The Messianic center or Sun of a dispensation, is the materialized and personified force of centuries of anthropostic circumcision; first, that which is natural, and afterward, that which is spiritual. The heaped up force of Jewish circumcision produced, through the evolution of the mortal race, the intelligence and prolific potency of which Solomon was a representation; and by the involution of the immortals accompanying it, the holy aspirations of the Jew for the universal dominion of the righteousness of the law, which it symbolized, it generated Jehovah, the Logos or living Word. The descent of Jehovah into the universal tomb of Joseph's posterity—the Gentile hells, as the spiritual potency of the righteousness of the law, has brought humanity before that culminating power of the spiritual force of natural circumcision, the very throne of Deity, from which issues the science of the law which commands the cutting off of the sex energies in that seat of satan—the domain of the will of the flesh. This will cause the surrender of the mortal man to the will of God; the reaction of this act will be the cutting off of the life of the "man of sin," from center to circumference, and cause the emancipation of the world,—the womban, the church of Christ, from the law of sin and death.

DR. DOWIE, the Australian "divine healer," now located in Chicago, where nearly four years ago he founded what he terms the Christian Catholic church, has, after twenty-three years of silence concerning his authority to proclaim his gospel, openly and publicly proclaimed himself to be "the Messenger of God's covenant," the prophet of Zion, and now demands entire modern Christendom to obey his commandments. The little Chicago Catholicism has a pope with stupendous claims. He asks and answers the questions, "By what authority do I these things? My ministry, my baptism, is it from heaven or from men?" He says, "If my ministry is from heaven, you must believe what I say, and you must do what I tell you. * * I have a right to stand here and say, in Zion, you have to do what I tell you, * * the whole church,—Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, and Episcopalian. * * The time has come. I have entered upon the fourth year of this Christian Catholic church, and I tell the church universal everywhere, you have to do what I tell you. Do you hear? You have to do what I tell you, because what I tell you is in accordance with that Word, and because I am the Messenger of God's covenant." He makes these declarations on the basis of alleged success in healing thousands of people, many of whom live in Chicago. When challenged for proof of his claims he points to his cures, and asks if the thousands of people who have testified to restoration to normal, mortal functions, are engaged in one vast conspiracy of lying. The same question might be asked of Dr. Dowie, concerning the thousands who have claimed to be healed in the various metaphysical movements, "Christian Science," mind cure, Spiritualism, suggestion, and other methods where mental influence is employed. Has this vast army engaged in one vast conspiracy of lying? If healing is a proof of divine power, whence the power of those whom Dr. Dowie condemns? The modern miracle workers, the founder of the Christian Catholic church included, were foreseen over eighteen hundred years ago, and described in Rev. xiii: 13, 14; xvi: 13, 14; and it occurs to us that the whole situation was summed up in Hall Caine's new story, "The Mahdi," in which occurs the following part of a conversation between the Mahdi and the poet Jellalli: "'But if you are a prophet, work us a miracle.' 'God no longer works miracles by his prophets,' said the Mahdi. 'Aha! And why not?' asked the poet. 'Because,' said the Mahdi, 'the devil has begun to do so by his fools!'"

Our worthy contemporary, the Baptist Flag, endeavors to suggest a few things for the consideration of THE FLAMING SWORD. Fortunately we have already considered the points mentioned, and for that reason we maintain the truth of Koreshan theology. It is not our fault if the modern church, inclusive of the Baptist denomination, holds that God is unknown and unknowable. We are aware that he has been a mystery to the world all along down the ages, but there come times when he makes himself known, tangibly manifest, so that men may "handle him who is the Word of Life." The gospel of Jesus was for the purpose of acquainting the world with the Almighty; the disciples of Jesus knew him, and to know God is eternal life; if the Baptist church has lapsed into ignorance of the theology of Jesus, it is a proof of its apostasy. If Jesus was not Jehovah; if he was not the fulness of the Godhead bodily; if he was not the Almighty made flesh, the actual creator of the universe, the maker of heaven and earth, tabernacling among men as a man, then there is no truth in his gospel. If he was what he said he was, we can rely upon what he said not only concerning himself, but other things as well. Koreshanity advocates the God-man, the Theo-anthropos, the man-God. Neither the Bible nor nature knows any other kind of a God than the human God, externally manifest or internally active in the heavens of humanity. Nineteen hundred years ago the church possessed a God that was natural and tangible, and susceptible of such specific analysis as was necessary to disseminate his essence among his followers. If the Flag wishes to deny the humanity of God, it might be preparing to discard the Bible it advises us to read! We are quite well acquainted with the Baptist doctrine also; and we here remind our friend that THE FLAMING SWORD contained sometime ago, some direct questions put by the Founder of Koreshanity to the editor of the Flag, which he has not yet considered.

We are asked for proof of the statement that the church founded nineteen hundred years ago went into a state of declension or apostasy. We know of nothing that is capable of falling except things that are elevated. The Seed itself had to fall in its sowing; and light from the sun must gravitate or go down to reach the circumference of its radiations. The Jewish church apostatized to the extent of rejection of the fruit of the Jewish dispensation; the old covenant passed away and a new one was established. God made no mistake in establishing the Jewish church; but it was in the order of the eternal law of being that the great plant should decay at the end of the season of the generation of Jesus the Messiah. After the establishment of the new covenant comes the prophecy that another covenant—entirely new heavens and new earth—is to come at the end of the Christian dispensation. The inevitable law of seed sowing necessitates the death of the seed in the soil. Jesus was the promised seed, and was sown in the hearts of the early church; and except he died in and with his disciples through the age, through the necessary declension, there can be no regeneration of the divine humanity. The kingdom of heaven was the measure of meal in which the woman placed the leaven, the element of corruption, until the whole was corrupted. The field in which the good seed was sown was also the field for the sowing of the tares. Was not the primitive church the kingdom of God? If so, it was destined to enter corruption. The good man of the house was overcome and his house despoiled; the devil entered the church, aye, entered heaven, and his desecration of the tabernacle necessitates its cleansing;—the tabernacle of God, the church, must be renovated and made new. The church entered a state of declension and apostasy, and became perverted; the old garment, the old skins, will not contain the new life. If the Baptist church has escaped these experiences to which the kingdom of heaven was subjected, then it must consider itself as outside the field in which the seed was sown!

Hypocrisy is the unconscious tribute that vice pays to virtue. It is a good thing to give a forceful tribute to the dominant power of the Man of Nazareth, but a crime to prostitute his doctrines and his religion. The Christian Herald, of New York, has taken it upon itself to ascertain to what extent a belief in Christianity prevails among the public men of the American nation. The detailed questions sent out to hundreds of merchants, legislators, educators, millionaires, attorneys, and others, are: "1. Are you a friend of Christianity? 2. Do you believe that Christianity is the friend of mankind? 3. Does your belief extend to the recognition of a supreme being, of the Divinity of Christ, to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence?" The reply of McKinley heads the list, affirming a belief in the Divinity of Jesus, and the recognition of Christianity as the mightiest factor in the civilization of the world. Then comes the long list of corrupt politicians, heads of trusts, millionaires, oppressors of humanity, congressmen, and others engaged in stealing and hoarding the wealth of the nation—all answer, "Yes." So much the worse for Christianity! The same questions, substituting the name of Moses for the name of Jesus, might have been asked of all the public men of the Jewish nation nineteen hundred years ago. The scribes, Pharisees, lawyers, and rulers, as well as the Sanhedrim, would have answered "Yes;" but they murdered the Man who came as the embodiment of all that was righteous, and true, and potent in the hand of the Almighty! The time has come again when "they honor Me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me." The hour of the judgment of church and state is at hand! The church walks with a corrupt world, votes for the corruptions of political rings, and joins hands with the men who oppress the people and absorb their strength.

The hand of judgment is falling upon the corruptions of France, and the proud nation has been forced by inevitable circumstances to acknowledge the injustice of her supreme courts. For years, the French government has been the tool of a now exposed and confessed conspiracy to persecute an innocent man for alleged crimes on the basis of forged evidences. The world at large has protested against the legal action of the corrupt heart of the French republic; and it was not until revolution threatened the nation, that any direct steps were taken to punish the real criminals and to free the victim of French militarism—Capt. Dreyfus. The spirit of hatred of the Jews prompted schemers to deprive Dreyfus of his position in the French army. Legal persecution did not end with the unjust conviction and imprisonment of Dreyfus, but extended to all who undertook to defend the victim of public protest against the unjust sentence—even the noted Zola and Piquart. Other results of the conspiracy have been: two assassinations, one suicide, five resignations of men from public offices, disgrace and confession of Col. Esterhazy, wholesale riots in Paris, and France on the verge of revolution. Finally, the order for a new trial for Dreyfus, the arrest and imprisonment of the head of the conspiracy, and the removal of Dreyfus from the Devil's Island to the devil's land of the French republic, where the devil's hand fell heavily upon him.

The microcosm is the small world, the large world involved, while the macrocosm is the large or great world. In the processes of evolution, the microcosm expresses itself in the great world. The unity of all in one is the supreme pivot of power, just as the seed is the involution of the plant, the pivot of its creation. The Seed-man is the microcosm, the nexus of spirit and matter, the Messiah. The modern metaphysician is exalting himself to the supreme altitude of divine progress; he says, "I am: God is: I the microcosm: God the macrocosm." If we take the real condition of mortal human beings today, and begin a parallel line of statements, we would have the following: "I am: Satan is: I the little devil: Satan the great devil of the universe." Jesus declared nineteen hundred years ago that he alone, of all men in the world, was born from above, and that all others were from beneath, children of the devil. Koreshanity emphasizes the truth of Jesus, when it points to the pole of evil and of fallacy as the source of the conclusion that everybody is God Almighty!

While the Baptist Flag commits itself in agreement with THE FLAMING SWORD, "that there is no Christianity apart from the people who profess it, and the vision of a church that has come down through the age in an invisible form is the figment of a dream," it certainly holds that there are many invisible Baptists—the thousands and thousands who have lived in past generations. Do they belong to the visible organization? Do they belong to the invisible church? Is there no Christianity in those who have died in the past? The position of Koreshanity is that the dead are in the living, and that only through re-embodiment could all the members of the church have come down through the age in visible forms, in visible organization. The mental forces of the past generation are in the present world; the heavens of humanity are in man. What good would a church be, if only a fraction of it is connected with a visible organization? Can the Flag solve this problem?

There is a growing opinion in the astronomical world, that if we could ascend above the earth's atmosphere the sun would appear positively and distinctly blue, and the sky absolutely black; while the stars would appear to possess very different colors from what we see from the earth's surface. If the quality of light from the sun and stars so materially changes in transmission through the atmosphere, what becomes of the spectral analyses by which it is presumed that the exact composition of the heavenly bodies may be known? The spectroscope does not reveal what is actually contained in the orbs above us; it shows the character and quality of substances after metamorphosis in propagation through all the strata of the earth's atmosphere. If we allow the astronomers full sway for a few years longer they will destroy their own conclusions, and leave the people free to search for elements of certainty in the Koreshan System.

The mind that knows nothing about the condition of the dead, can reveal no truth concerning the living. We have before us a journal endeavoring to teach the possibility of acquiring immortality in this world, the mastery of man over death, through processes of standing up and boldly saying, "Truly, I am God"! We quote the editor's own words, his own admission that, though he presumes to be God Almighty, he is in ignorance of the state of the dead, and consequently does not know that he is in it: "Though the condition of the dead is to me shrouded in mystery, I believe that the departed retain their individuality, and am inclined to think that they are soon or later reborn on this earth." It would seem that a general in so stupendous a battle as the battle against death, should become informed concerning the condition and location of the strongholds of the enemy!

If humanity had a beginning at some time in the past, through any of the processes within the range of the supposition of evolutionists, whence did the first man derive his mental force? The spiritual world is composed of the spirits of men who have died, and it is from this reservoir that the Spiritualists receive their "guides." If it is admitted that this spiritual world is the counterpart of the natural world,—that the natural world is an expression of the spiritual, what was in the spiritual world before the first man? There never was a time when humanity did not exist; there never was a time when the spiritual world was not. The spiritual and natural worlds are eternal, and neither was evolved or involved through any of the processes of modern evolution, which Spiritualists are endeavoring to incorporate in a chaos of fallacious belief.

Labor union journals are publishing long lists of manufacturing firms whose products union workmen refuse to purchase—not because the manufacturers are in the trusts, but because they employ skilled labor outside of the labor trusts. By such methods of boycotting, persistent opposition to the interests of hundreds of thousands of non-union men, it is proposed to cure social and economic evils! There is a manifest determination on the part of the unions to crush that class of American workmen who will not submit themselves to the "brotherhoods" who are sworn to cease work when the heads give the word, and resort to force if necessary (and many of them resort to arms) to prevent non-union men from taking the places they voluntarily abandon in the strikes!

An army of men is sacrificed every year to appease the wrath and satisfy the demands of the money god; in all departments of industry, hundreds of thousands are slain upon the altars of commerce. The railroads of the United States alone are destroying and mutilating annually more than armaments of war—over 50,000 are killed or injured yearly. Add to these the injured in wrecks, and the army of the slain swells to startling proportions. Millions toil year after year, enduring hardships, with scant food and clothing, for the support of the gigantic systems of robbery, a thousand times more oppressive than the bondage of the Israelites in the land of Egypt!

There can be no true government on the basis of the will of the majority. The laws of just government must be in accordance with the laws of organic unity, in harmony with the laws which govern the great universe of existence. The practical application of the laws of the universe depends upon specific knowledge of the laws in fundamentals. As long as the majority are in ignorance of the laws of the form and function of the physical world, they can have no conception of the laws of societal reconstruction, or of the principles of true political economy. The will of the ignorant majority is mere caprice, regardless of the laws of justice.

If the people's party represented the elements of social and political reform, then "reform" is on the decline. Populism is disappearing like a quickly dissipating storm. During the campaign of 1896, it assumed huge proportions, and in its fusion with democracy threatened to practically apply the ideals of many an enthusiast. It failed to absorb the democratic party; it is now thought that the silver candidate killed both parties. At any rate, the topic of the "rise and fall" of populism is being freely discussed in political circles. Third partyism has never been a success in politics, though it has been tried many times in the past.

Prof. Langley concludes that the natural color of the sun is blue, but when sifted through the earth's atmosphere its rays become yellow. The sun of the competitive world sometimes creates the "blues;" but when strained through the mental atmosphere of the modern world it manifests itself in yellow journalism.

Apostate Christians are more concerned about leaving the earth on some star-bound journey, than they are about making the world better for the rising generation. At the time the Almighty awakes to take vengeance on all forms of oppression, millions are clamoring to get away from the scenes of judgment!

It is an inevitable conclusion that if the few get too much in the distribution of the wealth of the world, the many get too little. All industrial progress of modern times is in favor of the men who have facilities for stealing industrial products, and against the men who produce them.

In the physical universe, there are no parties to vote upon issues and questions concerning the government of atoms. The whole system exists in obedience to unalterable laws; the great structure is ruled by the central sun, the imperial nucleus of the mineral kingdom.

Ask any astronomer what problems of life have been solved on the basis of the popular astronomical system, and you will have opportunity to learn of how little value a fallacious cosmogony is to the world.

A man on the wrong side of an argument is a human ostrich; he sticks his head in the sand, and thinks that he is out of sight.

It is obvious that there is something radically wrong with American "freedom," when millions are in bondage!

Planetary Reflections From Disci in the Earth.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Why, if the real planets are mercurial disci in the earth, between the metallic shells, do we see, in the case of Jupiter, for instance, that it revolves on its axis in about 10 hours, and that it is accompanied by satellites which appear to revolve around it in definite and constant periods, passing in front and remaining visible when going in one direction, and passing behind and disappearing when going in another direction; casting their shadows on the planet when not in exact opposition, and becoming eclipsed by the planet's shadow when passing on the other side? All these phenomena are capable of easy observation and verification through a telescope of moderate power.

Then there is Saturn, with his marvelous rings and eight satellites. The rings are always perspectively foreshortened, but by regularly varying amount, from being wider than the planet, to a straight line. Now, manifestly these complex and systematic appearances could not be mere reflections from mercurial disci, circulating around between the metallic shells at a speed of a mile in about three seconds! They must be optical illusions, or Copernicus is right. At first thought, it appeared that absurdity was unnecessarily overdone; that little planets and satellites might be conceded, but on second thought it was clear that ponderable bodies would not do; for centrifugal force and gravity acting in the same direction would precipitate them to the earth at once.—PROF. J. W. T., Salem, O.

There is manifest in the above questions, an almost total misconception and failure to understand Koreshan Cosmogony; and hence the apparent absurdities presented to the mind of the objector, which would be entirely removed if the System were seen as it really is in the mind of the Koreshan Astronomer, and in fact. It does not follow, because the conclusions above are fallacious, that the Koreshan System is false, because the conclusions are not Koreshan; but perhaps they are the best effort of a mind saturated with Copernican fallacies, only blindly considering our published statements, yet endeavoring to reach wholesale conclusions by illogical methods.

For instance, when it is said that the planets are reflections from mercurial disci in the earth, our correspondent concludes that these reflections are mere reflections of light, and that we think the planets in the physical heavens are mere phantasms, "optical illusions," as he terms them. In an article regarding the mountains and shadows on the moon, a few weeks ago, we endeavored to dissipate some erroneous conclusions concerning the moon in the Koreshan System, by the same writer. The same will apply to the visible planets, for the planets belong to the lunar system, having similar orbits, phases, and laws of formation. Do the planets and moon appear to be of the same nature as the sun? They do not; they are projected from the circumference, while the sun and the stars belong to the interior of the heavens, and are projected from the center.

The conclusion is also erroneously made, that the visible planets are always directly above their corresponding material disci; and hence the absurdity of the conclusion that the mercurial disci move between the metallic strata at the enormous speed of a mile in about three seconds! If we take the longitude of a given mercurial disc in the earth, and the right ascension of the corresponding visible planet in the heavens, we would see that their movements agree; if the heavens were stationary in the concave earth, then the visible planets would always be directly above the mercurial planes; but the heavens are revolving constantly. A visible planet in the heavens, in its orbit among the constellations of the Zodiac, indicates the movement of the disc in the earth. The disc of Mars completes its revolution in the earth in about 686 days; Jupiter, nearly 12 years; Saturn, 29 years; and so on, to Neptune, which requires about 164 years to make one revolution around in the earth, and a corresponding time for the revolution of the visible orb in the heavens. Mercury is the most rapidly moving disc, covering only 69 miles per day, or about 42 feet per second; however, the motion is vermicular, and the peristaltum is not the same at all times of the day,—being greatest when the sun is passing over the disc. The year of Neptune is about 164 years; its disc moves in the earth only about 2,198 feet per day, or about $\frac{1}{3}$ inches per second. Quite a difference, you see!

Why do not the planets fall to the earth if gravity and centrifugal force operate in the same direction? They would if such were the case. The planets are centers of gravity,—points where the energies of levity and gravity meet in the formation of vortices, and hence, while they are partially material, they are imponderable, for the energies of gravity are transmuted in the vortex and neutralized. The visible planets are in the static planes of forces generated in the discs, and can no more fall than hydrogen can fall, or a ton of gold rise.

Are the planets material? There is a process of partial materialization of the energies entering the planetary vortices. In the processes of combustion that take place there, different qualities of photoic energies are generated, which enable us to see the form of the spheres. The movements of the satellites about the planets, and the planets themselves in rotation, are as they appear—that is, they are visible substances in space, having motion. Take Jupiter, for instance; its axis inclines about 3° from the plane of its orbit, which is nearly in the plane of the ecliptic; and the "satellites" revolve in the plane of Jupiter's equator. What causes Jupiter to revolve? Wherever two forces meet, a revolution is the result. The body of Jupiter is in the vortex, and the planet revolves with the vortex, and the satellites being in the same vortex, necessarily revolve in the same direction. The vortex is created by the meeting of the ascending and descending energies, and the rotation of the planet and revolution of the satellites are inevitable. Why does not Jupiter rotate in the same plane that the disc moves?—why the obliquity? why not appear flat like the disc, with the satellites revolving, not in front and behind the planet, but around in a plane perpendicular to the earth? Because the energies transmitted from the mercurial disc to the partially materialized image in the sky, derive their magnetic impulse from the Zodiac, and incline in the direction of the Zodiacal plane. If gyroscopes tend to move toward the plane of the Zodiac, may not Jupiter's satellites revolve nearly in the plane of the ecliptic, whence they receive their impulses? The obliquity of the plane of their revolution is as simple as the compass needle pointing to the magnetic pole of the earth!

The same is true of Saturn and its satellites, or secondary planets. In the transmission of energies from the primary and secondary discs in the Saturnian system in the earth, the plane of the vortex of revolution in the physical heavens would be in the plane of the planet's path, if it were not modified by the solar diurnal influence. The rings are in the natural plane of the satellites of Saturn, and must present different aspects, appearing to be inclined at different angles as related to the eye, at different points in its orbit, for a reason similar to that given in the Copernican system—the axis of the planet sustains an obliquity of about 28° to the ecliptic, and must therefore change in appearance. There is one thing that we are always much amused at in many objections put forth by minds in the astronomical world, and that is the effort put forth to instruct us on points of the most ordinary and common phenomena of the physical heavens; as though we had not deemed it necessary to know the facts in plain view! THE FLAMING SWORD is published for the purpose of instructing the world concerning the truth of the universe; and it has never yet become the pupil of its correspondents! We are familiar with the facts of practical astronomy; familiar with the present and past systems, with the history of astronomy, with the works of astronomical minds; and our facilities for astronomical research and observation are at least equal to the facilities of those who oppose us.

In considering the rotation of Saturn and the revolution of its attendants, in relation to the plane of its rings, some knowledge of the laws of generation of electro-magnetic energies in the great dynamo of the universe must be possessed; then it would be clear even to the modern astronomical mind why the rings of Saturn sustain an obliquity of 28° to the plane of the visible planet's orbit, but not before. We insist upon the Koreshan System being viewed from its own standpoint. Above all, in the study of Koreshan Astronomy it is necessary to know what it teaches; for blundering conclusions of astronomers who take casual glances at the System are not sufficient to satisfy the rational mind. The entire Koreshan System is beautiful, logical, consistent, and scientific; but if we were to find some of the conclusions arrived at by minds outside of the System expressed in the world, we could not identify them as Koreshan conclusions!

Did the Christ Fail in His Mission?

Did the Christ die to save the Adamic race, and fail? Was the atonement made by Jesus on the cross sufficient for and designed to save the Adamic race? Does not salvation depend upon conditions? If not, upon what does it depend? Are not cause and effect brought to bear? If so, which is the cause, and which the effect? If the atonement is the cause, then does not the effect depend upon the cause?—A. M., Springfield, Mo.

There is no failure in the operation of inexorable law; Jesus came in fulfilment of the unalterable laws of being; and the further fulfilment of law in the hearts of men is as certain as the fact that the universe exists. Jesus died to save the Adamic race and mortal humanity, and has not failed; but to understand the processes of divine redemption, it is necessary to remove from the mind every vestige of the absurdities taught in the modern church concerning the atonement. We must first ascertain what race the Adamic race is. It is usually supposed that the common, mortal humanity is the race of Adam, but it is not true.

The Adamic race is the divine race, and belongs exclusively to the divine kingdom. They were the sons of God that existed in the world before the flood. Adam was God Almighty; the offspring of God are the Gods. Jesus was the restoration and the unity of the Adamic race in himself. A common seed saves the life of the plant and saves the atoms of the soil as well—appropriates them for use in the next higher domain or kingdom of life. The Seed-man saves the life of the Almighty and the life of mortal humanity. Jesus was the salvation and the resurrection of the soul of the Jewish race—the salvation of thousands of spirits of men who had looked forward to his coming as the Messiah.

The coming of Jesus nineteen hundred years ago was the coming of the promised seed. Now, what do you suppose a seed is for, if it is not for planting? In the generation of Jesus the Christ, the Almighty produced one seed, at that time the "only begotten;" and the only way other sons of God could be produced, was by sowing that one seed in the soil of mortal humanity. The parable of the Sower is a scientific statement of the processes of redemption. In the beginning of the age the seed was sown. The age is the season for the generation of a new genus or race of men; and the end of the age or dispensation is the harvest of that sowing. Jesus was literally dissolved, transmuted to spirit, and entered the hearts and wills of his disciples, and in accordance with the laws of reproduction, will produce 144,000 personalities as the fruitage of his planting. The 144,000 personalities are the Adamic race; they are the result or effect, the offspring, of the original cause, the Seed-man. The conditions of salvation in the present dispensation were the conditions at the beginning of the age—acceptance of the divine essence at the time of the planting. It is "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." The processes of redemption are not yet completed, and will not be until the manifestation of the sons of God—the redemption of the body.

The cross of Jesus is sufficient to work out in humanity the redemption of the divine humanity; sufficient to produce the resurrection at the end of the dispensation; sufficient to bring the light of divine science into the world, and sufficient to bring the Golden Age, with the glory and power of the Almighty, to fill the world in ages to come, when all men will be saved to the extent of their aspirations. But what is the cross of the Christ? What is the atonement? What is the death of the Christ? "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." The death of the divine seed in humanity during the age was the death of Jesus, symbolized by his death on the two sticks of wood. At the passover supper, Jesus symbolized the processes of the atonement—he gave his disciples bread and wine, types of his flesh and blood. They ate and drank; now, where did the bread and wine go? They were appropriated in the physical systems of the disciples. In that symbol Jesus virtually said to them: Now, I show you where I am going; you must eat my flesh and appropriate my blood in order to have life. I am going into you as the divine seed, the seminal essence of Deity, and there I must die. I cross myself, my divine life, flesh, and blood, with the corrupt, mortal world, just as a seed placed in the soil must pass into dissolution, and through corruption reach down and appropriate and save the elements of the soil. I am going to become at-one with you in death, during the period of an entire dispensation, in order that the elements of the mortal man may become at-one with me in life.

Jesus was placed in the great crucible of humanity; he was crossed—crucified—in man; and that cross was symbolized by his crucifixion on Calvary, just as his at-one-ment was symbolized by the appropriation of the emblems of the body and blood of the God-man. The at-one-ment is complete when the men into whom he went during the administration of the divine essence or Holy Spirit, during the first century, are raised out of mortal humanity and enter into conjunction with God Almighty.

The law of the resurrection is the law of seed-sowing and harvest; and if you can study the processes of the generation of life in the soil, through the processes of corruption of the seed and the reconstruction of the life cells from the state of death of the seed, and in the elaboration of substances in the plant, and the final grouping of the corpuscles and formation of the many seeds at the end of the season, you have the processes of redemption completely and scientifically illustrated and demonstrated in nature, in conformity with unalterable law. The Koreshan Science of the at-one-ment, the cross and death of Jesus, is beautiful, scientific, and consistent with facts of Nature and the Bible; it is rational, and reaches logical conclusions from the basis of demonstrated facts, analogies, and laws of life in the natural world. The theories of atonement taught in the modern church are silly, fallacious, and absurd, and must in time so offend the rational mind as to result in wholesale repudiation of the entire system of churchianity, and world-wide acceptance of the truth of Koreshanity.

Earth Embraces the Universe.

A New and Startling Theory of Our World.

We Live on Inner Surface. The Sun the Center, and Gives All Its Heat and Light—Far Reaching if True.

We were handed the other day a book of 200 pages, about five inches by seven in area, with the request that we review it and publish in the Times the result. The book is occupied with setting forth a new conception of the material world in which we live. According to the author, the sun is the center and the earth is the circumference of the universe. The earth is a hollow sphere with a crust composed of metals and minerals, in thickness about 100 miles. The distance between the farthest points from side to side of the hollow sphere or form is, of course, concave, and on this inner concave surface we live. The sun proper is located at the center, rotating on its axis, and its visible projection has an orbital path on the ecliptic. The planets are spheres of energy, the stars focal points of light, and the moon a sphere of energy. The whole is eternal; the earth is God's footstool and is essential to his existence; it is the utmost and outermost limit of expression of the divine mind. The earth is the only physical world; it has no orbital motion; it is fixed and relatively stationary, while the sun, moon, planets and stars move in orbits in the heavens above us, and are inseparably connected with the universe.

It will be readily seen that this theory is directly opposed to the one commonly accepted. For centuries the world has been taught that the earth is a large globe filled with molten matter, the crust composing the surface is convex on its outer surface and it is on this convex surface we live; that the earth is but a mere speck in the vast ocean of infinite space, and revolves upon its axis once in twenty-four hours, and in one year completes a circle around the sun; that the sun is placed at a distance of 92,000,000 miles from the earth, and around it revolves a family of planets and satellites.

It is claimed for the new theory that it corresponds to ascertained facts, whereas the old is based, for the most part, on assumptions. To prove that the surface of the earth is not convex, experiments were made on the surface of water.

A Proof that the Surface is not Convex.

If the water were convex, when boats and ships disappear in the distance hull down, they would do so because the intervening hill of water would prevent their being seen; it is conclusive that if this were the case, the telescope would be powerless to render the occulted portion of the ships visible again. It is equally clear that if the telescope can restore the vanished hulls, the water upon which they sail is not bulged and does not curve downward beyond the horizon.

It is with reference to this phenomenon that special observations were made on August 16, 1896, from the shore of Lake Michigan, World's Fair Grounds, by the Experimenting Staff. The atmosphere was clear, and the horizon sharply defined against the sky beyond. Several sloop yachts and a schooner were observed at a distance of about twelve miles, from an altitude of ten feet above the water (from a pier extending into the lake), the hulls and about one half of the height of the mast were invisible to the unaided eye; through an opera glass, all of the surface of the sails and the full height of masts were visible, with the hulls still invisible; but with a telescope of about forty powers, the hull of each vessel was brought into view with remarkable clearness.

Ocular Demonstration of the Earth's Concavity.

A stake two feet in height was placed midway between the Observing Station and the target, with cross-bar at top of stake. With the telescope at same altitude, the cross-bar was observed to be a little below the top of the target, with the target foreshortened by perspective to a breadth equal to the above one half the length of stake. With the telescope two inches above the water, the cross-bar was seen to be in line with the top of the target.

Besides this observation, an absolutely satisfactory view was had of the water's surface itself. With the telescope placed absolutely level, the water appeared to slope gradually upward to the center of the telescope field. With the objective end of the telescope placed a little upward from the true level, and with the water still visible near the objective end of the instrument, the actual concavity of the water—a midway depression—was clearly observable. This midway depression was at the point of the stake, with cross-bar midway between the point of observation from the target, from which midway depression there was a gradual slope upward to the target. This view was obtained by the long terrestrial eyepiece, and also by the astronomical eyepiece, the concavity through the latter being the more marked. There could be no mistake as to the concave arc; the water was seen to be not convex. It did not appear to be a plane, but concave!—Kingston (Ont.) Times.

The Founder of Koreshanity in Baltimore.

The Morning Herald's Brief Review of the Principles of the System, and View of the Prophet.

Baltimore is entertaining a prophet. He is the founder of a modern system of science and religion, which involves new and startling theories regarding every knownology and ism, and proposes to revolutionize every department of human thought, from politics to theology.

The pen name of the prophet is KORESH; his real cognomen is C. R. Teed, and Fate made him a citizen of Chicago. At present he is the guest of H. N. Rahn, at the latter's home, 1228 North Stricker street.

"The earth," said Dr. Teed, last night, in explaining the principles of Koreshanity, "will soon witness one of the most complete social, political, and religious revolutions in its history. The forces of the common people, tired of the oppression and tyranny of capital, will rise in their might and overthrow those who now make them slaves. All existing governments will fall, and every one of the multitudinous peoples of the world will become united. They will be ruled by God in person. As assistants He will have 144,000 divine, yet human, beings, who, by slow evolution, have attained a condition of spiritual superiority, corresponding in a measure to the Hindu Nirvana. They will be free from the sensual desires of the ordinary man, and through obedience to law will reach what we call the 'point of biologic absorption.'

"Christ we believe was God—the three in one, the unified trinity. Every 24,000 years he is reborn, and has been from the beginnings of eternity. At his last death, when our era began, his spirit was absorbed by those who were true believers, and at the end of the 24,000-year cycle, in which we now live, the spirit, becoming purer and purer by its gradual progression through the generations, will be incarnated once more, and Christ will walk the earth again. This process will continue forever."

Dr. Teed believes in alchemy and claims to have converted several common metals into gold. The process, however, is too expensive, he says, to warrant employing it on a commercial scale. He also upholds the theory of reincarnation, and maintains that the soul of a man may descend into one of the lower animals. Dr. Teed is a man of fine physique and good address. His eyes are deeply set and piercing, and when he explains a knotty point in his science, they glimmer and snap. He began his teachings in 1870, and now has a rather large number of converts, most of whom are residents of Chicago. It is his mission, he says, to instruct the ignorant, so that when the Great Day comes they will be admitted into the inner circle without having first to undergo the inconvenience of being killed.—The Morning Herald, Baltimore, Md., June 6.

The Baptist Flag and the Flaming Sword.

The Flag Admits that It Cannot Comprehend the Almighty; the Man Jesus is the Tangible God of Koreshanity.

We are amused at the reference of the Baptist Flag to "unknowable phantasms," which it assumes are the bases of all analyses of THE FLAMING SWORD. If analyses of substances of tangible human structures and definition of the laws of the physical universe are "unknowable phantasms" in ethereal regions, pray what are the subjects of Baptist sky-theology? Will our contemporary condescend to tell us whether the objects of the Flag's affection and worship in the physical heavens are knowable or unknowable phantasms, and whether they exist in ethereal or atmospheric media? Any definite information about the existence of the Baptist god will receive our due consideration!—THE FLAMING SWORD.

It is said in an old book we have in our office, that the God whom Baptists worship is "Past finding out." His infinite character is such that "The heaven of heavens cannot contain him," and the "height, and depth, and breadth of his love passeth knowledge." Since God is infinite, the finite minds of Baptists do not pretend to comprehend him, or to be able to analyze his nature. Do we understand that Koreshanity has a God that can be analyzed and dissected, and his analysis reported as to its different qualities, like a bottle of medicine or any other material compound? The God of the Bible is an infinite Spirit, and may not be known to the material view of mortal man. We recommend THE FLAMING SWORD to purchase a Bible and read some Baptist doctrine.—Baptist Flag.

The Flag Thinks Tares Were Never Sown in the Soil of the Baptist Church.

Evidently the Flag is neither a shining light, nor an instrument of revelation of the mysteries of divine life. If it were, it would recognize the truth of Paul's declaration concerning the apostasy of the church which Jesus founded. The church of every dispensation waxes old as a garment; and if we are approaching the end of the age, some preparation must be made for making all things new. Even life must be renewed—and renewed in new, organic structures. If the Almighty makes everything new, must he not reconstruct the church?—FLAMING SWORD.

Come, now, brother, please quote for us where Paul said the "church Jesus founded" would apostatize. He truly said there would be an apostasy from that church, but Paul said that the true disciples had the divine seal on them, and the Lord knew them, and that "God should receive glory, by the church, throughout all ages, world without end." Eph. iii:21. The total apostasy of the "church Jesus founded" is the doctrine of infidelity, not of Paul. Paul was a staunch believer in the stability of the institutions of Christ. It was Paul who said: "We, receiving a kingdom that cannot be moved." Heb. xii:28. The Lord never promised to make a "new" church, but, the rather, said: "On this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." That church is stable and undying. The reformer who vainly imagines the Lord's church is dead, is deluded.—Baptist Flag.

Making Sheep Out of Goats.

"A new fountain of life has been discovered on a Missouri goat farm,"—FLAMING SWORD. Pshaw! That is just a Campbellite church in the grove near the pond, and they put in their time trying to make sheep out of their goats by dipping them in the pond.—Baptist Flag.

Leslie's Weekly, June 22.

"THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY."—LESLIE'S WEEKLY, in the June 22d number, tells with graphic details the story of the famous Dreyfus case, the Jewish officer whose faith led to his fearful persecution, and characterizes it as "The Crime of the Century," and so it is. Nothing in romance or fiction is of greater interest. The same number tells and illustrates the remarkable child-kidnapping case which recently centered the interests of fathers and mothers throughout the country upon the 8,000 policemen in and about New York who were looking for the lost child. Both these stories are profusely illustrated. The double page gives one the best idea yet presented pictorially, of the Paris Exposition of 1900. Historic Savannah, one of the great cities of the South, has a very attractive illustrated supplement, and other illustrations include a first page, showing New York's lively Sunday afternoon summer, bicycle and flower show; the three great army and navy rifles; the next speaker of the House, David B. Henderson, of Iowa; yacht-club views; and the favorites in the great Suburban horse-race. This is one of the greatest numbers of LESLIE'S WEEKLY, and any one who pays ten cents for it gets his money's worth, with interest.

The New Voice.

Since the transformation of the Voice to the New Voice, this well known journal has steadily increased in interest and literary merit. It was formerly devoted entirely to the cause of prohibition, but now over half of its space contains matter of general interest—after the character of first-class magazines; but its prohibition department is none the less radical than before. True Stories of Heroic Lives, its Editorials, and weekly review of current events, are features of special interest. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York City. $1.50 per year.

The Suggester and Thinker.

A popular monthly journal devoted to an investigation of the laws of suggestion and thought; their use and abuse, and possibility as curative, moral, and educational agents; also research into all psychic phenomena, including that of hypnosis, telepathy, spiritualism, visions, and other occult subjects. $1.00 per year; 178 Summit st., Cleveland, O.

The Exodus.

A journal of original editorial matter, by Ursula N. Gestefeld, devoted to metaphysical subjects, and the editor's views of the science of life. The June number contains articles on Incarnation and Reincarnation, Still Higher Criticism, the Mastery of Fate, and the Breath of Life. $1.00 per year; published by the Gestefeld Pub. Co., New York City.

What You Have Been Long Looking For!

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.

Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 20 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 20 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 20 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 20 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 20 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's Liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.80; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 20 cents.

Whole No. 342

The Fundamentals of Koreshan Astro-Biology.

The Science of Prophecy and the Complex Time-Piece of Predestination; the Great Ethnological Tree of Abraham and the Laws of Metempsychosis of the Patriarch.

THE LAWS of progression and retrogression govern the cycles of perpetual and periodic continuity. Time is defined by periods marking partially recurring epochs, until the grander of all the cycles in co-ordination completes the series, and the climax consummates with the fruition of the sons of God, merged into that intra-composite consciousness—the personal Deity, of whom the world today is ignorant. One of the most important cycles, upon the correct reading of the dial of which depends a definite chronological comprehension of human progress in its religious, moral, intellectual, and social status, is that which is in co-ordination with man's advancement toward his destiny, and is designated the alchemico-organic (physical) Zodiac. Upon the ecliptic of this belt—symbol of the animal life of God in man—all of the solar, lunar, and planetary cycles record their periods, and together they comprise the aggregate and complex time-piece of predestination.

No chronological datum predicated upon the metrical definitions of Zodiacal phenomena, in the relations of the solar system to the ecliptic, can be specifically correct without an aggregate calculus of all these factors. But that they demark with mathematical precision the events of anthropological evolutions and involutions, progressions and retrogressions, times of prosperity and adversity, and the revolutions essential to distinctive and advancing grades of civilization, there can be no reasonable question or justifiable doubt. Given an accurate knowledge of this complicated, divinely-wrought mechanism in its relations to biological existence, the career of every man and every nation may be definitely determined, and the time known, not only when a national career shall end, but when, how, and where a new national existence shall project itself into the arena of its triumphs, defeats, and agonies.

Time periods are specifically marked, and the continuity of periods is from evanescence to never-ceasing perpetuity. The theocrasis of the Lord defined the beginning of a specific epoch; it marked also the termination of a career which began when God entered, by his covenant (conjunction), into the spiritual consciousness of Abraham. It completed the cycle which began with the time when God in Abraham projected into Abram's external consciousness the magnificent conception of becoming the father of a race of men, and establishing the possibility of his own metempsychosis toward and into that immaculate and transcendent astral nucleus, the Son of God and Father of the race. The divine prescience in Abraham enabled him to project his visual penetration toward that brilliant Morning Star, the day-dream of the angelic hosts, and the night dream of the devoted millions raised up in the bosom of the Father, the immaculate Christ, flesh and blood of God, the sole personal triunity, God the man. Abraham saw the time when he should become the Christ of God, and should occupy the throne to which God had made him heir.

What man in all the history of the world, has conceived so comprehensive a scheme and practically co-ordinated the factors of its execution as Abraham, when he instituted that religious ceremony, one of the supreme factors of which was the rite of circumcision? "Thou shalt circumcise every male child the eighth day," and every child amenable to this ritual, but not submitted to its provisions, shall be cut off from his people. This ceremony had for its proximate purpose, in its external, physiological application, the development of a race of people, all the members of which could trace their genealogy distinctively and definitely to one paternal source. Every tribe and family of this great people could trace its ethnic origin to Abraham.

Abraham, then, apex of religious culmination, prepared the soil into which he should project his natural and spiritual life, as it must flow from generation to generation, until, through the power of the Omniscient will, he could gather again that life into his own reincarnation as the Son of man, the Son of God, the new creation to sit upon the throne of the Eternal. One of the factors of that rite provided that no Hebrew should marry the uncircumcised. It was made a religious ceremony, because there is no bond of unity in the depth of the human soul so obligatory as the religious principle in man. It had the power to deter the Hebrew women from contracting marital alliances among the uncircumcised; it did not, however, prevent the Hebrew men from marrying Gentile women, thus absorbing into the blood of the Hebrew race, foreign ethnic elements by which the deterioration of the Hebrew was prevented.

The time included from the projection of Abram from the fire of the Chaldees, until the Lord's body was dissolved in the presence of his disciples, was specifically defined both by the anthropostic and the alchemico-organic Zodiacs. As the Patriarch Abraham, through natural propagation, projected his own life into the multiplication of a posterity proceeding directly from his own loins, so the same Abraham, with his additional experience of nearly two thousand years, in the consummation of which he had merged into his eternal Sonship and inheritance of the throne of Deity, was ripe to institute a corresponding celestial projection into that immaculate posterity which should proceed from his planting in the race. Abraham had become the Lord. Not only could the viduals of the Jewish race trace their ethnic origin to the personal and vidual paternal ancestor, Abraham, but they were as actually in the loins of Abraham as the acorns on the oak were originally in the acorn whence sprang the tree, and thence the acorns reproduced.

Let the mind picture the lines of radiation from the loins of one man to the millions of his progeny, and draw the conclusion that this result is the product of Abraham's desire; then further reason, that this unfoldment of the mind and structure of the great Patriarch into the millions of his progeny, must co-ordinately progress with a commensurate involution. The impetus of that coincident involution is the inherent desire of the Patriarch Abraham to develop and perpetuate his personal individuality, as well as to project and develop an army of collaborators in the destinies of immortal and eternal life. He projected his desire to a specific period on the dial of the anthropostic Zodiac, imparting that desire to his posterity. As his natural posterity could trace their lineage backward to a pivotal point in origin, so, per contra and co-ordinately, they all could project their desires forward to a particular pivot, into which their lives should merge as a composite aggregation of the spiritual entities originating with Abraham and collected in Christ the Lord.

It would be an infinitely defective law which could unfold from the life of one man the millions of his progeny, and could not infold into a higher and more perfected center the identities thus engendered. The Lord was central and pivotal. As he was the material nucleus of the race of man, so his inner and spiritual life constituted the astral nucleus of both the celestial and spiritual spheres. While he was the fulness of the Godhead bodily, God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, the incarnate God and Jehovah in materiality, he was the reincarnate Abraham; and the Hebrew race, dying in the flesh, moved through the spirals of involute and progressive aspirations, and reached its central destiny in the altar and throne of the Deific personality. "He gathered the Lambs with his arm and carried them in his bosom," exalting those who righteously looked forward to his appearing, to the central and eternal throne of consciousness.

Whosoever denies that the Lord Christ was the Son of God, and therefore Deity, is a liar and antichrist. Upon this contest we enter the arena; upon this truth we stake the fortuity of the war we wage.

It is declared that the Branch shall build the temple of the Lord. This means that he shall establish the life of the body. While it is declared that the Branch shall build the temple, it is also declared of Cyrus that he shall build Jerusalem (establish the doctrine or science of life), and that he shall lay the foundation of the temple. The foundation of the temple is what the temple is founded upon. If the temple is the life, its foundation must be the doctrine or science of life. It is prophesied of CYRUS that he shall lay the foundation, but does he also build the superstructure? The Lord declares, "He shall perform all my pleasure." "The hands of Zerubabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it." (Zech. iv. 9.

Koreshan Solution of the Philippine Question.

The Flaming Sword Sustains the Government of the United States in the Possession of the Islands and Its Effort to Conquer the Natives.

I have been so surprised at the attitude of THE FLAMING SWORD toward the Filipinos,—the bad faith of the United States seems to be approved, while the aspirations of a people who have struggled for years for liberty are sneered at. I don't understand the theory on which Professor Morrow bases his articles, unless it is that he sees the United States hastening to its doom, and rejoices to see the end approaching; possibly it is this. Nevertheless, I hope the Filipinos will make a good fight.—A READER OF THE SWORD.

WE ARE at present living under the jurisdiction of the United States government. While we do not believe either the democratic or republican form of government to be the best, we recognize it as the best we have; and so long as the people of the country desire it, we are bound to sustain it until, through the forces of a higher education, the people are convinced that there is something better to be had. Any kind of government is better than the mob. The mob may sometimes become the instrument for the overthrow of a bad form of government, but it never succeeds in holding the reins long at a time. The overthrow of the French empire by a mob, and the substitution of a republic, are good illustrations of mobocratic success, when it results in effecting a revolution.

We are looking for the universal establishment of God's kingdom in the earth, which shall be substituted for the present governments; but it will only be reached through the discipline essential to the graduated developments of the peoples who shall come under its influence and reign.

The Filipinos are a set of barbarians; and that ambitious tyrant, Aguinaldo, while perhaps possessed of a greater share of intellectuality than many of his compatriots, is no less a barbarian than the others inhabiting those islands. The course of the Philippine insurgents from the first, in their relation to the United States, has been marked by treachery. Their methods are not those of civilized people, but of barbarians; and nothing could now befall them so disastrous to their progress toward civilization, as what some "philanthropists" denominate their liberty as an independent government. There is not a state among all the states of the Union, that possesses liberty distinct from that which is guaranteed to it by the concert of the states in that common bond of citizenship enforced by the union of states.

We do not maintain that the so called civilized world has attained to any great degree of civilization, but on some lines it is making progress; and if the United States is good enough to govern seventy-five millions of people somewhat to their satisfaction, we cannot see why it is not good enough to control the destiny of eighty-five millions. It is maintained by millions of people, that the United States government is the best in the world. If so, then it is good enough for ten millions of barbarians in the Philippine Islands.

We rejoiced in the destruction of Spanish authority in America. We destroyed Spanish tyranny in the Philippine Islands,—the only government the Filipinos possessed. The authority of the United States in the islands, was a guarantee to those people of at least as good a government as we have at home; there certainly can be nothing better in the line of democratic liberty. Or do you think that those barbarians can make for themselves a better republic than the one under whose wings they are promised protection? If they were more civilized, more progressive, more divinely religious, then a liberty of independence might be the preferable one.

A number of the states of the Union attempted to gain an independence from the Federal government, and, according to the arguments put forth by the advocates of "our bad faith" with the Filipinos, the South was entirely in the right, and the North absolutely in the wrong; for any people who, for political reasons, desire to be independent of any established government should not be interfered with. This, we contend, is a poor argument. We are of the opinion that in the march of races toward the acme of human civilization, there are grades of discipline essential to their development, and that these grades of discipline will come to them in the line and order of prescient appointment. I know of nothing better for those people now, than subjugation to as strong a nationality as the Americans.

We think there is altogether too much politics in the administration of our national affairs. Both parties are bad enough; and the worst feature of either party, lies in the purpose and practice of each to belittle the good and magnify the bad of the other. The best sentiment of our country today, is in the determination to prosecute the war in the Philippines with the utmost vigor. The effort should be so aggressive and so overwhelming as to leave no room for question as to the final results. There should be no hesitancy on the part of the administration, to furnish munitions of war in superabundance. The present weakness of the Administration is in its dilly-dallying; it is fatal in more ways than one. We have no "sympathy for the under dog" when that dog is rabid; or if we have, our sympathies urge us to dispatch him with the least possible ceremony. We want no peace when war is in the soul.

The Jewish race was not angelic during any period of its history; it was, however, God's chosen people, and in it God had planted his life. The protection of that living germ from the throne and altar of the Almighty, demanded war for its protection. The American people are not a race of angels, but the seed of a divine liberty has been planted in the race, and it must progress to perfection; the contest of Christ militant will progress until the last victory comes, and triumph is achieved. The best thing for a bad boy sometimes is a good flogging. The best thing for the future of those barbarians is the authority of a dominant and progressive people. Whip them first, then guarantee them all the liberty we ourselves enjoy; and when the people of the United States have passed through the processes of regeneration, and the Head of the kingdom of righteousness shall appear and control the destiny of the world, the barbarians will sustain as favorable a relation to the whole as their conditions entitle them.

Tennyson and the Golden Age.

The Poet's Idea of the New World of Life and Light; His View of the Coming Race and the Grand Jubilee of Humanity.

L. E. BORDEN.

THE FUNCTION of the poet is to see—to see more and to see further than other men; the natural world teems for him with myriad phenomena, so delicate they never strike the dull eye. Mrs. Gaskell tells of an old farmer who had lived many springs before the young poet came who taught him that ash buds were black in May.

Thackeray used to call Tennyson the wisest man he knew; and Thackeray's daughter, Mrs. Ritchie, says the first time she walked out with the poet, over the downs at Farringford, he told her to watch the field-lark and see if it did not come down side ways upon its wing. Another little story that is often told, has it that Tennyson, in his vibrant tones, was reading Maud to a silent company assembled in the twilight; when he came to the birds in the high hall garden calling Maud, Maud, Maud, he stopped short and asked an authoress who was present, what birds these were. The authoress, much embarrassed and feeling that the eyes of the company were upon her, faltered out, "Nightingales, sir." "Pooh!" said Tennyson, "what a cockney you are! Nightingales don't say Maud. Rooks do, or something like it: Caw, caw, caw." Then he went on reading.

Bayard Taylor made a pilgrimage to Farringford, and was deeply impressed with the poet's varied knowledge; as he climbed the steep combe of the chalk downs and followed the coast line westward to the Needles, in company with the Laureate, he saw that not a flower which the sheep had spared, not a pebble which the waves had washed ashore, escaped those keen eyes or failed to furnish themes for delightful comment. Dwellers in the island often met, in those days, a mysterious figure wrapped in a cloak, that haunted the deep glades and sometimes wandered over the cliffs till daylight faded and the stars came out, one by one. It was in no careless humor, but in closest, watchful sympathy with every aspect of nature that Tennyson used to ramble, gathering the images that crowd his poetry with exquisite similes like this:

"But pure as lines of green that streak the white
Of the first snowdrop's inner leaves."

As the poet's natural eye is trained to discern things hidden from other men, in the visible world, so the fine and subtle prospects of the spiritual realm often flash upon his inner sight. The goal of humanity, its final triumph in the achievement of an ideal society in earth, are subjects that find large place in the thought and work of all inspired imaginations. The central idea of religion and of poetry is the same; both unite in a hope as glorious as it is unquenchable, that Christ will yet return to bring back the Golden Age, and set up in earth a peaceable kingdom of righteousness. Shelley thought that human redemption would come in a sudden and startling manner—not according to the ordinary course of nature, that some poet-prophet would appear, whose trumpet tones would call the nations to his standard; the time, Shelley felt, was near.

And Tennyson, no less, in stirring dreams of dawn, heard the glad cry: "Arthur is come again, come with all good, and war shall be no more." As for the time, "The Golden Year," he says, "comes slow and sure." Tennyson's mind was thoroughly penetrated with the dignity and efficiency of law; he recognizes its workings in the moral as well as in the physical universe; this clear vision of law almost eclipses for him the personal character of God, and brings him into strong sympathy with the doctrine of evolution; consequently he is disposed to place the one Divine Event to which the whole creation moves, very far away, not in our time, nor in our children's time. It is only once or twice, as in the "Golden Year," that a flash of inspiration lights up the future and shows the folly of pushing the happy season back; when to the earnest soul this same grand year is ever at the doors.

The Golden Age, according to Tennyson's thought, will be supremely marked by the great development of scientific knowledge. The crowning race is

"Of those that, eye to eye, shall look
On knowledge; under whose command
Is Earth and Earth's, and in their hand
Is Nature like an open book."

In "Locksley Hall" he complains that science moves but slowly, slowly, creeping on from point to point, and in the "Day Dream," he longs to sleep a hundred years, through terms, of mighty wars, and wake on science, grown to more and more, learning the secrets of the brain and stars,—secrets as wild as aught of fairy lore. Who can doubt the wish, born to be granted, or deny the grand old bard who fell on sleep so softly in the golden moonlight, clasping to his breast that treasured volume of a Greater Poet, shall yet wake to conscious life and thought in the new age, to share the triumphs of a greater science?

A second feature of the happy time when the kindly earth shall rest in universal law, is the development of commerce. In the "Vision of the World," Tennyson sees the heavens fill with commerce,—equitable commerce, it must be, for order reigns from inmost to outmost and secular activities are in adjustment; argosies with magic sails, with their costly freightage crowd the seas, for wealth no longer lies in mouldering heaps, but scattered broadcast, like good seed to bear rich fruit; silks and gems and spices, clear of toll, enrich the markets of the Golden Year.

There is another feature of the coming age that Tennyson views as the crowning blossom of the flowering years. Science and commerce and the federation of the world would fail to yield pure joy to human hearts, without harmony between man and woman. When these twain shall grow this single pure and perfect being, merging thought in thought, purpose in purpose, will in will,

"Then comes the statelier Eden back to men:
Then reign the world's great bridals, chaste and calm:
Then springs the crowning race of humankind."

Cycles and Seasons in the Human World.

Fixed Times for Divine Manifestations; the Laws of Dispensations, Seed-Time, and Harvest; the Twelve Months of the Great Mazzarothic Year.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

THE BIBLE assures us that "seed time and harvest shall never cease." The seed time mentioned, is not simply that in the physical earth, but the planting of the divine seed in the human earth, to perpetuate the life of the Gods as well as of men. "Not seeds as of many, but thy seed, which is Christ," is the declaration of Scripture; and seed is to be planted, in order to continue its kind. God's seed is subject to the same laws as other seed, or it would not be called seed. Jesus said of seed: "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." Jesus was the sower who sowed the seed, the harvest of which, he said, would come in the end of the Christian age.

A book written for all peoples and all time, must be written mostly in the language of symbolism. Zechariah speaks of a stone on which should be seven eyes; and John saw a ram or lamb as it were slain, that had seven eyes and seven horns, and the eyes were the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. We speak of the wing of an army, but in the Greek, horn is the symbol used. A horn then, is a power; and there were seven of these on this same being that was a Lamb as it were slain. Jesus was the Lamb slain, but as we have seen, he was the reincarnation of six that had gone before him in time, who were in him. But the one that John saw had seven horns, being the Messiah to come in the end of the Christian age. Being the reincarnation—resurrection, of the six who had appeared before, at the end of six cycles, or ages, of the grand or equinoctial cycle, they were in him, so that he had seven horns, and, as the highest intelligence must accompany supreme power, he had seven eyes.

It is plain from the mighty results that followed the going forth of Jesus as Holy Ghost, into humanity—the earth, that he was a mighty horn;—possessed all power in heaven and earth, as he claimed, and as the prophets said of him. It is expressly declared that these seven eyes were the seven spirits of God that went out into the whole earth—the human earth. The sixth of these eyes—spirits of God, went out into the earth—the humanity, after the translation of Jesus. That it was an eye of God was plain from the results. It enabled those who received it to see the truth as Jesus saw it, and to obey it. These horns and eyes had a timic relation, one horn and one eye appearing in a man at the end of each seven divisions of the equinoctial or Mazzarothic cycle of 24,000 years. They have also a simultaneous relation, all appearing at the end of that cycle, or, as it is called in Revelation, year having twelve months, which are twelve ages, in one man who is the reincarnation of the six—the Lamb as it were slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God which go out into the whole earth,—the human earth which receives them after his translation, as the disciples of Christ received his Spirit—the Holy Ghost, after his theocrasis. Each of these seven was a coming of the Lord into humanity, for the age in which he came, after whose going away by translation, the humanity into which they went experienced a "time of refreshing from the presence of God," or, as the Greek word rendered refreshing means, souling up, or getting a new accession of soul power, or power that in its perfection would make its recipients to have life as Jesus had, and not go into the grave and rot as all men have since his time.

Jesus was the Word—the bread; but he said that "man shall not live [come into eternal life] by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." As Jesus was one Word—expression of God, so we see there were seven who came, as ripened fruits, in the end of seven divisions of the grand cycle. We see then, that there are seven comings of the Lord into his humanity during a zodiacal cycle of twelve dispensations, or 24,000 years. When one grand cycle ends another begins, and so seed time and harvest never cease.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

"MENTAL SCIENTISTS," as well as materialists, are reaching many absurd conclusions concerning mind and matter. Between the idea that there is no matter, and the idea that there is no mind but vibration of material atoms, there is every shade of ignorance concerning mental function. Schools of new thought are multiplying like mushrooms in a hotbed, and each one requires a new name, a new label. Where do thoughts come from? It is answered by the "mental scientists" that thought is everywhere; universal mind, the soul of all the universe, pervades all space, and we breathe the atmosphere of mind, the great ocean of thought, as easily as common air. The brain responds to impressions from mind in space, generated without brains, but which suddenly requires brains in which to continue the process of thought! Thoughts are said to be different shades of the one mind which the mysterious ego attracts from space. To the spiritualist, thoughts are spirits which live in the air. The Christian rarely ever pretends to think of the problems of mind; it is held that that which thinks and feels, and has the emotions of the Christian, is the soul, and that somehow it uses the brain as a thought machine! To the materialist there is no life nor experience in fact; no heat nor cold; no light nor darkness, no pleasure nor pain—what seems to be, is only different kinds of vibrations or jerking about of atoms of matter. When we see, little atoms bombard the eyeball, and produce a shaking up of atoms arranged like a coating of sand on the retina. Many materialists now hold that there is no matter at all, except mere atoms of ether, with different modes of motion, adjustment, and arrangement to produce all the forms, appearances, and illusions of life. What the materialist calls atoms of ether in motion, the mental scientist calls mind in action in space. There is scarcely any difference in fundamental concept between the new materialism and the new thought metaphysics. The latest theory of thought is put forth by the famous Max Nordau in his new work, "The Drones Must Die." It is that all space is filled with ether vibrations, and that the rays are diffused in space like rays of light or currents of electricity. Millions and billions of vibrations strike (!) incessantly upon the brain, and make impressions that have floated past the stars, in æons gone by; that every thought is a flash from external space, and that there is no original thought—the brain is a mere passive recording instrument of floating messages from eternity. Shade of Bacon! Where is there room for logic, laws of analogy, knowledge, perception—sense? The brain a mere telegraphic instrument, a hopper in a sandstorm? It means as little to the fools; but to the genuine Scientist, thought is the profoundest process of creation and life!

The prophetic warnings of Jesus to his disciples concerning false Christs, prophets, and teachers which should come at the end of the dispensation, are applicable to the thousands of people in modern times who have come in his name and claimed to possess his life. Never, in all the history of the world, has there been such a multitude of claimants to the possession of divine prerogatives, functions, and power as there is today. We find them as the heads of small sects; as mahatmas, adepts, chelas, and healers; in the thousands in christian science, mental science, and other phases of occultism and metaphysics, who claim to be God, containing and expressing the I Am, the Almighty in his perfection and power; in the thousands of those who claim to possess personal holiness, the Christ within, the Christ manifest in the flesh. In all these multi-form manifestations, we have the antichrist in power of deception, in fulfilment of the declarations of the true Christ, the head of the dispensation. The aggregate millions of false claimants to divine power, in the church and out of it, deny the personal God and his Messianic functions, and presume to substitute their own conceit in his stead. These are the "many" against whom Jesus warned his disciples. They are evidences of the presence of the true Teacher of truth, counterfeited on every hand through the presumptions and uncertain claims of the anti-scientific and antichristian elements of the old world.

The business of the Prophet of truth is to expose the evils and corruptions of society and government, and to point out the crimes of the times. Nineteen hundred years ago, a Jewish church was rebuked by Jesus for its hypocrisies and pretensions. He did not undertake to question that, externally, the Jewish church was the same as that established by Abraham; but it had fallen away and disgraced the name of the Almighty. The proud and wealthy Pharisee delighted to give alms and to pose as a philanthropist. The man who had taken the last farthing from the widow and stolen the property of the poor, condescended to make liberal donations to charitable institutions! Today, the church joins hands with a false system of philanthropy; the great denominations are now federating for the purpose of establishing a greater and broader movement of practical charity. The entire modern church moves in the direction of devising plans for the benefit of the poor, and a disgraceful charity work, the mere finding of avenues through which the millionaire may the more easily expend his millions with greater honors, is to be the result. Jesus denounced such methods while promulgating the system of genuine communism, wherein there could be no poor. The Koreshan Prophet rebukes the modern church and establishes the Koreshan System of equitable religio-social relations, the true system of philanthropy, which will prevail throughout ages to come.

There is no question about the conflict of modern science and the Bible; no well-informed person undertakes to believe both; and as the millions do not question modern science, the Bible is being discarded. Higher criticism is being spread until the entire church, false to its own creeds and declarations of loyalty to the Bible, is being honeycombed with agnosticism. The territory of the sacred writings is being invaded by plundering vandals. Koreshanity declares a protectorate over the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures, and will defend them under the banner of truth and science; and if the church does not leave the premises soon enough, it will be promptly evicted. The mind that expressed itself in the Bible is the same mind that expresses itself in the physical cosmos, and the same mind alone can read it; so that when the form of the physical world is discovered and its functions understood, there need be no mistake in any mind regarding the source of the absolute truth. The astronomy of the Bible and the astronomy of Nature will ultimately be accepted by the world, and fallacy will cease to be remembered.

A few New York churchmen are undertaking to fight higher criticism; they must do something to save themselves. The methods employed are very characteristic of a defenseless church: They propose holding a series of outdoor "services" under the auspices of the combined churches of the evangelical denominations of greater New York. Certainly now, whatever is in Christendom that is worthy or unworthy of being put to the front as the best they have to offer against modern "scientific" attacks on the Bible, should be manifest in this gigantic effort. It will be noticed that there will be no effort made to reconcile the Bible with the modern scientific fallacies which contradict it; the New York preachers are helpless to do anything against the growing agnosticism as long as they cling to the fallacies which supply the higher critics with material to throw at the Bible. The modern churchmen are afraid to deny modern "science," and they are afraid to deny the Bible; and they are under the ridiculous necessity of endeavoring to believe both at the same time!

Proctor, the world-renowned astronomer, said, "To speak in plain terms—so far as modern science is concerned, the idea of a personal God is inconceivable." The modern mind, saturated with the fallacies of popular astronomy, repudiates the God of the Bible, the apex of human existence, the Most High, the supreme Ruler, Light, and Sun of the human world. Koreshanity is firmly founded upon the demonstrated premise of the personality of the cause of personalities—the personality of Jesus the Almighty, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace. You see, even Proctor recognized that there is a relation existing between astronomy and theology; and the most ordinary mind in the universe ought to see that any idea of God necessarily involves an idea of his work;—theology and cosmogony are inseparable. People who claim to believe in God and do not care what the shape of the world is, do not really care whether there is a God or not!

The Methodist church is advocating a moral clearing-house for all religious denominations, on the plea that "the number of ministerial crimes is rapidly increasing. We hesitate to say it because of the use made of it by malignant opponents of religion; but it is undeniable that the rate of increase is rapid." It is claimed that a number of scoundrels from the Methodist church are now preaching in the Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and other denominations. Perhaps these latter denominations are just the places for such preachers,—or have they as rival establishments, cured where the Methodists failed? At any rate, the clearing-house would rid the churches of preachers whose morals have become so corrupt as to pollute the mental and moral atmosphere of the congregations. Place them on the remnant counter as job lots for sale cheap, and label them, "Samples of degraded humanity, educated by the modern church."

The peace congress is held under the shadow of the sword; the powers represented at the Hague owe their national existence to the force of arms, and must they now renounce the factors through which their existence has been maintained? The new kingdom does not depend upon the plot in the international comedy at the Hague; peace will not come until the swords are beaten into plowshares and pruning-hooks—until the armaments of war are transformed into implements of industry. Are the nations doing this? We laugh at the farce,—at the hypocrisy of the Christian nations in their endeavor to foist upon the world a peace that is not peace—an oppressive calm before the awful storm of revolution. The world laughs at the scheme because it loves war, and is moving in the direction of the greatest war of all history; and we laugh at the effort at the Hague because it is a mere drop of water in the crater of the terrible social volcano!

The universe is not constructed upon the principle of "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none." There is no equality in heaven, in earth, nor in hell. The laws of being provide for the Most High, the climax of aspiration, as well as the lowest point of human retrogression and degradation—and there is every degree and quality of life and character between. The sun of the physical cosmos has special privileges—it is in touch with every atom of matter in the great structure. It is supreme, the ruler of the mineral kingdom; while a single visible star is inferior and subordinate to the sun. The true human government must be constructed after the fashion of the government of the great physical form in which we live.

The Christ said, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword;" and the wars of Christendom during the past dispensation fulfil the declaration. The cross of the divine nature with mortal humanity was a declaration of war upon the kingdom of the devil, and the result was the church militant. If Jesus came to bring war, who shall bring peace? If Jesus was the antitypical David, who is to be the antitypical Solomon? Shall it be a few despots of fallen Christianity? Or shall it be the central Personality of prophecy, the Majesty of the heavens, who shall not only make war upon war, but also upon the corrupt nations that are endeavoring to make peace with the devil!

It is suggested that the people should have freedom before anything else. We would suggest, in order to insure the safety of the people at large, that the first requisite is a little scientific sense of what freedom is. Remove restraint from a selfish and depraved people, and the entire world would become transformed to a regular Filipino pandemonium! Koreshanity takes a sensible view of reform, and hence its effort to educate the masses in the principles of organic unity and life, and the processes of transformation from the present evil world to the new era.

The wise men of the East followed the Guiding Star, and it led them to the true God. Strange—an infant in the manger, yet the Lord of heaven; a child born, yet the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace. The Guiding Star of the Koreshan Science illumines the mind to recognize the truth of the same theology as that which came naturally in the divine man nineteen hundred years ago—the theology that is demonstrated in nature, in the physical cosmos, and now revealed to the world.

The human mind cannot conceive of a more definite or absolutely true premise of all reason, no more tangible and infallible evidences of the expressed truth of the Almighty, than in the form and function of the physical cosmos. Whatever truth is declared in nature is absolute, because the laws of expression of cause in effect are immutable and unchangeable.

The artist insults humanity and proves false to his calling when he portrays the Czar of Russia, attended by an angel with laurels for his brow, extending his arms to bless the world with peace. The world protests against that "peace" that has its source in the land of the most absolute tyranny in the earth!

What we object to is not the trusts, but the men who are in them, and the uses to which the trusts are put. A trust of pirates is a bad thing, but a trust of men able to save the world from its present hells will ultimately be demanded to inaugurate the Golden Age.

Cyclones and tornadoes are sweeping over the world, demolishing old institutions. The angry clouds of revolution, with the penciling vortices, are writing destruction upon the surface of the world, and will culminate in the most awful storm of all history.

If astronomers would measure the earth's surface as often as they measure the heavens, the Copernican system would soon be no more. One indisputable fact concerning the earth's true form overthrows all the conclusions of the modern scientific fallacy.

The more advanced the present perverted social and economic system becomes,—the greater the facilities for conducting the business of the competitive system and its excrescences, the greater is the oppression inflicted upon the people.

God is past finding out by men who search for him in the wrong place; but that does not prevent him from revealing himself in the natural human world at definite periods in the great Mazzarothic year.

It is admitted that the sun of the Copernican system will burn out after awhile. This is evident from the fact that the "light" of modern science has been waning for many years.

At the time the mystics are seeking the secret of life in the occult, the Almighty is thundering forth his truth and laws in the external world.

The greatest declaration of independence of the western world, will be its declaration of freedom from the bondage of the money power.

It is evident that the man who advocates that God exists in the sky, cannot expect the Almighty to tabernacle in his heart.

The horseless carriage, the brainless man, the Godless world, and wireless telegraphy are startling contemporaries!

A critic can never make a truth more true than its author, nor a lie more false than the man who told it.

The writers of the Bible were not compelled to hire criticism in order to immortalize their works.

The government of the United States is afflicted with a weak constitution.

Before the world obtains universal peace it will have to fight for it!

The people declare their trust in the gold god on the face of their coins!

THE EDITOR.

The Salvation of the Savages.

(1) Will the ignorant peoples of dark and uncivilized countries be saved? Will they, having no knowledge of what constitutes sin, be held responsible for sins, as are the enlightened peoples? (2) What is that in man which, when he thinks of death, says that he shall live after this life?—D. C. W., Boonville, Mo.

(1) The salvation of a people involves all the factors and processes of ethnic, social, moral, religious, and mental progress. The laws of human progression provide for the ultimate salvation of all peoples under the sun. Humanity comprises a great universe of activity; it has its circumference and its center, and all the co-ordinate forms and corresponding functions of the great physical universe. In the human world, the path of the great Anthropostic Sun is the path of salvation. As the sign moves from constellation to constellation in the physical heavens, in the solar precession, so the human Sun moves from people to people in corresponding times. A process of salvation obtains in a given people in a given dispensation, when the divine star of illumination moves through it, and not until then.

By way of illustration, we refer to the progress of the divine mind in the Jewish people; the Almighty moved through that people during the Jewish dispensation; he was not in any other people—"You alone, of all nations of the earth, have I known." At the end of the Jewish dispensation, the progressive elements of the Hebrew nation were resurrected and saved in the person of Jesus the Messiah. Jesus was the door of the dispensation, the door of transposition of mental forces from the Jewish church to the Christian age; and when Jesus poured out his life into a new people, there began a new process of salvation, and civilization has followed the majestic march of the Christ through the human hells. That part of the world through which the Almighty has moved during the Christian dispensation, will come to judgment at the end of the dispensation—and that judgment will obtain in all domains of human activity in the civilized world.

The resurrection from mortal humanity will soon take place. It will be the harvest of the age, the result of the sowing of divine life in the most progressive peoples of the world; and as salvation is the result of the dissemination of the divine essences sown in specific channels, there is no salvation from death for any peoples except those in whom the essences found permanent reception. In the meantime, the barbarians have made some progress; they will ultimately reach the climax on the ecliptic of human development, and become the peoples in whom the Almighty will operate; but they must await their turn.

However, during the Golden Age the world will be enlightened and civilized, and every man will be saved to the extent of his aspirations. The idea in Christendom that every man is to be judged at the end of this age by the same standard, after unequal opportunities, and all the saved to be saved to equal stations in immortal life, and all the damned condemned to the same punishment in a literal lake of fire and brimstone, is one of the most unnatural, unreasonable, and absurd fallacies of modern times. Men are saved through knowledge of the truth and application of the laws of life; and those who do not know the truth are not amenable to those laws, and the extent of their "accountability" is measured by their own ideals.

(2) The desire to live is instinctive. It is the interior aspiration, the interior consciousness or sense that the entities of mind will survive the disaster of corruptible dissolution; and in the mind of the ignorant, modern world, it is the vague expression of the persistency of life. This hope to live again is seen in all planes of existence; and provisions are made for the resumption of existence through laws of generation and re-embodiment, whether in the mineral, vegetable, animal, or human kingdoms. The very fact that an atom exists, is proof that the life it possesses existed before, and it moves in lines of progress in possession of the alchemic sense that it will exist again, no matter through what alchemic changes it is made to pass. Neither the ego of the man nor the soul of the atom can get outside of the universe, nor cease to be and to perform its use in the great world of existence. And it should not be at all wonderful, that in the human mind and consciousness of existence there should inhere a supreme desire and determination to live again.

Optical Illusions and Proofs of the Earth's Concavity.

My questions necessarily relate to celestial phenomena, since terrestrial appearances cannot be urged as evidence without begging the question at issue. On my asking in effect, why cellular evidences were absent from the sky, and Copernican ones so abundant, the answer was, "optical illusion;" and that answer would be equally pertinent to any question I might ask.—PROF. J. W. T., Salem, O.

The difficulty with the astronomer is, that he wants to go off into the sky, concerning which he knows absolutely nothing for certain, to prove the form of the earth, while the Koreshan Astronomer begins with the tangible surface upon which we live, to prove the shape of the sky. Now, which is the more logical and reasonable—to begin with a known premise, from which to arrive at conclusions concerning things to which we have not direct access? or to begin with an unknown quantity to reach conclusions concerning things within the reach of direct processes?

Did you ever look into a pseudoscope? It is an optical apparatus which reverses the relief of all material objects. It makes hollows of prominences, and converts hills to cavities; it reverses the human face, and gives it the appearance of the inside of a mask. In it a globe appears concave, and a concave map appears convex. Now, suppose the mind were ignorant of the pseudoscope when receiving impressions of objects through it,—would not that be an optical illusion? Wherever, for any reason, there is a false sense of vision or a false interpretation of what is seen, the result is optical illusion, whether it be in viewing a picture, a landscape, or the sky.

Without a knowledge of the laws of perspective, the mind observing two metallic lines of the railway apparently approaching each other in the distance, might conclude that they did so in fact; you see, in such case there would be a difference in appearance and fact, although it would be a fact that they apparently approached each other. The illusioned mind would reach a false conclusion from the appearance, while the enlightened mind would reach conclusions from the basis of the actual fact, when the factor of illusion is eliminated. This is exactly the difference between the Copernican system and the Koreshan Astronomy; the former is founded upon what the heavens appear to be; while the Koreshan is founded upon what the heavens are known to be, after the factors of illusion are determined and eliminated from the problem.

There has never been an astronomer of the Copernican school that has ever considered the laws and factors of optics and physics in making conclusions concerning the points of light in the physical heavens; and we claim that until the laws of vision are known, it is impossible for the astronomer to correctly interpret what he sees in media whose indices of refraction are unknown; neither can he determine the true location of a single star until he knows the exact course of a ray of light from any given star to the eye. Without these necessary factors, there must obtain a deceptive appearance through the false sense of vision, the astronomical pseudoscope, now almost universally applied in astronomical research.

When the laws of visual perception are scientifically comprehended, everything seen in the sky or in the earth, demonstrates the concavity of the surface on which we live. We not only say and prove that the evidences of the truth of the Copernican system are not abundant in the sky, but that there never has been a single absolute proof of its truth observed anywhere, and there never can be! The Copernican system is an accumulation of centuries of fallacious conclusions; it is a great network of fallacy. When any truth is expressed concerning the form or function of the physical universe, the astronomer is very desirous of testing it by some false conclusion without reference to a single fact in heaven or in earth! We first lay the foundation upon the earth; and if our friends concede to us the field of tangible facts, they may make what they can of infinite space until they return to fundamentals of rational conclusion—a demonstrated premise. It is easy to build card houses without foundations; but solid scientific structures, never!

The Tilt of the Poles in Koreshan Astronomy.

There is another thing which puzzles me, one that you will probably think I ought to know, and that is, why the position of the north and south poles in the Koreshan System seems to be nearly the reverse of their position in the Copernican system.—READER.

The first thing necessary to point out in answering the above question, is the reason for the tilt of the poles in all illustrations of the position of the earth in the Copernican system. For the sake of uniformity of illustration, the plane of the ecliptic or the orbit of the earth is taken as the basis. This plane is pictured as being horizontal, and of course the poles of the earth, inclining $23\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ from the perpendicular of this plane, would tilt $23\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$. The north pole is pictured as being up, and the south pole, down. You see, then, the basis of the relative position of the poles in the old system. You will notice that all mounted school globes tilt $23\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ from the plane of the perpendicular; the plane of the ecliptic is horizontal,—usually a brass ring encircling the earth and supported by the globe stand.

Now, leave out all consideration of the above, for the present, and look at the tilt from another standpoint—the standpoint of the observer in any part of the earth. Obviously, if the earth were convex, any point would be the highest point to the observer; that is, every man's horizon would be the apex of the bulge or arc. Now, suppose you stood at the north pole on the convex earth; the south pole would be the opposite, directly beneath, at the antipodes. If the observer be at the equator, it would be the same distance to the poles—and the earth's axis would be parallel to the horizontal of the observer,—and you can readily fix the angle in the mind's eye.

Suppose the observer were at 45° north latitude, say at Montreal, Canada. The curvation of the earth would be downward from that point, both north and south; it would be 45° to the north pole, but 135° to the south pole—quite a difference in their distance. Reverse the direction of the curvature, and you have what is shown in the illustrations in the Sixteenth Page of THE FLAMING SWORD. We have pictured the universe as related to the perpendicular at Chicago, about 42° north latitude. There is a curvature upward—a short arc—to the north pole, and a longer arc to the south pole; but in the illustration you will notice that, as related to the continents, equator, and ecliptic, the position of the poles is the same as in the convex theory. The idea is, that instead of being on top of the arc, as in the center of the horizon on the convex surface, the observer is always at the bottom of the concavity; and in taking this as a basis for our illustrations, there is manifest some difference between the position of the poles in the Koreshan System—from our latitude, and the position of the poles from the basis of the plane of the ecliptic in the Copernican system.

Modern Charity and the Poor.

"Ye have the poor always with you," and we also have with us what makes and keeps most of them poor. The following experience of the Czar of Russia is suggestive:

"When the Czar and Czarina took their departure from Paris they handed over a hundred thousand francs for distribution in alms. Two-franc pieces were handed to each recipient. One of the officials, anxious to discover the use to which the money was put, marked all the coins that passed through his hands. He allowed a short time to elapse, and then sent to the nearest liquor shop for change for a thousand-franc note. Nearly all the silver brought back to him bore the telltale scratch."—The Christian, Boston.

Koreshan Astronomy in Georgia.

Chatham Academy at Savannah Enthusiastically Receives Rev. E. M. Castle, Koreshan Scientist and Lecturer.

"The earth is a hollow, concave sphere, 8,000 miles in diameter, and of this hollow sphere the sun is the center. Compared with the earth in size, the sun is infinitesimal; in energy and force it is the point from which light, life, and all that is, gravitate. Upon the inside of this hollow sphere, the people of the earth live and have their being. Outside of the shell the universe ends and there is nothing."

This is something of the startling theory propounded yesterday afternoon to a little gathering, comprising the most advanced thinkers and the clearest and most scholarly minds in Savannah, by Rev. E. M. Castle, priestess and expounder of the new Cellular Cosmogony and of the Koreshan Unity. Convinced, her hearers might not have been, but pleased and charmed there was not one who would not have owned himself.

For two hours Rev. Castle held her audience in her grasp, and though at times they found some difficulty in following her in the untrodden paths of science in which she led them, they caught enough to convince them that a new prophet had arisen in Israel and a new explanation of the structure of the universe, held earnestly and argued out logically by honest men, had been propounded.

It would be vain to try to follow her through the mass of argument and explanation and illustration which made up her lecture; the best that can be done is to give some idea of what the Koreshans believe, and upon what their belief is founded. Briefly, it is something like this:

The nations live upon the inside of the globe, which constitutes not only the whole of the earth, but the whole of the universe. The infinity and universality of matter, in the sense that it is boundless in extent and without end, is denied. The visible universe is all and more than there is of it, for the planets are but reflections from discs of mercury located in the envelope that surrounds the globe, and the stars have in themselves no material existence. They are, nevertheless, centers of energy and force.

The Koreshans prove that the earth is all that there is of the universe, and that no conception of infinity is either possible or correct by the following syllogism: "Form is a fundamental property of existence; therefore, that which has no form has no existence. Limitation is a property of form. The universe has existence; therefore it has form, hence, it has limitation." In this, though the Koreshans disdain assumptions, there is an assumption, namely, that form is a fundamental property of existence, whereas it is only a property of those examples of existence with which the people of the globe are thrown in contact. But the Koreshans dispose also of an infinite universe by saying that there is no need for it, and that it complicates matters more than a little.

The phenomena by which the convexity of the earth is usually attempted to be proved, are brushed aside as mere optical illusions, that would still be present were the surface of the earth flat, concave, or any other shape. Without entering too deeply into this branch of the subject, the same law of perspective that makes two parallel railway tracks appear to meet in the distance, is called into requisition and made to explain the phenomena of the disappearing boat and the lighthouse rising from the sea. To prove their own contention, that the surface of the earth is concave, the Koreshans have conducted a series of geodetic experiments in Florida; and as a result of these, announce that they have demonstrated their position beyond the fear of doubt or the danger of successful contradiction.

The idea was to establish a straight line, one that could not be affected by optical illusion or atmospheric disturbances, and to attain this end a member of the society invented an instrument that is called the Rectilineator. It consists of double T-squares, and armed with a quantity of these and standards upon which they might be erected, the party of surveyors journeyed to the little town of Naples, on the west coast of Florida, where the smooth waters of the Gulf offered a tempting field for their experiments.

One of the sections of the Rectilineator was fixed securely to a standard, and another placed exactly end to end to it. This second section was also fixed to a standard, and so on; the line was surveyed for about four and a half miles along the Gulf coast. The point first selected was at a distance of 128 inches from the water; but at the last point, four and a half miles distant, the plane of the Rectilineator touched the surface of the water. The adjustments were made with the greatest possible nicety; and the members of the surveying party claim that there can be no doubt that they have succeeded in establishing an absolutely straight line, and that the result of the experiment shows the earth to be concave instead of convex, and that the Copernican theory is false from beginning to end.

It would be idle to attempt a full explanation of all that the Koreshans claim. Suffice it that their theory is sufficient to account for everything that is visible in the heavens above and the earth beneath, and the waters under the earth, and that the theories of old and new philosophers and astronomers are brushed aside as so much rubbish from a table needed for the reception of something of more value. At least, that is what they say.

Nor does the Cosmogony of the Koreshan Unity conclude its teachings and its claim to fame. Built and established upon the system of Cosmogony, are a religion and a sociological creed. The religion accepts the Bible absolutely and without question, affirming that every word of it is literally true. Indeed, the Koreshans say that the Copernican theory and the doctrine of modern science are subversive of the teachings of the Bible, and that unless their Cosmogony be accepted, the Biblical account of creation and the Bible's reference to the universe must be deemed untrue and fall to the ground. The sociological theory is akin to communism in some of its better regulated forms.

The name is derived from the Founder of the Koreshan Unity and the discoverer of the system, DR. CYRUS R. TEED, of Chicago, by whom it was formulated and announced thirty years ago. In the Hebrew, Cyrus is Koresh; and from the Hebrew name the substantives and adjectives of the new creed are derived.

Rev. Castle will deliver a second lecture on the Koreshan Unity at the Chatham Academy tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock, and to this the public is invited. The lecture is to be delivered at the special request and insistence of those who were so fortunate as to hear her first explanation, and who were enthusiastic to a man over the charm of her manner and the grace and clearness of her style. It is only fair to say that the ladies who made up the party were just as much pleased and some of them more convinced. In the party were Dr. William E. Boggs, Chancellor of the University; Supt. Ashmore, Dr. Dunn, Prof. Walter Wilson, and a number of others.—The Morning News, Savannah, Ga., June 9.

Cellular Cosmogony in Canada.

A Writer Admits that the Copernican System Has not Been Proved; Reviews "the Most Remarkable Book of the Century."

Kingston, Ont., June 9.—Editor British Whig:—In these days of so called demonstrated science, we are much shocked if some man comes along and tells us that we are standing on our heads instead of our feet. The world has been told for a century that the present age was about the only age in which men were supposed to know anything. We have heard this so often from the public teachers, that we have come to believe that it must be true. If there is any one thing which, above another, the majority of people in Kingston, and many other places, believed, it was that the world was round and that we lived on the outside of the same. But now comes along a gentleman from Chicago, Rev. Mr. Mitchell, who sells a book entitled CELLULAR COSMOGONY, the aim of which is to teach the theory that we inhabit the earth, that is, that the earth is a sphere some 8,000 miles in diameter, and that the inhabitants dwell upon the concave, instead of the convex surface. In other words, that our earth is a shell, and that we live on the inside instead of the outside of the shell.

This discussion, like every other, stimulates inquiry and promotes thought. All astronomers are quite aware that the Copernican or modern system is only a theory. Copernicus himself is reported as saying of his theory: "Neither let any one, so far as hypotheses are concerned, expect anything certain from astronomy." Goethe is reported as observing: "In whatever way or manner may have occurred this business, I must still say that I curse this modern theory (the Copernican system)." Dr. Woodhouse, of England, says, "The whole range of astronomy does not contain the proofs of its own accuracy."

