ruled by the lusts of the flesh, which are aroused without limit by such self-surrender as marriage vows entail in man in his besotted ignorance of the laws of life and immortality, and consequent irreverence for the sacred functions of maternity.

It is for the young woman of the present generation, who has aspirations for divine wholeness, to draw the sacred circle of the science of truth around her, and to say devoutly: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord with gladness and singleness of heart;" thus debarring herself from every man lacking clean hands and a pure heart, and constituting her body a temple dedicated to that holy spirit of motherhood, with eyes too pure to behold iniquity with other than the frown of righteous condemnation.

The lusts of the flesh have reached their final judgment day. "Thus far and no farther," is the judgment of the Sign at the limit line of the age of Pisces, the age of mortal proliferation. In this age, all the hidden things of the sinful hells have been revealed in the mortal forms of sinful men. Every hideous, purient entity has found its symbolic language in multiform human diseases and deformities, in bodies of corruption conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity.

The great leprous man of universal sinfulness is about to have the blinding cataract of universal ignorance removed from his moral eyes, by the Great Physician and Surgeon of the Almighty; and with vision cleared to behold the heavenly hosts of God's Israel, he will take kindly to the sackcloth and ashes of works meet for repentance, and cry, unclean, unclean, oh wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death.

The glistening garments of the science of truth, are soon to be worn by a sanctified womanhood of God's own choosing; and in the divinity of the divine Motherhood of the New Jerusalem, the bride of Christ, woman will stand forth to bless the race and races yet unborn, with the science of chastity. The truths taught by THE FLAMING SWORD are to become to the minds of thousands of men and women, the cleansing fires of the Almighty. These truths will go forth by agencies seen and unseen, to purge the world of its iniquities. The soul of woman is matured for the divine ripening of the personified Spirit of Truth; it will find its fruitage in the glorified Tree of Life.

The Koreshan woman, called of God to the apostleship of the doctrine of purification, bears in her hand the proclamation of the Almighty, the Rider on the White Horse, to all women who desire the righteousness of the Lord Christ to cleanse their hearts from the lust of the flesh, to bow before that chaste virgin who sits enthroned in the heart of the King of kings, who is in adoration only of that love without dissimulation, too pure to behold iniquity, but upon whom is laid the sin of the whole world.

It is the determinate purpose of THE FLAMING SWORD, to continuously sound in the ears of every member of the body of Christ, now deformed and debased by the sins of this present evil world, the doctrines of purification. It shall impulse them to true re-formation by the presentation of the science of the laws of life and immortality, to cut off—by the mighty energies of a will wholly surrendered to the service of the almighty, cleansing, renewing truth—the descent into the functional operations of the sensual flesh, of those energies which, conserved and polarized as intense aspirations for divine being, will effect the salvation of our God, Jehovah, who was sown in our mortal corruption, to be raised in incorruption. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, said the Lord Jesus, shall draw all men unto me. Jehovah, the flesh or living Word of God, was given for the life of the world, by his obedience to the law of the cross, after he had, in type, come forth from the tomb of Joseph, symbol of the Gentile humanity, the progeny of Joseph in which the seed of God was sown by the theocrasis of Jehovah after his resuscitation from the sepulcher of Joseph of Arimathea.

When the Lord Jesus emerged from the tomb, women first heralded the glad tidings of his reappearance. They were women whose supreme love he was; women who forsook their sins, and who, in contrition and adoration, could bathe his feet with their tears and wipe them with the hair of their heads; they were women who were pure in heart, for they were able to behold Deity in the person of the Nazarene. The Spirit of that same Lord Jehovah has moved upon the face of the waters,—upon the multitudes of peoples, nations, and tongues who once named his name, Jehovah,—and a Beast, the animal life of Deity, is rising out of the sea.

The almighty Spirit of Truth is awaking the life—the love, of Jehovah in the race, and the voice of the Beast is the voice of a Man; and although it is yet dark in God's Garden, where the Lord lay, the Marys of God's sabbath of rest, touched by the spirit of the motherhood of a divine age, golden with the glory of God, his benignant, regnant Maternity, have been searching the place where the Lord lay, to do honor to his name. They have heard his voice and have answered, Rabboni. To the women who have a hearing ear and an understanding heart, God's voice will speak the science of the resurrection life in his own image and likeness. Those accounted worthy to attain this resurrection, neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels, the holy ones whose polarity is in the Lord, their Guiding Star to true virginity of being, the divine sonship—bride and bridegroom—united in the flesh of Jehovah, immortal and incorruptible.

The gospel of the kingdom shall be preached, and great shall be the company of women that shall publish it. God hides his treasures in earthen vessels, and thousands are preparing themselves, and are being prepared, to be set apart for the Master's use. It is for Koreshan women to lead in the way marked out by the Rider upon the White Horse, who, ascending from the sea of humanity, shall ascend to the throne of universal, arch-natural empire. In ascending, he shall nevertheless fall backward as the progressive spirit of a new race, created by the subjection of the descending energies of the flesh to the mighty science of truth, which shall teach man to reverence woman as the glory of his true manhood, and woman to honor man as the lord of that household of faith in God, which maketh her not ashamed of her maternity, but delighteth in that supreme will of God,—his name Jehovah. This is the most sacred name in the realm of Nature, the name by which God is known as perfect Man, and perfect Man as God. Into the temple of his flesh nothing can enter that defileth:—"Without are dogs [the scavengers of uncleanness], and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

The kingdom of heaven is likened unto ten virgins, wise and foolish in one kingdom,—the heaven of the present dispensation, where there is war,—and it is a war for the final victory of life over death. "I saw [said John], heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True; * * * and the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses." The wise, the anointed with holy oil, understand that white is the language of chastity, and that the white horse signifies the restraints and adjustments of commerce. The central domain of commerce, is that of sex relations. The science of the laws of life and immortality, is to exercise restraining power over the sex energies of the race, and to polarize and transform them in the crucible of the anthropostic cosmos, where they are transmutable to that hidden manna which if a man eat he shall live forever. This hidden manna is the holy spirit of the Messianic center, the real flaming sword, the product of theocrasis. The Lord Jesus said, "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood, ye have no life in you."