Popular System Not Demonstrated.

I have made these quotations simply to show that the science of astronomy is still an open one, and is in no particular a demonstrated system. It has always seemed very strange to me that if our system is the true one, it was so long a time before the world found it out. We read nothing of it in the ancient literature of Greece and Rome, nor do we find it recorded in the sacred Scriptures.

The Copernican System is simply the best one up to date, and that is substantially the most that can be said in its favor. A good many people run away with the idea that the Copernican system is well brought within the range of mathematical demonstration. But of course this is an error. The fact is, our ingenious professors and mathematicians have constructed a mathematical system to correspond with the Copernican theory.

Copernicus starts out and invents a theory, in substance, that the earth is round; that it revolves on its own axis once in twenty-four hours; that the sun is the center of our solar system consisting of some eight primary planets and a great number of asteroids; that the diurnal revolution of the earth is the cause of day and night, and that the change of season is produced by the inclination of the earth's axis to the plane of its orbit and the revolution of the earth around the sun once in 365½ days. In other words, that the inclination of the earth's axis, the pole of which is pointed in a fixed direction, produces the change of seasons, and the earth's revolution about the sun fixes the length of the seasons. Of course, being neither an astronomer nor a mathematician, I give only the outline of these theories.

The point that I desire to make, while a firm believer in the present system, is that the whole science of astronomy is only a theory; that all our knowledge thereof is only arbitrary and relative; that there is no such thing in space as up or down, right or left, east or west, but that these terms are merely arbitrary.

Koreshan Astronomy Overthrows the Copernican System.

Now comes in this new system. The author of the new system of "Koreshanity," DR. CYRUS R. TEED, of Chicago, upsets all our preconceived notions of the universe, and in this respect this is the most remarkable book of the century. We have been educated to look out upon creation as an illimitable space. That space, like eternity, has neither beginning nor ending. That the nearest star, Sirius, the dog star, was so far away that light traveling at the rate of about 200,000 miles a second, could not reach the earth from that star in less than some eight years, and that the stars in the "milky way" would require the time of 2,000 years for light to reach us therefrom. But the new system confines all creation to a space 8,000 miles in diameter.

Modern astronomy tells us that the sun is 500 times as large as all the planets put together; but KORESH tells us that it is confined within the shell of the earth. The text books put into the hands of the student in all our schools today, of course with the understanding that they must not be questioned because, forsooth, they are both scientific and mathematical, tell us that Jupiter is some 1,400 times larger than our earth, and Saturn a thousand times larger; but KORESH has them all nicely tucked away within the shell of this revolving ball. As for the comets, have not our astronomers spent years in the most intricate calculations to fix their periods, and some of them have been given periods of revolution about the sun, of hundreds and thousands of years, traveling through space meanwhile with inconceivable velocity; but evidently comets don't cut much of a figure with this new philosophy, for they would soon butt up against the earth's concavity.

Concavity Seen From the Balloon.

Without expressing any opinion concerning this new theory, not having had sufficient time to read the same, much less to digest it, I am much impressed with some facts brought out. For instance, statements are produced from those who have made ascents in balloons, to the effect that the outer rim of the horizon is always on a level with the balloon, whatever its height, thus lending color to the theory of the earth's concavity. There are many of us who have observed the same phenomenon upon viewing a large body of water from a considerable elevation. The higher we go up, the more the far horizon appears to follow us, and apparently to be on a level with the point of our elevation.

The author lumbers up what is unmistakably a great book, with many fine-spun theories about religion, politics, and political economy, etc., which might well be left out; for what can these subjects have to do with any particular theory of the construction of the universe? The most remarkable statement in the work, is that the concavity of the earth's shell can be demonstrated by running a straight line, say, four miles in length, near the surface of a body of water. Our theory of the convexity of the earth is, that the curvature is some eight inches to the mile, and hence at a distance of four miles one end would be 10 feet and 8 inches above the water. This author states that experiments made by a Geodetic surveying party on the shore of Florida, demonstrated that such a line so laid out from an altitude of 128 inches, converged with the water instead of rising above it.

Viewing Ships "Hull Down" is an Important Fact if True.

We leave all such questions to those engineers who can lay out such lines, for it is a very sure thing that we can not. Another very interesting statement is, that if we will put a good telescope to our eye, upon a ship that has disappeared from view, with the exception of the masts, the entire ship will be again brought into full view. This is an important fact if true. The book is well worth reading and studying. How the Founder of the System accounts for the eclipses of the sun and moon, I have not had time to examine; but we must remember that these eclipses were tabulated thousands of years before any such man as Copernicus was ever heard of.

It must be admitted that the study of astronomy has the effect of cultivating the faculty of sublimity, and of enlarging the mental and spiritual horizon. I strongly suspect that all these fine sounding terms in our text books, the ecliptic, equinoctial, zodiac, declination, right ascension, etc., while exceedingly interesting, are but the inventions of our astronomers to fit into a formulated system. It is an easy matter when you have an admitted measuring line, as for instance, the diameter of the earth's orbit, to calculate by the aid of trigonometry and the wonderful principle of the triangle and the rule of three and other mathematical principles, many astronomical problems. But when the great questions of time and eternity are solved, then, and not till then, will we have a demonstrated astronomic system.

We have several gentlemen in Kingston whose opinion would be very valuable in these and kindred questions; but for some reason they are not often given through the press. All that we know of these matters above the ancients is very slight, and it is probable that they who laid the foundations of the pyramids surpassed us in astronomical knowledge.—M.S. BURNETTE, in Daily British Whig, Kingston, Ont.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly June 29.

The current number of Leslie's Weekly, dated June 29th, has what is said to be the first photograph ever taken of a disastrous cyclone, just as it was about to burst. It was photographed by a commercial traveler at Kingsley, Iowa, while the cloud was still three miles off, and while everybody in the place was running to find shelter, for the tornado swept across the place with incredible speed and violence. Every reader will be interested in the double page, showing the principal stopping points and the route of Admiral Dewey's long homeward journey, half-way across the globe. Other illustrations include more of the splendid photographs of the war in the Philippines by Leslie's Weekly's special artist; scull-racing, a popular sport all over the country; the launching of the American cup-defender, the Columbia—the only photographs of the event that were taken; life aboard the transport Sherman, en route to Manila; the great sportsmen's meet at Buffalo; cyclone pictures; paying off the Cuban soldiers in Havana; and many other timely illustrations of contemporaneous events. The letter-press not only covers the subjects illustrated, but also topics of current and vital interest; interesting illustrated personals, editorials, and other interesting departments.

The Saturday Evening Post, June 23.

Some of the most dramatic episodes that have occurred in the halls of Congress during the last thirty years, are told in a series of papers which ex-Senator John J. Ingalls has written for The Saturday Evening Post of Philadelphia. The first paper of the series, entitled Famous Feuds in Congress, which appears in the issue of June 24, gives an authentic and vivid account of the scenes that led up to the life-long enmity between Blaine and Conkling, and Conkling and Lamar. Other notable features of this number are: A Soldier's View of a Warless World, by Major-General Nelson A. Miles, and the story of The Little House in the Little Street where the Sun Never Came, by John Luther Long—one of the strongest stories of this brilliant writer.

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.

Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST and REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY and FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in weeks of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a commonsense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined. Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

Whole No. 343

The Basis of Successful Communism.

Instances of Success and Failure in United Life; Fallacious Theology of Those Who Fail; the True Religion the Bond of Unity; the Heroism of Success.

IN ANOTHER department of this issue of THE SWORD, we publish an editorial by the originator of the Ruskin colony, after one year's experience in that institution. The reader will note particularly the specific and emphatic injunction to "leave all colony attempts alone." The writer has already admitted that he was not prepared for communistic or co-operative life, and the sequel shows that he was not. The spirit of united life is impelling hundreds of thousands of people; but if we examine the nature of this impulse, we discover a principle involved, the very character of which carries the elements of discord, resulting in chaos and anarchy, into all colonization or united life efforts. The writer of the article iterates this statement: "I am convinced that no peace or success can be obtained in isolated communities under outside environments, unless the members are held together by ties of religious bigotry, where a few do all the thinking and consequently the ruling." He assumes that, because some religious ideas are false, and those who adhere to them are bigots, all religious adherents are bigots, and that the success of isolated communities must depend upon religious bigotry.

The very fact that there exists religious bigotry, is proof that there must also obtain a genuine religious principle, the adherents of which are not bigots. There are heartaches and much bitterness throughout the world, outside of communistic and co-operative life; and this fact constitutes one of the prime factors of the impulse toward united life. Heartaches and bitterness largely comprise the impulses and incentives which have forced the pioneers of every cause from the hardships endured, and from which they wish to escape, into the greater privations and heartaches of pioneer work. While the operation of aggressive forces on the lines of progress has to do with unborn generations, it does not follow that all pioneers have in view the happiness of posterity so much as present, personal advantage.

The motives which impel men to seek the gold fields of Alaska are purely selfish, and many succumb to the terrible privations of those undeveloped and rigorous conditions; others return and curse the movement, and advise their friends to avoid the disastrous consequences of the mistaken notions regarding Alaskan possibilities. Alaska will develop into a great and rich country; but it will reach this climax through the terrible sufferings of pioneer life. No man can read the history of the progress of the world, and fail to see that it is wrought through tribulation. The history of every movement projected from intolerable conditions, teems with the records of heroic struggles, either with the forces and elements of Nature, which these movements confront, or the prejudices, animosities, and bigotries of such as oppose encroachments upon the conservatism which would maintain conditions doomed to become obsolete.

If we were to analyze, for comparison, the efforts at colonization, we would most naturally and justly take those efforts which, though attended with some indications of successful progress, have yet failed. The best examples of communistic life, in the past—in our own country—may be found in the Shaker and Harmonite societies. They each embodied some elements of success and some of failure. They both succeeded for a time, and both have met ignominious failure. In the above statement, we allude merely to exoteric manifestation. The results of these efforts, beyond what is outwardly observable in the communities themselves, may be classified under exoteric and esoteric titles. They comprise a monumental example of what can be accomplished in united effort. This example belongs to the days of their great prosperity, when they were united under the religious impulse.

The religion of the Shaker and Harmonite societies constituted the foundation of their bond of unity. It held them together, though their hearts were full of personal jealousy; for no honest Shaker or Harmonite will deny that the whole career of the once great communities was marked by conflicting and opposing personal interests. It cannot be said that they have not partially fulfilled some great purpose yet to be realized in the aggregation of social effort. A critical study of these efforts—in such analysis as will define the principles of success and failure, and enable the analyst to discriminate them—must necessarily make its impression upon the generation fortunate enough to fall within its influence. The psychic energy passing out into the world on esoteric lines, from these communosocialistic developments, is equally potent, if not of even greater force than the merely rational efficacy of the study of their history. These societies, as they have existed in the past, will never recuperate. Their constitution, either incorporated into the life or written upon parchment, possessed the elements of a specific longevity. At the point where the constitution failed, the body disintegrated. This is a universal law, to which every organism is subject.

The societies mentioned were both dualistic. They each embodied the doctrine of the counterpartal relation of the bridegroomhood and bridehood of God, and thence of the bridegroomhood and bridehood of man as dual. While this was embodied in their religious convictions, they failed to incorporate in their natural body, the concept obtaining in their religious aspirations. They made the grave mistake of judging according to the sight of their external eye, limited to the special case of ordinary animal life in man. Man is dual, male and female; ergo, God is dual, male and female. This was their argument. God is not dual, but biune; and when the perfect man comes, he will partake of the same characteristics,—the two forms will blend into one. The biune or composite being, the one who has the circle of life complete in himself, is the immortal one.

The Harmonite society had a central spiritual conception, but it was not incorporated into the constitutional life of its organism. The system was founded upon the idea of the Lord's coming, and his coming to them in a specific manner. The principle was not embodied, because from the basis of their concept it could not be. They believed literally in the existence of the Father and the Son in two personalities, and the advent of the Son riding upon a white horse, followed by thousands of others also upon white horses, coming in the physical clouds of the material heavens. The society ended in an external dualism, a dualism of conflict which terminated their career as a communistic society. The society had two heads,—a kind of spiritual and natural trusteeship. Father Henrici was the spiritual head, embodying largely the natural and financial control of the society after Father Rapp passed out. Trustee Lentz, during the latter part of their history, was a general superintendent of agriculture, and of some other matters of the society. There was no incorporated principle of co-ordination in the spiritual and material management.

This may be illustrated by one little circumstance with which the author of this article was personally familiar. Father Henrici laid out a road, which he intended should pass through a portion of the estate over which Trustee Lentz imagined he had absolute jurisdiction. Henrici himself took us to the street and definitely outlined his plans for future prosperity and development of the Harmonite town. Later, while visiting again at the "Harmonite" village, we noticed that a brick house had been built across the projected street, at the point where Mr. Lentz supposed Father Henrici's material jurisdiction ought to terminate. We asked Mr. Lentz's explanation of the circumstance. His reply was, that he built the house to prevent Father Henrici from carrying out his plan of encroaching upon his rights. Father Rapp was supreme in authority while he lived, and the society then had one material head; when it became two-headed it died. It became two-headed, because it was the embodiment of the spiritual concept obtaining in the mind of the originator of the community. If the original concept had been biune (not necessarily true because biune), and the principle had been incorporated in the constitutional life of the body, after Father Rapp died, the principle could have been extended into another head of the same character.

Can a united life effort embody the good of the Harmonites, with other good features of united life, where the evil or defective features are eliminated, and thus secure a better communism with a greater tenure of longevity? It is not in the purpose or province of the genuine United Life system, to even attempt an isolated communism. It is, however, in the line of order that the final system of United Life shall originate and progressively develop from an organic nucleus, merely germinal in its beginning. This organic nucleus must embody, in the least form, the principles and form of the unfolded kingdom.

The writer of the editorial which was mentioned in the beginning of this article, taken from The Appeal to Reason, admits from his own experience that some kind of religious principle must constitute the basis of an isolated united life. We would add that, to insure success in a general united life effort, the true religion for the specific age in which the effort is actuated, must constitute the bond of unity and obligation. The question resolves itself, then, to an analysis of the genuine religion (bond of unity) for this present beginning of a dispensation.

Essential Factors in Social Reconstruction.

Scientific Organization and Leadership Absolutely Necessary; the Unity of Church and State Obtains in the Coming Universal Empire.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE FOUNDING of the empire which precedes and ushers in the divine arch-natural kingdom, involves the organization of a voluntary industrial system characterized by thorough military discipline. The first requisite in the establishment of such an order, is the recognition of a legitimate leadership in the spirit of intelligent deference. The credentials of such leadership must be a demonstrably absolute science of the principles of organic unity, and a demonstrated determination of the will to apply such science to its divinest use,—the restoration of human society to obedience to the laws of God,—the laws of life and immortality as revealed by the science of universal organic unity. Such leadership, when found, is one to be obeyed from the rational conviction that such obedience will be supremely profitable both to the individual and to society at large.

With this leadership and its following described, industrial social organization may be hopefully undertaken. Without these two factors, efficient organization is impossible, and the social chaos of the present day is preferable. The leadership proposed will possess the scientific ability to suitably emplace every person seeking enrollment in this army of God, predestined to conquer by the omnipotent force of the moral law. In the organization of the advancing hosts of this true Israel, we will find rank and file and official distinctions essential. In the natural type of the arch-natural Israel, we find a groupate system with captains over tens and over hundreds,—mighty men of renown, and high priests and kings, all acting in obedience to laws pertaining to their related orbits and services. Just in proportion to the precision of individual obedience to the requirements of the law, was Israel individually and nationally great.

National progress is determined by the nature of national law and the spirit of national obedience. The test of the virtue of a legal enactment, is the result of intelligent obedience to it. If a law works genuine benefit to the universal body, it becomes in due season a law universally loved and cheerfully obeyed. In the organization of the Koreshan industrial systems, these fundamentals of order must be taught till belief in them becomes manifest in the practical activities of obedience, and they are held in the mind as a continuous source of great strength for self-control.

It is written in the Scriptures, that the law is a school-master to bring us to Christ. In the scientific, natural sense, a genuine "coming to Christ" is such a conjunctive unity with him that one can say, with self-evident justification, "I live, nevertheless not I, but Christ liveth in me." Such a conjunctive unity has not been manifest in the natural sense, for nearly twenty centuries. So far, the law has brought but one man to Christ in the supreme, outermost sense. The works of the Father, the Lord Jesus said, he did through such absolute conjunctive unity with the Father as enabled him to say truthfully, "I and my Father are one." The Deific Spirit indwelling, which constituted the anointing of Jesus, caused him to do the will of God. Being the fulfilment of the law of God, was the delight of the Man Christ Jesus. Obedience was his joy,—the source of his true peace and rest. He had that which the apostle Paul in vain exercised himself to secure, (for the evils of the body of death were present with him,) a conscience void of offense toward God.

The restoration of the divine social order, which is to be the fruition of that divine life of which the Lord Jesus was the firstfruits and seed, and which found the expression of its germinal beginnings in the begotten but unborn church of Jesus, must be effected by the establishment of the law of God in the hearts of men, through the quickening power of the illumination of its science. Men must be made to feel, through intellectual perception, that the commands of the law are just and righteous altogether, and involve all the promises, by having them scientifically unfolded for the revelation of their inherent significations, and so rationally applied to the work of industrial social organization, that they shall become the delight to society at large that they were to the Lord Jesus.

The primitive Christian church had but a spiritual foretaste of the ultimate divine order. Its members had begotten in them new conceptions of love, of life and its divine relationships, with aspirations for the knowledge of truth's scientific ultimates of Christian principles in application to the unity of church and state, as a divine Kingdom filling the whole earth with the knowledge of their Lord. This begetting of the Spirit has been the energizing force of progress for the era now reaching its harvest time. Today, this great spirit of progress is ripe for genuine scientific control and utilization for its grandest results. Like electricity, it has been discovered as a force of marvelous possibilities, and is being experimented with, and in degrees controlled and utilized. Those who know best the potentiality of electricity, feel that the knowledge of its uses is yet in its infancy, and are groping patiently, seeking the best mechanical appliances for its control and direction. The more profound the understanding of its power and possibilities, the more scientifically skilful the execution of its controlling mechanism, the vaster and more universally useful must be the beneficial results.

In the study of electricity, the necessity of obedience to the laws of polarization at centers of generation, is generally recognized and respected. The more extensive the use of the force proposed, the greater the care exercised concerning the center of polarity and the generating dynamo. Carelessness concerning proper conduits and sub-focalizations is known to be disastrous in the extreme, and apt to bring into condemnation the general system of utilization. In establishing a great social system in harmony with the principles of universal law, as revealed by the great universal battery, generating its electro-magnetic power,—the universe of known form and functions, it requires the wisdom of the central mind to direct the energies of universal progress generated by the Lord Jesus, the Logos, or seed form of the universe, whose animus was the Deific mind,—Elohi Jehovah. This Mind personified is the Prophet, Priest, and King of the universal divine order, instituted by the justice of righteous judgment.

Paul exhorted, saying, let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus. The central or Messianic mind is the mind that knows, or the supremely scientific mind. This is the mind to be possessed by the legitimate Leader for today. This mind possesses transforming power; the possessor will be known as the prophet Elohi, "He, the spirit of truth," capable of teaching all things and of restoring all things, by baptizing them with the fire of his life force. He must winnow the wheat and make of it the bread of heaven, the temple of Jehovah. The knowing one is the Petros, the true Rock foundation of the Church Triumphant.

The Koreshan System claims as its Founder, this mind of Christ, the Koor or burning one, who penetrates the apex of focalization, and radiates again to the circumferential limits of segregation. Ezekiel saw him and exclaimed: O wheel! This great revolutionizer of all thought, this creator of dispensations and organizer of kingdoms, is the Savior of men and the strength of Israel. He hides himself in darkness, to clothe himself with light; he is the greatest and the least, the despised and rejected by the ignorant. It was declared by Daniel, that in the time of the end the "wise should understand." The wise seek knowledge; they adore the one who knows. These will accept the Messenger with the science of truth, who can unveil the mystery of Godliness. These will fall into the lines of scientific organization, will recognize the wisdom of their Leader, in his appointments, emplacements, and institutions.

The knowing One is Aquarius, the water-carrier, the sign of Jonah to the multitudes of peoples, nations, and tongues whom John saw as the fruition of the age of Pisces. A great multitude is to stand before the great white throne, the intellect of Deity, to be judged according to their works and emplaced in the great temple of the Most High, to be built of living stones. It will be built and expressed by a magnificence that the temple of Solomon but dimly foreshadowed, as a fit habitation for the descending New Jerusalem.

Nothing in the universe can be made new without a renewing of the mind. The new heavens and new earth depend upon a revolution in thought, concerning God, man, and the universe. The true science of Universology must be intellectually and affectionally accepted by those aspiring to emplacement in the new heavens and new earth. The old heavens and old earth must pass away. The old heavens, the effete spirit of this present evil world, which finds expression in the stultified mental and moral development of our debased and debasing religious and educational systems, is the spirit of heaviness, the precipitation or waste of an ascended Lord, fit only to be cast down and destroyed. And the old earth, the present societal organizations, must fall still lower by its own weight of material corruptions, the abuses of all the essential goods of life, the products of excessive labor. New orderings of the ways of men are in order, also new spheres of instruction and application.

To be really instructed, one must be constructed into something structured; and an architect and builder is needed to make estimates, collect materials, plan, and execute. He needs the plumb-line and level,—the square and the triangle and the circle, and the science of their use to men, in the organization and construction of a new heavens and a new earth wherein shall dwell righteousness. The whole armor of God must be worn by every soldier of the cross; uniforms are in order, military tactics must be acceptable, and all the paraphernalia of thorough equipment and organization, if the land is to be freed from the spoiler, and become the inheritance of a restored Israel,—a living, human temple for the New Jerusalem.

But the power of seeing beauty and the love of beauty, are not all that makes the great artist. He must also have the power of shaping the beauty which he sees, and in a way peculiarly his own. There must be in the work the personal touch, the individual surprise, the unique way, the unimitated shaping which provokes imitation. We ought to feel in every artist's work, the immediate pressure of an original, personal creator who has his special manner with things and words. This is one of the main tests of genius.—Stopford Brooke.

The Rejected Corner-Stone.

Other Phases of the Messianic Law; Causes and Conditions of the Coming of the Lord; Realization of the Desire of All Nations.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

THERE came a time when, to be like other nations, Israel—wearied with the righteous government of God—greatly desired a king. When he came, his name meant desired; for it was the desire of the people that brought him. This ceases to be very wonderful when we remember that desire is substance in the form of energy, in which form it has to be in order to effect results. Jesus came as the result of the age-long circumcision of the Jews, coupled with the intense desire that he should appear. He was the desired of a whole people for an age; and yet, since he did not come in the way they had hoped, he was rejected. Although He was the chief corner-stone,—the fundamental truth and life on which all their hopes rested,—he was disallowed of the builders.

Jesus was the hope of one nation—the Jews, yet the prophets speak of one to come, who is the hope of all nations. “And I will shake all nations, and the Desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts.” The prophet had been speaking of the magnificence of the first literal temple, which was a type of Christ, and contrasting that magnificence with the meagerness of the second, when he says: “The glory of this latter house shall be greater than the former, saith the Lord of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts.” The reign of the Lord of hosts, typified by that first temple, has been the reign of the church militant—the church at war; but “in this place,” which is typified by that inferior temple whose glory shall be greater than that typified by the former, far more magnificent one, the Lord of hosts says: “I will give peace.”

The physical, Jewish temple was nominally God's house, but his real house was the personality of God, to come—which it typified. David was forbidden to build God's house, because he was a man of blood; but when Jesus—God's house—came he was the re-embodiment (resurrection) of David, the one in whom David's soul, purified from blood guiltiness, got out of hell. When David came, as the desired of the Jewish race only, he became the Lord of hosts for an age-long struggle, in a militant church and world. When He comes again, “in this place,” as the “KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS,” as John saw him; as “the desire of all nations,” a desiring world will rejoice in the fulfilment of his word: “and in this place will I give peace.”

Just as the ripened wheat is the beginning and the end of its cycle of reproduction, so Jesus was, and is, the beginning and the end of the cycle of the reproduction of the divine seed, which he was declared to be. He was the “alpha and the omega, the first and the last,” the cause, and will be its effect, when that comes. The condition of His coming again at the harvest, now, in the end of the Christian dispensation, is that all nations desire his appearance, as they claim to do at present. It militates nothing against this view that, as in the beginning of the Christian age, He will come to his own and his own will receive him not.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

HUMAN DEGENERACY and depravity are nowhere more clearly and unmistakably manifest, than in modern journalism and education. If these institutions have been factors of progress, they have also been factors of oppression and crime, of sensualism and ignorance. A great stream of mental, moral, and social impurity continually pours forth from the printing press, and papers have become the curse of the multitudes. There are a number of high-class journals and magazines published, and among them, leading them, is THE FLAMING SWORD, with the definite purpose of teaching the doctrines of absolute purity, and giving to the world a wholesome literature, in contrast with the thousands of would-be journals which emanate from the dark and ignorant elements of the mental world. A writer in an eastern journal makes a number of discriminate criticisms of modern journals, and uncovers the real condition of the popular editorial mind when he says: “When a man fails to understand something in a very particular degree, he finds a paper to keep other people from understanding it”! The New Voice, of New York, stands for clean journalism; and in commenting on the following scathing criticisms of the modern press by the critic, remarks that “Perhaps the worst thing about this characterization is that it is true.” The critic says:

“Illiterateness has its literature. The spelling-book, fallen into the hands at last of anything that gets permission to be born, has become the nurse of lust and the schoolmistress of crime. We compel our thieves to learn the alphabet that they may know where, how, and why to steal. Murderers are trained to read each other's murders. Suicides read and hang themselves. Anarchists are drilled in hate and kept informed of wrath. A school of literature is devoted to adultery. Lewdness has its daily and weekly press. Disease has its poets. Mobs have their books. The riot that fills the street is a paper riot first. * * Ignorance can be subscribed for. It can be hired by the year. The man who confines himself to the same journal, or to the same kind of a journal—which is what most men do—can get for a cent or two, any morning he will, more ignorance—especially about himself—than any one man has a right to use in a lifetime, and with hints and directions for using it.”

The avenues of piracy are just as abundant in the enterprises under the auspices of the American government, as in those conducted by private corporations. It is argued that if the great enterprises of the world were under the control of the government, the incentive to dishonesty would be removed, and the world would enter upon an era of universal prosperity. Under a scientific form of government, all other things being equal, that would be true; but how is it under the present regime? The most gigantic business enterprise of the world is the American postal service, a form of state socialism, without a corresponding reform in the moral character of the employees of the departments; yet there is an enormous secret drain on the remittances made through the mails, by means of unprincipled thieves who are constantly plundering letters and packages entrusted to the care of the postal authorities. In this period of rascality, depravity, and morbid selfishness, there is no plan of reform that will succeed, which does not begin at the very root of evil and eradicate from the human heart the very elements of unrighteousness. On this point Koreshanity is emphatic; and the rise and fall of all reform movements not founded upon the absolute principles of justice, are demonstrations of our assertions. The devil can never successfully apply the principles of genuine reform; the kingdom of God in earth must be established through Messianic function. The world's true reform must be accomplished through the presence of the Christ in the human world!

The daily press is having a great deal to say about the alleged discovery of positive proof of immortality by Prof. Hyslop, of Columbia University, New York. At first glance, one is led to believe that positive proof has been found by the professor; but upon further reading it appears that he has not made any discovery at all, but only hopes to do so. He says that in a few weeks he hopes to find absolute proof of immortality. Hopes to do so—hopes to do what? To find that the present corrupt humanity, dying, decaying, full of disease and unhappiness, entering a state of utter dissolution of the organic structure,—that man as he now exists, is immortal? No. What then,—a scientific analysis of the spirit and soul, and a logical conclusion that they are immortal? No; only that the mind survives the dissolution of the body, and that the mind of one man may become connected with the identity of another. Why, the Founder of Koreshanity discovered that fact nearly thirty years ago, and yet he affirms that the soul and spirit are not immortal, but just as mortal as the body of the dying man! Prof. Hyslop has not the faintest conception of what immortality is, and hence, his stupendous blunder. He is unscientific enough to accept a mere belief before he has reached any rational basis—and he acknowledges that he is only searching for evidence. Upon what, then, has he founded his present conclusions?

In contrast with the tramps' convention in America, is the contemporaneous "great international bazaar" in aid of the Charing Cross hospital. The bazaar has been several months in preparation. Never before has there been seen in London a greater assemblage of distinguished ladies, never a greater galaxy of beauties, nor greater aggregation of products of almost all countries of the earth, as are displayed at this great high society's charity bazaar. English and foreign-born princesses are there as saleswomen, at stalls representing their countries. The bazaar is overstocked with American-born women, and there are not sufficient stalls for the American representatives, among whom are Mesdames Choate, Mackay, Drexel, Bradley-Martin, and the Ranolds, besides Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Randolph Churchill, Mrs. Arthur Paget, Lady May Sackville, and others. Millionaires and titled personages of Europe and America, in one gigantic charity concern to aid an English hospital! An international farce, a travesty on philanthropy, equaled only by the Czar's peace congress at the Hague!

A correspondent in a spiritualist journal asks: "Don't you think that if the spiritual papers would let the God and Christ question alone, it would be better for the cause? * * To be honest, who knows the truth about so called sacred history?" The editor replies, "Evidently, no one; neither is it of vital moment that they should;" and then decides not to permit discussions of any subject relating to the fundamentals of creation, because other "great and momentous issues which are pressing on us for consideration and practical realization." There, now! Here it is freely and frankly admitted that the spiritualists have not even the slightest positive information concerning the great truths of life. Truth seekers may as well know first as last, that spiritualism is not capable of solving the great mysteries of God and man; and the above confession is just an item in addition to the Koreshan arraignment of spiritualism. When it is decided to leave "God and Christ" out of the ism, we do justice when we say that it is decidedly antichristian!

The only true radicalism is that which is rational. Zeal without knowledge characterizes modern reform movements; the reform press is filled with reckless expressions concerning individuals who occupy positions which the "reformers" covet. Many would-be patriots are unpatriotic enough to condemn all elements of progress. We do not believe in the radicalism of anarchy, labor unions, current social democracy, nor in any of the movements which appeal to the prejudices of the people in the advocacy of force of the rabble against the powers that be. Koreshanity takes a rational view; we advocate the science of social reconstruction. Destructive elements are already at work, but they are not Koreshan—we do not endorse them. The world will never be reformed by reckless mobs; the new world must be introduced by scientific processes at the hands of a scientific leader!

The harvest of the age is the time of fruitage of the entire dispensation. Exclude the Koreshan Science of re-embodiment from the mind, and the harvest of the age has no meaning. The great Reaper comes to earth to gather the wheat that has grown during the age. Can the products of age-development apply to more than the present generation, if this is the first earth-life of the millions? The development of humanity from generation to generation, is due to the fact that the living contain the dead, and that all who have lived in the world during the age are in humanity today. The entire church of the past is involved in the living. The resurrection must take place through hearing the divine Voice when it is uttered at the end of the age. The work of the promulgation of the gospel of the kingdom is performed among mortal humanity; it cannot be heard in the graveyards!

How far does one really walk in an hour, going at the rate of three miles an hour? is a curious question propounded by an eastern writer, while making some absurd speculations concerning the Copernican universe. It will be surprising to the reader to be told that his conclusion is, that while walking three miles upon the earth, he actually walks 85,930 miles! This is moving quite rapidly,—alarmingly rapid; but when it is considered that it is claimed in the old school astronomy that the earth rotates on its axis in 24 hours, and revolves annually about the sun, and that sun about a still larger sun, the aggregate speed of all the motions of the earth per hour would amount to about the required 85,930 miles! But suppose the earth has no such motions? Then the man who walks a good league, really walks a good, sensible, and rational three miles, and no more!

"The people's will should be the highest law." The will of a selfish and corrupt people, the highest law? The conduct of the government of the United States is the expression of the hearts of the people; if the government is bad, advocates of the people's will have only themselves to blame. The American people began exercising their own will in governmental, social, and economic affairs over a century ago, and we have the results of it manifest in the conditions which democratic reformers are endeavoring to remove by still more of the people's will! "Laws" made by the ignorant masses, without reference to the absolute fundamentals of righteousness; without a knowledge of the laws of order, and without a desire to fulfil the purposes of national progress and existence and use in the world, are the product of mere selfish caprice!

Every movement must have its conventions. Organizations for the promulgation of single ideas, clubs of freaks for the enjoyment of social fads, are common; but perhaps the strangest convention, with a deep vein of pathos in it, was called to meet at Danville, Ill., June 15,—a convention of genuine tramps, for the discussion of the great issues and questions which not only confront the Wandering Willies, but also the world. A particular feature of the convention was the recording of the facts and conditions which have forced able-bodied men from the field of employment to degraded mendicancy; and college graduates were on the program, to relate how they were reduced to drink and dissipation, and finally to the absolute poverty of the ragged and wandering tourists.

American expansion, since the founding of the thirteen original states, has been the order of progress of the nation. From a narrow strip of states on the Atlantic coast, it has grown westward over the continent, and over the Pacific to the Philippines; southward to Cuba and Porto Rico, and northward to the great territory of Alaska. The forces of destiny disregard the narrow democratic elements, and progress toward the formation of the gigantic Pan-American empire; thence to all the nations. Progress demonstrates the greatness of America, even in its partially civilized state; and the prophetic Voice of Koreshanity declares the supremacy of America over all the world!

Modern human sympathy forbids the sending of most people to the terrible hell of the modern church, and consequently endeavors to get everybody into heaven. When the truth is known, the conclusions of mortal humanity concerning heaven and hell are both amusing and pathetic. The fact is, that no one can go either to heaven or hell but God Almighty himself. But what of the people? They are already in hell; and the processes of getting into the highest heaven involve conversion or transformation from the mortal man to the immortal God in the flesh; thence the journey to the most holy place of Divine Being.

A spiritualist contemporary contains the following: "This central spirit sun is—in the superior or magnetic state—present as an inner sun or white light, surrounded or embossed in an outer hollow sphere of light. The rays from both, blending, wafting together and apart, in regular pulsation or breathing—a breathing, living sun." Good! then the natural, external world is still another outer sphere, a natural, physical shell enclosing all—for the natural is but the expression of the spiritual. The Koreshan Cosmogony is the science of this expression; it is the cosmogony of nature.

Old political as well as religious creeds are passing away. The declaration of American independence was merely the expression of successful resentment against English despotism; the occasion for that declaration is in the past, and new issues confront the nation. America has since become enslaved to powers that have subtly overshadowed the nation, and new exigencies are to be met by stronger forces than those involved in Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson. The Christ himself must give the world its lasting freedom.

The people object to needless expenditure of money at millionaire balls and banquets, but burn millions of dollars in expressing last century patriotism in Fourth of July explosives! The money expended by the poor for firecrackers, sky-rockets, beer, whiskey, and tobacco annually, would purchase food and clothing for thousands of the destitute, and build hundreds of mansions for the poor. The crimes of waste are committed by the masses, as well as by the classes.

The world desires liberty and happiness; so do the criminals who are imprisoned for the protection of society. Liberty will come only when it is safe to release the people from bondage. Though thousands of pirates are at large upon the sea of humanity, in all departments of the modern world, there is still a necessary restraint. The curses upon the world must culminate in woes—birth throes of the new age; and the new society will not be freed until the birth time!

The American nation has, through legislation and the protective tariff, nursed home industries until they have grown into gigantic trusts. A truly philanthropic movement would now be in the direction of protecting the labor employed to build up and sustain the so called capital of America.

Every domain of activity is an egg from which results are hatched. Men do not say on, but in spheres of thought and activity. Correspondentially, we are in the great physical sphere or cell of the universe.

There is considerable mathematics about the modern church; it is dividing, and the sects are multiplying; they are adding new coats of whitewash, and subtracting money from the people to pay the preachers.

Many people claim to be clay in the hands of the potter; it is admitted that there are specimens of human pottery—enormous jugs full of whiskey and rum.

The study of the world's current history involves information of events from all points of the compass,—N E W S,—north, east, west, south.

Modern Christians are continually talking about serving God, while endeavoring to persuade the Almighty to serve them!

The formation of trusts is a demonstration of the truth of the old proverb, that the more men get the more they want.

Election and Free Grace.

What has Koreshanity to say about predestination, or election, and free grace? Is there not a conflict in the Bible concerning a predetermined election of a number of people to be saved, and the idea that they are saved by grace, and are left to work out their own salvation?—READER.

The idea of predestination is consistent with the idea of an adequate cause to produce an effect; all effect is predestined in the cause, else there could be no effect. Wherever cause is, there is a predetermination in the direction of the production of results. Cause ultimates in effect, and effect ultimates in cause. In every seed in the universe cause and effect unite; in the seed the plant is predestined, not only as to the kind of life it will possess, but also its form, and all its specific characteristics and habits; every bud, every fiber, evolves from the cause (the seed), and every fiber is elected and emplaced in the structure through a process of predetermination in the seed, and only in the seed, for the seed is the potent pole of the impulse of life in the plant. Predestination is a scientific fact; the Almighty, as the Creator of the universe, either foreknew and predestined what would be contained in the effect, or he did not. If he did not, then cause operates only at random; in such case, there could be no laws of relation of cause and effect.

The predestination of Calvinism, the foreknowledge of a supposed extra-cosmical, capricious, and arbitrary God in the sky, is another thing—it is an absurdity. It makes man irresponsible, and arbitrarily fixes his destiny independently of laws, circumstances, development, and will. But the more modern theology does not make the matter better by denying election and substituting "free grace." If God did not know, or did not try to know, what the universe would be, and what man would be, throughout all ages, he could not have projected that which has ultimated in the world and humanity; he was therefore ignorant, and had to leave man to do as he pleased, and await developments to see how he would come out! There is a conflict between the doctrines of Calvinism and the doctrines of Arminianism; bitter fights have been fought in the theological world over these questions, without any settlement of the problems.

A new phase of theology has developed during the past several years,—orthodoxy gone to moonshine—an endeavor to harmonize election and free grace, known as Restitutionism, holding that during the present age there is an election of a number of people who will open up the new age of the millennium, and give humanity a free chance to be saved. It is election during this age, and free grace during the coming age.

Koreshanity maintains the scientific doctrine of election, and also the doctrine of free grace; and that they obtain, not the one during the Christian dispensation, and the other during the new age, but that the election of the sons of God during the present dispensation is through the processes of divine free grace to all who acknowledged the Messiah nineteen hundred years ago. Every man was called upon to work out his own salvation. How? By God working in him to do his will and good pleasure. The process of sowing the very life and essence of Jesus the Christ in the hearts and wills of humanity, was the process of extending to whosoever willed to receive that life then, a free help, a free grace, a free gift of the energy and power to ultimately fulfil all that was predetermined in the divine Seed.

It is just like sowing seed in the common soil; as long as the seed remains out of the ground it abides alone, and the atoms of the soil remain in the mineral kingdom. If the seed is planted and decays, it absorbs millions of atoms and appropriates them, and takes them from the mineral kingdom into the vegetable kingdom. The free gift of the energies generated in the dissolution of the seed and dissipated among the atoms, are the energies that move the atoms toward the goal of destiny in the reconstruction of the seed at the end of the season. The energies of free grace are the energies of election!

During the Jewish dispensation, there was no salvation except through the keeping of the law; and only one man kept it and was resurrected out of humanity—Jesus the Christ; he poured out his life to help others—he bestowed God's gift of life. The sowing of his life was the calling, the election; it was the grace; it was the factor of the new will, the free will in man; it was liberty, an avenue of escape from the plane of mortality to the plane of immortality. Jesus was the seed of the Almighty; he involved all the consciousness of God and of the world. In him all things were created,—all things in heaven and in earth were involved in him. He was human history, human life, the life of the universe involved, the pole of predestination of all things to come in all future ages, the positive cause of all effect.

Koreshan Science of divine foreknowledge, predetermination or predestination, is simple and rational; it is as harmonious in concept or doctrine, as the elements of the seed, the cause, are harmonious in their operation from age to age. The election occurred at the beginning of the Christian dispensation; Jesus was "the beginning," and we begin at the beginning in scientific consideration of all that ultimates from the divine Man who walked the streets of Jerusalem nineteen hundred years ago as the Almighty!

Koreshan Cult Explained.

Rev. Castle's Second Lecture Before Audience of Educators and Scientists at Chatham Academy.

Rev. E. M. Castle delivered a supplementary lecture at the Chatham Academy yesterday afternoon on the new system of Cellular Cosmogony, upon which are based the religion and the sociological cult of the Koreshans. Her audience included a number of representative people—lawyers, physicians, clergymen, teachers, and scientists, besides many ladies. She spoke for over two hours, and was listened to with rapt and unabated attention from beginning to end.

"Every system of religion," said Rev. Castle, "that has been accepted and believed in the world has had its corresponding system of cosmogony, the latter in accord with the teachings of the former and agreeing with its doctrines, its miracles, and its accepted facts. To this general rule the Christian religion now furnishes an exception, its devotees professing to receive a system of cosmogony, that formulated by Copernicus, by which its most cherished doctrines and its account of creation and life are falsified. The Copernican theory is a gigantic delusion, and those who believe it true are involved in lasting error. It is founded on assumption, and the best, as the worst, that can be said of it is the Scotch verdict, 'not proven.'"

"The Copernican theory is based upon the same error as the Ptolemaic,—that the surface of the earth is convex. Copernicus simply perpetrated the errors of Ptolemy, who with imperfect instruments and careless methods of observation measured the angle that the sun seemed to make with the earth, and estimated its distance at 5,000,000 miles. Copernicus and his followers, with perfect instruments and the most exact methods of observation, followed up the old error and got 90,000,000 miles further from the truth. The Copernican theory never has been proven and never will be, until the assumption upon which it is founded, the convexity of the earth's surface, is raised from an assumption to a demonstrated fact—and this will be never."

Rev. Castle then explained the method that had been pursued by the Koreshans to demonstrate, by physical experiment, the truth of their contention that the surface of the world is concave, and that it is the interior of the globe that is habitable and inhabited. This explanation has already been given in the Morning News.

"If we have," said the speaker, "demonstrated the truth of our premise, then we have demonstrated the truth of our system of cosmogony, sociology, and religion, for upon this premise all of them are built and all of them are consistent with it. The sun is the center of the globe, and has a dark as well as a light side. It is the reflection of the real sun upon the atmosphere that produces the sun that is manifest to our vision, and it is its revolution upon its axis that produces day and night, heat and cold, winter and summer. Here, as everywhere, the law of opposites and co-ordinates, that prevails everywhere in nature, is manifest; and it is the struggle of opposing forces that holds the universe in perpetuity.

"Another fallacy, equal in its prevalence to the Copernican theory, is the theory of the indestructible atom. The one is as absurd as the other, for in the scheme of Nature and of God there is constant change, everywhere and at all times. The alchemists of old were nearly upon the truth when they looked for a universal solvent, the magic elixir that could transmute the metals and change spirit into matter and matter into spirit. This is the operation that takes place in Nature; matter wakes into spirit and spirit falls asleep in matter. Matter is materialized spirit; spirit is spiritualized matter. The two are interdependent, though opposite, and in their connection the one with the other, is the fourth dimension for which the mathematicians of the ages have been looking, the point where matter terminates as matter and forms the nexus between matter and spirit.

"This nexus found its last living exponent in Jesus Christ, the Son of God and the Son of man. He is the beginning and the ending of all things, and His teachings are the basis of our belief and the standard of our lives. When He comes again His Kingdom will be in earth, and earth will be heaven. 'Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free.'

"The old fallacies that have been adopted by modern astronomers and scientists are falling into ill repute and will soon be forgotten. The truth that we teach will be made known to all men, and all will believe. Christ will come in His glory,—sin and death will be no more, and the Grand Man, purged of earthly imperfections, will fulfil his glorious and immortal destiny. You who listen to me today will accept the truth, and the old fallacies that have brought the people of the world to a condition of Egyptian night, will be forgotten. Man will be just to man, a perfect social system will prevail, the ideal will find expression in the real, and happiness will be everywhere, for all time."

At the conclusion of the regular lecture, Rev. Castle answered the questions of those in the audience who cared to propound them, and not for a single moment was she caught napping. When her questioners would think they had her, she would get out of her apparent confusion by saying that the premise upon which they relied had been disproved by the Koreshans, and that a fact accepted was not a fact at all.

Rev. Castle will remain several days in the city, where she says she wishes she could make a longer visit. She has been pleased with the interest her meetings have aroused and at the attention with which her expounding of the doctrines and tenets of Koreshanity has been heard. She is a forceful, fluent, and graceful talker, and, as Mr. Ashmore said in returning thanks for the lecture on the part of the audience, if none were convinced, certainly none had failed to be interested and pleased, and anxious to hear more.

In the headquarters of the order, Chicago, the Koreshans number about 200, while in Florida they maintain a colony, where their sociological system is practiced and which numbers about sixty. Besides these, they have adherents, more or less active, throughout the country, and Rev. Castle says that the cult is slowly but surely increasing. An idea of all the Koreshans believe or of what they teach, cannot be gleaned from one lecture or even from several, but they protest that rigid and impartial investigation will demonstrate the truth of their contentions beyond the fear of doubt or contradiction. —Morning News, Savannah, Ga.

The Baptist Flag and the Flaming Sword.

Our Contemporary Has Forgotten Bible Instances of Transmigration of Soul, the Gadarene and the Swine, etc.

The spirit and soul do not die when the mortal dissolution occurs; they are eliminated from the body, and enter the spiritual world,—the interior mind of humanity. After a time, there is a dissolution or separation of soul and spirit, and a return to the natural world. All of the dead that have ever lived in the past are in the world today; the dead are in the living. The great stream of sensualism is supplied from the entities of those who have died, endeavoring to get back into the natural world. Common human generation is the only channel through which mortal spirits can return to the natural state, and common death is the only way for mortal human beings to get into the spiritual world. Thoughts are spiritual entities; all of the thoughts of mortal humanity are entities or spirits of men who have died. Present mortal men are truly sepulchers, the tombs out of which the resurrection is to take place through natural, scientific processes.—Flaming Sword.

Pshaw! We thought that old pagan superstition of the transmigration of souls was confined to the heathen. We never thought about a man who lives in Chicago, who says he was once a Baptist, and who lives in this 19th century, turning to be heathen enough to advocate such stuff. But there may be something in the idea that "present mortal men are truly sepulchers," for we have come in contact with a few that had sepulchral odors about them. We had been accustomed to attribute it to the filthy tobacco and liquor they used, however. But, candidly, such doctrine as the above is 'the shadowy dreaming of a restless speculatist who has no anchor to his hope, and no foundation for his faith. Solid Baptist truth is infinitely better.—Baptist Flag.

Where Is the Devil?

The Chicago Israelite says the orthodox papers have quit making mention of his Satanic Majesty, the Devil, and it fears the old Boy is "lost, strayed, or stolen." No, no. He has merely stopped in to commune awhile with THE FLAMING SWORD and the Christadelphian Advocate, both of Chicago. He seems to be very much at home in those offices, and his partiality causes the rest of us to sorter ignore the old fellow. Let him rest awhile where his quarters seem to be so congenial.—Baptist Flag.

That's just the way! The devil is always in the other fellow. The Pharisee was glad that the devil was in possession of other men's premises; but the truth is, that the Pharisee was just the man that the devil was already sure of, and could afford to leave him contented and look for other game. Just now, he is waging a final war on the Almighty, and his greatest fight, his Armageddon of defeat, is with THE FLAMING SWORD. His mission here is for war, not friendship. NEXT!

Isn't the Baptist Church Christian?

"The Christian church of today is a preposterous humbug."—FLAMING SWORD. Do you mean Campbellite church? It is as good as your Koreshanity; but it is probably as bad as you say.—Baptist Flag.

What makes you think we mean the Campbellite church? If it alone is entitled to the name Christian, we mean it. The Flag's effort to escape THE FLAMING SWORD's truthful charges, places it outside the ranks of the Christian church. Apostated a little further than we gave it credit for!

Truth in Short Paragraphs.

W. H. FAVITT.

The most pitiable exhibition of a total inability of the average mind to grasp the progress of events, is the call for a convention of the governors and states attorneys of the various states, to be held in the near future, to devise some means of suppressing and preventing the formation of gigantic trusts. We do not endorse these combinations of commercial pirates, yet we know they are potent factors in the development of events soon to culminate in the greatest revolution known in history. Gov. Sayers and his cohorts may as well try to rub the moon out of heaven with their thumbs, as to try to suppress the trusts by legal enactments. Verily the world sorely stands in need of the sacrifice of a God!

Man wastes his powers and strength upon the grossly material plane of existence, so engulfed in petty ambitions, earthly love, selfishness, hate, envy, and pride that he forgets the calls to a higher, nobler, self-sacrificing life for the sake of others, thus making of himself an empty vessel which invites refuse and filth, disease and death.

What a grotesque spectacle is presented in the attitude of the pulpit which denounces war as wholesale murder, and at the same time endorses the competitive system of business—which is the worst form of remorseless warfare and wholesale murder that the ingenuity of the devil can invent; for it consigns both the bodies and souls of its votaries to hell.

Those who are attempting to establish socialism, with human hate and selfishness as a pivot, will utterly fail. Nevertheless, the reign of righteousness will be established in the earth, through sacrifice and love. This has been ordained of God, and all the powers of earth and hell cannot prevent it. The Christian age has reached its end.

Love, in its highest sense, is the only thing worth striving after or living, for from pure, unselfish love and wisdom, truth and good shine forth with all the luster of the eternal Sun of Righteousness.

Thought is substance. Thought with will is a projectile. Hate is a boomerang that returns to its originator. The suicide of the soul, is to think evil and hate with envy and revenge.

Presumption and conceit are the bane of reason. They are the nurse of error, through which man is apt to judge too highly of himself and think too meanly of others.

Adversity knits friends into closer bonds of companionship, but it takes rugged constitutions to withstand many severe attacks of prosperity.

We strive to live the highest now, that the highest may be ours throughout eternity.

The shafts of ridicule and the malice of fortune have developed many a noble soul.

New Theory of Thought.

Max Nordau's Fallacy of Mental Activities in an Ocean of Ether of the Physical Cosmos.

In his new work, entitled "The Drones Must Die," Mr. Max Nordau gives the following as the opinion of one of his characters regarding the properties of "ether," that subtle force which is believed to convey the vibrations set up by wireless telegraphy from one point to another.

He held "that thoughts are vibrations of ether, exactly like warmth, electricity, and light. Their sum in the universe is unvarying, like that of all other forces. They are diffused in space like rays of light of electric currents. Millions and billions of various vibrations strike incessantly upon the human brain, constituting the innumerable thoughts that have been thought in all the stars, in all the depths of space, now, or in aeons of inconceivable remoteness. If a brain be prepared for a vibration of a certain duration and wave-length, an equal vibration is aroused within it, and the thought which this vibration represents becomes conscious. In the ascending portion of the circular course, which we call development, the brain becomes capable of ever shorter and more rapid vibrations; in the descending portion it becomes coarser and more sluggish. Every invention, every discovery, every enlargement of the bounds of knowledge is due to the attainment by some brain of that degree of vibratory capacity which enables it to receive the corresponding vibration of thought flashed upon it from space, and to convert it into consciousness. Hence, it follows that no thought originates in the brain that thinks it; for every thought has been thought before, and will be thought again and again to all eternity; every brain acts like a relay in an electric system; it receives an impulse from eternity, and retransmits it to eternity after its passage. The whole ocean of possible thoughts surges round us; but we are only conscious of those to which our brains are sensitive. The differences in wisdom are differences in the vibratory capacity of the molecular mass of the brain. Character, temperament, a talent, are the expression of wave-lengths and periods of vibration. Every individual is a rhythm. Attraction and repulsion between individuals are caused by the harmony or dissonance of their rhythms, their reinforcing or disturbing effect upon each other."—London Globe.

The Earth Concave.

The Copernican System of Astronomy Superseded by Koreshanity.

"CELLULAR COSMOGONY or The Earth a Concave Sphere,"—such is the title of a little book issued by the Guiding Star Publishing House, Chicago, Ill., being the tenth thousandth of the Koreshan Scientific Series, the object of which is to prove the concavity of the globe as opposed to the hitherto accepted system of the astronomer Copernicus. To the devotees of the "New Geodesy," man and the entire system of the universe are shut up within a hollow shell, a hundred miles in thickness, and composed of some seven strata of mineral substances. "The first objection usually urged against the Cellular Cosmogony, is the apparent absurdity of endeavoring to place all the heavenly bodies within the compass of a hollow sphere, 8,000 miles in diameter." (Pp. 43, 44.) "If the earth is concave, the sun is not 886,000 miles in diameter. But measured from the concave instead of the convex arc, its diameter would not be over 100 miles, and its distance not above 1,000." (P. 161.) "The shell of the earth is the circumference—the limit of the universe. It environs all that exists. Outside of the environ or limit of existence there is nothing. There is no infinite space." (P. 166.) For evidence adduced in support of the system and answers to objections, the reader is referred to the text. "To determine its accuracy, the Bible must be tested, not by the current and popular fallacy, but by a system of science, the fundamentals of which are susceptible of absolute demonstration. The Koreshan System alone scientifically defends the Scriptures. The Bible is scientifically correct; KORESH, the divine and natural scientist, is its sole interpreter and exploiter!" (P. 184.)—Kingston (Can.) News.

Failure in Unscientific Colonization.

The Originator of Ruskin Colony Publishes a "Friendly Warning," Answered by Koresh in This Issue.

From letters received, it seems that all is not peace and love in Equality Colony, Edison, Wash.; affairs there being much in the same shape as at Ruskin. I have repeatedly expressed myself in these columns as having no faith in colonization as a way out of industrial troubles. These remarks have doubtless in most cases been attributed to pique at my experience in such affairs, but such has not been the case. It was an earnest, friendly warning. I am convinced that no peace or success can be attained in isolated communities under outside environments, unless the members are held together by ties of religious bigotry where a few do all the thinking and consequently the ruling. Had I read the story of other colonies before I embarked in one, I should never have given it a second thought. After my experience I read what I should have read before, and which would have saved me many heartaches and money. But "fools rush in where angels dare not tread"—and I was one of the fools. It did not take me 60 days to see the folly I had committed, although I remained at my post one year to a day. As a teacher, the experience is worth much to me, but the price paid was exorbitant. My advice now is, leave all colony attempts alone. In all are heartaches and bitterness, and you will feel them if you put in your time, energy, or money. I have been flooded with letters from pretty much all of them, wanting publicity to conditions against which members protested, but I have declined to make the Appeal a vehicle for such matter, preferring to make it an educator of economics rather than snarling at even the mistaken efforts of earnest men and women to work out the problem as they had light.—J. A. WAYLAND, Editor Appeal to Reason.

Astronomical Student's Opinion of Koreshan Geodesy.

In compliance with your request, I drop you a few lines of my opinion or impression of CELLULAR COSMOGONY, after reading the book. I have been a close student of mathematics and astronomy in my college days at Dartmouth. I had charge of the observatory a short time, and have always been specially interested in astronomy and its problems.

First, the mathematics of the book and rectilineator is all right. The theory of "optical illusion" is a new thing to me, and I do not know about it. If the Naples line was honestly run, then certainly there was a concavity in the Gulf there. It does not seem possible, without international fraud, that they could have made 22 feet of mistake after taking so much care; though to me it seems like trying by the Rectilineator and its use, to prove that a straight line is not the nearest distance between two points, or that the three angles of a triangle are not equal to two right angles.

The explanations concerning the theory of the universe being in harmony with the concavity of the earth, are very unsatisfactory to me and appear unreasonable and inconsistent; though the Founder of Koreshanity may be wrong in those theories, yet right as to our living on the concave side of the earth.

Some government ought to settle that concavity question forever. I would like to know the views of some of our astronomers on the subject.—Yours truly, H. E. HOWELL, Att'y and U. S. Commissioner, Missouri.

The Rapid Spread of Koreshanity.

Prediction of the Coming Great Controversy Between the Two Famous Schools of Astronomy, and Consequent Fame of the Founder of the Koreshan System.

FLAMING SWORD:—I send copies of papers of Kingston, Can., about the CELLULAR COSMOGONY; I am informed that there is still more to be published concerning it later. Prof. S., of Queen's University, told me that Dr. Teed was correct in his contention about the ship's hulls. You will hear more from Kingston soon; several parties there want to handle the book.

From what I see and hear, I know that it is but a very short time before the name of the Founder of Koreshanity will be on every tongue, and his fame world-wide. There will be very shortly a tremendous controversy between the two schools of astronomy. It is coming very soon I know; I can see an immense difference in the attitude of the people toward the book between this time and last October, when I first started out. All the educators and scientists of prominence have at least heard of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and are discussing it. This I know to be true.—REV. U. GORDON MITCHELL, Koreshan Traveling Representative in New York and Canada.

The Koreshan Colonies.

San Estero, Fla., the Objective Point for Final Aggregation of Koreshans.

The Koreshan Unity has four colonies established and in Co-operation: The Koreshan Communistic Home and University, at Washington Heights; the Englewood Home and Printing Establishment; the Industrial Co-operative Union, West Side, Chicago; and the Communistic and Co-operative Colony at San Estero, Fla.

San Estero is located at the vitellus of the great Cosmogonic Egg, the site of the city of the New Jerusalem, extending to the islands of the West Indies. Florida in reality will embrace "the fountain of eternal youth," searched for by Ponce de Leon; and the West Indies is where Spain touched the western world, and where at the close of the nineteenth century, she relinquished sovereignty over American territory. The site of the New Jerusalem of the Golden Age has been scientifically located. The latest confirmation of the Koreshan conclusions concerning the future possibilities of the New City, is the determination of America to control the Nicaragua Canal, the greatest artificial water-way of the world. San Estero is at the focus of the world's future commerce, the crossing of all lines of commercial intercourse of the entire world.

The climate of Florida cannot be excelled in any part of the world; the scenes are the climax of natural beauty. The Gulf, bays, and islands of the new city are the Elysian fields of the paradise of the New Humanity, in the direction of which Koreshanity is rapidly progressing. The reform world is being impelled in the direction of colonization; Koreshanity is the source of this tendency, but it is distinguished from all other efforts in that it is the only scientific system of religious, social, educational, and economic effort. Are you interested in colonization? Address, Mrs. V. H. ANDREWS, Secretary of the Koreshan Unity, 6310 Harvard Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The Industrial Co-operative Union of America.

The I. C. U. is the result of practical application of the principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondages of the competitive world and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It operates on the basis of co-operative exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of business and produce the greatest result with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation. Send 5 cents in stamps for pamphlet explaining the purpose and methods of the I. C. U., to the GUIDING STAR PUBLISHING HOUSE, 314 W. Sixty-third St., Chicago, Ill.

Leslie's Weekly, July 6.

The remarkable features of the current issue, are those of the terrible cyclones of Wisconsin and elsewhere in the West, one showing the approaching black, death-dealing funnel. The title page shows Admiral Dewey at Manila, the latest picture of the Admiral. A double page shows the horrors and hardships of the Philippine war, while other illustrations picture fiere engagements with the Filipinos, McKinley's visit to New England, and many interesting features. The letter-press embraces a fine description of fights in the Philippine jungles, a tornado story, the death of naval heroes in Samoa, and other customary departments.

American Monthly Review of Reviews.

In the July number, the editor reviews the work of the American delegates at the Hague, presenting the latest phases of the arbitration question, with its bearings on present international situations. Topics discussed in "Progress of the World" embrace a large number of questions, such as tariff trusts as a political issue, the Dreyfus vindication, etc. Among numerous excellent leading articles, are John Barrett's discussion of the Philippine question—a summary of impressions of the islands and the people after three months' experience and observation, Rosa Bonheur and her work, with several reproductions of her famous paintings, and other features.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for July

Contains a charming and sympathetic personal sketch of Mrs. McKinley, by Mrs. John A. Logan, accompanied by a number of beautiful portraits of the gracious lady of the White House. The main article entitled "Fighting Fire," is by the late chief of the New York fire department, profusely illustrated, embracing a number of photographs of the burning Windsor hotel. The social and industrial conditions of the Philippine islands are described by Major Adolph G. Studer, ex-Consul-General of the U. S. in Eastern Asia. Other features are "Art and Pinhole Photography, continuation of April Bloom, and four interesting short stories.

The July Cosmopolitan.

Just now, at the time of the Charing Cross hospital bazaar, participated in by so many American titled ladies, and the International Council of Women at London, the initial article in the Cosmopolitan, "Some Americans Who have Married Titles," will prove of general interest; the article is superbly illustrated, showing types of American feminine aristocracy in Europe. Woman's Economic Place, by Charlotte Perkins Stetson, in reply to Prof. Peck, in the June issue, is of absorbing interest, while Samoan Types of Beauty is still another feature of interest in the woman's world. The Adventures of Gen. Funston in Alaska and Mexico, and Practical Organization of the Home, are next in order; besides, Balzac and His Work, Building of an Empire, the Hero of the Regiment, a South Sea Island story, and the continued Tolstoy's "Awakening," complete the make-up of the July number of this popular magazine.

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.

Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

* SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO. *

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

The Divinity of Jesus the Messiah.

The Theology of Koreshanity Proven by Positive Biblical Statements, and Contrasted With the Theology of the Modern Church; a Baptist Journal Answered.

THE Baptist Flag is heard from again, as another column of THE FLAMING SWORD will testify. We desire to call our readers' attention to two specific statements in the article referred to: First, "Jesus Christ was a manifestation of the Father, God. * * * In him was a divine fulness and a divinity that made him the equal of the Father:" Second, "Man never was so manifested as to be truly God." It follows, then, from this, that the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, of whom it is said "He is both Lord and Christ," is not "truly God," yet he is "the equal of the Father, God." We will attempt, for the benefit of the student of Koreshanity, to shake up this confusion of ideas and bring to the surface, for inspection, the glaring inconsistencies of the doctrines of the Baptist church, providing the Baptist Flag is a fair exponent of the Baptist creed. We have no expectation of converting the Flag or its proprietorship; we will simply throw a search-light on some dark spots.

We herewith present some quotations from the Scriptures, regarding the humanity of the Lord, with the subjoined gratuitous and emphatic declaration that we challenge our contemporary to produce one passage of Scripture that will contradict the quotations submitted. Before presenting the quotations referred to, we wish to state that if the Bible is a contradictory book, it would not be worth while to spend our time upon it; and if it were possible for the Flag to refute our quotations by the introduction of passages from the Scriptures in conflict with the ones we herewith quote, then the Bible, as a source of argument, would be worthless to both THE FLAMING SWORD and the Flag. We will begin our argument in the language of John:

In the beginning was the Word [not the Bible], and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not.

We would ask the exponent of "Baptist doctrine," if this refers to the man Jesus, who was the Savior of the world; if not, then to whom does it refer? Does it refer to the visible Lord Jesus, or to something invisible and incomprehensible? He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. Will the Flag please tell us whether the above statement referred to the Word, who was in the beginning and who was God? "And the Word [God] was made flesh [does this mean flesh, or does it mean something else?] and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth." These are plain declarations directly from the Gospel of John.

Following is a passage which, taken superficially, might seem to conflict with the whole tenor of the preceding quotations. Let us examine this seemingly conflicting statement: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Now, it is a fact that the man Jesus was seen by the natural man,—both by the disciples and the enemies of the Lord; hence, it might be said that he was not God. The Lord Jesus had an invisible spirit in him, precisely as the spirit of every man is in himself. The spirit of no man is visible to the natural perception, nor was the spirit of Jesus the Lord visible to natural men; but the Lord Jesus declared that he and the Father were one, not two,—a biunity, not a duality,—and that the Father was in him, and that by the Father, who was in him, he did the works. Now, the difference between this Scriptural doctrine and that of the Flag, is merely that the latter has a Father outside of Jesus the Lord, while the Scriptures place the Father in him and one with him, making the fulness of the Godhead one person, not three.

The Saxon term God is the equivalent of the word Elohi; and the terms Elohi, Elias, Eli, El, are invariably rendered God, while the word Jahvah (Jehovah) is invariably rendered Lord. Elohi is the invisible Spirit, God, and Jehovah is the medium of the Father's (Elohi's) manifestation. The Saxon word Lord is bread keeper. Jehovah, the Savior of the world,—for the Scriptures declare there is no Savior but Jehovah,—is the bread keeper; Jesus was the bread keeper, he was therefore Jehovah, for the two words, Jehovah (Hebrew) and Lord (Saxon), are equivalents, and mean the keeper of the bread. The Lord (Jehovah, the only Savior) said: "I am the living bread which came down from heaven." If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever. * * * My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." Did the Lord mean flesh, or did he mean something else?

Will our Baptist contemporary please quote some Scripture to contradict the foregoing? But while he contradicts us with Scripture, he will please prove to us that the Scriptures are not contradictory. "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day, for my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." Perhaps he will say that we could not eat His flesh, and therefore he (the Lord) did not mean what he said. We prefer to take the statement of Jesus the Lord, rather than that of our contemporary. There are some statements of Scripture that are plain and unequivocal, while others are shrouded somewhat in mystery. Shall we place a human construction upon the hidden passages, and make plain statements conform thereto? Or shall we make the hidden statements conform to the plain declarations?

Perhaps our Baptist friend will admit that the Word (God) was made flesh, and that this flesh (material flesh) was the bread from heaven. If so, then he must admit that while the flesh of God is human, it is not sensually and evilly human; but that the flesh, the human flesh, of the Lord, which is the life of the world, and in which is the capability of making the world alive, is quite different from that sensual and corrupt flesh which is to be made incorruptible through the efficacy of the Lord's flesh and blood. The Lord was born of God; sensual and corrupt humanity is born of the devil. Both of these statements are purely Scriptural.

Did the Lord, while in the world nineteen hundred years ago, possess the corruptible nature of the corruptible humanity? According to our Baptist exchange he did; according to the Scriptures, he did not. This is what the Flag says: "But Jesus was also a man, a real man, with a body like unto his fellows." We admit that Jesus was a man, a real man; but the men whose father was the devil, were the unreal men. The real man, that same Jesus in the flesh, visible and tangible, came forth from the Father. "I proceeded forth and came from God; * * * ye are of your father the devil," said Jesus. Where, we ask, is the similarity? "Ye are from beneath; I am from above." Where is the likeness? In the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, God was in his fulness. God was the man, and the man was God.

He is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature: for by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist; and he is the head of the body, the church.

Will the Flag be kind enough to tell us to whom this refers? Is it the Lord Jesus Christ? Will it also please inform us why God is called the Father, if it is not by virtue of his power to beget and procreate? And if Jesus the Son of God is "the equal of the Father," as the Flag declares, must he not also possess the power to procreate, that is, to beget and regenerate the sons of God? Could He be "the equal of the Father" if he did not possess the same power to bring forth the only begotten Son, or to reproduce himself?

Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

Is this the one who was pierced? Is this the Almighty, the Lord Jesus the Christ, or did God make a mistake in his Revelation?

I John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and what thou seest, write in a book and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia: * * * And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw him I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, fear not; I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth, and was dead: [Was this Jesus?] and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

Here we have a description of the Almighty, by himself, who says that he was dead and is alive. Of this same Jesus, Isaiah said:

Unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.

We have most emphatically shown, from the plainest kind of Scriptural statements, that the Lord Jesus is Jehovah; that he was God in fulness, manifest in the flesh—not the flesh of sensual humanity, but the flesh of God. It is absolutely certain that the flesh and blood of the Lord Jesus would be of no virtue to redeem the world, if it were the same kind of flesh and blood as that to be redeemed. Mortal man is to become immortal. This mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption. The flesh of mortal man is to become like the flesh of the immortal Lord.

The Baptist church derives its system of religious doctrine, its creed, and its church discipline from one man's interpretation of the Scriptures, interpreted—like every other so called evangelical denomination—to define a three-headed monstrosity as Deity; an interpretation in violation of every principle of reason, of common sense, and Scriptural truth. God is not three, nor two, but one; and the Lord Jesus is the fulness of that one, he being the fulness of "the Godhead bodily." The same Lord Jesus who was in the world, who died on the cross and was raised the third day, now sits upon the eternal throne and rules the universe, not as one person in the Godhead, but as the eternal God and Father.

The same process of pneumo-psychic combustion which converted the Lord's body to Holy Spirit,—thus making it possible for the church to appropriate (eat) him through the dissemination of the baptismal overshadowing by which the church was anointed,—carried him ascendingly into the throne of God, where he sits as the central pole of universal being. Through the descending life of the Lord into its receptacle, the church,—after his resurrection and theocrasis,—he will "link the natures of God and man together" by transforming the nature of the sensual man, which is mortal and corruptible, to the immaculate and immortal nature of the Son of God; for it is declared that "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God;" that is, in the resurrection, at the last day—at the end of the dispensation.

None hath immortality but God. If man becomes immortal, as has been promised, for to all who believe in his name gives he power to become the sons of God, and those becoming the sons put on immortality and incorruptibility, then it follows that they become identical with God—the Baptist Flag to the contrary notwithstanding. If none have immortality but God, and man becomes immortal, it conclusively follows that those who put on immortality are made in the image and likeness of God; and being like God, they comprise God. If God, through the powers of procreative generation, projecting his potentiality into the life of his own offspring, the Son of God, could fall short of bringing forth the Divinity to perpetuate his throne, his dominion, and his eternal Godhood, he would be less in possibility than man; for the offspring of the natural manhood is the reproduction of the natural manhood. Is the Son of God less than the eternal Godhood? According to the Scriptures, He is the Almighty God, he is Jehovah.

The world is surfeited with Catholic, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, and a hundred other kinds of Christian rot, and it now demands a religion that can benefit humanity in this world; a religion founded upon an exact science; a religion that can give bread and butter, clothing, fuel, and shelter to the industrious poor; a religion that will provide—here, now, in the world in which we live—the necessities, comforts, and luxuries of life to the masses. If we cannot have such a religion, then we are better off without any. It is a notable fact that the religion of the present day, call it Christian or what you will, is an utter and disastrous failure so far as its relation to present human needs is concerned; and because it has utterly failed to provide for the wants of men, it is doomed.

"Behold, I make all things new," is a fulfilment now due, and to be accomplished in the revolution to come, wherein the old will be destroyed. THE FLAMING SWORD predicts the speedy destruction of the old church, with all its creeds and sects; a like destruction of the old governments;—empires, kingdoms, and republics, not from mere Biblical declaration, but from an exact scientific specification denoted both in the physical and spiritual heavens. We not only sound the warning note, but provide the ark of safety for all who look—under the influence of the search-light of illumination—for the Lord's appearing.

Our readers will further bear with us while we emphasize some things regarding the Lord Jesus, which we positively know and are authorized to communicate to this benighted century. The man Jesus, inclusive of his pneumatic, psychic, and somatic being,—hence, the entire man, was the Lord God, Jehovah-Elohi. He was the composite product of human will (desire), projected into material form and manifestation. He was, therefore, the Son (offspring) of man, the composite photograph, so to speak, of the aggregate projection of the spiritual entities of the millions who had died during the preceding centuries, conscientiously looking forward to the manifestation of that specific Messianic, stellar nucleus, the bright and Morning Star. He was the photos (light) of the world; he was the graphos—the written character, written because to write signifies to commit to posterity, hence he was literally the photograph; and because he was the aggregate mind and consciousness of the human race, he was the composite photograph of man. He was the Son of God because he was the aggregate life of the human race, projected forward and into the supreme Center of universal consciousness. He was the material clothing and outward form of God, who is the Supreme Man. The Lord Jesus was the person of the Almighty God. The Son of God was the very heart in the bosom of the Father, and the man who denies this honor, this glory, this supremacy, and all authority in earth and heaven, to this immaculate product of the supreme purpose and effort of the Deific consciousness, is antichrist—regardless of profession.

The Scientific Plumb-Line of Divine Integrity.

The Straight Line Basis of Koreshanity; the Great Modern Prophet With the Scientific Perception of All Truth; the Cross of the Perpendicular and Horizontal.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

AMONG the many claimants for the honor of being the prophet or eye of God, for the present age, is one described by a rival contemporary as the man who bases his claims on his ability "to see in a straight line." There are people in the world today, so rational that they would not require a more rational basis of claim. The almost universally defective eyesight of the existing humanity, is an indication of the average condition of the powers of mental and moral perception. People do not see straight, and all sorts of scientifically constructed lenses must be resorted to, in order to enable the organs of physical vision to see things approximately as they really are, so as to avoid destructive collisions and other evil consequences of defective eyesight.

If the mental and moral vision is correspondingly defective, some scientifically constructed mental and moral lenses may have to be introduced to enable poor humanity to avoid utter mental and moral destruction. "A straight line," or the plumb-line of integrity, may not be a bad thing to start with in every domain,—if rectitude is the thing desired. If man and his environment are interdependent, and experience serves to prove they are, then power to determine their correct relations in relation to the line of demarcation between the two, might be considered desirable, if the rest of perfect equilibrium is sought.

The plumb-line is a thing of supremely divine origin, with power to restore to Divinity the very devil himself. The true Bible scholar, as well as the most rational physicist, in contemplating the chaotic condition of human society, with the desire that it shall sometime reveal that divine order which the intuitive knowledge of law gives to the mature intellect, demands intuitively, as an organizer and restorer, the Man with the plumb-line in his hand—the plumb-line of social integrity, which will enable him to see straight and relate man to man, and man to his environment, without the possibility of error.

The prophetic spirit of Deity speaks by the mouth of his prophet, using the following language: "Thus he showed me; and, behold, the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand.

And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, a plumb-line. Then said the Lord, behold, I will set a plumb-line in the midst of my people Israel: I will not again pass by them any more."

Sin is condemned by the law; and in dealing with the typical Israel in his fallen state, the Lord—in speaking of Jerusalem as the church given over to the abominations of sin—says: "And I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria and the plummet of the house of Ahab; and I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down." Speaking of the restoration of Israel to the ultimate of antitypical wholeness, the Grand Man of God—the prophetic spirit declares, "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." By the mouth of Zechariah also the Lord speaks, and says: "For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerrubbabel, with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth."

However little use the many self-styled prophets of today may have for the straight line, basis for man and the foundation of his kingdom divine, the Almighty seems to so highly estimate its value that he does nothing without it. The science of the straight line belongs to the Eye of God alone. It is the supreme gift of God to men, whose salvation depends upon their ability to appreciate and utilize the gift. The plumb-line of a humble carpenter seems a small thing with which to revolutionize a universe, but it is one of the small things the Almighty has warned us by the mouth of his prophet not to despise,—and this is the day of this mighty small thing, this little one which shall become a thousand, this weak one which shall become a mighty nation.

The plumb-line is in the hands of a Man today, to serve its mightiest purpose,—to give man a knowledge of his God and to restore him to his image and likeness. This man stands upon a wall, the wall which confines and completes the universe,—it is its firmament, or firm foundation for the saints, the whole, integral, straight, erect ones, the men of God, thoroughly furnished for all good works. This Man with the plumb-line does what no other man has done or can do,—he gives to the inhabitants of the universe a science of its form and functions. With the patience of God, and as his perfect work, he stands on the wall with the plumb-line, and shines as the sun upon the darkness of the world's ignorance and wickedness—for its dispelling. He stands as erect as his plumb-line, as the fulfilment of the central, universal law which perpetuates universal being,—the law of the cross. He stands the one true cross, on which the Lord is lifted for the elevation of a prostrate race to rectitude.

The law fulfilled is the vertical, the prostrate race is the horizontal, the man with the plumb-line is the cross, the sin-bearer, the Rock,—Peter, on whom sin, the burden of the cross, was laid, to be erected in the sight of men. "There is life for a look at the crucified one," if that look be one of recognition of the science of the law; for this science is the light of the world, with power to give life to men. There is no other foundation Stone for the building again of Zion, than this Rock tomb of the crucified Christ. This Rock is the head of the Gentile body, the great tomb of Joseph, whose posterity it is, and in which the Lord God Almighty is buried, and from which he must come forth to his inheritance of power and great glory. This science of the cross, this science of straight lines, is the gospel of the kingdom. Its lines go out to the confines of the earth, in its every domain.

The perpendicular and horizontal lines solve every problem in the universe, every mystery of the kingdom.

"In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime."

This cross, remember, is made of two straight lines—and the vertical is the plumb-line. Woe to the despisers of its straight lines, and woe to the man who cannot see straight.

The gospel of free grace is the gospel of the science of the law, freely given for the redemption of the sinner. By this science sin is revealed, to be hated and condemned, that the seer may be saved to will and to do God's good pleasure,—to obey the law with gladness and singleness of heart. This plumb-line of moral integrity, the law in its covenant relation to man, is his erection, his standing again, his resurrection in God's image and likeness.

The Lord delights in straight lines, and by the power of the man with the plumb-line of every domain, will he fulfil the prophecy and promise: "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." "And I will bring the blind by a way they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them."

The voice of God always, in every age, is the man with the straightedge of the measuring rod, and the plumb-line of integrity. The ultimate domain of the kingdom of God—the Theocracy, is in the earth, God's footstool and material inheritance, in which he is the heir of all things. Wherever God goes in his ascent into the celestial, or descent into the natural, the chief credential of his personality or voice is the plumb-line of integrity for the domain in which divine manifestation is to occur. Without God, every sphere is a waste, a wilderness. Announcing the approach of Deity, a voice cries in the wilderness: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight;" and for this, the primary essential is a standard of measurement, the plumb-line of integrity. The celestial glory of the Lord ultimates in the natural, creating by conjunction with it, the arch-natural. It is ushered in by the plumb-line, or straightedge of the natural domain in the outermost sphere of natural science, the material foundations of the natural universe, by the Man erected by the science of the Cross of Christ—the power of God unto salvation.

believe, in the claim that they were the descendants of the Gods.

Social evolution means nothing less than a new genus or race of beings; and the only obstacle, at least the greatest one, in the way of the adoption by the mind of the fact and law of such an evolution, is the inordinate conceit of the human, which impresses him with the conviction that there can be nothing in the line of development more perfect in organic form than the present genus.

Space belongs to nature, and is a factor of natural and material existence. It comprises no part of spiritual relation and quality.

The time is upon us, when that which is now a dream will become a wakeful reality, and we shall know as we are known. Man is more than he seems to be. He finds himself in the midst of a vast universe, and the inquiry forces itself unbidden and irresistibly to the mind: "Whence the origin, and what the destiny of the human soul?" And the answer comes: "Man is the offspring of Deity, in process of development toward the life from whence he sprang." In view of the overwhelming truth, as it illumines the spiritual vision and enables one to comprehend somewhat of the relation to God our Father, it looks as if the old Greeks were not so much heathen as the common Christians would have us

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS ago France was in the throes of revolution and anarchy. Long oppressed by the nobility and the priesthood, the people rose up in revolt and overthrew the kingdom and threw off the yoke of the church. At the time of the beginning of the revolution there were numberless parasites sapping the life of the people: 23,000 monks, 60,000 curates and vicars, and 30,000 nuns. There were 2,500 monasteries, 1,500 convents, and 60,000 churches. In all, there were 130,000 persons in France supported by the people for church work that was utterly useless. Besides these, there were 140,000 nobles; the noble families numbered 30,000; on each square league of territory and for each 100,000 people of the nation, there was one castle; there were thousands of temples of corruption. The territory owned and occupied by the church was one fifth the entire territory of France; the nobility owned one fifth, and one fifth belonged to the communes and the king. The king and his family were objects of support of the nation. 26,000,000 people were not only forced to pay the expenses of the government and support the army, but also support the vast army of religious and noble parasites! The fires of revolution were kindled by the great Voltaire, the apostle of freethought; and after his demise the spirit of agnosticism hovered over the classes, and fanned the sparks of discontent into flames of rebellion. From the kingdom the nation was merged into a reign of terror unparalleled in all history. The great pendulum of the fate of France swung over the fields of chaos, bloodshed, the despotism of the mob, and over the republic, and then the empire. There was ample opportunity for agnosticism to reform not only France, but also the world, if it possessed the elements of genuine reform. The sequel proves that the great forces of organic unity were not operative in the restoration of the peace of France; there was the mere dying out of the fires after the fuel was consumed. Today the church is fastened upon the French nation as securely as before the revolution, and the boasted reform of France has come to naught. Modern socialism can promise America nothing more than has come to France. If the destiny of America and of the world was left to the disintegrating elements now directed against the semblance of order existing in the present governments, the terrors of France would be repeated, multiplied and prolonged beyond endurance. The revolution will come; but order follows, established, not by agnosticism, but by its antithet, the Koreshan System of genuine reform, the science of societal reconstruction.

The great international council of women, at London, again calls the attention of the world to the sphere of woman's influence. We are nearing the time when woman will become a stupendous factor in religious, social, and economic progress and reform; and the present agitation is indicative of the fact that another half of the world is about to enter a conflict—woman, alongside her brothers. The woman's council deals with the questions of woman's rights; but the movement is on too popular a scale to effect any radical reformation in the conduct of man's affairs. Bound up with the world as it at present exists, are conditions—difficulties and oppressions, which the placing of woman on the scale of equal suffrage would not remove. True reform cannot come from simply increasing the voting population of the world, but by the establishment of a system which shall work for woman the same reform that it works for man, through Messianic function and the exaltation of man and woman, not as dual, vidual beings, but in the uniting of man and woman in the single, individual personalities of the biune sons of God.

This is the phase, the highest phase, of genuine reform contemplated by neither man's nor woman's international councils, but nevertheless necessary in freeing woman from her present bondage, and man from his curse. It is the work of the Almighty through the application of the laws and principles of life, the practical science of making all things new.

Modern Christianity boasts of the fact that it goes wherever civilization goes; it seems to the world that it is a mark of progress for the church to keep pace with the western march of empire, and the so called enlightenment of the nations. If it is true of Christianity, it is also true of other things which move contemporaneously with Christendom throughout the world; for what follows as a result of Christianity should be good if Christianity is good. We have before us a well-written advertisement of the beer that has made "Christian" America famous; as an example of progress, it suggests that 219 carloads of Schlitz' beer have been shipped to Manila since the possession of the islands by America. This would make a train a mile and a half in length! Such shipments to different parts of the world have been repeated hundreds of times over. The article says: "Wherever civilization has gone, Schlitz' beer has followed. Agencies for it have for twenty years been established in the farthest parts of the earth. Schlitz' beer has been known in South Africa since the white man first went there. It is shipped in large quantities to the frigid wilds of Siberia. It is advertised in the quaint newspapers of China and Japan. It is the beer of India—the beverage of the Egyptian and the Turk. It is not saying too little to say that the sun never sets on Schlitz' agencies, for it is literally true that it is always noon time at one of them."

The sun-faced angel editor of the Cayster has concluded to bring all things to an end swiftly, and therefore stands upon "sea and upon the earth" at Johnstown, Pa., and lifts his hand to heaven and swears that time shall be no longer; he proposes to make it shorter. "The herald has cried. What next?" He calls upon the Almighty to listen to his instructions concerning how to break up the great ice firmament which he imagines to surround the earth; how to accelerate time by breaking the astronomical clock, and how to let in ether to permeate the atmosphere and produce world-wide anesthesia to revive the sleeping humanity! It would certainly be quite a surprise to the Creator of the universe, to suddenly realize that he had somehow created such a universe as the Castral angel has discovered in his own deformed mentality. "Who should be able to swear that the mystery is soon to be finished, if not the sun-faced angel with the open book? Now that the Voice Angel's oath is sworn, why should not the events that finish the mystery of God soon begin to come to pass?" Because the failure to fulfil the predictions of delirious false prophets and angels is about the only thing that will convince an army of pretenders that they are mere insects before the great Niagara, in their attempts to solve the problems of prophecy, life, and destiny, without the truth!

Aerial navigation and the perpetual motion are subjects of experiment by hundreds of unsuccessful inventors, and in the past, thousands of minds have been engaged on the problems. Now comes wireless telegraphy to claim the attention of men who will not succeed on the basis on which it is at present attempted by Marconi and others. In both the flying machine and the perpetual motion, gravity is the obstacle which the modern scientist is unable to overcome; there will be no successful aerial navigation nor perpetual motion until gravity is disintegrated in the apparatus. There are specific laws involved in Koreshan Alchemy and Physics, laws of complex polarization of energies in the creation of a vortex, the knowledges of which are absolutely necessary to human levitation and the perpetual motion, as well as successfully telegraphing or telephoning without wires. The law is Messianic; and the scientific world is utterly incapable of discovering the key, and equally incapable of applying the laws in the domain of mechanical and electrical apparatus. The Koreshan System alone contains the science of the destruction of the positive elements of the battery; it alone contains the key to success in accomplishing the world's greatest wonders in utilizing the forces of the physical and the human worlds for the benefit of humanity.

The modern church is reaching a decidedly and confessedly critical period of its history. The great "divines" concede the fact that Christianity is on the decline, and are discussing the causes and the probable results. The alarm is not local; it is as wide as Christendom. Everywhere it is asked, What shall we do to save the church? An important paper has been published by Prof. Hall, of the Union Theological Seminary, Chicago, in which he admits that the church is on the decline. He sees the church as a lost steamship on the ocean, struggling toward the shore through a tempestuous sea and against contrary winds. The outlines of the coast are dimly visible, but no man can identify it nor describe it; it is an unknown destination! Yet he presumes to believe that there can be no permanent decline in the church because of the fact that religion is a permanent factor in human experience. True; and that is all the more reason that apostate Christianity should decline, that a new religion may thoroughly satisfy the religious aspirations of progressive humanity. There must be a new covenant, a new religion; and the revival of religion can only come through a new Messiah. The modern church will continue to decline until it falls utterly, while the Koreshan System of absolute truth will prevail over all the world.

The English language is the philological fruit of a great cycle. The symbols of expression of ideas are almost unlimited—the language contains over 300,000 distinct words. In the English and American peoples there must be, somewhere, corresponding qualities of life and energy. The common people may be proud of English lexicons, while possessing a sense of utter lack of the meaning and use of the words of the language. There are districts in "enlightened" America, where the vocabulary of every-day use is extremely limited; there are people who use no more than 250 to 300 words in a lifetime. Recently, a test was made in Baltimore of the number of words used by a lawyer and a physician; the result showed the use of 573 different words by the lawyer, and 510 words by the physician. There are truths, principles, and laws in Koreshanity which cannot possibly be expressed by any such limited vocabulary. Is it any wonder, then, that thousands of people, with present mental capacities and faculties, are unable to understand the vocabulary of Koreshan Science? Koreshanity involves the elements of progress of the entire Anglo-Saxon world; and in the full and complete expression of the same, the entire language must finally be employed in expressing its Science in words.

The citizens of the United States are without a name by which to designate themselves as a people. The people of England are English; of Spain, Spaniards; of France, the French; but what are the people of the United States? The difficulty is experienced both at home and abroad. At present, they are design-nated as Americans, but as there are other Americans than those who live in the United States, it is too general. A St. Louis professor endeavors to invent a new name for the United States, a cabalistic affair, USONA, composed of the initial letters of the words United States of North America; the people he would designate as Usonians. We protest that the name of the great American nation and the name of its people must possess a meaning which in itself shall characterize the nation and the people. An arbitrary name is useless, and it would soon go out of use if adopted. The United States will possess a new name when it becomes a part of the New Order after the revolution; and the name will be founded on scientific Koreshan principles. Until then, no satisfactory name other than America and Americans will be capable of designating the greatest nation and people in the earth.

The Roman hierarchy as well as France must answer for the crime of persecuting Capt. Dreyfus. The mother church has succeeded in imparting many phases of her complex character to her daughters, the Protestant sects of Christendom; and Protestants as well as the Catholics of France are permeated with the spirit of Jesuitism and hatred of the Jews. The clerical party of France is headed by the Catholic priests and sustained by the Protestant clergy; and it is this party that has heaped up the anti-Semitic hatred in France. In it was originated the conspiracy to drive Dreyfus from his position in the French army. Subtle Jesuitism, with its hatred of all people except the Catholics, fulfils the Scripture declaration that hatred is murder; and the entire French army is murdering France and its victims, by its support of the church of Rome, rather than the French republic!

The one hundred and twenty-five American trusts, with a capital of over $6,000,000,000, absorb all the wealth created by 3,500,000 men. These millions of men are performing no other use in the world than sustaining the gigantic corporations; and the only use made of the capital thus created, is to enrich and gratify a few thousand millionaires. Suppose that the millionaires were left out of the question, and the laborers should receive the benefit of all they produce? Instead of living in poverty now, they would possess not only the necessities, but also the luxuries of life. The only true prosperity is in the equitable distribution of wealth. The trusts are great syndicates of co-operation—co-operation not for the benefit of the many, but for the benefit of the few who persistently steal the wealth, aye, the very life of millions!

A Cambridge professor makes the astronomical prophecy that the moon, cast off in the remote past, will return to the earth. The rational mind asks how the moon of the Copernican system ever came to be freed from the earth's gravity, and leave the mundane sphere for its long celestial journey. At present, the theory is that the moon has sufficient pull on the earth to raise the waters of the ocean several feet to produce the high tides; perhaps it is not the earth's pull that will cause the moon to come back, but the moon's pull, hand over hand like, on the gravitational rope. The moon has never gone away; the moon is the earth's shell, and the visible moon in the physical heavens is the gravo-photosphere—the picture of the earth's strata.

A man with a will can succeed amid adversities, where men with ample opportunities and facilities, but with less determination, would fail. Thousands of people use the slightest obstacles as excuses for inactivity, but genius attempts the impossible, makes opportunities, and creates success. There have been many noble examples of true heroism in modern times, and some where misdirected personal ambition has led to useless, daring feats;—but the will was nevertheless a potent factor of success. A crippled sailor minus fingers, dares the sea, and is attempting to cross the Atlantic ocean in a small, five-ton sloop. He is a man noted for his intrepidity and nautical skill; he certainly possesses rare courage which, when associated with noble purposes, makes men that are men!

An example of success of the perpetual motion is afforded in the invention of a Pennsylvania man. Two years ago the daily press heralded it as a complete success, a complex wheel with springs and discular weights on arms outside of the periphery. One of the machines was stolen and sent to the patent office, where the energies of motion were traced to concealed clock works in the base of the apparatus. As a result, the Scientific American exposes the fraud by photographic and X-ray reproductions, and the inventor languishes in prison for obtaining money on false pretenses.

I. Cant is the name of a persistent devil with a subtle influence which disintegrates mental and moral forces; he operates in millions. He prevents minds from undertaking the study of Koreshan University on the ground, not that it is absurd, but that it is too profound for comprehension; and he creates moral weakness in the minds of many who desire to apply the Science of Koreshanity to their own lives. Discharge every entity that belongs to the sphere of the Cants, and employ the potent forces of determination to succeed in intellectually comprehending the Science of all truth.

The peace congress did not even become a newspaper's nine-days' wonder; the news from the Hague has become insignificant. The congress is an utter failure, and has accomplished nothing permanent. The sincerity of the Czar from the broad view of universal peace, is questionable; but it has been conceded that, for the present, he desires absolute cessation of war, and all preparation for war on the part of every nation in the earth—except the Russian!

It is reported that Mrs. Eddy, the supreme high priestess of "christian science," has had a stroke of paralysis. Inasmuch as she affirms that there is nothing in existence but God, she must get as much comfort out of the divine boomerang as her feebleness will allow. Meanwhile, the terrible and startling contrast between "Science and Health" and the condition of its author, will produce serious reflections in the minds of her following!

The American trusts are a dark reflex of the great system of divine-human co-operation; they are a shadow cast before the real and majestic combination of the forces of labor in the new kingdom. The trusts are now oppressive because they are mis-used; they will be a blessing when operated in the interests of humanity, instead of for the benefit of unprincipled thieves protected by laws made by the people!

The spirit of missionary work nineteen hundred years ago seemed commendable to the church societies engaged in it; but it was denounced by Jesus the Messiah as a process of making proselytes two-fold more the children of hell. Today the church missionaries are compassing land and sea, bringing converts into the vortex of the terrible vengeance to be visited upon Christopaganism.

It is easy for the faddists to connect the name of Jesus the Christ with their fads, and just as easy to deny his divine mission in the world. Jesus could never have been a great and true teacher unless he was all that he claimed to be; for it is illogical that he should tell the truth about religion, and promulgate fallacy concerning himself!

The Presbyterians are more concerned about getting the word God in the Constitution of the United States than they are about getting the life of God in the constitution of man.

The apostle warned the early Christians against winds of false doctrine; they have now become mental cyclones and tornadoes.

The modern church is a dead body; it is without the works necessary to demonstrate the genuineness of its faith.

The leaders of the trusts have become trustees of the American nation!

Men die because they are too corrupt to live.

THE EDITOR.

Jesus the Messiah Was God Almighty.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I am amazed at THE FLAMING SWORD'S unparalleled exposition of the great work which the Christ of God came to accomplish. It gives me a new idea of how the true church was the body of Christ, in which each vital member was a member in particular of that body.

Your answer to my questions in the issue of April 21 staggers me, and almost converts me to Koreshanity. (1) But when I reflect that Jesus never claimed to be more than the Son of God, it seems to be an insurmountable obstacle to the belief that he was also God the Father. The disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration were overshadowed, and heard a voice saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him." Besides, there are many other Scriptures which I cannot harmonize with your teachings. Possibly my eyes are not fully opened to see the spirit of the Word. I am a seeker after truth; I want nothing else, for anything short of that is only chaff.

(2) According to Koreshanity, the 144,000 sons of God must be now walking upon the earth. Please explain your views of that, and how and when (if you know) they will be manifest.—S. L. B., California.

THE FLAMING SWORD contains unparalleled expositions of the divine science, from the simple fact that it is an expositor of the whole truth—the system of truth that is entirely harmonious with itself, with the facts of the universe, and with the Bible. If it teaches the truth concerning the mission of Jesus in the impartation of his life to his disciples, as the actual substance of the divine Being, which constituted them the temples of the living God, it also teaches the truth concerning the nature and character of the Messiah—his Divinity and Godhood. We refer our correspondent to the article in this issue by KORESH, The Divinity of Jesus the Messiah, and suggest a careful reading of the same, as it touches specifically upon the facts of the unity of the divine attributes in the person of Jesus.

We hold that Jesus did claim to be more than merely the Son of God. He taught that he and the Father were one, and that the Father was in him. He was the fulness of the Godhead bodily, the actual, personal manifestation of God, the Word made flesh. He was the supreme manifestation of Deity. He was Father, Mother, and Son in one. Every seed possesses the attributes of fatherhood, motherhood, and sonship. Every seed has been produced by a previous seed; and the essence of the previous seed is in the seed produced; and that seed possesses the power to beget other seeds. It is an inherent attribute, and hence any seed is father, mother, and son in one.

When Jesus said, "The Father is greater than I," he virtually said, my Fatherhood is greater than my Sonship; it is a greater thing to beget than to be begotten. He said, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father," for he was the manifestation of the Father. If the Father was in Jesus, then Jesus was all there was of God; and when Jesus disseminated his life, when he planted himself in the disciples, they became the temples of God, because God was in them—not a part of him, but all of him. The entire life of Deity was sown in the church.

More specifically, the Son was the external manifestation of the invisible God, the interior Deity, the supreme ego of Jesus, the Elohi, the invisible. It was the interior of Jesus that was seen by the disciples when he was transfigured, manifest as Moses and Elijah; and it was the interior of Jesus that communicated to the interior mind of the disciples the words, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him." The vibrations were from within, and made as distinct auditory impressions, vibrations of the ear-drums, as any sounds from the external world; and to them it seemed to be from the external. Koresshan theology is scientific, consistent with itself, logical, and reasonable. But a thorough comprehension of it necessitates the eradication from the mind of every vestige of modern theology,—every idea of either two or three persons of the Godhead, and every idea that God is external to humanity, in the sky, or atmosphere, or any other place where it is impossible for either divine or human mentality to express itself. God is in man, in the generation of the righteous, and nowhere else.

(2) The viduals who are to become sons of God through processes of overcoming death in the body, are now in the world. They are viduals who have come down through the age in a series of re-embodiments, and who received the divine spirit at the beginning of the age. They are the ones to whom Jesus gave power, nineteen hundred years ago, to become sons of God at the end of the age. We are nearing the time when a great conflagration, the burning up or translation of all who are to become sons of God, is to take place. This fire is induced through another baptism from another Messiah. The energies generated in the combustion will enter a central personality, whence they will be projected and materialized, or manifest as the biune sons of God. This is to be the greatest achievement of Koresshan Science; and at the present time the gospel of the kingdom is promulgated for the purpose of gathering together the elements of a great human battery, those who are receptive to the message of the Messenger. They will appear when the age culminates—shortly after the impending revolution.

The Tower of Babel and the Confusion of Tongues.

What is your answer to the question, What was the tower of Babel, and what the confusion of language?—E. W. M., Aleppo, Pa.

The tower is the structure or organization of the church. There is a tower in every dispensation of human progress. The church is called a tower, because it is the outlook of the watchman, from which a higher view of the world's horizon is obtained. During the Christian dispensation the tower was the Christian church; and the members of the church at the beginning of the dispensation were of one mind, and contained one expression of the divine Word,—the primitive gospel.

The church lapsed into apostasy; the aspirations became perverted. Jesus was the Word of God; the divine entities sown in the church were the words of the divine language. The death of the seed in the soil of the church resulted in the confusion of doctrine, the language of the church, and the church became Babylon, which means confusion. The history of the Christian church is the history of the tower of Babel and the confusion of language; and when the processes are understood by which the primitive church became Babylon, the meaning of the tower in the land of Shinar is revealed.

An Englishman Writes a Serio-Comic Production on Koresshan After Reading One Copy of The Flaming Sword.

Has my gentle reader any views about Koresshan? Now, don't say in your haste that I've been at the Encyclopedia Britannica again, for I believe that useful work makes no reference either to KORESH or Koreshanity. And the odds are ten to one that none of you know anything about either the one or the other, and so I propose to enlighten you. I will be quite candid, and own up like a man that my information has been culled from the pages of a Chicago publication entitled THE FLAMING SWORD.

It is only fair to warn the respectable reader that the paper in question makes this announcement: "Koresshanity is shocking to most people." I have carefully examined the system, however, and I can discover nothing to bring a blush to the blooming cheek of my most sensitive reader. So here goes for a little science: "The Cellular Cosmogony or Koresshan Astronomy is the scientific discovery of DR. CYRUS R. TEED, of Chicago." Let us give his due meed of praise to good Teed, indeed and indeed, and on that we're agreed—but I fear I am unconsciously lapsing into verse.

And what is this Cellular Cosmogony? I rather like the words, and the expectations they raise will not be disappointed, I can promise you. This is how the doctrine is introduced: "The earth is a stationary concave cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, suns, moons, planets, and stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical universe in existence." This is distinctly encouraging. There is only one universe (beware, good reader, of imitations), and we are literally "in it." I have heard people say that the world is a regular ball, and the inspired TEED teaches the same great truth, merely substituting the word "concave" for "regular."

I will return to the cell theory later, merely stating at this point that the word may remind some of you of occasional enforced retirements you have experienced. Many a man has asked, What is the world? It is a question of which notice should, as a rule, be given, but thanks to KORESH and THE FLAMING SWORD I can explain: "It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell." So now you know—and the free use of capital letters proves the truth of the assertion. You must accept this, and I warn you not to bother me with arguments or questions or verses on the subject. That remark is intended chiefly for a valued correspondent at Portsmouth, who has views of his own about things of this sort. I openly and deliberately abandon his doctrine and throw in my lot with Koresshanity.

Look at this great truth, and note with what simple grandeur it is expressed: "All life is cellular—within the cell." Many a ruminating philosopher at Holloway or Wormwood Scrubs will agree with that. From Dartmoor and similar retreats I anticipate a chorus of approval, and if there is one skeptic among my readers, I fling this sentence, worthy of Mr. Chaplin at his best, at his doubting pate: "Koresshan Cosmogony comports with all the facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation, and Navigation." How do you feel after that? Prepared to believe and tremble I should think. It sounds rather like an advertisement, I admit, and one somehow misses the refrain, "but it won't wash clothes." At the same time there is always something convincing about polysyll-latic words beginning with capital letters.

There is more to follow of an explanatory nature, as thus: "It interprets all Ancient Legends and Mythologies and furnishes the basis of all reason and science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy." Indeed, no well-furnished house should be without a supply of CELLULAR COSMOGONY. It imparts a gloss and curliness to the hair, cures corns, is grateful and comforting, is purely vegetable, used by crowned heads, sold everywhere—though candor compels me to repeat that, in spite of the efforts of the greatest scientists of the day, it won't, simply won't wash clothes.

Some may ask for a proof of these glowing assertions, and I am glad to be able to furnish something of the sort. Here is a testimonial headed "Koreshan work in New York; Rev. Mitchell stirring up towns and villages with the CELLULAR COSMOGONY." The Rev. U. Gordon Mitchell writes: "I am getting along very nicely here (Ogdensburg); have sold 27 books in two and a half days, and left fifteen copies in the very best homes in the city; consequently the CELLULAR COSMOGONY is being talked about in the very highest circles." Nor is that all, for the enthusiastic Mitchell adds: "I am hearing from the book all the time. A gentleman told me he heard a heated discussion about Koreshan astronomy on the railroad." I wish the expressions used in the heated discussion had been put on record—but Mr. Mitchell is a reverend gentleman, and naturally draws the line somewhere.

He is hopeful and plucky, too, for he adds: "By next fall I want you to furnish me with a stereopticon outfit; if you will do this I will raise Cain with the Copernican system. Now, plan, by all means, to furnish me with an outfit by the first of September, and I will be your apostle to the Gentiles with a vengeance." There is the true ring about that. U. Gordon Mitchell is evidently the right sort of man to hustle around as an agent in advance. I don't know whether he agrees with the maxim—"Be a crank! It pays," which I find in another part of the paper, but I should think he does.

I leave Mitchell with the hope that he will get his stereopticon outfit, and will raise Cain with the Copernican system, and I turn to a little communication which "Hiram" sends to the same paper. It begins in this way: "A friend who has been investigating Koreshanity visited me recently, and when I asked him what he thought of it he said, 'I don't take much stock in Koreshanity; I can't swallow its Cosmogony.'" I need not inform the reader that Hiram comes out on top in the end. It's always so in these little tales. If you can't smash your opponent and mop the floor with him when you have the statement of his case as well as your own, well, you must be a wall-eyed mule, and paralyzed at that.

Meantime, if the intelligent reader wants to know more about this Chicago philosophy, I can direct him to The Guiding Star Publishing House, Chicago, Ill. There he can get a book, one volume in two parts. "Part I. The Universology of Koreshanity, by KORESH, the Founder. Part II. The New Geodesy, by Prof. U. G. Morrow." THE FLAMING SWORD adds, "This is a book that sells on sight! It is obviously unique!" I am inclined to think that THE FLAMING SWORD is about right in that last remark.—L. L. H., in The Morning Leader, London, Eng., June 15, 1899.

The Way to China.

A Canada Paper Contrasts the Balloon Method with the Popular Hole Through Earth's Center.

"CELLULAR COSMOGONY, OR THE EARTH A CONCAVE SPHERE."—The above is the title of a "very peculiar" book now being sold in town by Rev. U. G. Mitchell. The book bears the further title of "Universology of Koreshanity: The New Geodesy," which will no doubt help our readers to a fuller understanding of how modern astronomy is exploded and the Bible vindicated, as is claimed by the back page of the cover. The book consists of two parts: the first written by KORESH, the Founder of Koreshanity, and consisting of a full and particular description of the earth as a hollow sphere and proof of the fact that we live, move, and have our being in the inside of that sphere instead of the outside, as we always supposed. The proof at any rate fully satisfies the author, who, in his introduction, denounces all that is opposed to Koreshanity as antichrist. The second part is written by Professor U. G. Morrow, astronomer and professor of the Koreshan Unity, and contains, among other things, accounts of scientific experiments conducted by him, which go to show the truth of his belief, or rather appear to do so to his eyes. Any who read this book carefully and are persuaded by its arguments, will realize at once that they cannot go to China by boring through the earth, but for a short bee line trip must take a balloon.—Prescott (Ont.) Messenger.

A Startling Revelation!

Facts and Figures From Official Report of the Comptroller of Currency Concerning American Banks.

Before me is Volume I of the "Report of the Comptroller of the Currency for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1898." On page 51 appears a condensed table of the "resources and liabilities of all national banks, other banks, banking institutions, and private banks" of the United States (9,485 in number). Under the head of "Loans," which represents the face of notes held against the people for money borrowed from the banks, the aggregate is $4,632,632,015. Under the head of "Deposits," which represents the amount of money (theoretically) on deposit in the banks, and subject to sight check by the depositors, the aggregate is $5,741,023,802. Under the head of "Cash," which represents the total amount of all moneys of every description, down to pennies, in short, all of the actual money in the banks of the country, July 14, 1898, (when the reports were made), the aggregate is $687,796,174.

I will ask your readers to review the foregoing figures, and make an analysis of the enormous gulf existing between the "loans" and "deposits" on the one hand, and the actual cash on the other. Right here we note the fact that the total amount of all United States money in existence—gold, silver, gold and silver certificates, greenbacks, national bank notes, fractional currency, nickels, and pennies outside the vaults of the treasury and the legal reserves of the national banks—does not exceed $1,250,000,000. How does it come, then, that the bankers of the country have loaned to the people nearly four times as much money as there is in the United States? And how does it come that there are "deposits" in the banks subject to sight check, to about five times as much money as there is in the country? And how does it come that the money loaners of the nation are drawing interest on four billions of nothing, and are literally getting rich on the interests of their own debts?

When the "panic" comes (as come it must) and "confidence" takes wings and flies away, and all the bank depositors rush to the banks to draw out their "deposits," how much will they get on the dollar? If we deduct from the amount of actual cash, the legal tenders which the law requires the national banks to keep intact, with which to redeem their outstanding notes (15 per cent), and make a reasonable allowance for the average limit to which the banks would allow the depositors to draw on their cash before closing their doors, it is not likely that depositors would realize more than 8 cents on the dollar!—CHAS. BONSALE, Expert Accountant, in Advance Guard, Findlay, O.

The Lesson of the Trusts.

Gigantic Competitive Concerns, Nursed and Protected by the Government, Now Beyond all Control.

The present fight against trusts will end in nothing. While high tariff and scarce money have been the feed on which trusts have developed and fattened, it is entirely too late in the day to think of starving them out by withholding former favors. When the alligator is little it can live on flies, bugs, and other insects; but when the alligator is grown nothing will satisfy it but Ethiopian babies; and if they are not served to it regularly, it will find a way to obtain them. The trust is our pet alligator; and we will find when we undertake to tame it with cowhide whips, its hide is pretty tough; or when we undertake to build log fences about it, that they will shatter to splinters at every sweep of its great tail.

The trust is here to stay and to ruin. It is competition gone to seed. Starting with competition, favored by government against other competitors, eating the taxes of the people drawn from them by government, profiting on the wreckage of the country through the contraction of the currency of the country, it has now outgrown every necessity, and can easily dictate terms to its benefactor. No longer a protegee of the government, it has become a dictator, and while we proudly boast of our republican institutions, it rules with a despotic power.

Only one way is open before the people, that is the formation of a counter trust. We must protect ourselves from the prairie fire by burning the prairie around us. If a great national trust is formed, in which all things will be owned by the people in common, in which every man or woman is a servant of the government, and the government is the servant of every man or woman, in which individual sovereignty shall stop with the individual, then great wealth and extreme poverty will cease. In short, there is no cure for our present condition except through scientific socialism. If we will receive it, the trusts have taught, and are yet teaching us, a great and very beneficial lesson. Let us profit by it.—The Liberator, Norton, Kan.

The Baptist Flag and the Flaming Sword.

Our Contemporary Affirms that the Manhood of Jesus Was not Divine; and that the Divinity of the Christ Was not Human.

We wish to say to THE FLAMING SWORD, that the Baptists do most truly believe that Jesus Christ was the manifestation of the Father, God, for "no man could do the works he did except God be with him." He said himself, "The Father doeth the works." In him was a divine fulness, and a divinity that made him the equal of the Father, in his God nature. But Jesus was also a man, a real man, with a body like unto his fellows. In this he was not God, but man. In this he suffered and died. In this he could say, "My Father is greater than all." Baptists believe the Bible doctrine of the dual nature of Christ. In one he is the infinite and unknowable Deity whose ways are past finding out. In the other, he is the manifestation of love and mercy and goodness of God toward the children of men. God never was so manifested as to be mere man; and man never was so manifested as to be truly God. Dual fellowship did truly link the natures of God and man together so as to give to the world a Savior, but God and man never became identical, Koreshanity to the contrary, notwithstanding.—Baptist Flag.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Arena.

The July number is of special interest to educators; it contains articles discussing educational problems. In "Modern College Education" many deficiencies in modern schools are pointed out, and many features that are not practical are exposed to the view of the reader. The article endeavors to get at the real purpose of education, and makes a plea for immediate revision of the present conventional college curriculum. Art in the Public Schools suggests that the schools of the present time are carried away with fads and methods which only seem to educate, giving the mind only cake instead of real mental food necessary to form practical ideals and make character. Courses of Study for Normal Schools is also an article on school reform, while the Kingsville Plan of Education suggests a number of practical things concerning the conduct of the modern schools. The article on American Education in the Ottoman Empire, by Cyrus Hamlin, LL. D., of Robert College, Constantinople, will interest all Americans. Other stirring contributions, Direct Legislation, Unite or Perish, and Social Democracy in Germany are in the interest of reform.

The Saturday Evening Post.

There is no journal that comes to our desk that is read with greater care and satisfaction than the Saturday Evening

Post, of Philadelphia, the oldest journal in America, founded in 1728 by Benjamin Franklin. It stands at the top of popular high class journalism, clean, dignified, and conservative. It is not a newspaper, but a weekly publication of extraordinary merit; it is superior to the monthlies in many respects. Among its contributors are many of the world's noted writers, such as Ian Maclaren, Mrs. Burton Harrison, J. J. Ingalls, Vance Thompson, Maarten Maartens, the famous Dutch novelist, Rev. Hillis, Gen. Miles, Prof. Patton, president of Princeton university, Gilbert Parker, and others. The fine serial articles now being published are, A Scots Grammar School, Famous Feuds in Congress, and the highly entertaining story, the Circle of a Century; and with the issue of July 8, Mr. Bret Harte begins the first of a series of four short stories dealing with California life in the days of the great gold fever. This series of Mr. Harte's is along the lines upon which he made his first brilliant success. There are three pages each week to which we turn with interest and anticipation: Men and Women of the Hour; Public Occurrences that are Making History, and the Editor's page of editorials.

Leslie's Weekly.

The issue of July 13 is of special interest in sporting circles, both amateur and professional, as boating and yachting are subjects of special illustration; a full page contains a fine picture of Columbia, the American cup defender. Photographs of the men who won the intercollegiate boat race, and how Yale oarsmen row together, and a number of yachts, make a magnificent display. Other pictures are of the Filipino war, the welcome to Dewey at Colombo, the reunion of the Elks at St. Louis, and the great musical jubilee at Cincinnati,—subjects of current history. In the letter-press the special features are, a well written and complete story of the South African difficulty, a remarkable narrative of the famous Mrs. Maybrick murder case, and the story of the fall of Calumpit, besides the usual departments.

The Chautauquan.

The issue for July is the mid-summer Chautauquan program number, and is beautifully gotten up. Its interesting contents begins with the Paris Exposition of 1900, illustrated by a number of photographs of the palaces of the French World's Fair. First Steps in Wireless Telegraphy discusses improvements in telegraphic methods, and the article on American Imperialism will exert a good influence in calming the now disquieted democratic antipathy to American progress, as a result of the triumph of America over Spain. "Trusts" is a discussion of the economic problems of the hour; and among other articles are, Some Fruits of the Reformation, the Sin of the World, Old Violins, besides the usual review of current history—History as it is Made.

The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews.

We have received the first number of this periodical, and it is all it promised to be in the field of occult and metaphysical literature. It is a digest of the opinions of popular writers and thinkers on occult subjects the world over, a careful and impartial review of the most important occult and psychic publications. It is to this class of literature what the Review of Reviews is to the field of social reform and the news of the world. Monthly, $1.00 per year. 178 Summit st., Cleveland, O.

The New Voice.

This excellent weekly continues to fearlessly discuss the problems of the liquor traffic, and to expose the schemes which endorse and support the sale of liquors not only in cities and towns, but also in the army camps. Besides doing effective and commendable work in this field of reform, the New Voice is in itself a magazine of literary merit; its True Stories of Heroic Lives, Campaign Experiences of Noted Men, and other departments are of interest to all. $1.50 per year. 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The Open Court for July.

Contains an illustrated article on the Survival of Paganism in Mexico, by Prof. Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago; Modern French Philosophy, the ideologists and traditionalists; and an interesting article on the Higher Forms of Abstraction, dealing with the psychology of images, and also visual, auditory, and motor types of imagination. Open Court Publishing Co., Chicago.

The Mind.

The July number has its usual quota of contributions on metaphysical subjects, among which are Experimental and Transcendental Psychology, the Value of Understanding, Higher Laws, the Esoteric Art of Living, and a timely editorial on the Medical Trust, or the persecution of mental healers, by the medical fraternities. Alliance Publishing Co., Life Building, New York City.

The College of Psychical Sciences and Unfoldment.

This school, the only one of its kind in the world, is conducted by J. C. F. GRUMBINE, the author and lecturer. It is open to students each month. The studies are eclectic, although a regular and uniform curriculum is established and operative. It is devoted exclusively to the System of Philosophy concerning Divinity, and is connected with the Order of the White Rose, branch of the Rosicrucians. The secrets and mysteries of Magic and Occultism are revealed. The mytic and potential powers of Divinity, such as Clairvoyance, Psychometry, Inspiration, Psychopathy, Ontology, Hypnotism, Telepathy, and Illumination are taught.

Special teachings are arranged for out-of-town students and belong to the college extension department. Development is thus ensured in the student's home for a nominal sum.

For booklet, percentage of Psychical Power, send a stamped, addressed envelope to J. C. F. Grumbine, 1718 West Genesee st., Syracuse, N. Y.

Clairvoyance, its Nature, Law, and Unfoldment.—How to unfold the Clairvoyant vision, see and converse with Spirits, enter at will the Spiritual world, and become a seer and adept, absolutely what it purports to be. Cloth, price $3.50.

Psychometry: How to Unfold and realize Divination and Illumination. Price 50c. Send 25c for a sample copy of or $1.00 for a year's subscription to Immortality, the brilliant quarterly publication. Address, J. C. F. GRUMBINE, 1718 W. Genesee st., Syracuse, N. Y.

PROPHETIC MESSENGER, devoted to Prophecy, Weather Cycles, Crops, Markets, and future conditions, planting and harvesting through natural law. Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined. Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium 2 cents each.

The English Lion and the Russian Bear.

The Origin and Significance of the Terms; the Koreshan Solution of the Problem, Contrasted With the Anglo-Israel Theories of Prof. Totten.

Letter to Prof. Totten.

DEAR SIR:—For several years I have unsuccessfully endeavored to obtain a satisfactory answer to the following: What is the origin of the terms "English Lion" and "Russian Bear," as applied to England and Russia? I have published this query in many periodicals, of which the Sun, the Boston Transcript (Saturday evening edition), and the Literary Digest are types, and as yet I have not received any fundamental information. The failure of this method, together with that of my personal investigation, led me to write a personal letter to the editor of the Sun and request his special help in the matter. In a reply signed R. G. Butler, he informs me that you can furnish the desired information. I therefore present this matter for your kind consideration, and beg to thank you in advance for the courtesy of your reply. Appreciating the obligations under which I shall be placed by the favor, I am very truly yours,—G. G. FAUGHT, in "Our Race" News Leaflet.

Prof. Totten's Reply.

"I do not like to be considered as dogmatic, but in reply to your query will submit that Leo is that sign of the Zodiac which of old typified Judah—the Jews—who was (were) a lion's whelp. Christ is the Lion of Judah, but the insignia is Judah's scepterally. This Leo can be traced back in Israel's history and in ancient eastern lore to the very origin of the gospel, as it was once written in the stars and in the alphabet, and in all the mysteries. They were set there for signs and for seasons, and only the adepts at deeper knowledge ever get the hem of its garment in their touch. Now the unicorn is without doubt the insignia of Israel, and particularly of Joseph, in that Ephraim is his elected son and represents him, or the Ten Tribes. You should know that at the death of Solomon the unicorn separated from the lion, and the war between the lion and the unicorn began. It is not yet over, but the bloody part is finished. Samaria was Israel, and Jerusalem was Judah, and those are the two houses or folds of sheep who have the controversy of Zion before them. Not until they are united, and the one chained, very much as you see it on the arms of Great Britain, will the new, or Golden Age, return, which my studies indicate is now at hand."

OUR PURPOSE in replying to Mr. Faught's query, is partly to show the imperfection of Professor Totten's answer. Totten, like all others who have discovered the reciprocal relations of the constellations with the human race, fails to unravel the science of the co-ordination of ethnic development with the alchemico-organic (physical) heavens. There is both a physical and an anthropotic (human) Zodiac. The correspondence between them is absolute and perfect. The one in the alchemico-organic (physical) heavens is representative of, and corresponds to the line of universal life in the human race. There are twelve divisions of the Zodiacal belt in the physical heavens; there are also twelve corresponding divisions of the heavens of anthropotic existence. Co-ordinate with the physical Zodiac, there is a corresponding belt on the earth divided into twelve signs, also belonging to the alchemico-organic (physical) macrocosm. These twelve signs in the earth have their twelve corresponding divisions of human progress. Now, while the scope of this article does not warrant an extensive analysis of these twelve parts of the man, in their microcosmic and macrocosmic specifications, we shall attempt the specific analysis of what is involved in the two questions under consideration.

Why is England called the British lion? Why is Russia called the Russian bear? That part of the Zodiac called Leo in the alchemico-organic (physical) heavens, is the heart of the Zodiacal belt. It is a fact that in the Hebrew language, lion and heart are derived from the same root. In the Zodiac, lion and heart are the same; and in the human organism, the lion and the heart are also the same. If we study the location of the heart in its relation to the other organs of the body, we find it to occupy the same relation to the shoulders and arms that Leo and Gemini, as signs in the earth, sustain to each other, as they occupy a position on the earth on the same parallel, being signs south of the Tropic of Cancer. The heart of the body is the center of collection and distribution; it is therefore the center and power of commerce in the body. The heart collects the blood from every part of the body, projects it into the lungs, or at least regulates its flow, where it is metamorphosed, thence it regulates its distribution to every part of the body. The heart, therefore, is the symbol of commercial power.

The British lion is at present the heart of humanity, because it wields the commercial power of the world,—the commercial power residing in the money power. How did England come to possess this power?

Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise: thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee. Judah is a lion's whelp: from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?

The couching down here, has direct reference to the copulative process of the lion, which has its correspondence in God's copulation with the race, through the Lion of the tribe of Judah; namely, the Christ, the Son of God.

The twelve sons of Jacob comprised an interior human Zodiac; the twelve tribes, a less interior Zodiacal belt. Judah, the tribe of Judah, constituted the heart of this Zodiac. Its development and progress culminated in the production of the Lord Jesus, the Son of God. Jesus was the very soul and life of the tribe of Judah, hence, he was the Lion of the tribe of Judah, therefore the heart of the Jewish nation. Now, if you would know why England (the English people) is called the British lion, you must know where the Lion of the tribe of Judah—the Christ of the living God, the heart of the Jewish race—went to when he left the earth alive, in the presence of his disciples. The answer to this question cannot come from Professor Totten, because he is too rank in his materialism to furnish an answer.

The desire of the house of Judah for the manifestation of the Messiah, forced forward the spirit of that people to that human focal point,—the birth of the Son of God. When the Lord was manifest, he gathered into himself the spirit and the soul of the house of Judah. He comprised the potential force, the very heart of the Jewish race. Did this heart, this soul of Judah, the Lion's whelp, the Son of God, infiltrate the Anglo-Saxon blood? And if so, when and how? Jesus declared himself to be the bread which came down from heaven, which if a man eat he should live forever. We herewith set forth a principle of law, of which Professor Totten is as ignorant as any Hottentot. It is this: The Lord Jesus was dissolved in the presence of his disciples, converted to energy, called the Holy Spirit, and was thus absorbed (eaten) by the church which appropriated him. To know how this life descended into and permeated the Anglo-Saxon, it will be necessary to know the origin of the Anglo-Saxon, hence, of the Germanic race, and thence the channel through which Judah's infiltration occurred.

Professor Totten will tell you that the German race comprised the lost ten tribes that escaped, and that England is Ephraim, and the United States is Manasseh. If England is Ephraim, then she is not Judah, unless Judah and Ephraim are one. If England is Ephraim, will Professor Totten tell us where Judah is, and by virtue of what process England—being Ephraim—wears the insignia of Judah? We say most emphatically, that the Germanic family is not the escaped ten tribes. The ten tribes were carried away into Media. They were taken there by the Assyrian power, and through intermarriage with the Medians, Persians, and Assyrians, produced the Germanic family. Israel absorbed Egypt, after which Israel (the ten tribes) was absorbed by the Assyrian power; the life of Egypt and Israel being infiltrated to produce the Germanic people. The very best of the Germanic family comprised the root of the Latin race; this also, is the root of the people of Russia.

Please take notice, in direct opposition to the teachings of Totten, that Israel especially, through the two tribes of Joseph, absorbed the very best of the Egyptian blood, and therefore, the blood of Egypt permeated Ephraim and Manasseh. The Midianites were also absorbed by these tribes, though the appropriation of the thirty-two thousand Midianite women was not confined to these two tribes alone. The Midianites were the descendants of Abraham, through Ishmael and Keturah. Subsequently, this absorption was followed by the absorption of the ten tribes into the Medians, Persians, and Assyrians. The Germanic nation was the product of this ethnic infiltration. This product was prepared for the acceptance of the gospel of the Lord Jesus; therefore, the life of the Christ descended into this people.

The Anglo-Saxon people—at present represented by England—not only involve Ephraim, but also Judah; because the Lion of Judah was absorbed, not merely by England, but by the Germanic family. The Anglo-Saxon being the most progressive and central, England constitutes the heart or center of commercial impulse and power, and is therefore called the British lion. The American nation is the direct product of England; that is, England constitutes the heart or center of the American people. We are her blood, and speak her language. If the people who constitute the core of the American nation are the offspring of England, and England is both Judah and Ephraim, then the people of America are both Judah and Ephraim. Hence, by what mental legerdemain, or irrational hocus pocus, Professor Totten can define the Americans as Manasseh, is beyond our ken. England is called the British lion because she absorbed the very heart of Judah; she absorbed more than any other people,—the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Christ of God. The United States is the lion just as much, because she has absorbed, through England, the same blood, and in her racial development she contains all that England does, and more, because she has not only absorbed England, but the product of all the other tribes. These people are not the tribes of Israel; because Israel has lost her identity and become Gentile.

Totten would have the British nation, coupled with the power of the United States, advance to the absolute supremacy of the world, as the chosen race of God. He says: "The lion of the tribe of Judah and the unicorn of Israel, and the motto of Benjamin on the banner of Great Britain, float over London's Keep, and there is no hand of might among the nations that can take it." Will Professor T. remember God's chosen race, the Jewish people, and Jerusalem? They fulfilled their mission when they brought forth the Lord Christ and the Christian church. The Jews rejected the fruit of their own production—and were scattered. Will the Anglo-Saxon race do better? The Jews comprised the heart of the world. The Lion of the tribe of Judah belonged to that great people. Did they lose that Heart, and did He pass over to another people? Has the Almighty made another law to govern the progress of racial life?

Totten tells you that "Christ is the Lion of Judah, but the insignia is Judah's scepterally;" and he regards England as Judah. Let us emphatically declare that Jesus was not merely the Lion of the tribe of Judah, but that he was also as positively the Bear. Both of these animals represent phases of the Word; both were in the Christ of God, and as the Lord was the beginning of the creation of God, he was the source of all being; and whatsoever exists had its origin in him, in the Lord of heaven, the Lord Christ. The lion is that part of the Word (God) which pertains to the power of commerce. In the supreme and higher religious sense, commerce is that interchange of forces between God and man, by which the world (church) is impregnated for the purpose of the regeneration (reproduction) of the sons of God.

The Lord Christ was the seed of God, the promised seed. In his theocrasis (translation), his visible and tangible presence was transposed to the quality of existence denominated Holy Ghost (Spirit). His material substance was converted to spiritual substance, and he became the seminal essence of Deity. By this seed, or seminal fluid, the church was impregnated for regeneration. The force by which this was accomplished was the power of truth in last, and also in first, principles. It was the power of the commerce of God and man. Immediately associated with this power, the power symbolized by the lion, was the power of the bear.

What is the symbolic language of the bear? This can only be known by a knowledge of the history of bruin's habits. The bear is essentially the bearer. The bear is the type of carrying, hence, the name bear. What part of the power of God (the Word) does the bear represent? He has the power to so plant himself as to perpetuate the circulation of the blood while the organ of respiration is hermetically sealed, and the powers of digestion are suspended. He accomplishes this by relaxing the lingual muscles so as to allow his tongue to drop back into the larynx, and thus seal up the windpipe. In other words, he swallows his tongue into his windpipe, and shuts off his wind (pneuma, spirit), and thus hibernates. He also has power to recall that wind and raise himself from his hibernation; that is, he has power to lay down his life and take it up again.

The Lord Christ is the tongue of God's speech; that is, of the Word of God. In the theocrasis, this tongue was swallowed back into the windpipe, and the church sank into hibernation, the winter of its long sleep. The wind (pneuma, spirit) of God has been shut off from the church, and the Holy Ghost has departed from it also. As the Christ was planted in the church, so at the end of the age a new church will arise, in which the Christ of God will be again manifest.

In the Lord Christ, the Lion and the Bear were one. In the death of the church, the Lion and the Bear are two, and a house divided against itself shall not stand. The Latin church—descended from the Lord's planting—has merged into the Anglo-Saxon; the Greek or Eastern church, descended from the Lord and divided from the Latin, has merged into the Russian bear. There are two powers of the Word, the one represented by England, the other by the Tsar of Russia, and both are prostituted. At present, we are beholding the anomaly of the Russian bear waving the olive branch, while the lion is converting its plowshares and pruninghooks into swords, and Columbia, the Dove, in the role of the Eagle, is swooping down upon, and devouring the defenseless. These are signs of the principles of the Word, none of which are exercised in their legitimate and normal divine functions. Professor Totten will by and by awake to the knowledge of the fact, that while he is good in figures and their application to astronomical chronology, he is perfectly at sea as to their application to human events.

If we take the Zodiacal belt in the heavens and denote its revolutions, we will notice that the twelve constellations move according to a definite law of order, and in harmony. We will also notice that the lion in the Zodiac conforms to the same law of revolution as the extra Zodiacal constellation Ursa Major, or the great Bear, the constellation of Russia. They are not in conflict. If we take what should, under normal conditions, comprise their correspondence in the race, we find absolute chaos. The lion in the Zodiac of human activity revolves oppositely from, and in conflict with the activities of Ursa Major, the great bear in human life; and we repeat, a house divided against itself cannot stand.

The Greatest Love in the World.

The Laws of Physical and Mental Magnetism ; Jesus the Messiah Was the Supreme Manifestation of Divine Love, the Exalted Magnet of Humanity.

L. E. BORDEN.

EVERY phenomenon in the universe has its origin in attraction of atoms. From lowest to highest, one law reigns, and love is the motor impulse. The magnet draws steel filings, and the tigress springs forward to defend her cubs till a bullet strikes her heart. These are primary workings of the great principle whose degrees of manifestation are infinite.

The measure of a man is the measure of his love. How broad is it? Some men find their limit in the narrow circle of self; nothing really moves them beyond their personal hopes and fears, joys and griefs. Other men extend the circle a little, to include a few friends and relatives. Such men are never called great. The supreme test that governs all our estimates of character and performance, refers to the breadth of a man's sympathies. Even our artists and writers must submit to be judged by the same standard, and no amount of technical skill can redeem a lack of heart.

What was Zola as the exponent of a new theory of literature, to the world at large? But look at him today, returning to France after an exile of eleven months, radiant, triumphant, crowned with the gratitude of every lover of justice! He became a citizen of the world when he dared to face the mob in defense of a betrayed and innocent compatriot.

Pope enriched our language with brilliant epigrams, but the only time he is stirred to genuine emotion in his verse, is over his quarrel with Addison; then he shows a vigor worthy of a higher feeling than petty malice. Whittier has not contributed witty sayings, but his burning zeal to redress the wrongs of the slaves, inspires respect, and the sincerity of his emotion imparts a glow to his poetry, that redeems its lack of art; yet like all verse inspired by a particular crisis, much of his work is evanescent and is already losing its interest now that slavery is a horror of the past.

There is a love that is broader and deeper than any awakened by national crises or individual distress,—a love that goes back of the individual or the cause, to embrace eternal principles—a love that yearns with infinite pity over all the sorrows of men everywhere. Such a love looks at the toiling, sweating millions stunted by poverty and tainted by crime, and thinks of their origin and destiny, seeing in each low-browed, vice-stained creature, a soul in the crucible of experience that will one day bear the image and likeness of God.

This love is never impatient—it is never intolerant, and it gives itself with tender compassion to a world that repays it with sneers and curses and the martyr's crown.

"Ah!" you say, "this love is beyond the temper of humanity, it is Christlike." Yes, the greatest love in the world is the love of Christ, the Messianic love; but ah! how strange and sad the story! This love offends the world, which is always ready to applaud lower manifestations of the same principle.

"Is this new religion of yours founded upon the Rock of Ages?" asked a kindly anxious friend.

Most emphatically, yes. The glory and the song of Koreshan Science lie in its exaltation of the Messianic principle. Orthodox Christianity professes to accept the gospel narrative of the life of Christ, but is unable to explain the phenomena recorded. Liberal Christianity, or the unEvangelical contingent, accepts Christ as a great teacher, about whose birth and life there has sprung up an accretion of legend and fable. Koreshan-ity alone, exalts Christ as the Messiah, and gives a scientific explanation of every fact pertaining to the Lord in his divine humanity.

Briefly, then, it goes beyond the old theology in saying that Jesus came as a concrete expression of love. The spiritual desires of the Jewish age were materialized in him. Just as two gases may unite to precipitate a liquid, so the mental force, or the love of the past, united in the spiritual world with the ardent desires of those who were living in the hope of the Messiah's coming at the time of the Christian era, to precipitate or materialize the pure flesh of Christ, from which currents of healing virtue streamed forth to the hem of his garment.

How does Christ save the world by his love? He saves it just as the new shoot of a higher variety saves every branch of the wild or natural tree, upon which it is grafted. The divine life was grafted upon humanity, not by the death, but by the translation of Jesus. His death upon the cross was both a symbol and a scientific necessity—a symbol of the crossing of God's life with man, and a necessary preparation of his physical organism for the translation.

It is a principle of Koreshan Science that a law in one domain has its correspondent in every other. If an atom of zinc can be converted to electric energy, the law that governs such convertibility is applicable to the human body. This physical organism is as easily converted to energy as any single atom of matter, provided the law is known. Jesus knew the law; he dissolved his body and converted it to the spiritual energy received by his disciples; when he disappeared from sight he passed into their minds, thus fulfilling the supreme object of his life and death—to impart God's life to the race.

The sacrifice of the Messiah, although performed in obedience to law, is entirely a voluntary sacrifice; and here it reaches the plane of the highest art. By as much as any man approaches this complete love, he becomes Christlike. By as much as any poet approximates this universal sympathy, he becomes a world-poet—how few deserve the title!

The Messianic principle is the central truth of being, the most wonderful, the most mysterious of the secrets which God's mind has kept through the ages. What of the three sects that reject this principle and deny the greatest love in the world? Christian science proclaims an impersonal Christ, not the God-man. Theosophy preaches every man his own God, and the spirits that profess to return from the undiscovered country, say: "We know nothing of Jesus Christ; he is not here."

In contrast with these negative utterances, the recognition of the Messianic principle gives to Koresh-anity a central positiveness, that should commend it to the large class of persons whose hearts cling firmly to the Divinity of Christ, notwithstanding the assaults of agnostic criticism, and who ought to welcome a scientific interpretation of certain phenomena recorded in the Scriptures, that transcend present experience.

The Awakening of the Almighty.

The Great Sleep of God in Humanity During the Christian Dispensation; the Seed in the Soil, and the Coming Again in the Messenger of the Covenant.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

"Then the Lord awaked as one out of sleep." "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O arm of the Lord!" Thou, therefore, O Lord God of hosts [the God-man], the God of Israel, awake to visit all the heathen." "As a dream when one awaketh; so, O Lord, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image." "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

AS JESUS declared that he was in the Father and the Father in him, so he also declared that he was in the disciple and the disciple was in him; and that when he went away he would go into his disciples, and, as the divine seed, dying in them, would be in them always, until the end of the age, the time of harvest, and then would raise them up, as the wheat life is in the wheat all through its cycle, raising it up until the reproduced seed, the ripened crop, appears in the time of harvest.

The early Christian's conception of death was that it was a falling asleep in Jesus, to which, if you add the thought of Jesus, it will appear that he also was fallen asleep in them. In the sleeping man, all the operations of physical nature go on regularly; but there is no development of power to effect results outside the man, for they are the results of mental activity, which, for the time, is in abeyance. The man is alive, but he must awake out of sleep before he can produce results in the external or objective world; so God—the God-man, as the divine seed, having taken upon himself the sins of the world, and as the wages of sin is death, having died, gone to sleep in the human race—must wake up out of sleep before he can put forth the effort necessary to save anybody.

Jesus nowhere promised to save anybody, in the expressive Greek phrase, through into eternal life, until the beginning of the next, the Aquarian age. He said at the last day, end of the Christian age, he would raise up, resurrect into eternal life, all that the Father had given him. Until that time they would all, including the penitent thief on the cross, be with him in Paradise, the garden where God plants his seed, sleeping the sleep of the begotten, unborn child; being alive and growing, having "Christ formed within them, the hope of glory," but having to wake out of sleep before their kingdom could come in the outside world. When that time comes He must be there, in that outside world, to raise them up according to promise, so that none of them be lost. Observe that this was not spoken of men in general, but only of those whom the Father had given him.

It is nowhere said that Jesus came to save other men from being lost, as the church of today teaches; instead, he came to save those that were already lost. But after the divine seed had been planted in them, and its age-long growth and development in them had begun and progressed until the time of harvest, he would see that none such were lost. The manner of his coming, then, is a waking out of an age-long sleep in humanity. But there is always a first and a second coming, as nineteen hundred years ago, when Jesus came. Then, His first coming was in his personality, in which he comes as a thief in the night, and is never recognized by the outside world. After His going away to Spirit, in his translation, he came again according to promise, as the Holy Ghost—the Comforter, which was the divine seed by which men were "begotten again to a lively hope [a hope of life] by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead," which hope the same writer declares, will find its fulfilment in the "salvation ready to be revealed in the last time"—end of the Christian age.

Now, in the end of the Christian age, the Christ will also have two comings; the first, in his personality, as a man—the Messenger of the Covenant, declared by

Malachi to be the Lord; the second, after his theocrasis, will be his coming in the "clouds of heaven," the 144,000 sons of God, the product of the planting of the one Son of God in humanity, in the beginning of the age. Then He and they have "awaked out of sleep," and the kingdom of heaven will be established in earth according to the prayer he taught us to pray. Then will it be true that earth's sorrowing exiles, "Mercy and Truth, have met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other."

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

AMERICAN DEMOCRACY and competition are culminating in one of the most gigantic forms of oppression the world has ever known. Western liberty to engage in all lines of commercial piracy is bearing its fruit in the great corporations and trusts; and the questions of their origin and probable results in the world of commerce and social relations constitute the greatest problem which confronts the popular mind. The politicians who are not directly concerned in the creation of the trusts, are agitated and chagrined, and reform leaders are sounding notes of alarm. We have already noted in this and other departments of THE FLAMING SWORD, the rapid culmination of events in the field of social economy, and have foreseen the stupendous success of all antithetical co-operative efforts of the closing century; and have time and again pointed out the results. The marshalling of the forces of capital against the forces of labor means inevitable revolution. The trusts began with capital of a few millions, but now the world stands overawed at the announcement of the formation of a railroad trust which almost rivals all other trusts combined! Three great railroad kings, Vanderbilt, Pierpont Morgan, and Cassatt, have planned an alliance to control all traffic of America, with a capital of over $2,500,000,000. The combine embraces eighteen great railroad systems, representing over 40,000 miles of railway, 10,000 passenger cars, and over 420,000 freight cars. The daily press is discussing the questions which this great combine suggests: "Whither are these great systems tending, and how will their tremendous power be exerted?" The history of American greed is too well known to rest the question on the supposition that the trusts are philanthropic; the unparalleled power acquired through absorption of the wealth of a nation, the power to rule and control the great industries and all the people engaged in them, will be exerted for the specific benefit of the few. The monopolies are rapidly developing into an organization of control which will overthrow and overpower the American government itself; they are already beyond all control of legislation,—aye, they constitute the power behind the throne! These conditions confront the reform world; the trusts have come unexpectedly to the agitators; the trusts appear as storm-clouds threatening to sweep away all little schemes of direct legislation, socialism, municipal ownership, and monetary reform. The people of the world are facing new and stupendous issues—issues which they are wholly unprepared to meet, problems which modern economic scientists are unable to solve, conditions which statesmen are powerless to change. There is but one solution to the great problems of the hour—but one way to redeem the world from its curse; and that has been promulgated by the Founder of Koreshanity for the past thirty years!

It has been estimated that the caloric force of the sun's perpendicular rays upon the earth, at the distance of 92,000,000 miles, is one horse-power per square yard. If it is one horse-power for one square yard at that distance, every other square yard in the great sphere of circumradiations would represent one horse-power, amounting in all to over 350 sextillions of horsepower generated in and transmitted from the sun continually. This force would represent a lifting power of nearly 12,000,000 sextillion pounds, one foot per minute, or nearly 200,000 sextillion pounds, one foot per second. The unit of measure of the sun's force as above, is one calory, and consequently the aggregate number of calories in 350 sextillions of horse-power, is the measure of only a small portion of the inconceivable volume of all the qualities of electro-magnetic energies that would be generated in so great a sun as is claimed to exist in the Copernican system. Whence are derived the solar dynamics? The astronomer knows of no source of supply of the sun's fuel—it is an inexplicable mystery to the modern scientific world! The combined surface of all the planets of the popular system is supposed to receive and intercept only about one billionth part of all this vast amount of energy, while 999,999,999 billionths are radiated into infinite space and lost! Contrast this excessive waste of energies with the conservation of forces of the universe as it really exists. Beginning with the premise of the one horse-power per square yard of the earth's concave surface, the caloric energies would be represented by 600 trillions of horse-power; there is no waste, for the great hollow of the earth's surface receives all of the energies radiating from the central sun. The sun is continually receiving energies generated in the earth, and the sun and earth are related on the basis of interdependence; and the earth continually and eternally supplies the sun with fuel.

There can be no greater perversion of the doctrines of Jesus than the anti-Messianic claim of modern metaphysics that the "bread of life" is the "inward life" of any and every man. The fallacious view would make no difference of nature between the mortal and corrupt humanity and the immortal Son of God. Koreshanity holds that Jesus himself, his literal flesh and blood, the external divine man, was the bread of life, which came down from heaven through processes of divine generation in the Jewish race. Contrary to the modern view, Jesus said, "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood, ye have no life in you." The great Personality at the beginning of the dispensation was the literal bread of heaven, transmuted by the fires of theocrasis, and appropriated by the church,—literally absorbed; and thus the church was vitalized with the new life, the very seminal essence of Deity, in order that he might multiply himself and manifest a new race in humanity, in the harvest of the dispensation. We have no sympathy whatever with hundreds of antichristian fallacies that are being promulgated in the world, to cultivate the most dangerous form of bigotry and conceit, in the presumption that every man is God, containing the I Am, the Christ, the life, and many other things in the vocabulary of the Bible, which ignorance has learned to repeat, but not to understand.

The new automobile is an example of the lack of originality of the average American mind. A single idea is stumbled onto and adapted to forms gotten up with some other purpose in view. Fragmentary reform would patch up the old garments, because the originators of small schemes have not mental acumen sufficient to devise an entirely new costume. The automobile takes the form of a carriage which is in every way adapted to the horse; even the dashboard, which was designed to protect the occupants from the splash of the horse's feet, is present on the horseless carriage: the side-step, the raised box, and general appearance of the rig, are reminders of the animal that is not there! A carriage without a horse should be designed to suit the new conditions; it ought to be up to date, and would be if the American inventive genius could see beyond its pecuniary interest in what it produces.

The modern churchman is intensely gratified at the news of the arrest of a prominent Mormon leader on the charge of polygamy, and the growing tendency to repudiation of congressman Roberts because he is a Mormon. Polygamy in Mormonism is as much a sacred rite, a religious institution, as monogamy is in Christendom; and does not the Constitution of the United States guarantee absolute freedom in the exercise of religious conscience? But the Mormons are an easy mark for corruptionists who hide behind the rites of a false marriage, and commit crimes of sensualism as obnoxious to the sense of purity as those in possession of a multiplicity of wives. The divine vengeance will be visited first, not upon the Mormons, but upon the more profound corruptions of Christendom.

The great cry is heard on every hand, "Let the church give us a sweeping revival of religion." It is heard in the pews, in ministerial gatherings, church conferences, and associations. There is an endeavor to imitate Wesley's style of creating a religious stir, but the fountains of enthusiasm are empty. The modern church has apostated too far to revive; its people have too long engaged in defrauding the neighbor by modern commercial methods,—too long engaged in the service of mammon, to undertake to convict the world of sin, and bring it to judgment for crimes of which the church itself is guilty! Babylon will never revive! The decaying walls cannot rear themselves; the great structure of the modern church is crumbling, and its foundation is sinking in the quick-sands of ignorance.

A number of doctrinal statements, creeds or declarations of principles, have been submitted to the various spiritualistic societies of America, for adoption; they are asked to take their choice, as out of the number, each fastidious spiritualist can likely find a ready-made fit. One declaration contains the following item: "That on the question of who, what, and where God is, Spiritualism gives us no absolute, final, and demonstrated knowledge, but leaves it for each one to determine by the light of his own understanding." By all means, let every society adopt this statement; it is corroborative of many Koreshan statements to the effect that the modern church, spiritualism, and kindred superstitions do not know the true God!

In the present evil world, the devil is running the governments, the churches, the commerce of the world, science, education, the morals of the people, and all other departments. The only way he can do this is to allow each department a little domain of its own, and consequently, they are all separated and independent as to specific management,—not in different worlds, but in the one humanity. When the Almighty takes possession he will unite all these departments in one great system, in one great empire of church and state, and social economy. Koreshanism advocates the principles of unity of all the departments of human affairs under divine-human supervision, the true socialism, the socialism of God.

Startling news of the increasing number of strikes that are occurring the world over, is appearing in the daily press. These expressions of discontent of the labor world have come in time to rebuke the attempted establishment of universal peace! The great agitation continues; the labor organizations and the trusts are mighty factors of preparation for the stupendous revolution which must break up the old order. Trusts of labor and trusts of the wealth produced by labor are nearing the inevitable conflict. THE FLAMING SWORD continually points to the fact that there will be no peaceable evolution of the New Order; it must be born through the birththroes and convulsions of the present evil world.

Nineteen hundred years ago, the effort of the Jewish church was to convert the heathen and make proselytes to Judaism, while the Messiah found it necessary to endeavor to convert the Jews at Jerusalem. The greatest corruption in all the world at the close of the Jewish dispensation was in Palestine; it was where the greatest condemnation rested, and the Jews were the people who came into terrible judgment, in their punishment and discharge from the service of the Almighty. Today, the church is presuming to gather from fields where the divine seed was not sown, posing as instruments of salvation, when in fact, of all peoples of the world, the modern church is most in need of reformation!

The extent to which skepticism and agnosticism pervade even the church and its universities, may be seen from the following significant statement by a professor of one of the largest universities of America: "Half of our divinity students are skeptical, which is about the same proportion as prevails amongst the professors who instruct them." The "divinity" students are being educated for the ministerial "profession;" they do not believe the doctrines they are preparing to preach to the people. It is now a common thing all over the country, to make the ministerial vows with mental reservations in favor of higher criticism, which is honeycombing the great churches of the world!

Socialists are having a hard time defining what socialism is. There are scores of little conflicting factions of reform using the word socialism, and each faction is claiming to be the movement. There are nationalists, advocates of public ownership, municipal ownership, social democrats, Christian socialists, socialistic communists, anarchist socialists, agnostic socialists, the socialistic labor party, and others, that are as incapable of united effort of reform, as are the inharmonious elements of the modern church in saving the world. People who enjoy snarling and snapping, faction fights and party feuds, certainly derive intense satisfaction from the reform press of America!

Primitive Christianity was a system of faith, an intuitive recognition of the Star of divine polarity, manifest in the Messiah nineteen hundred years ago. Koreshanism is a system of science; it is faith transformed to demonstrated truth—it is hope transformed to realization in the manifestation of the Guiding Star of Divine Science. Through faith and charity, love and wisdom have been transformed to truth and good; and the practical application of the laws of life to the external man, through the external mind or intellect, will redeem the body of man, and make him immortal in the world of tangibility.

The light of the moon is less by about 300,000 times, than the light of the sun; that is, it would require 300,000 moons to make a light equal to that of the sun. It is estimated by astronomers that the moon of the Copernican universe receives less than one trillionth part of all the sun's energies radiated into space; and yet the sunlight exceeds in brightness the light of the moon by only 300,000 times! By what law does the moon multiply the infinitesimal portion of sunlight it is said to receive, to the brilliant, silvery light of the full moon? The modern astronomical system is an inconsistent vagary!

This is a century of machinery. Human labor is being rapidly supplanted by machinery. Machines have been invented to do nearly all that man in times past, has performed by hand. Machines write, talk, and make arithmetical calculations—do everything but think, and even thinking-machines are said to be under way. The latest machine is for the purpose of curing insomnia, a combination of the phonograph and stereopticon, to produce photo-acoustic hypnosis and dream states necessary to restore the mental equilibrium of the patient!

The microbe advocates are becoming so afraid of the little objects of their study and research, that they advise against purchasing fruits and vegetables that have been exposed to germ-laden dust. The farmer may soon be ordered to grow his fruits and vegetables in glass houses, and to sterilize them before taking to market. A humanity that succumbs to the invisible animalcules and bacilli must be weak indeed, with its life forces almost exhausted; but the physician who succumbs to the theories of modern bacteriopathy is weaker still!

If organized labor is feeling the tyranny of organized capital, hundreds of thousands of men who have not consented to pay dues to the unions for the privilege of being ordered out on a strike at the command of labor leaders, are feeling the tyranny and oppression of the labor trusts. The great commercial trusts are forcing smaller concerns to failure and bankruptcy; and the non-union laborers are being forced out of employment, persecuted, harassed, and even shot, by the "philanthropic" brotherhoods!

The entire time of the western world is taken up in the service of the money gods; selfishness and greed, books and papers, have increased, and the mental powers have diminished to such an alarming extent that suavity, politeness, and consideration for the neighbor have almost vanished, and the art of conversation is becoming lost amid a sort of mental privacy, which is made to cover a cranial hollowness which forbids intelligent discussion of the great and burning questions and problems of the hour!

Astronomers claim that the moon reflects the light of the sun. Observation of the lunar surface reveals the fact that it is not a reflector. Allow a light to shine upon a polished convex surface, and a mere point of light will be seen. If the moon were smooth, shining by reflected light, only a small portion of it would appear illuminated; and if the surface were similar to that of the earth, it could appear no brighter than a chalky cliff or mountain side in the sunshine.

The sky-pilots of a western town are on a strike for higher prices for sermons delivered to the inmates of a soldiers' home. We presume the state authorities have been considering the real value of the "spiritual food" purchased for the occupants of the charitable institution, and desire to pay accordingly. The goods of the modern church are very much shop-worn and antiquated; and the time is coming when the superstitious stock cannot even be given away!

It is a mistake to say that Christianity is civilizing the world; there is no Christianity in the world today. Between that which is called Christianity and the primitive system from which it sprang, there is as much difference as there is between day and night. THE FLAMING SWORD points out the growth of Christo-Paganism in the mediæval and modern periods of the present dispensation, and its rapid decline during the past twenty-five years.

Koreshanity brings to the world the only genuine revival of primitive Christianity; it is truth restored, the prodigal returned to his Father's house; it contains the very elements of life, and reveals the knowledge of the universe—the science of all truth. It is the new scientific gospel; and will succeed Babylon for the same reason that primitive Christianity supplanted apostate Judaism.

War has begun in the camp of Adventism concerning the millennium, the coming of Christ, and kindred subjects. This is but an insignificant part of the battle of Armageddon. The Adventists comprise merely one of the hundreds of religious tribes, and fighting among themselves will perhaps leave less work for others, when the time comes for the complete demolition of Adventism!

The great trusts have grown out of the protection of home industries, and the legal right to steal the wealth of millions. Likewise, the protectors have created great trusts of diseases, which afflict humanity, through the legal right of medical fraternities to steal the health of the people. The physicians have but to name a new disease to make it popular!

Every revolution must have its poles. The great revolution of nineteen hundred years ago was in the domain of the soul; it was a war of God and the devil in the heart of man; the weapons were spiritual. The impending revolution is in the domain of the world's external affairs; it is a war of truth against fallacy, science against superstition, life against death.

The serpent Moses lifted up in the wilderness was the divine wisdom of commerce—the cure for the poison of the serpents of the false money power. Jesus was the great Serpent of church commerce. Koreshanity is the science of commerce on all planes in which commerce is possible, and lifts the Serpent in every department of human life.

Agnosticism claims to be supplanting the church; but it does not follow that agnosticism is a permanent thing in the world. Mushrooms grow out of decay and fermentation; agnosticism is a mental mushroom growing out of the corruptions of the church,—an excrescence of effete religious thought.

Koreshanity advocates not only the free woman and the free man, but also the free man-woman—the virginal biunity of man and woman in single, individual, immortal personalities, the new genus or race of the divine humanity, for whose coming the entire creation enters the birththroes of revolution.

All of the corruptions of modern times—the church, hypocrisy, whisky, beer, tobacco, opium, physicians, drugs, selfishness, firearms, crime, politics, and competition—follow the course of the world's so called civilization!

When starch is converted to sugar it is no longer starch, but sugar. When the spirits of the Jewish people were converted to the Christ, they stood forth in the tangible world in the person of the Messiah.

Books increase in proportion to the decrease of the mental powers of humanity. Jesus the Christ was not a bookworm; he contained the words of all true books; even the universe was involved in him.

The so called religions and the governments of the world are fragments and perversions of the great system of divine Theocracy which existed thousands of years ago.

The trusts are the fruit of commercial piracy, created through the avenues of competition, permitted by the people and fostered by the American government.

Church federations are great religious trusts, organized for the purpose of controlling evangelical and Sunday school work of both Christendom and heathendom.

The great combines have concluded that co-operation, not competition, is the life of trade.

Modern charity hides from the view of the world a multiplicity of commercial crimes.

The true government is religious, scientific, and divine; it is the kingdom of God.

True science is the expression of the divine mind in the human intellect.

The millionaire is the personal expression of the love of money.

The church is making "Christians" abroad and heathens at home!

Money is a fraud; the love of it is the root of all evil.

True capital is labor and its products.

What About Theosophy, Spiritualism, Mormonism, etc ?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) I have read much of mysticism and the philosophy of nearly all ancient and modern religious systems; and being a liberal investigator of all that is new in science and philosophy, I am naturally inclined to inquire further as to the successes and reverses the Koreshans have made in the past. Can you tell me how many have joined your order, and how many have withdrawn their membership? How many members now reside at Estero, and how many at Chicago and elsewhere?

(2) What religious significance do you attach to such great movements as Theosophy, Seventh-Day Adventism, Mormonism, Spiritualism, Swedenborgianism, Faithism, (whose doctrines are found in Oahspe), Buddhism, and Mohammedanism? May not all these various religious movements possess the truth in part, and be stepping-stones to the broader and more liberal religions of the future, where the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man will be accepted as the all-sufficient creed that shall lead to the highest unfoldment of the God-given powers of humanity?—Dr. W. F., Detroit, Mich.

(1) Koreshanity is not a philosophy, but a system of Universology, and therefore contains the knowledges of the universe and its laws, and the science of their application to all human affairs and relations. It is the antithet of all other systems extant, and is opposed to all conditions, perversions, and corruptions of the present evil world. Koreshanity therefore meets with opposition in all the departments to which the System is applicable. We have to combat the church and modern science; all of the fads and fallacies of the present century. We have the competitive system to contend with, and the prejudice of an unthinking people.

The work of building up a system of reform that is ultimately to prevail throughout the world, and embrace all of the departments of the world,—its government, social economy, commerce, education—in short, the work of establishing the kingdom of God in all its external phases, is a decidedly revolutionary work, and is one of the most stupendous undertakings in all human history. We do not proceed on the basis of modern fads. Our movement begins at the foundation of human economy of life, and grows only through the sacrifice of noble characters. Its accretions are from the most advanced elements of progress. From the founding of the System it has met with success; but that success is measured by its own standards, and our own appreciation of gathering momentum. It has succeeded from the beginning; it has never failed. It is stronger today than ever before, has a greater influence, and is becoming known throughout the world.

With regard to its following, every bright light is appreciated by those who use it; but it attracts numerous mental molts, who are unable to comprehend it. Jesus encountered hundreds of such people; at the slightest offense they left him, and "walked with him no more." Both the coming and going of such characters serve a purpose necessary to them and to us. It is just as necessary that some go away as vehicles of mental refuse, as it is for those who are progressive to remain. The Koreshan institutions are places of testing human character. The processes of selection of personalities with integrity and honesty of purpose, guarantee a veritable Gideon's army. Our success is in conservation, concentration, and polarization of vital energies. The Founder of Koreshanity is establishing a great anthropostic battery which, when perfected, will constitute the nucleus of the power of the new kingdom; but without which, though he had hundreds of thousands, even millions, as a following, the object of the Koreshan System would not be attained. Connected with the communistic and co-operative colonies of the Koreshan Unity in Chicago and Florida, are about 300 persons. We have as many more who are members of the various Societies in different cities, besides scattered members who reside in towns and villages; also a large circle of readers and investigators of Koreshan literature; and our friends number thousands.

(2) The religious significance that we attach to the many metaphysical and occult theories that are being promulgated, is that they are decidedly antichristian. They are stepping-stones neither in the development of the great System of truth, nor in the investigation and demonstration of truth. Nineteen hundred years ago, Truth came in one personality. Jesus was an expression of love and wisdom; he taught a philosophy,—the divine metaphysics. Koreshanity is the primitive Christian system, with an added experience of nearly 2,000 years of human progress. Jesus taught truth in primates; Koreshanity is truth in ultimates—it is, therefore, divine science.

There cannot be another expression of truth in its fulness except through a single personality; entities of truth must aggregate in the formation of the Guiding Star of human destiny. There is no truth in the abstract; there is no truth separate from personality. If truth was involved through processes of involution or focalization of entities nineteen hundred years ago, it is just as inevitable that when that truth—the divine philosophy—ultimates in science, it must be involved in one man, to find complete and perfect expression.

The fallacies of modern times are reflexes of the divine philosophy of Jesus. They are the result of the involuntary mental activity of Jesus. Every dispensation opens and closes, begins and ends, with a Messiah; truth must reach its seed-form in the seed-Man, whence, through sowing, springs all human progress. Jesus taught the necessity of a Messiah. The Messianic law is the law of polarity of human thought and human love,—a law that is wholly disregarded by all modern fallacies. It is noticeable that christian science, theosophy, spiritualism, and all modern phases of occultism and metaphysics, instil the belief into the minds of their following, that each individual is as much the Christ, as much God Almighty, as was Jesus; and this we most emphatically deny. It is one thing to teach that God is in humanity; but it is quite another thing to locate him in the human world! The metaphysics of Jesus must ultimate in science; faith must become transformed to knowledge, and hope to realization of the things hoped for. The great blunder of modern religious fallacies is in the endeavor to teach occultism as a science, when it should be known to all rational minds, that science is the uncovering of mystery, not its perpetuation. Mystery revealed is no longer occult. At the time the Almighty is in the external world proclaiming the science of the universe, metaphysicians are seeking knowledge from the interior!

Theosophy is Buddhism revamped, with a few Christian fallacies added. What truth Theosophy contains is perverted truth. There is nothing that is perverted in Theosophy that was not contained in the primitive Christian system. It is one thing to talk vaguely concerning absorption into Nirvana, and quite another thing to actually become absorbed into Nirvana. Jesus the Messiah was an example of actual absorption; and yet Theosophists ignore him, his work and his doctrines. Adam, Enoch, Noah, Moses, Elijah, and Jesus were all examples of absorption. With these demonstrations of victory over death along a line of divine progress, why go outside of this line of actual accomplishments, to seek truth in a Theosophic system that cannot point to a single instance of actual verification of their claims? While Buddha was a teacher of truth adapted to the genius of his time, he did not demonstrate his teaching by actually overcoming death. He taught a fragment of the great system of truth which existed prior to the time of Buddha. Thousands of years ago the sons of God were in the world, and they went away by absorption; Buddhism has lost sight of the facts, and now merely suggests the idea; modern Theosophists know less about it than Buddha. Christian science, Theosophy, and Spiritualism constitute the great three-headed antichrist; they are the three unclean spirits that were foreseen by John.

All of the systems mentioned in the above inquiry, however, do not belong to the same category. Swedenborg was a Messiah to the spiritual world; he was divinely illuminated as to his interior, and he taught the truth in the spiritual degree; Koreshanity is the truth in the literal degree, which Swedenborg acknowledged to be the potential degree of the divine Word. Swedenborgians undertake to intellectually comprehend the spiritual degree, which is equal to breathing hydrogen. Hydrogen is poison; but when precipitated as water, it becomes useable. Swedenborgianism, as promulgated today, however, is the nearest approach to the truth of theology of any other system extant except the Koreshan.

Adventism in the past was progressive; the movement from 1839 to 1870 was similar to the movement contemporaneous with the coming of Jesus. The Advent movement has served its purpose in awakening an expectation of the coming of the Messiah. The Messenger of the Covenant, Elijah the Prophet, has appeared, with the truth in fulfilment of divine prophecies, and the Adventists have not recognized him. Adventism is now non-

Chicago Course of Lectures by Koresh.

The Founder of Koreshanity is delivering a special course of Lectures on Koreshan Universology in Chicago. The course embraces subjects defining the relation of Man and Cosmos, and the specific and practical application of the fundamental principles of Koreshan Science to social reconstruction.

An unparalleled opportunity to investigate Koreshan Universology is extended to the people of Chicago. Opportunity for questions at close of each Lecture.

Every one is made to feel a cordial welcome. Admission free; no collections. Wednesday and Sunday evenings, at Koreshan Hall, 681 W. Lake street, Chicago.

progressive. The entities of enthusiasm aroused in the proclamation of the coming of the Messiah, have left the Advent movement and passed over into the progressive spheres of Koreshanity.

Mohammed was a teacher sent to the Arabians, and from his standpoint he taught the truth—that is, the truth necessary for that people. There are now about one hundred different sects of Mohammedans, and they have no more true conception of the doctrines of Mohammed than the modern Christians have of the doctrines of Jesus. Mormonism is merely one of the fallacious reflexes of the Advent movement which appeared in the thirties; it is an antithet of Koreshanity. The same is true of Faithism, with its spurious Oahspe, which is the expression of antiquated spirits through the medium Newbrough. Oahspe is decidedly antichristian and anti-Messianic. Its cosmogony is founded on the Copernican system, to which is added the Cartesian vortex theory. Oahspe's history of Pan is confused; though it is a reflex from an ancient period, it is unreliable, and is in no sense divine; neither is it rational.

How Jesus Fed the Multitude, and Other Questions.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Please answer the following questions: (1) How did Jesus the Christ feed the multitude with five loaves and a few fishes? (2) How did Jesus know that John the Baptist was Elijah? (3) Did John the Baptist have the same knowledge of himself that Jesus did? (4) Will man be in the exercise of the seven senses when he attains perfection? (5) When eternal life is reached, does personality become annihilated?—N. C. M., Paris, Tex.

(1) The question of how Jesus produced the loaves and fishes sufficient to feed thousands of people, has never been answered by the modern clergyman nor the so called scientist; chemistry is wholly inadequate to explain the wonderful phenomenon. It is inconceivable, on the basis of the theory of the indestructibility of atoms of matter, that food could be produced through any mental functions of Jesus. If chemistry were true, of course the substances which composed the thousands of loaves and fishes, must have been external to the person of Jesus; and the question arises, in consideration of the subject from the standpoint of the chemist, whence were the atoms obtained?

The problem finds easy solution in Koreshan Alchemy. Matter and spirit are interconvertible; that is, matter is susceptible of being reduced to spirit, and spirit is convertible to matter. Every form in the universe is an expression of thought; the physical universe, with all its forms and functions, is the outermost expression of the divine mind. Through the processes of evolution, or descent of life from the highest to the lowest planes of existence, the energies are metamorphosed to various qualities, and find expression in all the activities of the tangible, physical universe. If, instead of expression of qualities of mind through long cycles of descent of life, there should obtain a direct materialization of mind, the same results would be produced. This is exactly what occurred in the production of the loaves and fishes with which the multitude was fed; they were direct creations through the projection and materialization of pneumo-psychic energies from the mind of Jesus. To comprehend the processes, the fundamentals of Koreshan Science must be mastered. The process, however, is similar to that of materialization of gold, silver, or copper in electroplating, and the formation and precipitation of rain, hail, and meteors, which are the result of the materialization of energies.

(2) Jesus understood who John the Baptist was through the influx of spiritual entities dwelling in John, the aggregate force of which comprised the spirit of John's baptism. In the baptism of Jesus, John transmitted to Jesus pneumo-psychic energies, the spirit of anointing of the Messiah. Then Jesus involved all of the divine entities that were in John, and consequently comprehended all that John was in office and function.

(3) John the Baptist came for the specific purpose of preparing the way for the Messiah, and of anointing the special personality when he presented himself to receive the energies which he had to impart. John knew that he was Elijah; he openly proclaimed that he was the Voice in the wilderness, and knew what work he had to perform. He was Elijah to those whom he baptized, and more especially was he Elijah to Jesus. But when asked by those who could not comprehend his mission, he was not Elijah to them, but merely the natural John.

Previous to the baptism of Jesus, John understood who he was, and through the entities in himself he knew that One was to come after him who was greater than John; and when Jesus came to be baptized, John recognized him as the Messiah. He said: "He must increase, but I must decrease." He meant that in the performance of his mission he was emptying himself of the entities of baptism, while Jesus was gathering the lambs in himself, and increasing in power. In a short time after the baptism of Jesus, when the entities had departed from John, and when he was but an empty vessel, he forgot whom Jesus was, and sent his disciples to Jesus to inquire if he were the one who should come, or should he look for another.

(4) Man, when complete in his biunity, will possess the seven senses naturally, and also the exercise of their correspondence, spiritually. At the present time man is dual; that is, one personality is male, and another, female. The sixth sense is specifically masculine, while the seventh sense pertains to maternity.

(5) Eternal life is the state of consciousness reached through absorption into Nirvana; it is the central consciousness of the divine humanity. Immortality, the state of biunity in the natural world, is the stepping-stone to eternal life. When eternal life is reached, the personality passes away, but not the individual consciousness; man retains his individuality. The personality is the external form. The word person is derived from persona, which means mask or covering. However, the individual consciousness is not separate from personalities, for all human mind and consciousness are in man. Absorption into Nirvana is absorption into the interior mind of humanity.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The Midsummer Fiction-Art number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, published July 20, bids fair to be the most brilliant magazine production of the season. With in an artistic cover by Wenzell, will be gathered such contributions as: An illustrated poem by W. D. Howells; short stories by Ruth McEnery Stuart, Joel Chandler Harris, Edgar Fawcett, Etta W. Pierce, and Larkin G. Mead; a golfing extravaganza, by Van Tassel Sutphen; "A Day of President McKinley's Life," by Mrs. John A. Logan; and reproductions of four of F. Hopkinson Smith's most beautiful water-color paintings, with comment by Perriton Maxwell. The fiction features in the above enumeration are illustrated by the following well-known artists: Albert B. Wenzell, Howard Chandler Christy, F. Luis Mora, W. Granville Smith, Clifford Carleton, Hugh M. Eaton, Charles Grunwald, H. C. Edwards, Frank Adams, and George R. Brill.

Leslie's Weekly.

A special feature of the issue of July 20, is an illustrated article by an ex-naval apprentice, now a prominent Methodist minister, showing how the United States trains and fits men for success behind the guns in times of war. Another feature of equal interest is "The Campaign of the Jungle," with two pages of illustrations of volunteers, and domestic life in the Philippines. The rough riders at Las Vegas; the intercollegiate regatta; celebrations of the first anniversary of the naval battle at Santiago, and the bicycle feat of Mile-a-minute Murphy, are subjects of illustration and letter press. It is a fine midsummer number, with its interesting page of personals, and other departments.

The Saturday Evening Post.

The issue of July 15 contains an excellent article by Mayor Carter H. Harrison, of Chicago, on the Misgovernment of the Modern City; it gives an insight into municipal affairs, and practical municipal politics, with useful suggestions for the suppression of the bribe-giver and the hoodler. The Misgovernment of the Modern City is one of a group of articles dealing with questions of vital import, written by experts of international reputation. The July 15 number of the Post also contains articles and stories by Bret Harte, Mollie Elliot Seawell, Col. W. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill), Ex-Senator Ingalls, Robert Burdette, and others equally well known.

Trusts are Combinations of Commercial Pirates.

The modern trust is a combination of pirates for the purpose of obtaining the wealth created. But one thing about the trust, bad as it is, is valuable as an educator, and that is its business methods, which demonstrate the innate weakness of the competitive system. The trust is only a co-operative association for the enrichment of its stockholders, and its success demonstrates that the same kind of business sagacity could organize business for the equal benefit of all. The piratical trust with the spirit of competition and the methods of co-operation, constitutes a menace to the people that can only be met by co-operation animated by the spirit of equity.—Equity, Topeka, Kan.

The World's Martyrs.

The men who have been burned at the stake, the men who have been crucified and persecuted to the ends of the earth, are the men who have aroused patriotism and the love of liberty, and done more for the elevation of humanity than all other agencies combined. "THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 1 cent.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 1 cent.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 1 cent.

The English Lion and the Russian Bear.

Part II.

Swedenborg's Definition of the Bear; the Subject Considered From the Basis of Koreshan Astronomy; the Fate of England in the Bear's Embrace; Final Triumph of America.

EMANUEL SWEDENBORG—the greatest prophet and seer since the Lord and his disciples—has truthfully declared the bear to symbolize the power of the Word in ultimates. We have already hinted at the general significance of the bear, in its relation to divine natural things, as specifically pertaining to the resurrection of the dead. While we regard Swedenborg's statement as correct, it throws comparatively little light on the subject, because he does not define what the power of the Word in ultimates really embraces, as a scientific exposition. The ultimates of the power of causation, we find manifest in the structural physical universe and its functions. If we can furnish an exposition of the general and specific office of all the stars in their constellate arrangements, then we can certainly define the character of distinctive groups of stars in their correlative forms and motions, as relating to one another and to their terrestrial bearings.

The stars in the alchemico-organic (physical) cosmos, in their constellate order, have reference to the mental stars which occupy the organic forms of anthropotic existence; hence, the constellations in the alchemico-organic world pertain to corresponding groups of human beings in the organo-vital. Ursa Major in the alchemico-organic cosmos, corresponds to the great Bear in the organo-vital. The great Bear of the organo-vital is the empire of Russia. The function of the stars is to gather into themselves the electro-magnetic energies generated in the earth, to converge and focalize them into the central star, and thence radiate them—changed in quality, revitalized—back to specific earth centers, whence they are radiated over the diversified strata of the crust of the earth.

The form and motions of the alchemico-organic groups are perfect and in harmony. Their correspondences in the organo-vital cosmos are in process of incubation, and are therefore chaotic (not developed); hence the conflict manifest in the anthropotic (human) relations.

Russia, as the great Bear, comprises the power of the Word in its adverse and detrimental aspects to divine organic life. The investigation of this subject comprehensively, from the basis of ultimate correspondences, involves something of a knowledge of the Koreshan System of astronomy. As the central star and sun make their annual spirals north and south, they radiate their polar energies, which at the north pole are gathered into a cometic zone of crystalline (crustic) energy, as a circumpolar ring of motion, with a momentum derived from the sun's eliminations. This ring has its corresponding electric circuit in the earth, as a circumpolar belt or zone, and both are related to the circumpolar groups of stars.

The cosmic terrestrial zone gathers into itself the surplus or wasted energy of the sun, year after year, as the sun makes his spiral journey to the North. When the zone has accumulated a specific amount of cometic energy, it breaks and contracts until the ring has assumed the form of a lens, when it starts in its spiral toward the sun. This is the source of the comet, and the comet bears the energy to the sun, where it is absorbed. This constitutes one of the principal resources of the sun's replenishment. This office of bearing to the sun the forces of the resurrection or rejuvenation of its power, is called the bear or bearer, and the constellations which preside in their functions over this sphere of activity are called Ursa Major and Ursa Minor, because they are in the train of bearing—through the north polar star, both ascendingly and descendingly—the electro-magnetic energies of celestial and terrestrial activity.

The terminal star in the handle of the Little Dipper, or the end of the tail of Ursa Minor, is Polaris. Through this star the magnetic energies flow to the magnetic pole, and there they materialize at the terrestrial pole in the form of a metallic conglomeration, which comprises the north magnetic terminal of the polar axis. The electro-magnetic flow at this point is from the earth toward the pole of the celestial axis, and from the pole of the celestial to the pole of the terrestrial. In its descending flow, it hibernates (like the bear); in its ascending flow, it is a constant resurrection or restoration to life.

If we translate the language of physical symbolism into that of anthropotic form and function, we must regard the Lord Christ as the central Star. From this stellar nucleus, there radiated the electro-magnetism of his being,—his intellectual and affectional life. These radiated into humanity through "the power of the Word in ultimates," his power to precipitate his life into the world that, through the process of bear-ing, there might proceed the fruits of the resurrection, after hibernation. Just as the central star in the motion on its ex-centric, projects its orbital axis of magnetic energy to the north pole of that axis, and co-ordinately radiates its equatorial energy into the earth, whence it sweeps from the equator convergently toward the arctic regions, so the forces from the central and personal Christ correspondentially operate in the human race.

Thus the inverted Christian power has aggregated in the Russian bear, which is now the most threatening power on the face of the earth. The most so, because it unites the secular and ecclesiastical potencies in one head, and because it is representative of the waning force of the most aggressive civilization. By the most aggressive civilization, we mean the Christian; and by its waning, we mean that the truth and life have departed from Christianity, and its power in the world as a Christian force is declining.

The bear is that power of the Word which, as before stated, lays down its life and takes it up again. It is the power of planting the life of the Son of God, and bearing the fruit of the Tree of Life—the sons of God. In the opposite and inverted sense, it is the power to destroy that in which the truth has been manifest, but from which it has declined.

We deduce from the foregoing, first, that as the life of Christianity has gone out of the heart of humanity,—represented by the British Lion,—therefore some power must arise to destroy this old and wicked heart: Second, that one of the peculiarities of the bear is to hug its victim to death, to shut off its wind, and crush the heart's action. Carrying out the symbolism, we would expect to see the Russian power extend its arms around the chest, the heart of the world's commerce, and destroy its potency. The only possibility of England's ever being able to avert the inevitable coming supremacy of Russia over Europe, is an alliance with the United States. England knows this, and for this reason has tried to curry special favor with this government. The present money power will be destroyed, and with it the central nation of commercial perversion. Russia is outwitting England in Eastern diplomacy, and the time is not far distant when Russia can dictate terms to England. A new power will then arise, which will stem and turn the tide of Russia's aggression.

The Coming Pan-American Empire.

It is only in our united character as an EMPIRE, that our independence is acknowledged, that our power can be regarded, or our credit supported among foreign nations.—GEORGE WASHINGTON, in his Circular Letter of Congratulation and Advice to the Governors of the Thirteen States.

THERE WILL come a time in the progress and history of the world, when the hells of human imperfection will become subjugated to the supreme dominance of a superior intellectual and moral force, regardless of the principles of so called liberty, into which some contend all men are born. This will be when universal empire sways the world, and when the principles of righteousness so dominate the legislative, judicial, and executive control of its inhabitants, as to force them into the application of just and equitable principles in the regulation of society. Some government will arise, the righteousness of whose purpose—portrayed in its legislative enactments and the enforcement of just laws—will determine its right to imperial supremacy.

All grades of anthropotic development are the results of progressive and retrogressive experiences, humanity being subject to these two co-ordinating factors of progress. We find every condition, from the foremost advances of present civilization to the lowest grades of barbarism throughout the world. Governments exist and their monarchs reign, in which the elements of ferocity permeate the fabric from head to foot; cruelty and inhumanity characterizing the liberty of self-government, which the nations of the world accord because of the recognized code of rights existing between various peoples. No nation in the world has the right to submit its own subjects, or the subjects of other nations, to barbarities and inhuman cruelties; and were any nation strong enough in moral character and material force to compel an uncivilized people to observe the principles of mercy and justice, that nation would be morally obligated to take from such an uncivilized race, its liberty to encroach upon individual and collective human prerogatives.

The American nation, as now existing, is not necessarily the divinely-authorized imperial force to control the destinies of the world; but out of America shall arise the imperialism and power of expansion, which will absorb all nations and compel them to bow to its imperial mandate.

The Fundamentals of Universal Being.

All Truth is Divine,—the Almighty in Spiritual Essence; Supreme Good in the Arch-Natural Degree; Messianic Involution of All Truth.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

OWING to the fact that people esteeming themselves wise persist in demonstrating their ignorance of the keys of knowledge, it is necessary to reiterate the fundamental principles of unique and universal being. This reiteration may serve to finally awaken the dormant faculties of rationality in their minds, and stimulate them to activity. Truth is the Almighty in spiritual essence; good is the Almighty in arch-natural being. To become good we must know truth.

The science of law—operative correspondentially in all domains of existence—is foundational knowledge, the keys of which are the law of transmutation, or the cross, and the law of correspondence. The primary law operative in determining the nature and limit of our physical environment is the law of gravity, which gives us the vertical, by the use of the plumb, which vertical, or measure of integrity, must be the first factor in determining the form and size of what we denominate the material universe.

It is a primary axiom of Koreshanity, that everything in the universe has its opposite. If we recognize the existence of spirit, we must also recognize the existence of matter. Koreshan Science demonstrates the universe to be of one substance in two states; namely, matter and spirit. Form is an essential property of matter. The properties of form are length, breadth, and thickness. Without form there is no function. Limitation implies center and circumference. The interdependence of these for the perpetuity of each, is manifested by the reciprocal exercise of focalizing and radiating energies. The center is primary, being unique,—the throne or governing power of the universe, which is an imperial system, a reflection of Deity,—the perfect mind of the perfected humanity, on which a new name is written.

The new name is the most sacred name of Deity—Jehovah. The glory and most creative manifestation of Jehovah is the externally feminine manifestation of divine constructive power, which gives Deific birth to the many sons of Elohi. These form the Temple of God, with power and great glory in the midst thereof, foretold by the types and symbols given to the disciples of all ages, by the prophets of the law and the gospel. For comfort, people who are weary of the painful incompleteness recognized in existing conditions, must turn to the law and the prophets, not alone as revealed by the testimony of Scripture, but by the complemental greater books of all Nature, which constitute the mirror of the Almighty. As we look with mortal eyes first into one book and then into another, we are made to feel our ignorance, and great fear falls upon the awakening mind, as we realize the profundity of our darkness.

It is written for our comfort, that the Almighty hides himself in thick darkness. Therefore, in the darkest hour preceding the dawn of a new day, or cycle of time, out of the darkness comes a voice, saying, "Fear not; " "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Lo! here is wisdom, ever awaiting the ignorant who seek wisdom and understanding. For the teachable, the door of the coming kingdom is always opened by the voice of God, the Elohi of the race, who speaks the Word by the tongue of all spheres.

There is always an interpreter provided for the pilgrims of the night, to the Mecca of the universe—the sun city. This interpreter is the science of the laws of life and immortality, brought to light by the obedience to the gospel of Jesus the Christ of nineteen centuries ago, of the one upon whom his cross was laid when he became the "man of sin," the burden-bearer of the world. This was Peter, the Rock, the Heart of stone, the Conarium of the universal brain. This conarium or astral nucleus of brain power by which the universe is esoterically governed, is the vital terminus of all the vitalizing fibers of the Grand Man, the anthropostic battery which projects, through its conarium, all the pneumatic energies which vitalize with the divine impregnation, the universal constructive form, from microcosm to macrocosm. This Stone, the white Stone bearing the new name, is known through Scripture as the Lamb, the Father, the begetter, who from external, arch-natural sonship, has attained all the power of external, arch-natural, universal Fatherhood; the new name he bears is the name of his God,—the eternal City,—the Bride, the Lamb's wife,—the New Jerusalem.

This universal Father, this conarium, apex of universal vitality, is the positive pole of the great battery of universal life. When this positive pole, this increate heir to the throne of papal supremacy, is dematerialized by the electro-magnetic cross currents of the great white throne of judgment, the law of the cross will be revealed in its most universal sense, and will be the key in the hands of God manhood with which to unlock the universal store-house of mother Nature, and give to a recreated world resources of power and possibility hitherto undreamed of. With the aid of the science of the law of analogy, man may descend from the cross of Christ, the throne and altar of the universe, into every domain of potentiality, and unlock the mysteries before the portals of which the powers of mortal mind now exhaust themselves in vain.

Perpetual motion and motors of every desirable form for every conceivable use, will be at the command of men in the most external and natural spheres when its primogenitor, its first-born Son, in the fulness of arch-natural Fatherhood, gives the children of his inheritance the powers of his life in themselves. Till then, the aspirations of our desires must ascend with the smoke of our torment on the altar before the throne.

When the sacrifice of our High Priest is complete in the presence of the Holy of Holies,—the light of true Science,—for his own sins and those of his people, clean water will be sprinkled upon all his people,—they shall know the truth in scientific application, and they will be “washed whiter than snow” in the blood of the Lamb—the pure river of the water of life, and stand again (αναστὰς) the Tree of Life, intelligent in the science of universal reproduction—resurgam.

The Results of the Lord's Coming.

Attainment of Immortality in the Tangible World; Establishment of the New Church and State; Freedom of Humanity From Bondage.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

WHEN John was in the spirit on the Lord's day, that is, in the spiritual world where there is no time, he saw things that are now transpiring in the end of the Christian age, and heard one say: “Lo! I make all things new.” The Lord's day is when the Lord is present in earth, in his own humanity, as he was in Jesus. “Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. * * * And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple; even the Messenger of the Covenant, whom ye delight in.”

Elijah the prophet is the Messenger of the Covenant, and, as we learn by this passage, is also the Lord. Jesus was God's temple, the Lord's house. The judgment day that ends every dispensation is the great and terrible day of the Lord, when the Lord—the righteous Judge—is present in earth. After this judgment the old heavens and the old earth pass away with a great noise, and there come, as a result, “new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.” The old heavens and the old earth are the old church and the old state. It is plain that this was what occurred when Jesus came. It must needs be what will occur when He comes again, according to his promise, having the new name of God, as John saw him.

Among the things long foretold of this coming, are the release of God's captives. The people today are all bond slaves, wearing yokes either self-imposed or put on them by others. Priestcraft puts its shackles on body and spirit; custom enslaves all men. False economics and political science hang millstones about the neck of the laborer, and weigh him down to earth. The idle enslave the diligent; in every nation, the money-changer holds the reins of government. Our professed religious men fast, but in the day of their fast they “exact all their labors.” They fast “to smite with the fist of wickedness.” God will soon say to them:

Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?

Nineteen hundred years ago, the Lord came in the end of a single dispensation; then the result was a mighty change in both the religious and the political world. He comes now in the end of the twelve months—twelve ages of the Mazzarothic year of 24,000 years. There will be gathered up, in the changes now to come, the results of all the twelve months of that year—the Mazzarothic year. Eternal life, the resurrection of the dead, of which Jesus laid the foundation by sowing the seed, will now appear, and Jesus the Lord, reincarnated and bearing the new name of God, will redeem his promise to “raise up” (resurrect) all that the Father gave him. Then will come that for which Paul has been long waiting: “And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption [Greek, sonship], to wit, the redemption of our body.”

What Paul calls the firstfruits of the Spirit, Peter calls the begetting again by the Spirit for a birth of the body, to come in the end of the age. Now will come the realization of the vision that Paul had when he wrote:

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

New heavens and a new earth—a new church and a new state, with all that those words imply—are to be the result of the Lord's coming at this time, when the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel, who comes of the posterity of Joseph, shall become “a great mountain and fill the whole earth.”

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE PROGRESS of the world during the nineteenth century has been unparalleled in all known past history. We stand at the close of a remarkable century, and about us are all the wonderful facilities and inventions which have been called into existence by inventive geniuses. Scientific miracles have been wrought before the eyes of a wondering world; continents have been transformed, and ribbed with thousands of railroads which connect the great centers of commerce with the fields of industry. The telegraph and the telephone have annihilated distance, and placed the people of the entire world in direct communication. Physical forces have been utilized and applied to mechanics, until great machines seem endowed with human intelligence. There is machinery to do the work of hundreds of thousands of human beings. Steam, electricity, and compressed air afford motive power all around the world. It would seem that the world is immeasurably blessed with all the resources of nature in constant utilization. The scientists are boasting of their achievements in the practical application of their discoveries, and of their contributions to commerce and industry. But despite all this progress, millions of human beings in the most enlightened nation in the world have received no benefit from it; indeed, the very conditions which exist in the social, economic, and commercial fields, demonstrate that the stupendous factors operative in these domains are cursing the men who labor to produce the wealth and capital of the world. Hundreds of thousands are thrown out of employment by labor-saving machinery, for the simple reason that the modern mind has not sufficient ingenuity to utilize all these great facilities for the comfort of the people. The commercial spirits of the times have seized upon every modern invention and discovery; science, instead of contributing to the blessing of the people, has afforded greater facilities for absorbing and controlling the wealth of the people. Through the thousands of practical inventions and discoveries, the gigantic corporations and trusts have come into existence. Indeed, the great corporations center about the greatest inventions,—railways, steamships, telegraph, and telephone,—and have taken possession of all lines of industry where labor-saving machinery is employed. The fruits of false commercialism are being ripened by modern science; the inventors are multiplying the stupendous factors of revolution, and adding to the intricacies of the great problems which confront the world. We are nearing the culmination of the age, the focal point of all lines of progress of the dispensation; we are nearing the great vortex of agitation, in which the world's evils will be transmuted to good, capitalism overthrown, and the great Commonwealth of divine Imperialism established, to bless the world and utilize all the forces of the physical and human worlds for the benefit of the masses.

Among the so called great discoveries of the nineteenth century, is that of the correlation of forces—the convertibility of a given quality of energy to an energy of another quality. Modern physicists have discovered, by roundabout processes, that light may be converted to heat, electricity to magnetism, magnetism to motion, etc.; but the fundamentals of the metamorphosis and correlation of energies remain unknown alike to the physicist and the chemist. The theories of the modern scientist do not admit of any relation existing between energy and matter; it is held that matter is simply acted upon by energy, without any real change in either matter or energy. It is thought that matter is indestructible; but we affirm that energy belongs to another world entirely, if energy is incapable of being reduced to matter, and matter incapable of destruction. The manner in which energy acts upon matter has never been defined in the text-books. It is maintained and demonstrated in Koreshanity, that the relation between energy and matter is specific and absolute. There is not only correlation of energy, correlation of matter, but also correlation of matter and energy. No physicist has ever known a case of metamorphosis of energy of a given quality to energy of another quality without the mediation of matter as the base of the transmutation; and no one has ever seen matter transformed from matter of one kind to matter of another kind without reduction of the matter to energy, and the introduction of another quality of energy. The discovery of the correlation of energy and matter, by the Founder of Koreshanity in 1870, is the greatest discovery of modern times. It enters as a factor, into all Koreshan conclusions. When Alchemy is understood, the arcana of the universe are revealed. The law of transmutation is the key to the whole problem of life and being; and Koreshanity alone, of all other systems in the world, gives to the world the genuine light of scientific truth.

An "open letter," addressed to the President of the United States and his cabinet, regarding the Philippine question, has been sent us with request that we publish the same in THE FLAMING SWORD. We have declined to do so for the reason that the language, although coming from the editor of a respectable reform journal, is unpatriotic, ungentlemanly, and treasonable. The attitude of THE FLAMING SWORD toward the government of the United States has already been defined in these pages; and we have since noted as a result, that a few reform publications have affirmed their loyalty to the powers that be. We are not advocating republicanism as the best form of government; but we are living under a government that we consider to be more compatible with progress than any other nation in the world at the present time. It is not in the order of Koreshan progress to head a mob or an army of discontents to destroy what semblance of order now exists in America. We believe the President of the United States is in a better position to feel the pulse of the people concerning the Philippine campaign, than "reform" agitators. They affect to believe in republican institutions, while endeavoring to repudiate the will of the people in open opposition to executive forces of the government which are acting upon the decision of Congress in the ratification of America's treaty with Spain! We are free to say that we would rather live under the reputed despotism of the Czar of Russia, than to be submitted to such a rabble as ruled France in terror and tyranny after the overthrow of Louis XIV. The "open letter" referred to breathes the spirit of the mob, and comes from that class of minds who would today be glad to join the Filipinos and take up arms against the American forces in Luzon. America would perhaps be better off if they were there, with the Tagalos, Negritos, and Igorotes!

The rumblings of revolution are heard in both the eastern and western hemispheres. The hand of oppression is felt throughout the world, and social discontent is growing on every continent. The socialistic element of Europe threatens to overthrow empires; already Belgium has deemed it prudent to make some concessions to the socialists in order to prevent a revolution. The great religious revolt of the sixteenth century is now finding expression in the social, economic, and political fields. The breach between capital and labor is widening. The powers that control the world will never volunteer to adjust the social inharmonies and make man free—they will never consent to ameliorate the conditions of the modern slaves; and the time is approaching when the masses will not longer endure the terrible oppression and tyranny of the money power. All of the forces of the world are organizing for combat on the battlefield of Gog and Magog. We unmistakably read the signs of the times; and we affirm that the prophecies of the greatest revolution in all history are nearing fulfilment!

A christian science journal contains the following statement: "God knows no evil, and therefore does not permit evil. For God to recognize evil would be for God to think an evil thought. God is too pure to behold iniquity." If God does not know evil, it follows that he is in ignorance of the entire universe of humanity at the present time! Koreshanity maintains that God is the supreme cause of all things—the cause of all results; and that there inhere in the universe the very principles and laws by which evil as well as good, death as well as life, God as well as devil, are perpetuated from age to age. There is no knowledge except by comparison and contrast. It is just as necessary for God to know evil—to partake of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, as it is for him to exist. "I form the light, I create darkness: I make peace, I create evil. I the Lord, do all these things." There is no mind, either divine or satanic, that is able to originate a good thought without at the same time, involuntarily producing its antithet.

The people are becoming tired of modern astronomy. The objects of its research are too far away to be of any benefit to the world, while it is struggling with the great problems of humanity. The people are no longer interested in nebulae, quintillions of miles from the earth. What they need is a system of science that has sufficient mental dynamis in it to take hold of the stupendous issues of human life, and do something for the suffering world. The Koreshan Astronomy is of some use; the definitely structured universe furnishes an infallible pattern for the true scientific, social, and governmental structure which will redeem humanity from its curses. The church is failing because it is not concerned about making the present world better; both the church and the modern astronomical fraternity are concerned about the sky and other worlds. Koreshanity meets the issues upon the earth; and the sooner the clergyman and the astronomer can get off the convex earth, the better it will be for those they have so long deceived by useless fallacies.

A few would-be journals have been suppressed on the charge of publishing seditious and obscene matter; and the cry is raised that the authorities are interfering with the freedom of the press. The press of the world has never been free; there is not one editor in five hundred who dares to protest against the corruptions of the church, state, and society. Modern journalism is restricted to certain popular channels. We affirm that this voluntary bondage, this voluntary curtailing of the liberties of speech, this submission to the demands of the money power and popular opinion, on the part of the editors themselves, endangers the liberties of the people a thousand-fold more than any abridgment of free speech and free press that has ever been imposed by the American government! The editorial fraternity has sold itself to popular opinion and to factions. It requires courage today to protest against all modern evils; and THE FLAMING SWORD is the only journal that covers the entire field!

Flammarion, the great French astronomer, has dabbled more or less in metaphysics. Of course, spiritualism has been brought to his attention, and he has placed some confidence in alleged messages from the spiritual world. But he has reached the conclusion that mediums are mostly frauds. His theory of the spiritual world is about the same as that generally entertained in spiritualism—that "space is peopled with spirits." He has endeavored to obtain information concerning the physical cosmos from spirits, and he now acknowledges that they have deceived him. He says: "The alleged spirit of Galileo deceived me as to the satellites of Jupiter. I say alleged spirit, because on reflection, I conclude the real spirit of the great astronomer who suffered persecution for the sacred cause of science, would not have attempted deception. It must have been a spirit of darkness."

The Mayor of Chicago unconsciously deals the representative form of government a blow in his article in the Saturday Evening Post, of July 15. The idea of democracy makes the people the supreme source of national power; and it is logical to conclude that such a perversion of the principles of government must result in misgovernment. If the people are corrupt and selfish, their own character is reflected in their representatives. It is absurd to suppose that a corrupt people can make just laws with which to govern themselves. The idea of brotherhood presupposes a paternal government. True patriotism is recognition of and loyalty to paternalism, and paternalism is imperialistic, the antithet of democracy. If the national, state, and municipal governments of the United States are not satisfactory, the people can only trace the fault to the accredited source of power—the people themselves!

The promised prosperity has come—to the trusts. Wealth flows as a stream to the corporations and syndicates—it flows away from the men who produce it, leaving them impoverished. While the wealth of the millionaire is increasing, the wages of the workingmen are being reduced to the zero point. Strikes occur when reductions are made in wages, and strikes are occurring everywhere. The great trouble in the Idaho mines called forth the following expression from the President of the United States, in his message to the authorities at Wardner: "Men must be content with less wages; for in that way men will be nearer to that station in life to which God called them." What is that station to which "god" has called them? and which "god" has called them there? It is the station of absolute slavery, to which the gods of the money power have forced them!

The idea of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man ought, even at first glance, to suggest to the mind the necessity of a material and tangible Fatherhood, and withal, the personality of God. God made man in his own image and likeness. The apostle, quoting an ancient poet, says, "We also are his offspring." If God made man like himself, it follows that God is like the man he produced! The son necessarily partakes of the nature of his father, with all his attributes and characteristics. If the son is material,—if the son has personality, the father possesses personality also; for whatever is in the effect, necessarily proceeded from the cause. Therefore, if man has personality and is material, God is personal and material in his manifestation; for God cannot put forth what is not in him.

A socialistic contemporary, Appeal to Reason, is asking its readers for funds with which to convert the 15,000 editors of America to socialism. Of course it will serve to advertise the paper; but in the hope of converting the mouthpieces of almost every idea under the sun, the editor of Appeal is doomed to a greater disappointment than in the founding of Ruskin colony! The personal income of the typical American editor is bound up in his willingness to write whatever his supporters desire; and the men who will make any radical change in the character of their would-be editorial productions are few and far between.

The money power, fads and fallacies, dictate to about 15,000 times as many editors as will be converted through reading a semi-socialistic publication.

The originator of christian science, who holds that there is no matter, says: "Jesus was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe. He plunged beneath the material surface of things and found the spiritual cause." Then matter does really exist, does it? If the spiritual world is beneath the surface of matter, it is in matter; the spiritual world is in man, in its material expression. If there is metaphysics, there must necessarily be physics; if there is spirit, there is matter. The advocates of the no-matter theory are material beings, subsisting upon material food, walking upon the material earth, and writing upon material paper. It is noticeable that even the christian science god must use material beings to express his views!

Darwin's fountain of life is the wonderful protoplasm; the simple agitation of a single atom is supposed to be the origin of the Copernican universe. The idea is, that the greater springs from the lesser—contrary to the demonstrable fact that effect is expressed cause. Cause puts forth that which it contains, no more and no less. On the basis of the modern theories of the correlation and conservation of energy, we would like to have some physicist give us an analysis of how all the energies of the great Copernican universe sprang from the energy generated in the agitation of a single atom. Wonderful potency it must have possessed, to have evolved into all the decillions of decillions of horse power which are supposed to move systems of worlds!

The anti-imperialists object to American expansion and the occupation of foreign islands by American military power. They are confronted by two facts, with which the present administration is consistent: The fact that the islands of Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and others, have been ceded to the United States by Spain; and the fact that, according to the Constitution of the United States, no part of its territory shall ever be turned over to any other people or nation. The fact of the cession of these islands to the United States, makes them as much a part of the American territory as the cession of Alaska by Russia made Alaska a territory of the United States.

The idea that there will be a peaceable adjustment of the difficulties which exist in the religious, social, commercial, and political world, is chimerical. There is nothing in all history that can be taken as a precedent—nothing to justify the expectation. A peaceable evolution of the new order would leave the oppressor go unpunished. The great crimes against humanity must be atoned by the shedding of blood; and the curses upon the world must inevitably culminate in terrible woes. There are laws of retribution and vengeance as well as laws of reward and redemption, and these laws are immutable.

The laws of death, as well as the laws of life, inhere in the very being of the universe. Death is an inexpugnable factor in the propagation and perpetuity of life. The seed must die in the soil in order to reproduce itself; and it was necessary for the Almighty to die in humanity in order to bring forth the fruitage of the dispensation—the revelation of scientific truth and the manifestation of the sons of God at the end of the age.

"Organized labor's fight is God's fight." We were not aware that the Almighty had engaged labor unions to fight their brothers, but it seems so from the quotation. Brickbats, stones, revolvers, and bottles are strange weapons with which to conduct the holy (?) crusade against unfortunate non-union men, who must work or starve; but if "organized labor's fight is God's fight," why, the mobs are all right!

The reform press considers the throwing of 500 drummers out of employment by the formation of trusts, a great crime; but they have nothing to say when the labor unions not only organize to throw thousands of non-union men out of employment, but resort to force to keep them out! Trusts boycott the smaller concerns; labor unions endeavor to boycott the products of all industry not controlled by the unions.

Prof. Herron makes the strange statement that "Democracy has failed in America because it has not been tried." The democratic form of government has been in existence in America for one hundred and twenty-five years. It has been tried and found wanting. What the professor really means, is that his own little scheme has not been tried, and of course, if we may take his statement as true, it is an obvious failure!

The mixing of printers' type is called "pi," and type set up from "pi," forms combinations that are meaningless. An exchange suggests that there is danger in mixing the types of the Jewish system given by Moses, and of creating monstrosities in the mind. We should judge so, from the success of its editor and others in creating meaningless combinations from the veritable "pi" of Babylon!

There are a number of torchlights, dawning lights, lamps of life, search-lights, X-rays, candlesticks, messengers of light, etc., in religious journalism. THE FLAMING SWORD is the great flame of electric mentality, the light of the world, the sun of divine Science. Its radiance is rendering the smaller lights useless; its rays are too bright and piercing for the comfort of advocates of fallacy.

Immortality in the flesh is the fruit of the Christian dispensation; it will come through the direct line of divine progress, and through the application of scientific law. The faddists who deny the teachings of the only Man who attained to immortality in all the history of the world, are outside of the human Zodiac, and will remain mortal for a considerable time yet, despite their claims!

Thousands of people object to the trusts because they are not in them; they despise the millionaire because their own greed is not satisfied in possession of the wealth of others. Selfishness of the poor is no less than that of the rich; and the spirit of genuine love for humanity is no greater in the modern slave than in his master.

There are two great institutions in the world, which deal in spirits—the church and the saloon. Both classes of spirits are intoxicating and harmful, but of the two, whiskey seems to have the greater number of converts. The number of churches in the United States is estimated to be 170,000, while the saloons number about 230,000.

"The moon moves 3,330 feet a second." If the moon moves at this speed, and the earth moves 65,000 miles an hour, or about 19 miles a second, how does the moon manage to keep up with the earth in its alleged annual revolution about the sun, in the Copernican universe?

Government by the people can be no more pure nor just than the people themselves. The only hope of the world is in the establishment of the divine Imperialism in the earth, to supplant the present perversions, and "make all things new."

Prof. Herron advocates a "decided revolution," a "complete change in social reconstruction." He wants a change from democratic principles to democratic principles—quite a difference, you see!

THE EDITOR.

"This Same Jesus Shall so Come in Like Manner."

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have read your book, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and a few copies of THE FLAMING SWORD. I am highly pleased so far, and being a truth-seeker, I desire to ask you to (1) explain Acts i: 9-12; and (2) Acts ii: 38-40. (3) Also explain water baptism, and when it ceased to be a symbol. I will throw away every theory and all prejudice for the truth.—J. H. C., Mansfield, Ark.

(1) Nineteen hundred years ago, Jesus the Messiah was manifest to the world; he was the actual manifestation of the Almighty, the God-man, the Word made flesh. If the Word, which was in the beginning as spirit, could be materialized in the form of the perfect man, it logically follows that that man could be again reduced to spirit. A number of years were devoted to the work of preparation of the minds of a few people to receive the divine spirit. As the time approached, Jesus began to talk of going away; but he also told them that if he went away he would come again—as the Comforter, the Holy Spirit.

On the night of the passover, Jesus demonstrated to his disciples where he was going; they ate bread and drank wine that represented his body and blood. Through the symbol, it is clear that he was going into them; that he was to be appropriated literally by his disciples, and thus literally eat his flesh, which he said must be done in order to obtain eternal life. He came to bring a fire, and even while he uttered the words the forces of love and hate—the love of his disciples, and the hatred generated in his enemies, were meeting in him in the creation of the vortex which consumed his body. The narrator leads us out to the scenes of Bethany, on the Mount of Olives, where he was dissolved by processes of theocrasis or translation, and taken out of the plane of visibility. He was there reduced to energy and entered the heavens of his disciples.

His parting words to his disciples were that they were to be baptized with the holy pneuma in a few days; that they were to tarry in Jerusalem until imbued with power from on high. At the time of his dissolution they interiorly saw him enter the spiritual world, their own interior; it appeared to them that he was going into the physical heavens; but the angels asked them why they stood gazing into the physical heavens; they need not look for him there, for this same Jesus, which is taken up from the plane of external existence into the heavens of humanity, shall so come again in a few days in the manner in which you have seen him enter the spiritual world. Was not his coming again, fulfilled on the day of Pentecost? Did he not come as spirit, the same being, the same Jesus, in the same manner, with the essences, that he had when he went away?

This was his second advent. The words of the angels had no direct reference to the manifestation at the end of the age, nineteen hundred years from that time; but to the immediate coming, as the promised Comforter. Jesus was the first-born from the dead; the natural, tangible Adam. His quickening spirit was the second Adam, or the Adam in his second coming. Every Messiah has a first and second coming; it was so with Enoch, Noah, and Moses. Elijah was dissolved and baptized Elisha; he came again in Elisha; and so Jesus came again in his disciples; he was first natural, then spiritual, first the man, then the energies of the divine baptism. The manifestation at the end of this dispensation, although fulfilling what is usually termed the "second advent," is another manifestation, with a new name, and has correspondingly a first and a second coming. "For the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people Israel." Jesus went away as spirit; and when he came again as spirit in the outpouring on the day of Pentecost, the words of the angels were fulfilled, "This same Jesus shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

(2) The only way in which any people can be saved is through having the germs of the divine seed planted in them at the time of the sowing—at the beginning of the age. The dissemination of the divine seed nineteen hundred years ago was for the specific purpose of regeneration. Jesus, the perfect man who had no sin, was made to be sin for those into whom he went; he became sin by crossing his immortal life with the mortal humanity, that he might actually bear away their sins and destroy them in the processes of his overcoming death at the end of the dispensation. Therefore, the divine baptism was "for the remission of sins;" and the conditions necessary to that baptism were acceptance of the truth proclaimed by the apostles, and repentance. The promise was to them and their offspring, and to as many as should be called; there was a brief period for the sowing; then came the stages of development of the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. The fruitage of that sowing is to come at the harvest, or end of the dispensation.

(3) "Water baptism" was the symbol used in connection with the dissemination of the divine Spirit. The symbol ceased when the energies were exhausted—near the end of the first century. The form of the symbol finally became lost to the church, and the church is in utter ignorance of both the real and symbolic baptism of the early church.

Baptism with water typified a cleansing; water is the symbol of scientific truth. The baptism of the Spirit was by pouring; it was the real baptism. Was water used in a corresponding manner? No; the water was used to symbolize what the outpouring of the Spirit upon humanity would result in at the foot of the dispensation. The sign Pisces represents the feet. The manifestation at the end of the age of Pisces, which in the human world is the feet, must be cleansed by the waters of scientific truth. And did not Jesus say to Peter when he wanted his entire body washed, that if the feet be clean, the whole body is clean? What did he mean? He meant that if the church is cleansed at the foot of the dispensation, it would be the cleansing of the whole church, the whole body, because the whole church would become involved at the foot of the dispensation.

When Jesus came to John to be baptized, he came to receive energies from the mind of John. Both John and Jesus went down into the water. How far? Far enough to cover the feet; then John baptized Jesus with the Holy Spirit. Philip and the eunuch waded down into the stream, and while standing in the water, Philip imparted to the eunuch the pneumo-psychic energies of the divine baptism; then they both walked right out of the water; not a word is said about Philip plunging the eunuch into the water! The symbol of "water baptism" was the mere immersion of the feet; and all the facts of Biblical narrative and the meaning of the symbols, demonstrate that this was the original form of "water baptism." It harmonizes all difficulties encountered by "theologians" in the discussion of the subject, and accounts for all the Scriptural references to it, and is the truth.

The Source of Energies of Motion of the Stars.

Have the mercurial discs in the earth's shell, and also the sun, a corresponding influence on the motion of the stars?—E. C. D., Cedar Lane, Pa.

The central sun is the nucleus of universal activity. The center and circumference of the universe are reciprocally related. The central nucleus is the point of impression of the entire physical world, and is consequently, the prime impuler of all motions in the physical cosmos. The central sun radiates its energies in the space of the great hollow cell; in their transmission through the various planes of energy and atmospheres, the rays are decomposed and resolved into millions of different qualities of energies—as many different qualities as there are stars in the physical heavens.

Energies descending from the sun are gravic energies. They are met by corresponding ascending or levic energies. Two corresponding energies of gravity and levity produce, at the point where they meet, a vortex, the nucleus of which is in process of combustion, and the result is a star. The vortex not only generates energies of rotation, but also energies of orbital motion, and the star moves in its own plane and in its own orbit, being impulsed continually by energies generated in the vortex.

There are two general systems of the universe—the solar and the lunar. The stars belong to the solar system, while the planets belong to the lunar system. The stars have their specific origin in the central sun, while the visible planets are projected from the circumference. The great lunar system is in the earth's shell. The mercurial discs generate various qualities of levic energy; and in the transposition of the magnetic energies from the lunar to the solar system, the planetary energies are made to contribute to the motion of the stars. The orbits of the mercurial discs in the earth are in the great alimentary canal,—the digestive tract of the physical cosmos; and the specific relation between the mercurial discs and the stars may be traced in the relation of the alimentary canal of the human system to the activities which take place in the brain.

Koreshanity and Human Nature.

A Serio-Comic Critic Endeavors to Give a "Phrenological Reading" of Koresh and the Flaming Sword.

Something has happened; though but few people know of it. THE FLAMING SWORD that was supposed to be a fixture at the east entrance to the Garden of Eden, which through some occult means turned this way and that way, to keep out intruders, has slipped its moorings, and having invaded Uncle Sam's mails, goes flapping around helplessly. Either this is the case, or some unskilled mechanic has contrived a base imitation of the original illuminated weapon, and is trying to scare folk by thrusting the flabby thing at them. To be more explicit—there is a fantastic publication emanating from the Windy City bearing the formidable title of THE FLAMING SWORD, which, in its way, is a curiosity.

This queer magazine advocates "Koreshanity," whatever that is; perhaps it is a new diet, or the new woman, or a new lymph to be injected into the blood of long-suffering humanity to prevent rabies or the "grip." Yet the strange embellishments liberally supplied throughout the magazine show scooped out globes and planets in all sorts of shapes and positions, which leave the impression upon the beholder that Koreshanity in some way treats of Astronomy and Cosmogony, which a careful reading of THE FLAMING SWORD's ebullient columns tends to confirm. It calls Koreshanity a science, and declares that it "Uncovers the Mystery of the Ages" and that "Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence. Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index of the character of God and man in their relations."

Here we have a modern Galileo begging us to take a peep through his telescope and learn how mistaken we have been these long years since Copernicus explained that the Earth is a convex globe revolving around the sun. KORESH informs us that such is not the case; on the contrary, the Earth is a "Concave Sphere," and all its inhabitants are huddled in the concavity, the outside of this "shell" being uninhabitable. The sun is in the center, "rotating on its axis, having an orbital path on the ecliptic." The Planets are spheres of energy reflected from metallic discs in the earth's circumference, and the stars are "focal points of light."

We are further informed that we have been deluded in supposing the distance to our luminary to be 92,000,000 miles, whereas it is right at our door, so to speak, or to be more exact—the sun is only "1,000 miles distant from the earth"—about a day and a night's ride on the overland lightning express, with Pullman sleeper.

Then again, instead of the sun being a huge body, as we supposed, 886,000 miles in diameter, it is only 100 miles through in its thickest part. It is also humiliating and distressing to think that we have been teaching our school children that day and night on the earth are the result of a diurnal revolution of the earth around the sun, whereas KORESH has discovered that it is nothing of the kind, but "day is produced by the sun coming into view," and of course night steals upon us when his sunship recedes from view.

This seems astounding, but is as nothing when Koreshanity lapses into prophecy, as it does in the following quotation from the CELLULAR COSMOGONY:—

"We are now approaching a great biologic conflagration. Thousands of people will dematerialize, through a biological electro-magnetic vibration. This will be brought about through the direction of one mind, the only one who has a knowledge of the law of this bio-alchemical transmutation. The change will be accomplished through the formation of a biological battery, the laws of which are known only to one man. This man is Elijah the prophet, ordained of God, the Shepherd of the Gentiles and the central reincarnation of the ages. From this conflagration will spring the sons of God, the biune offspring of the Lord Jesus, the Christ and Son of God."

So stand from under! "Thousands of people will dematerialize through a biological electro-magnetic vibration!" One feels to exclaim with Rip Van Winkle at sight of the speechless ghosts upon the mountain, "I wish I hadn't come!" That will be a seance worth attending; and to think that it is all to be accomplished through a "biological battery, the laws of which are known only to one man, and this man is Elijah!" However, this is not so very surprising after all, when we recall the wonderful feats in necromancy performed by Elijah when he was on earth the other time, being fed by ravens, and finally going up into the sky, blood, bones, and boots.

If anybody can manage that biological battery to the dematerialization of thousands of substantial people, Elijah is the man to arrange the electrodes. But why?

Never mind, we'll let that pass, and leave ELIJAH, KORESH, and CYRUS to fix up the dynamo that is to electrocute the thousands of unsuspecting, confiding people. KORESH is harmless while fussing down in Florida making geocentric observations to convince the alligators that Copernicus, Herschel, Winchell, Swift, and many other astronomers have erred in calculating eclipses, transits, and planetary movements, but his silliness becomes unbearable when he meddles with the science of Phrenology, of which it is evident from his drivings he has no knowledge whatever.

Following is a quotation from THE FLAMING SWORD, advising Human Nature and trying to impart some sort of information regarding microcosms, macrocosms, cells, etc.

"If Human Nature would make a specialty of studying from human nature and the structure of man as the microcosm, it would soon learn that the analogous macrocosm, or universe at large, is an organic structure, a cell possessing form and limitation. We would make phrenology serve a better purpose than to prevaricate concerning the character of man and the universe."

All of which seems as clear as mud and as intelligible as the babbling of Carlyle's "Dead Sea Apes."

KORESH would make phrenology "serve a better purpose than to prevaricate concerning man and the universe!" Phrenology lie? Indeed, it does nothing of the kind; it adheres closely to the truth, and that is what disturbs KORESH. When a man vaporizes, evolves baseless theories, and concocts schemes to delude silly old women of either sex, prophecies impossible events and makes himself ridiculous generally, phrenology explains his peculiar structure and shows that he was built upon a fantastic model, and must be as eccentric as his theories are silly. Phrenology is a science. Koreshanity is nonsense. C. P. HOLT, in Human Nature, San Francisco, Cal.

As Others See Us.

Kind Words for The Flaming Sword by a Progressive Reform Journal.

We are in receipt of the current number of THE FLAMING SWORD, published by the Guiding Star Publishing House, 314 W. Sixty-third street, Chicago. This splendid publication, the exponent of the Koreshan Science and a leader of scientific and social reform, needs no introduction to a large circle of reform readers. This latest number is brimful of the best brain food for students on the spiritual as well as on the political plane. The leading features of the current issue are "The Divinity of Jesus the Christ," "Koreshan Theology Contrasted with Modern Vagaries," "The Plumb-Line of Koreshan Science," "Failure of the French Revolution," with many other interesting and instructive articles on timely topics. Among its clipped articles we find "A Startling Revelation," Facts and Figures From Official Report of the Comptroller of the Currency Concerning American Banks," by Chas. Bonsall, expert accountant, in Advance Guard. Our readers will remember reading this splendid article of Mr. Bonsall's in the Guard, some time since.—Advance Guard, Findlay, O.

A College Graduate Desires to Assist in Circulating Koreshan Literature.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Having just returned from the East (from college), I am rejoiced to find an awakened and vital interest in the suggestive literature of Koreshanity. In fact, this vital science has become of more than passing interest. My position in the affair behooves me to write you, first, in the practical interest of Koreshanity; second, to solicit your assistance in satisfying this "much alive" interest and desire for information and knowledge, that the people may be supplied with preliminary information of Koreshanity. I have, by my success (both public and privately) in experiments and demonstrations, (assisted by the able Prof.

Koreshan Astronomy and the Bible.

EDITOR SWORD:—

I cannot find any one in this city of Universities to knock KORESH out. All our professors are maintaining an attitude of speechless eloquence.

Some prominent infidels here have lost their sleep since the book, CELLULAR COSMOGONY, came among them like a bombshell. They have ceased to bombard the Bible, and look very sheepish.

The church folks are worse, because they did not hold the fort. Very faithfully,

JOHN D. P—,

Bank of British North America, Kingston, Ont.

C. E. M. Gimmer, of Siam, Asia), aroused interest in new thought ideas.

Now, if you will send a generous supply of Koreshan literature for distribution, I am confident that by some little effort on my part I may solicit a number of subscribers and thus help the cause. I am in earnest and will help you. The people need information! Hoping for your practical assistance for mutual benefit, I am, Most respectfully, H. B. T., St Joseph, Mo.

A Spiritualist Journal Admits that Strong Arguments Are Made in Favor of Concavity.

"Cellular Cosmogony, or the Earth a Concave Sphere." In two parts, by Dr. Cyrus R. Teed and Prof. U. G. Morrow, Chicago: The Guiding Star Publishing House, Paper cover, 25 cents.

The argument of the book is based upon the hypothesis of the "hollow globe," or that the surface of the earth upon which we live is concave instead of convex; is 8,000 miles in diameter, and that we inhabit the inside instead of the outside, as held by Copernicus in his system of astronomy. The authors certainly make a good argument from their premise; and as there is no scientific edict upon the subject, it may be regarded as an open question. This theory is the basis of Koreshanity, a religion founded by Dr. Teed in 1870.—Religio-Philosophical Journal, San Francisco, Cal.

A Methodist Colporteur Thinks the Flaming Sword is Rightly Named.

DEAR FRIEND:—I have your letter of the 5th., also the writings of KORESH and two copies of THE FLAMING SWORD. This paper is rightly named. I read the articles marked, while on the street car, and again in my room. Some in the booklets—as well as your letter—were read more than once. I have written our M. E. pastor in Auburn, Ind., and if he is open to the whole truth, and I hear from him, will send him article on the "Fads and Fallacies of the Nineteenth Century," which is one of the best things (if not the best thing) on existing realities, which are not wholly unseen. We are in a wonderful age! I believe Christ's coming is near—as the fulfillment of prophecy is near at hand.—R. W. C., Duluth, Minn.

Time Tells Many Stories, but Man Proves the Truth.

And now comes a gentleman from Chicago, who says that the world is a hollow sphere and that the people live on the inside instead of the outside, as we have been taught for several generations. Well, who knows? Stranger ideas than that have been proved true—until some other man came along with a theory that upsets the last one. The time, however, is rapidly approaching when "old things" will pass away and the progressive man is ready and willing to give all a careful hearing. Time—not men—can prove the truth or falsity of any theory or assertion.—The Critic, Rich Hill, Mo.

Chat With Readers.

The Industrial Co-operative Union of America.

The Industrial Co-operative Union of America is the most external department of the Koreshan Unity. It is an organization which embodies in the conduct of its business, the Koreshan principles of equitable exchange and co-operation. The organization has been in existence for about one year, and our readers will be pleased to know that from the first it has succeeded, and that it is now rapidly growing in commercial influence in the great city of Chicago. The I. C. U. began with a single industry, with a few persons engaged in its business; but it was a nucleus of success. Today, it owns and controls a number of industries, employing the time and energies of nearly 100 people; and the call is made for a greater number of co-operators.

Our friends are scattered throughout the country. Many of you are struggling hard against the conditions which exist in the social and industrial world. Some of you are isolated, and have the prejudices of the people to contend with in the acceptance and advocacy of the Koreshan System. At present you are merely existing, caring for only yourselves, while helping to maintain the great corporations which oppress the people. This is antagonistic to the principles accepted by all Koreshans. The industries built up by the Koreshan Unity in the interests of the cause of Koreshanity and its people, and finally for all humanity, afford opportunities for escape from the struggles in the competitive world.

A number of our people have already responded to the calls of the I. C. U., and have removed to Chicago, where opportunities are afforded each member to provide for himself, while developing and maintaining the great system of industries which must ultimately redeem the world from the competitive hells. Is not this an unparalleled opportunity for you? You can begin now to make provisions for yourself, in both the present and future, by entering this organization of co-operative effort. We solicit the inquiries and the co-operation of as many competent industrials as can arrange to engage in the factories and stores of the Industrial Co-operative Union. Pamphlets and information are obtainable from the Guiding Star Publishing House. Enclose 5 cents in stamps in your letters, for postage on matter to be mailed in reply to your inquiries.

The Koreshan Propaganda.

The Koreshan System is spreading in the world as never before. THE FLAMING SWORD is constantly reaching new readers, and the CELLULAR COSMOGONY is being circulated among thousands. We need an army of representatives to reach all parts of the English-speaking world, to solicit subscriptions for THE FLAMING SWORD, to dispose of the Koreshan literature, and to otherwise work up interest in the system and its departments. There is no better way at the present time of disseminating the knowledge of Koreshan Science, than through the printed page. Every Koreshan statement read by minds who have never before heard of the system, leaves its impression; hundreds of thousands of people would gladly investigate this marvelous science if they only knew of its existence.

We are advertising extensively, and are doing our utmost to promulgate the truth from the office of THE FLAMING SWORD; but there is nothing like personally calling attention of friends and neighbors to our publications. You can find a number of investigators in your own vicinity; perhaps you stand alone in the truth where you are, because others—desiring the truth—have not known of the existence of the truth which you found in the pages of Koreshan literature. We desire your hearty co-operation in the promulgation of Koreshan Universology—in the work of illuminating the world with the great Scientific System of the ages.

Idyl on Modern Schools.

Human Machines Fed on Text-books of Effete Thought and Knowledge.

Ram it in, cram it in,
Children's heads are hollow;
Slam it in, jam it in,
Still there's more to follow—
Hygiene and history,
Astronomic mystery,
Algebra, histology,
Latin, etymology,
Botany, geometry,
Greek and trigonometry—
Ram it in, cram it in,
Children's heads are hollow.

Rap it in, tap it in,
What are teachers paid for?
Bang it in, slam it in,
What are children made for?
Ancient archaeology,
Aryan philology,
Prosody, zoology,
Physics, clinicology,
Calculus and mathematics,
Rhetoric and hydrostatics,
Hoax it in, coax it in,
Children's heads are hollow.

Rub it in, club it in,
All there is of learning;
Punch it in, crunch it in,
Quench their childish yearning
For the field and grassy nook,
Meadow green and rippling brook;
Drive such wicked thoughts afar;
Teach the children that they are
But machines to cram it in,
Bang it in, slam it in—
That their heads are hollow.

Scold it in, mold it in,
All that they can swallow;
Fold it in, hold it in,
Still there's more to follow.
Faces pinched, sad and pale,
Tell the same undying tale—
Tell of moments robbed from sleep
Meals untasted, studies deep.
Those who've passed the furnace through
With aching brow, will tell to you
How the teacher crammed it in,
Rammed it in, jammed it in,
Crunched it in, punched it in,
Rubbed it in, clubbed it in,
Pressed it in, caressed it in,
Rapped it in, and slapped it in,
When their heads were hollow.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.

It is easier to form true impressions from photographs than from written descriptions. The greatest feature for which Leslie's Weekly is admired, is the placing before its readers the records of events by means of the camera rather than by the ordinary newspaper methods of elaborate and often untruthful articles. The current number includes a page of the frightful flood in southern Texas; a page of the war with the Filipinos; a page of the Christian Endeavor gathering at Detroit. Also a double page view of curious crowds in Havana. Other illustrations show Havana's first celebration of the 4th of July; the greatest bonfire of the 4th, a stupendous iceberg, also the yachts Columbia and Defender in the race at New York. The descriptive articles in reference to the illustrations, letters from the Philip-pines, the editorial and special depart-ments, are all of the usual high standard of Leslie's Weekly.

Success.

An illustrated, 16-page weekly magazine of self-help. It shows how the prominent men of today have risen from poverty through adversities, to success. The struggles of Lincoln, Garfield, and Grant are found to have been encountered by hundreds of others who have risen from obscurity to positions of honor. The issue before us (July 15) reveals the fact that Hill, Childs, Edison, Whitelaw Reid, and others, once sold newspapers for a living. Success is full of encouragement; it cultivates self-respect, and puts the mind in touch with the lives of the great-est men of America. 5 cents per copy; $1.50 a year. Cooper Union, New York City.

The Psychic Digest and
Occult Review of Reviews.
Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contempora-neous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Lit-erature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no at-tempt on the part of the editor to mould his judg-ment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better sat-isfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

THE INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA.

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 680, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The I. C. U., a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical ap-plication of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the di-rection of human and economic liberation.

The I. C. U. is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchan-dise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Con-sumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least ex-penditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation. In the I. C. U. labor is capital.

Call for More Co-Operators.

The I. C. U. is now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and is in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

The College of Psychical Sciences and Unfoldment.

This school, the only one of its kind in the world, is conducted by J. C. F. GRUMBINE, the author and lecturer. It is open to students each month. The studies are eclectic, although a regular and uniform curriculum is established and operative. It is de-voted exclusively to the System of Philosophy con-cerning Divinity, and is connected with the Order of the White Rose, branch of the Rosicrucians. The secrets and mysteries of Magic and Occultism are revealed. The mystic and potential powers of Di-vinity, such as Clairvoyance, Psychometry, Inspira-tion, Psychopathy, Ontology, Hypnotism, Telepathy, and Illumination are taught.

Special teachings are arranged for out-of-town students and belong to the college extension de-partment. Development is thus ensured in the student's home for a nominal sum.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

* SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO. *

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 20 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 20 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 20 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 20 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 20 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined. Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

Nearing the World's Great Crisis.

The Cry of Peace in the Face of World-Wide Social, Economic, and Political Disturbances; the Dawn of Peace Comes After a Violent Revolution.

THE GREAT powers of the world have met under the universal cry of peace. The optimists are gratified to know that an arbitration tribunal has been established, and the way provided for the submission of international differences to this court of judges. The United States, the foremost nation in the world to urge the principle of arbitration, has succeeded in forcing the peace commission to adopt a clause which confirms the statement made in THE SWORD many weeks ago, that whatsoever was accomplished by the commission, there would be left a loophole for an escape from arbitration when any nation desired to refuse submission to the enforcement of this method of settling international difficulties. We do not hesitate to reiterate—not from the pessimistic point of view—that, while the world is crying peace, and the great powers have arranged for a tribunal of settlement on the basis of arbitration, we are nearer the crisis of revolution than before.

The spirit actuating the heart of the great nations of the world is purely mercenary. If the optimist requires more evidence of the depravity of the human heart than obtains in the ordinary observation of events, let him take a view of present conditions at Cleveland, Ohio, where that phase of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, manifest in the members of the labor unions, is smashing the brains of that other phase of the brotherhood of man represented by the non-unionist. This is not a conflict of the common laborer against the corporation which steals his heart's blood, but the common laborer against the common laborer. Behold a government founded upon the principle of civil liberty, private and corporate, calling out thousands of its militia to quell the mob of union men banded together for the purpose of depriving other men of the exercise of the right guaranteed by the Constitution of all the states! Does it look as if the olive branch is a fitting symbol of the mercenary status of commercial and productive activity?

Not far distant, that condition of the world will obtain for which we have been taught to pray: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." None long for the blissful hour more than those thoroughly grounded in Koreshanity, and in the principles of truth, good, justice, and love it advocates; but while we await patiently the time for the ripening of the fruit of the dispensation, we are not blinded—through our optimism—to the fact that preceding the harvest time there is coming a violent revolution, in which the old church and state must pass into the night of oblivion. Let not the world be deceived by the cry of peace when there is no peace. There is no peace while the heart is moved by the principles of human greed. All of the productive, mercantile, and commercial interests of the world are the actuations of consummate voracity. The world is neither Christian nor civilized. War is in the heart, which is obdurate; and the nations—like corporations—are soulless. We would not make war, nor would we advocate nor encourage it; but we stand upon the tower of observation and predict the struggle through which the world is about to pass.

Ingersoll Enters the Spiritual World.

THE GREAT agnostic has departed this mundane existence. Some think that he has solved the problem regarding which he has been in doubt, and that the solution is not as satisfactory as he could wish. According to some phases of orthodox Christianity, while his body passes through the process of incineration, his soul is just initiated into the eternal tortures to which the dire vengeance of a just God commits him, for questioning the accuracy of the opinions of the modern divines.

It is a little curious to note the diversity of opinion among the various clergy of the multitude of denominations calling themselves Christian, regarding the future of the renowned know-nothing (the common substitution for the more classical term agnostic). The spirit of Robert G. Ingersoll has gone into the spiritual domain of his own class of spirits. He is just as much in hell as he was in this world—no more so. He is just as big a fool there as here; just as much a materialist now as before his departure, and he does not even know that he is in a spiritual world. His mental consciousness is as obtuse as ever, and he indulges in the flourish of rhetoric, to the exclusion of the things pertaining to positive knowledge, as freely as when in the material form. He prides himself in being classed with those who say, "I don't know," while at the same time he presumes to be an authentic teacher.

The spiritual and material worlds are so reciprocally related, that each is the reflection of the other. The human mind occupying the external consciousness, if materialistic, is so because of its reaction with the internal or spiritual mind, which, being materialistic, impels the external in the direction of its own desires and tendencies. It would be impossible for a class of minds to exist, spiritualistic in conviction, without the correlate existence of the co-ordinate class of minds, which is materialistic. We have a class of mentality proclaiming, "all is spirit;" and, co-ordinately with this phase of mental development, another class proclaiming, "all is matter." Neither could obtain without the other; each declares a part of the truth. The materialist is inclined to be agnostic, and pretends to confess that he does not know, and is positive he does not know whether he does or does not know, while they who declare "all is spirit," are as positive in their declaration that there is no matter; and they know as positively as the others do not know. They both constitute the debris of the reactions obtaining between the union of material and spiritual life.

Fallacious Systems of Modern Education.

WE OBJECT to false systems of education, whether compulsory or otherwise. Men should be useful members of society, not ornaments merely. At the age of seven, a normally developed brain and physique should be capable of self-support, upon the basis of a properly constructed social organism, while at the same time the mind is being stored with all necessary and useful knowledge. Industrial methods should be so conducted, that from two to four hours of manual exercise in the performance of useful pursuits—according to the age of the child—would constitute so many hours of recreation, in which there would be as much real joy as in any form of sport.

In the ordinary school system, pupils and students spend the best years of their lives in cramming the mind with fallacious rubbish, which in after years has to be unlearned. In fact, our common school methods involve the stuffing of the mind with the conclusions of other people, while genuine mental culture should consist chiefly in training the mind to think for itself, that it may go out on its own exploitation from established facts. Much of the education of the day is comprised of theories predicated upon uncertain premises; and especially does the "higher education" consist of fine spun hypotheses which have no foundation in fact.

We contend that if the mind is trained to think, and scope is given it, untrammelled by the sophistical and questionable scientific conclusions of other people, it will make discoveries, ascertain facts, and progress in knowledge at a greatly accelerated ratio; and that the time has come when the world does not require to be retarded in its progress by the restraints of conservatism in scholastic methods. The present school system is radically wrong. The world does not need improvements in scholastic methods; it demands a sweeping revolution—and that without delay.

If it is settled in the mind of the searcher after truth, that the personal spirit of truth must be the precursor of the kingdom to come upon the earth, it is important that we look a little into the kind and character of the credentials essential to be borne by this Messenger of the New Covenant.

The Lesson of the Panic.

L. E. BORDEN.

"ARE WE 'most there, mamma?"

"Yes, darling;" and for the twentieth time the mother smoothed the bright locks of the restless child. "Doesn't Harry want to look out of the window and see the prairie dogs standing on their little houses?" she asked, rousing herself to talk cheerfully.

"No, no, want to see papa," was the impatient answer, and the little fellow escaped from her once more, to run up the long car, swinging himself on the arm of every seat.

The last hour of a two days' trip over the great plains seemed interminable, but it passed at last, and the train pulled into the station. Rodney Eliot was waiting to greet his wife and child; he was greatly agitated, and when he kissed the little boy who shouted gleefully, "Here's papa!" he broke down completely and sobbed aloud.

Constance Eliot took her husband's arm and hurried him into a quiet corner of the waiting room. "Thank God, you've come, Conney," he said brokenly, "but I don't know what we're going to do. This town's gone all to pieces, and everybody's dead broke."

He looked very poor and shabby, though his frayed linen was immaculately clean in honor of his wife's arrival. The shock of his appearance and his utter prostration almost unnerved her, but she rallied all her strength to say brightly, "Oh! we're sure to get on some way, dear, I know we shall. I wanted to come before, but they would not let me. Father and mother set their hearts on having us stay all winter, but I told them I was coming back to my husband, money or no money."

"I haven't got a cent, Con."

She opened her purse and took out ten dollars. "There, I've got that left from the journey. Father said I had a good home with him, and he'd provide everything for baby and me if we'd only stay; but if I wanted to take the chances of starving out West, he couldn't do any more for me."

Rodney gave a groan. "I had to send for you. I couldn't stand it alone," he urged piteously.

The air was thick with snow, and Constance shivered as they went out to take the street car for home. When she turned her eyes westward, she saw that a gray pall hid the beautiful mountains. It was November, a month when the traveler fresh from the mists of the Atlantic coast, can hope with confidence to find a royal welcome from blue skies and glorious sunshine in Colorado. "Even the climate's changing," she thought bitterly.

The Eliots owned a pretty cottage in a good location; it was one of the earlier dwellings of the new city that had blossomed like a cactus flower on the bosom of the desert. Everything about the place was simple, but Constance's piano, her books, and a few choice pictures lent an air of refinement to the tiny rooms. Today, there was no fire in the grate. "Coal's out," said Rodney significantly. Constance found half a loaf of dry bread in the pantry, no meat, flour, or provisions of any kind to refresh the weary wife after her long journey.

While Rodney went to buy coal and food with the precious ten dollar bill, there came a ring at the door, and Mrs. Prentice, who lived in the smart stone mansion on the corner, came bustling in, bareheaded and very much out of breath. Her fresh face looked flushed and heated; there were diamonds in her ears, but her dress, once a handsome silk, was bespattered with grease. She greeted Constance volubly.

"Well, Mrs. Eliot, you had good courage to come back to this god-forsaken country. I hope you brought plenty of money with you, there isn't any here. Every bank in town is closed, and the men are all going crazy. Lawyer Grimes shot himself yesterday. His wife and daughters are in Europe. I'm doing my own work,"—with an apologetic glance at her dress,—"I hadn't a nickel to get so much as a calico wrapper to cook in, so I put on what I had. Mr. Prentice was taking out five hundred dollars a month from the Prairie Girl when the crash came, and all the mines shut down. I'm supporting the family now by selling home-made bread. Why, the richest families in town have discharged their servants, and lots of 'em are taking in boarders."

Constance found it hard to realize the changed conditions in a city that she had left six months previous, seemingly bright with prosperity. When she went East, Mrs. Prentice had called to bid her good-bye, wearing that very silk, fresh from the dressmaker's hands, and Constance had half envied her handsome equipage and liveried coachman.

"Has the fall in silver done all this?" She queried in bewilderment.

"That started it," answered her neighbor, "but you know folks out here have been doing business on credit so long and on such a big scale, they couldn't stand it. One firm is built up on another, too, and they're like a lot of card houses—you knock out one card and all the rest come tumbling down. Well, I just looked in to say 'howdy,' and ask you to come home with me and get some hot tea and a biscuit—that's all we have for supper now."

But Constance was too sick at heart to think of eating; the dull misery in her husband's face haunted her, and she waited eagerly for his return, while Mrs. Prentice carried off little Harry to receive a noisy welcome from her five boys.

That night Rodney Eliot woke in a high fever, and before morning he was too delirious to know his wife's face. The thought of her return had buoyed him up through the awful strain of the panic, when a cloud of doom seemed to lower over the city, and insanity was in the air. He had never been very fortunate in the wild speculations that absorbed the town, so it was all the harder to see his modest winnings swept away.

Now that Constance had come, he gave up the struggle and lay down to die. Other men, stronger in body and wiser in scheming than he, dropped dead in the streets. How could he stand when they fell?

It was all over in a few days, and Constance was left, half stunned by the sudden blow. Not even the home-nest was hers, for she discovered that Rodney had mortgaged it in a vain attempt to save himself from ruin. So far as she could feel at all in the first numbness of awful grief, her whole soul went out in wild revolt against a financial system of legalized gambling and cutthroat competition that could plunge the country into periodical chaos at such a sacrifice of tears and blood. Was this civilization? Was it Christianity?

"I must go to see Emily Carter," she said to herself, one day. "I shall go mad if I go on thinking—thinking. Emily always has something new and interesting to talk about, and it will amuse me to hear her go on."

"I can't bear sympathy, Emily," Constance entreated upon reaching her friend's home, "I know everything you would say. Just tell me what you have been doing all these months, and what you are interested in now."

Emily Carter was a woman who dwelt naturally in the unseen universe; of the visible world she had a very poor opinion, so she was persistently looking for a better. Constance had rather unreflectingly fallen into the habit of agreeing that the condition of affairs here was hopeless, and the only chance for wrongs to be righted lay beyond the grave. It was, therefore, with something of a shock of surprise, that she heard her friend answer gravely:

"To tell the truth, Con, I've been thinking very much about a system of Equitable Commerce."

"Why, Emily, what chimera has your imagination conjured up now? Equity or justice is only a myth of the Golden Age."

"The Golden Age was no myth. It was a time of equitable provision for all, when every man reaped the just reward of his labors. The Golden Age really existed, and it is coming again."

Constance laughed scornfully. "Indeed!" she cried ironically; "perhaps you discern favorable symptoms in our present high state of prosperity and felicity."

"Yes, of course. These upheavals in the business world are the necessary precursors. They indicate a complete breaking up of our corrupt commercial system. It has claimed too many victims like your husband. People can't stand it much longer, and they are going to rise in their might and slay the monster. They may talk about silver all they please, and say that if Bryan can be elected, good times will follow. That would only make things easier for a little while in this section; it would not settle the dispute between labor and capital; it would not do away with money, which is the root of all evil,—whether it's silver or gold,—and give us a righteous system of co-operation, with labor as the unit of exchange. I tell you, Constance, the lesson of this panic is written in letters of fire. It calls men to thought and to action. We must have better conditions."

"I know that, Emily, and I have thought of these things till my brain reels and my heart fails me, but I can see no possible avenue for social regeneration. Our best financiers and our statesmen are all at sea. It is just a hopeless muddle."

"Man's extremity is God's opportunity," quoted her friend sententiously.

Constance shuddered. "Don't speak to me about God," she cried; "I used to believe in a God of love, but do you know, Emily," and her voice sank to a whisper, "since Rodney died, it seems to me that if God had a human heart, he would set things right here."

"So he will when the right time comes; and God himself has no power to do it sooner."

"You are so oracular, Em. I suppose the spirits have been giving you some new revelations!"

"On the contrary, I have come to see that 'the spirits' never reveal anything above the level of the best thought in the natural world. Spiritualism has never solved any of our problems. What has it told us of the nature of God, of Jesus Christ, of the source of the sun's heat, or the location of the spiritual world?"

"Why, that's just what I always told you!" cried Constance, triumphantly. "But you wouldn't believe it. I've dipped into most religions and philosophies, and I see that those problems never have been solved and never can be solved. Nine tenths of the people in the world never think at all; they are satisfied to take their opinions, cut and dried, from the other tenth. As for this thinking tenth,—the philosophers and a few scientists,—they are like blind moles burrowing in the ground; each knocks his head against a stone and offers a different hypothesis to explain the phenomenon; or forsooth, one of them discovers an earthworm and straightway proclaims a new theory of the universe. They are all working in the dark."

"Granted, my dear, for this is a dark age; but the dawn is breaking, the light of the world shines out. You are wrong in saying those problems never can be solved. Desire for truth is an earnest of its coming."

"Not at all. You might just as well say the universal desire for happiness is an earnest of its fulfilment."

"It is indeed; we shall all reach that goal some day—before long I hope. Shall I tell you what is the real source of the sun's heat? You are always harping on that."

Constance stared at her friend in surprise. "Now Emily," she retorted, "You might just as well confess what you have taken up lately, for I am determined to know."

Emily hesitated. "I'm afraid you'll only sneer at it as one of my fads," she said doubtfully.

The tears started to Constance's eyes. "If I know my own heart," she cried with emotion, "I believe that I am willing to accept the truth—God's truth, from any source."

"Then read this;" and Emily handed her a little pamphlet entitled KORESHIAN SCIENCE. As a result of the new line of thought opened to her that day, another year found Constance in Chicago, devoted heart and soul to the principles of united life, and the platform of righteousness that aims to establish social equity, to promote love to the neighbor, and, by the force of strong desire, to bring God's life to man in earth.

Enemies of American Progress and Liberty.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

The American Aristocrats.

AMERICAN tax-dodgers are reminded by a New York daily, not so much of the inherent wickedness and injustice of their cause, as of its folly and danger. Their position is identical with that of the French nobles before the French Revolution. The government in need, appealed to them for aid, but they refused "all taxation, relying upon their alleged 'privileges.' Four years later, the skins of these rich men were tanned into leather at Mendon to make gloves for the 'patriots.'" The present unjust and unreasonable course of American aristocracy will, in the near future, be beset with similar perils. If we look into the merits of this case beyond the matter of taxation, which the modern press for some reason fails to do, we shall find that their tax dodging, unjust and contemptible though it be, is among their saintly deeds, when compared with others by which they amass their millions.

Among these unrighteous practices, that have now become common and respectable, are stock-watering, usury, adulteration of everything we eat, drink, and wear, and to which is now added monopoly of everything that promises to bring money to the operators. Highway robbery of the old kind is just now under the ban, but it is the soul of honor compared with the legal indirection by which, under the protection of great lawyers, our rich men secure their fabulous millions and transform the masses into tramps and beggars. If men have had no scruples about the use of means to acquire property, why should they be more scrupulous about the means used to protect it after they have secured it?

Demosthenes said that traitors who betrayed their country knew that ruin would come as the result of such betrayal, but they always hoped that when other people's possessions were swept away, theirs would somehow be secure; but they found that they themselves were the first to suffer, and the tyrant in whose interest they had sold themselves and their country, knowing their baseness, would not trust them for anything in the future. So now, the men who sell virtue, honor, everything, for gold, will soon reach a time, not in some future, imaginary, spiritual world, but here in earth,—all the future world there is,—when their god of gold cannot save them, and there will be none so poor as to do them reverence.

Men Who Stand in the Way of Progress.

AN EASTERN editor advises the people not to depart from the religion of their fathers. To be logically consistent, the editor ought to take his stand against all progress, and advise his readers not to enter a railroad car or a steamship; to get their light, not from an incandescent electric light, but from a tallow dip; to strike a light, not from a modern match, but from the flint of scarcely more than a generation ago; to get their news, not from the newspaper, but from the town and neighborhood gossip. Whether conscious or unconscious, such advice is of the essence of infidelity, and shows plainly that the giver does not believe there is any truth,—for if there is no religious truth, then there is no truth at all. It shows plainly that he is, whether he knows it or not, on the side of the oppressor, where there is power, and he is bent on perpetuating that ruinous power.

The man that thinks is a dangerous creature, dangerous to tyrants—both ecclesiastical and civil; and the man who really thinks, begins at the foundation of things, which is always the religion that underlies them. If that is error, then everything of the superstructure, whether religious or political, is erroneous and oppressive. If the people can be prevailed upon not to think and not to put their new thoughts into acts, then every wrong and vile thing will remain secure. When Jesus came, the Jews followed the advice of just such leaders as these, with the result that their own church and state were speedily destroyed. It is the re-embodied devils that, with such fatal results, misled the Jews then, and are inspiring such advice now, to bring about similar destruction in the present. Offenses must needs come, but woe unto that man by whom they come.

Law is the promise of security to those who have learned obedience through suffering and have risen above it, and therefore operate it; but it is a menace or intimidation to such as have not yet arisen to obedience, thence to its control. It is in the provision of the divine economy, that man shall not possess supremacy over law until he has first come into obedience to it. The Lord Christ, "though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered," and arose into the control of law, thereby becoming its source or origin. This is the province of every son of God who, through the process of regeneration (re-production) from the Lord—the regenerator—shall reach the new birth; namely, the resurrection from the dead,—this new birth or resurrection being the final re-embodiment of the series, the full reincarnation.

All law has two relations; one is its supremacy or dominancy, the other is its obedience or subjectivity. The supreme relation is that of its control by those who stand above and beyond it. The second or inferior relation is that of being controlled by, or of being subject to, the law.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

COLONEL INGERSOLL, the great modern agnostic and church antagonist, has entered another world of human activity. It is declared in church circles that his day is past, and that his fame will soon disappear. From the standpoint of the clergyman his work is done, and the church is rejoicing in fancied security against his influence. During his natural existence the church was unable to meet his arguments, unable to withstand his scorching sarcasm and ridicule. He took for his foundation the speculations of modern science, and from the basis of universally accepted fallacies, he successfully assailed the superstitions of a vitiated theology. His work was disintegrative and destructive; he was an iconoclast, and built up nothing. Instead of giving the world the waters of truth, he baptized it with an acid which is destroying the fiber and fabric of Christendom. The work of Ingersoll is not finished, it has only begun. There is a significance in his entrance into the spiritual world, which the clergyman and the materialist will fail to comprehend. We are able to demonstrate from facts of history, the relation of Ingersoll to the stupendous revolution which must follow the completion of his career in the natural world. In the natural world, he appealed to the external mind through the usual methods of communication of the substances of thought; he is now on the interior of that part of humanity which he influenced, and the progress of the work of disintegration is accelerated in proportion to the multiplication of his facilities for reaching spheres of mentality. Religion is the strongest bond of humanity; a religious sentiment—whether true or false—is unitive. Religion is the foundation for the great superstructure of human society, and upon the character of the religion depends the character of the moral and social orders of a people. The work of Ingersoll has therefore affected the entire structure of civilization, and with the old religion will fall all that depends upon it. Modern civilization has produced three great enemies of the church: Voltaire, the deist; Paine, the atheist; and Ingersoll, the agnostic; they are three great revolutionary characters—factors of revolution. Just before the beginning of the Reign of Terror in France, Voltaire passed into the spiritual world; in one year from the time of his death the great Bastille of Paris was stormed and destroyed, and in four years the great "Festival of Reason" was held, and the faith of Voltaire was publicly declared to be the faith of France. The religious bond, though superstitious and tyrannical, was destroyed, and France was precipitated into a terrible vortex of revolution. Voltaire became a thousand-fold more active, and his energies a thousand-fold more potent on the interior of the French mentality than when he was in the natural. With religious chaos in France, came the great moral, social, and political chaos which did not end until the ascendancy of Napoleon, and the establishment of his imperial government. Thomas Paine was a factor in the American Revolution during his natural existence, and his services were acknowledged by Congress. Ingersoll leaves the stage of natural existence at a critical period of human history. He is to the western world what Voltaire was to France. The social, economic, and political conditions in America today are similar to those in France on the eve of the French Revolution. The impending revolution is more universal in its destructive sweep; it will be as much greater than the French Revolution as America is greater than France, and the influence of Ingersoll greater than that of Voltaire. The Reign of Terror, the reign of anarchy, resulting from the disintegrative elements now operative in both the natural and spiritual worlds, is just before us, and it will continue until the ascendancy of the new Napoleon and the establishment of his Imperial System, which will ultimately control and bless the entire world!

The Astronomical Society of the Pacific advises its members to take up the study and discussion of "hundreds of unsolved problems and mysteries of the celestial universe," and suggests what some of these problems are: "What is the Zodiacal light, the Gegenschein, the aurora borealis, the solar corona, and the substance of comets? Why do planets rotate on their axes? What is the law governing that rotation? Why are the orbits of planets inclined to the ecliptic, if the nebular hypothesis be sound? Why are the axes of the planets inclined to their orbits? Why do the different portions of the sun's and Jupiter's surfaces rotate in different times? Why are there periods of maximum and minimum sun spots?" If the Copernican system were true, these problems would have been solved from that standpoint long ago; but the questions still puzzle alike, the amateur and the professional astronomer. It is admitted that there are "hundreds of unsolved problems and mysteries" not explained upon the basis of the accepted system; and this admission is sufficient to condemn the entire system as valueless in solving the greater problems of cosmogony and human life. The true cosmogony is a revelation of the mysteries of the universe, the science of its creation, the laws of its perpetuity, the purpose of its existence, and its organic form and all its functions. The modern astronomer is entirely at sea—he is in a great ocean of ignorance concerning the form, functions, and laws of the great organic structure in which we live; and the system upon which he depends will soon be shattered and destroyed upon the rocks of the coming scientific revolution.

The clergymen and the public press are discussing the question as to where Ingersoll has gone. Some of the more liberal churchmen consider that if Ingersoll was honest in his contentions, he will get into heaven all right; while others claim that there is no hope for him. The people generally consider him a little too good to go to the orthodox hell, but not quite good enough to get into heaven! The noted agnostic has gone into those spheres of the spiritual world of humanity which correspond to the mental and social spheres in which he exerted influence while in the natural. He has reached a condition which is no better and no worse than the condition in which he existed in the visible world. He has not gone into the divine heavens, but into the heavens of the mortal world—the heavens which have been transformed into hells through the retrogressions of humanity. He was in hell in the natural world and did not know it; and of course he does not know that he is in a corresponding condition in the world of mental activities. But there is hope for him; there is hope for every man. The entire world is in hell, and at the end of every dispensation the doors are opened sufficiently wide to permit as many to get out of hell as desire to get out; and the time will come, in the history of the world, when the departed agnostic will recognize the truth and avail himself of the opportunity to escape. People get into hell through the processes of human declension; it is a state of mortality; and the only way to get out of it is to conform to the laws of life, and get out of the mortal world alive!

A western editress thinks she will smother to death inside the cellular universe, 8,000 miles in diameter. Perhaps she has not considered that there is room in the great hollow for about eight sextillions of human beings, and that one person is a mere atom compared with the great whole or hollow. The earth contains about 270 billions of cubic miles, or about 40 sextillions of cubic feet of atmospheres, all of which contribute to the life of humanity. Let us for a moment compare the volume of the available contents inside the cellular universe, with the bulk of atmosphere claimed to exist on the outside of the convex earth. It is supposed that the atmosphere extends to an altitude of about 50 miles above the earth. On a globe two feet in diameter, the depth of such an atmosphere—on a corresponding scale—would be but .15 of an inch in thickness, compared with the contents of the globe itself. So in reality there would be but about 10 billions of cubic miles on the outside, compared with 270 billions of cubic miles of atmospheres existing on the inside. In the cellular universe, the atmosphere in which we live—our common air—is about 1000 miles in depth, containing 113,000,000,000 cubic miles, making 103,000,000,000 cubic miles more air inside than is claimed to exist on the outside!

Bishop Potter makes the statement that "the time has come when the church and its teachings must vindicate themselves by something more than speech hardened by dogmatic terms." The church contains no more of forces of self-vindication than it expresses,—no more than it has expressed in the world during the present century. The fallen church and its vitiated doctrines have failed to meet the demands of a scientific age, because they do not possess the elements of true science, and hence, they can never appeal to the rational faculties of the thinking mind. The only thing that will satisfy the world is a system of religion-science that involves in itself the elements of all truth. The old church must pass away, even as it was prophesied at the beginning of the age; and all the corresponding conditions in humanity,—all corruptions and evils, must pass into oblivion. Every new era in the history of the world has begun with a new system, with a new Man; and it is reasonable, at first glance of even an unthinking mind, that the Golden Age, the greatest age of all cycles, must be introduced by a system of mental activity, by a system of human relations stupendous enough in its sweep of progress to rapidly destroy all old things, and to make all things new!

Christians who look for a literal burning up of the physical world, can find no place nor utilization in the field of human economy for the rapid progress of the world during the present century. The great inventions, though now used to enslave the masses, bespeak the opening of a new and grand era of human progress and enlightenment. It is supposed that all these fruits of progress of dispensations will be swept away by the ravages of the flames of a stupendous cosmic conflagration, so that a new world may begin as barren as the desert! The Golden Age will come through the processes of transformation of human society, and humanity will be made happy and the earth beautiful through the operation of the forces that are now involved in the human race. The physical world and humanity have existed from all eternity, and will continue to exist throughout all ages to come. The world was destroyed by the flood; but the same earth and humanity exist today. The coming conflagration is a burning in the human world; and it will come at a time when Christendom is too degenerate to recognize its meaning and importance.

"Let the voice of the people be heard." What is the voice of the people? To what else have we been listening for centuries, if not to the discordant voices of thousands of different factions and leaders? There is no unity in the voices, wants, and desires of the masses. It would be tiresome indeed, to listen to all the vagaries promulgated by the people. There is but one way in which the voice of humanity is sounded with the unique harmony of all truth; and that is through the invo-lution of humanity in a representative Man—the Voice of the people, with the science of all truth. Jesus was the Voice of the Jewish people—not as they existed when the Voice came to them, but he was the expression of their soul yearnings during an entire age. He was the focus of Jewish life, the great Word spoken from the book of his generation and involution. Let the Voice of the people be heard—not the jargon of the ignorant masses, but the Voice, the involved product of nineteen centuries' additional experience and progress in humanity—the Voice of the absolute truth!

Energies cannot be transmitted through media without metamorphosis; that is, the energies are transmuted in transmission, from one quality to another in the basic media through which they pass. This is one of the laws of propagation of the energies of light from the sun to the earth through the intervening atmospheres. The mental lumin, the substantial energies radiating in the form of truth and life from the great anthropotic Sun of nineteen hundred years ago, have been successively transmuted in the various planes or strata of humanity during the entire Christian dispensation, until they have gravitated to the extremity of their radiations, disintegrated, decomposed, and metamorphosed to their opposite qualities, conforming to the character of the base which contains them. The substances of the great truths of Jesus, through their descent in humanity, have become transformed to their antitheses, and are now expressed in the retrogressive world and the apostate church, as the absolute of fallacy.

A reverend gentleman tells the truth when he says that the devil and the politicians are running this country, and that under the republican form of government, as exemplified in the United States of America, the office-holder is the incarnation of his constituency. He desires to remedy the difficulty and reform the entire system; he announces himself decidedly "in favor of sending Jesus the Christ to our halls of legislation and the White House; to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, to the legislatures, to the municipal councils, the boards of aldermen; of electing him governor, mayor, state and county judge; attorney-general, state's attorney, and corporation lawyer; of making him sheriff, constable, chief of police, and police officers." Yes; by all means put the Christ in power, and transform the weak republic into a strong Theocracy; but before electing him to offices in the republican government, first find him, and get his consent to run for all these offices at once!

The logic of the united Christian party is this: The church represents the Almighty and his anointed; if the church as a body should elect representatives to the several officers of the United States government, the representatives would virtually be the incarnation of God Almighty, and run the government according to the divine will. They would be veritable vicars of the Christ in earth. The world had a fit of this kind of sentimentalism during the dark ages; and further down in history, in Puritanism; and the government of the United States was established in repudiation of such a scheme. A corrupt church is the devil's power, and if united with the state, it would reproduce the despotism of the past. The unity of the true church and state with a tangible, divine Imperial head, is the only system that will govern humanity in equity and righteousness.

A German scientist has been whiling away his time in making estimates and calculations concerning the relative amounts of the various materials of which the human body is composed, and he reaches the conclusion that there are contained in 1,200 hens' eggs all the ingredients necessary to make a man weighing 150 pounds. Reduced to a fluid, the average man would yield 98 cubic meters of illuminating gas, and hydrogen enough to fill a balloon capable of lifting 155 pounds. According to the calculations, the normal man contains enough iron to make seven large nails, fat for fourteen pounds of candles, carbon for 65 gross of crayons, and phosphorus to make 820,000 matches. Besides all these things, out of the man there could be obtained 20 teaspoonfuls of salt, 50 lumps of sugar, and about 10 gallons of water.

The church has a great deal to say about getting ready for the Lord's coming. When the Almighty gets ready to come, he comes regardless of the church. Nineteen hundred years ago he came when the church was not ready for him; and the apostate church at the end of this dispensation is no more ready for the coming of the Majesty of the heavens, than the church which rejected him at the beginning of the age. If the Almighty waited until the church was ready for him he would never come!

Folly is soon learned; that is the reason the world takes up with fads so quickly. With Koreshanity it is different; the people are continually complaining that Koreshan Science is too profound for comprehension. It requires a long time to measure the contents of the universe in small vessels!

Only the Christ is able to live a consistent Christ life. The modern so called claimants to possession of divine holiness and "Christian perfection," are merely crude imitations of the Messiah; they belong to the army of false christs.

Order is the sanity of the mind, the health of the body, the peace of the city, and the security of the state. The disorder of modern civilization is universal insanity, disease, and moral, social, and political corruption.

No man can truly worship God without worshiping his humanity; for the love of the neighbor is linked with the love of God in the great law of life.

The man who brings nothing into this world and takes nothing out of it, must be placed at zero in the thermometer of human progress.

The greatest failure is in attempting to succeed without opposition; to win without a battle; to overcome without removing obstacles.

The true solution of a problem consists in putting it into the crucible of reason and subjecting it to processes of last analyses.

The Impossibility of Other Worlds Outside of the Earth.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I desire to ask a few questions regarding some conclusions in CELLULAR COSMOGONY. It is said that there is nothing outside of the earth's shell. (1) Now, how does any one know that, even if we accept the cellular hypothesis? If we are on the inside of the earth, it appears to me that we would have no way of learning whether or not there are other spheres like our own, and independent of this earth. (2) Then again, it is stated that the earth's crust or shell is about 100 miles in thickness. How do you know that? (3) How do you know that the material planets consist of mercury? Why not glass? (4) How do you know that above our atmosphere there is an atmosphere of hydrogen, and above that another kind of atmosphere called aboron? —Dr. W. F., Detroit, Mich.

(1) Koreshanity is a great system of conclusions, reached through processes of analogical, synthetical, and analytical reasoning. We reason from cause to effect and from effect to cause. The laws of comparative analogy are absolute, and when the premise is established, that the relations between the physical universe and man are specific—that man is the highest product of all universal activity, we are in position to compare the anatomy of the universe with the human anatomy, and reach conclusions that are not only rational, but absolute.

The very meaning of the word universe is proof that there is only one system of existence; the universe is a unity of all there is. There must be one supreme cause of all existence, and that supreme cause is the involution of all things, the impression of all activities and experiences in the one great environ. When that one cause has expressed itself completely and perfectly in the outermost form of expression, and we find that that outermost expression is not only perfect, but contains all of the functions of the cause, all of the functions of the perfect man, we have reached the limit of the expression of the one cause; hence there could be no more. We hold to the absolute unity of cause. One perfect cause could not express itself in two perfect universes; and a perfect universe could never divide itself, nor evolve into other forms. Hence there are no other universes evolved from this one, and this one could not evolve from any other.

Existence has form, and limitation is a factor of form; hence the universe is limited. If it is limited, then its space is limited; and if its space is limited, there is no universal space outside of the universe; and if there is no space outside of the shell in which we live, there is no room for other cells outside of this one, for the earth occupies all the space there is.

(2) The conclusion that the earth's shell is about 100 miles in thickness, is reached through analogical processes of reasoning and calculation from the basis of the specific gravity of the substances which compose the universe. We begin with the correspondence existing between the egg and the universe, because the universe is an egg. The thickness of the shell of a common hen's egg and the diameter of the egg, sustain about the same relation as the thickness of the earth's shell and the diameter of the earth. When we take the specific gravity of the substances which compose the universe, we have a premise that is indisputable; and when we ascertain the specific gravity and the depth of our atmosphere, and compare them with the specific gravity and depth of a stratum which all the water in the world would make, we are enabled to deduce a ratio as to the relative thickness of all other substances emplaced in the shell; the results of calculations premised on such ratio, give the thickness to be about 100 miles.

(3) Mercury is the only universal amalgamator. The material planets perform the function of assimilation of the gravic energies received by the metallic planes of the shell; they are in the great digestive tract or alimentary canal of the universe. The discs are forced along between the plates or laminae of the shell by contraction and expansion of the strata; hence, they have a vermicular motion similar to the movements in the alimentary canal of the human system. The planets are in the "bowels of the earth." You see, the planets perform other and absolutely necessary functions than those of mere reflectors of solar energies. Glass would be entirely out of the question; mercury alone would answer the purpose. Mt. Vesuvius is the principal outlet of the alimentary canal of the physical cosmos. Lava, the nature and origin of which have so long puzzled the "scientists," is the result of the burning of refuse amalgams in the vulcan fires which constitute the Gehenna of the physical universe.

(4) There are three mental atmospheres, the three heavens, in humanity—the external, the next inner, and the most interior; they constitute the external mind, the spiritual and celestial worlds. Correspondingly, there must be three atmospheres in the physical world, and beneath and outside of the atmospheres is the earth, as viewed by Swedenborg when in a state of illumination; he saw the cellular cosmos. We live in the outer atmosphere; we know what it is, and have ascertained its depth. We know also that there is no free hydrogen in the air, and also that water is the product of hydrogen, for hydrogen is the water producer, according to the meaning of the word. Hence there must be an atmosphere of hydrogen above our own, whence energies gravitate to produce clouds and rain. The nature of the most interior atmosphere is ascertained through analogical analysis of the qualities of life in the celestial atmosphere of humanity, and the translation of the terms over into the domain of the physical cosmos. The word aboron means "the waters beyond."

The Science of Aerial Navigation and Human Levitation.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—How can human levitation be accomplished? I shall be much obliged if you would say something on this interesting topic.—J. D. P., Kingston, Ont.

It is a fundamental doctrine in Koreshan Alchemy, that all energy is substance. Energy and matter are the two states of the substances of which the universe is composed. Energy is matter sublimated through processes of transmutation, and matter is the state of a substance which has assumed form through processes of materialization. In the physical universe, there are two terminal points of universal space—the center and circumference, which points generate opposite qualities of energy. The energies generated in the central sun are gravic,—cathodic, or descending energies; while the energies generated in the circumference or crust of the earth are levic,—anodic, or ascending energies. Through the transmission of these two general qualities of cosmic energies, the center and circumference of the universe are specifically and reciprocally related. The central sun is a great vortex, which is constantly receiving influxes of levic energies; and gravic energies, resulting from the partial materialization and transmutation of ascending energies, are emitted or radiated from the sun as rapidly as the energies of the opposite qualities enter the solar vortex.

When a ray of gravic energy reaches its terminal point of transmission, it materializes in its own material pediment. The various strata which comprise the shell of the earth or universe, are therefore emplaced according to the laws of specific gravity; hence, each material substance has a specific gravity or levity according as it is forced out of its static plane to points above or below its rest point, or plane of equilibrium. Any material substance heavier than the atmosphere gravitates toward its static plane or zero point of weight; and likewise, any material substance lighter than the atmosphere levitates toward its plane of rest, or the plane in which it would weigh nothing. Hence, we have the phenomena of some materials falling and others rising, when free to move in the direction in which the energies to which they are specifically related impel them.

As long as the energies of gravity are active upon a material substance above its static plane, it cannot rise until sufficient force is exerted upon it to overcome gravity. We may lift objects if we can overcome the descending energies which sustain a specific relation to the materials which comprise them. Hydrogen is lighter than the atmosphere, hence it rises by force of levic energies; and when a sufficient amount of hydrogen is confined in a balloon to lift a man, the man rises because the levity of the hydrogen has overcome the gravity in the man. But the energies of gravity are still active in the man, and the ropes which connect the man and the balloon are taut because of the action of the two forces in the man and the balloon. Wings of an air ship may be employed to beat the air, and thus for a time lift against the stream of gravity like the rowing of a boat against the rapids; but the method is essentially the same as that which employs hydrogen. This method of levitation—that of pulling against gravity—is the only one now known to the scientific world.

Successful aerial navigation will only be attained through the overcoming of gravity by another process, and that process must be the same as that which obtains in the visible stars. The gravic rays which pass through any material object must be destroyed before the material object can be made imponderable. The visible planets and stars are imponderable because they are nuclei of vortices, the energies in which disintegrate levogravic energies, hence they neither rise nor fall, but maintain their place in their respective orbits, age after age. It is not sufficient to imitate the shape of a bird in the construction of a flying machine; there must be employed in the apparatus the same process as that employed by the bird to disintegrate gravity; then it is only a question of propelling and steering the airship.

The energies of gravity may be destroyed in any material form, through the application of electro-magnetic energies which exceed gravity in rapidity of vibration. When the Koreshan principle of utilization of the energies generated in the positive elements of the battery is scientifically applied, gravity may be destroyed, and human beings and airships rendered imponderable, and human levitation accomplished as a startling fact! Jesus the Christ walked on the water nineteen hundred years ago, through the application of this same law; he accomplished this wonder through simple agitation of the spleen—through the generation of organo-vital, electro-magnetic energies which disintegrated gravity and temporarily neutralized the gravity of his body.

The immortality of man is to be attained through the conservation of life forces before they pass from the brain to the body.

There is but One System of the Absolute Truth.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I know nothing about Koreshan theology nor of KORESH, but certain it is that THE FLAMING SWORD is advocating many of my views; in fact, I have seen nothing in it that I have not advocated. However, we may not both be on the same line of thought in all things. I, as you, can say positively that when I speak I do not give the trumpet any uncertain sound. I never received this power from KORESH nor THE FLAMING SWORD. I know that I have all the truth that is at this time or age to be revealed, and will get all the yet covered light as it comes.—C. C. F., Editor Harvester, Texas.

There is a great deal of difference between holding some "views" about the Bible, and being specific concerning the universe and all it contains. Koreshan Universology is a complete system of the science of all truth concerning the natural and spiritual worlds; it is the revelation of all mystery, the solution of all problems. There cannot be two systems of the absolute truth; whichever of the two systems fails in the revelation of all the truth there is in the universe, is inferior, hence fallacious. The writer of the above admits that there is some light which he has not yet received; he therefore does not possess all the truth that has come at the end of this dispensation.

THE FLAMING SWORD is not advocating anybody's "views;" it is advocating Koreshan Science. We are certain that the Koreshan System did not find the origin of a single doctrine in the Harvester, for that paper has been published only three months, and the "revelations" it contains occurred in 1895, while Koreshanity was founded in 1870. On the basis of priority in point of time, priority in quality of mentality, its greater scope of application, and its greater penetration into the fundamentals of being and existence, and the relations of man and cosmos, we invite our friend to investigate Koreshan Universology, and thus obtain as much light from its source as he can comprehend. The Harvester is a small hand sickle, 6 pages, 5½ by 8 inches. THE FLAMING SWORD is an up-to-date reaper, and is cutting wide swaths in the harvest field of the dispensation.

A Montreal Daily Takes a Glance at Cellular Cosmogony, and Becomes Puzzled Over the Vocabulary of Koresh.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or The Earth a concave Sphere. By KORESH, and Prof. U. G. Morrow. (Guiding Star Publishing House, 1899.)

One of the authors of this strange book, who has either invented, or adopted from some source, the "nom de guerre" of

"Koresh," is, as we learn on page 158, Dr. Cyrus R. Teed of Chicago, "the originator of Koreshanity and Founder of the Unity." From his portrait, which faces the title page, we may say that he is a mild, intellectual looking man, about 60 years old, and from his work we discover that he is an uncompromising fighter and has been for nearly 30 years. His "bete noire" is Copernicus, whom he stigmatizes as a "mountebank," quoting the following sentence from Goethe against the Copernican system, but giving no reference to the treatise in which it may be found. "I curse this modern theory of cosmogony, and hope that perchance there may appear some scientist of genius who will pick up courage to upset this universally disseminated delirium of lunacy." Dr. Teed evidently considers himself the "scientist of genius" who is bound to tilt against the Copernican wired mill, and, in addition, informs us in his Introduction that "this volume, largely devoted to details of the execution of the practical demonstration—mechanically conducted—of the earth's concavity, is but preliminary to the most stupendous and comprehensive exposition ever projected and consummated by human intellect." As Celia says of Orlando, in "As You Like It," he speaks brave words," and tells us that "in 1870, the Author of the Koreshan System of Universology announced the discovery of the cosmogonic form, which he then declared to be cellular, the surface of the earth being concave, with a curvature of about 8 inches to the mile." "After 27 years," he continues, "having found our man, we urged the necessity for the application of a mechanical device by which a right-angle line could be drawn from a vertical point perpendicular to the surface of the earth." "Our man" was Professor U. G. Morrow, who "has the honor of the invention by which the mechanical proof of the concavity of the earth is so absolutely demonstrated as to preclude even a possibility of a doubt of its true contour, in the mind of any person, honest enough to examine without bias or prejudice the proofs offered." For these proofs, illustrated by diagrams, the volume must be studied, and the authors, to show that they are in earnest, "will guarantee and secure the payment of $100,000 to the Astronomer, Geodesist, Engineer, or Experimentalist, who will overthrow the premise of the Cellular Cosmogony and demonstrate, conclusively, by facts of observation and experiment, the Copernican system, with its assumptions of the convexity, rotation, and mobility of the earth." Here is a nice opening for some young man who is "a scientist of genius," and we trust that this generous offer of $100,000 will attract some syndicate to accept the challenge. Some of Dr. Teed's doctrines can hardly be entertained by sane beings of the ordinary type. One of the articles of his creed is, (as we are told on page 157) "that when man can comprehend what are the laws and principles of universal construction and perpetuity, he can adjust himself to universal being, and become immortal. Man is held to be mortal, and he will continue to be so until he has so applied and fulfilled immutable law as to overcome death, and perfect himself mentally, spiritually, and physically." These speculations are, in the words of Horace, "velut agri somnia," like the dreams of a sick man.

We know that Robert Louis Stevenson read George Meredith's "Egoist" at least three times, and then wrote to W. E. Henley: "When I shall have read it the sixth or seventh time, I begin to see I shall know about it." But, in most cases, we approve of the old saying, "Si non vis intelligi, debes negligi, i. e., if you don't want to be understood you must remain unread. Douglas Jerrold thought himself mad when, on recovering from an illness, he was reading Browning's "Sordello"—a poem which, from its confused and tortuous style of expression, is the most illegible production of any time or country. Here are a few lines:

"As that were easiest, half the globe dissolved.

So seemed Sordello's closing-truth evolved,
By his flash-halves break up—the sudden swell

Of his expanding soul showed Ill and Well,
Sorrow and Joy, Beauty and Ugliness,
Virtue and Vice, the Larger and the Less,
All equalities, in time, recorded here,
Might be but modes of Time in this one sphere,

Urgent on these, but not of force to bind
Eternity as Time,—as Matter—Mind,
If Mind, Eternity, should choose assert
Their attributes within a Life."

Of this we can only say: "This is very Midsummer Madness;" but in the following passage, "Koresh" runs Browning hard.

"The alchemico-organic cell is definitely structured. It is the egg from which the human macrocosm attains its incubation, hence when humanity reaches its organic shape it must assume the correspondential organism. Therefore, if we know universal form as it obtains in the alchemico-organic cosmos, we can render the language of this form into that of the legitimate structure of society; for one is the pattern of the other. Its functions and activities can also be readily translated into the language of societal functions and activities. Genuine societal fellowship will finally become a structured and composite unity, evolved through the application of intellectual energy and direction. It will become the anthropomorphic counterpart of the alchemico-organic world. A knowledge of the structure and function of the alchemico-organic cosmos constitutes the basis of a structured theology which is essential to the organic unity and perpetuity of the human race." In his first Essay Bacon wrote: "Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested." What are we to do with the "stupendous and comprehensive exposition" of Koresh?—Montreal (Can.) Morning Star.

A Tribute to Koresh.

An Investigator Expresses His Admiration for the Character and Work of the Founder of Koreshanism.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I am a member of the Society Arch-Triumphant of the Koreshan Unity, and am gradually coming into an understanding of the sublime truths which no man but KORESH has heretofore scientifically demonstrated. I have never seen him, but he writes as one having authority, and I long to see the day when he will honor us with his presence in Denver. Though many point with pride to the triumph of the intellect of this century in such men as Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, Kant, and Schopenhauer, their science does not show definite results, real truths, or knowledge.

None of our so called philosophers, nor the scientists in any domain of thought, have found a theory as a basis for agreement. Each has his theory as to the origin and development of ethics and morals. What they have vaguely assumed in ponderous essays and volumes, KORESH has made beautifully clear to me. With masterful eloquence and concise sentences, he has revealed the origin of life, and given us the law by which it is perpetuated. He is able to trace, by analogy, the ultimate result of every phenomenon in the universe; he has shown how the laws of perpetuity in the physical universe, correspond to and operate correspondingly in the human or anthropotic world.

Standing alone, with his illumined mind, he has been challenged, but cannot be refuted by the accredited professors of our great seats of learning. He is so profound, yet direct and forceful in his written word, that while I dimly understand, I stand in awe and admiration before his intellect, which revealed to us the true Cosmogony, with its wonderful laws and functions. As a student of economic problems for years, I soon perceived, on reading the doctrines of KORESH, that his idea of a consistent Christ-life, his social economy under a Theocracy such as will follow the approaching close of the age, and man's anatomical transformation, constitute the only true and possible solution of the problems that confront the world. With fraternal greeting,—O. L. F., Denver, Colo.

A Western Editor Feigns Smothering in Forty Sextillions of Cubic Feet of Atmospheres!

—"CELLULAR COSMOGONY," by KORESH, otherwise Dr. Teed, of Chicago, is well worth reading. Dr. Teed is the only and original discoverer of the fact—if it is a fact—that the earth is a hollow sphere and that we are on the inside of it with a mini-fied sun in the center of the hollow. I rather object to being put into such a box as that; and I am not reconciled in the least by Dr. Teed's assurance that the outer layer of the globe is solid gold. I am afraid to accept this theory, lest I find myself short of breath! Which reminds me of a story. A man who was afflicted with "smothering spells" went to visit at a friend's home. He and another friend were to occupy a room together. In the middle of the night our friend awoke with a very bad spell. He shook his friend violently and gasped out that he must have air or he would die. His friend in great alarm, made his way in the dark to the window and made every effort to open it, but without success. All this time the afflicted man was gasping and groaning in the last agonies of his spell. His friend tugged in vain at the window. "Oh," gasped the sick man, "air! air! If—you—can't—raise—it,—smash—the—glass!" His friend promptly put his fist through it. The poor man grew easier immediately, and in a few minutes was able to thank his friend for his efforts in his behalf. With plenty of air from the broken window he passed the remainder of the night comfortably. But when they arose next morning, it was discovered that the windows were unbroken and tightly closed. The friend had saved the sick man's life by smashing the glass in the front of a book-case!—The Nautilus, Portland, Ore.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The August number begins with a happy short sketch of the busy life of President McKinley, followed by Weddings in Art, with reproductions of a number of famous pictures which embody the idea of courtship and matrimony. Of interest also to artists is F. Hopkinson Smith as a Water Colorist. The August issue is a special Fiction number, and the best stories are: The Lid of the Chest, the Case of Mary Ellen, and Miss Angel; but the others are good. The serial, April Bloom, continues. A facsimile open letter appears at the close of the editorial matter, inviting suggestions concerning improvements in the magazine. It is hard for any one to be any one else; and when a magazine fills a niche of its own it will be most successful when it fills it perfectly. Frank Leslie's fills a place of its own in American literature, and fills it admirably.

Word and Works for August.

In the August issue the editor, the indomitable Rev. Hicks, the St. Louis weather prophet, scores a point concerning the accuracy of his meteorological predictions. He points to the great Texas flood as a remarkable fulfilment. The Hicks 112-page Almanac for 1899 was printed during the latter part of 1898, and his forecasts for July, the present month, contain the following: "At the same time, the regions adjacent to the sea coasts, especially the Gulf coast, will have their maximum of rainfall. * * Cloudbursts and similar phenomena will be frequent within a few hundred miles of the sea coasts." Those of our readers interested in weather predictions will desire Word and Works. $1.00 a year; 2201 Locust street, St. Louis, Mo.

Leslie's Weekly.

Current events of public interest are graphically pictured in the issue for August 3, notably the Brooklyn trolley strike, the returned volunteers from the Philippines, incidents in the Filipino campaign, the disastrous Texas flood, and scenes at recruiting stations in New York. A number of photographs are published of the masses of New York at Coney island, and a full page of photographs of Dewey's trip through the Suez canal. The main double-page picture, drawn by a noted war artist, represents Gen. Funston's famous volunteers in the Philippines. The letter-press is as bright as usual, including illustrated page of personals, editorials, and other matter.

What You Have Been Long Looking For!

"Mulum in Parvo."

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 680, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The I. C. U., a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

The I. C. U. is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation. In the I. C. U. labor is capital.

Call for More Co-Operators.

The I. C. U. is now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and is in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

The College of Psychical Sciences and Unfoldment.

This school, the only one of its kind in the world, is conducted by J. C. F. GRUMBINE, the author and lecturer. It is open to students each month. The studies are eclectic, although a regular and uniform curriculum is established and operative. It is devoted exclusively to the System of Philosophy concerning Divinity, and is connected with the Order of the White Rose, branch of the Rosicrucians. The secrets and mysteries of Magic and Occultism are revealed. The mystic and potential powers of Divinity, such as Clairvoyance, Psychometry, Inspiration, Psychopathy, Ontology, Hypnotism, Telepathy, and Illumination are taught.

Special teachings are arranged for out-of-town students and belong to the college extension department. Development is thus ensured in the student's home for a nominal sum.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural. In the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.80; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 10 cents.

The Great International Peace Trust.

The Forces of a False Commercialism Actuating the Nations in the Direction of a Peace Compact; the Heart of the Movement Throbs in the Great Money Centers of the World.

IF ONE desires a comprehensive conception of the character of the peace congress just now having finished its sitting at the Hague, it is only essential to enter into a superficial analysis of the operation of the forces behind, and actuating the conference. The representatives at the center where this gigantic farce has been enacted, are accredited from governments, each one of which distrusts the sincerity of the others,—a distrust arising legitimately from the basis of the system of the world's commerce, impelled by the competitive effort to dominate universal trade.

We herewith quote what is said to be the last will of Peter the Great.

The Famous Will of Peter the Great.

In the name of the Holy and Indivisible Trinity, we, Peter the First to all our descendants and successors to the throne and Government of the Russian nation:

Having by the great God of whom we received our existence, been also endowed with the gift of prescience, we view the Russians as called, in the course of future events, to the general dominion of Europe.

This opinion is founded on the fact, that the other European nations have reached a state of old age next to caducity, toward which they are journeying with giant strides; hence it follows, that they should easily and undoubtedly be conquered by a people young and new, when it shall have acquired its strength and vigor. We view the invasion of the East and West countries by the North as a periodical movement, decreed among the arcana of that Providence that regenerated the Roman people through the invasion of the barbarians.

The emigrations of the polar men are like the flood of the Nile which comes at certain periods to fertilize the exhausted lands of Egypt. We found Russia a rivulet, and leave it converted into a river; and my successors will find it a sea, destined to fertilize impoverished Europe, and its waves will break down all opposing dykes, if my descendants have but the wisdom to direct the current.

To this end I leave the following instructions, which are recommended to their attention and constant observance.

1. To have the Russian nation constantly at war, that the soldiery may be always disciplined and ready for action. Allow the nation no rest, but for the replenishing of the treasury, reorganizing the armies, and choosing the opportune moment for attack; making in this manner, peace serve war, and war serve peace, in the interests, aggrandizement, and prosperity of Russia.

2. To attract, by all possible means, the most efficient and celebrated military officers of Europe, during war, and the highly educated, scientific men of all countries, in time of peace, that the Russians may enjoy the advantages of other countries, without losing their own identity.

3. To take part, on all occasions, in the disputes and contentions among the states of Europe, especially those of Germany, in which, as the nearest, we are the most directly interested.

4. To subdue Poland; foment their continual rivalries and disturbances; gain their nobles by bribery; influence their diets, and by intrigue, take action in the election of their kings; form partisan cliques, and for their protection, send them Muscovite troops, to remain in the country until the moment of complete occupation. If the neighboring powers make opposition, quiet them at once by dismembering the country, and giving each a part.

5. To take what we can from Sweden, and make any attack by her, a pretense for subjugation. To effect this, separate her from Denmark, and likewise Denmark from Sweden, and foment with care, all animosity and rivalries between them.

6. To select wives for the Russian princes among the princesses of Germany, for the multiplying of family alliances will conciliate interests, and by them unite Germany to our cause, and increase our influence in that country.

7. To attend assiduously to forming an alliance with England, for our commerce; the assistance of that power we most need, for the building up of a maritime force, and she will be of the greatest service in supplying us with her gold, in exchange for our lumber and other productions. Continual intercourse with her merchants and sailors will accustom ours to navigation and commerce.

8. Extend ourselves unceasingly toward the North, the whole length of the Baltic, and likewise to the South by the Black Sea.

9. To take every possible means of gaining Constantinople and the Indies, (for he who rules there will be the true sovereign of the world); excite war continually in Turkey and Persia; establish fortresses in the Black Sea; get control of the sea by degrees, and also of the Baltic, which is a double point, necessary to the realization of our project; accelerate as much as possible, the decay of Persia; penetrate to the Persian Gulf—re-establish, if possible, by the way of Syria, the ancient commerce of the Levant; advance to the Indies, which are the great depot of the world. Once there we can do without the gold of England.

10. Obtain and carefully cultivate the alliance of Austria; support (apparently) her ideas of future dominion over Germany; excite animosities and rivalries among her princes—thus causing each party to claim the assistance of Russia, and exercise over this country a species of protection that will prepare for future dominion.

11. Interest the House of Austria in the expulsion of the Turks from Europe, and quiet their dissensions at the moment of the conquest of Constantinople, (having excited war among the old states of Europe), by giving to Austria a portion of the conquest, which afterwards will or can be reclaimed.

12. Unite within your borders, all the disunited or schismatic Greeks now scattered in Hungary and Poland, making ourselves their center, establishing beforehand an independent church by a species of autocracy and sacerdotal supremacy.

13. Sweden dismembered, Persia subdued, Poland subjected, and Turkey conquered, our armies united, and the Black and Baltic Seas guarded by our ships of war, it will be necessary to propose separately, and with the greatest secrecy, to the Court of Versailles, and afterwards to that of Vienna, to divide with them the empire of the universe.

If one of the two accept this offer, so flattering to their ambition and self-love, let her serve to annihilate the other, commencing a contest, the issue of which cannot be doubtful; and Russia may take possession of all the East and a great part of Europe.

If both nations should refuse the offer made by Russia, (which is not at all probable,) it will be necessary to excite quarrels among them, which will engage them in a war with each other. Then Russia, improving the decisive moment, advances her troops (assembled beforehand) on France and Germany at the same time. Two squadrons proceed—one by the Sea of Azof, and the other by the port of Archangel—filled with Asiatic hordes, under the convoy of our armed ships in the Black Sea and the Baltic. Advance by the Mediterranean and the ocean, inundate France on one side, while Germany is inundated on the other, and these two countries conquered, the rest of Europe will pass under the yoke without firing a gun. Thus may and should be effected the subjugation of Europe.

If this is not the written bequest of the great Russian monarch, it conforms marvelously well to the course of Muscovite and Slavic aggression under the head of the great representative of church and state union, as embodied in the Czar of Russia. The human mind is incapable of conceiving of a more degenerate and absolute imperialism than the one wielded by this potentate and viceregent of the Almighty. Preparations for commercial aggrandizement—through the reinforcement of naval and military expansion—progresses, while his imperial highness waves the olive branch and smokes the pipe of peace. Is the spirit of the dove actuating the heart of the great empire more now than when it interfered to deprive the government of Japan of the fruits of its victory over China, merely because the appropriations which Japan desired to make would conflict with the purposes of Russia in her great plans of universal conquest?

We would not, of course, depreciate the great influence toward peace, accomplished in that comprehensive clause which provides against the expansive bullet and the dropping of dynamite from balloons, which so materially adds, in case of war, to the destruction of human life. Just think of subjecting a great naval vessel like the Maine, to the double danger of an explosive both at the top and the bottom, of such a magazine of war! To be sure, the destruction of human life at most, in naval warfare is comparatively small; but a great warship costs millions of dollars, and a great commercial nation demanding a navy to sustain its commerce, can't afford to expose itself to the danger of being dynamited from a balloon. Then again, a ball which expands inside of a man does not make a hole all the way through him, and unless the hole is clean through, daylight is excluded, which renders the wound dangerous, you know! These are matters which should not be forgotten or overlooked in our estimate of the world's progress toward peace, as involved in the congress at the Hague.

The administrative forces of the foremost nations of the earth are controlled by commercial greed; the monetary centers combine in determining the course of legislation, and the commercial interests of the world are supposed to be imperiled through the tendency of nations to settle their disputes through the arbitrament of war. We have not analyzed this question of the principles actuating the peace conference, until having compared the influence of commercial greed with the wrath of men when the soul is stirred to retaliation through some overt act of aggression.

During the years of tribulation to which the people of Cuba were subject, under the oppressive heel of Spanish dominion and tyranny, the government of the United States offered no helping hand. The monetary power which controlled our legislation, persistently assumed the attitude, "Keep your hands off, lest you interfere with the interests and course of trade!" But when Spain exploded a mine under the pride of the American navy, and the Maine went to the bottom of the Havana harbor, the indignation of a people was aroused, and despite the influence of the monetary centers of the world, the nation was forced to war. It yielded to the urgency of the people, for what? To save the prestige of the party in power. Study the administration of the United States in its party affiliations, in connection with the influence of Mark Hanna in his relation to the monetary world, and ask yourselves if our relation to the peace conference is not strictly commercial.

Russia and the United States comprise the head (Rosh) and tail of the great monetary dragon; and the world may rest assured that some greater love, some deeper bond of fellowship and unity than the love of money, must agitate and sway the soul before the declaration of the angels is fulfilled, and "peace on earth, good will to men," is taken from the realm of idealism and planted and rooted in the actualities of realism. The nations of the world are trying to inaugurate a great international commercial trust, instigated by the greed for money; and so far, the effort toward the peace of the world has its mainspring and source of impulse exclusively in the great money centers. It is an illusory force, and though for a time it may deceive the nations, it cannot quell nor appease the voracity of the unregenerate human heart, the ferocity of which is only apparent when aroused by oppression, or the encroachments of some aggressive power.

The Koreshan System of Scientific Imperialism.

The Cellular System of the Universe Reveals the Science of Divine Being, the True Relation of God and Man, and the Laws of Social Science and Government.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE PHYSICAL universe has been demonstrated by KORESH to be a hollow sphere, inhabited by the heirs to its anthropostic throne of intellectual and affectional supremacy, who reach that throne by progressive development, in obedience to the laws of supreme being. All of the energies of the alchemico-organic life of the physical universe reach the throne of the alchemico-organic universe, the astral nucleus of the central sun, after passing through stratum after stratum of material substance, and star after star, representing varying grades of qualities and combinations of matter and energy, until they are refined and purified for focalization in the astral nucleus of alchemico-organic energies. Koreshanity teaches us that this alchemico-organic universe—which is visible to the natural eye, and in such relations to man that it may be thoroughly and scientifically investigated—is a perfect pattern of the final Imperio-Republico Regal social order which finally inherits and utilizes all the physical resources of the universe, according to an absolute science of divine economy.

Every man has his star in the physical heavens, which is the focalization of the ascending physical energies of his combination of physical elements in the universal economy. This star has a scientific emplacement in relation to time and space, and yields its energies (anodic and cathodic) to definite lines or media of transmission and transmutation, until they reach the central sun and the circumferential boundary in the degree and quality which will insure, by reflection and refocalization, the perpetuity in the eternity of mind and matter, the existence of each combination in its own legitimate medium of manifestation. Eternally, the spirit of each man goes upward, and the spirit of each beast goes downward; while in the domain of time, changes are perpetual; life and death,—broken continuity and continuous aggregation and disintegration, go on to insure the perpetuity of the perpetual, the good in the eyes of the Lord, in whom is no darkness at all, and who sees no injustice and no evil in the divine end, the destiny of all, which justifies the means.

In the realm of time is the meeting-place of God and man; and the Lord walks in the Garden in the cool of the day. The Morning Stars sing together because ripe for absorption into the Sun of the morning. When the sun appears, the stars are no longer seen, that the sun may be all in all to the earth to give it light and vitality. Yet the stars are all shining in the light of the sun, which is their ascended energy, their attainment, their lordship. When the intellectual Son of righteousness appears in the anthropostic heavens, the domain of intellectual and affectional energies, the human stars veil their faces with their confessions of ignorance and sin, and shine in him alone,—who is the focalization of their own ascended energy of aspiration for divine intelligence. By the light of his glory they may then behold the work of his hands, the cathodic energies which they have transmitted to work in the bowels of the anthropostic earth, causing it to bring forth every seed after its own kind, divine expression of every divine use, some to honor and some to dishonor, according to the quality and degree of energy reflexed by each in his own day and generation. Every man will, in his own order, serve his turn in the perpetual rotation of service, that in the fulness of time he may be absorbed into Deity as the Ancient of Days and the beginning of years, wise unto his own salvation and the salvation of the world, with the science of all law, to become imperial in power, royal in quality, embracing in his divine love the republication of his universe, in which—by the power of his divine wisdom—every demon may be transformed to an image and a likeness of his own Deity.

The divine Imperialism is represented in the divine social order by an aristocracy of moral and intellectual quality, united in the science and love of truth personified for dominion in the hearts and lives of all men. The science of truth—involving all sciences and all things in their precipitates—has its origin in its personification, its highest and most complex form of expression, in which it is subjected to all tests and overcomes all opposition. This personification is the stellar nucleus of all outshining in the anthropostic world of human mediums. The scientifically formate, divine Imperialism is the only legitimate, perfect ruling power. It is scientifically religious, and represents the unification of God with man. Its form of worship is the universal science of all the arts and sciences, represented in humanity for the highest form of social good. The motto of its social order is Ich diem—I serve. Its model is that man who girded himself to wash his disciples' feet; who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister; and who, because of humbling himself, will never lack for the most exalted honors.

It is more blessed to give than to receive. The servant's place then, is the place of privilege; yet all may have its exaltation, for without reciprocity of service, no equity could be established. The gracious gift demands always the reciprocal gift of a gracious reception, and its dedication to its divinest use. Every good and every perfect gift cometh from above; but that which is above ascended from that which is beneath, therefore the Lord himself condescends to men of low estate with humility, in gracious recognition of their holy aspirations, which perpetuate his being. The womb of mother Nature gives birth to the central imperial physical sun of the physical universe, the image and likeness of the universal Father-Motherhood—involving all. The church of Jehovah,—the Motherhood of Deity, produces the Son of Righteousness in the image and likeness of the Father-Mother Deity, and makes him the imperial center of the divine social order, whose unfoldment is a new creation of the family tree,—the Tree of Life,—which yields twelve manner of fruit.

When once the science of life and immortality is recognized by the great army of truth-seekers in whom was begotten, nineteen centuries ago, a living hope of immortality and eternal life, the mists, and fogs, and death-damp of the present social chaos will disappear before its solar radiance, and aspirations for divine Imperialism and the aristocracy of divine intellectual and moral qualities will awaken with renewed energies in the minds and hearts of men, causing them to purify themselves from the sinful lusts of the flesh, and from mortal pride and vainglory, that as servants of the Most High, who gives his life to the service of the lowliest, they may serve every man in his own order, performing uses to his neighbor in the name of the greatest Servant of all.

This King of kings and Lord of lords, enthroned in the hearts of men as the reward of his service to the lowliest, will accept graciously, every thank-offering human love can bring, and make of each a whole burnt-offering for the sins of the world, and from the cleansing fires of which will descend from above a new creation, the Father's house, that holy temple into which nothing enters that defileth. This temple of a renewed and transformed humanity will inhabit this earth, until for it time shall be no longer. Then shall the glory of the Queen of the night succeed the glorious day, and the stars shall shine forth, and divine mother Nature rest in the mystery of sleep, the restorer, till the dawn of yet another new day.

No sane mind, regarding intelligently the testimony of those two irrefutable witnesses,—the Scriptures of both Testaments, and universal Nature, can fail to realize that its ultimate and triumphant government must be a divine Imperialism, and its Imperator, the Universalist, the Scientist who holds the wealth of all worlds in his hands, because he knows the laws of their being, their origin, and their destiny. In him alone can equity originate; by him alone can every man be justified and awarded his place and portion according to his needs, and according as his work shall be. The scientific mind—the mind that knows all things—is the supreme development from the seed of Jehovah, and is the throne of his Elohi, to which he ascended when he withdrew from mortal vision as material element.

Happy the man whom this King delights to honor with his service! He is an aristocrat indeed who can recognize and worship this King, acknowledging his divine right to distribute the wealth of the universe, like the central sun, to everything after its kind, according to its needs, knowing that his King can do no wrong. This throne of science is given to him alone in whom the law of love is fulfilled,—to the man of sorrows, acquainted with human grief, who maketh himself of no reputation for the Truth's sake; the man who was rich, but who for our sakes became poor; the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves and was stripped and left to die; the man who has been despised and rejected as the burden-bearer of the cross, a High Priest who has wandered all through this wilderness of sin, and is touched with the feeling of all our infirmities; a prisoner of hope whom the truth has set free to do and to dare, and become the hero of worlds to come.

This man—the Sign of the Son of man, the Sign of Empire, whose course has been steadily westward nearly two thousand years—is today a prophet, a Voice crying in the wilderness, prophesying the speedy triumph of imperial justice. His spoken word will be the execution of the death sentence on sin and all its concomitants, and the awakening of all the powers of Jehovah to place him in glory upon the throne of the world to come. His word will be spoken by his scientific application of the powers of theocrasis, by which he will convert the world and make thousands to speak the words of truth and justice with the flaming tongues of men and of angels; and do the deeds of Gods, making all things new,—new revelations of the loving redemptive life of the Almighty, causing all Nature to sing a new song, accompanied by the pæons of the bells of the horses, upon which holiness is written.

The new song is the song of Moses and the Lamb, the song of the "Horse and his Rider,"—the fulfilment of the law, its science applied to life. This is the song of the saved who in turn become the Saviors. None can sing this song who do not voluntarily and intelligently forsake the ways of sin and death, and through obedience to the law, work out their own salvation. In such, God works to do his own good pleasure, which is their salvation from sin.

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in through the gates into the City. * * Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment; and the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. * * Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may inherit eternal life? Keep the Commandments. * * And He placed at the east of the Garden of Eden Cherubim, and a Flaming Sword which turned every way to keep the way of the Tree of Life.

The Concord Riot; or Looking Backward Sixty Years.

L. E. BORDEN.

HAVERHILL, first called Pentucket in the Indian tongue, is a beautiful town upon a hillslope at whose base the blue waters of the Merrimac wind onward to the sea. Upon the outskirts of the city, stands an old farmhouse shaded by walnuts and hickories. A thin coat of light paint covers the body of the dwelling, but the original color still shows a deep red on the ends and gables. Close by the front door is a well-sweep of the same hue, and peering down into the mossy depths of the ancient well, one sees little ferns growing in the crevices of the rocks. A path leads westward through the field to the brook, which ripples and splashes along the edge of a strip of woodland. Tufts of violets with their heart-shaped leaves, aromatic sprigs of peppermint, and black-green jack-in-the-pulpits fringe its banks.

Every spot here is full of interest to the poet-lover, who steps reverently into that square front room where the Quaker bard was born. The century had told but seven years, when John G. Whittier's life began amid toil and privation on this lonely farm. Yonder stands a stone wall which the barefoot boy in his homespun frock helped to build. Here, at the head of a time-worn staircase, in a rude open space, with rough beams overhead and large knots in the outer wall where the snow drifted in across the bed, the lad slept with his brother. Down below is the great kitchen, nearly thirty feet wide, where the iron crane hangs in a cavernous fireplace, and the hearth reaches half across the room. Around that hearth one winter's night, the family were gathered while the schoolmaster, a welcome guest, read aloud from the poems of Robert Burns; and as he read, one of his hearers, a shy youth in the corner, felt his cheeks flush and his heart swell, and knew for the first time from answering thrills that met the rhythm, he was himself a poet.

On the parlor wall hangs a sampler worked in tent-stitch by Lydia Ayres, the sweet faced schoolmate whose childish grief at passing him in the spelling-class, the poet has told in some of his best lines.

"I'm sorry that I spelt the word;
I hate to go above you,
Because," the brown eyes lower fell;
"Because, you see, I love you."

A new schoolhouse occupies the site of Haverhill Academy, where Whittier found the only training he enjoyed beside that gained from the district school near home. As we all know, he was obliged to earn the money to pay for that one year's schooling by working in the shoe shops, making slippers at eight cents a pair.

The citizens of Haverhill carefully cherish their poet's birthplace, and point with pride to these relics of his boyhood;—and yet, so strange and fickle is public sentiment, something more than sixty years ago, they were ready with tar and feathers to mob the man whom they now delight to honor. It was in the early anti-slavery days, and Whittier had taken up the unpopular cause with a burning zeal. No man is safe who dares to run counter to the ideas of the majority, and on a certain occasion when it was announced that the poet would speak in one of the churches, a mob was formed, and Whittier only escaped violent treatment at their hands, by making a hasty and secret exit through a window at the back of the edifice.

Although Whittier was fortunate enough to frustrate the disgraceful purposes of his fellow townsmen, he was roughly handled in the New Hampshire capital whither he had gone on a lecturing tour in company with George Thompson, an English reformer who had been instrumental in securing the abolition of slavery in the British colonies, and who had now come, at Garrison's invitation, to support the cause of freedom in America. Concord on the Merrimac belied its peaceful name, and became on this occasion the center of an angry crowd furnished with tar and feathers, and vowing speedy vengeance upon the "British emissary."

As the hour set for the meeting drew near, the rioters started to find Thompson, and meeting Whittier coming to the hall, took him for the Englishman and began to pelt him with mud, stones, and rotten eggs. It was a shameful scene,—the Quaker poet in the garb of his order, but with something more than a Friend's meekness flashing from his eye, pursued by the jeers and missiles of five hundred brave and loyal defenders of slavery! That Concord riot forms a dark page in the annals of the Granite State. What might have happened is uncertain, but just at this crisis, a hospitable gentleman flung open his door and offered shelter to the poet. The crowd, foiled of its victim, went on, shouting and cursing, to burn Thompson in effigy in the State House yard.

Why is it that men are so slow to learn a lesson made so plain and simple? As some one has said, "If liberty of conscience came over in the Mayflower, it was a portion of her perishable cargo and was soon disposed of, and never afterward imported." Every page of this nation's history is stained with persecution. The very men who canonize Whittier for denouncing the dreadful traffic in human flesh and blood, are ready today, when their prejudices are aroused, to mob, slander, and do violence. In this present year of grace, in the state of Maine, a God-fearing citizen was tarred and feathered merely for the holding of certain harmless, if eccentric religious opinions. Sixty years ago, he was a bold man who dared avow himself an abolitionist. How far since then have the Americans traveled on the road to religious and political liberty? When are they going to accord to every man the right to enjoy his own opinions, until he is convinced by reason that they are wrong? When will tolerance cease to be a prophecy and become a reality?

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE CENTRAL purpose of Columbus was to discover the ancient Garden of Eden,—the lost Paradise. Guided by ancient legends, he started westward to reach the Indies and the southeastern coast of Asia. Tradition fixed the ancient Paradise in the land of the tropics, in the isles of the Indies; and when Columbus reached San Salvador, he supposed that he was in the eastern instead of the western hemisphere. Accordingly, he named the inhabitants Indians. Not until he had made considerable explorations did he discover that he had reached a new continent. The oldest civilization known to the world today is China; but back and beyond the founding of the Celestial empire, were the peoples of the East, who lived during the Golden Ages of the past. The old Vedic scriptures, the Sanskrit language, the belief in the doctrine of absorption into Nirvana, and the great religions of the East are mere relics of an ancient religion, of an ancient civilization which flourished when the sons of God were in the tangible world, and the Orient was illumined by the divine Science. We may trace the progress of the civilization of the world westward from that point, down through the ages, until the present time; the march of the great anthropostic Sun in its precession on the ecliptic of humanity, the course of empire, the progress of civilization, have been through the peoples of India, Persia, Egypt, Palestine, and Europe, to America. The culmination is reached in the Occident. The greatest progress is in America, and the divine illumination occurs in the western world. Correspondingly, the vitellus of the great cosmogonic egg has moved to the westward. The greatest mental activity is always in the longitude of the vital point of the cell. During one great cycle, it has moved from the East to the West Indies. Note on a map of the world, the likeness between the eastern coasts of Asia and North America; each coast terminates toward the south in a peninsula. The Florida of the East is the Malay peninsula. South of each peninsula lie great islands running east and west, and further to the south are similar continents projecting toward the east. Spanish possessions included islands in both the East and West Indies; and during 1898, the United States of America acquired possession of the Philippines, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Ladrones, and Hawaii—all in exactly the same latitude. Koreshanity has located both the peoples and the place for the establishment of the new Eden, which the great Columbus, the dove, was sent out to discover. Through Cuba and Florida, the explorers passed in the hope of discovering the Fountain of Eternal Youth. Their search was prophetic; their expectations were not in vain. The great civilization is coming again; the evidences are written in the stars, in the insular and peninsular relations in the earth, and in the heart of the American people; it is written in the path of progress, in the scientific cosmography and cosmogony of Koreshanity; and the fulfilment of the prophetic lines, which have been converging for centuries, will be reached in the ultimate focus and exaltation of the scientific Light of the New World!

The Critic, while admitting that "unfortunately there is a great deal of truth" in our recent criticisms of the numerous factions of modern socialism, assumes that there is a common ground upon which all socialists stand: That the present industrial system is wrong and unjust, and that the remedy is in the inauguration of a system of government ownership of all means of production and distribution. Our contemporary notes that history has many parallels to the present movement for industrial freedom, where factions were factors in human liberty, citing the religious reform of the sixteenth century, the American revolution, and the emancipation of the southern slave, and asks, "May we not reasonably expect the same results in the present fight for industrial freedom?" The sixteenth century religious reform resulted in religious chaos; the American Revolution established a form of government which today permits and fosters all the evils which modern industrial reform is endeavoring to destroy, and the "emancipation" of the southern slave merged him into a worse bondage than he experienced on the southern plantation. These three instances are instances of disintegration, a tearing down without making provisions for meeting the exigencies which have arisen out of the new conditions. These three factors of reform have resulted in the worst possible form of civilization, where the workingman is the slave and the millionaire the master. Shall we expect similar results in the "present fight for industrial freedom?" We may expect, as a result of the fragmentary effort at reform, ultimate social chaos and revolution, a general social disorder, from which nothing but the absolute science of social reconstruction will deliver the people. Koreshanity maintains that inharmonious environment is not alone the difficulty; the cause lies deeper in the human heart and nature,—individualism, selfishness, and greed. There must be a turning back to the principles of unity of humanity, a polarization of the human mind in the direction of absolute purity and integrity;—in short, the exercise of Messianic function, through recognition on the part of the people, of the positive pole of human progress, and the establishment of the genuine scientific system of the Golden Age. Human nature must be transformed; but this belongs to the sphere of exercise of higher prerogatives and the application of a more profound science than fragmentary socialism possesses.

Modern astrologers are unable to define the specific quality of human life that manifests itself at the culmination of dispensations; they are ignorant of the fundamentals of true astrology, or the science of the precession of the anthropostic Sun along the line of the human ecliptic—the science which reveals the laws of immortality in the flesh. Koreshan Astro-Anthroposophy takes as a basis of its analyses of being and existence, the specific relation between man and the physical cosmos; and is able, through comparative analogy and the laws of correspondent movements in humanity and the physical world, to not only locate when the Messiah should appear, but also what is the specific character and function of each manifestation. An astrologer that cannot go back nineteen hundred years and define the character of the greatest anthropostic manifestation of all ages, has only a smattering of the science of astrology, and the value of his knowledge is far below that possessed by the Magi of the East, who recognized the star of Bethlehem. We are approaching the greatest events of all history, the greatest achievements of divine science; the modern astrologers are unable to foresee the actual manifestation of the humano-divine beings in the world of tangibility, whose coming is specifically designated in the solar, lunar, planetary, and stellar relations in the physical heavens at the present time. The sign in the physical heavens, passing from the constellation Pisces into Aquarius, is the astrological proof of the presence of the Sign of the Son of man, Elijah the Prophet, the Precursor of the new humanity,—the divine immortal beings in the human world. Bio-Astronomy deals specifically with the laws of divine perpetuity and manifestations; it reveals God the Almighty; and an astrology that falls short of this is not astrology.

The state of Georgia is rapidly losing the little civilization with which it has been credited. Within the past six months, 20 negroes have been lynched in the state—some of them burned, and some cut to pieces and distributed to the savage mobs. Nothing more atrocious, revolting, and barbarous has ever occurred in the heart of Africa than in these instances of torture of the unfortunate negroes of the South. A statement has at last been wrenched from the governor of Georgia, in which he expresses a vein of sympathy for the mobs. The people who perpetrate these crimes against humanity are savages, and not entitled to citizenship in an enlightened nation. These atrocities will increase; as the violence of the race war and of the war of capital and labor approaches, there will be sufficient provocation to excite the latent barbarism in the average genus homo, resulting in a complete revelation or uncovering of all the deviltry and savagery that are bound up in humanity. It will require this to throw off the false face of hypocrisy of modern civilization, and reveal the truth of the character of the modern world!

Humanity constitutes a universe, which is analogous in every respect to the physical universe in which we live. The analogy is complete, and the anatomy of the physical world is in exact correspondence with the anatomy of the individual man, and likewise analogous to the structure of the Grand Man, or humanity at large. The physical world is therefore the perfect pattern for the perfect structure of human society and government. The perpetual product of the physical cosmos is the central sun; it is the seed of the mineral kingdom. The human world, being analogous to the alchemico-organic universe, produces its seed—it involves itself in one Man, the anthropotic Sun of humanity. The Koreshan Cosmogony demonstrates not only the personality of God, the Seed-man, but also scientifically defines that he is entirely human. The great Sun of righteousness, the only true God, the human God, the God-man, appeared in the world nineteen hundred years ago. Koreshan Science is the science of the existence and laws of perpetuity of God, humanity, and the physical cosmos.

Contemporaneously with serious outbreaks in the social and industrial world, Mauna Loa, the central vent of the great volcanic belt of Oceanica, is in eruption, threatening to sweep destruction over the island of Hawaii. Great rivers of lava are streaming down from the crater and flowing toward the sea. On the opposite side of the earth, in nearly the same latitude, Mt. Vesuvius is now active. A revolution in the physical world is approaching; seismic disturbances and volcanic eruptions will increase, and volcanoes which have been quiet for centuries will break forth, accompanied by cosmographical upheavals, earthquakes, tidal waves, monsoons, and tornadoes. The five principal volcanoes of the central class, are Mauna Loa, Mt. Vesuvius, Etna, Stromboli, and Hecla; and there are over 125 active volcanoes of the linear class, the Moluccas in Formosa, the Sunda group, and the Andean volcanoes, all of which will become violently active during the time of the great revolutions in the physical world, and the contemporaneous revolution in church and state.

The peace congress has adjourned, with the signatures of only sixteen powers out of the entire number represented, to the arbitration agreement. The congress ends when all nations of the civilized world are preparing for war; when Russia is threatening Finland and Sweden, and plundering China; when England is at war with the dervishes of the Nile valley, and threatening war with the Transvaal republic, and when America is at war with the Filipinos, and ready for war with any nation in the earth! Warships are still building, and standing armies are still maintained. There is no disarmament, and no one in the congress was foolish enough to hint at it. Arbitration will settle none of the world's great issues; the powers will be powerless to arbitrate the great questions of capital and labor, —powerless to stay the impending revolution!

Christianity originated in the mind of one Man. Other great religions which prevail in the world, Brahmanism, Buddhism, Parseeism, and Mohammedanism, each had one personal head and founder. There is no such thing in all history, where a number of men ever produced a great system of religion. The new religion of the Golden Age cannot originate by methods employed by hundreds of so called leaders to patch up apostate Christianity; it must come as the Light of the world, from the anthropotic Sun, from the mind of one man, whose intellectual perception of the universe is sufficient to reach the last analysis of all truth in the formulation of a system of religio-science,—a universology. When truth involves itself completely and perfectly, it appears in one Messianic Star, and not in hundreds, until the hundreds are baptized by the One.

The center is the absolute point of a circle; all other points are relative and dependent. The physical cosmos, with its center of alchemical power and authority,—the solar imperial head, and the related and dependent circumference of activity, is the scientific pattern for the true social order and government. There can be no true government without a head, just as there can be no true circle without a center. We claim, on the basis of geometry, of the physical universe, of the human anatomy, of form and function, that the republican form of government contains a principle that cannot be truly and scientifically applied without a central pole of unity, which will unite and relate in humanity all the different departments of mental activities which obtain in the individual.

After four hundred years of "Christian civilization" in Cuba under the auspices of Spain, 76 per cent of the entire population can neither read nor write. There are thousands of churches, but not a school house in Cuba. Ignorance prevails throughout the island, and destitution is widespread,—not the direct outcome of war, but of conditions which have prevailed for centuries. Spain's legacy to Cuba is the degradation of ignorance and poverty. These conditions confront America in its attempt to establish a government in the Antilles. Obviously, the people of Cuba are incapable of governing themselves; they are merely children in the world of modern civilization, ignorant of the laws of government, order, and progress.

A modern scientist is endeavoring to find a method of conserving mental energy. He concludes that an enormous amount of energy is wasted in the processes of thinking by everybody. That is where he makes his greatest mistake. Nothing is wasted in the processes of actual, rational thinking. The trouble is that thinkers are few, and the enormous waste of mental energy results because the masses do not think at all. The only way to conserve mental energy is to think rationally and scientifically. If our scientific friend desires to conserve the energies of thought, let him think!

Darwinism is figuring conspicuously in a South Dakota criminal court. A showman has been advertising and exhibiting the "missing link," and becoming engaged in a quarrel with his curio, killed the latter with a club. He was arrested for murder, but is making his defense on the plea that the "missing link" was not a human being. The state claims that if the thing murdered was the "missing link," he was at least half a man; and it may require some fine legal points to settle the question of punishment for destroying the "link" between the human and animal kingdoms!

The free silver apostle asks the question in an elaborate work on economic and political problems: "Republic or Empire?" We can answer the question at once: It will be an empire, in which silver will be as free as any other metal, and in which gold will be common enough to pave the streets of its capital. American politicians and churchmen are afraid of the coming kingdom, the literal divine Empire which shall ultimately fill the whole earth; they would rather substitute a republic, in which the people could govern themselves and leave the Almighty to take care of himself!

The united Christian party seeks to amend the Declaration of Independence by embodying in its platform the clause, "We hold that all temporal governments derive their just powers from God through Christ, and by the consent of the governed." The government of the Almighty is Theocratic, the antithet of republicanism. But this new party, in its declaration in favor of the adoption of "direct legislation," recognizes the people as the supreme source of power. We would be glad to be informed where, in such an arrangement, the power of "God through Christ" is to be found!

The chemist denies that baser metals may be transmuted into gold; but the entire commercial world is constantly transmuting human energy and the products of industry into gold. In the competitive system, the supreme desire is to make money, —to make gold. It is as easy to make gold from other metals as it is to make gold out of human energy, when the processes are known. It is only an unscientific chemistry that fails to do, in the field of metallurgy, that which is constantly accomplished in the world of commerce.

All mind is supernatural; the science of mind is metaphysics,—that is, the science of that which is over or above physics. The natural world is material; the mental or spiritual world is prior to the world of matter in quality of substance. The natural world is the expression of mind; hence, matter is the continent or pediment of energy or spirit. The spiritual worlds or heavens of humanity are within man, and not in the sky of the physical universe.

There are two sides to America: One consists of the elements of progress, out of which the future civilization, order, and government must come; the other consists of the elements of violent revolution, the elements of retrogression. In the approaching judgment and vengeance upon the modern world, these elements will be separated; at present, chaos obtains because they grow together.

If American civilization is worth anything to the people of the western world, it is capable of doing more toward the enlightenment and civilization of the Filipinos and the Cubans than they are capable of doing for themselves.

The twofold destiny of humanity, according to orthodox Christianity, may be summed up as follows: The few are to be rewarded with everlasting bliss, while the many are to be consigned to everlasting blister!

The difference between the laboring man and the millionaire is this: The laboring man desires to perform less work for the same pay, while the millionaire desires to pay less money for the same work.

The theory that there is no evil, was designed to excuse the evil in the people who advocate it; it is entertained by those who enjoy perversions of truth, and who are unable to be good.

The millionaire has as much right to hate and oppress the labor-unions as the labor-unions have to despise the millionaire, covet his possessions, and oppress the non unionists.

The laws of the true form of government must be formulated from the basis of scientific principles, and not in accordance with the desires and caprices of a corrupt people.

The modern church belongs to the competitive order. Its sects are in competition with each other, and their members are engaged in competitive industry and commerce.

Strikes and riots are earthquakes in the human world, caused by the rumblings of great volcanoes of discontent, which threaten to sweep the world with revolution.

No man can correctly read the destiny of humanity by the stars, until he is able to read the character of the stars in humanity.

Enthusiasm is the potent force of great movements; truth accomplishes no victories without it.

The sun and stars constitute the cosmogonical aristocracy which rules the physical world.

The money power is the tyrannical and oppressive power of a false imperialism.

American Christians pray, "Thy kingdom come," but demand a republic.

When truth wins, only those who possess the truth will be absolutely free.

Just laws can originate only with the just man.

Antediluvian Personalities and Churches.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) Swedenborg says, in "Arcana Celestia," that from Genesis v to xi, or to the time of Eber, names never signify persons, but things. This involves all the names of churches from Adam to Noah, inclusive of the sons of Noah. The most ancient (celestial or perfect church) was called Man, who lived 930 years; Seth, the second church, lived 912 years; Enos, the third church, lived 905 years, and so on, down to the tenth church, which was Noah. Together with Ham, Shem, and Japheth, Noah constituted the ancient church. Swedenborg also says that the hundreds of years as connected with the respective names, refer to ages of the church, as for instance, Lamech lived 777 years, and came to an end. Query: Is this view of the premises the same as the Koreshan?

(2) According to the "Dictionary of Correspondences," the planets Jupiter and Saturn are inhabited. This, I understand to be opposed to the Koreshan Astronomy. —MAJ. O. W., Denver, Colo.

(1) The usual orthodox view of Adam, Seth, Enos, and others of the antediluvian characters mentioned in the Bible, is that they were common mortal men, propagating their life on the mortal plane; that the human family began with Adam, who married Eve, resulting in natural, mortal children. Placed in contrast with this absurd view, Swedenborg was right; but Swedenborg was illumined as to his interior, and his inspiration pertained to the spiritual sense, and not to the natural. It is true in the spiritual sense, that Adam, Seth, Enos, and others, were churches, and partly true in the natural sense. There never was a church that was not founded by a natural man; no age ever began without a human head. Adam was a man, as much a man, an immortal man, as was Jesus. The church Adam founded was called Adam. An entire dispensation followed Adam, during which time the church of Adam existed. Through processes of regeneration, Adam begat Seth, the head of the church of Seth; and likewise, Seth begat Enos, the founder of another church.

The number of years connected with the names of Adam, Seth, Enos, etc., do not refer to the number of years in which the men existed in the natural world. We may take for illustration, the Man Jesus: He came into the world an immortal man; he was in the natural world only thirty-three years, but he founded a church, which contained the living Seed until that seed died. The apostasy came about the year 317; and in the same way, and for the same reason that the Bible says Adam lived 930 years and died, we may say that Jesus lived 317 years as the divine life of the Christian church, and then died, as all seeds must die. But the period of 317 years is not the end of the age, for the same age has extended down to the present time. The fruitage of this age will be the offspring of Jesus, and a new age, a new church, will be inaugurated.

The difficulty with chronologists is, that they take these dates in their succession as given in the Bible, and make them foot up a certain number of years, and call it a certain number of years by Bible chronology from the time of creation; whereas, in fact, during the major part of an age the church is dead, in apostasy, so that unless the law of dispensations is understood and applied, the years given in Genesis furnish no clue to the actual number of years that elapsed between Adam and the flood; and if Swedenborg considered that when one church ended or "died," another immediately began, he made the same mistake that the modern church makes as to dates. Swedenborg had no means of knowing the natural sense of what he saw in the spiritual world. It has required the literal or scientific sense to make correct interpretations of the writings of Swedenborg. The visions of Swedenborg were not revelations to the external mind, and cannot be understood in the external sense without a scientific translation of the terms of the spiritual into the natural. Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth each had a natural existence. The church of Noah prevailed in Egypt. The word alchemy is derived from Ham or Cham; al meaning light, and Cham, transmutation; alchemy is the light of Cham, or the science of transmutation.

(2) Swedenborg visited the spirits of different classes of people in the natural world, which correspond to the seven planets. He visited the spirits of Jupiter people, of Saturn people, Mars people, etc. These people are all right here on the earth's surface, within the great hollow of the cell. When the Swedish Seer wrote of what he saw; he supposed—with the Copernican fallacy in mind—that he had been to the visible planets in the physical heavens. If he could have understood the natural sense of what was revealed to him, he would have known that he did not go off into space, but into the several divisions of the spiritual world in the natural humanity. What he saw is in no way antagonistic to the Koreshan Astronomy, but perfectly in accord with it.

Koreshan Cosmogony and Zeteticism.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have just received a letter from Mr. L., Vadis, W. Va., in reply to inquiries regarding Zeteticism. He referred me to a Koreshan publication on the subject of the shape of the earth. I am anxious to procure a copy. I would like to ask also, Do you know where I can obtain a copy of the book by "Parallax" on the same subject? I have become interested in this question of the shape of the earth, and am desirous of getting all the light I can. There are some points I am not sure about. If the book you publish clears them up, then I am ready to become a "flat earth man."—E. B. S., Harperville, Manitoba, Can.

The book to which you have been referred is the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere, containing an exposition of the fundamental principles of the Koreshan Cosmogony, together with actual demonstrations of the earth's concavity. You will see from the title of the book, that we do not advocate the "flat earth theory" of Parallax, although we are thoroughly acquainted with the theory, as well as with the experiments by Parallax and others, and the books which have been published in defense of his views.

In 1839, Parallax, an English experimentalist, began a series of experiments on the old Bedford canal, in England, to prove that the earth is not convex. He demonstrated beyond a doubt that the surface on which we live is not convex; but he assumed that, because it is not convex, it is flat. We contend that his conclusion is not logical, and that it is not sustained by a single fact of nature, beyond the conclusion that the earth's surface is not convex. While Parallax claimed to be a Zetetic, he departed from the Zetetic method when he reached the conclusion that standing water is flat. He evolved an inconsistent theory which is out of harmony with natural phenomena, geodetic survey, scientific cosmography, and the principles and laws of existence.

In 1896 and 1897, the Geodetic and Experimenting Staff of the Koreshan Unity conducted a series of experiments on the surface of water for the purpose of demonstrating, by simple means, the correctness of the scientific discovery by KORESH, in the year 1870,—that the earth is a hollow sphere, and that we live on the inside. Our observations and experiments on the old Illinois drainage canal, Lake Michigan, the Gulf of Mexico, and Bay of Naples, demonstrated not only that water is not convex, but that it is concave. These experiments are more numerous, more crucial, and definite in actual test of the water's surface than ever before conducted. Besides the experiments of observation by means of the telescope, the Staff conducted the greatest geodetic survey in all history—that of the survey of a straight line a number of miles in length, from the vertical point of a given perpendicular. The line converged with the waters of the Gulf of Mexico at a specific ratio,—the ratio of the earth's concave curvature, the particulars of which are contained in the 200-page book, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY.

We would call your attention to the fact that the earth cannot be flat. Universal phenomena cannot be accounted for on the basis of the flat assumption. All life is generated in the cell. The universe is a great cell, possessing all the functions of the human organism. The principle of cellular life enters into all organic structures, and the universe is no exception. There is no south circumference, as Parallax assumed; meridians of longitude converge south of the equator, the same as they do north of the equator; and there is a circumpolar motion of the south pole stars just as there is in the north around Polaris—a fact wholly inexplicable on the basis of the so called Zetetic astronomy. While Parallax was progressive, the truth concerning the form of the universe did not ultimate in him. Improvement is the order of the age, until the perfect system is reached, which is Koreshanity.

Parallax's book, "Zetetic Astronomy," is long since out of print, and we think no copies can be obtained from any source. Copies were scarce ten years ago, and the price very high. It is now out of date; after comprehending the fundamentals of Koreshan Astronomy and studying our experiments, you would not need works on a fallacious theory, either for facts or arguments to disprove the Copernican system.

In the fulness of a cycle we find cause and effect to be united in one.

Swedenborg and the Bible.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I take the liberty of presenting the following questions, first premising that I have read "The Mission of Swedenborg," which leaves many important points untouched:

Swedenborg taught that the books of the Bible are divided into two very different classes. The first class, comprising all those books preceding Chronicles (except Ruth), the Psalms, the Prophets, the Gospels, and the Revelation, contains a spiritual sense, and forms the divine Word itself. The remaining books constitute the second class, which has no internal sense, and therefore are no part of the Word of God. Are Koreshan views of the Scriptures in harmony with the foregoing?

Am I correct in thinking that Koreshanity accepts Swedenborg's exposition of the Scriptures, but in all other respects denies the authority of his writings? If so, why?—A. L. B., New Haven, Conn.

Swedenborg's mission was to the spiritual world; he wrote of it and for it, because he was illumined in the spiritual "sense." He became the Word in the spiritual degree; that is, his interior entered into conjunction with the Lord, and consequently his inspiration was entirely in that degree. His inspired writings constitute the exposition of the spiritual sense of the truth, not the external, natural, or scientific degree. Koreshanity accepts what Swedenborg saw in the spiritual world, accepts what he taught of truth in the spiritual degree, and the authority of his inspirations in that degree, and that degree only. We accept what he saw and heard while in states of illumination, but we do not accept his attempts to define to the natural mind, the meaning of what he saw and heard in the spiritual world. The truth did not reach its ultimates in Swedenborg. Koreshanity is truth in ultimates; it is not only the scientific interpretation of the writings of Swedenborg, but it is also the science of all things in both the spiritual and natural worlds.

Swedenborg saw what was contained in the spiritual degree of the divine Word,—not the Bible, but the Word itself, the Almighty. In the external world, Swedenborg concluded that the divine Word is the Bible; when in fact, the Word is God, and the Bible is a mere expression of the divine mind. We do not accept his conclusion that the Bible is the Word of God, and that some of the books of the Bible have no "internal sense." What is recorded in the Bible, whether written in the language of symbolism, or apparently in historical form, is an expression in the form of language, of what has taken place in the celestial, spiritual, and natural worlds, and the Bible is not only susceptible of interpretation on these three planes, but also in the antithetical degrees. Swedenborg's classification of the books of the Bible was a mere designation of the books that were written in different forms of symbolism.

We do not reject what was revealed to Swedenborg in the spiritual "sense," while he was in a state of illumination; but we do not accept what he wrote when not in a state of illumination, because he was not able to define the scientific degree of a single truth he possessed. For instance, when in a state of illumination, he saw the spiritual sun, and around it three atmospheres, and outside and beneath the atmospheres, the earth; but when he undertook to write on the subject of astronomy, he held to the Copernican system; he did not possess the science of astronomy. The same is true of what he wrote concerning the Bible; he could not interpret the Bible in the natural degree, because he did not possess that function.

There are Others.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I am in receipt of a sample copy of your paper, and would reply that I am most too old (most 73) to look after new doctrines. Our Savior told Peter to put up the sword, for those that take the sword must perish by the sword; so I do not want to perish that way. You folks are wise beyond that which is written, and of course you know more than Solomon did in his day; but I am an old foggy, and will ask to be let alone in my present belief, as our Lord inspired it. He is the only Guiding Star that I know of.—J. A. S., St. Andrews, Wash.

This is an age of progress, and the American people are said to be progressive. In many ways they have shown themselves to be so; but there are still a number of people who desire to be let alone in their present beliefs and conditions, for new things, improvements, and aggressions provoke them because they cannot keep up with the procession. The writer of the above is one who has closed up his mind to all elements of progress, and does not desire to go any further!

There were many such in the time of Jesus the Christ. The truth came to the world through him, but the old fogies, who considered that he was wise beyond their understanding of Moses and the prophets, would have none of him! Jesus came to bring a sword for the purpose of stirring up the mind of humanity, and to set the elements at war; and in the combat, many perished. His gospel was the savor of life unto life to some, and the savor of death unto death to others.

Nineteen hundred years ago, there was a greater than Solomon; he was the Guiding Star. When he comes again to restore the lost Eden, he brings the flaming sword to keep and to perpetuate the Tree of Life, and those who do not take it will perish; and among them will be those who are left behind in the forward march of progress and civilization—those who are neither desirous of the truth nor capable of understanding it when revealed to the world.

Koreshanity in New Orleans.

Rev. E. M. Castle Lecturing in the Crescent City on Koreshan Science.

Out at 2018 Bienville street, in a quiet and modest residence, is Rev. E. M. Castle, of California. She is not a Spiritualist, gives no table rappings, writes no messages on slates from long deceased ancestors or departed friends. She collects no fees, charges no admission, seeks no gifts, is an agent for no publication. She simply and only talks of the Cellular Cosmogony.

Don't get alarmed when you read these big words, for it is all very simple when you come to know it as its outline falls in choice English and clear-cut words from the lips of this talented woman in one of her "parlor lectures," as she is pleased to term them.

Rev. Castle is a remarkable woman in many ways. She is slight of figure, but big of brain, and her lectures betray an intimate acquaintance with the literature of all nations and all ages. In conversation, she is a charming person, and her power of elocution as a lecturer is something to be admired. She acknowledges that it is up-hill work to bring the world to an understanding of the startling and revolutionary theories which she and her sect propound, but she goes at her task with a will and a vim born of profound belief in their truth, and final acceptance by mankind at large.

A representative of the Daily States has been permitted to attend two of Rev. Castle's parlor lectures. It was with some misgiving that he went to hear the "lady from California," for fakes abound in this world, and a new sucker is said to be born each minute. The reporter did not wish to increase the average to two a minute, but he went.

During Rev. Castle's lecture, nobody returned from the spirit world to tell us things we knew long before; there were no mysteries, no signs, no symbols, no rappings, no wild-eyed ravings, nor anything of the kind. She was simply argumentative—that was all. But she sought to prove some remarkable things. For example, it has long been a current belief that we live on the outside of the earth, and that the earth revolved about the sun. Most people thought, too, that the moon is the earth's satellite, and revolved about the sphere on which we live. And then, too, we have been taught that the sun is much larger than our planet, and is the source of all light and heat.

According to Rev. Castle, this is all wrong. We don't live on the outside of the earth at all, but on the inside of it. The sun is not outside of us, but inside of us; the remaining planets all rest within the earth's capacious bosom; in fact, we are "the whole thing," and plenty of it.

To speak plainly, Rev. Castle is an apostle of "Koreshanity," a principle of interpretation of the universe which asserts that the earth is a concave sphere—not a convex one—and that we, of course, live on the inside surface, whereas we have always believed we lived on the outside. But the best of people are sometimes mistaken, and Rev. Castle declares it will not be long before we all get our proper bearings.

Koreshanity is the system of world interpretation discovered by Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, of Chicago, who has written half a score of books on various phases of the system, and who publishes a weekly newspaper in its interest. In order to prove that the earth is a concave sphere, Dr. Teed undertook a series of experiments on the coast of Florida two years ago, and he claims that a straight line continuously projected to right and left did strike the earth's surface in both directions. With a convex surface such a line would have been projected into infinite space.

It is unnecessary and impossible to give in detail the arguments whereby Rev. Castle sought to prove the truth of Koreshanity. It is sufficient to say they were all ingenious, and seemed to be backed up by evidence that was amply conclusive to the human mind.

Reporter's Questions Answered.

The States representative was somewhat incredulous at first, and he confesses to serious misgivings even yet as to the truth of Koreshanity; but it is at least safe to say that the happily framed sentences of Lecturer Castle seemed to cast a sort of spell, albeit temporary, over the mind of skeptic and believer alike.

"If the sun is 886,000 miles in diameter," Rev. Castle was asked, "how could it get inside our little earth, which is only 8,000 miles straight through?"

"That is where you are wrong," said she. "You are following the teachings of the modern astronomers, who do not know anything about the matter. The sun is not 886,000 miles in diameter, nor anything near it. It isn't over 100 miles wide. You have been taught to measure it from the convex instead of the concave arc. With our system as a basis, the sun is barely 100 miles wide, and after you get the sun inside the earth there is still an abundance of room for all the planets, comets, etc."

"How could you circumnavigate the globe, as Magellan did?"

"That is not at all difficult. Divide the pasteboard globe used in the schools into two hemispheres, and paste the map on the inside of the globe. The globe will then have two poles, one equator, one ecliptic, just as many meridians and parallels of latitude as when the map was on the outside. The route of a ship marked on the outside would sustain the same relations as to distance, latitude and longitude to all points on the concave surface. As there are 360 degrees inside a circle or globe, the same as on the outside, the ship would finally return to the same point with a good deal safer journey, perhaps, than by sailing around on the outside of a sphere in rapid rotation and motion through space. Our circumnavigation is simple and safe; the other is fraught with the difficulty of getting the oceans to stay on the outside."

"Are any of the planets inhabited?"

"No,—not the planets we see up there in the sky. They are what their names indicate—plan-ets, little planes. The diameter of each is very small."

"Why can we not see across the hollow globe you tell us about, like a fly in a hollow vessel?"

"Because the atmospheres intervene. They are of different density. They refract rays of light and vision. We see but little further than the upper stratum of our air."

Rev. Castle explained eclipses, the alternation of day and night, the force of gravity, and half a score of other well-known phenomena, all in accordance with the system in which she believes, and then left us to pursue our own inclinations as to whether or not we repented our old sins in adopting the doctrines of the modern scientists, and were now prepared to be baptized into the new faith of Koreshanity. But she is a woman of remarkable intelligence, wide reading, and attractive personality, and the thinking men and women of the city should give her a hearing.—The Daily States, New Orleans, La., July 12.

Koreshan View of Spiritualistic Phenomena.

New Orleans Picayune Gives a Synopsis of Rev. Castle's Lecture on Spiritualism.

At the invitation of members of the Spiritual church, which is a branch of the Spiritualists, Rev. E. M. Castle lectured last night at the headquarters, No. 1306 Carondelet, on "Spiritual Mediums," showing the use, necessity, and correct position of such mediators between the physical and the spiritual worlds, and also the abuses accompanying, and the harm resulting from irresponsible experimenting with powers which we cannot yet control.

Imprimis, Rev. Castle said that she was not a spiritualist, although she would speak of mediums and of spiritualistic manifestations; nor was she a theosophist, although making use of such terms as "astral body" and "spirit circles." She believed in and professed the doctrine of "Koreshanity," which is a system of Universology, announced twenty-nine years ago by Dr. Cyrus R. Teed (Korsh), of Chicago. This system teaches that the earth is a stationary, concave cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, suns, moons, planets, and stars on the inside, the whole containing and constituting the only physical universe in existence. Embraced in the system, of which the external cosmic form is the mere outward cell, is its correspondent,—the macrocosmic or Grand Man. Outwardly, this is the visible humanity in the process of development toward a perfected state, not yet approached only as it was attained to in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. Castle spoke about mediums, and said that such persons were absolutely necessary in order to establish a rapport between this world and the world of spirits; but owing to the perversion of their high attainments, by some mediums who descend to charlatanism for the sake of money-making, and owing to the want of proper knowledge of the control of forces which are called into action by the mediumistic power, humanity is at the mercy of evil and lesser spirits who use the mediums for purposes of their own.

Materialization takes place at the expense of the highest elements of our nature. The materialized spirit is the product of the union of those higher elements with the grosser element of the spirits that hover in our earthly circles, seeking a clew to the problem of reincarnation. This process saps the vitality of the mediums and of those persons who attend the seances. In the long run they become more and more materialistic, and eventually are the prey of evil spirits.

It is in this perversion of our noble, God-given faculties that the mistake lies. We should seek beyond the mere gratification of that curiosity which consists in coming into communication with the ghosts of our departed relatives and friends, by calling them to this earth. We should seek beyond this mere whim, and try to find out ourselves what is going on in the spiritual spheres.

Rev. Castle said much more on the subject, but the above is a fair synopsis of her lecture. She will speak again next Thursday on "The Reincarnation."—New Orleans Daily Picayune, July 12.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly, August 5.

A striking and interesting feature of the current issue is the Evolution of a Modern Warship, as illustrated by a double-page of pictures showing vessels of war from the earliest times to the present year. The old-fashioned naval weapons of defense are placed alongside monster iron-clads of today—in startling contrast. The front page displays a photograph of two children wading in the surf. In this issue begins a novel series of pictures, the American Girls, by Penrhyn Stanlaws; The first is the captivating Golf Girl; the second will be the Bicycle Girl. Other pictures show Dewey's greeting at Trieste, White Pass and Yukon railroad to Klondike; 2 pages of the Filipino war, and numerous other subjects of illustration. Leslie's Weekly is simply and superbly excellent; it speaks volumes through its published photographs.

The Cosmopolitan.

A trolley line from Cairo, Egypt, to the Pyramids is being built; hence the suggestive heading to the opening article in the August number of the Cosmopolitan, By Trolley to the Sphinx, illustrated by 17 fine photographs of the Sphinx and the Pyramids. All students of the Pyramids and other forms of Egyptology will welcome this excellent glance at the ancient wonders. Another attractive feature, is The Basis of New York Society, illustrated by 29 photographs. Following this, is Your Relation to Society, by J. W. Bennett, of the Baltimore News; it is the first of a series of articles on the subject of social relations, and pleads for social reform. A new feature of the Cosmopolitan is Men, Women, and Events; interesting to all students of current history. A number of excellent short stories appear in the August number, the best of which are, The Bushwhacker Nurse, A Modern Cleopatra, and Operating an "Underground" Route to Cuba. Augustin Daly and his Life-Work is illustrated by 65 fine photographs of noted actors and stage scenes. The editor's Building of an Empire, an interesting story of the rise of Mohammedanism, continues.

The August Chautauquan

Illustrates the old French town Grasse, and sketches its hardy inhabitants, and discusses topics of current and popular interest. The White House Entertaining gives the reader views of the White House and its gorgeously furnished rooms and superb conservatories. Among the many other interesting articles are, The Rate of Interest in the Near Future, Some Fruits of the Reformation, Stephen A. Duglass, Tea Drinking in Japan and China, New Zealand Cities and Government, and The Waste of Breathable Atmosphere; besides the serial, The Barrys, and a short story, On the Divide, and the usual History as It is Made.

The Open Court.

A monthly, devoted to the science of religion, the religion of science, and the extension of the religious parliament idea. Yearly, $1.00. The August number contains: The Gospel on the Parisian Stage, the revival of Mediæval Mysteries and Passion Plays; sketch of Maine de Biran, one of the originators of modern psychology; Ludwig Buchner as a Revelator of Science; the Cross of Golgotha (illustrated), Italian Anarchy, and Death and Resurrection (illustrated), besides editorial on the Philippine Embroglio. Open Court Publishing Co., Chicago.

The Mind for August.

One of the best popular metaphysical journals published, a magazine of liberal and advanced thought. The principal articles in the current number are: The Genesis of Genius, Mental States and Selected Consciousness, Part 2 of Experimental and Transcendental Psychology, What is Spirituality? Reform For All, and Mental Independence. Yearly, $2.00; 20 cents per copy. Alliance Publishing Co., Life Building, New York City.

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.

Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in weeks of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a commonsense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

Verging on the Vortex of Revolution.

The Law of Cycles and Recurrent Events; Humanity Now in the Lap of Dispensations, Entering the Day of Vengeance Foreseen by the Prophets.

ALL HUMAN progression is governed by the law of cycles. By a cycle, we mean a period of time beginning with certain conditions and terminating with somewhat similar or corresponding conditions. As an instance, note the period from the beginning of the Abrahamic cycle or dispensation to its close, the final destruction of Jerusalem and the scattering of the Jews. It will be observed that there was an overlapping of time; a period of about seventy years from the birth of the Lord until the dissipation of Jerusalem and the destruction of the city. The old or Jewish dispensation ended with the erasure of Jerusalem by the Roman army. The new dispensation began about seventy years earlier; namely, at the birth of the Lord.

While the Lord and his primitive church comprised the fruit of the Jewish age, and completed a period or cycle of about nineteen hundred years, the cycle did not exactly fulfil the conditions obtaining at the beginning of the Abrahamic dispensation, because some principles and forms were ingrafted, by which the development was a progressive one. The heart of the Jewish cycle in its beginning was Abraham; the heart of its termination was the Lord; that is, Abraham reincarnated with the additional experience of nearly two thousand years; for as Abraham, by natural generation, had projected his life into succeeding generations, he resurrected that life in the personality of the Savior of the world, the Lord being the reincarnation of Abraham. This cycle of forty-two natural generations is a representative dispensation or period of time; and this is what we mean by the shorter cycle of time, or a dispensation.

There are twelve of these periods in a longer one of about twenty-four thousand years. These twelve periods of human progress are defined not only by specific modifications marked by distinctive revolutions in theological and secular thought, that is, revolutions in church and state, but also in the passage of the sign over the ecliptic, an astronomical precession of the sign through the twelve constellations, starting from the constellation Aries and terminating with the sign Aries in the constellation Aries, whence it started. This longer cycle or period of about twenty-four thousand years, is but one of the infinite series of Zodiacal revolutions which mark the progressions and retrogressions of human development.

The fruit of the Christian cycle or dispensation, now about to mature, will differ from the fruit of the Abrahamic or preceding cycle, for the reason stated above, as applying to Abraham and his reincarnation as the Lord. The Christian dispensation will end in a variety of fruit, the supreme or firstfruits being a multiplication of the sons of God, the product of the planting of the Lord in the church by the operation of the Holy Spirit, which was the substance of his body. The wonderful phenomenon of the transformation of mortality to immortality, the corruptible to the incorruptible nature, marks merely the metamorphosis of the prime moving potency of the new age. It will exert its reflex action upon all other phases of human life, and through it, the lower stages and conditions of society will be reduced to the order of organic form and function. The Christian dispensation is drawing to its close. The end will be marked by the most terrible and bloody revolution the world has known since the upheaval which characterized the beginning of the Zodiacal cycle, twenty-four thousand years ago. Were this statement untrue, then the prophecies of Biblical revelation are untrue; then would fall to the ground all that is supposed to be true regarding Biblical prophecy and history, and with it would depart the Christian's hope.

It is not because we desire war that we emphasize the truth pertaining to the coming revolution. We do, however, greatly desire the manifestations to accompany and succeed the social catastrophe. We desire to see the operation of that besom of destruction which shall sweep away the refuge of lies and corruption that distinguishes (?) the present corrupting and corruptible generation from all that have preceded, and defines it as the most polluted of any in the history of ages. The close of the Christian dispensation will be distinguished by blood. Armies and navies are not for peace, but for war. The ancient seers foresaw, and have given the warning in no uncertain language. There shall be such a time as never was, no, nor never shall be. This time is at hand. Astronomically, the sign Aries is passing from the Piscatorial constellation into that of Aquarius. The Aquarian cycle will differ, religiously, morally, socially, astronomically, economically, and in all its secular bearings, from the Christian or Piscatorial cycle.

"Behold, I make all things new." The new age will usher in new conditions, through a radical revolution. The Lord Jesus with his Christian church, was planted in the race for regeneration. The central principle of that seed was communism; not the communism of the French Commune and of anarchy, but the communism actuated by the influence of the Holy Spirit as it was shed upon the church and the world at the end of the Jewish and the beginning of the Christian dispensation. As surely as the principle and form of communism were planted at the inauguration of Christianity, so surely will the regeneration of the cycle culminate in the development of an orderly communism, of which the Lord Jesus was the archetype and germinal beginning. The spirit of competition will be eradicated from the hearts of men, following which there will be a readjustment of the social structure.

The conflict now raging between the millionaire and his serf, will not fructify in the destruction of the rich with the exaltation of the brute, the common people. There will come a struggle between the labor unions on the one hand, and the government, with the military reinforced by the money power, on the other. It will be equally destructive to both, and they will both go down together. There is as much hellishness in the tyranny of labor organizations as in the monopoly of the millionaire; and the forces of tyranny are self-destructive. The new, divine structure will be reared upon the debris of dissolution which shall mark the ravages of the desolating cyclone of human vengeance, when the wrath of generations shall focalize in the consummation of its potential energy.

The Scientific Religion of Koreshanity.

The Great System of World-Interpretation Founded by Koresh; the Scientific Solution of the Problem of Human Origin and Destiny; the Religion of the Twentieth Century.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

The summary want of the age is that last System of Science into which shall have been sifted all philosophy, which shall be at once both catholic and eclectic, which shall be the joint outgrowth of reason and faith, and which shall shed forth through every walk of research, the blended light of discovery and revelation.—Extract.

THE ULTIMATE of all truth is science. The ultimate scientific system of the great cycle of human progression must necessarily involve the truth of the universe, its origin and purpose of existence, and the laws of its perpetuity; the origin and destiny of man, and his relation to the great Cause of all things. It must solve the problem of human life, and its solution must come in the form of absolute science in the plane of intellectual comprehension and demonstration, and be susceptible of practical application to all the affairs of humanity. The world anticipates that at some time there will be a revelation of all mystery, the discovery of the key to the great problems which have confronted the philosophers of all ages. The Golden Age is expected, wherein man will be the master of the universe, and sit upon its throne in the restoration of his universal dominion. The world needs a system which, in its comprehensiveness, shall embrace the universe; that will involve, in its application, all departments of human activity and relations; the world needs a system which contains in unity the knowledges of all departments of human economy, known as religion, morals, science, sociology, commerce, and government; and ere the Golden Age is ushered in, such a system will be promulgated in the world; it must be a Universology.

Koreshanity is the true religion of science, and the science of religion. It is inconceivable that the true scientific Universology should not contain the science of the creation of the universe and of man, as well as the science of the existence of the divine Being. It is inconceivable that the last and greatest revelation should not bring to humanity the knowledge of the true cosmogony, and reveal to the world the truth concerning the Creator and the created. Cosmogony and theology, therefore, must be as inseparably linked together in the great system of knowledges of the universe, as effect is linked to Cause; and the knowledges of the laws of human existence must come in unity with the knowledge of the laws of the existence of God. The fact that the universe exists is not denied by any rational mind; it is here, a tangibly existing universe; humanity is here, and its very life is sustained by the products of the physical world. The great physical universe is the ultimate expression of creative mind and will; it is the true, tangible, and ultimate language of Cause. In Nature, as the ultimate pediment or footstool of inherent life, we may read the laws and functions of the Creator; and we maintain that those laws and functions cannot be known until the form is known in which the Cause is expressed.

Relation of Man and Cosmos.

In the great organic system of existence are two co-ordinated universes: The physical cosmos and the universe of humanity. The same cause which is expressed in the physical world is expressed in the world of man. The same laws are operative in all the domains of the universe, and as all the kingdoms originate in one Cause, it follows that all of the kingdoms are in relation and correspondence, each necessary to the other in universal perpetuity. Koreshanity is premised upon the science of the physical cosmos and its analogous world of humanity. The anatomy of the physical cosmos and the anatomy of man constitute the forms of its basic analyses, from which is built up, through laws of analogical and synthetical reasoning, a great system of conclusions which is denominated Koreshan Universology. There can be no objection urged by the rational mind against taking the facts, forms, and functions of Nature as the basis of a formulated system of absolute science; there can be no objection to the work of analysis of universal effect to arrive at definite, specific, and scientific conclusions as to the nature and character of Cause. We point to the form of the great cell—which is the ultimate vesture of its inherent life—as the infallible basis of all reason.

The scientific analysis of the universe involves the knowledge of the laws of relation of every part of the universe to every other part, and to the universe as a whole, and how that relation obtains; the knowledge of how the mind of the great universal Impulser is expressed in the forms which constitute its pediment, and the knowledge of all the activities and metamorphoses which occur between divine mental volitions and world volutions. The science of all the relations, activities, and mutations of mind and matter is Alchemy, the laws of which define not only the processes of evolution of the universe from Cause, but also the involution of Cause from universal effect; and when it is known that cause and effect are reciprocal, it is known that the great Cause of all things is the involution of all things, the highest product of all activities of all kingdoms which constitute the effect. This places the mind in possession of the key to the nature and character of Deity, from a scientific basis, beginning with a premise that is indisputable, with facts that are demonstrable; and by logical processes, the correct and infallible conclusions are inevitable.

Religion is not a mere system of belief; in Koreshanity it is reduced to science. It is a process; a state to be attained. Religion means to tie again; and the true religion involves the processes of human destiny. It is the retying of God and man, the unity of Cause and effect. The religion of a plant is the process of formation and the state of the seed. It involves the internal aspirations of the corpuscles to reach their origin and destiny in the seed. Nineteen hundred years ago there was a true religion; the great Seed of the anthropostic world, the "beginning and the end," was manifest. God and man were united in the personal Messiah, who was the highest product of humanity, and consequently, the highest product of the great universe of existence. Jesus the Christ was the personal God; and the Koreshan declaration of the fact is not on the ground of a belief, but upon the basis of scientific analysis of the universe. It is a demonstrable fact that there is no function without form; the higher the form the more complex are the functions. The highest potency is in the seed, and the creative pivot of the universe is in the form of its involution. Jesus was the unity of cause and effect, the nexus between God and the human world; he was the great world-involution, and consequently its Creator. This conclusion, this fundamental truth of Koreshanity, is absolutely scientific, susceptible of scientific demonstration, and will never be overthrown!

Koreshanity discovers to the mind three great revelations of the divine mind: The physical cosmos, the universe of humanity, and the Bible. We do not accept the Bible simply on the basis of belief; our processes of rational procedure require that the Bible be scientifically proven to be in harmony with other and indisputable expressions of Cause, before it is concluded to be correct. It has been subjected to the critical tests of comparison with the infallible records in Nature. The forms of the physical world are symbols of thought; that is, they are thoughts metamorphosed and expressed in the planes in which the forms exist. The Bible is written in human language, but its terminology is founded upon the symbols of the tangible universe, and the language of the Bible can only be understood through a knowledge of the laws of the physical and anthropostic worlds. The cosmogony of Koreshanity, the scientific revelation of the form and function of the physical universe, is the key to the infallible interpretation of the declarations of the Bible, the key which unlocks the mysteries of the divine Record. It is the key to the great past; the hand that unveils the future and clarifies that which the prophets dimly foresaw, and enables the mind of the Founder of this System of marvelous completeness to declare and fulfil for humanity the New Religion, in the attainment of immortality in the tangible world.

The Stupendous Revolution of the Closing Dispensation.

The Greatest Conflict of All History, Foreseen by the Jewish and Christian Prophets, Now Read in the Signs of the Times, Precedes Universal Peace.

PROF. U. G. MORROW.

THE WORLD is preparing for a stupendous conflict; the lines of current events are rapidly penciling toward the final focus of history, preceding the dawn of the New Age. Every nation in the civilized world is equipped for warfare. During the present century, one hundred wars have been waged; men have reduced military operations to a science, and during the closing years of the present century the most destructive and formidable armaments of war ever known, have come into existence. Hundreds of immense floating forts,—steel-armored warships—comprise the navies of nations, while upon land are the great guns mounted for action, and millions of drilled soldiers, constituting scores of standing armies, are ready for engagement. This world-wide preparation for war represents a stupendous force in humanity—a disposition and determination to fight when provoked to war,—which have called into existence the world's weapons of war. The possibility of war will exist as long as national interests are in conflict—as long as humanity loves war and possesses the spirit of greed and selfishness; war will continue as long as the world commits crimes against justice. The idea of universal peace under the present conditions which exist in the world, is simply a wild dream; if we found the armed forces of the world decreasing; if we found the disposition of the people to be in the direction of that placidity of contentment and happiness that would insure pacific relations of humanity, we would be warranted in announcing universal peace. But under the present conditions of violent agitation of the world, the existence of hundreds of forms of injustice and despotism entrenched behind the armed forces of the world, there can be no genuine peace!

International arbitration, suggested by the famous though foolish peace congress, is but crude oil poured upon the troublous waters of humanity. It is insignificant when compared with the great forces which violently agitate and foment the human sea; insignificant in contrast with the great smoldering volcanoes of discontent which must vent their contents through a stupendous social upheaval. Every faction of the modern world is organizing for the purpose of contesting the claims of the powers of oppression; every trade, craft, and business of the civilized world is seeking to maintain its rights and liberties. Capital and labor are already in open conflict and warfare, skirmishing on the great battlefield of industry and commerce. The issues are already proclaimed; the platforms are announced, upon which the factions are determined to fight to the bitter end. International compacts may for a time maintain a semblance of peace among the nations; but they do not touch and quiet the vital centers of national selfishness, jealousy, greed, and oppression; they do not touch the heart of the great unsettled questions that are becoming more and more vital questions of hunger and destitution in lands of plenty and prosperity!

Mr. Von Bloch, a great Russian political economist and statistician, reviews the military status of Europe and America; failing to see any immediate results of the passing peace congress, he predicts an alarming and unparalleled increase in the forces of war; that during the next great European war, not only will all the present facilities for war be utilized, but also all that lie in the line of possible invention between now and then. When 45 per cent of the male population of France, 37 per cent of that of Germany, and a like percentage of all European nations may be called out in battle, he sees the possibility of a great European Armageddon, costing over $21,000,000 daily! When that statistician sees the millions of armed soldiers and all the navies of the world ready for action upon slight breaches of national etiquette, he asks, "Under these circumstances, are settled plans possible?" On the question of the late peace congress he is pessimistic; but he claims to have a specific, which if followed would infallibly abolish all war—an international court of arbitration. Can the world escape the threatening revolution? Is the world to have peace without war, without arms? or must peace be maintained as before,—behind the mouth of the great guns of the civilized nations?

On the question of war and universal peace, Koreshanity is both pessimistic and optimistic; we look for universal peace. The glad time is coming when the world will learn war no more; but the great conflict is at hand! We claim no sympathy with the factions that will engage in the terrible struggle. The position of Koreshanity is the same as that maintained by the Christ and his apostles nineteen hundred years ago; they foresaw revolution, but did not advocate it as the remedy for the world's social evils. The Koreshan Prophet foresees the impending revolution, and predicts its rapid and inevitable approach. THE FLAMING SWORD does not advocate the final resort to arms; it merely calls attention to the fact that such an awful event veils the Golden Age; carnage and bloodshed, and the overthrow of all present systems in vogue, for a time obscure the glories of the New World. We are engaged in no riots; we are not inciting modern mobs to deeds of violence, nor inflaming the mind of the masses against the powers that be. But we announce the science of the world's progress, the laws of dispensations and cycles, and the fact that the world is nearing an awful Niagara,—but we are powerless to prevent the catastrophe.

We hold that the great breaking-up of the old age is inevitable and necessary in the great economy of the universe. Koreshanity reveals the laws of dispensations, and demonstrates by scientific facts and analyses that the great epochs of human history have been opened by revolutions—not as accidental agitations in the world of human affairs, but as the inevitable results of agical tendencies. Every dispensation has its revolution—a revolution in the specific department in which there has been special progress. We are approaching not only the culmination of a single dispensation, but also the culmination of a great cycle;—we are nearing the conjunction of ages, involving the results of all the progressions and retrogressions of humanity during the great circle of universal perpetuity; consequently, the revolution about to burst upon the world involves all planes of mental, industrial, commercial, social, religious, scientific, and political activity. The great conflict will involve all of the factors and factions which pass into the retributive judgment of the closing cycle.

The Christian world pretends to desire peace; it is clamoring for escape from the terrible judgments which are in store for the offenders of Almighty justice. They have forgotten the declarations of the great Founder of the primitive Christian system. He looked down to the end of the present age, and saw the great “time of trouble,” the “day of vengeance,” the “great tribulation,” such as the world has never witnessed, and such as will never occur again. Has that day of vengeance passed? James saw the retribution coming upon the modern millionaire; Ezekiel and John foresaw the great battle of Gog and Magog, the great conflict of capital and labor,—carnage and bloodshed unequaled—in its obvious awfulness—in the history of the world. Has that battle been fought? The apostle Paul viewed the conditions of the modern world, its skepticism, sensuality, its perversion of the truth, and the cry for peace when the conditions were such that peace is impossible. Is that prophecy being fulfilled? Peter saw the great revolution in church and state, the establishment of the new kingdom; Daniel foresaw the great crashing and crushing of the powers of the world; John saw the transformation of the kingdoms of this world to the kingdoms of the Lord and his Christ. Do these prophecies portend universal peace without a revolution? Do they indicate an evolution of a new age without a conflict? We contend that the entire burden of Biblical prophecy is in the direction of a stupendous conflict, prior to the introduction of the era of universal peace; and from the basis of scientific facts, we assert that the actual conditions which prevail in the world, confirm the integrity of the prophetic seers of the past; and we affirm that neither international arbitration nor fragmentary reform will achieve the victory for the Goddess of Liberty!

The Heavy Hand of the Jew.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

THE JEW is the power behind the throne, in all the world,—mightier than the throne itself; yet that power will suddenly be broken. When governments began to pile up national debts for the purpose of carrying on wars, or for other purposes, they began laying the foundations of this monster Mammon power that is now their master. In its ordinary working, it is like the pestilence that walks in darkness. Its motto might well be that of the assassin: “Strike, but conceal the hand!” Its agents,—more or less concealed and cloaked by nationality and religion,—like tempting devils, are at the elbow of every one in power, ready to prompt and further every enterprise, honest or otherwise, that promises more indebtedness, more bonds and bondage for the peoples of the earth, or an enhancement of the money power of those already secured.

When the heads of the money power wished to double the value of their holdings,—more than quadrupling the burdens of the people, by demonetizing silver,—a British secret emissary was sent by bankers to this country, backed by any amount of money he might need to carry out his fell purpose, and so stealthily was it accomplished, that for six months afterwards, as they avowed, the people's President and their reputed servants in Congress did not know what they had done. Of course, if they had had any real purpose to protect the people from robbery, they would have righted the wrong when they found it out. Their failure to do so, leaves them open to the suspicion of having received part of the bribe. There are times when this well-nigh almighty power for evil unmasks its hand; and these are times when it expects credit for doing good.

Something over a decade ago, when Russia was persecuting the Jews, its national credit suddenly fell off twenty-four points in thirteen days; and Michael Ephrussi, head of the great house of Odessa, said to Russia's prime minister: “Touch another of our people, and not another ruble shall you have to save your empire.” Of course, the Czar did not care to face national bankruptcy to please the holy synod and the metropolitan of Novgorod, so, as he had no alternative, his word stopped the persecution. A more recent case is that of Dreyfus in France, who is the subject of a cruel conspiracy of army officers, and probably innocent of the offense charged against him; but whether innocent or guilty, he will have to be cleared and restored to his former splendid position, because the great Jewish banking houses, after consultation, have so decreed:—the alternative is the bankruptcy of France. The council of three, to whom the carrying out of their will was entrusted, says: “If you people” (and the common people own a large amount of their national debt) “will compel the government to do the right thing just once, in this Dreyfus affair, we will hold our hands; otherwise, we will get out of your country and then smash it.”

Dreyfus free and his enemies punished, or national bankruptcy, leaves it not a matter of doubt what the outcome will be, and explains the reason why so many that were connected with the persecution of this Jew have, by suicide, preferred to meet the awards of the assizes "over there," as the world accounts it, rather than face what they would certainly have to face here. Nineteen centuries have wrought marvelous changes in the condition of what was God's chosen people, since they leave them the political governors of no foot of earth, yet the absolute masters of the world. In view of such facts, the man who can not see that, under present wrong conditions, the money question is the very question of sovereignty, is too blind to see anything.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

PHYSICAL IMMORTALITY is not only of possible attainment, but we make the statement that people of this present generation will pass through the experience of transformation from mortality to the state of natural immortality. There are men and women who are hoping to become immortal in the present vidual, divided, or segmented state, without such transformation. Humanity exists at the present time in dual form; that is, male in one form, and female in another form. Immortality is a state of biunity. There is no immortality outside of absolute unity of the male and the female in one form. Immortality is a state of biunity which is only acquired through the application of scientific, Messianic laws. Vidual beings are mere corpuscles in humanity; and the vidual can no more enter the immortal state without knowledge and application of scientific truth of Messianic conjunction, than a corpuscle of a plant can become the seed without entering into actual conjunction with other corpuscles. A corpuscle cannot enter the seed through desire, will, and determination to remain alone,—an insignificant cell! Immortality is the state of possession of functions of self-reproduction; it is the state of the seed, the universe involved, with all its activities. Every effort to become immortal without recognition of the Messianic law is anti-christian, because opposed to the law and function of the Christ. Man in the dual state cannot perpetuate his existence except through the functions of mortal reproduction; and as long as humanity is in the present dual state, it is mortal, and will die in spite of itself. The present forms of those who will become immortal, must reach that state of exaltation of mind which will culminate in dematerialization of the physical structure, and enter cells of mental elaboration which will effect the unity of the elements of the male and the female, and project tangible, biune forms. There is no immortality short of this. Brass cannot be formed without the fusing of zinc and copper; and matter of any given quality cannot be transformed to matter of another quality, without dematerialization and the introduction of another quality of energy. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the body; he discovered the law nearly thirty years ago; and his promulgation of the truth has given scores of other persons opportunity to plagiarize and pervert the scientific truth without recognition of its source.

Physicians licensed to kill or cure, should be willing to stand the consequences of their work on the same ground that they subject mental healers to persecution when a patient dies under their treatment. It is a fact, that the people of the civilized world are continually dying; and inasmuch as it is a crime to die without the care of a licensed physician, it is fair to presume that the majority of the people of the civilized world—millions of people—die while the physician is in attendance. Is this a mark of failure to cure, on the part of the physician? Once in a while the vigilant and self-interested physician, the police officer, and the ubiquitous reporter discover a case of death while the patient is under treatment of some of the new schools of therapeutics; and the healer is subjected to persecution for permitting the patient to die. Because of these isolated cases, in contrast with the millions who die attended by the "regulars," the medical trust desires to exterminate the race of "healers." The "regulars" want the exclusive right of ushering people into the dark unknown! We do not endorse the methods employed by modern metaphysicians and religious enthusiasts who work under the name of "divine healing," but we give them the credit for performing cures that are as genuine as the cures by the "regulars;" and the army of the metaphysicians is rapidly increasing. The quacks claim that mental healing is a relic of barbarism. Of course, Christians will take kindly to this, for Jesus and the apostles, and the prophets before them, cured without drugs. From the basis of indisputable evidence, we assert that the "regular" physicians are very irregular in their methods, and the time is coming when the people will rebel against the despotism of the medical trust and its poisons. If the people must die, it is as well to die without poison as with it!

A pseudo-immortalist makes the statement, "that each man contains within his physical structure the whole of infinite life. Each man is the whole of God, not a mere portion, as some teach." This is on a par with the mystery of the trinity promulgated by the modern church—the idea that there are three persons in the Godhead, while there is only one God. The above statement makes as many gods as there are men—each one a perfect, complete, all-powerful, and all-wise God, and yet every one is weak enough to permit ignorance to rule the whole! How do we put it? The same as Jesus the Christ stated it nineteen hundred years ago. He alone of all men was God; he was from above, while the others were from beneath. He was immortal, divine; the others were mortal, offspring of the devil. Instead of saying that each man is all of God, we say, on the basis of scientific demonstrations concerning the character of the mortal world, that most men do not contain any of God. Imagine a corpuscle in a plant, coursing through the avenues of circulation, helpless to do otherwise than drift with the stream, saying, "Look at me; I am the whole thing! I am the seed, complete and perfect, ready to be harvested!" Poor, puny, conceited, independent corpuscle! The seed is perfect, the aggregation of thousands of corpuscles. The seed is the creator, possessing functions of self-reproduction, while the corpuscle is one among the thousands which must unite to produce the seed, the ultimate result.

It requires something stupendous to awaken the church sleepers. The modern church is non-progressive, and fails to read the signs of the times in the great events of the world, and in the alarming conditions in which the people of civilization find themselves at the close of the nineteenth century. The advent of the gigantic trusts wrests a few expressions from the churchmen—notes of alarm! When the members of the church find themselves handicapped in the pursuit of making money, by the corporations which are closing up the avenues of success of small concerns, it is time for the church to cry out in protest. It is now declared that the "rapid increase and intensification of all these social and industrial agencies which tend to make human life a burden of despair to the many and a material paradise to the few, all these things cannot but exert a baleful influence upon, and prove a hindrance to the progress of the kingdom of Christ upon earth." On the contrary, the more rapidly the trusts accomplish their work, the sooner the world enters the vortex of revolution, the sooner will the Kingdom come, of which the modern church is a shadowy reflex and perversion. The church is nearing the time of its destruction; it has idly drifted down the stream of human events, and apprehends no danger until the craft is actually in the rapids of a terrible Niagara—then it is too late to wake up!

The medical fraternity claims to have exterminated a number of diseases which once came in the form of epidemics. Black death, cholera, typhus, scurvy, and ague are enumerated. We do not honor the medical world with credit for the disappearance of these plagues. Diseases are the result of mental states; epidemics may rage in the mental world and manifest themselves in the physical bodies of humanity. Diseases may evolve into other forms, just as ideas and theories change form from generation to generation. If the specific forms of diseases which scourged humanity hundreds of years ago have nearly disappeared, the medical fraternity is face to face with diseases that are no worse, and they do not cure consumption, leprosy, cancer, and many other diseases. People are continually dying from the most common diseases known to the world of the nineteenth century, and the medical world is helpless. It is easy for physicians to claim credit for exterminating diseases which have run their course; but it is not so easy to clear themselves of the charge that they not only do not cure common diseases of the present time, but actually multiply human ills through the administration of drugs, and the united desire of the medical world for people to be sick!

English scientists are endeavoring to solve the problem of sound, and the methods employed are on a par with all other methods by which empiricists attack other great questions of the universe. By experimenting with sound reflections from the water's surface to mountain sides and fog banks, by ascending in balloons, the receiving of messages by means of wires, it is hoped that the true theory of sound may be evolved. The fact that scientists are still searching for the solution of the problem of what sound is, is proof that the so called scientists are not scientists, and that modern physics is nothing but guesswork. Men have battled with the sound question without a sound basis; they have not discovered the simple fact that sound is an energy, to which the organs of hearing become responsive through the generation of a subtle force in the auditory centers. Sound is not a mere mode of motion, a bombardment of the ear-drums by ether atoms, but is as much a substance as light, heat, electricity, magnetism, and other qualities of energy. The most superficial comprehension of the laws of Koreshan Alchemy reveals the obvious absurdity of modern physics, and the startling ignorance of the modern "scientific" mind.

Koreshanity, as a complete system of religio-science, which involves the application of its principles to all human affairs, cannot fail to supersede the fragmentary systems of religion, science, and social economy. In the modern world, astronomy is in opposition to the Bible. The religion of the church is entirely separate and distinct from the world of science. Astronomy is in the hands of atheists; religion is interpreted by clergymen who fight among themselves; the commercial world is in the hands of pirates, and the governments of the world are controlled by politicians. Modern society is disgraced and degraded by social impurities and sensualism, and reform is promulgated by fighting factions; education is a perversion of the true methods of mental development. The systems of the modern world are comprised of effete thought, in which there is no unity. It is obvious that true reform, the regeneration of humanity and the reconstruction of society, can only obtain through the application of a system which involves unity in itself, in all of the elements of religious, scientific, and social evolution. The fragments cannot do it, and there is no system of Universology but Koreshanity. It is the only hope of the world.

Astronomer Peabody concludes that the convexity of water is proven by the way in which a ship disappears when sailing from shore, and adds: "If the ship moved on any other surface than a convex surface, it would appear again in the telescope." We have in this quotation two admissions: First, that a vessel would disappear on some other surface than a convex surface, and second, that if the telescope should restore the invisible hull to view again, it would be a proof that the earth is not convex. If a vessel can disappear on a surface that is not convex, what becomes of the usual argument that it is convex because a vessel disappears hull down? The scores of experiments we have conducted demonstrate the fact that the invisible portions of a vessel beyond the horizon can be brought into full view; therefore, on the basis of the astronomer's admission, the earth is not convex. The cause of the phenomenon is a simple problem in visual perspective on a concave surface, curving at the ratio of eight inches to the mile. With these facts so easily accessible to the public, it will not be long before the world recognizes the force of the external demonstrations of the truth of Koreshan Astronomy.

The Koreshan discovery of the law of true atavism, or the recurrence of specific ancestral types in humanity, that is, the law of the involution of cause in the human world, and its demonstration by analogous recurrences in all other kingdoms in the universe, settles the question of the truthfulness of the claims of Jesus the Christ. We may know that he was manifest in the human world, through the known law which produces the result. The law of Messianic manifestation and function is as immutable as the law of the recurrence of the seasons and cycles in the physical universe. It is the central law of being and existence; and the truth of divine manifestations in the world is the greatest truth ever revealed to the human mind! It is simple in fundamentals, profound in its comprehensiveness, and complex in its application. The knowledge of the Messianic law is the key to the whole problem of life.

Koreshanity is the only system of Universology; so called systems of science, religion, and sociology are mere fragments and fallacies. The factions of fallacy are in conflict; the fallacious theories will not harmonize, and the diverse opinions of the world cannot constitute a complete system. Disintegration is a factor of death; chaos is not constructive. The world can only be redeemed through a system of organic unity, a system of genuine reform founded upon scientific principles.

Man can never enter the immortal state until he ceases to reproduce the old mortal form. Wheat remains wheat as long as it propagates itself; but through a passing over from the vegetable kingdom by appropriation, it may be transformed to human flesh, and enter a higher kingdom. The process of becoming immortal, is analogous to the process of transformation of wheat to substances of human life.

Nineteen hundred years ago, the Jews who professed a fatherhood in Abraham and a brotherhood among themselves, were a "generation of vipers." Today, the mortal corruptionists who claim God as their father, and a brotherhood of selfish, competitive factions, are as much worse, as God is greater than the ancient patriarch.

Cause is the life of all effect. God is the life and light of humanity; he manifests himself in the human world when life and truth become involved in unity. When so manifest, he is the Messiah, the God-man, the Sun of Righteousness. He is the focus of conserved human life, for the effect involves the cause.

People accustomed to believing without evidence, fail to believe when the evidence appears. The world has for centuries accepted the Copernican system of astronomy and the theology of the modern church, without asking for proof, and now rejects the demonstrations of Koreshan Science.

There can be no true reform without order; mobs can rapidly destroy old structures, but it requires specific knowledge of social architecture and construction and organized effort to erect temples of justice.

If genuine reform is not what the conceit of ignorance conceives it to be, it is not what conceited agitators desire.

The perfect humanity will appear when the natural and spiritual worlds enter into complete conjunction.

The world is passing through a critical stage of somnambulism.

Koreshanity is primitive Christianity reduced to absolute science.

The millionaire is an example of educated selfishness.

The righteous man is the tabernacle of God.

Koreshan Universology vs. Venusian Uniism.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Literary Light and its editor greet you. We believe with all our heart and soul that you are right. You are waging a good fight, and you are on the right track. We are always looking for the day that brings THE FLAMING SWORD. We read our copy and send it on to others. We believe that at least ten read our copy, and not less than eight are enthusiasts on the subject.

We enclose you a publication from a Pueblo freak, one Robert J. Burns. He claims to be "The Man from Venus." It is our own personal opinion, after a very careful reading of his "Psycho-Harmonic Mental Science," that he would be safer, and of vastly more use to the earth, if he were sent back to Venus! Will you be kind enough to tell us, please, through the columns of THE FLAMING SWORD, just what species Robert is? You will notice at the end of his story a very neat little invitation to send $1.00 (not the currency of Venus) for further information.

Readers of THE FLAMING SWORD cannot refuse to believe the gospel of KORESH because of the cost; for it seems to be as free as "Come ye to the water."—EDITOR Literary Light.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I send you a copy of my publication, the Psycho-Harmonic Scientist, for review in your columns. Pure Uniism is still comparatively an unknown quantity even among metaphysicians; but the time has arrived for its advent. A correspondent has asked me the question, "What is Koreshanity?" If you will send me a copy of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, I will review it in my paper and loan it out to others. I am not opposed to any system of advanced thought, though I have absolute ideas of my own to ventilate. Send me marked copy of your paper in which you review my mental science. I am,—ROBERT J. BURNS, The Man from Venus, Pueblo, Colo.

We publish the above letters from the two editors by way of introduction to the subject we are asked to discuss. Every system must be made to stand upon its own merits, or fall because of lack of foundation; and inasmuch as Koreshanity is a Universology and covers the entire ground, there is no standing room left for any other system. If we subject the Psycho-Harmonic system to a critical test from the basis of its own theory, we are but fair to the so called newcomer to the earth. It will not be our fault if the theory of the man from Venus is not in conformity with the absolute truth of the great universe in which we live.

We have examined the system of so called Uniism, set forth in the publication referred to. Its originator has condescended to visit the earth as a missionary from the planet Venus, in order to effect a permanent veto of the prevailing laws which invest the human mind with mortal and dying tabernacles; and although he is from Venus, he declares that Uniism, as he presents it, is the result of 5,000 years of progress in metaphysics; that as the "rising genius of the Occident," he has "solved the problems of existence;" that he is the formulator of the psycho-harmonic system of mental science, a system which "stands unique, monumental, scientific," "the crown and capstone of mento-scientific pyramids, the æonic efflorescence of destinal decree." Has he solved the problem? Is he the formulator of Uniism? Not if what he reveals concerning the prevailing system on the planet Venus be true. The most that he could claim is, that he has been taught Uniism on the planet whence he came; consequently, according to his own theory, he is not the originator of a system that has been in vogue in Venus for all time!

The key-notes of Uniism are: That there is but one principle in the universe, one universal consciousness, one will, one force; that the universe is comprised of the earth and other inhabited planets, with the usual Copernican paraphernalia; that mind fills universal space, and has spatial attributes of focalization in personalities. It is held that matter is spirit, made objective and tangible through the operation of the law of ideal investiture; that there is no evil; that the earth is the only abnormal planet; that God and man are one identity; that every man is God; that God may become immortal by asserting himself to be God, and recognizing the "harmonic norm" of the man from Venus; that enjoyment is the object, end, and aim of all existence; that abnormal dualism may express itself on the sensuous vibrational plane of tangible objectivity by abnormal will-determinants. It is claimed that death is simply an abnormal declination of vibration in the brain cells, and the consequent lapse of the three-dimensional objective body from the personal consciousness of the individual; that man is not the offspring of God, but potentially and actually is God, in his omniscience and omnipotence. The man from Venus holds that there is no dualism in the universe; that abnormal laws of dualism operative in the earth may be vetoed and set aside; that Uniism is the absolute truth; that all the desires and passions of humanity are divine concomitants of bodily existence, and that sensualism is not to be overcome.

The presentation of Uniism begins with the denial of dualism, while admitting that dualism does exist among the people of the earth, in both mind and body; that the dualistic concept is in the mind, which invests itself in a corresponding objective expression. The man from Venus occupies the strange, paradoxical position of being the perfect God from Venus, living in the world of dualism, the existence of which he denies as being a part of the true universal procedure. Although we are told distinctly that there is but one mind and one will, with unvarying quality of inherent unity, a portion of that mind lapses into dualism; the Almighty, the all-wise and the all-powerful, the very essence of universal "harmonic norm," so far forgets himself in the earth as to entertain erroneous conceptions concerning himself, and can only be elevated to proper appreciation of his rights and eternal privileges through studying the psycho-harmonic effluvia of a single personality, who has emigrated from the Venusian spatial altitude to acquaint the Almighty with the facts of the earth, of which the gods of Venus are admitted to be ignorant. When the psycho-harmonic vibrator returns to Venus, he will have many entertainingly new inhalations to ventilate. It seems that the perfect gods of Venus, although omniscient and omnipotent, are yet ignorant of the conditions which exist in the earth; for they know nothing of the character of mundane mental vibrations, never having heard of dualism. If the perfect men of Venus, under the influence of Uniism, know so little concerning the mental circum-gyrations in the earth, where effect is expressed from cause itself, what guaranty have we that the editor of the Psycho-Harmonic Scientist is able to tell us the truth concerning the existence of the three-dimensional objectivities with which we come in contact?

We maintain that the universe is a unit, a structured form, containing within itself all of the functions of perpetuity; that the universe is a great cell, the physical portion of which comprises the circumferential environ of all there is. Koreshanity is founded upon indisputable and tangible facts of scientific demonstration that the earth is concave, with all the planets, sun, moon, stars, comets, and nebulae emplaced within, to contribute their quota of energies to the existence of the whole. Consequently, there are no inhabited planets, and therefore, the originator of the psycho-harmonic mental science has always been in the earth, and hence his fancied acquaintance with the goddess of love, and the claim to having viewed himself in her golden mirror, are phases of nocturnal delirium which afflict the modern myopic metaphysical entities which are being rapidly metempsychosed in the direction of the ethereal states to which they aspire.

We hold to the absolute unity of Cause; that Cause is the supreme source of all phenomena, of all life on all planes. Koreshanity is the only true Unism, the absolutely true interpretation of the riddle of existence; we maintain that evil is as much a product of the divine mind as is good; furthermore, that the universe is eternal, and that progression and retrogression are co-ordinate factors in religious, moral, mental, physical, and ethnic development. Uniism and the dualism taught in the modern church are two extreme fallacies. Koreshanity is the "harmonic norm" of the divine science of all truth, differentiated from all other systems in that it is complete, rational, and comprehensible.

We maintain that there is no mind outside of vital organisms; that the spiritual world is in humanity; and that God in his highest degree of potentiality, is the perfect man, the true Individual, male and female in one personality; that the vidual or divided man is an abnormal state reached through human degeneracy; that God and man are one identity only as man progresses to the climax of human aspiration in the attainment of the immortal state of biunity of propagative functions in the flesh. We hold that all law is absolute, immutable, incapable of being vetoed or set aside, and that the manifestation of sin, sickness, death, and hell, is as necessary in the progress of humanity as is the manifestation of the opposites of these states. The object of all existence is use, with its concomitant enjoyments; that the delights and pleasures of the immortal state are for the specific purpose of producing the vital precipitate of the lower kingdoms and foundations, from which the immortal kingdom is periodically developed and upon which it is superstructured. The true cause is the unity of spirit and matter, the nexus between the two. The divine mind is as much the product of the activities and experiences and consciousnesses in the alchemico organic and the organo-vital worlds, as the physical cosmos and the world of humanity are the products of the divine mental activities and aspirations.

Koreshanity demonstrates the absoluteness of the law of opposites; it demonstrates the law of polarity. The law of opposites lies at the very foundation of all existence; and the effort on the part of mental scientists to disregard eternal law, and to affirm themselves to be what they know they are not, is a demonstration of how little they know of mental science! We demonstrate the absolute truth of the following postulates in the Koreshan Science of universal being and existence. The universe is composed of substance in two general states—spirit and matter; matter and spirit are interconvertible; spirit is matter sublimated through processes of transmutation, and matter is spirit reduced to form, the character and quality of which are determined by the quality of the energies and the character of the media of materialization. The two poles of existence are center and circumference, the pole of impression and the pole of expression; the pole of impression is the subjective pivot of consciousness. Existence is tangible and external; esse is the substance of internal being. Everything that has existence has form. There is no function without form; mind cannot act except through organic structure. Form and function are absolutely necessary to the perpetuity of existence. Matter is not the mere expression of mind, but it is the absolutely necessary pediment or continent; and its objectivity obtains through specific laws of mutations of mind and matter. Every form having function has been brought into existence by means of a corresponding form having corresponding functions. Every form has its opposite form and its co-ordinate form; and every function has its opposite function and its co-ordinate function.

The great central law of the universe, the central law of life and being, the very pivot of all law of activity and perpetuity, is, that all forces must flow from all circumferences to one center to be recombined, reformulated, and revitalized for the renewal of life. Upon this law depend all the activities of the universe. It is the law of involution, the absolutely necessary co-ordinate of evolution; it is the law of polarization, which necessitates the existence of the central sun of the physical universe, and the corresponding anthropotic Sun, the positive pole of human progress, the tangible Messiah, the Conservator of Life, the perfect rehabilitation of the supreme aggregation of progressive entities of humanity. Koreshanity alone, of all other systems, is emphatically Messianic; it is the opposite of metaphysical fads and fallacies which inculcate the essence of presumptuous conceit in the claim that every abnormal, vidual, sensual biped involves the fulness of the great Absolute, and which encourages moral and mortal degenerates to affirm that they possess divine omniscience and omnipotence, without a shadow of proof that they comprehend a single law upon which the existence of the universe depends!

The Immortality and Biunity of Jesus the Christ.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—How do you know that Jesus was biune—both male and female in one person, and that to become immortal it is necessary for present human forms to be transformed? If you can prove that Jesus was both male and female, you will certainly deal a heavy blow to those who aspire to become immortal without anatomical transformation.—SUBSCRIBER.

We answer this question from both a scientific and a Biblical point of view; for the claims of the Christ concerning his nature and function are demonstrated by scientific deductions from facts which obtain in Nature. Jesus taught the truth in the degree in which it was manifest in him; and if it be admitted that he was the teacher of truth, his own testimony concerning himself must also be true, as well as the records of his life and work, and the teachings of his disciples. Jesus came into the world through extraordinary processes, which are above the usual processes of human generation; he was born of a virgin, who was externally biune—he was produced from an ovum which was perfect, and susceptible of vitalization through the transmission of pneumo-psychic energies from the mind of Joseph, without the usual sex relation. What was He who was born through processes of parthenogenesis? He was the Almighty God, the everlasting Father.

He declared himself to be the promised seed, the resurrection and the life; and it was declared of him that he was both the bridegroom and the bride, because he was the divine marriage, the unity of both male and female in one flesh. He was the restoration of what man was originally, when they twain were one flesh. "Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female?" Jesus was the true individual, the undivided man, the offspring of Deity. Mortal men are vi dual,—that is, divided, widowed, divorced; hence the necessity of the religion or retying, in order to save man from the mortal state, the state of death. The men that the Almighty produces through processes of divine propagation, are in his image and likeness—they are like God in nature, possessing the same attributes and functions. That Jesus was one of the men so produced, is proved by the fact of his claim that he was the Son of God, the image of God; as such offspring he was God, the Word made flesh, the fulness of the Godhead bodily. If God himself is both male and female, then Jesus was both male and female. If God is not both male and female, and as Cause cannot put forth what is not in it, there could not be males and females existing in the world of effect.

If Jesus was the seed of humanity, he was biune,—for every seed that has ever been produced, is male and female in one form. If Jesus was mortal; if he was merely masculine in his functions, without the co-ordinate femininity in him, he was incapable of reproducing himself by planting in the human race, and consequently there could be no fruitage from his sowing, no more sons of God, no possible attainment to immortality. It is evident that Jesus did not propagate himself on the mortal plane; and if he did not possess the functions of the higher generation, then the Messianic man has become extinct; for if the Christ be not raised from the dead, through processes of regeneration from the seed sown, our hope is vain. The very fact that Jesus was planted in humanity for the purpose of reproducing himself at the end of the age in 144,000 sons of God, is proof that the divine generation or regeneration is of a higher order, and that the functions of reproduction on that plane were the united functions of the male and the female in the person of the Seed-man.

From a purely scientific basis, we affirm that the claims of Jesus to possession of divine attributes were absolutely true. We know, through laws of human progress and laws of correspondence between man and the physical cosmos, not only that a manifestation was due nearly 2,000 years ago, but also that that personality was immortal. The initial point of the constellation Aries was then at the head of the Zodiac, the point of zero in right ascension in astronomical longitude. Consequently, the man who fulfilled the preceding cycle was the head of the anthropic Zodiac as the supreme Creator of the universe. Koreshan Astro Anthroposophy defines specifically the nature and character of the matured fruit of the Tree of Life; the laws are written in humanity, in the stars, in the path of the solar precession, and in the circumference of the great cell we inhabit.

The physical universe is self-perpetuating; it possesses both male and female functions, and reproduces itself eternally. The central sun is masculine, while the moon, the great wombic structure or shell of the earth, is feminine. The physical cosmos possesses all the functions of the perfect man, and the perfect man possesses all the functions of the cosmos; because the universe is the expression of the perfect man, and the perfect man is the involution of the universe. If the universe is both male and female, the involution is biune. The physical universe is eternal, and man cannot become immortal until he reaches that state of perfection, in the possession of all the attributes and functions which inhere in the cosmos.

We maintain that the existence of two sexes in the world of mortal humanity is proof of the unity of the two sexes in the great Cause; if the functions of the male and the female, as at present obtaining in the world of vi dual humanity, constitute an evolution from Cause, then the Cause itself must periodically involve in unity, the functions of both the male and the female. Jesus belonged to a superior kingdom, the fifth universal kingdom; he was the archetype of the new race, the 144,000 virgins, the men-women (from vir, man, and gune, woman). The fact that the 144,000 sons of God are men-women, is proof that the everlasting Father of the 144,000 was a man-woman, a virgin.

What is the Second Death?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Will you please explain what is the "second death?" Who will go into it, and when?—Reader.

The modern church holds that the second death is the future hell, where it is supposed that death does not occur at all, because the unfortunates are consigned to eternal life in torment. The Adventists conclude that the second death is the death of the wicked after they have been resurrected from the cemeteries and taken away somewhere in space to judgment. All the usual ideas of the second death begin with the assumption that the mortal dissolution of a man is the first death, and of course it follows that the second death is the next death that the same vi dual experiences! But how would it be where humanity is re-embodied thousands of times in a cycle? what would be the first and the second death?

There are two kingdoms in the universe of humanity: The lower human or mortal kingdom, and the higher human or kingdom of God, which is comprised of immortal, biune men, the sons of God. Nineteen hundred years ago, there was manifest in humanity the archetype of the new genus or race of men. He was at that time the only begotten Son of God, the only representative of the higher kingdom. He was from above, while all the other personalities in the world were from beneath. The higher kingdom is first, or prior to the lower. Jesus was the head of the higher kingdom, the Seed to be sown in humanity that he might reproduce himself and manifest at the end of the dispensation as the 144,000 sons of God. He said of himself, "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The divine Seed must die in order to reproduce itself. The first death, then, is the death of the Seed of the first or higher kingdom; it is the death of the Christ in mortal humanity, and the first resurrection is the resurrection of the Almighty from that first death.

The second death is the mortal state of the lower humanity,—the second death is hell. It is not a question as to who will go into it, for that death is the present condition of the world, and all are in it; it is not future, but now. The avenues of escape from the second death are opened at the end of every dispensation, by the Messiah of the age. A group of progressive humanity is raised out of it, and over such the second death has no power; such are not "hurt" of it, but escape by processes of overcoming death. Koreshanity proceeds on the basis of science, not only in logical processes of determining what the second death is, but also in the work of overcoming it, and attaining to immortality here in the natural world.

Chat With Readers.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce of the Koreshan Unity.

The Industrial Co-operative Union of America is succeeded in the conduct of the Koreshan industries on Lake street, Chicago, by the BUREAU OF EQUITABLE COMMERCE, which is the commercial department of the Koreshan Unity. Koreshans everywhere will now feel a deeper interest in the industries of the West Side Koreshan Colony, involved as they are in the great System which must ultimately control the commerce of the world. The Bureau of Equitable Commerce is entering upon an era of success in the scientific demonstration of Koreshan commercial principles, and the industries under its control are assuming such proportions as to require a great number of co-operators; and these must come from the circumference of our friends whose hope is in the final triumph of Koreshanity.

We desire a concentration of our forces in the establishment of a system of commercial relations as the basis of success of the entire System of Koreshan Reform; we desire the co-operation of our people who are scattered throughout the world, and who are struggling for existence. The Koreshan industries provide employment and remuneration for those of our people who have the courage to abandon the competitive system and enter a System of co-operation founded on scientific principles. It is not sufficient to assist in the promulgation of the truth through the limited opportunities utilized by our friends. Koreshanity is supremely practical, and to be of benefit, its principles must be applied directly to the lives of all who accept them, and to social, industrial, and commercial relations. Application of the principles of Koreshan Science in the departments of industry and commerce is not merely for the benefit of the organization; it is for the benefit of the individuals who enter it, and finally for the benefit of the world at large.

The conditions in the world are growing worse; the opportunities for success in business or for obtaining employment in the competitive world, are growing more and more limited; and minds, soon or later, feel the instinctive impulse to escape the hells of competition. The avenue is open to you; it is for you to think about, and decide to cut loose from the world of competition, and enter the service of humanity in accordance with the principles of genuine Scientific Reform.

Has Your Subscription Expired?

Very frequently it is a matter of oversight that subscriptions expire and remain unpaid; weeks and even months go by, with regular visits of THE FLAMING SWORD; and in moments of appreciation of its contents, the business relations of the reader and the Publishing House are forgotten. Our relations are reciprocal; it would not be creditable to the reputation we have gained, if we were to forget for several weeks, to issue THE FLAMING SWORD. Of course, we occupy the hub of a great circumference of interest; there are constant demands upon us from our readers, which stir us up to constant effort to produce a magazine of supreme interest. Our responsibilities are greater than yours; we have greater anxieties. The heart, and finally the whole system, are impoverished where the circulation is poor; and when returns from subscriptions are not prompt, we feel it!

The date on the printed address tab is the date of expiration of each subscription. We would be glad if remittances were made by readers, near the date which appears on the wrapper; this would enable us to make rapid strides in the way of contemplated improvements in THE FLAMING SWORD, as well as in the progress of our work. The subscriptions due us are numerous, and if each one whose date is present or in the past, would respond, with but little effort, with a year's subscription, it would help us to perform that which requires great effort on our part. During the coming few weeks, the remainder of the summer, and the fall, we anticipate large returns from our readers, not only with their own subscriptions, but with numerous new ones solicited by those interested in the promulgation of the greatest Truth ever revealed to humanity!

The Saturday Evening Post.

Among the many interesting and excellent literary productions in the issue of August 5, is an anecdotal sketch by Amos J. Cummings, of the Hon. Thomas B. Reed, ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives, containing a number of incidents of the ready wit and retort with which he met the attacks of his opponents. The sketch impresses one with the unique character which ruled the House with a rod of iron, and brings the reader close to the personality in his daily work in Congress. We have been very much interested in Robert Barr's series, "My Travels and Troubles in the Orient;" the current paper is of Jerusalem, and artistically presents to view interesting points in the capital of the religious world; the reader goes to the Holy Sepulcher, the Mosque of Omar, Mount of Olives, and the Tombs of the Kings. Joseph Medill's reminiscences of Lincoln are of special interest, secured by Mr. H. I. Cleveland in an interview with Medill just before his death. The third paper by Lyman J. Gage on Our National Real Estate Deals, gives some insight into the purchase by the United States from Spain, of the territories of Florida and Louisiana, and how the government officials were subjected to the same criticism that the present administration is subject, because of the purchase of the Philippines. It now turns out that the purchase of territory from foreign countries, such as Florida, Louisiana, Alaska, the annexation of Texas, and other portions of the United States, are landmarks in the history of the development of the American nation. The Post of August 12 contains the first of a series of twelve papers on the Making of a Journalist, by Julian Ralph, "the best reporter in the world," who has been in the newspaper field for twenty-five years. The series will be interspersed with numerous reminiscences and anecdotes, and will be of special interest and value to all in the field of journalism. We highly recommend the Saturday Evening Post to our readers; it is a superb 16-page, illustrated weekly, of the highest class, conservative, dignified, and clean. 5 cents per copy; yearly, $2.50; published by the Curtis Publishing Co., Philadelphia.

Leslie's Weekly.

A subject of special illustration in the current number is the magnificent and luxurious home on Staten Island for old sailors; it is called the Sailor's Snug Harbor, overlooking the bay of New York. A double-page illustration gives a splendid idea of this great institution. Another double-page by the famous war artist, Christy, illustrates a stirring fight in the Philippines. Other pictures also illustrate the Philippines; President McKinley's outing on Lake Champlain; Yale-Harvard athletic contests in London; a handsome and original page of photographs by amateurs; the newsboys' strike in New York; Stanlaws' American Girl series; the Dewey decorations in New York, and the yacht Shamrock. The letter-press consists of the usual excellent departments, thrilling sea stories, and other special features of surpassing interest.

Commerce,

[Successor to the Industrial Co-Operative Union of America.]

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and is in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural; in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Structure and Function of the Human Brain.

Part I.

Fundamental Factors of Analysis of the Brain; Nature and Character of the Individual Man; Outline of Premises Introducing the Study of Cerebral Anatomy.

THE INDIVIDUAL structure when perfected, is the universe in miniature. It is not an epitome or abridgment, but the universe entire and complete. By the individual structure we mean the integral or whole being, in whom are united the two principles (male and female) in one form. This is the perfectly regenerated and reconstructed being—the undivided one, possessing both the image and the likeness of God. The male and the female as they now exist separately, manifest in two forms, are viduals; that is, widowed or divided. The individual is the undivided, the unwidowed; the vidual is the divided or widowed. In the Koreshan System, such distinction is always maintained, the two distinct states or qualities never being confounded.

If we study the universe from its least form, the individual, and are able to comprehend its parts, we may comprehend the corresponding universals through the great law of analogy. We cannot study the macrocosm, the great universe, absolutely from the vidual, which is only a part of the microcosm, for in our study of the macrocosm from the microcosm or individual, we are compelled to observe it through the instrumentality of the vidual, the male and female in two separate forms; and it is only as we bring the two into harmony, relating the one to the other in a condition of completeness, that we reach a knowledge of universal form and function.

The vidual is made up primarily of two manifest forms, the cell and the fiber. The cell is spherical, the fiber cylindrical; and every form in the universal human structure is a modification of one or both of these primary conditions. The cell is a little globule comprised of layers; a miniature egg, so to speak, more spherical than the ordinary egg, though of that order. The human body is chiefly composed of such corpuscular forms. The gray substance of the brain is comprised entirely of cells or globules. If you desire to observe the universe in its extreme minuteness or least form, you will find it in one of these little corpuscles. They are the archetypes of structure and function.

The great or physical universe, involving all the activities in it, as an entirety, is a shell with a nucleus and atmospheres; that is, it is a great corpuscle expanded, magnified, and constituting a perfect brain. This is the great physical universe, with the sun as a center, the earth's strata as its circumference, and its atmospheres, the oxynitrogen and hydrogen, and the various aerial forces, as intermediate spheres. We have a central sun (the nucleus) and the circumferential shell, with the intermediate atmospheres and force strata between that sun and the circumference. These intermediate atmospheres and strata, embracing the stellar and lunar systems, have their poles of focalization corresponding to the points of focalization in the individual. One is like the other, so that in the study of the vidual and the individual man you are studying the universe, and obtaining a knowledge of its form and functions; a knowledge of its form with the connected manifestations of activity residing in, and governing the life of the whole.

There are some things in the macrocosm which you cannot reach directly. It is only by a true interpretation of known facts, and a knowledge of the laws of correspondence and analogy, that we relate the individual with the individual, and both to the great universe, of which the perfect individual is the exact exponent. It is a common idea among theologians and scientists, that God is unknown and unknowable. The finite mind is capable of knowing some things they say, but it can not know God. We say, that the finite mind has reached all things. The finite mind is the finished mind,—that is the meaning of the word; the finished mind has reached all things. On this point, Koreshan Science differs from all other so called sciences. The unknown and unknowable God we know nothing about, and do not want to know anything about him. The statement that he is unknown and unknowable, involves the idea that we cannot know anything about him. We have no use for such a god. The God we desire is the known and knowable God, the Christ, the God-man, the man generated as the manifest Jesus the Christ, who was the beginning of the Christian dispensation, and was planted in the race that he might bring forth the eternal sons. Therefore, our God is known and knowable; and because the known God was manifest as the Father of the children of the resurrection, we believe that when these children become manifest they are the reproductions of Deity himself.

When the process of regeneration is perfected, the children of the resurrection (the God-men) will be manifest, reproduced, recreated in the image and likeness of God; just like him, for "we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him." We shall be like him when God's image and likeness shall appear in us as the regenerated sons of God. God will then be sanctified in his people. When this is manifest in us, we will begin to have a knowledge of God, and find fulfilled in ourselves these words: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." The mind that was in Him was the mind of God, the mind of both the Father and the Son; and as this mind develops in us, we become capable of comprehending the laws of God and making an application of them to life; not an extrinsic, but an intrinsic life,—the life of God, God manifest in the flesh.

A desire to study Koreshan Science for the purpose of healing the sick is commendable; but there is something more important than even the knowledge of the law of cure, and that is the knowledge that will enable one to abolish disease and death in himself, and impart the law of life and salvation to others who will receive and apply it. It is better not to be sick, than to be sick and get well. That state of things, however, would spoil the silver shrine-making for the mental healers. The more physicians there are, the more sickness there is. This statement will apply as well to metaphysicians, christian scientists, and mental healers, as to physicians, for the reason that the tendency of any profession, conducted simply as a business, induces the mind to desire as much business as possible. Thus a great business involves much sickness. If mental force is powerful for any purpose, and is directed toward therapeutics, the basis of which is a business through which wealth may be accumulated, it becomes a disastrous potency. If the action of mind upon mind can restore to health, then the action of mind upon mind can also create disease and death. It is, therefore, no light responsibility that is assumed when the attempt is made to grasp and wield the mighty two-edged sword of spiritual power, which cuts either way.

Any person attempting to heal another, should be in such a state of unselfishness as to preclude the possible taint of mental force by unholy and perverse impulse. The Koreshan System of cure has a view to the perfect healing of the entire mass or body politic, by eradicating from the organic whole the very principle of selfishness which lies at the bottom, and constitutes the foundation of universal corruption. There is at the center or seat of life, in a diseased person, something buried which permeates the whole body, and which makes every corpuscle of that body a diseased one. To cure a diseased person, we should not devote our efforts to the healing of the individual cells of the mass, but to restore to health the central and controlling cell of the body, whence the corrupt and vitiating force goes forth, that in its stead the invigorating and life-giving stream may flow. So in our desire and corresponding purpose and effort to impart life to the universal man, our energies should be directed toward the central evil and its location, by the removal of which the whole body may be subject to the vitalizing force of recuperation.

Humanity can never be restored so long as the subtle, insidious forces of fallacy and evil prey upon the organic constitution; a force or energy constantly impelling people to enter into competition with each other for the support of life, and even beyond this, to the accumulation of unnecessary riches, heaped up and hoarded through the stimulus of sordid and exorbitant greed.

The special point for consideration in this number of our series, is internal respiration. We intend, if possible, to enable you to clearly comprehend its science. Mental therapists, metaphysicians, and christian scientists, who to any very marked degree have been successful in the treatment of cases, have experienced the sensation of a peculiar welling up of force in the body. In the treatment of cases, peculiar sensations of magnetic, electric, or spiritual vibrations are felt, sometimes originating, apparently, in the body, but often proceeding from the head, according to peculiarity of personal temperament. Those with whom these vibrations seem to originate in the body, are subjects of bodily splenic respiration; the spleen being the center of the system to which this peculiar respiration belongs. It is the result of an excessive destruction, in the healer, of the red corpuscle, and its transformation to recuperative or dynamic energy. Its cause is concentration and continuity of thought, specifically directed and co-ordinated with the patient's own desire.

The spleen in the body is the correspondent of the organ in the brain which constitutes the center of illumination, the generator of light. The word is from the Greek word splene, the signification of which is to shine, to be illuminated, or to illumine. The spleen in the body is the generator and reservoir of electric force, and is the point where the red corpuscle is transformed to energy before a succeeding transformation to the white or lymphatic corpuscle. When the arterial or bright red corpuscle enters the spleen, it becomes, through the function of that organ, transformed to force. This energy is then conducted to the duodenum, and in the alimentary canal reformed to the white blood or lymphatic cell. This is the ordinary and continuous function and relation of these organs. An excessive augmentation of this function and change is internal or splenic vibration, respiration, or breathing.

The American Nation and the Race Problem.

Racial Prejudice Running Rampant; a Plea for American Tolerance and Patience in the Civilization of the Negro, the Indian, and the Malay.

L. E. BORDEN.

THE WHOLE country thrills with horror at the South Amherst tragedy. A beautiful young girl has been brutally murdered, and her home devastated by flames. The destroyer was one of an alien race, an Indian, and curses both loud and deep must follow him and his people. "No more Indian labor because it is cheap," they say. "Keep the savages out West on the reservations where they belong. The sooner they become extinct, the better." The sentiment of the West is no less emphatic, and declares loudly that the only good Indian is a dead one. "Let them go East and carry on the abandoned farms of New England. Let the Easterners try them for neighbors,—that would soon cure them of all disposition to gush over the noble savage."

Race prejudice runs rampant in both sections, and none consider that the only palliation of Lakahpuer's offense is in his heredity; the fact that he was descended from a long line of chiefs trained in the arts of barbaric warfare, that he had only a smattering of formal education to counteract the vicious habits of generations of ancestors, is some excuse for him. Frank Almy had no such excuse. He came of the dominant Anglo-Saxon race, with centuries of Christian civilization at his back; and his foul murder of Christie Worden, a few years ago, belied, apparently, every principle of human progression. The circumstances in both cases were so nearly parallel that the recent outrage instantly revived the memory of the former. Both tragedies took place in New England, and in both, the assassin was the hired man, admitted with simple friendliness according to the custom of the country, into free association with the family of his employer. In both cases the jealous frenzy of a rejected lover took a cowardly revenge upon an innocent girl. From the point of view of the ethnologist, is not the white man's crime doubly heinous?

Race prejudice lynches the Negroes in our southern states, for crimes that are also committed by white men; it pursues the Jews with malignant hatred, and longs to exterminate the Indian; it is, in short, a most foolish and unreasonable superstition that should be dissipated by a slight consideration of ethnic principles. Superiority of culture and endowments is not peculiar to the white race, although just at present that race is in the ascendent. The great civilizations of the past were built up by the colored races, for each race enjoys its period of ascendancy when it reaches its culmination, subsequently to decline. The Indians are now degenerate, and on the point of extinction, but they are the remnant of the great Adamic people that flourished ages ago and knew the secrets of the universe. Although they are passing away, a new red race will be formed through the laws of ethnic infiltration to succeed them, for the five great racial types are never lost.

The Anglo-Saxon people is the most complex product of race infiltration—that is, it was produced by the amalgamation of a greater number of nationalities, which accounts for its dominant qualities. The more complex the product, the higher in kind, is a general law. By virtue of its dominance and culture, it owes a moral debt to all inferior types that need its protection—the eternal debt of the strong to the weak, that no prejudice can obliterate, no crime can cancel.

The United States is now confronted by three different aspects of the race problem: The Negro in the South, the Indian in the West, and finally, the Malay in the Philippines claim the wisest thought, the most judicious guardianship. The nation's wards are a source of trouble and perplexity; so are most children to their parents, and the task of bringing up a child involves a full measure of discipline and experience to the parent. This country cannot shirk the moral responsibility of providing for the undeveloped peoples within its borders, ample means for self-improvement, legislative justice, and a fair chance to follow their aspirations along every avenue of attainment. It must meet with patient hopefulness any outburst of native weakness, remembering that God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth.

There is, indeed, a primary classification of mankind that antedates race distinctions and shows their futility, ranking all men as progressive or retrogressive. This is not equivalent to the orthodox division into saints and sinners. No man is under condemnation, in a scientific sense, for all are fulfilling their cycle of development. According to this view, each individual passes through successive incarnations in the descending scale, until the limit is reached, when he begins to ascend, reaching his completion after ages of experience, in the divine consciousness. Retrogressive spirits are not confined to any particular people, and the white race has its share—enough to preclude arrogance.

The July Forum contains an article on the "Future of the Negro," written by a colored man who worked in the cotton fields of Alabama as a slave, Mr. W. H. Councill, the distinguished president and founder of Normal College, Ala., one of the best known educational institutions for the Negro. It is a pathetic showing. President Councill, after showing by statistics that the Negro has given abundant evidence of his capacity for civilization, sadly resumes the situation in these words: "Whether North, South, East, or West be his ambition, the Negro's aspirations are chained to a stake, are circumscribed by Anglo-Saxon prejudice and might."

Who will gainsay this statement? Judge Tourgee said that the number of white men in this country who favored absolute justice and fairness in all things, to the colored race, did not reach ten thousand. The majority are too blinded by prejudice to feel that the white man is his brother's keeper, by every law of moral progress.

The Malays of the Philippines are supposed to have a strain of Japanese blood; they are eager for education, and according to a German writer, less illiterate than their former rulers, the Spaniards. Their proud, sensitive natures are quick to resent the slightest manifestation of racial arrogance, and they seem to think that, given the white man's opportunities for culture, the Malay could easily surpass him in the course,—in fact, the white man seems to them a very poor specimen of Christianity and evolution. The annexation of the Philippines complicates the race problem, and calls imperatively for broader and more scientific methods of dealing with the colored races.

The Dedication and Education of Children.

The Dedication of Koreshan Children to the New Church and State, and Education in Science and Industry for the Service of Humanity.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

I will not go up until the child be weaned, and then I will bring him, that he may appear before the Lord, and there abide forever. * * * And when she had weaned him she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and one bottle of wine, and brought him unto the house of the Lord in Shiloh, and the child was young. And they slew a bullock, and brought the child unto Eli. * * * For this child I prayed; and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of him. Therefore also have I lent him to the Lord; as long as he liveth he shall be lent to the Lord. And he worshiped the Lord there. * * * Samuel ministered before the Lord, being a child, girded with a linen ephod. * * * And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favor both with the Lord, and with men.—I Sam. i: 22, 24, 27, 28: and ii: 18, 26.

A CHILD to be well born must primarily be desired from the Lord, and for the Lord. Koreshan Science teaches that the sole legitimate use of the sex functions in the domain of the mortal, sensual life, is the propagation of its species according to the science of the laws of the highest physiological development on that plane of existence. It also teaches that children born on the plane of mortality may, in the fulness of time, be absorbed into, and reborn from the sphere of immortal being, through obedience to the science of the laws of immortality. It is the privilege, therefore, of the disciples of KORESH who have children to train, to provide them with an education far in advance of that obtainable from the educational institutions of modern Christian civilization.

Koreshanity exalts the Decalogue, as exemplified by our Lord Jehovah and scientifically analyzed by his Anointed, as indicating the perfect standard of human rectitude to be attained by divine or scientific education. The first and all-comprehensive commandment of the Decalogue exacts from the entire being, supreme love to God, scientifically expressed in uses of love to the neighbor. This supreme love demands from the worshiper of the Deity of humanity, the surrender to the service of God, of the best we can offer on all lines. Nothing is held dearer to the heart of mortal parents than the children of legitimate desire. The first and supreme right of such children is to be dedicated to the service of God's humanity, as the expression of the parent's supreme love to God.

The true Koreshan, then, should not regard his children as belonging primarily to himself, but to God's humanity. The first thing to be thought of in connection with the recognition of this fact is, how may the child best be trained to realize that it must be about the business of its divine parentage, and what is the best method of inducing it to continually worship God in the service of the neighbor? The first duty of the Koreshan educator, is to teach the child to perform cheerfully and efficiently all the uses of love for which it reveals capability. The only ambition worthy of cultivation and stimulation in the child, is to excel in the quality of its service.

Koreshan Science reveals that all mortal humanity is conceived in the fires of hell, through the lusts of the flesh, and in ignorance of the laws of even the highest type of mortal being. As in all humanity conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity, the dominant tendency of the spirit of their mortal flesh is to descend from generation to generation, until the wastes of proliferation become appalling, the pruning hook of the Almighty and the Flaming Sword appear for the salvation of the animal life of Deity. This persistent sensual descent ultimates in a humanity of intense lustful selfishness, and a desperate wickedness filling the whole earth with embodiments of violence and radical wrongs. These ultimates of mortality are described by the apostle Paul in the following language:

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.

The dominant impulses of all the children of today, when critically analyzed, are evil continually. This may seem a hard saying. The children about us, when untutored by the law, are to the untutored mortal judgment, so bright, sweet, and attractive, yet the brightest and sweetest, when weighed and tested by the divine standard, will be found wanting and inherently wicked, a veritable devil, a child of disobedience, under the curse, and doomed to a corruptible dissolution unless it can be educated to obey the laws of immortality and endure to the end, to the point of terminal transformation, when the "vital spark of heavenly flame" shall cause this mortal to put on immortality, and this corruptible, incorruptibility. Few Koreshans as yet are true enough to Koreshanity, or devoted enough to the real welfare of their children, to do gladly what Hannah of Scripture record did with her much-desired child. She gladly, with a song of thanksgiving, dedicated her child to the Lord, to serve in his temple.

God's ultimate temple, of which all temples made with hands have been but types and symbols, is the Grand Man about to be formed, by applied science, in the image and likeness of God. This temple is to be built of living stones, which stones are fashioned like the Lord Jesus Christ—the righteous, the chief corner-stone, by obedience to the laws of life and immortality. From his infancy to his death upon the cross, the Lord lived in the constant recognition of the claims of the law of the full salvation of the body, soul, and spirit of God's humanity. He rebuked the selfish spirit of parental anxiety by the query, Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? and revealed the breadth of his divine family love, by saying, He that doeth the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my father and mother, my sister and my brother.

Koreshans are called upon by the same laws of salvation from mortality to immortality, to assemble themselves together in communistic and co-operative groups or Ecclesias, and to perform—without money and without price—all the practical uses of love of which they are capable according to their gifts and callings. They are called upon to part their accumulations of wealth according to the needs of their fellows, and pre-eminently according to the collective needs of their divine service as heralds of salvation, a mighty factor of which is the establishment of co-operative industries for the destruction of the money power.

If this groupate system is essential to the salvation of the adults in the church of Christ, the Church Triumphant, then it is equally essential to the salvation of their children through training in obedience to the law; and schools for children should be little communistic industrial communities, mothered and fathered by the most scientifically cultured and magnanimous teachers to be found in the father-mother,—church and state united for the salvation of generations to come. In these industrial schools or communities, every child should—at the age of seven, by scientific instruction—be sufficiently useful to legally entitle it as the reward of uses performed, to all the comforts and luxuries of life that the wealth and love of the parental church and state can provide. All the sciences and arts should be learned in such schools, through their practical application to the uses of life. Geography, history, geology, botany, etc., should be learned through the recreations of travel, under the most enlightening auspices; and the development of the vidual mind and body should be regulated by the vidual degree of ability, and the spirit of investigation awakened by the mental suggestions of maturer minds and the appeals of Mother Nature.

The loves of children should be broadened and regulated by that most marvelous science of life, the science of reincarnation and re-embodiment, for the wisdom of experience by which all the degrees and qualities of human excellence are developed. No science can develop more magnanimity of judgment, nor better prevent the waste of mental energy in indiscreet maudlin sympathies, than the science of the law of reincarnation. The supreme love of which the human being is capable, must be awakened in the child by the science of the origin and destiny of the created universe, and the science of the cross and passion of Almighty love. This science must result in the purification of the mind from the dominion of the lusts of the flesh, and the consequent purification of the flesh by its subjection to the dominion of the purified mind. To this end, the sex separation of children conceived in sin, ministers, when attended by the polarization of all their developing sex energies in the person of their Father-Mother God, their Prophet and Savior, which may be effected in response to scientific theological instruction.

The science of the divine use of polarized sex energy can awaken, even in the mind of a child, the hope of being born an immortal, through the manifest Motherhood of God,—the Church Triumphant now invisible. It is essential, then, that all Koreshans who hope for immortality, remember that the Almighty has declared, he who loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me,—the one immortal and the eternal, invisible.

It is written, forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. The day referred to is at hand, and the voice of Elohi is reasoning with the world that now is, of righteousness and judgment. If we would escape the judgment of condemnation, we must arise and do works meet for repentance, and remember that one of the works required by the law is the surrender of our children to the service of their God and his humanity. They must be taught to purify themselves from the lusts of the flesh and the pride of an inglorious mortality. For the schools of the Koreshan Ecclesia, we need teachers strong in body and mind, and most tender in heart, to represent to the children dedicated to the Lord, the divine Motherhood of the heart of Deity. This is a call to service, to the readers of THE FLAMING SWORD whose hearts respond to the desire of the High Priest of the Koreshan Ecclesia, to establish schools such as we have described.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE REPUBLIC of France has afforded its people no safeguard against the despotism of its military power; injustice has reigned, and persecuted the innocent. A gigantic conspiracy, originating in the corrupt heart of the nation, with its anti-Semitic sentiments, succeeded in disgracing the man chosen as the victim. The elements of revolution and of war still exist in France; and the proud nation, the sister of Spain, is being stirred, and its foundation shaken. Judgment has come upon the conspirators, and the dark plot, the blot of France, is being uncovered. The new trial of Captain Dreyfus is fatal—fatal to the men who have wounded him in the great contest for life, after the victim was deprived of his sword. Armless and without uniform, he has fought the battle through his friends. While Dreyfus was suffering tortures on Isle du Diable in the western hemisphere, a powerful mental battery was formed in France, which has generated the X-rays which are now penetrating the core of French militarism and exposing to the view of the world the men who are guilty of flagrant crimes against justice. The judgment hall at Rennes is open; the eyes of the world are upon the central character, and the sympathy of the world goes out to the new hero. The members of the French cabinet of five years ago, are endeavoring to raise a storm of indignation against the prisoner now all but free; they came upon the witness stand to tie the cords more tightly about the limbs of their victim, but instead, the thongs are fastening about themselves. One by one, like moths about the candle, the conspirators appear at Rennes, and expose themselves and scorch their wings. The hand of the assassin has unsuccessfully attacked the counsel for the defense, and added new evidence that the conspirators are making a final struggle to hide their own dark deeds of five years ago. The world is rejoicing at the prospects of freedom of Captain Dreyfus, rejoicing that he triumphs over his enemies. It will be to the honor of France if she humiliates and punishes the traitors; it remains to be seen whether a semblance of justice, or politics has the greater weight. France is not alone in her corruption; her sister nations of Europe and America are in the toils, in the throes of revolution, bound by the money power; all are alike nearing the final convulsions which will destroy them. Until then there is no room for absolute justice; until then, there can be no genuine peace. Many surprising things are yet to be brought to light; in the heart of nations, cess-pools of vice, corruption, and political intrigue exist, which menace the peace and liberty of the world. Christendom itself fosters the great institutions of modern injustice, adds the stain of hypocrisy, and increases the shame of the civilized world.

Every time the physical world produces extraordinary phenomena, the scientific world engages itself to produce new speculations. The recent eruptions of Mauna Loa and Mt. Vesuvius furnish some excuse for the new geological theory by Prof. Garrett P. Serviss, concerning the cause of earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. He has abandoned the old idea that the earth is a ball of fire ensphered by a thin crust or cooled stratum; he holds that the earth is solid all the way through, but substitutes for the popular molten mass, hypothetical rivers of fire, flowing around beneath the earth's surface like blood in the human circulation. The outlets of these veins or rivers are the various active volcanoes of the world. In this way he connects the great volcanic systems, and endeavors to account for disturbances all around the world when a terrific eruption takes place in any one of the great volcanic outlets. In his theory he runs the veins to suit the earthquake territories; and looks for a final blast of subterranean furnaces, the final convulsions of mother earth, after which the earth will lapse into a state of barrenness which corresponds to the Copernican lunacy concerning the condition of the moon! Are there such rivers of fire beneath the earth's surface, connecting all the vulcan vents? There is as much difference between the theory of Prof. Serviss and the truth, as there is between the old style telegraphy and wireless telegraphy. Hitherto, it has been necessary to tangibly connect all the telegraph offices by wires; but it is possible to telegraph without wires. The volcanoes telegraph to each other reports of their eruptions without the subterranean circulations of molten matter! Earthquakes are electrical disturbances in the earth. A volcano in action communicates, through electro-magnetic currents, vibrations which set on fire the combustibles in another volcanic region, and two or more eruptions may take place simultaneously without veins of molten circulation between them.

The labor unions cannot continue to strike, destroy property, murder their brothers, and boycott the product of the non-union workingmen who require employment as much as the members of the unions, without placing themselves entirely on the side of anarchy and lawlessness. It is but natural to the heart of the semi-civilized when driven to desperation, to resort to force; and, constitutionally, it is the duty of the American government to suppress organizations which incite violence and riots. It is a notorious fact that the labor world is decidedly opposed to the millionaire, the trusts, and the government; the elements of labor are filled with the spirit of denunciation of everything that is not directly in the interests of the unions. It is also a fact that the government and the money power are allied, forming a supreme power of control, which will endeavor to enforce the decrees of the combination at all hazards. In these existing conditions we find the elements of the world's most stupendous conflict. Capital is dependent upon labor, for labor, in its last analysis, is capital; the government is dependent upon the people for support, for the government, ostensibly, is the people. The friction between the capitalists and the masses, between the usurping powers and the people, increases; the gulf widens, the breach becomes more and more impossible of repair. We are hastening toward the close of the old order—toward the conflict in which the forces of the contesting powers will go down to destruction. There is no hope of adjustment, until the forces have been expended in the struggle. Justice will be meted out through a violent social storm which will sweep the world. The New Order will arise through scientific social architecture and reconstruction, after the obstacles have been removed, and the building sites cleared of modern rubbish.

Has man a double self? Is there an inner man? Is it the other self that dreams, that arises in anger, and that commits crimes for which the better self suffers? These are questions asked by the society of psychical research. It is supposed that there is a shadowy self which is the subject of all psychic phenomena,—the unknown chamber into which all the mysteries of the universe may be placed out of the way. It is natural that mortals should seek for some excuse for their failings; and rather than blame their real, tangible selves, rather than become consciously responsible for corruptions and crimes, they put the blame on something else,—the second self, microbes, or an external devil. It seems rather remarkable that the shadowy self should be able to accomplish so much more than the real man! The fact is, it is just the common, every-day man, mean as he can be, with a heart that is "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," that is responsible for his deeds—he has no one else to blame. Nineteen hundred years ago there was an "inner man," the new man who entered the church and began to form himself anew; but the "inner man" is not in the masses of the world—he does not belong to the common generation of humanity. At present, man is a compound of good and evil; the evil in him is positive, while the good is negative, but he is mostly evil; and the evil things he does are the result of his own desire, will, and determination. There are not two of a man; the fact is, there is only one half of him, for man is vidual; he is divided. Only the immortal man is whole, complete, and biune.

The greatest questions of the hour, the most stupendous issues before the world, are those involved in Koreshanity and discussed in THE FLAMING SWORD. There are no questions of greater moment to humanity than those directly related to the doctrines of the manifestation of the Messiah of the dispensation, with the universal intellectual solvent,—the absolute truth. The destiny of the world hinges on the direction of the movement of the highest human impulse. Genuine and successful reformation of humanity lies in the orbit of the brightest mental Star—in the path of the anthropostic Sun. The lines of divine progress, connecting the careers of Noah, Abraham, Moses, Elijah, and Jesus, focalize at the end of the dispensation in the pinnacle of intellectual attainment, in the climax of human life. To the Christian, there can be no question of greater moment than the tangible manifestation of the world's Redeemer, and the conquest of death in the natural world; to the world at large, no questions are greater than those which have to do with the freedom of humanity from social, commercial, and political bondage. The Koreshan System is scientific; its fundamentals are facts. It is the Guiding Star of destiny, the Religio-Science of the New Age. It will succeed Christianity, as Christianity succeeded Judaism.

"True Christianity exalts Christ, and does not make an idol of any mere human being." To what does Adventism exalt the Christ? To a mere second place in the control of the universe. Primitive Christianity exalted him to the pre-eminence, having all power in heaven and in earth; it placed him on the very throne of the universe as its only occupant; it exalted him as the divine Word itself, as the Almighty God, the everlasting Father, the Creator of the universe, as the express image of the Father, possessing all of the attributes of God; it exalted him as the veritable God. As what does true Christianity exalt the Christ? As a man, pre-eminently the man, human in all his attributes, immortal in his flesh, and divine in his humanity. It made him the idol and the ideal of human love and aspiration. Jesus was a man, supremely human, and no more than human. He was the founder and center of the primitive church, the head of the church, the head of humanity; he was the human God. Jesus was both the Son of God and the Son of man, because God is the perfected man.

If we may judge from the appearance of the majority of reform papers and the language they contain, they belong to the degenerate type of modern journalism. Slang and low-type phraseology abound and make the contents of so called reform sheets repulsive. If most reform papers would reform the world, they must first reform themselves and use language that is respectable, and arguments that are reasonable and logical. We see productions of many so called editors that do not contain as much originality as the first attempts of the schoolboy at writing a composition; oftentimes they contain less sense. We despise patent sheets and stereotype plate matter, edited by syndicate editors who furnish matter for papers of all social and political parties. THE FLAMING SWORD is original, and contains the truth. Its appearance speaks for itself; its expressions are refined, and appeal to the rational mind.

The idea that the fall of man was unforeseen by the Almighty; that it was an event for which he was not prepared, and which did not belong to the order of universal perpetuity, and that God has since been endeavoring to repair the damages done by the devil, is absurd. The rise and decline of humanity are as regular as the rising and setting of the sun; it is an eternal process. The resurrection and the fall of man occur according to the laws of being and existence. Summer and winter in humanity are as necessary as in the physical universe. Seed time and harvest in humanity will never cease. Heaven and hell are antithets; they are eternal. Hell is the precipitate of divine mental activity; and the seed of the divine kingdom falls into the hells in order to perpetuate itself and renew the life of humanity and of God.

There never was a greater absurdity entertained by any people in all the history of the world, than the idea that a human being, with a host of invisibles, is coming to the earth from the regions of universal space. The doctrine that the Messiah is coming down through the clouds of the physical heavens is a rank fallacy, which is not taught in the Bible, nor sustained by any fact of nature; it belongs only to that phase of the religious world that is benighted beyond all hope of illumination. Modern Christianity is made up of the most manifest perversions of truth conceivable, and the common idea of the coming of the Christ from some physical star, is one of them. Nineteen hundred years ago the Messiah was born into the world, the only way that any being has ever, or can ever get into the natural world.

In the late industrial trouble in Idaho, the striking miners resorted to violence and murder to such an extent that martial law was declared, and the labor organizations which perpetrated them were declared seditious; the mine owners were forbidden to employ union men so long as the martial law remained in force. It was but a skirmish fight of the great impending battle between the forces of labor and capital. The nations of the civilized world are not serene and peaceful. Internal forces growing out of the various forms of oppression, threaten to break through the established industrial and commercial lines and contest the powers that be. Arbitration cannot satisfy the hunger of the workingman, nor the greed of the millionaire.

There can be no greater revelation made to the world than the knowledge of the cause of all existence—the source of life, and the means by which life may be renewed and man made immortal. Humanity must reach the great Fountain of life; it must produce an involution, a great souling-up, in the times of restitution—a period of rejuvenation—in order to perpetuate its existence. Koreshanity alone, of all other systems, goes directly to the root of death and uncovers the nidus of all disease, and reveals the laws by which man may be restored to his dominion of the universe.

Immortality in the flesh is the fruit of the Christian dispensation. The seed of immortality was sown in humanity nineteen hundred years ago, and the attainment to the biune state must be through the direct line of divine progress in man. The divine activity is confined to the ecliptic of human progress. Those in whom the seed was sown at the beginning of the age, will recognize the truth when it is revealed; and only those who comprehend and obey the laws which the truth reveals, can become immortal.

Effect is the evolution of cause, and cause is the involution of effect. We may read the character of cause in the effect, because all that was in the cause is expressed in effect. Humanity is human, and contains personalities; therefore, the cause of humanity is human, and possesses personality. God is humanity involved or infolded. Involution or the cause of humanity must appear in the plane of tangibility. He so appeared nineteen hundred years ago, and was the human God,—the only true God.

To reach the heart of humanity, Jesus the Christ explored the interior of the race. He went into humanity as the seed enters the ground, that he might multiply himself and reap a bountiful harvest at the beginning of the Golden Age.

The reform press is advocating the peace of nations, and deprecates the war in the Philippines; but sustains war and bloodshed in strikes for the purpose of keeping non-union laborers out of employment.

We believe in the affirmation of the "I am." Only the divine man can say, I am God; all others, to speak the truth, must say, I am the devil!

THE EDITOR.

The Koreshan System and the English Language.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have recently seen copies of your paper, and have read them with some interest and considerable curiosity. Interest as to what this new theory might be; curiosity as to what you were trying to say. I am a young man with education enough to attain to and occupy successfully a good business position; with sufficient appreciation of the higher things of life to thoroughly enjoy the better forms of music and art, even though not always able to understand them. I may consider myself, I think, a person of at least ordinary intelligence, but I confess that I am utterly unable to understand your system, if it is a system; and it is my firm belief that your system of religious belief will never make enough progress under present management to take its place among the world's religions.

How can you expect common people, of which this world is made up, to understand the ponderous, many-syllabled words of which even your simplest articles consist? Do you consider your system, with all its pretense of deep wisdom and mighty truth, a substitute for the simple, grand, unpretentious, but all-satisfying religion founded by Jesus Christ? I am no religious fanatic, biased to any form of creed; but the idea of a religion founded on a quasi-scientific basis, with such theories as you advance back of it, is a combination of the sublime and the ridiculous.

Are those who indorse your theory of the Cellular Cosmogony, alone to be saved, and the rest of us to be damned? But perhaps your theology does not include any such thing. You see that even the perusal of your able editorials has not given me any clear idea of what your beautiful new theory is to teach. My own stupidity, you will say: very possibly. Your conclusive disposition as to the whereabouts of Col. Ingersoll, in a recent number, did not settle in my mind as to where you intended to leave him.

I wish that you would give me the plain reason, if the facts as to the shape of this world are as you state, why it is that at sea the top rigging of an approaching boat is the first thing that comes into view? I have never gotten over the impression that was put in my mind at an early age, produced by a vivid picture of a man sitting on a shore, and watching a fleet of ships coming up, I suppose you would say, sliding down from, the horizon: the first boat in line being plainly visible, the next a little lower in the water, and so on, until the last boat showed only her topmast.

Now if you can give me the reason why this is wrong, and why your view of this phenomenon is correct, without employing any words of more than three or four syllables, you will be conferring a great favor on me. I don't want to read a long dissertation on Koreshanity, nor be tangled up in a lot of vague and impalpable statements which no one can refute because no one can understand. If you can explain the question simply, please do so, and if you can't, please say so, and don't try to do it, because I do not like to see the massive words of your vocabulary handled too familiarly, and it won't do any good, because I shan't take the trouble to wade through it. A simple question ought to have a simple answer, and not such replies as you seem inclined to give some of your correspondents.—H. W. B., Interlachen, Fla.

Our captious critic has not only designated the manner in which his questions must be answered, but has also neglected to consult us as to how his questions should be asked. We publish his rather forward letter, and will proceed to reply in our own way, regardless of the request to keep within the bounds of the limited vocabulary of one who is not willing to use a little mental dexterity to comprehend the truth. The Koreshan University is as complex in its details as is the universe. We do not expect a reader to understand the entire system from reading a few copies of THE FLAMING SWORD. No one would be so foolish as to expect to understand architecture, engineering, surveying, astronomy, physiology, optics, chemistry, botany, geology, anthropology, ethnology, geometry, and other numerous departments of a university, from simply perusing a few university publications! These subjects engage the mental labor of students for years before they can understand these branches, even as taught in modern educational institutions; and we do not expect our friend to understand the System from this reply. It requires years of study to comprehend thoroughly even some of the Koreshan fundamentals. The Koreshan System is taught to those who desire it, and who would obtain a knowledge of its science at the cost of great sacrifices—even to leaving all to follow its Founder! The Koreshan System will prosper under its present management, and under no other; it will take its place, not among the world's great religions, but its place as pre-eminently above all, and will be the System after all other systems are forgotten.

In the promulgation of the Koreshan System, we employ such words as will convey, in exact and unmistakable forms, the ideas desired to be communicated. Every word in the English language has a definite meaning, and we mean just what our words convey. Words are legitimate, and the terminology we employ reaches those who desire the truth in the form in which it is presented; for the present it is for none others. Koreshanity is the evolution of the primitive Christian system; the philosophy of Jesus has become Science, and the Founder of Koreshanity teaches the truth in his own way. It is quite noticeable in the history of the work of Jesus, that his followers were of a select class. Jesus taught only his disciples; to the people he spoke in parables, forms of language which were utterly beyond the comprehension of those not prepared to receive his truth; and if our friend had been at Jerusalem nineteen hundred years ago, his criticism of the work of Jesus would have as thoroughly displayed his ignorance as do the above criticisms of the Koreshans! If the religion of Jesus was simple, why is it not understood in modern times? Why is there such difference of opinion regarding the doctrines he proclaimed? Whom has it satisfied?

Jesus had no marked success with his system during the period of his natural existence. He chose here and there a man whom he knew would answer his purpose. The power of his system was not felt in the world until he went into his disciples, to work through them. He found some willing to die for the truth; others who left all to follow him, that they might understand the profound doctrines of life. Jesus carefully selected and prepared his workers for the spread of his gospel. The time came when it spread rapidly, and finally reached all who were prepared to receive it. The disciples of Jesus who were associated with him, did not understand all of the primitive system until they were illuminated by the pouring out of the life of Jesus after his translation. In many respects, the Koreshan work corresponds to the work of Jesus; it is just as difficult for some people to understand Koreshan Science today, as it was for minds to comprehend the philosophy of Jesus nineteen hundred years ago.

We are asked to explain why it is that an incoming vessel is visible topmast first, and finally the hull; but our correspondent wants the explanation in a few short, simple words, without any matter connected with our reply that he thinks is unnecessary. It is as if a youth went to his teacher with a problem in algebra, and desired a simple answer to his simple question as to the solution of the problem, without entering into details of algebraic principles! To thoroughly comprehend the phenomena of the horizon and disappearing vessels, a few principles in optics must be known. We discuss this subject in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and present facts of demonstration obtained through actual experiments and observation; the usual theory of the water's convexity is an absurdity. During the twelve months' experimentation on the water's surface, by the Koreshan Geodetic Staff, we performed over one hundred experiments on Lake Michigan and the Gulf of Mexico, and know something of the facts of such phenomena. We will ask our friend how, if the water is convex, the hulls of vessels disappearing by reason of going over on the other side of the bulge of water, can be brought into view again by means of the telescope? Can the telescope enable the eye to see through the bulge? If the man in the old picture in geographies, which our friend remembers having seen at school, had applied a telescope to the vanished ship's hull, without changing the altitude of the eye, the hull would have become visible again, and the fallacious diagram would have never been made!

The space between the eye and the water's concave surface is vanished by perspective at the horizon point, in accordance with exactly the same optical reasons why two railway tracks appear to come together in the distance. Anything to be visible beyond the horizon must exceed in height, the altitude of the eye at time of observation; for that portion of an object situated in the vanished space at or beyond the vanishing point, is obviously invisible.

The vanishing point for 10 feet is not the vanishing point for 100 feet; and if the 10-foot hull is within the space vanished it is invisible, while the portions of the vessel above the vanished space are yet in view. It is a simple problem of perspective in optics; and the question is made perfectly clear in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, which we commend for further explanations.

Breathing, Conscious Atoms of Matter.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—You say, "Every atom in the universe breathes, and has a degree of consciousness." Will you please give me the premise from which you start, and a little assistance in following it up to arrive at this conclusion? I suppose you will admit that to a casual observer, appearances would be against this; and if it is true, is there not a sense in which we may say there is no death? When a man, animal, tree, or shrub passes through what we call death, they apparently cease to breathe. That every atom in a dead, corrupted body should continue to breathe and have a degree of consciousness is something I fear I cannot see or understand clearly, without some assistance.—K. B. G., California.

The physical universe is a living, organic structure; the physical cosmos is composed of energy and matter; matter, as related to energy, is basic. The universe is divided into five general planes of life or kingdoms: the mineral, the vegetable, the animal, the sensual human, and the divine human. The mineral kingdom is the lowest, and the divine human is the highest. The organisms in the four superimposed kingdoms are composed of substances from the mineral kingdom. The most complex organism is the perfect man, containing all of the elements of the mineral kingdom, and possessing a mind which corresponds to the complex organism. The consciousness of the perfect man is the summing up of all the experiences through which the atoms composing the structure have passed in their ascent from the mineral, through the vegetable, animal, and the sensual human kingdoms.

The vegetable kingdom feeds upon the mineral kingdom; if the atoms of the mineral kingdom did not possess life and consciousness in themselves, how could they supply nourishment through the absorption and transformation of the atoms of the soil? Every atom is susceptible of transmutation, transformation, and appropriation; the atoms of a plant are mineral, transformed to atoms of the vegetable. They have taken on a new life and a new consciousness; and when the plant dies, the atoms in the structured plant are above, as to quality, corresponding atoms in the soil, because they have come in contact with a higher life, and they retain the impress of the new experiences. We may take inorganic calcium and compare it with organic calcium of the clam shell. Chemically, they are exactly alike; that is, the chemist can detect no difference; but it is well known that organic calcium may be used as a fertilizer, while inorganic calcium is not a fertilizer. The plant can detect the difference, and make its choice with a discrimination which is above that of the chemist! The organic calcium is superior to the other, because it has been touched by and impressed with the life of the animal kingdom.

If atoms of matter were not alive, possessing consciousness, there could be no alchemical transformations. Atoms have their desires—loves and hates; they are susceptible of attraction and repulsion, according to the same laws which admit of attraction and repulsion in the human kingdom. Atoms of matter have their aspirations and determination, and are susceptible of progress. They have a mentality, which is as much a mentality as the energies generated in the human brain; it is mentality on the lowest plane.

There can be no motion without sensation, because sensation is the cause of motion. When two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen unite, a pleasurable sensation results, and the new product is water, which is as much a creation as any ever performed by the Almighty. Hydrogen is the father (the water generator), oxygen is the mother, and water is the offspring. Energy is the mind of matter. Electricity is the intellect of material atoms, while magnetism is the love. The human intellect is the electricity of the mind, while love is its magnetism. There could be no correspondence between these two qualities of electricity and magnetism, if the corresponding mentality did not exist in the atom.

The physical universe is analogous to the universe of humanity; the functions of the great cell correspond to the functions of the perfect man. This complete correspondence between macrocosm and microcosm could not exist, if the physical universe did not possess a consciousness which corresponds to human consciousness. The fact that the movements in the physical heavens correspond to the progressions in the world of humanity, is proof that the activities are correspondential, and that the physical world is as much alive as humanity, but in a different degree.

Every atom of matter has its soul; its soul is susceptible of progress, and of final involution in the human soul. Atoms generate energies; they throw off energies and receive energies,—this constitutes the respiration of the atoms. Atoms in the human body are breathing; they possess a consciousness, which belongs to the human organism; and when death or dissolution of the man occurs, the atoms continue to exist until they are transformed through processes of corruption or the slow combustion of the body. Human consciousness leaves them at the expiration of the man, and they are as they were before becoming a part of the man, plus the additional impress of human life.

The very earth is alive; its stones, crystals, and metals possess a degree of consciousness. The diamond is the most refined form of carbon; it is susceptible of the greatest resistance when attacked by acids or other means of dissolution. The acid makes war upon metals; its forces attack the atoms of the metal and overcome them, and great activity is displayed while the battle is in progress. There is sensation, consciousness, motion, and mineral life there. The forces of each endeavor to resist the other, as really as the forces on the battle-field. The war of acid and metal results in a product—the salts of the metal, which crystalize in specific forms. The microscope reveals the fact that minerals teem with life; there are circulations in the diamond, in the steel bar, and in the stone. Sensation and motion obtain in accordance with law; and law is operative where there is life, will, mentality, and determination.

There is None Good but God.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Please explain, from the Koreshan standpoint, Matt. xix: 17: "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God."—A Reader.

Jesus came in fulfilment of the prophecies of the coming Messiah; as the Almighty God, the everlasting Father; as the Word made flesh, and tabernacled among men as the veritable God-man, the archetype of the new kingdom. He was the resurrection and the life, the Creator of all things in heaven and in earth; the man made in God's image, the exact likeness of the Father's person, possessing his substance and all his attributes, being the "fulness of the Godhead bodily." As to what Jesus claimed himself to be, there is no Scriptural ground for denial; he was God, or he was not true. If he was good, he was God; there was none other possessing goodness and immortality but Jesus, and God alone has immortality. Jesus was the immortal seed,—whole, perfect, complete, biune.

Adam came into the world in the same way that Jesus came. He was a man made in God's image; and it was pronounced of him that he was "very good." Adam was very good, because he was the veritable God; for God alone is genuinely good. All who become good are actually God, his offspring, having his nature, character, and attributes.

The Good Shepherd came in contact with the people of Palestine nineteen hundred years ago. He taught many things that were new and strange to the Jews, and his teachings aroused many questions in the minds of his hearers. A young man came to him and said, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" The reply may be paraphrased as follows:

"Why do you call me good? Do you not know that there is none good but God? Do you know that by calling me good you call me God? Do you realize the import of your words? I am at one with the Father; I am good, the divine Word, the true teacher of truth, the Son of God. You come to me as the good Master, asking me what to do that you may inherit eternal life. If you believed what your words convey, you would recognize me as the Messiah, and you would be willing to do what I tell you. If you have really kept the law which I came to fulfil, you would be my equal! You have seen me; you have seen the Father, and you call me good, you call me God, without knowing the meaning of your words. If you would enter into life, keep the commandments; but you fail to comprehend the law as much as you fail to understand that the person whom you address as good Master, is the one that is good,—the Almighty.

"If you had kept the law from your youth up, you would know to whom you have appealed for the information that only God can give. As further proof that you have not kept the law, I will suggest that you sell your possessions and give the proceeds to the poor, and then come and follow me; for love to the neighbor is one part of obedience to the law, and love and recognition of God constitute the other. You do not wish to do so? I have given you two methods of test of your ignorance of God and his law, and of the futility of your presumption that you have already sufficiently obeyed the law to admit you to eternal life by one additional, extraordinary good thing, which you are unable to accomplish."

Lawlessness in Georgia.

A Briton in America, Persecuted by Georgians, Because of His Color, Returns to England.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—As a late resident in Georgia, I beg to accord you my hearty thanks for your outspoken condemnation of the lawlessness and savagery which rule that state. I am an Englishman with West Indian blood in my veins—brought up and educated among people of gentle habits and manners. During my seven months, stay at White Oak with the Shakers, I have been a target for the insults and threats of the neighbors. On one occasion, an ex-officio, officer of the "law" in this village, came over to the settlement and asked permission to drag me off the premises for no other reason than my color. Our Shaker elder was offered a bribe to expel me from the Community, and would doubtless have accepted the same could he conveniently have done so.

Although in the past the Shakers fearlessly looked upon all mankind, black or white, as equal in the sight of God; and although their records prove that some of their shining lights were of the Negro race, they have utterly failed to maintain their principles before the people of White Oak. It was said by my leading persecutors, that for a person with any colored blood in him to take his meals at the same table with white people, was an unpardonable offense in the eyes of a Southerner. Matters grew worse, until it was finally intimated to the elder that unless he expelled me, they (the villagers) would soon get rid of me. The Shakers forthwith invented all kinds of reasons for my dismissal, until I felt only too happy at the prospect of departure.

It is stated in the Covenant of the Shakers, that they stand by the doctrine of non-resistance—that they do not resort to violence. Be it henceforth understood by all interested persons, that this doctrine is no longer recognized in the society, for particularly of late members have been forcibly ejected, even old men who have sacrificed their physical strength for the good of the cause. I am weary of the hypocrisy of the Shakers and of the insane prejudices of the South, and it is with a light heart that I turn once more toward the land of my birth—old England.

America boasts and brags about "liberty;" the air actually vibrates with the sound of the much abused word, but alas! the actuality is conspicuous by its absence. It is a brave undertaking to disclose the festering sores of our so called civilization. May THE FLAMING SWORD continue its good work until God has subjected all things unto himself.—A. E. M., London, Eng.

The Baptist Flag and the Flaming Sword.

The Baptist Editor's Mixture of Theological Absurdities Concerning the Exploded Duality of the Christ.

THE FLAMING SWORD has become blinded by its dreams and vagaries. It spends too much time in the hazy heights of stardust, and the nebulous regions of Koreshian smoke, to be able to turn the world upside down with its "Plumb-line" of presumptive speculation. THE FLAMING SWORD imposed upon its readers three mortal pages to try to prove to the Flag "The Divinity of Jesus Christ, the Messiah!!" Why, we never did see the day since reaching accountability, when we didn't believe that. THE FLAMING SWORD had before his eyes this sentence from the Flag when he penned his tedious article. "Baptists believe the Bible doctrine of the dual nature of Christ. In the one he is the infinite and unknowable Deity, whose ways are past finding out." Don't that bespeak his divinity? THE FLAMING SWORD never taught the doctrine in his three pages of matter with as much emphasis as that sentence does. But Koreshianity makes the mistake to suppose that his divinity was true of Christ's humanity. Such was not the case. In his deity he was God. In his humanity he was man. In his duality he was the God-man—Son of God, and Son of man. He was equal with God, for in his deity he was God. Yet he became obedient unto death, for he took part in the flesh, and condemned sin in the flesh, that he might bring us to God. As a man he was our brother; as a God he was our Maker. As Jesus Christ he is the maker of humanity, and the brother of humanity, the divine Savior of the world. Does THE FLAMING SWORD believe this?—Baptist Flag.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.

LESLIE'S WEEKLY this week devotes three full pages to photographs of the manner in which the President enjoys himself about Lake Champlain, walking, driving, and sailing with Mrs. McKinley, Vice-President Hobart, and others. These photographs are especially interesting because they are snap-shots of the President and his party, taken in their most natural attitudes. Other striking features of LESLIE'S WEEKLY this week include pictures of the returning volunteers and their welcome at San Francisco; attractive photographs entered by amateurs for a photographic contest; Admiral Dewey's enthusiastic reception at Naples; "The Summer Girl" (the third of the attractive series of Stanlaws's pictures); the remarkable welcome extended to Alger at Detroit; a page of illustrated personals; the two thrilling Sunday catastrophes, and many other notable features. The letter-press includes instructive special correspondence from Manila; "The story of a real Daughter of the Revolution;" an unusually strong story by Clinton Ross, finely illustrated, entitled "A Comedy of Whims;" and many other contributions of rare excellence.

The Saturday Evening Post.

Ex-Senator John J. Ingalls has written for The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, two valuable papers upon the later career of President Garfield. These articles, written by a man who knew Mr. Garfield in his youth, and afterward saw at close range his public acts, constitute what is perhaps the most dispassionate and judicial estimate of the man ever made. Mr. Ingalls' brilliant prose, enlivened by anecdote and strengthened by first-hand knowledge, is well worthy of his subject. In connection with these papers, fac-similes of unpublished letters from Mr. Garfield's physicians will be printed. The first of these papers will appear in the Post of August 26. In the same issue will be found contributions by Ian Maclaren, Harriet Riddle Davis, Julian Ralph, and Charles Battell Loomis.

The New Voice.

The New Voice is increasing in interest and literary merit; every number contains sketches of great men of the American nation, great institutions of civilization, and true stories of heroic lives. This journal has waged a long fight against the liquor traffic, and a number of pages are devoted each week to discussion of various phases of the gigantic evil which is fostered by the people of the United States. The New Voice is published by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, the owners of the great Standard Dictionary. 16-page illustrated weekly; yearly $1.50; 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

Popular Science

Is an illustrated monthly magazine, which has exchanged with THE FLAMING SWORD for several years. It is of general interest to all students of nature, with its several departments of botany, zoology, archeology, astronomy, chemistry, recent inventions and discoveries, and hygiene. Each issue contains a large number of articles and items concerning facts of phenomena in the mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms, which are of value in self-education. $1.60 yearly; 108 Fulton st., New York City.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce,

[Successor to the Industrial Co-operative Union of America.]

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

The College of Psychical Sciences and Unfoldment.

This school, the only one of its kind in the world, is conducted by J. C. F. GRUMBINE, the author and lecturer. It is open to students each month. The studies are eclectic, although a regular and uniform curriculum is established and operative. It is devoted exclusively to the System of Philosophy concerning Divinity, and is connected with the Order of the White Rose, branch of the Rosicrucians. The secrets and mysteries of Magic and Occultism are revealed. The mystic and potential powers of Divinity, such as Clairvoyance, Psychometry, Inspiration, Psychopathy, Ontology, Hypnotism, Telepathy, and Illumination are taught.

Special teachings are arranged for out-of-town students and belong to the college extension department. Development is thus ensured in the student's home for a nominal sum.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

Whole No. 351

Structure and Function of the Human Brain.

Part II.

Generation of the Various Qualities of Energy or Substance of Thought in the Brain; the Psychology of the Modern Church; the Law of Cerebral Circulations.

AT THE center of the brain is a little gland called the pineal gland or conarium; it is shaped like the cone of a pine tree. It is the evergreen, the real cedar of Lebanon, the actuator of the Tree of Life, and the governing center of the body. The body acts as a unit because it has this governor; because it has a throne and a king upon its throne, and because it acknowledges its king. Situated at the base of the gray matter of the cerebrum is the corpus callosum, the hard body. This body is made up of fibers which have their origin in the gray matter or cellular substance of the brain.

The most internal or central respiration is primarily of a cerebral origin, starting from the center of the brain instead of the center of the splenic system in the body. In its most active power it is central, being located in the pineal gland or conarium, as the terminal pole of the vibratory act. The vibration begins at the conarium, moving along the course of the fiber comprising the crura conarii (legs of the pineal gland), to the corpus albicans (cerebral kidney or reins), thence through the lyra (harp of the brain) to the optic thalamus and corpora striata; and from these bodies (the two basilar ganglia) to the general gray, cerebral mass, thence returning and expending its greatest energy upon the conarium. The energy is thence centered upon the lyra; here the strings of the harp vibrate, this being the location and pole of the agitation. Agitation is friction, and friction destroys the molecules or atoms of organic matter, and this matter is transformed to energy. The agitation of a lucifer match by friction or rubbing, destroys its atoms of matter and converts them to force. The force or energy thus generated is enough to set in motion an agitation of particles of matter, the result of which might reduce the entire city of Chicago to flames, the generated energy of which would escape and enter into other combinations, the processes of combustion leaving only the remaining debris or ash to indicate its former greatness.

There can be no force or spirit without the destruction of matter. This is true of the energy of inorganic matter, or of the material substance of organic forms. As in the consumption of the match and its reduction to flame by the agitation of its atoms, so in the vibration of fiber in the brain and the agitation of the corpuscle or cell; through the action of the will, the molecules of matter, flowing into the cell through the arterial extremities terminating at the cortical or cellular substance, are burned up or destroyed as matter and converted to energy. This energy is physiological, as flowing into the body and supplying the body with physiological forces. It is mental (pneumatic or psychic), or what is the same thing, spiritual, when acting as intellectual or affectional force. These two qualities of energy may also be called wisdom and love forces or energies. This is genuine spirit. Its holiness must depend upon the quality of the thought in its relation to the quality of the organic substance destroyed as matter and converted to energy. An impure nature will generate impure spirit. Holy Spirit is the product of the dissolution of atoms made holy or purified by the operation of a pure desire.

Prayer is desire. There are three principles involved in effectual prayer; namely, intensity, volume, and continuity of desire; these can all be cultivated. A person may pray for something continuously and intensely; he may fix his mind upon that one thing, but there must be something upon which to pin one's faith. For instance, the conversion of some one may be desired, and in an agony of prayer, conversion follows apparently as the result of such prayer. The probability is that the person will be converted to the kind of religion, whether Baptist, Methodist, or Catholic, corresponding to the quality of mind that determined the conversion.

Among those who became healers through the teaching of this Science, was a devout believer in the Roman Catholic faith. He had been very successful, and in treating fifteen or twenty cases, nearly all of them outside the pale of the church, perhaps some of them Protestants, some not having any settled religious convictions, almost every one was converted to the Catholic faith without the exercise of any conscious desire on his part. This simply demonstrated the kind of religious potency he carried with him. It shows the effect of the mind, when it generates a certain kind of force. It does not always generate just the same kind, but if the desire is continued for any great length of time, it becomes intensified and more potent.

Jesus said when the woman touched him, "Who touched me?" He perceived it to be a specific and particular touch. He knew that a specific and peculiar demand had been made upon him, to which he had responded involuntarily. His disciples could not understand this transference of healing power, and wondered why he should make such a remark when he was pressed by the crowd. "Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?" And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me [with a peculiar touch]: for I perceive that virtue [dynamis] is gone out of me." That is, strength, potency, had gone out of him. He generated and carried this potency with him, because his desires were elevated above the flesh; there were no wastes in the direction of sensuality. When minds are elevated as was his, and the forces of the body are conserved as were his, people will then have the same power and perform the same wonders. Therefore He said: "Greater things than these shall ye do; because I go unto my Father."

Jesus said this because he knew that 144,000 sons of God would generate more potency or virtue than one Son of God; that in the unity, when all the sons of God, all the members, have come into one body in Christ, each individual may then exercise the potency of all the others. But this can only be when we come into divine unity. We have not yet seen that unity in any man, but it is coming. We are reaching it, and all of these agitations, these little side issues, are simply indices of what is soon to be manifest,—the resurrection of the dead, the reproduction of the fruit in the culminating harvest of the divine kingdom in the earth, the fulfilment of the prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." This promise was not indited in vain; for just as God's will is done in heaven, so will it be done in earth.

The Anatomy of the Brain.

The brain is environed by three membranes, which cover the entire encephalic mass and are continued into the spinal canal investing the spinal cord, and projecting sheaths upon the sixty-two pairs of roots of the spinal nerves. The outer and thickest of the three is a tough, strong membrane called the dura mater, or the hard mother of the brain. In infancy, it constitutes an internal periosteum of the cranial bones, from which they derive nourishment; but later in life it becomes partially separated into two membranes,—the internal periosteum of the cranial bones, and the dura mater proper, which is loosely attached to the skull above, but makes firm adhesions in the lines of the sutures, being closed in with the internal periosteum as the sutures unite. It is also more or less firmly attached to the cranial bones where the various foramina perforate the cranial tables, and is firmly united at the base of the skull and the petrosal ridges. By re-duplication, this membrane forms folds which dip down or extend into the fissures of the brain, determining, as it were, intracranial compartments for the several parts of the brain.

The great longitudinal falx of the dura mater, the falx cerebri, extends from the crista galli to the internal protuberance of the occipital bone, dipping down into the great longitudinal fissure between the two lateral halves of the cerebrum, and forming—between the splitting of its folds—the great longitudinal sinus of the brain. The dura mater also projects transversely across the cranial cavity, between the greater and lesser longitudinal falx, that portion of its structure known as the tentorium, or tent of the brain, which forms the support of the posterior portion of the cerebrum, and is also the covering of the cerebellum. The lateral sinuses are lodged between the two layers of its base, which are attached to the ridges of the occipital bone. The dura mater at certain points of attachment splits into two layers, the inner of which forms the various septa of the brain, while the outermost enters into the formation of the fifteen sinuses, or intracranial venous canals; six of which, the superior longitudinal, the right and left lateral, the right and left occipital, and the straight, unite in and form the torcular herophili. These sinuses (of which the superior longitudinal, extending from the crista galli to the torcular herophili in the upper margin of the falx cerebri, is the greatest) collect the blood of the brain, which is poured into the descending vena cava through the internal jugular.

The pia mater, or soft mother of the brain, is the most interior of the three membranes, and also the most vascular. It is indeed extremely vascular, as it receives all the arteries which supply the encephalon, as well as all the venous blood of the brain, which is collected into small veins and poured into the sinuses of the dura between the dura mater and the pia mater. It is continuous with the spinal canal, and is spread smoothly over the entire brain, but does not enter the sulci and convolutions like the pia mater.

In this diagram, but one lateral half of the brain is shown, made in part by the great longitudinal fissure which forms a great natural division down to the corpus callosum, a point nearly on a level with the external meatus,—the external opening of the ear. The corpus callosum, of which a section is observed, is the great commissure of the cerebrum, which unites the two lateral hemispheres. It is composed entirely of white neural tissue, and forms the communicating lines between the two halves, unitizing and reducing to one, their spirit and finest material substance. Several fissures are also indicated in the diagram, which divide the surface of the brain into lobes or regions, to which are given names the better to enable one to describe the brain and localize its functions. Each hemisphere of the cerebrum is divided into five lobes; the frontal, the parietal, the occipital, the temporo-sphenoidal, and the central lobe, or the island of Reil.

The brain is composed of gray and white matter; the gray being a cellular and sensory substance, and the white, a fibrous and communicating substance. The medulla, or pith, is the white substance,—the fiber of the brain, and occupies mostly the interior of the mass; while the gray matter occupies chiefly, and forms the outer portion of the mass. From the inner surface of the pia mater there are innumerable thin, delicate projections or prolongations, which penetrate every intercellular space, and cover and surround every cell or corpuscle of gray matter, forming, as it were, myriads of little hoods, enveloping and forming clusters like grapes upon the vine, or more resembling air cells around the minute bronchial stems. This really forms a distinct membrane similar to the pia mater, yet different, for it carries no red blood. This membrane is distinguished by the name piissima mater. It is through the pia mater that the purest blood of the body is conveyed to the cortex or brain cells; but the blood itself does not enter the cell.

Cellular Activities and Respirations.

In the pia mater is effected a conjunction or unity of the arterial with the venous and external nerve circulation. It is where the finest arterial ramifications terminate, and the finest venous branches begin. Here is where an outer sphere of outflowing and inflowing force is generated in the combustion consequent upon the meeting; at this point, of the outflowing cellular substance with the finest of the blood and nerve substance flowing to the cortex of the brain, transforming the blood and nerve force of the body into a subtle animal spirit, which enters the cell through the medium and office of the piissima mater, where, by metamorphic

C, medulla oblongata. 1, corpus callosum. 2, convolution of corpus callosum. 3, septum lucidum. 4, fornix. 5, anterior pillar of fornix. 6, optic thalamus. 7, velum interpositum, or interposing veil. 8, arbor vitae, or tree of life. 9, tentorium cerebelli. 10, crus cerebri. 11, pons Varoli. 12, fourth ventricle. 13, posterior median fissure. 14, corpora quadrigemina, with nates (15) and testes (16). 17, aqueduct of Sylvius. 18, third ventricle. 19, conarium, or pineal gland. 20, posterior commissure. 21, middle commissure. 22, foramen of Monro. 23, tuber cinereum. 24, infundibulum, or funnel. 25, corpus albicans, or kidney. 26, glandula vitæ, or pituitary gland. 27, optic nerve. 28, anterior commissure. 29, beak or rostrum. 30, anterior crura of fornix. 31, processus e cerebello ad testes. 32, processus ad medullam. 33, transverse fissure. 34, arachnoid canal. 35, genu of corpus callosum. 36, olfactory nerve. 37, olfactory bulb. 38, place of Lyra. 39, calloso-marginal fissure. 40, fissure of Rolando. 41, perietal lobe. 42, perieto-occipital fissure. 43, orbital lobe. 44, third nerve. 45, points to place of calamus scriptorius. 46, occipital fissure. 47, place of crista galli. 48, frontal lobe. 49, occipital lobe. 50, crura conarium, or legs of pineal gland.

mater. The pia mater is everywhere closely attached to the cortex (the exterior gray matter of the brain), dipping down into all its fissures, convolutions, and gyres, entering into the ventricular cavities and forming several very important vascular structures, such as the velum interpositum, the superior or choroid plexus, the choroid plexus of the third ventricle, and the inferior choroid plexus. It has also two systems of nerves; that derived from the sympathetic, and another from the third, sixth, seventh, eighth, and eleventh cranial. It follows the dura mater in its investment of the spinal cord, performing functions in the spinal canal similar to its uses in the cranium.

The arachnoid membrane, or the spider's web, is a delicate, fibrous, but non-vascular membrane lying action, it completes a unity with the inresidentsoul, and generates the external thoughts, affections, and activities of the natural man. These are the little heads or little springs, into which certain rivers are flowing, and out of which certain other rivers are flowing; there being in all vital activities, constantly, a double current,—the arterial and the venous in the vascular system, the afferent and the efferent in the nervous system, and the anodal and cathodal in the electric system. In like manner, in every current of force, there is always the double flow, two qualities of force, each moving in an opposite direction to the other.

Corresponding to the anatomical divisions of the brain, are discovered the functions or activities of its various parts, which, when normally active, operate in concord. These cellular activities or functions generated in the brain are continued into the body, and are there most outwardly and conspicuously manifest in the heart and lungs, as the centers of circulation and respiration. But lying back of and beyond the activities of the cells is the law of attraction, in which is the origin of every operation of the cell; for in and of themselves they have no power to act, and can not act except as moved upon by the inherent law of desire implanted within them in their germinal beginnings. But this is not all; for even back of this,—the attraction of the atoms and forces of nature, which enter into the composition of the physical organism, there exist the primary cause and origin of all activity and form, which constitute the attraction between God and man. This is the primary cause of all the motion in the universe. This is where motion begins, and all the motions of the universe are simply the extension of this motion through the human life into the animal, and through the animal life into the vegetable, and through that into what is called the inorganic activities. This ought not to require argument. The simple statement of the fact ought to be sufficient to settle, in the thinking and rational mind, the conviction of its truth.

Nothing can act in and of itself alone, but the highest; the Supreme, even though in a sense dependent, must be the beginning, the first, origin, the great Cause of all existence. The apparent cause is what we perceive with our apparent or physical senses. The hidden cause is what we may discover through the mind, when that mind is ushered into the metaphysical domain through divine illumination. The real world, or the world of cause, is the product of the physical and metaphysical domains; and the point of their union is the cause point, or the beginning and the ending of all things.

Overcoming Death in the Natural World.

Scientific Processes of Attainment to Immortality; Mortal and Immortal Natures Contrasted; the Prophet of Divine Science and His Message to Humanity.

BERTHA LDINE, MATRONA.

A VENERABLE, kindly-spirited Lutheran minister called upon us recently, and in the course of conversation he several times used this expression: "We are clothed upon with the righteousness of Christ." We responded, "Yes, we are when we are; but who is?" We are looking for the personality who can legitimately claim such clothing. Some modern Christian will state, "We are clothed with the righteousness of Christ, by faith." We answer, "If there be no resurrection of the dead [the dead in Christ], then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."

According to the Christian Scriptures, "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Faith is not genuine which does not work by love; and a love that fails to find expression in the keeping of the commandments of the Lord, will never materialize as the flesh of Christ, the legitimate and incorruptible clothing of Deity. The Lord Jesus, the Christ of the Christian era, was righteous as to body, soul, and spirit, and because of this fact, his flesh could not see corruption. Said Jesus to those around him:

Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven [the condition of himself, who was in heaven]. * * * Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness. Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also? * * * Ye are of your father the devil. * * * Woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God. * * * Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: These are the things which defile a man.

The world does not lack scribes, Pharisees, and hypocrites today. The mortal heart still yields its issue of abominations, and the defiled body of death is the only flesh to be seen. The sin of these Pharisees—so esteemed by mortal judgment, which lacks the standard of the science of the law—is in the will of the corruptible, lustful, mortal flesh,—the body of death which all bear about until the resurrection of the dead, the standing again of men in the clothing of Christ's righteousness,—the flesh of Jehovah. The will of the mortal flesh is absolutely antagonistic to the "mightier matters of the law," the Decalogue of Moses. This law was the delight of the Lord Jesus, the incarnate will of God. This law teaches that the object of redemptive love is the person of Deity, the Lord thy God. He is the apex and seed of universal production and reproduction, the Alpha and Omega of immortality—the temple of the eternal. This Deity has been known to the Christian dispensation by the name of the Lord Jesus, the name of Jehovah,—the Word made flesh. He is to be known to future generations by his new name, in whom Elohi, the Spirit of truth, shall overcome mortality and swallow up death in victory. Upon this overcomer the Lord's new name will be written for adoration in ages to come. He will be clothed upon with the righteousness of Christ; so also will all be who confess his name and constitute the body of his inheritance.

The Pharisees of Judaism rejected, as does modern Phariseism, the rulership and scholarship of our time, the objective personality of Deity, the coming of Christ in the resurrected or reproduced flesh of Christ—by obedience to the science or knowledge of the laws of life and immortality, the Decalogue of Moses. Both the ancient and modern Pharisees worship the polluted ideals of their own interiors, the rottenness of dead men's bones, or doctrines of fallacy. They worship the descent of Abraham and Jesus through the lusts of their flesh, the spiritual debris or precipitate of their ascended Lord, whom they have lost sight of through the clouds of their corruptions. The glorified Abram, who found his clothing of the divine flesh in the righteousness of Christ Jesus, the law fulfilled, was the reincarnation of ancient Israel's patriarch, Abraham, the Father in Him; but the Jews knew it not, because of their ignorance of the law and the prophets. In Jesus, Abraham was the manifest heir of the world, the seed of the universe, his inheritance.

This present evil world is just as rotten with the sin of self-righteousness as was the world of the ancient Pharisee, and just as antagonistic to the righteousness of Christ, the righteousness of the law. It is even more so; it feels no need of the purification of its flesh from the lusts thereof, for the reproduction of the divine seed, the Savior of the universe from age to age, till the age of crowning glory is reached, and a hundred and forty-four thousand Saviors stand upon Mt. Zion to judge the Mount of Esau. In these, the Lord rests and recedes until the Spring time of another Zodiacal year, the great cycle of the animal life of Deity.

The Voice of Elohi is now speaking to this world, foretelling in the language of true science the ultimatum of the closing of this dispensation, and showing marvelous things to come, in this same language. All the signs of the times are growing vivid in the fiery glare of approaching divine vengeance. Conditions are such that men must be rendered desperate by the consequences of their sin of self-righteousness. God, the only living and true God, is not in all their thoughts; and their proud necks must be made to bow, and their stiff knees to bend before the humble image of God's Truth, which fell among thieves on the road from Jerusalem to Jericho.

The wages of sin (vidual and social) are death and destruction, which create the desperate conditions essential to the salvation of our God,—who demonstrates in them that he is the mighty One and the Savior. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. Drowning men rejoice at the sight of an all-sufficient Savior; starving sinners welcome bread even from heaven; and dying men cry aloud for great physicians. In the order of law, it becomes necessary for mortals to know evil in the fulness of its iniquity, self-righteousness, that by the law of contrast and the wisdom of experience they may ultimately know good, and as Gods knowing good and evil, may choose and love the good and hate and overcome the evil.

The time arrives when mercy and justice are known as one; and in the extremity of mortal man's evolution, when aged in sin, starving for the bread of life, and drowning in the floods of fallacy, the death sentence of the "man of sin" is pronounced and executed, and the Mother of all living springs full-armed from the head of the Almighty, Elohi, the Father of the Gods, mighty to save and strong to deliver, and the seed of the universe reproduces its fruit, the harvest of the Son of God, the immortals.

Happy is he who can discern the signs of the times, and can hear the voice of the Sign of the Son of man, and answer, even while it is yet dark in the garden where the Lord walks in the cool of the day,—my Lord and my God. His sheep will know his voice, and another will they not follow. He will sit with them as a refiner and purifier of silver; he will refine them as silver is refined, and try them as gold is tried, and so clothe them with the righteousness of Christ, the righteousness of obedience to the law. Doing his commandments, they will have right to the Tree of Life.

We are taught by inspired edict and true science, that to work out our own salvation God must work in us, to will and to do his own good pleasure. God is spirit. Spirit produces personality; every person has his own spirit. As persons, we know spirits through the mediumship of their personalities; we can know them naturally and scientifically in no other way. We, as natural men and women, can know whether we have the spirit of God working in us, only by a scientific knowledge of the person of Deity, who produces the spirit of Deity. The Lord Jesus was the Word or Spirit made flesh, that we might behold the fulness of the God-head bodily, that we might know Jehovah, the image and likeness of God,—God personified in perfection. We have a record of the words and deeds of this person, of his origin or generation, and his destiny; of what he involved and would evolve, as his fruitage.

Now we may know what kind of a spirit we have operating in our mortal bodies today, by comparing on all lines, our personalities with the personality of the Lord Jesus as described in the Scripture record, and as testified to by an absolute science of universal law. After the comparison has been critically and scientifically made by each person, we think we are safe in saying that the honest testimony of each will result in the vidual condemnation of each as a "man of sin," actuated by a sinful spirit, which must confess its need of transmutation before it can be recognized as spirit of the Lord Jehovah. The Spirit of truth is the Spirit of Jehovah. The spirit of his righteousness alone can produce the clothing, the immortal flesh or body of Christ, which could not see corruption.

Elohi is here to give us the science of all truth. This science has power to awaken us to a knowledge of ourselves and the salvation we need,—salvation of body, soul, and spirit,—vidually and collectively. He is the prophet, or Eye of God, who searches and tries the hearts of men. He is the light-bearer, and if we walk in the light of Koreshanity, the science of truth, we will become the children of the light. We will delight ourselves only in obedience to the laws of life, and obeying from the impulse of the heart's adoration of their embodiment and personification, we shall in due season be clothed upon with the righteousness of Jehovah, crowned with the glory of Elohi, and possess the kingdom of our Father-Mother God.

The all-important thing for every aspirant for the image and likeness of Deity today, is that he receive the science of the law for the lamp unto his feet, and that he order his walk according to its light. If he does this, the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel, the Eye or Prophet of God, will guide him into the realm of perpetual day. He will gather him as a shepherd does his sheep, and shelter him from the approaching storm of the wrath of the Almighty's outraged love. "Enter ye in at the straight gate", the gate by which the Lord himself entered heaven, the gate of obedience to the law; for "straight is the gate and narrow is the way." The way is as narrow as the universe in its least form, even the form of the Messenger of the Covenant, the vanishing point of the humanity of Deity, the Messianic pole Star of the world's destiny,—and few there be that find this Way. Few—yes, few; nevertheless it is written, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

MODERN SCIENTISTS have failed to solve the great problems which confront the world; centuries of research in all lines of human investigation have resulted in mere speculations, indefinite conclusions, and hypotheses. The old schools are adrift in the great ocean of universal facts, sailing upon frail premises which are shifting in the waves of human sentiment. The hundreds of astronomers, with all the physical apparatus which genius has constructed, have not discovered to the world the true nature of the universe; they have revealed nothing concerning the origin of the great world of existence—not even the form of the earth in which we live. The character of matter and energy, with which we daily come in contact, and of which man is composed, is unknown to the chemist. The anatomist knows no more of the human structure than he can observe in the dissection of the human body; he is astray concerning the functions of form, and in utter ignorance concerning the uses of the brain. To the scientific world, the mind of man is mystery. The church not only does not know God, but asserts that it is impossible to know him; the modern god is unknown and inconceivable. The clergymen cannot make a practical application of laws of which they are ignorant; they cannot conform to principles which they are unable to define. The scientific world observes a limited horizon; the vanishing point of their intellectual perspective is the limit of modern mental penetration, and the scientists are hopeless and helpless. Is there never to be a solution of the great problems of existence? Is it not possible that somewhere in the progress of the world, the activities of the universe will become impressed upon the human consciousness? Koreshanity answers such questions emphatically in the affirmative; it proclaims the fact of the discovery of the keys,—the fundamentals of all truth,—which unlock the great treasures of knowledge of the universe. We live in a great cell; the laws of its form and function reveal the laws of creation, and uncover the arcana of man. Koreshanity discovers God, scientifically defines his character, and teaches man how to stamp out the corruptions of the mortal flesh and overcome the hells. There can be no more startling revelations in heaven or in earth than those made by Koreshanity, because they are the revelations of heaven and earth and all they contain.

The idea of re-embodiment is repulsive to the modern church; the clergymen presume to believe in a single incarnation—a quasi-incarnation of God in the Christ, but repudiate the thought that everybody has lived before. The idea that the people of the present generation have never before been upon the stage of existence, has no basis in the facts of nature. It is admitted by all, that the life humanity possesses is human life, the substance of which has come down through lines of ancestry; and that life has, therefore, been in each ancestor, as surely as it is life. There are two methods of propagation of life and mind of the mortal world; one is through common generation, and the other is the transmission of mind from one generation to another, through oral and other communication. The present generation is the embodiment of the mind of the past generation; consequently, the mind of the past generation finds expression in the present humanity; and as mind is made up of entities of being, it follows that the present generation constitutes the living embodiment of the mental entities that were in the generation that has passed away. The idea of re-embodiment is demonstrated on all planes or kingdoms of the universe. The life of the vegetable kingdom is continually clothing itself with new forms; it is constantly being re-embodied, and the processes of re-embodiment in the vegetable kingdom obtain through sowing of the seed. Re-embodiment was a common belief in the days of Jesus the Christ. The people believed that men were reborn into the world; they looked for the prophets to return, and when John the Baptist came, they asked him, Are you Elijah, Isaiah, the Christ, or whom? After the seventy disciples had been out on tours of propaganda of the gospel, Jesus inquired of them as to whom the people said he was. Some concluded that he was Jeremiah, some, Isaiah, or some other one of the prophets; and it was supposed that the man born blind had committed some sin in a previous embodiment, for which he was being punished by blindness in another embodiment. Reincarnation is the law of life. The phenomena of humanity cannot be explained on any other basis; humanity could not continue to exist if the life of mankind did not find embodiment, generation after generation, throughout the cycles of eternity.

An agnostic desires to thank Eve for being instrumental in producing the fall and death of man. It is presumed that if the fall had not occurred, there would now be nearly eight decillions of human beings in the world, for which the earth's natural resources would be inadequate for subsistence. Did the agnostic ever think what would be the consequences if the billions of human beings that ever lived in the past, have simply ceased to be? What would be the basis of human progress, if the people of the present generation have come upon the stage of existence for the first time—all previous mental energy having become lost in the death of the previous generations? The waste of mental substance in the agnostic conception, is on a par with the excessive waste of physical energy on the basis of a universe constructed after the hypothesis of Copernicus. In the Koreshan System it is different: The universe has existed eternally; it has always been inhabited by human beings as the highest product of universal activity. The people living in the earth today are the same that inhabited the earth trillions of ages ago. Man comes back, again and again, to the natural spheres of life. The primary generation of man obtains in the human brain; man is the product of mind and matter, through given functions. Man is continually coming from the mental domains; and the supply is never exhausted, for the mental forces of those who die, enter the mental spheres of the living humanity. Mortal man returns from whence he came; if man came from oblivion,—if he came from nothing,—he returns to it! But if he came from the reservoirs of human life, his exit from the natural world is into the world of mind and of life!

The political parties of the United States are endeavoring to discover the campaign issues for 1900; it is a tedious process, involving much shifting and turning, not for the purpose of finding the true, underlying principles upon which a righteous platform must depend, but to find what policies will best sway the public and retain harmony in the party lines. It does not matter to either party what its platform is, so long as it is a stepping stone to power; it is satisfactory if it is opposed to the platform of the other party! It is believed that the democratic party will not press the free silver question to the front; it is too remote from the popular questions which have arisen since the Spanish-American war. In the meantime, the great trusts have multiplied until the nation is alarmed at the results; and war is in progress in the Philippines, with its problems that are not to be settled by mere campaign speeches. The republicans must stand by the present administration in its successes and its failures; and we do not believe that the democrats will deny that President McKinley has had to contend with the greatest contingencies that have arisen since the civil war, and has written his name in the public mind alongside that of Lincoln; but he has involved the nation in great national and international questions, which move the world in the direction of revolution.

The benefits of scientific communism are not merely for the mutual enjoyment of those who hold goods in common; it involves more than mere industrial economy. The nucleus of scientific communism is to the world of humanity, what the central solar sphere is to the physical universe. Koreshan Communism is for the purpose of uniting mental elements for the fulfilment of a supreme purpose—the achievement of a victory over mortal conditions, which the individual is unable to achieve for himself alone. The central communistic nucleus, governed by scientific laws of order, contains the germ of evolution of the true social organism, the germ of social reform. The forces of the great movement in the direction of the reformation of the world must proceed from a central united effort of the most progressive minds, with one purpose in view, and with mental energies polarized in one personality. The Koreshan movement, with its communistic center, involves more than socialism; it involves all of the elements of religious, moral, social, ethical, and political reforms, which are necessary to produce, as from one cause, the unity of effect in the great world of human economy, inclusive of the economy of life, and the anatomical transformation necessary to the putting on of the immortal nature in the natural world.

The Afro-American conference, whose members embrace all of the prominent Negroes of the United States, has convened in Chicago, to discuss problems of vital interest to the colored race. It seems quite paradoxical, thirty-five years after the "emancipation" of the Negro as a result of the American civil war, that representatives of the Negro race should meet to discuss means of obtaining freedom from the terrible conditions of racial persecution to which the Negroes of the South are subjected. Nevertheless, the leaders go on record as protesting against the wholesale murders and tortures perpetrated by the white people of the southern states. They consider themselves Israelites, as it were, in Egypt, under the tyranny of a superior power. Bishop Walters, in his address, made the following sensible remarks: "The race problem in America is not with the colored people. The white people make the problem, and they must solve it. Colored men do no lynching. To stop lynching, the lynchers must be brought to terms, and they are all white. They need regeneration, and that work must be accomplished by some force or agency other than that operating in our civilization at the present time. The country is drifting into anarchy. Day by day, the lawless and barbarous spirit of the mob becomes more defiant."

"Reduced to its finest conceivable attenuation, the universe consists of matter, law, and force; they are the original trinity, of which all other trinities are but symbols," says an astrologer. Indeed, and of what is it composed when not reduced to such attenuation? How much of the universe is composed of law? and what relation does it sustain to matter and energy? The universe is composed of substance in two general states,—matter and energy,—each of which is susceptible of being transmuted to the other. Where does law come in? Is it a substance acting with matter and energy? Law is not a substance. Universal law is the mode of action of matter and energy, the regular method or sequence by which cause produces effect, and by which effect produces cause. It is not a third element of universal analysis, but the inherent tendency to produce results which are ever the same where the same conditions obtain. If there were a third element, law would still obtain as the mode of action of the three states of the universe; but there are only two general states of universal substance, and law is the sequential tendency or method of procedure of all substance.

Bishop Holsey, of Texas, suggests a solution of the American Negro problem; instead of deporting the Negroes to Africa, as has been before suggested, Bishop Holsey would substitute the formation of a Negro state—set apart a portion of the United States for the exclusive population of Negroes. He would draw the lines of demarcation between the two races, and increase racial prejudice. The nation once decided, constitutionally, that the Negro is an American citizen, with rights and privileges equal to those of the whites, and race distinction was wiped out. But the people of the South, under a republican form of government, do not desire to abide by the will of the majority. The fate of the Negro is not to be the fate of the Indian. The solution of the problem is not in dividing the races,—not in removing the Negro from association with the whites; but in amalgamation. The black race constitutes the foundation for the new race of men that is to be developed in America. The Koreshan solution of the problem is scientific, and involves the profoundest principles of ethnology; and it will prove to be the only practical solution.

The Christian Scriptures record the fact of the existence of an immortal man—a man immortal in the flesh. Jesus the Christ overcame death and went out of the natural world through an incorruptible and voluntary dissolution. Koreshanity maintains that death can be conquered in every man who will conform to the same laws and subject himself to the same processes by which Jesus overcame death. The germs of immortality, planted in the early church, must ultimate in an immortal fruitage at the end of this dispensation or cycle of development of the seed sown. Koreshanity is able to point to an instance in humanity of the attainment to immortal life, and maintains that it is not only possible in modern times, but that it will occur as the inevitable result of the pouring out of the divine life nineteen hundred years ago. The church has fallen away from the primitive faith; it no longer believes in attainment to the natural state of perfection in the God-man. The modern church knows of no other route to the spiritual world than through the disastrous, corruptible dissolution of the physical structure of man.

Cardinal Wiseman suggests that "science has nowhere flourished more, or originated more sublime and useful discoveries, than when pursued under the influence of the Catholic church." We presume that this accounts for the fallacy of the Copernican system of astronomy, inasmuch as that "science" was bitterly opposed to the Catholic clergy of the sixteenth century, when Galileo, Copernicus, and others were persecuted by the church. The infallible decrees of the church have been changed since then, and the desire of Cardinal (un)Wiseman is to have the church claim credit for all the world's progress! If the Catholic church desires to be credited with all the modern inventions and discoveries, she must stand responsible for the uses of such inventions and discoveries as well; and the deplorable state into which labor-saving inventions have forced the laboring masses, speaks well for the Catholic influence in the social, industrial, and commercial uses made of inventions and "sciences" which have developed in the same period of the world's history in which the Catholic church has existed!

The conditions which exist in France today should prove a rebuke to the optimists of the late peace congress. France is nearing an internal revolution; already revolutionary preliminaries are arranged, and a civil conflict is, soon or later, inevitable. In Paris, the scenes of the old commune are being revived; riots have been precipitated in the streets, and hundreds of people carried off to the hospitals. The press of Paris looks for the terrible tragedy of another St. Bartholomew, or the ineffaceable horrors of another commune. The Dreyfus case is bringing the situation to a climax. The subtle Jesuits are working to break the power of the Jews, and the Catholic church is behind the anti-Semitic movement. The anarchists, socialists, Jesuits, republicans, royalists, and Bonapartists are factions which are booked to engage in another reign of terror in France, when the world merges into its awful vortex.

The struggle between capital and labor in Denmark has resulted in the lockout of 40,000 union workmen. The employers have formed a union among themselves, and have determined to not employ men who are leagued together to strike, destroy property, and prevent employment of non-union workmen. The employers consider it as much their right to strike as the unions, and are turning their attention to skill and muscle outside of organized labor. The difficulties increase in the industrial world; each class is clamoring for its 'rights;' labor organizes to scheme against capital, and capital organizes for the purpose of protecting itself against the caprices and uncertainties of organized labor. The war is declared, and the forces are maneuvering on the great battle-field of Gog and Magog; the crisis is at hand, and the general clash begins when both sides give the word to strike!

The anti-imperialists presume to be fearful lest the government of the United States should suddenly become an empire under the present administration. This new party is ultra-democratic; so much so, that it forgets that the imperialism of the money power which is endeavoring to control the Philippines, is but the natural result of the commercial greed which has been fostered by the American government in accordance with competitive and democratic principles. The American nation has not suddenly turned imperialistic; the imperialism of the trusts, the imperialism of the money gods, existed before the United States obtained possession of the Spanish colonies. The anti-imperialists, blind to the cause which they have supported in the past, are now endeavoring to fight the effects!

Happiness in the hells of humanity is a will-o'-the-wisp,—always pursued, but never obtained by the masses. Millions of people would not know what to do with happiness if it should suddenly come upon them. True happiness is not possible in the embodiment of selfishness. Happiness is only compatible with mental states which the world has not yet acquired. The door of the happy age is about to open; a new era comes, in which the mind and heart of humanity will be changed through education in genuine religious, social, industrial, and political science. When the principles of the true relations of man to man are known and applied, unhappiness and misery will flee from human experience, and the world will become illumined with the Light of humanity.

Progress in the human world corresponds to the solar precession in the physical universe. The Zodiac in the earth—that is, the Zodiacal belt of the earth's latitude and longitude,—corresponds exactly to the Zodiacal constellations in the physical heavens. The great cycle of the precession of the equinoxes consists of 24,000 years, the great year of human progress. The people of this world correspond, in their progress, to the specific movements of the stars. The path of the anthropotic Sun in humanity corresponds to the path of the physical luminary in its precession; consequently, the physical universe and the great world of man are analogues, and there are no other worlds in space.

The world needs a man with brains, with a knowledge of brains; he is infinitely more interesting than the "man with the hoe," and other men who do not understand cerebral functions. Hundreds of would-be reformers, in utter ignorance of the laws of universal construction, of the laws of order, of the laws of human relations, are endeavoring to formulate a system of social science! The man who does not understand man, can neither diagnose the social diseases which afflict the world, nor prescribe the effective remedy for the cure. The world requires a mental specific, which the quack social doctors are unable to obtain, because of their ignorance of the processes of its mental distillation.

Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of a plant is the seed, and the seed is its destiny. The ultimate of all human progress, of all human evolution, is involution or cause. The highest product of the universe is its cause, its origin and destiny. The perfect, immortal man is the fruit of all progress, the involution of all things, the cause of all things. Jesus the Messiah was the seed of humanity, its Creator, its in-volution. The origin of man is God; and God is his destiny. God is the climax of human aspiration. This is the fundamental doctrine of primitive Christianity, of which the modern church is ignorant.

The usual method of mental scientists is to endeavor to discover all the good in one's self, and deny the evil; the Koreshan method is to discover what is evil, that it may be converted to good. Koreshanity advocates the possibility of the conversion of the devil, the transformation of the mortal flesh to the immortal flesh. The Christ does not come to save people who presume to be righteous, but those who know themselves to be corrupt and mortal.

Philadelphia prohibits the beating of salvation army drums on the streets; but during the coming presidential campaign, not only will drums be permitted, but fireworks, campaign yells, and other wild demonstrations as well. Religious fanatics may not be permitted to make demonstrations on the street, but political fanatics, wild with party enthusiasm, must not be interfered with!

It is estimated that the national debts of the civilized world amount to about $30,000,000,000—all payable in gold. 30,000,000,000 gold dollars would weigh over 48,000 tons. Placed edge to edge, they would extend nearly 250,000 miles, or nearly ten times around the earth!

The scheme of Bishop Potter and Felix Adler to settle the Why Modern Scientists Do not Accept the Koreshan System.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—The $100,000 challenge made by the Founder of Koreshanity looks large, but it does not mean anything unless you state very definitely just what will be admitted as proof under the terms of the challenge, and give bonds that this $100,000 will be paid upon the terms being complied with. If the challenge is put on a business-like basis, I have no doubt there would be plenty to take it up. I would take no particular interest in your presentation of cosmogony by itself; but if it is presented in connection with the explanation by astronomers of repute, of the facts which seem to prove the concavity of the earth, I should take great interest in comparing the two views. I can have no interest whatever in your assertions, until I have had a satisfactory answer to this question: Why have you not presented your views to the scientific men of the world, who make it their business to know about such things?

Do you suppose for one moment that if you have made such an important discovery as you state, and can furnish any evidence whatever to support your assertions, every astronomer in the world would not tumble over his neighbor in order to be the first one to verify your discovery? If the shape of the earth makes any difference with your experiments, it seems to me that your time would be well spent in finding out what reasons the astronomers may have for considering the earth to be a sphere, and what answer they have to make to the evidence that may seem to indicate that the earth is a cell.

If you find from this investigation that you have been led into error by some points that you had overlooked before, you might have reason to thank me very much for this suggestion; if, on the other hand, you find that your evidence is corroborated and sustained by the most exacting criticism, and the world's astronomers admit that your statements cannot be refuted, I will join with them in not only thanking you for your suggestion, but in conferring upon you the greatest honor that the world can give to one who adds a great and important truth to the heritage of human knowledge.—F. K. B., San Francisco, Cal.

The $100,000 challenge to the scientific world, published in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, is put on as business-like a basis as is necessary in the primary announcement of it; the details, specifications, and terms await the inquiry of some astronomer who considers himself able to demonstrate all that is stated in the challenge. It would make no difference if we deposited $1,000,000 in a bank, subject to the decision of a scientific tribunal, and published all of the details of what we would accept as proofs,—the astronomers would remain silent just the same as now. We have challenged them to perform an impossibility, and they know it; they know that there are no conclusive evidences of the earth's convexity; no proof that the earth rotates on its axis, and no proof that it revolves about the sun. They know that the so called evidences are only cumulative and circumstantial, from which they evolve hypotheses. We know something concerning the history of astronomy, and of the phenomena which are supposed by the scientific world to indicate the earth's convexity. Astronomers admit that the shape of the earth has never been conclusively settled by their methods; and if our friend were familiar with the theory and history of astronomy, and were able to determine the difference between speculation and demonstration,—between hypotheses and conclusive proofs, he would know that the modern astronomical system does not contain any definite proof of its conclusions, and would know also that the astronomers themselves do not claim that it does.

Why have we not presented Koreshan Astronomy to the scientific men of the world, who make it their business to speculate concerning such things? The Koreshan System has been presented to such men as Camille Flammarion, of Paris, Astronomer Newcomb, Prof. Gore, Prof. Harkness, and Dr. McGee, of Washington, Astronomer Hale, of Chicago University, and Prof. Keeler, of the Lick Observatory; but they have neither the time nor the disposition to make practical and specific tests of the water's surface. They consider it unprofessional to investigate the theories of any one outside of the ranks of recognized scientists; and inasmuch as their position is a matter of business with them, they would no more invest in a new and revolutionary system that would humiliate them, than a millionaire would voluntarily place himself in a position to lose his millions! They are simply incredulous, and consider it highly improbable that any one should make discoveries of facts concerning the shape of the earth, which have escaped them.

To further explain why professional astronomers, surveyors, engineers, chemists, clergymen, politicians, and millionaires do not accept the Koreshan System of Science, we have but to refer to the history of the founding of any system of the past which has succeeded, after a long struggle, in supplanting a previously established system. It would seem as though the Jewish clergy, versed in the Hebrew Scriptures, would be the first to accept the teachings of Jesus; but the sequel proved that they not only did not desire it, but that they were incapable of understanding the new philosophy. There were certain requisites necessary to its comprehension, which they did not possess!

The old Ptolemaic system prevailed in the world for nearly 1,800 years. The time came when a few men dared to differ with the professional astronomers. Every one familiar with the history of the development and ascendancy of the Copernican system, knows of the obduracy and obstinacy manifested by the very men who, it is reasonable to suppose, were in position to investigate for themselves, and "tumble over their neighbors in order to be the first ones to verify" the new discoveries. Galileo discovered the moons of Jupiter and the spots on the sun. The reason these were not discovered before, was because vision had not been so assisted. We quote as follows from Newcomb's Popular Astronomy, page 244: "As in the case of spots on the sun, Galileo's announcement of this discovery was received with credulity by those philosophers of the day who believed that everything in nature was described in the writings of Aristotle. One eminent astronomer—Clavius—said that to see the satellites one must have a telescope which would produce them; but he changed his mind as soon as he saw them himself. Another philosopher, more prudent, refused to put his eye to the telescope, lest he should see them and be convinced. He died shortly afterward. 'I hope,' said the caustic Galileo, 'that he saw them on his way to heaven!'"

For the same reason that the Ptolemaic astronomers refused to investigate the discoveries of Galileo; for the same reason that the physicians and physiologists refused to investigate Harvey's discovery of the circulation of the blood in the human system, modern scientists fail to investigate Koreshan Universology. They refuse to move forward in the world's progress; because they are nonprogressive. History proves that any new system does not immediately become popular; the generation of scientists must pass away, and their places be filled by other men, educated in the new system; then the new System will prevail over the world.

We would suggest to the writer of the above, that we have not only spent our time well in ascertaining, through years of education, experience, and observation, just the reason astronomers have for considering the earth to be convex, but also in disproving, by hundreds of experiments, the fallacy of their conclusions. We are familiar with the entire lot of modern sciences, their premises, so called proofs, and conclusions; and we know what answer they make to the evidences that demonstrate the earth's concavity. If the Founder of Koreshanity had been led into error through overlooking points which a school-boy might be able to suggest, we would be inexpressibly thankful for the above letter; but since Koresh has had opportunity to know what he is doing, and how to do his work right, and to accomplish what the scientific world has failed to discover to the world, we consider the suggestion possessed of a shade of facetiousness. In the meantime, we leave the writer of the above suggestions to pursue whatever course he desires, until such time as he follows in the rear of a procession of astronomers in accepting the Koreshan System, and in conferring the greatest honor that the world can give to the One who has revealed to the world the greatest truth that can ever become the heritage of humanity.

Jonah and the Whale.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—If it will not be intruding too much upon your time and patience, will you please explain to me, from the Koreshan standpoint, the story of Jonah and the whale? My wife does not believe in the Bible at all, and says that the absurdity of this story is sufficient to condemn the whole book.—K. B. G., Calif.

The question of Jonah and the whale is a problem in Astrobiology, or the science of the relation of humanity and the stars. This is demonstrated by the meaning of the names and terms of symbolism used in the story of Jonah. At the outset, we meet with the term Nineveh, meaning the life of the fish, from the Hebrew roots, nun (fish) and haveh (life). The mission of Jonah was to go to Nineveh—to go to the life of the fish; and as fish signifies proliferation, this would mean that Jonah was to ultimate in the proliferation of life.

Jonah means dove; John means dove. When John baptized Jesus, he saw the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove, as it was being transmitted from John to Jesus. The people asked Jesus for some sign that he was what he claimed to be, and they were informed that no sign would be given to that generation but the sign of the prophet Jonah. The signs following the baptism of the disciples of Jesus were the marvelous manifestations of the operation of the Holy Spirit, which was Jonah or the dove in humanity. To his disciples Jesus said, "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so must the Son of man be three days and nights in the heart of the earth." And as a type or sign, Jesus was in the tomb of Joseph three days. He also said, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up again;" he did not refer to the magnificent stone temple at Jerusalem, but to his own body. At the end of "three days" he multiplies into 144,000 sons of God,—he reaches the proliferation of life at the end of the dispensation of Pisces, or the dispensation of the fishes. Has not this been an age of proliferation of human life?

The "three days" terminate at the end of this dispensation. The present age has been one day; at the beginning of this dispensation, Jesus was sown in the heart of humanity through the operation of the Holy Spirit; the dove went into the human earth or will. In this, we have the clue to the character of the earth into whose heart he went; we have the one day, the last of the three days, which is an entire dispensation. Now, what were the other two days? Why, two previous dispensations, of course.

During the present dispensation, the equinoctial colure has passed through the constellation Pisces, or the constellation of the fishes; nineteen hundred years ago, it was at the dividing line between Pisces and Aries; and about 2,000 years before that, it was between Aries and Taurus. The movement of this sign in the physical heavens through Taurus was one day; through Aries, the second day, and through Pisces, the third day. The constellations Taurus, Aries, and Pisces are bounded on the south by the constellation Cetus. When the sign in the physical heavens was passing through Taurus, Aries, and Pisces, during the Noatic, Jewish, and Christian dispensations, respectively, it was also moving through Cetus. The word cetus means the whale, from the Latin cetus; the whale belongs to the cetacian family. For three dispensations, the sign has been moving through the whale in the physical heavens; and correspondentially, Jonah or the Holy Spirit has been moving through humanity, the "great fish" which the Lord prepared to receive Jonah or the Holy Spirit. Jesus descended into the hell of mortal humanity; Jonah cried out in the belly of hell, and his cry was heard. Jonah in the whale's belly was the rich man in hades, who appealed to Lazarus, and ultimately his tongue will be cooled. Humanity is a sea: "The waters which thou sawest are nations, peoples, kindreds, and tongues." In other words, the Spirit of the Almighty has been operating in humanity to produce a specific result for three dispensations of human history, and ultimates at the end of the Christian dispensation in Nineveh, or the life of the fish, the proliferation of life—in the 144,000 sons of God.

The Koreshan interpretation of the story of Jonah and the whale is scientific; it is not founded upon coincidences, but upon the facts of astronomy, the meaning of root words, and the facts of human life as related to the great epochs of human history. The mind that wrote the book of Jonah comprehended the laws of human progress and the relations existing between the human world and the physical cosmos. The book of Jonah is written in the language of symbolism, and it can only be understood through scientific interpretation of symbolism; and when so interpreted, the story is found to be absolutely true on the plane of Astro-biology.

But is it improbable and impossible that a man should be swallowed by a whale and yet recover? Have not scores of people been buried alive, and revived after a number of days? A case is on record where, some years ago, a man from a whaling vessel in the South Atlantic, was swallowed by a whale while men in a rowboat were pursuing the whale with harpoons. The whale was afterward captured and brought alongside the ship and dissected, and in the stomach of the whale the unconscious sailor was found; he was revived on the deck of the vessel, and lived to tell the story hundreds of times.

The acceptance of the Koreshan Cosmogonic System at once destroys the fallacious conception of an extrinsic impersonal God, and explains the law of the generation of Christ and of the production of the sons of God.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.

It makes one almost shiver to look at the remarkable double-page illustration of the frightful hurricane in Porto Rico, drawn by F. Cresson Schell, and published in the current number of Leslie's Weekly. The blackness and fury of the awful visitation are drawn with a master-hand, and the engulfing waters almost seem ready to sweep away the reader himself. The home-coming of Admiral Dewey and his enthusiastic welcome along the route, the remarkable Dreyfus persecution in France, the war in the Philippines, the hastening of relief to Porto Rico, and other contemporaneous events of absorbing interest, are also the subjects of superb illustration. Bicyclists will be especially interested in the description and illustration of the new record-breaking "infernal machine" which is now used by bicycle pacers. It is a remarkable piece of mechanism. Leslie's Weekly is full of good things. An attractive feature is the continuation of Stanlaw's "American Girls" series. The amateur photographic prize contest gives us a page of beautiful photographs, and the page of illustrated "People Talked About" is as excellent as usual. The first part of an exciting story by C. C. Hotchkiss, entitled "The Wraith of Ramon Delano," will interest every reader. The letter-press includes interesting Manila correspondence; an illustrated description of the funeral of the late Colonel Hawkins, of the Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, at San Francisco; the story of the Dreyfus trial, of the hurricane in Porto Rico, and of the effort of philanthropic New Yorkers to save American sailors from the grasping hands of the land-shark.

The Chautauquan.

Dr. T. L. Flood founded the Chautauquan years ago, and made it the magazine of the Chautauquan Literature and Scientific Circle. He has built up this useful publication of self-education; and now with the September number, he concludes his work on the Chautauquan. It will hereafter be edited by Frank Chapin Bray, and will be published at Cleveland, O., instead of at Meadville, Pa. The current issue contains a number of articles of interest: How an American Stained Glass Window is made (illustrated); the Growth of Shakespeare's Fame; the Unveiling of the Father; Bulgarian Cities (illustrated); the Modern Poster (illustrated); Hypnotism; How the President Draws his Salary; the Kite in War and Peace; the Black Astronomer; Social Progress in France, and History as it is Made (illustrated).

Success.

A 16-page weekly magazine of self-help, splendidly illustrated. It is helpful to young aspiring minds in any department of life; it shows what others have accomplished in business, professions, and the arts, and what others may accomplish through force of determination. Success has a peculiarly interesting way of presenting the subjects of its sketches in striking light before the mind of the reader. It keeps up to date on all current events, and brings out the points which one desires to know after the newspapers have had their say. $1.50 yearly; 5 cents per copy. Cooper Union, New York City.

The New Voice.

The current issue of the weekly New Voice contains an interesting sketch of Col. John Sobieski, "the Man who would have been a King," of Poland, now living in Missouri; three True Stories of Heroic Lives; the Brakeman who Became a Railway Magnate; the Master of Many Trades; John Burroughs in his Mountain Hut; Madame Calve off the Stage; besides telling editorials concerning the iniquitous liquor traffic. 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfillment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follum. 2 cents each.

Structure and Function of the Human Brain.

Part III.

Cerebral Pulsation and Respiration, and Analogous Action of Heart and Lungs; the Imperial, Central Cell; Fallacies of Physiologists.

THE FIRST Great Cause produces sequential effects, but never is the full and ultimate effect accomplished until Cause has moved entirely into the Great Effect, and thus reproduced Himself; and so the last Great Effect becomes the first Great Cause. This is rendered clear and emphatic, in the words of Jesus Christ to John: "I am He that liveth and was dead." "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty." Cause and effect are herein declared to be one and identical. The law that pertains to the highest domain—that of the God-man—must necessarily hold good in the lower domain, modified in accordance with the modified form and function; for law is uniform, and has a correspondential agreement in all domains of creation. It is only when man begins to have something of a consciousness, a comprehension, of Deity, and through the love as involved in that comprehension he begins to be drawn toward God and knows that God is equally drawn toward him, that he can perceive that in this desire is the power that originates all life and activity, and that in the unity which follows as the result of this attraction, God and man are made one, life made manifest in the God-man, the first Great Cause.

We have said that corresponding to the two great hemispheres of the brain, there are two great motions of the body—pulsation and respiration, as manifest in the action of the heart and lungs; but as originating in the brain, they have their expression in the expansion and contraction of the cells, with the outflowing and inflowing of brain forces and fluids through the fibers, which are the correspondents of the blood vessels and bronchia. The brain has its pulsation and respiration as well as the heart and the lungs, and that of the brain is prior to the latter as cause and effect.

By the law of analogy, we know that if the great corpuscle of the mass, the single man as related to the entire humanity, breathes and pulsates, the single cell as related to the single man, breathes and pulsates also. No two cells of the brain, nor of the body either, for that matter, generate the same kind of fluid or the same kind of force. They all differ from each other. While every cell generates within itself a substance differing from that of every other cell; and while it in a way respire and pulsates independently of every other cell, they all have a synchronous action; that is, each cell acts in harmony with every other, because each cell, although it is individual, is related to a central cell, and is dependent upon it. This central cell is their governor or ruler. It is dependent upon them for its power, and they are dependent upon it for direction or control. Without it their energies could not be utilized, their activities would be chaotic and destructive; no thought could be formulated, and no effort systematized.

In the cells of the brain, that is, in the gray matter, are the beginnings of fiber. In this fiber is nerve substance, extending from the cell down into the brain, in some instances terminating in or at cavities; in others, extending into the spinal cord, and thence continuous into and throughout the body. These cells are little springs, from which originates the fluid communicated from them to the cavities of the brain and the nerves of the body. This fluid is produced by a flow into the cells of an attenuated portion of the blood carried to them through the pia mater by the office of the arterial system, which, with the inflowing nerve force, unites with the inflowing aura or spirit that surrounds the cell. In this union, the metamorphosis and transposition of substances are effected, by which are generated those energies operative in the respiration and pulsation of the brain.

The extremities of the arterial system which convey the blood from the heart to the brain, are very minute. As they extend their ramifications from the pia mater to the cell, they carry only the most attenuated portion of the blood to the cell, which absorbs it by the process of expansion, together with the afferent nerve substance, and the aura—the spirit of the soul and body—which surrounds the cell. This aura is that which is often represented as a halo surrounding the heads or the entire bodies of saints, and is respired by the cells as the atmosphere is respired by the lungs, and performs an office in the nervous system analogous to that of air in the vascular system.

The blood that flows into the lungs from the heart is the very antithesis of that which flows from the heart toward the extremities of the arterial system. In the general venous system are two distinct kinds of corpuscles;—the dark blood or venous corpuscles produced in the capillaries, and the white corpuscle produced in the alimentary and lacteal canals. They are both carried to the lungs and consumed. As the blood flows into the lungs, they receive—by the act of breathing—the oxygen and nitrogen of the atmosphere also. That is, by the lifting of the chest walls the atmosphere flows through the minute bronchial tubes to the pulmonary cells, and through the metamorphic action wrought by and in the cell wall, the transposition and metamorphosis of substances take place, by which the blood is revitalized. These changes are wrought through a process of combustion; and here is where a portion of the heat of the body is generated. By this fire, both the dark and the white corpuscles of the blood are destroyed; the oxygen and nitrogen brought in contact with them are also consumed. In this marriage of the black or dark corpuscle with the white, through the office of the atmosphere, the red or arterial corpuscle is created.

Physiologists have nothing to say concerning what becomes of the nitrogen in the destruction of the atmosphere in this pulmonic fire, except that it is breathed out unchanged. It is strange that in a body so largely composed of nitrogenous atoms, none of them can be appropriated except by the digestive tract; and that so essential an element of the human structure, comprising as it does four fifths of our atmosphere, should be inhaled and exhaled unchanged, and for no known purpose except, as some physiologists have stated, to dilute the oxygen and become a sort of “wet blanket” to the fire in the lungs. They declare that when oxygen is breathed, the blood becomes oxygenated. It is not oxygenated, in the sense that the oxygen enters the blood as oxygen. There is an absolute transformation of the oxygen, and not only of the oxygen, but of the nitrogen and the carbon also, (carbon being the base of the venous or dark blood corpuscle,) which, in their union with the blood, create a new vital form and spirit. As there is just as much nitrogen breathed out as is taken into the lungs, where does it come from, if that which is inhaled is burned up in the lungs? It comes as the result of the combustion of substances in the body which have performed their offices therein, and are good for nothing but to be burned up; and in this case the waste of the nitrogenous re-formation is equal to the supply.

It is supposed by physiologists, that the wastes of the nitrogenous elements in the body are restored by nitrogenous elements of food taken into the stomach, and that the nitrogenous formations of the body are built up only by the ingestion and digestion of nitrogenous food. We maintain, that to produce nitrogenous substance in the body, non-nitrogenous substance must be taken into the system to undergo conversion in the body. None of the so called elementary substances can be of service in the sustentation of the organic structure, except as they undergo conversion or transmutation in the living organism. The law of transmutation is the fundamental law of life, and only through the operation of this law can material substance, either organic or inorganic, become the vital flesh and blood. To this law there are no exceptions.

At every stage of progress made in human development, and as human necessities augment, all the conditions favorable to the supply of the demand are found to exist, or to have been provided through the operations of spiritual and natural law; but there always succeeds a struggle between the progressive and the so called conservative classes, for the rights of the progressive as they obtain in the higher stage of development, whether pertaining to spiritual or natural degrees.

The Organ and Function of Individuality.

Part I.

Analytic and Synthetic Analysis; the Fundamentals of Koreshan Phrenology and Psychology; the Cerebral Battery Cells.

A LONG THE frontal and lower margin of the anterior division of the cerebrum, is a gyrus or convolution of the brain phrenologically divided and defined as individuality, form, size, weight, color, order, and number. These exist in pairs, beginning just above the apex of the nose and extending in a line corresponding to the eyebrows—the superciliary ridge. The central pair of these organs is the one in question; namely, individuality. The group of organs whose location we have just defined, possesses double functions,—like all other centers of the cerebral mass. These organs constitute centers for both mental and physiological activities. They are not only centers for the generation of mental energy of a specific character, according to location, but they are also physiological centers, in which are elaborated the essences and electro-magnetic forces which supply the organs and actuate the functions which correspond to them in the physiological body.

Let us here premise the statement that no man, however much he assumes to know, can correctly define the character and function of any cerebral center, while possessing a knowledge of only one phase of the qualities and direction of its operations. Individuality, as a center and organ of the encephalic mass, has its antithetically co-ordinate pole somewhere in the body, to which it bears a reciprocal relation, and upon which it specifically depends for its normal action.

In the normally constructed and active organism, the eye is the primary channel through which the inferior gyrus of the frontal lobe of the brain receives its impulse. If we would follow the course of the visual line from the retina, where the first impression is made of material objectivities, to the local point of the cortical area where those impressions are first landed, we must carefully traverse the course of the fibers of the optic nerve to the optic commissure, thence through the optic tract to a group of cells located behind the ears, in the occipital lobe of the cerebrum. The retina is the sensitive plate of the camera obscura, upon which the individuality or undividedness of the object is impressed, and upon which the form, size, weight, and color are also pictured, to be conveyed to an equator of their particular axis. We have here enumerated five distinct functions of the eye as pertaining to an objectivity, the differentiations and co-ordinations of which are determined through the intermediation of brain cells upon that part of the cortical area located in the occipital lobe; that is, a part of the cerebrum behind the ears.

One of the first and most important questions to be considered,—in the study of the mental and physiological offices of not only individuality, but the tract of the other six cerebral organs to which it is related most specifically,—has regard to the channel of communication from the occipital cortex back to the inferior gyrus of the frontal lobe, when the circuit is closed. It is a simple and easy matter to physiologically trace the course of communication from the retina, where the first impression is made of an objective field, along the optic nerve, through the optic commissure and over the optic tract, to the cortex of the occiput, the first landing place and station of transportation; but how is the circuit completed to the points of differentiation,—the points upon which depends the analysis of the impression made upon the retina?

The Pole of Analysis and the Equatorial Station are Reciprocally Related.

Before we locate and define the line of transportation from the visual cortex, the location of which is determined through a knowledge of anatomical structure and the principles of cerebral physiology, to the co-ordinate and reciprocal pole, the pole of analysis, let us compare the points of co-ordination and their channels of reciprocity, from the basis of anatomical development and physiological force. When we behold an object through the function of vision, we may be able to outline its form as an undivided thing; we behold it in its entirety, not only so, but we may distinguish it from all other things of a similar or dissimilar character, and denote its form, size, weight, and color. These qualities of function are carried from the retina of the eye by different species of vibration, to the primary landing place of the impress; namely, the local area behind the ear. These impressions are conveyed over the nerve fibers,—if not through distinctive nerves, at least through specific vibratory impulses.

The volume and tension in amperes and volts must depend upon the quality of the battery cells (cells of elaboration) at the cortex, and the fiber of transmission as well as upon the character of the pole of differentiation; namely, the inferior gyrus of the frontal lobe. The organ of individuality might be large; the channel of communication between the retina and the occipital cortex being anatomically or physiologically defective, the organ would fail to display its function normally, or the fiber might appear to be normal as to its anatomical structure, and its passage free, or the elaborating cortical cell at the occipital area being defective, the organ of individuality would abnormally operate. The organ of individuality might be normal in size, in its relation to other cerebral organs; its function could be distorted by a supertension of the fiber, or a superactivity of the cell at the occipital cortex, the first landing place of the impression, and thus the organ, normal in size, could be overwrought and distorted in function; hence, it will be seen that a successful phrenologist must also possess a critical knowledge of anatomical structure, of physiological function, and of pathological conditions. Without these, the boasted phrenological prestidigitator is an unmitigated empiric.

In the examination of the organ of individuality, or the "bump" as defined upon the cranium, not only has the reader of the head to deal generally and specifically with the organ as related to surrounding organs and groups of organs, but more specifically with its relation to that cortical equator of vision situated at a specific point on the occipital lobe. The phrenological function of the organ of individuality cannot be analyzed or defined, then, without its specific study in relation to its co-ordinate "bump" on the occipital bone. Prominencies on the external surface of the cranium are generally accompanied with corresponding prominencies on the internal surface, with a corresponding depression of the cortex where the prominencies occur. This is an anatomical fact, urged by anatomists and physiologists against the claims of the phrenologist. The objection has no weight when the law of osseous deposit is comprehended. Craniology cannot be understood without a knowledge of this law.

The entire cerebral mass is covered with a cortex of gray matter, composed of two (and in some places three) distinct layers of cellular substance, connected with intervening layers of fibrous tissue, woven together of the most delicate and innumerable skeins, their continuity determining toward, and merging into that frontal pole of the cerebral axis denoted by the falx cerebri and the crista galli, the crest of the vertical plate of the ethmoid bone. Whenever there exist co-ordinate poles of activity, there are also axes of connection, and consequently equators. The central pole of impression of that gyrus or convolution of the brain of which individuality is the center, is, of course, the eye. The opposite pole is the group of organs already noted, and the equator is that cortical area in the occipital region where the optic nerve and tract first land the impression. It will therefore be seen that the axis is doubled upon itself. The pole and equator of the return half of the visual axis, that is, the return of the visual impression from the occipital cortex to the gyrus of differentiation in the inferior convolution of the frontal lobe, must be connected by some other line of continuity than the fibers of the optic nerve and tract.

The question of such connection is most natural, and the answer is scientific. In general terms, we may designate the connection to be magneto-electric. Extending from equator to pole of the optical limit, that is, from the cortex of the occiput to that of the organs of differentiation, are definite lines of fiber which connect the cells at the occiput, where the visual impress is landed, with the cells of the organ of individuality, thence with its associate organs of the group. These elongate fibers are interwoven with, and fortified by all intermediate fibers of connection along the tract of cells lying between these two points of conjunction. Every intermediate cell, therefore, in the course of the fiber, lends its magnetic force to the magneto-electric current. We have thus far only considered the currents of the intervening intercellular tissue.

In addition to the above described channel of communication, the membranes covering the cortical surface afford channels for the impartation of energy elaborated in the visual cortex from the optic impulse. We allude here to the pia mater, arachnoid membrane, and dura mater. To comprehend the functions of these membranes, as regarding the transmission of specific mental energy from equator to pole, it will be necessary for the inquirer and student to possess something of a critical comprehension of the character of the cell as an anatomical structure, as a physiological center, and as an electro-magnetic battery.

The Problem of the Afro-American.

Koreshan Scientific Prophecy Concerning the Destiny of the Colored Race in America; Law of Appropriation of the Fundamental Ethnic Principles.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon. Sol. Songs, 1:5.

UPON READING the reports of the Afro-American convention in Chicago, from the Koreshan point of view, which is central and all-comprehensive, we rejoice in the intense agitation to which this progressive people is being subjected, by the complications of their (to them) unsolved race problem. That universal solvent, Koreshan Science, long ago gave to its disciples the absolutely true scientific solution of all the problems of racial destiny. This has been offered to some prominent thinkers and teachers among the colored people; but their lessons in the school of suffering have not yet been sufficient to render them receptive to rational scientific appeal. Offences must needs continue for a little season, then they will be ready to be taught and led by the great Scientist who is to rule their national destiny until they are washed and made "whiter than snow," in the image and likeness of their God, Jehovah.

In the great conflagration which terminates this era, Haveh, the mother of all living, a being impregnated with the purified and focalized spiritual energies of universal ethnic infiltration, will give divine birth to the divine patriarchs, or arch-natural fathers of all the races. Under the dominion of this royal, arch-natural Priesthood, the purification of all flesh will take place, and the science of the laws operative to produce the ultimate perfection of race infiltration, the food for the Gods, will be known and applied. The colored race of today, writhing in the school of suffering, is to be a vital factor in the median line of the racial development which next ultimates in the divine sonship.

24,000 years ago, a condition of things corresponding to the present existed. The anthropostic earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Then followed the creative week; seven times God, the Logos, spoke, and a resultant creation was manifest, in accordance with symbolic record. There are consecutive and simultaneous orders of creation and recreation, related to cycles of specific lengths. A simultaneous manifestation of the creative powers of the Gods is at hand. It will be ushered in by Elohi, the Restorer of all things. His personal voice is about to speak the Word that will usher in the great Sabbath of rest for his own people. This rest is afforded by a recreation of men in the image and likeness of the Gods.

The still small voice of Elohi—the Spirit of Truth, is awakening “Lo Ammi” to a knowledge of lost Israel, the divine restorer of that divine life which is the fulfilment of the law of God. All the racial elements that are to enter into the baptism of fire which awaits this world, are being agitated by the forces of this potential voice, and drawn into the friction which will result in the fire with which the world is to be baptized. When once humanity is baptized by this fire and washed with the waters of regeneration, all the racial combinations of the divine alchemist will stand forth to reveal the glories of his inheritance, and the ways of wisdom will be the paths of a law-abiding people.

The potential law of circumcision will be revered with religious devotion, by renewed intelligence, that the Lord God may walk with each race in its own order according to the genius of each, until the Savior of the universe again appears, the ripe firstfruit of universal ethnic infiltration, the High priest of circumcision after the order of Melchizedek. The immortals soon to appear will guard the “Holy Grail” of the divine Maternity, through which they manifest themselves, and will rescue mortal womanhood from her slavery to sex passion; and the women of the colored race—who are to reflect the Motherhood of God in the mortal world,—will, in obedience to the law of circumcision, dedicate their daughters to the service of the Goddess to be revealed, and draw about them the circle of the Holy Church, and give them as wives only to those who walk as Gods among men, with an eye single to the return of Jehovah.

A glorious destiny awaits this long-suffering, down-trodden race kissed by the sun, in its relation to the earthly inheritance of Judah. The forces conserved by the male circumcision of the Jew, and so long desecrated in the wasteful service of commercial diabolism, will be repolarized for his restoration to the power and glory of Jehovah, by marriage with the female circumcision of a devout colored race, crossed with the remnant of the Adamic red man. The result will be men and women representative of the controlling vitality of the human race, dominated by the moral and intellectual forces of the Gods, whose veils they will constitute, when the evening of the Zodiacal day shall be lighted by the glories of the moon and the stars.

As the battle of Armageddon descends into the natural, and the battle of Gog and Magog fills the earth with scenes of disaster and violence, the humanity of God will come to the rescue and be recognized by the colored race in his beneficent provisions for their salvation, as a voice to rescue them from the besom of destruction that will fill the earth with desolation. They will then find themselves pre-eminent among the races in the reciprocities of love, begotten by the Almighty's fulfilment of the law of love to them; and they will constitute a wall of protection to the nucleus of the new and divine order of universal life, the children of the kingdom. These sons of God are representative of the ethnic infiltration of all races, and will rule the earth in righteousness during the day of the Lord.

The colored race, in the process of its great awakening, will reveal the fact that the love of the divine law was planted in their blood by their father Abraham, whose seed they are, as well as Israel; and the love of that law will attract them to the personification of the redemptive power of its science. The colored people are universally longing for education, regarding it as the power to deliver them from all the oppressions under which they have suffered. As they learn—through the instruction that is coming to them in the fall of the old church and state, and through the distresses of the nations, which follow—that an education in fallacy only serves to intensify the ultimate of human misery, they will thirst for the pure river of the water of life. Then will they be turned to the science of the laws of life; then will they find the Rock of their national salvation.

In this sin-weary and heavy-laden land of their bondage, some Moses will be raised up among them who will serve them with the waters of true science, and guide them to the brazen Serpent, for the divine wisdom they need for the attainment of life that is life indeed,—immortality. This divine education which the colored race is destined to receive, will make it the most vital element in the world's progress for ages. The heroic colored men and women who are striving and suffering for their degraded people today, will—in obedience to the laws of re-embodiment—live in the generations of the future, crowned with glory and honor.

Koreshans, with the science of the destiny of this race in America, should be first among the dominant race in the abolition from their hearts of every element of narrow race prejudice, and with the tenderness of the divine Motherhood, avail themselves of every opportunity to enlighten the black but comely seeker after saving truth, the science of his origin and destiny. In the lamentable sense, we are all black,—stained by the dark blood of our iniquities. If the heat of passion in the animal life of the dark race, takes the vengeance of outraged mortal love on the animal life of the white, 'tis but the operation of retributive justice which will act and react on black and white alike, until a place of repentance and turning from the ways of sin to the ways of divine righteousness is found for both.

The righteousness of the law, manifest in the ultimates of human destiny, makes of one blood all the races of the earth, even the blood of Jesus Christ, the righteous. His blood, the science of truth, the pure river of the water of life, is the product of the marriage of the Lamb, Elohi, and Haveh, the mother of all living.

Female circumcision and scientific ethnic infiltration will be the means of solving scientifically the colored race problem. Koreshanity declares this truth unhesitatingly, because of the absolutely reliable testimony of the science of the form and functions of the physical universe, and the laws operative therein to produce its inherent life, the apex of which is the divine human.

Colored thinkers and would-be scientists must sit at the feet of one who knows, before they can walk in the Light and become the fair gods, the children of the Day. The scientist of the laws they need to fulfil, must become as God to them, and the fountain of perpetual youth. Ponce De Leon was a type and a prophecy of something to come. He sought the fountain of perpetual youth in Florida. In Florida, the Ancient of Days will renew his youth—in the childhood of a new and vital race. In Florida, will be the future city of the great King of kings, the seat of a new Empire of divine civilization; and the perpetual fountain of youth for the New Nation destined to earthly supremacy for ages will be found there by the colored race; for there the Motherhood of God will rock the cradle of nations yet unborn, and breathe out her divine love in the perpetual benedictions of the Gods.

The Olive Branch and Russian Despotism.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

The Prince of Peace and His Sword.

"GLORY to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Such was the proclamation of the angels when the Lord Jesus was born into the world as a man. In the course of His mission he himself said: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword." How shall we explain these two apparently conflicting statements? On the occasion of His entrance into Jerusalem, riding upon an ass, the foal of an ass, which typified his coming again in the end of the Christian age, when the kingdom, of which he declared to Pilate that he was born the king, would come in earth, for whose coming he taught us to pray, the whole body of the disciples began to rejoice, saying: "Blessed be the king that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory in the highest." He said to his disciples: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." It will be noticed that they sung, not peace in earth, according to the proclamation of the angels, but "peace in heaven," the spiritual domain—the new church.

Peace can never come in earth until righteousness comes into it. Isaiah declares that "the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever." "For to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace." When, as in the beginning of the Christian age (and at no other time), a holy body like that of Jesus goes to spirit (Holy Ghost, the Comforter) and enters the men who receive it, and, forming conjunction with their spirits, out of these twain is formed one new man, so peace is made, and not otherwise. Jesus plainly told his followers that the completion of this process comes only in the end of the age,—in the time of harvest of the age in which it was begun. It is the great day of the Lord, the judgment that ends every age. "For when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

At such times as given by the apostle, God's word to men is: "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent: Because he hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." "And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Now, when the product of the divine seed—which Jesus was, and which he sowed in human hearts as the Holy Ghost, the Comforter—comes in the earth, each of those who received it will be a new man made out of twain—"redeemed from among men," and the proclamation of the angels, "On earth peace, good will toward men," will be realized, and the Prince of Peace will come to his kingdom which, while in earth, he declared to be not of that age.

Barbarity of the Russian Bear.

IT IS SAID that 40,000,000 Russian subjects are now face to face with the most terrible famine that has ever distressed the people of that country. The entire subsistence of three fourths of that vast number of human beings, is said to be what is called "famine bread," composed of the goosefoot plant and animal dung; and that men commit robbery and even murder to get these disgusting loaves. The putrid carcasses of animals dead of disease and starvation, are said to be greedily devoured. The cause of this horrible state of things, as given by the New York Tribune, is as follows:

The government, in order to provide money for its standing army, had confiscated and sold for non-payment of taxes, the agricultural implements as well as the horses, the cattle, the sheep, the pigs, and the poultry. In one village, according to the St. Petersburg Novoe Vremya, the tax gatherers seized every chicken in the place, about six hundred in all.

Mainly for this reason, it is said, the fields were neither tilled nor sowed last year, and hence the famine. It is in the eternal fitness of things, that the head of such a robber government should propose disarmament; and if it would spend some of its surplus gold, if not in feeding its starving subjects, at least in supplying the means of tilling the soil and securing means of subsistence, rather than in stealing what they have, and in supplying gold coffins to heirs apparent to its sovereignty, who succumb to constitutional weakness or their own vices, it would manifest to the world its right to be.

The Greek historian and philosopher Xenophon, says of the vast countries subdued by the great conqueror, the elder Cyrus, the founder of the Medo-Persian empire, that the former governments of these nations robbed their citizens, and the citizens robbed each other, so that there was security for neither life nor property; but under the government of Cyrus it soon came to pass that men might travel day or night throughout his vast dominions, carrying their most valuable possessions, without even taking the precaution to conceal them. The government did not rob the citizens, nor allow them to rob one another. Under the competitive system, by the operations of usury, rent, profits, and as a natural result, war, robbery has become so ingrained into all the relations of the citizen and the government, that governments rob the citizen and citizens rob each other without even a suspicion of the heinousness of their acts. The result is, that in all countries the great masses of citizens are disinherited, homeless, tramps, and beggars, with no visible means of support, and no resting place but paupers' graves.

A just God—in the time of judgment now at hand—will lay all this misery, and want, and suffering, and death, at the doors of the unjust governments of the world, to whose doings, or not doings, which are their darkest deeds, it is all due; and he will call these unjust stewards to account, for the time is at hand when they shall be no longer stewards. When He damns—in this the only world in which he damns anything—these unjust governments that have wrought such ruin in his fair domain, he will in nowise clear his professed shepherds and servants, who have been dumb dogs, silently gorging themselves on their share of the plunder, but raising no voice of protest against the colossal wrong and injustice.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE GREAT question of the coming of the Christ has been agitating the religious world for half a century. The orthodox and the Adventist idea is, that His human form will come down through the space of the physical cosmos from some distant point or star. Others look for a materialization out of the atmosphere; some hold that the Lord is already present in the air, intangible and invisible; and it is becoming a general idea among metaphysicians and occultists that he is present in every one. We have recently noticed two prophecies concerning the Coming One, made during the present century, that "He shall be the herald of the dawn of reconstruction of society and the establishment of the celestial kingdom in the earth. He shall be gifted with a power of speech to thrill the nations. He shall paint man's glorious destiny in colors beautiful to behold, and he shall become known as the divine Messenger, through whom cometh heaven's mandates unto the people. The age demands such an one, and in due time he will come." Also, "At the time of the end, the closing of the cycle, shall one rise up who shall hold the command of hitherto undreamed-of forces, and he shall honor the God of forces." Christians generally are expected to accept the Bible as correct, and that the fulfilment of its prophecies are inevitable. How shall the Coming One come? He will come according to the laws of propagation of divine life; and that he will come in humanity, out of humanity, is evident,—first from the fact that he so came nineteen hundred years ago, and second, that the processes by which human beings get into the natural world can never be superseded. He will come as the focal point of humanity, the pivot of human consciousness, the container of the truth of the universe. He will come in the human family, because he must be the product of human progress. Jesus came through the tribe of Judah; the blessing of Jacob upon his son Judah is admitted by all, to point to the manifestation of nineteen centuries ago. But the prophecy concerning Joseph and his posterity was not then fulfilled; and as "From thence (from Joseph) is the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel," at some time in the world's history, a man must come as the Messiah, not from Judah, but from Joseph. Isaiah very pointedly announces his name and office, much to the discomfiture of modern theologians; and the people of the modern world will live to see and recognize the personality, and rejoice in his name. "That saith of CYRUS, He is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure." What is he to do? Turn the wisdom of the scientists backward, and make their knowledge foolishness; to subvert the effete thought of the age. By what title is he addressed by the Almighty? "Thus saith the Lord to his Anointed (Hebrew, Messiah, Greek, Christos), to CYRUS, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue the nations before him." Is this prophecy true? Will it be fulfilled? Can the world locate the man? Will the Christians know and receive him?

The anti-monopolists would resolve the industrial and commercial situation of the world into the primary stages of competition. Democracy is full of the idea that each man is master of himself, and proceeds on that basis,—whether any man is master of himself or not. The experience of the American nation under such a policy, demonstrates that where the many are not masters of themselves, the few become masters of the many; it is inevitable. Where that mastery is selfishness, a form of slavery exists. Competition is bearing its fruit—the anomalous conditions of wealth and poverty side by side. The principle of monopoly in itself, is not wrong; it is right if practically applied for the benefit of all. In every co-operation there is monopoly. The greatest monopoly the world will ever know, is the coming monopoly which will control all of the products of industries, and regulate all of the affairs of church, state, and society in harmony in one system. At the present time there are two kinds of monopoly—the monopoly of money by the money power, and the monopoly of labor by the labor unions. If it is wrong for capitalists to combine, it is wrong for labor to combine. The true form of monopoly will scientifically relate labor and society, church and state; it will abolish the money power, and introduce the co-operation of God and man for the blessing of the world.

The ascendancy of democracy in the world has not brought human liberty. The people of the great republics are oppressed as much as the people of empires. In America there is an ostensible freedom, but it is a form which grants commercial pirates the privilege of preying upon the people. There is no more justice in the governments of the world today, than there was a thousand years ago; there is far less order, and more lawlessness. When all of the efforts of the present century for freedom are summed up, we have the opportunity of realizing their utter futility. The money power is stronger than ever. It matters little to the individual whether he toils for heads of empires or heads of corporations; in either case his energies are expended, and he obtains a mere pittance of what he earns. The slavery of labor today is worse than any system of slavery that ever existed in the past. Democracy is obviously not the ideal government; independence is not the panacea, and individualism is not the cure for unhappiness. There is no freedom today; there would be far less if anarchy reigned, and from democracy to anarchy it is but a step; it is in the order of retrogression and disintegration. Koreshanity brings to the world the truth which will effect human emancipation from all the terrible conditions which curse the world; it is the truth of a superior government, founded on the absolute science of the laws of universal economy. It is the natural government, and will liberate the world upon its ascendancy.

There is no life in modern Christianity; it is a shell, containing nothing of value. Apart from the various societies and church auxiliaries, it is nothing. If it were what it claims to be, there would be no need of the numerous society props which are now necessary to support it. Bishop Fallows is scheming to help the church out. Babylon has gone on for centuries without doing anything for humanity. Is it not a little late to begin now? "It is better late than never"; but it will be never! The bishop plans a "parliament of ethics," to be held in Chicago during the fall festival. The idea is to get the opinions of a number of prominent men concerning how to practically apply Christianity to life! Two ex-presidents, Secretary Long, the vice-President, the Presidents of Yale and Harvard colleges, Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Ireland, Roosevelt, Henry Watterston, and others, are invited. We will admire the science of ethics promulgated by the convention—if it is worth anything!

The Chinese empire, the oldest civilization, comprised of a people remarkable for perpetuating the customs of past millenniums, is about to be divided to satisfy the commercial spirits of the modern world. Chinese territory is being invaded by the European and the American; there is a breaking down of the barriers which have hitherto protected the Celestial empire from the disintegrating elements of the West. It is significant that the great Chinese wall is to be torn down; modern improvement and progress have so decreed. The people of China constitute the integumental environ or skin of the great body of humanity; and the breaking of the skin is the signal for the transformation of the old body. The old man of the world has about reached the limit of his existence. The new age is here, and new forms of both the individual and the universal man are inevitable.

Modern education fails to touch the vital issues of human life. What concerns man most is his existence; and the mind of man should be educated in the science of his own being, and his relation to the universe at large, in order to insure the proper adjustment of the affairs of humanity. Modern education is artificial; its methods are impracticable, and the theories of modern science are worthless. After centuries of so called intellectual progress, there is today an alarming dearth of original thought, a startling state of dissipation of life itself, and consequent mental mediocrity. The pedagogue and pupil are astray; the pulpit and pew are lost—the blind are leading the blind, groping in the dark avenues of human research, without intellectual capacity to comprehend the facts with which they daily come in contact!

A Pittsburg preacher says that "every act leaves a residuum, and the slow accretion from the numberless acts of life forms the character. We are today what our past actions have made us; we are the resultant of what we have said and done." Excellent! What humanity is today is the result of what it has been in past generations. This necessitates re-embodiment; the individual today is the result of what he was in a past embodiment. The reverend gentleman uses an argument for re-embodiment, and does not know it! His character development spans a space of time that is too limited to make a man; for if character building is the result of experience, made up from the residuum of past actions, whence will beings who die in infancy, derive their character, if every one has only one lifetime in the earth?

The medical fraternity feels secure behind a wall of legislation in its favor. Were it not for legal protection, how often could physicians be prosecuted for allowing their patients to die! It is not a question of who is able to cure; but who has the sanction of the medical trust? A patient may die under the psychological treatment of a mental healer; the neighbors become indignant, and the doctors resort to law. But when, under the care of regulars, hundreds die from the effects of vaccination, anesthesia, surgical operations, and poisons at the hands of licensed physicians, the results are taken as matters of course! A little legislation covers a mass of ignorance!

Although during the campaign of 1896, the republicans pledged themselves to the free coinage of silver on the basis of international agreement, but little attempt was made to ascertain the opinions of other nations on the subject; and now the republicans unite for speedy legislation in favor of the single, gold standard. THE FLAMING SWORD pointed out years ago that the republican party never meant what it said in its platform about silver. The power behind the throne laid the planks in the platform for the purpose of obtaining votes, and now the movement to secure gold standard legislation is under way in accordance with predetermined plans.

The daily press cries out against the mental healers who attend the sick, and endeavors to make war upon christian scientists, the missionaries of Dowie, and others; but the advertising columns of the newspapers contain displays of "eminent psychologists," mediums, hypnotists, and quack specialists, who prey upon the public without producing any results but those that are harmful. The inconsistent daily press will praise, through its advertising columns, these money-making frauds, and persecute for the sake of policy, men in pursuit of religious liberty guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

Schweinfurth, the notorious Rockford "Messiah," who plagiarized the name of Church Triumphant from Koreshanity, has abandoned his old claims, and has accepted christian science. In a moment of religious enthusiasm some years ago, he fancied that he was inspired; he evolved a semi-orthodox theory and gained a little following. He now repudiates his "inspiration," and feels ashamed that he ever claimed to be divine. But his acceptance of christian science necessitates the claim that everybody is divine; and among the christian scientists he may find the road a little smoother than when alone; but his own life is just as corrupt as before.

Army worms, red spiders, and other insects have attacked the lawns, gardens, and ornamental trees of Chicago, and men have declared a war of extermination. A daily paper captions a half page with striking head lines: "Insects wither Chicago lawns, and bring trees to sear and yellow leaves. Gardeners find that war on bugs keeps them busy. Entomologists are at work with their microscopes." What a useful thing the microscope is! It enables the bacteriologist to destroy the microbes and purify the city water; and now, as a weapon in a war of extermination of army worms, it is unequalled!

It is not enough to overcome the present money system; the world cannot be truly free until man is free from sensualism, ignorance, and greed. Death and all the present abnormal conditions in human affairs and life, must be overcome through obedience to the royal Law of Liberty.

Columbus (from the Latin, columba) means the dove. Columbia is the home of the dove, the nation in which the Messiah of the dispensation is manifest, the people in whom the spirit of the Almighty will become operative through divine baptism.

Water is the symbol of truth; with some it signifies mere opinion. Conceit places a notion in the mind, and the man concludes that he has an ocean of truth in his head.

While the religious sects are fighting over the proper day on which to abstain from work, the masses are concerned about the days on which they can find employment.

There are two sides to the question of the shape of the earth. The wrong and the right side,—the outside and the inside. The successful Scientist has the inside track.

The men who create the wealth of the world earn it, but do not obtain it; wealth, under the competitive system, is appropriated by the few who earn nothing.

The school boards are adopting methods of measuring the brain power of children, instead of employing methods for increasing it.

It is said that labor is the parent of all wealth; but the laborers are compelled to pay rent to the wealthy.

"Higher critics" cannot understand the Bible as long as they presume to stand over it.

We can vex the astronomers who hold that the earth is convex!

Every dog has dog-days all the year round.

Measuring the Distance to the Stars.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—My attention is called by a friend to Prof. Dolbear's statement in the August Coming Age, page 141, in which he says that "With the telescope we determine the distance to the stars more remote than the members of the solar system," etc. Please explain in THE FLAMING SWORD, for my friend's benefit, the fallacy of Prof. Dolbear's argument. How can one determine the distance of any object by means of a telescope, if one does not know the size of that object? Or, how can one determine the size if one does not know the distance? D. E. S. Santa Ana, Cal.

No well informed advocate of the Copernican system will for a moment, assert that the usual conclusions concerning the distance to the stars are reached through simple observation through the telescope. The intricate factors involved are those of hypotheses or assumptions, which furnish the basis of all modern astronomical calculations. The astronomer has visual orbs just like those of other people, and all that he sees in observing a star, is a point which appears very much smaller than to the naked eye. He sees the circle of his telescopic field dotted with thousands of points, which are irregularly strewn in two-dimensional form upon the retina of his eye. Stars do not have to be remote in order to appear small. It is admitted by every one that they are points upon the small area of the retina. Thousands of stars can be imaged on the retinal surface; and the same effect can be produced by arranging, in the form of constellations, electric lights at a distance of only a few miles. The stars appear small because they are small. Herschel concluded that the stars were all about the same size; and from their different magnitudes, concluded that the universe is in the shape of a flattened oval body. When a telescopic view of a star and the measurement of its parallax are linked with a system of previous conclusions, or unproven premises, the intricate triangulations are made to produce the usual results in trillions of miles!

What are the assumptions which constitute the hypothetical basis of modern astronomical calculations? Let us begin with measuring the distance to the moon. Observations are made from two remote points on the earth; the moon appears to be in two different positions as related to the stars of a given constellation. The apparent shift constitutes the parallax of the moon. It is supposed that the earth is convex, and that the perpendiculars extending radially from the center of the earth, diverge continually in space. From the basis of triangulation, after assuming that the observations are made on a convex arc, the distance to the moon is calculated to be about 240,000 miles. If the earth were flat, the same facts of observation, taken in connection with a new hypothesis, with a new base line, would give entirely different results. On the concave basis, using exactly the same facts of lunar parallax, we find the mean distance to the moon to be about 800 miles.

How are calculations made of the distance to the sun? Horizontal parallax of the sun is too small to be accurately measured; so a different method from that of calculating the distance to the moon, must be employed. Let us notice the processes to which the astronomer subjects his mind. The assumption that the earth is convex is not sufficient; an hypothesis of another character, taken in connection with the first, must be resorted to. The relation of the sun to the earth must be determined: Does the sun revolve about the earth diurnally, or does the earth revolve about the sun annually? If the affirmative to the former be accepted, the distance to the sun is but little more than that of the moon; if the latter, about 92,000,000 miles would be required. It is concluded that the earth is in motion; it is thought that it is more reasonable to conclude that the earth moves about the sun once a year, than to have the sun and all the stars revolve about the earth in 24 hours. If the earth moves about the sun, the solar parallax (about $8.86''$) gives a distance to the sun, without changing its apparent size, and without omitting any of the facts of measurement of solar parallax, about 350 times greater than would be obtained if the earth were convex, but stationary.

After assuming that the earth is convex, and measuring the distance to the moon; after assuming without a shadow of a proof that the earth revolves about the sun, and calculating the distance to the sun to be about 92,000,000 miles, the astronomers are ready to take that distance as the "yard-stick" with which to measure the distance to the stars. How do they do it? They double the distance, and make it the diameter of the earth's orbit. The assumed diameter of the earth's orbit is taken as the base of great triangles, in connection with the further assumption that rays of light through the vast abyss of Copernican space are rectilinear. The shift of a star in six months is supposed to be due to the change in the earth's position in space; the annual parallax of a single star, taken in connection with the assumed base line of 184,000,000 miles, indicates to the modern astronomer, that the lines connecting the star and the earth at opposite points in its orbit, converge at a distance inconceivably greater than the calculated distance to the sun—in some cases running up to quintillions of miles. The parallax of but few stars has been observed, about a score only; and in all these cases, the parallax is but a mere fraction of a second of arc.

Without the intricate factors which we have noted, no astronomer in the universe would pretend to measure the distance to the so called heavenly bodies; and without the assumptions we point out, no such inconceivable distances would be calculated. Astronomers speculate as to the size of the stars, after they have guessed at their distance. The Koreshan System does not deny the facts of astronomical observations; it only changes the base—the concave arc, instead of the convex surface. We determine by calculation, that the visible stars are from 900 to 1,000 miles distant. It is simply a question of the premise; for the calculations cannot be made independently of the premise. If the premise of the old astronomy be admitted to be false, all its calculations are wrong. The elements of modern astronomy are mere values of hypotheses, and are not claimed to be proofs.

Plumb-Lines and the Earth's Concavity.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—If your theory of the shape of the world is correct, it will follow that plumb-lines will approach each other at the top, instead of at the bottom, or at the surface of the earth.

I do not know whether you have tried the experiment, but would it not be a good idea to drop two plumb-lines, say on fine steel wires, with heavy plumbs, from the highest building or tower that can be found on or in the earth, and then measure the distance between the lines at the top and the bottom? Would it not be possible that a finely graduated scale would show whether these lines are diverging from the earth or diverging toward the earth? If you have already tried this experiment, please let me know the result; and if you have not tried it, what do you think of its feasibility?—D. W. R., Greenville, Tex.

If the earth were convex, perpendiculars would diverge from the earth, and would consequently be farther apart at the top than at the bottom; on the concave basis, two radii of the earth's diameter would of course be farther apart at the bottom than at the top. This would be a geometrical and physical certainty. A plumb-line, perfectly free from all disturbances, horizontal attractions and oscillations, hangs perpendicularly, and always at right angles to the horizontal; but the question of testing the shape of the earth by suspending two plumb-lines from a high tower in close proximity, involves points which escape those who have given the subject only superficial thought.

It has been demonstrated hundreds of times that there is a mutual attraction existing between atoms of matter, and consequently, between two bodies left free to swing in the direction of the energies of attraction generated in the bodies. That which keeps the atoms of a piece of chalk together is called cohesion; destroy this force by a blow, and the chalk is reduced to powder. Cohesion is the strongest force of attraction; but there are other qualities of forces of attraction. Place two pith balls in a bowl of water and they will move toward each other until they come in contact. The well-known experiments of Cavendish and others with suspended leaden balls, showed a perceptible movement of the balls free to swing horizontally. Suspended plumbs, made of any material, would be attracted out of the true direction of the perpendicular, and would therefore vitiate the value of the experiment as a test of the earth's shape.

Another difficulty in such an experiment, would be to detect the difference of direction of the plumb-lines. We have had such experiments suggested to us scores of times before, and have ascertained by calculation, the ratio of divergence of the earth's radii. Two straight lines extending from the center of a sphere 8,000 miles in diameter, and diverging 12 inches in 4,000 miles, would diverge at the ratio of 568 billionths of an inch per foot, or 284 millionths of an inch in 500 feet. Between the top and bottom of two plumb-lines suspended from an altitude of 500 feet, there would exist a difference of only 284 millionths of an inch; and if this infinitesimal space could be accurately measured, to the exclusion of all horizontal attractions and oscillations, the lines would be found to be farther apart at the bottom. If two plumb-lines were suspended 500 feet apart, from an altitude of 500 feet, the difference would be only 142 thousandths of an inch; but it would be impossible to measure the distance between the top of two such towers.

So far as we know, the Koreshan Geodetic Staff has performed the only experiments with levels and plumb-lines ever made in the history of the world, in view of determining the contour of the earth's surface. These experiments were made in connection with the Florida Geodetic Survey, wherein we relate by mechanical means, two points on the meridian, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles apart. The particulars of this survey are given in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. Geodetically, we determined that this surface of the earth is concave, and also that the perpendiculars at the beginning and end of the arc measured, converged above the earth's surface at a distance of about 4,000 miles. Our methods of test involved points of scientific accuracy; the length of the arc measured was sufficient to show an appreciable and measurable divergence of the plumb-lines. Our plumb-line experiments were conducted on a large scale, and were obviously far more satisfactory than those proposed, in which the divergence of the lines would be too small to be measured.

From the Shaker Standpoint.

A Shaker Elder and Author Replies to Charges of Correspondent at White Oak, Ga.

EDITOR OF FLAMING SWORD:—In your issue of Aug. 18th, under head of "Lawlessness in Georgia," a correspondent uses the following language: "It is stated in the covenant of the Shakers, that they stand by the doctrine of nonresistance—that they do not resort to violence. Be it henceforth understood by all interested persons, that this doctrine is no longer recognized in the Society, for particularly of late, members have been forcibly ejected, even old men who have sacrificed their physical strength for the good of the cause. I am weary of the hypocrisy of the Shakers."

I had formed a good opinion of the person represented by the initials A. E. M., and I believe that in his moments of serious reflection he will be sorry for having turned "accuser of the brethren" who received him kindly when he was a stranger in a foreign land. Hypocrisy is a despicable and cowardly trait in anybody. "Hypocrisy of Shakers"! Lord Jesus and his holy Apostles! Shakers can no more practice hypocrisy and remain Shakers, than an honest man can tell lies to deceive, and remain honest. The first step toward becoming a Shaker, is to strip off all hypocrisy, and to uncover one's deeds to the light of God in a fellow mortal. And one must continue stripping off that element, so long as any cause for it remains, in order to continue a Shaker.

If persons (not "members") have been forcibly ejected, even old men who have used up their physical strength in serving their own lusts and appetites, while hypocritically carrying two faces, it was because they refused to submit to order and discipline which they had solemnly and repeatedly promised to obey. Their dark side had come to the surface, and they no longer held themselves amenable to reason, or conscience, or the persuasion of friends. People who are of a quality suitable to live in an honorable community never have to be ejected, forcibly or otherwise. They will either devote themselves unselfishly to learn and practice the requirements and obligations of the community, or if they think themselves unable or unwilling to do so, they will withdraw with as little disturbance as possible. One who has no higher motive than to be supported while he complies with only such rules as suits his convenience, or such as he feels constrained to in order not to be thrust out, is not fit for a religious community; and no length of service can buy a right to remain among those with whose principles his own selfish motives are at war.

I have lived upwards of 60 years among this people, and am joined in covenant with them. I never fancied that I could have any rights here, derived from age, or amount of service, aside from being true to the avowed principles of the Society. Neither did I ever conceive that the profession of nonresistance required us, as a people or as individuals, to submit to be ruled by disorderly, self-conceited, self-willed ignoramuses, who annihilate all their moral obligations, and all humanitarian responsibility and self-respect in rum and tobacco. Lying, hypocritical, utterly untrustworthy, defying order and government, feeding on detraction, poisoning the young with seeds of immorality and rebellion, disgracing the community, yet claiming all rights and privileges and the treatment due to obedient, self-sacrificing, self-controlled, self-respecting members. So long as creatures are born accidents of lust, we suppose such characters will be produced, and race prejudices will exist and have to be dealt with by the more intelligently endowed.

We believe in government. Self-government being the first and best, we have combined together to practice it. We believe in voluntary obedience to law, for law is the fiber of government, and the foundation of order and harmony, which makes freedom among many possible. It is self-evident that people who will not subject their passions to the restraints of reason, will inevitably arrive at a condition where they will have to be restrained by force. We believe that no follower of Christ should use carnal weapons to defend himself, or others, except from wild animals. There are animals in human shape, worse than any wild beast of the forest. We may not kill nor wound them with violence, but it is permissible to restrain them with physical force, or to eject such from a family where they do not belong. We hold that principle the same that we always have.—A. G. HOLLISTER, New York.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.

At no point thus far on his homeward way have the demonstrations in honor of Admiral Dewey been more hearty, spontaneous, and genuine than at Naples. Thanks to the enterprise of Leslie's Weekly, many of the most notable scenes and events of the stay at Naples have been pictured forth for the benefit of the American reading public. In its issue of September 2d, the Weekly gives five full pages of photographic views taken at Naples by its own special artist. These include several fresh and striking views of the great admiral himself as he appeared on board the Olympia and elsewhere, a picture of the famous five-inch gun and its crew who fired the first shot in the fight on May 1st, and many other interesting things in and about the admiral's flag ship. This array of Dewey pictures makes this number of Leslie's Weekly of special and rare value. Another notable feature of the same number is a full-page illustration and a full description of the magnificent new passenger-station to be erected at Forty-second Street, New York, the terminal point of the Vanderbilt railroads and other lines. The Weekly also continues its valuable series of special letters from the Philippines, the letter for this issue being accompanied with a page of photographic views illustrative of the trials and hardships suffered by our troops during the present rainy season on the islands. An article of extraordinary interest relating to the situation in the Philippines is contributed to this number by the veteran Bishop Thoburn, who has recently returned from Manila after a sojourn of several months in that region.

American Monthly Review of Reviews.

The current thought of the world is summed up in the September number of the peerless Review of Reviews. The great events of the month of August pass in panorama before the reader in the attractive group of contributed articles; these articles are timely and to the point. An important one is by the Hon. John Barrett, late minister to Siam, on the war in the Philippines; it is probably the first succinct, summarized narrative of the whole campaign that has yet appeared. Mr. Barrett was with the land and naval forces at Manila for a number of weeks and made a careful study of the situation. The conclusion is reached that the fighting was forced by the arrogant attitude of the jingo element of the Filipinos. The peace conference is discussed by the noted English writer, W. T. Stead; and the trusts, by George E. Roberts and Henry Macfarland. The excellent character sketches, the numerous editorials and reviews of the world's current history, make this popular monthly invaluable. A unique feature of each issue is the reproduction of striking cartoons of cartoon papers and dailies, and not the least interesting, is the reprinting of principal articles of other magazines; and the index to articles of all the great magazines is a valuable feature for specialists in any field of thought.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The September number greets the reader with a beautiful illuminated cover, fittingly representing the principal subjects concerning marine sports; a young lady in marine dress stands in the breeze, looking seaward. The leading articles are concerning the naval hero of the day—Rear-Admiral Winfield Scott Schley, U. S. N.—a sketch of his life and victories. The American Cup Defenders is a chapter in yacht development, finely illustrated by a number of American and English yachts; Also, Palatial Private Yachts, showing illustrations of yachts belonging to the Astors, Goulds, Vanderbilts, Rothschilds, and President McKinley, will interest thousands. The Building of the Race Rock Lighthouse in Long Island Sound, is a description of the engineering feat of constructing an island and lighthouse upon it. The fiction department is fully represented by Queen O'Sheeba's Triumph, A Half Caste, and the continuation of April Bloom.

The Cosmopolitan.

Two articles in the current number are of special interest in every household: The Delightful Art of Cooking, by Anna Leach, concerning the preparation of choice viands for the table; and The Art of Buying Food for the Family, the second subject of a series of papers dealing with home life.

This paper is by Mary Graham, who secures the prize of $200 for the best paper submitted on the subject. America's Cup is a finely illustrated article on yacht racing. The Art Gallery of the Great Lakes is both novel and superb. Exquisite scenes in the Roof Gardens of New York are reproduced from photographs, and add to the attractiveness of this number of the Cosmopolitan. We also mention other excellencies; the Editor's Building of an Empire; A Life, by Maarten Maartens; an Unconscious Crime; the Inner Organization of the French Spy System; Love Laughs at Locksmiths; the Study of Fiction; Romance and Tragedy of Kentucky Feuds; and Elton Slade's Auction habit.

The Plumb-Line of Commercial Equation.

The Social Question Solved!

Employment and Equitable
Remuneration for all
Co-operators.

The Bureau of Equitable
Commerce,

[Successor to the Industrial Co-Operative Union of America.]

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 20 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 20 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 20 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural. In the manifestation of the divine human. Price 20 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 20 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.50; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousands of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 20 cents.

ENTIRE SERIES OF BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS, POST-PAID, ONLY 75 CENTS.

The Organ and Function of Individuality.

Part II.

Individuality the Supreme Organ of Intellectual Discrimination; Its Highest Development Necessitates Successive Embodiments to Involve all Impressions of Universal Phenomena and Experience.

THE CELL is composed of an elastic cell wall, of a substantial parenchyma, nucleus, and vascular or circulatory apparatus. It has as distinctively a heart, an arterial, and a venous circulation and nervous system, as has the entire organic body of which it forms so minute a part. The cell is the terminal point of the minute ramification of an artery; it is also the spring from which the vein has its beginning. It is the terminal and initiatory point of the nerves of the brain, and the seat of influx for the surrounding aura, and the source of aural radiation. The brain cell is the elaborator of the physical essences which supply the blood from the cerebral functions, and also of the mental energies.

That the cell may perform the functions above described, it is essential that it be subject to the law and performance of motion; for without motion no function could be operative, nor could cerebral essence and mental energy be elaborated; therefore, the cell expands and contracts. This is not true of one cell merely, but of every cell of the cortex of the brain, and of all the gray matter. When the cells of the brain expand, the fluid of the arterial system and that of the afferent nervous system flow into and meet in the cell; and their alchemical reactions, being of specific differences, unite in an alchemical combustion. This combustion elaborates a new fluid for the efferent nerve, with the magneto-electric currents for the brain and the body. We have thus far confined our description to the anatomical form and the physiological function of the cell. We shall proceed to elaborate the subject of its supreme mental mission, after which we will give a brief exposition of the physiological relation of the organ of individuality to its corresponding organ in the body.

Motion and Statism are Co-ordinate Principles, Elements, and Factors of Mental Power.

There can be no motion (vibration) or excitement without something in motion, or to be excited to action. Energy could not move matter except that it be substantial, because to move an atom of matter, there must be an inherent principle of motion, or an extrinsic something tangible enough to displace the atom. Each distinctive mental phenomenon, from an extrinsic impulse, must depend upon its own quality or kind of motion. For instance; the principles of individualism, form, size, weight, and color are distinct and definite, and consequently depend upon different modes of motion. These modes of motion are implanted upon the retina of the eye, and transmitted to the brain cell.

It may aid the reader in comprehending the mental function of the brain cell, to know something of its processes by comparison with the modus operandi of the photographer's camera. The sensitive plate upon which the impression is made, is covered with a thin film of collodion, or corresponding substance. The plate, through the motion of light, takes the individual—undivided—picture; it takes its form and its comparative size, but it fails to perform all of the corresponding functions of the eye. It will be noticed that when the motion of light has performed its office, there remains the static empression; the arrangement of the picture remains upon the plate. The retina of the eye is like the sensitive plate in the camera, with this difference,—that there is a succession of pictures upon the same plate in the eye, hence the film has to be replaced as often as a picture is formed. This film is a secretion of the nervous system, and its action is as rapid and incessant as the vibration of the motions which operate to emplace the impressions. Every picture planted upon the retina is carried to the brain cell.

Another great and specific difference between the film on the photographer's plate and the impression on the retina of the eye, and thence upon the brain cell, is, that the picture made upon the retina of the eye and upon the cell retains the motion and color, with other principles of animation, as well as the form of the object. Now, when we consider the myriads of impressions of forms and motions of the objectivities of being that are made on the brain cell, and that the cell is sufficiently large to embrace the macrocosm in its microcosmic (diminished or least) form, we begin to comprehend something of the possibilities of the cell as the location of the spiritual world. It would be impossible for the human brain in one embodiment or incarnation, to take the impression of the universe. It is therefore provided that every visual being shall pass through a succession of existences, both in the objective and subjective worlds, or the material and the spiritual worlds, that the experiences of both may so aggregate as to constitute the individual, when ripe, the microcosm or little universe.

One can form no adequate realization of the mental function of a cerebral cell, without first embracing something of a knowledge of the form and functions of the greater cell—the macrocosmic world. Man is the reproduction of the universe on the smaller scale, and the brain cell is man or the microcosm on the still smaller scale. The cell of the brain is the active, living manifestation of the universe in its infinitesimal form and function. The sun, moon, and stars—with their forms, relations and motions—are pictured permanently upon the mind; the cell itself constituting the material basis of that implantation. We behold the solar and the stellar universe; that objectivity is planted upon the retina of the eye, with all its active phenomena. This again is conveyed, through the optic nerve, commissure, and tract, to the minute cerebral cell, where, in its least form and living manifestation, it lives in the cell. The sun, moon, and stars are there with their forms as perfect, and their functions and motions as distinct, as in the objective world. Mountains, oceans, lakes, and landscapes; forests and fields; rivers and rivulets; cities and towns; human and animal life in all its varied forms and activities,—all are retrospective in that universe, the brain cell.

The microcosmic world is large enough for, and does constitute the spiritual world. The spiritual world is in the mind, and its basis is the organic human form. There is no mental phenomenon independently of, and that does not rest upon its physical basis—the brain cell. All psychic and spiritual phenomena depend upon organic matter; and the brain cell, depending upon the organic structure, the body, is its material basis and foundation.

The Nerves of the Organ of Individuality and the Occipital Region may be Traced to that Point of the Spinal Column Supplying the Stomach.

The nerves of every spinal center develop by two roots, the anterior being motor, and the posterior being sensory. Sympathetic ganglia accompany, and are produced from the sensory roots. We have already outlined the relation of the visual poles to the equator of their axis. We have shown the organic and the functional relation of the organ of individuality to the cells of the occipital cortex, relating to the optic function. We will here state, in a general way, that the occipital cortex at the center of the optical function, supplies the nerves and the motor currents which control the motions of the stomach, and that the organ of individuality correspondingly furnishes the sensory nerves and currents.

Individuality is the stomach of the alimentary canal, involved in the mental and physiological organs of the inferior gyrus of the frontal lobe. In other words, individuality, form, size, weight, color, order, and number preside, through the cerebro-spinal system, over the alimentary canal of the body; that is, over the stomach, duodenum, jejunum, ileum, cæcum, colon, and rectum. Upon the health of the bodily organs therefore, must depend the normal function and the mental force of the phrenological organs.

The function of individuality, admitting that the organ be located as defined by the Fowler system of Phrenology, determines its work by virtue of its relation to consociate organs. Individual discrimination depends upon form, size, weight, and color at least. Individuality, as a phrenological organ, being ever so large, can operate only in unison with its group. Location and comparison are also factors in the powers of individual discrimination. The organ of individuality performs its best function when fortified and supported by an equilibrium of all cerebral and physiological centers.

The Higher Function of Individuality.

Exoteric mental functions depend upon the outer plane of cortical cells. Underlying the superficial cortical area, is a second area separated from the superficial cortex by a very thin fibrous tissue. Subjective mental phenomena, or the phenomena denominated psychic, of various qualities depend upon this second stratum of cortical cells. These are both related to the interior gray substance through the lines of fiber connecting both. That the highest mental conditions may be reached, the two areas must co-operate in unison, and these in harmony with the interior cerebral centers. When such is the case, and the entire encephalon (co-operating with its body) operates in harmony, and in harmony with the objective world upon the basis of a rationally demonstrated premise as a foundation for universal and undivided truth, the organ of individuality perceives the universal undividedness of all things, and thus determines for the mind the great fact that the universe is one, moved by the governing center, the central mind.

The organ of individuality, or undividedness, determines for the mind the fact that God and man are one, and that harmony of form and motion must depend upon the centralization of all human thought in the power of the central throne of intellectuality, to determine the form and motion of all. Individuality knows the undividedness of the microcosmic form, and discriminates between all distinctive things and personalities, by recognizing their universal relation and interdependence.

Age-Lasting Rewards and Punishments.

The Law of Dispensations and the Biological Fruit of the Ages; Hell the Result of Human Degeneracy.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

'Eternal redemption.' Does that mean that God will be eternally redeeming his saints? Of course not; redemption will be fully accomplished and remain so eternally. * * * But we read again of 'eternal judgment.' Does that mean that God will be eternally judging people? Certainly not; judgment will be eternally accomplished, when the final division between the righteous and wicked is made. * * * But we read of 'eternal punishment.' Does that mean that God will be eternally punishing sinners?—Messiah's Advocate.

IT WOULD be well if men who set themselves up as teachers, par excellence, would learn the meaning of the terms they use, and that, in the language of the Bible, such meaning can only be certainly found in the original languages. They will there find that the words everlasting and eternal, only mean age-lasting, or dispensation-lasting. God's government on the higher plane, as on the lower, is run in cycles or ages; and no adjustments of the affairs of God or men are for a longer time than an age. As all the affairs that pertain to human life run in cycles, so—as man was created in the image and likeness of God, just like God—all the affairs of the God-life run in cycles or ages. This does not mean the man of today, who is born in sin and shapen in iniquity; he is of his father the devil now,—whatever he may think of himself,—as he was when Jesus, the only perfect man, was in earth. But Jesus, the sower, sowed the seed of Divinity, which was himself, in humanity, of which sowing he said the harvest would come in the end of the Christian age,—falsely rendered the end of the world.

Peter said that the early Christians who received the divine seed, the Holy Ghost,—which men will not get now, as they did not then until Jesus went away, "was glorified"—were spiritually begotten again by the Holy Ghost, for a birth of the body to come in the end of the Christian age. "But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." The word given does not belong to the text. The simple statement is, that "the Holy Ghost was not yet." Neither is it now, nor will it be until it comes again in the way it did then; by a holy body going away to Holy Spirit, and that Spirit entering the humanity which strongly desires it. When men get that Spirit, they will show the signs which always follow its reception when it is actually poured out. "And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need."

The very idea of seed implies that it is sown in the time of sowing, and at no other time; that it falls into the ground and dies in order to its regeneration—reproduction, redemption from death, without which, as Jesus said, it remains alone. John, when he "was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, that is, looked into his own brain, as there is no time in the spiritual world, which is in humanity, saw what is now transpiring in the end of the Christian age. He saw, as the product of the sowing of Jesus, the divine seed, in humanity, 144,000 actual sons of God on Mount Zion, which was a humanity elevated out of the sinful humanity. They were, as Jesus was, of whom they were the offspring, virgins, men-women, having, like the Adamic race, the two sexes in unity in one form. The Record says that these were redeemed from among men. The process of their redemption was age-lasting, in the language of the Bible—everlasting or eternal.

"Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." "Behold, I will send my Messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me." "And I will come near to you to judgment." God's covenant—conjunction, with men, for such is the meaning of the term, is his arrangement for redeeming them, saving them through, as the Greek phrase is, into eternal life; but it is expressly declared to be an age-lasting covenant. In the end of every age he sends his Messenger, as he did Jesus in the end of the Jewish age. As we see, such time is a time of judgment; and as we see in Malachi, the Messenger is the Judge, and also the Lord. The judgments, then, are for an age, age-lasting—everlasting, eternal.

A faint illustration of all this is found in what is called the commencement of a college. The great and terrible day of the year to the student, is the judgment that then sits, because it fixes his standing for a twelve-month to come. If he does not come up to the standard, he is condemned (damned), goes away into a year-lasting punishment. If his intellectual attainment measures up to the requirement, he enters into the joy of his master.

Jesus came to save the lost—damned, not to save men from being damned, as the modern minister puts it. As He declared, he came that men that were dead might have life. He said, ye will not come to me, that is, come to my quality of life, that ye might have life. If he could have given them life just as he gave them bread to sustain their physical natures, they might have been willing to take it. The Psalmist says, "He redeemeth thy life from destruction;" and as we have seen, the process of redemption was one of age-lasting development and perfection of the divine seed in men. Not only was this a process of redeeming—buying off from death—the sinful, dying humanity, but it saved Divinity as well.

There are two ways of propagating the apple, the typical fruit; one is by planting its seed, and the other by grafting. A perfect apple cannot be propagated by planting its seed; but it can be propagated, and the same kind of fruit produced, through grafting it into a seedling stock. Just so, on the higher or human plane; Jesus, the only perfect God-man, went away to Holy Ghost, the Comforter, and went into those seedling men, who became the new church; and like all seed, he died in the church. Being regenerated, or reproduced, or redeemed,—bought off from death, He will appear in the harvest, in the end of the Christian age, on Mount Zion, in the 144,000 sons of God, having the Father's name written in their foreheads, which means, having the Father's nature—life, in them, as Jesus had.

Resurrection of the Just and the Unjust.

We are told that in the resurrection to take place in the end of the age, there will be a resurrection both of the righteous and the wicked that were in the earth then. This is a resurrection from the dead, to those who have the God-life developed in them, but a resurrection to condemnation—damnation, to those who have it not. When the awful day comes, those who have the God-life in them—from the divine seed that was sown in them in the time of seed sowing in the beginning of the age—will stand the test, and enter into eternal life—the God-life; but those who have not such development, must needs go away into everlasting—age-lasting, punishment, in the hells which they are not yet prepared to leave. "For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth forever"—for the age. That is, those who did not accept the seed when sown, cannot do so for an entire age.

This is exactly what Jesus taught in the unpardonable sin, or sin against the Holy Ghost, which no theologian has ever been able to explain. "And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world [Greek, age], neither in the world [age] to come." All the wheat that is not sown in the time of sowing wheat, does not have a resurrection, either in that wheat cycle or in the one to come, since the harvest does not come until the end of the cycle. The man who spoke against the Holy Ghost, which was the divine seed, did not receive the seed at the time of its sowing, and could not be saved by it in the harvest which comes in the end of the age. Neither could he have forgiveness, be saved, until the next harvest, in the end of the next age. So he could neither have forgiveness in that world (age) nor the next.

Processes of Transformation of the Wicked.

"Who shall be punished with everlasting [age-lasting] destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." The Bible couples together hell and destruction. To be in hell, as all men are today, is to be in destruction of all things that are really good. This passage defines destruction as being kept away from the "presence of God and the glory of his power." The man who has not the development in himself that enables him to enjoy these, even sitting down in the throne of God himself, is self-doomed to an age-long hell; and there is no power to save him, and neither God nor the universe to blame. "Hell and destruction are before the Lord." That is, in the process of the development of the sons of God, they pass through hell and destruction before they come to the Lord. In many languages, hell means bright; to burnish, to brighten. The hells are that stage of human development in which men are fitted for heaven, which is above them. Jesus was, as he declared, in heaven while he was in earth, having come up out of hell in his former embodiment, so that he was born holy.

The orthodox idea of the punishment of the wicked is not a teaching of the Bible, but a figment of the imagination of priests. So also, is the teaching of some as to the final annihilation, or, as some term it, destruction of unrepentant sinners. The wicked will be destroyed without doubt; but it will be by becoming righteous, at some time in the ages. As to men becoming righteous now, none of them show any signs of it; yet we are on the eve of the ushering in of the kingdom of heaven in earth. We declare, then, without any hesitation or doubt, that redemption, judgment, and the punishment of the wicked are processes which continue during the age,—are age-lasting, everlasting, eternal.

An American Beauty: A True Story.

"HELLO, Clyde! taking it easy, are you? A shady porch and a hammock, iced lemonade and the latest magazine; what a plethora of comfort! Let me pause awhile and fan my fevered brow ere I pursue my hot and dusty way."

The speaker sprang lightly up the steps, and taking possession of a huge palm leaf, ensconced himself in a Morris chair.

Mr. Clyde Howard raised his blue eyes languidly. "That's right, Ramsay. Sit down and follow my example. Lounge and invite your soul, as Walt Whitman says. What's the use of putting on so much steam this weather? Its sheer midsummer madness to work as you do."

"My dear fellow," said Ramsay, fanning vigorously, "consider for a moment that men are dying daily, going down to their graves uninsured, when they might have left their families a competence, and all for lack of meeting me. This business is a heavy responsibility upon a man with a tender conscience like mine. I owe it to humanity to present the claims of the Eureka Life Insurance Company to as many of my fellow creatures as I can possibly reach in a day."

Clyde laughed and held out a copy of Munsey. "Just look at these American Beauties. Munsey is prime this month, and his cuts grow better with each number."

Ramsay took the magazine, glanced at the article in question, "American Girls Who Have Married Titles," and then fired the book violently across the piazza with such force that it landed in a bed of petunias, after upsetting the lemonade pitcher on its way.

"What an unnecessary expenditure of force!" mourned Clyde. "What's the matter with the American Beauties?"

Ramsay looked black. "Oh! I think its disgusting to see our American girls selling themselves to pauper noblemen for titles. These international marriages make a fine showing in the newspapers, but their subsequent history is seldom written. Heaven help the poor girls when their fortunes have been handed over to pamper the vices of the prince or the count! These scions of a corrupt nobility have none of our American respect for women, and never scruple to trick and deceive them. I know what I'm talking about. I could tell you a story—"

Ramsay broke off shortly; his friend regarded him curiously, surprised at his evident emotion.

"See here, Clyde, you've often asked me why I never married. Do you remember Louise Leighton?"

"Yes, indeed, a strikingly handsome girl, tall and queenly, with a wonderful voice."

Ramsay's brows lowered. "Yes, she was beautiful, and she sang like an angel; such a clear, resonant voice with a thrilling note in it that went straight to your heart. Everyone said she had a career before her. Why, I remember when she made her debut in Steinway hall, the whole city went wild over her. Clyde, I loved that girl. We had grown up together from childhood. I was her nearest neighbor. When she went abroad to study, we were the same as betrothed; there was no formal engagement, for I had my own way to make in the world, and Louise was ambitious; she wanted to sing on the stage. Well, she met an Italian count in Florence, a handsome fellow with soft ways such as girls like, one of your southern temperaments, all fire and passion, that carry everything before them, but corrupt at the heart. Count Venetia fell madly in love with Louise. Unlike most Italian noblemen, he had large estates, and he dazzled the girl with his promises. From the first, he exercised an extraordinary fascination over her, and it was an easy matter to persuade her to an early marriage. I shall never forget the day the news came. The dream of my life ended then."

Ramsay paused a moment, lost in retrospect, then he went on in a monotonously quiet voice. "For a year or so, all went well. The Count was devotion itself. Louise had an elegant apartment, filled with fresh flowers daily. The Count gave her a carriage, he smothered her with roses; of the true nature of this man she knew nothing, nothing. She fancied him the soul of honor. Then the blow fell.

"One day in the winter of 187—, the Count was away on a journey. Business connected with one of his estates called him to the north of Italy. Louise was radiantly happy; she seemed to be living in a fairy tale. The time of her husband's absence she proposed to spend in practising some new music. He sent her a letter every day, and would soon return. The sky never seemed brighter.

"She was taking a singing lesson when a woman appeared, who announced herself as the Countess Venetia. 'What are you doing in my husband's villa?' she demanded of Louise. 'I am the wife of Count Venetia; you have no business here. Be gone from my house!'

"A stormy scene followed, but it was all true; the Countess, a plain featured Italian woman, proved her credentials, and Louise found that her own marriage ceremony, performed by a false priest, was but a mockery. She sailed that night for America, more dead than alive, with only one desire—to reach her old home and die. She never saw the Count's face again—the infernal scoundrel!" and Ramsay clenched his fists ominously. Mastering himself by a strong effort, he concluded calmly: "This shows how the European nobility treat our beautiful and gifted American girls."

"But what of Louise, did she die?" inquired Clyde earnestly.

"Yes," replied Ramsay softly, "Louise is dead."

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

COSMOGONY is the science of the forms, functions, relations, and laws of perpetuity of the universe. The true cosmogony, when discovered, is the revelation of all the mysteries of the great world in which we live; it is necessarily the solution of all the problems which confront the human mind, because the physical cosmos is the ultimate expression of its inherent life, and embodies in the form of its outermost expression, which is susceptible of analysis, all of the activities which take place in the world of humanity. Any system of the universe which does not answer the requirements of infallible logic in the discovery of the Cause, cannot correctly define the character of the effect. If the Copernican system uncovers the great mysteries of the cosmos, it is true; if it does not, it is fallacious. A true system of science must have its foundation in the facts of the physical world; astronomy treats of the physical world, and consequently is the foundation science upon which an entire system of truth must be superstructured. All of the kingdoms or planes of life in the universe are built up from the outermost pediment; the science of the groundwork, then, must constitute the basic interpretation of all phenomena of life. Do the modern astronomers pretend to solve the riddle of existence? Is the system susceptible of application, in the sequences of logical deduction, to the affairs of the human world? We will allow a modern astronomer to answer: "At present, the end and object of the study of astronomy is chiefly knowledge, pure and simple; so far as now appears, its development has less direct bearing upon the material interests of mankind than any other of the natural sciences. It is not likely that great inventions and new arts will grow out of its laws and principles." Is modern astronomy a cosmogony? From the basis of the astronomer's admission, it is not: "Unquestionably one of the most interesting and also the most baffling, topics of speculation, is the problem of the way in which the present condition of the universe came about. * * In the present state of the science, many of the questions thus suggested seem to be hopelessly beyond the reach of investigation." The modern scientist is unable, in his investigation of the great world of effect, to interpret the cosmos and its phenomena, from the basis of thousands of facts of existence, with which he comes in contact. The modern theory of astronomy is of no practical value to humanity; it contains no truth, and its conclusions are worthless. Koreshanity begins with the form of the physical cosmos; it analyzes its functions. The true interpretation of the effect necessarily reveals the Cause; an absolutely correct analysis of creation reveals the Creator. Koreshanity discovers God; it discovers the great well-spring of human life, the elixir vite, and the laws of rejuvenation of man. It reveals the laws of scientific government; it is a system of vital, social, religious, and industrial economy, founded on the laws of production and distribution of substances of the great cellular world. It is the System which, in its practical application, has a direct bearing on "the material interests of mankind," —the welfare of the individual and the world at large. The time is at hand when the world will repudiate the ignorance of the modern scientist; a suffering world demands scientific reform in all planes of human relations; and the Koreshan System of Universology is the only complete scientific system which seeks and demands acceptance on the part of the millions of modern minds.

"The question may still be debated whether civilization has increased or diminished the sum of human happiness. The mere fact that there are two sides to the question whether modern civilization and modern education are a benefit to humanity, is a significant one. Evidently, something besides advanced science and the increase of wealth is necessary to make life worth living." The above appears in an editorial in the New Voice, discussing the cause of the increase of suicide, commenting on the startling statement of Dr. Ireland, that "a state of rapid increase of self-destruction is common to the whole civilized world." During the past forty years, there has been an increase of thirty-five per cent; while Norway is the only civilized nation where suicide is actually diminishing in frequency. The general inquiry aroused is, What is the cause? Scores of theories are advanced. Epidemics of la grippe are made responsible; the decay of religious faith; also low wages and lack of employment. An able writer in a recent magazine, points out the fact that modern education is a curse. There is no one factor that can be singled out as the cause of the alarming increase of crime in its many phases. The whole fabric of modern civilization is wrong; the many conditions of mental, social, religious, and industrial chaos are productive of misery and unhappiness, and the despondent seek to escape. The optimist's cry that the world is growing better is contradicted by the facts; the prophetic declarations concerning the misfortunes that must befall the "present evil world," are being verified and fulfilled. The age culminates in woes which will sweep the world with unparalleled violence. As we near the vortex, chaos and crime will increase; and every worthless element will be drawn into the whirlpool for destruction.

The social standard of the world is money. A man can move in the highest social circles of the world, no matter what his moral character is, if he has succeeded in stealing the wealth which rightfully belongs to the men who labor and create it. In the modern church, wealth and hypocrisy admit members to the highest church and social privileges; while in the field of labor, a card of membership in the unions distinguishes its holder from those who will not consent to strike every alternate week of the year! What are the tests of progress in the Koreshan System? What are the points of superiority of a Koreshan over those who are not Koreshans? We discard the old lines. The dividing line between Koreshans and others is a natural one; it is the intellectual. The difference is in intellectual capacity; the Koreshan is able to penetrate and solve the problems of the universe. In nature, there is no difference between us and the mortal humanity about us. We are all in the same hell, in a state of death. We do not say that we are better than others. We have no hypocrisies, not because we are better than the world, but because Koreshan Science does not flatter the man and magnify the goodness of its members, but reveals the corruptions of the mortal man. It attracts only those who are able to comprehend its fundamentals, and who desire a way of escape from the terrible conditions of the modern hells.

What difference does it make whether the earth is convex or concave? All the difference in the world. Both the Copernican and Koreshan systems cannot be true; and it is something of an item to get so far out of the spheres of human ignorance, as to know to a certainty something of the principles and laws of existence. If a man does not care to know the truth about anything, one fallacious belief will serve his purpose as well as another. The people of the world will live to see what difference the shape of the earth makes in the affairs of human life and government. Koreshanity is a revolutionary science, and will reconstruct human society upon the basis of the laws of universal activity. The Koreshan Cosmogony is the foundation of all science; it overthrows all fallacy, and gives man a rational premise from which to deduce rational conclusions concerning all planes of being and existence. Millions of people of the modern world do not care for anything but the gratification of their appetites; truth is not for such, but for those in whom the truth will make a striking difference in their conceptions, in their intellectual capacities, and in their moral, religious, social, and political life.

The modern church has radically changed its complexion during the past twenty-five years. The time was in this century, when all of the evangelical sects taught salvation only for believers, and damnation for all others. The orthodox god of fifty years ago was a revengeful tyrant, maintaining somewhere in the nether regions of space, a lake of literal fire and brimstone for the eternal torment of all who were not fortunate enough to accept the decrees of Rome and Westminster. Now all this is changed; it is held that faith in the teachings of the church is not absolutely necessary to salvation. The lake of fire has been abolished; the church found that it could not succeed in the promulgation of its absurdities with a burning lake staring the people in the face! The basis now is that all men are brothers, and that God is their Father. The doctrines of Jesus are absolutely repudiated by the false shepherds; instead, a vague idea of an unknown god is substituted. Because of religious ignorance concerning the origin and destiny of man, it is not fashionable to condemn anybody for his views, until the true System of truth is proclaimed;—then everybody is against its Founder!

Every one is intellectually asleep or dead, who is not conscious of what he really is. Humanity is in the dark night of ignorance, possessed of all sorts of vague delusions and hallucinations; it is in disorder and disease. The modern man does not know where he is; he knows nothing of his origin, nothing of his destiny; he is agnostic. He has no true conception of the universe, no knowledge of his relation to the world at large. He is intellectually blind, who cannot interpret the universe from the basis of simple facts of observation, who cannot arrive at true conclusions concerning the laws of the perpetuity of life from activities which take place in himself. Koreshanity reveals to man what he is, and determines his status in the universe. The Koreshan System is the result of the awakening of one mind to the consciousness of what the universe is, and of the possibilities in man, through obedience to the laws which govern the world in which we live. It is a death-blow to all superstitions and fallacies; it stands upon the premise of reason, defying the powers of ignorance!

Bacteriologists and surgeons are endeavoring to make it easy for the fools who fight duels. There must positively be no bacilli on the sword-blades; the duelist must satisfy his honor without planting disease germs in the person of his opponent. To this end, the sword-blades must be sterilized by passing them through the flame of an alcohol lamp. A French surgeon, in the absence of anything else to do, has written a book on the proper conduct of a surgeon when summoned to a duel, and how to put the swords in a state of asepsis before they are handed to the duelists. What a pity that the war on microbes was not commenced thousands of years ago! It is nothing short of a miracle that humanity has existed as long as it has, amid the ravages of the various species of bacilli of modern discovery!

Fallacies are mental pests which, when introduced into the world, spread like the Canadian thistle, the Gypsy moth, and the Brazilian water hyacinth; they flourish where it is impossible for truth to gain a foothold. The ignorance of the Florida land owner in adorning his moat with the water hyacinth, which is now filling the navigable rivers of the Florida east coast, is insignificant compared with the scores of new fallacies which block the rational faculties of the mind of the modern world. Mental poisons, weeds, moths, vipers, and other forms of fallacies, abound; their promulgators are utterly ignorant of the ultimate effect they will have in the great field of humanity. It satisfies the originators if the pests and poisonous opiates create a sensation; they are indifferent as to the results.

A scientist has recently made the announcement that man is a miniature sun, with thought rays extending into the atmosphere in every direction. We are often asked concerning the proof of the Koreshan conclusion that the physical, central sun of the universe is light on one side and dark on the other. The disposition of the modern mind is to take the conclusions of a so called scientist in preference to Koreshan conclusions; and we therefore suggest that the above conclusion of a modern scientist, that man is a sun, taken in connection with the fact that it is a current opinion in the world that man has two sides to his character,—a light and a dark side,—might be sufficient to prove to most minds that the physical sun correspondentially possesses a light and a dark side.

The difference between the Copernican and the Koreshan systems of astronomy, is that the astronomers of the old school endeavor to determine the shape of the earth by studying the heavens which are out of their reach, while the Koreshan astronomer determines the shape of the heavens from the basis of the earth's tangible, concave surface, to which we have easy access. The old method is to construct a system without a foundation; the Koreshan method is to first lay a firm foundation in the earth, as the basis upon which the true system of human knowledge is superstructured.

The American government is not democratic; it is plutocratic. The people neither make the laws nor interpret them. The regal power is vested in the Supreme Court, and back of the Supreme Court lies the power or force of arms to enforce its decrees. Plutocracy knows no restraints; legislation may be purchased with gold, and court decisions are handed down for value received. The love of money is the root of all evil—the root of all the evils which curse the modern world.

"It is only an inverted vision which sees so much evil in others." Exactly; Jesus the Christ subverted the effete thought of his day. He was able to see all evil in others, because he was pure. He was the Son of God; all others were sons of the devil. The doctrines of Jesus are the exact opposite of the anti-Messianic views of modern occultists, who disregard the evil in humanity and magnify their own good through the microscope of conceit.

As spirit and matter comprise the two general states of universal existence, Universology, or the science of the universe, must be the science of both the natural and spiritual worlds and their relations. Koreshanity is Universology, and is pre-eminently the scientific religion. It is a system of interpretation of all things; it is the all-science, the omni-science. It is a system of prophecy; it reads the past, interprets the present, and forecasts the future.

The human brain is inseparably connected with the human organism. No phrenologist can accurately determine the particular mental characteristics of a man, without a knowledge of the functions of the brain and the entire human system; and no physiologist can understand the functions of the human body without a knowledge of the specific relations of mind and matter which comprise the man.

Jesus declared that by faith a mountain could be removed and cast into the sea. This is corroborated in the Koreshan demonstrations of the concavity of the earth. The Copernican astronomer sees a mountain of water between the point of observation and the vanished ship's hull; the Koreshan astronomer removes the mountain of water with the telescope, and brings the hull into view again!

"There is no evil except to short-sighted people." The Deific perspective of the man Jesus extended over a wider range of humanity than that of an agnostic metaphysician. The Christ saw evil in every man except himself, and he felt the force of it when the iniquity of the world reached its climax and made him a martyr. The short-sighted mortal declares that there is no evil.

Man becomes the microcosm only when he involves the universe; the man who involves the universe is omniscient, because he involves its consciousness. A man is not a true scientist until he understands the universe as a whole, and is capable of defining all its parts.

"I have ceased to think that there is any down. There is only up." That is true to those who are at the bottom; but to the man who has reached the apex of human existence, there is no up, but only down. Between the points where there is no down, and the center where there is no up, there is a long line of progress!

The processes of putting on immortality involve the processes of the destruction of the wicked. The only way to make a saint is to destroy and transform a devil. When the devil is transformed to an angel of light, he steps from the plane of mortality to that of immortal existence.

The true scientist is one having absolute knowledge; there is no such thing as an agnostic scientist, though there are agnostics who pretend to be scientists.

There is nothing more exacting than the absolute truth; nothing more inexorable than law, and nothing more vindictive than justice.

Negroes who are Christians, repudiate their color; they sing about being "washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb."

Truth, like mathematics, is of no value unless applied. Truth applied is the power of knowledge.

A procession of laborers on labor day is a parade; a procession of laborers on a strike is a pay raid!

Teachers who call this "present evil world" good, have no conception of either good or evil.

Theosophy is a redressed mummy of a past system of truth; it is a mere form without life.

The seeds of fallacy are easily propagated in the soil of modern ignorance.

Jesus the Christ was both the Son of God and the Sun of humanity.

The illumined man is the Sun of the human world.

The daily press is lying back of political schemes.

A truly rational mind cannot entertain a fallacy.

Recent Scientific Experiments on Lake Michigan.

Surface of Water Demonstrated by Ocular Evidence to be Not Convex; Specific Tests by Means of the Telescope.

THE EDITOR.

THE FUNDAMENTAL premise of the Copernican system of astronomy, is the hypothesis that the surface of the earth on which we live is convex. The well-known phenomenon of the disappearance of a ship's hull beyond the horizon of the surface of the sea, is one of the principal so called proofs offered in support of the popular theory; it is constantly being urged as an objection to the Koreshan conclusion that the earth is a hollow globe, with its habitable surface concave, instead of convex. If the usual theory were true, specific tests would verify it; if it is fallacious, ocular tests are sufficient to disprove it, and to overthrow the entire system.

In order to appreciate the value and force of such experiments of observation as have been conducted during the past three years by the Koreshan Scientific Staff, it is necessary to consider the ratio of the earth's curvature, and the claims of the advocates of the old school of astronomy. We desire to examine the subject just as it is presented by the astronomer, and subject the theory to the test of the facts of observation. The so called proof is an ocular one, used hundreds of years before the invention of the telescope; and it is but fair, in a scientific age, to submit it to ocular test, with the power of vision increased by telescopic aid.

If the surface of the sea were convex, the water line of the horizon would be the simple apex of the arc of the water's curvature. If the hull of a vessel disappeared on a rotund surface, it would do so because of the simple fact that it has passed to a point below the visual line extending from the eye over the apex or horizon. In other words, the hull would be rendered absolutely invisible by the intervening hill of water. We desire to state the question fairly, so that there can be no quibbling concerning the premise upon which the old system is made to rest.

A convex earth 25,000 miles in circumference, would manifest a curvation of 8 inches to the mile; or, according to the geometrical formula, the square of the distance in miles, multiplied by 8 inches, gives the declination in inches, from the tangent line. In two miles the curvature downward from the tangent would be 32 inches; 3 miles, 6 feet; 4 miles, 10 feet and 8 inches; 8 miles, 42 feet and 8 inches. For the sake of illustration, we refer to the diagram accompanying this article. It represents an arc of convex curvature, 8 miles in length. The line AB is tangent to the apex of the arc at C. The curvature from C to A and B would be equal, because the arcs of declination are equal, amounting, at both A and B, to about 11 feet.

From an elevation of 11 feet at A, view the horizon of the convex arc. It is 4 miles away—it is the apex of the hill of water. At B, at a distance of 4 miles beyond C, any object just 11 feet in height is invisible from A, because it is behind the hill. This is a fair and simple statement of the conditions which are affirmed by the astronomer to exist on the sea. The horizon of such a surface is permanent for a given altitude; it would be the same point both to the naked eye and through the telescope; any object below the line B, would be equally invisible through the telescope as with the naked eye. This statement is not disputed by any well-informed advocate of the earth's convexity. The simple question is, does the convexity exist? If so, whatever is beneath the line B is invisible from A; if objects beneath B can be seen through the telescope at A, it is conclusive that water is not convex.

On August 27, 1899, a target 3 feet broad and 6 feet in length was suspended over the wall constituting the base of the lighthouse on the new government pier, Chicago; the bottom of the target just touched the water. A $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot mounted telescope, with 3-inch object glass, was placed at an elevation of 11 feet above the water on the pier at the old World's Fair grounds, a little over 8 miles south of the lighthouse. To the unaided eye at 11 feet elevation, about one third of the lighthouse tower appeared to be below the horizon; only the tops of the engine houses could be seen above the water line. The new government pier itself was entirely invisible. Yachts in the vicinity the whole of it; there was not a square foot of it invisible! Yachts sailing about the pier, appearing half mast "down" to the naked eye, were visible, hull and all, down to the surface on which they sailed.

LIGHTHOUSE AND TARGET.

Sketch of Telescopic Field, showing Water visible at bottom of Target and base of the Tower.

We carefully sketched the view through the telescope, and herewith reproduce it for the benefit of the reader. The target appears in the picture at E, as the white rectangular object below the engine-house tracks beyond the apparent meeting point, invisible to the eye alone, made visible, by increasing the angles of visual radiation.

A number of yachts were objects of comparative observation in this series of experiments. Only the topsails were visible to the eye alone, appearing as white points above the distant water line. Through the telescope, the hulls were not only visible, but the surface of the water was seen beyond the hulls; the horizon was projected beyond the yachts. The horizon is not the apex of a convex arc; it is not the top of a bulge of water. It is simply the limit of geolinear vision. The vanishing point differs with different eyes, and with telescopes of different powers. The distance to which the horizon is projected by the telescope, depends upon its power, and upon the altitude of the eye at the time of comparative observations.

When the fancied bulge of water vanishes by means of the "magic tube," and objects apparently below the horizon of the unaided vision are brought into view, the premise of the Copernican system of astronomy is dissipated. Koreshanity is of the lighthouse appeared about half sail "down."

We now meet the so called proof of the earth's convexity squarely face to face. Is it true or not? If it is true, when we view the lighthouse through the telescope, from same elevation as with the naked eye, no part of the objects apparently below the horizon can be seen; only so much of the tower as stands above the line B, in the diagram we have referred to, would appear in the telescopic field; it would be physically impossible for it to be otherwise. The telescope was directed to the lighthouse; a clear focus was obtained, and careful views, extending over a period of three hours, were witnessed by about fifty persons who were present on the pier. We saw the tower down to the line B; the wall of masonry at the base of the tower, and the target E, below B, down to the water's surface. The action of the waves against the wall was clearly observed.

The target was a special one, with horizontal stripes of red and white. We counted the stripes on the target to definitely ascertain whether or not we observed at B; the bottom is on the water. The picture is true to the facts as observed; and the reader is enabled to virtually see what we saw. By actual mathematical calculation, we determine that in order to see the whole target at E, on the surface of a convex body of water at a distance of 8 miles, the telescope would have to be placed about 40 feet above the water at the observing station; it was, in fact, only 11 feet above the water.

To the naked eye, the horizon appeared to be about midway between the observing station and the lighthouse. If it were the apex of a tangible convex arc, it would remain when the telescope is applied. The telescopic view reveals no horizon between the eye and the lighthouse. What has become of it? It has vanished; the apparent hill is gone, and the objects invisible to the naked eye, beyond the apparent horizon, are brought into full view. The telescopic view reveals the fact that the greater visual power has projected the horizon still farther out on the Lake, just as the apparent meeting point of two railway tracks may be extended by means of the telescope, and objects between the conducting a scientific crusade against fallacy. The common people observe our simple facts, believe, and abandon the effete system. The old system is left without a shadow of evidence for support; and it will soon be without a following!

The Cause of the Tides.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have read the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and other Koreshan literature. I wish you would say something about the tides, as I do not see anything about them in what you have published.—J. W. M., Montrose, Minn.

The question of the tides is one which has puzzled the human mind from time immemorial; and the modern scientists have not satisfactorily solved the problem. It is well known that when the moon reaches the meridian, it is high tide; this phenomenon is so regular, that the relation of the tides and the moon is obvious. Newton undertook to explain the tides on the basis of his theory of gravitation. He concluded that there was a mutual attraction exerted by the moon and the earth; and that the moon, although estimated to possess only one eighty-ninth the mass of the earth, and revolving at a distance of about 240,000 miles from the earth, with its gravic force decreasing as to the square of the distance, is able to so overcome the earth's gravity as to lift the waters of the ocean a number of feet, causing a fluctuation of the sea level from east to west as the moon passes over the earth!

This explanation passes as satisfactory to some minds; but there is another side to the question, and that is the corresponding tide on the other side of the earth at the same time. In other words, when it is high tide at New York, it is also high tide at Calcutta, India. If the moon pulls the water when it is on the meridian of New York, what pulls the water away from the earth at Calcutta?

There is another very noticeable feature, and that is, when the moon is full it seems to exert a greater influence upon the ocean than when it is at first and third quarters. If the moon is a mere planet, reflecting the sunlight, what difference should it make to the moon's gravity, what part of the moon's surface the sun illumines?

The tides are beautifully explained in the Koreshan System. The great shell of the earth is the real moon; it is the great womb of the universe—the menstrual system of the physical world. The moon we see in the physical heavens is an X-ray picture of the earth's crust. The great cell breathes and pulsates; it has its lungs corresponding to the human system of respiration. A great diaphragm of force extending north and south, divides the lunar system into hemispheres; this diaphragm revolves diurnally; the visible moon is on one side of the diaphragm, and revolves with it. It is not the visible moon that causes the tides. The waters breathe and expand as the great diaphragm sweeps over the earth; the expansion of the water causes an increase of the quantity of water at a given point, and there is high tide in the latitude of the diaphragm on both sides of the earth at the same time. This zone of expansion moves from east to west with the moon. When the diaphragm has passed a point 90°, it is low tide, because the waters have breathed out the force which caused them to expand. When the moon is full it is full in reality; that is, it possesses its maximum of force; and the result is the higher tide. The cause of the tides is the cause of the visible moon—the action of electro-magnetic energies generated in the earth's crust. This explains the reason why the tides exactly correspond to the diurnal revolution of the moon, and the reason why it is high tide on opposite sides of the earth at the same time.

The Koreshan Astronomy accounts for all astronomical and cosmographical phenomena; but the 200-page book, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, is devoted to demonstrating the fundamental premise of the entire System, rather than to explaining the various phenomena. Other works following the CELLULAR COSMOGONY will explain the System in detail. In the meantime, this department of THE FLAMING SWORD is open to the questions of our readers.

A Personal Interview with Koresh.

A California Gentleman, Formerly an Astronomer of the Old School, Meets the Founder of Koreshanism.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Something more than a year ago, myself and wife made the acquaintance of the Cannons, who have charge of the Koreshan Unity in San Diego. Last week we received a line from them, informing us that KORESH had arrived in San Diego, and that they should be glad to have us meet him. So on Saturday, Aug. 26th, we drove to the city from our mountain nook, twenty-three miles away.

Now, a perusal of KORESH's articles in THE FLAMING SWORD for the last five years, had impressed me with the idea that considerable acid was accustomed to flow from the point of his pen; and I therefore naturally expected to meet a personality sharply defined, angular, eccentric, out of sorts with the world, combative and vehement in argument—a man before whom one must stand on the defensive if he would avoid being appropriated or swallowed up.

We reported at the Unity Headquarters, and the hour was appointed for an interview; when it arrived, I grasped firmly my staff from the wood of the "Oak of Lebanon," and hastily improvised a sort of Achilles shield, resolving in my mind that I would avoid all occasion for argument and disputation.

When KORESH entered the room at the Unity where we were waiting, I was immediately struck with the full proportions and harmonious outlines of the man. He met us with a sweet and gentle demeanor, and instead of our interview being a contest in the arena, it became to us a delightful hour of interchange and communion. Indeed, we were soon made to realize that KORESH pretty nearly filled our idea of a perfect man, physically and mentally. Here was a rounded and well-developed body and brain, with both heavy base and top, full of health and potency. When animated in conversation or public discourse, there shines about the face a singular nimbus of light, unlike anything I ever before saw. Such a sphere of health and life could certainly not radiate from a man whose habits are not pure and clean.

In our conversation, KORESH was in no sense aggressive. On certain points I assumed an agnostic attitude, and stated to him with perfect candor my reasons for not accepting some of his major claims. He impressed me, however, as being remarkably well poised and balanced. To gentleness he adds power. His grasp of facts and principles is truly wonderful. He quotes and renders Hebrew and Greek with perfect facility, yet he never studied them in the schools. When his interiors were opened, in 1870, his whole scheme of cosmogony, with all its details, was worked out within a period of three weeks.

I listened to two of his public discourses, delivered in Lafayette Hall, Aug. 26th and 27th. On Sunday evening, the hall was well filled, and the discourse was the most profound and comprehensive I ever heard. It was like a perfect architectural edifice with granite foundation, symmetrical superstructure, and golden dome all complete. History and symbology were here wrought into a comprehensive and coherent scheme, and the sublime meaning of the processional movement of humanity through the historic cycles was graphically portrayed. But alas! there are only a few patches of human soil fitted for the reception of such seed.

Now, while my attitude is distinctly agnostic on the Messianic problem as it relates to KORESH, I nevertheless confess to a firm conviction that he is in the inner law and life and movement of the Messianic approach, preparing the way by giving an explicit statement and scientific rendering of the whole field embraced by the cosmos and micro-cosmos. But I am still looking for the advent of the Messiah, who shall body forth and express in its fulness, on the natural plane, what Harris and KORESH have brought to the two upper or inner planes that border on the ultimate or complete outward degree. I will not protest if KORESH shall later bring that fulness; but as I now view the problem, his limits are comprised within the symbolic domain.

I am glad to have met and exchanged greetings with KORESH. I shall henceforth regard him as a great man, a good and thoroughly sincere man, and as one faithfully performing a divinely-appointed mission in the world.—Prof. E. WHIPPLE.

A Koreshan Acrostic.

W. B. SWEET.

Keenly alive to the needs of the hour,
Only awaiting the fulness of time,
Ready the forces of mind to outpour,
Energies fraught with vibrations sublime.
Securing to thousands God's personality:
His truth applied brings immortality.

In timic cycles that we may define,
Shown in emplacements of the stars that shine,

The celestial spirits in minds of men,
Heaven's high entities, focalize, then
Earthward descend—by immaculate plan—

Materialize here a perfect man;
E'en as the Lord in Bethlehem of old,— Supremest God, by prophecy foretold,—
Sank to sweet slumber on His mother's breast,

Even as all the other infants rest.
Near at hand is the Golden Age, and then
God will bear rule externally in men.
Eternity is His, future and past,
Recurrent cycles in a circle vast.

Over musty volumes of mystic lore
For cycles and cycles do students pore,

Their brains and nerves consumed by fruitless quest.
Hermes, Pythagoras, and all the rest,
Each but a fragment of the whole contain.

Conveyed through symbols that once made plain
Omnipotent truth, whose eternal laws
Vast universal empire gave, because Executed fully by ripened men.
Now is Truth materialized again,
And brings to man the scientific laws
Needed to teach him how to reach the Cause,—
The very center and throne of Deity Himself.

The Flaming Sword's High Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.

Leslie's Weekly for September 9th, is a Dewey number, devoting the greater part of its space to photographic views of Admiral Dewey, his officers and men, all taken by a special artist, Mr. J. C. Hemment, sent to Naples for this purpose. He remained on board the Olympia for a week, and was accorded special facilities by the admiral for his work, the results of which appear in the splendid array of pictures in this issue of the Weekly. The frontispiece represents Admiral Dewey and his favorite pet, the Chinese dog. On another page, other pets of the Admiral are brought to view—his canary, his cats, and "Sagasta," the pig. Rarest, perhaps, of all in interest is the page with five different pictures making up a photographic interview with the great commander, each accompanied with some notable remark caught at the same time by the artist. All these views are supplemented with a lively article by the artist himself, describing his reception by the Admiral, his impressions of the man, and his experiences on board the flag-ship.

The Saturday Evening Post.

"New York Under Tammany Rule" is the title of an informing article which Frank Moss, counsel for the Mazet Investigating Committee, has written for the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia. After summarizing the notorious methods of Tammany rule, whereby the leaders enrich themselves at the expense of the taxpayer, and run the city of New York as "wide-open" as any Western mining town, Mr. Moss accounts for the helplessness of the law-abiding majority, and suggests a means for the overthrow of the Croker regime. This article is one of a series dealing with the municipal affairs of great American cities. It will appear in the Saturday Evening Post of September 9th.

The Mind.

The Mind is one of the most prominent and widely read journals of the new thought school of mental science. The current number is full of well written articles; the leading ones are: The Genesis of Genius; Evolution of Personal Beauty; Eliminative and Constructive Mentation; A Defense of the New Thought; Bodily Immortality and the New Thought; and New Problems of Immortality. $2.00 per year. Alliance Pub. Co., Life Bldg., New York City.

Success.

We are pleased with the progress and success of this excellent illustrated family weekly of inspiration, progress, and self-help. The leading features this week are: Life story of Thomas B. Reed; an interesting history of the development of the telephone and the success of its inventor; vigorous editorials, and sufficient fiction and other matter to make it attractive to all classes of minds. 5cts. a copy; $1.50 yearly. Cooper Union, New York City.

The Open Court.

A monthly magazine, devoted to "the science of religion, the religion of science, and the extension of the religious parliament Idea," edited by Dr. Paul Carus. The present number contains: A Basis for Reform, the Christ of Paul; Can Soldiers be Christians (translation from writings of Martin Luther), Staurolatry, or the History of Cross-Worship; King Baulah, and others. Open Court Pub. Co., Chicago.

The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews.

A monthly compendium of the contemporaneous writings of the world on mental science and occultism—a summing up of current thoughts on lines of metaphysics, psychology, and occultism. Contains a dozen departments, and is full of interest. $1.00 a year, 178 Summit street, Cleveland, O.

Koreshan Propaganda in Chicago.

New Koreshan Hall Opened for Lectures on Koreshan Science.

The Guiding Star Assembly of the Koreshan Unity has provided a Hall at 316 West Sixty-third street, Chicago, in the interest of Koreshan propaganda; and we make announcement of the order of lectures for each week, beginning Sep. 17, 1899.

Sunday, 3 P. M., Public Service of the Koreshan Ecclesia.

Monday evening, Lecture on Koreshan Astronomy, by Prof. U. G. Morrow, Editor of THE FLAMING SWORD.

Thursday evening, Gospel meeting, conducted by Berthaldine, Matrona, President of Society Arch-Triumphant.

Friday evening, Lecture on Social subjects in interest of the Bureau of Equitable Commerce.

Saturday afternoon, 3 o'clock, Woman's Meeting for the study of Koreshan Science; conducted by Berthaldine, Matrona.

The Flaming Sword is Right.

It is a mistake to say that Christianity is civilizing the world; there is no Christianity in the world today. Between that which is called Christianity and the primitive system from which it sprang, there is as much difference as there is between day and night.—THE FLAMING SWORD.

Human brotherhood and self-abnegation constitute the Christ principle, but the church neither practices nor teaches it, except to call upon its lay members to deny themselves and give up their living to a lot of blatant "wolves in sheep's clothing," pretended shepherds who do nothing but scatter abroad, and like the hireling, flee when danger approaches. When Christian Socialism is thoroughly understood, appreciated, and practiced, there will arise a Christianity—the world's greatest civilization—and pompous priest and prating parson will no longer be able to prey upon the superstitions of an ignorant membership. That time is fast approaching; until then, the wielder of THE FLAMING SWORD is right, be it said to the shame of the church of today.—The People's Press.

The Sun Moves and the Circle Squares in the Koreshan System.

The "sun-do-move" man and the squarer of the circle had better look to their laurels. We are in receipt of a work on "CELLULAR COSMOGONY," which is devoted to convincing people that the surface of the earth is concave instead of convex; that it is a hollow globe, and we live on the inside of the crust, the sun being in the center. We haven't had time to figure out how the arrangement works, but the book has got enough maps, charts, and diagrams in it to convince a person of mostly anything. The exponent of the new theory, Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, of Chicago, has been cognizant of this great fact for over a quarter of a century, but he has only now startled the world with the announcement. This should be a great advantage to the wireless telegraphers, if they can strike an etheric wave from here across to the Philippines.—The Daily Citizen, Ottawa, Ont.

What You Have Been Long Looking For! "Mulum in Parvo."

The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.
Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in weeks of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

Co-operators.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce,

[Successor to the Industrial Co-Operative Union of America.]

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

The College of Psychical Sciences and Unfoldment.

This school, the only one of its kind in the world, is conducted by J. C. F. GRUMBINE, the author and lecturer. It is open to students each month. The studies are eclectic, although a regular and uniform curriculum is established and operative. It is devoted exclusively to the System of Philosophy concerning Divinity, and is connected with the Order of the White Rose, branch of the Rosicrucians. The secrets and mysteries of Magic and Occultism are revealed. The mystic and potential powers of Divinity, such as Clairvoyance, Psychometry, Inspiration, Psychopathy, Ontology, Hypnotism, Telepathy, and Illumination are taught.

Special teachings are arranged for out-of-town students and belong to the college extension department. Development is thus ensured in the student's home for a nominal sum.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

* SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO. *

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined; Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follies. 2 cents each.

Part IV.

The Fissures, Convolutions, and Cortices of the Cerebral Mass; Its Definite Centers of Polation; Relation of Fiber and Cell; Internal Expansion and Contraction of the Brain.

IN A CLOSELY analytical study of the encephalon, with its environments, we observe that the cortical domains, as mapped out by the fissures, convolutions, and sulci (greater and lesser indentations), are closely followed by the internal and soft mother (pia mater); this membrane being attached to the cortical areas, and dipping down into the deep and shallow furrows and indentures of the cerebral mass. It has definite points or centers of polation, and there must be as many of these as there are conjunctive places of fibrous axes. Take, for instance, any given cortical area, such as one of the six superior lobes. The border of this group of cells is defined or circumscribed by the fissures surrounding it. The fibers originating at the lowermost line of the groove or valley, and descending toward the center of the brain or the basilar ganglia, are shorter than those originating at the eminences or mountains of the lobular area. At the places where these valleys cross, the points of polation of the pia mater are located. It will be remarked, then, that the axes of the pia mater are along the lines of the grooves or valleys, and that the poles of the same are at the crossings of these grooves.

It is different with the arachnoid (spider's web), the second investment. It does not dip down into the sulci or furrows, but bridges them over, being attached to the pia mater until reaching the sulci, where the two membranes separate; the arachnoid extending across the grooves or furrows, forming sub-arachnoid spaces or cavities under or between the arachnoid and the pia mater. This is called the sub-arachnoid space or cavity. It communicates with the fourth ventricle or cavity of the brain, and is also continuous with a corresponding cavity extending the entire length of the spinal cord, and thence to the extremities of the nerves distributed throughout the body. In consequence of this arrangement, the prominences of the convolutions and lobes are contiguous to the membrane under consideration, while it spans the grooves. The poles of the two investments are thus alternately located; those of the pia mater being in the grooves, and of the arachne, on the prominences of the convolutions or gyri.

Take, for instance, a definite gyrus (convolution) understood as being a specific cortical area composed of many cells. These corpuscles are the beginnings of fibers extending downward toward, and terminating in the corpus striatum and optic thalamus, the two basilar ganglia, which, situated in the base of the brain and forming the connection between the brain and the spinal cord, are the terminal poles of the fibers extending from the cellular or cortical area of the entire cerebrum. As the cells of the cortical substance comprising the general cortical area are the beginnings of the fibers extending downward, they are also the origins of nerve filaments extending upward or outward and interlacing with the extreme filaments of the arterial system, which also has its termination in and through the pia mater. The pia mater is made up of the meshes or network of arterial ramifications, venous beginnings or origins, and nerve expansions. The arteries passing upward from the body and entering the cranium are distributed to various parts; but several of their branches enter and form the pia mater, and thence, through its intermediation, carry the serum of the arterial blood to the cell of the cortex,—the cortical area covering the brain.

It is through this medium that the blood formulated in the body makes its way to the cells, where the process of re-elaboration progresses, and the serum or finer blood is re-formulated to nerve essence and again carried down into the center of the brain; some of it to be discharged into the cavities (ventricles), some to be conveyed to the striatum and thalamus, toward the cord, and some to continue the devious way through the lyra to the corpora albicantia (kidneys of the brain), where, through a still further re-elaboration, it is prepared to transmit its crystalline solution through the fibers extending into and re-traversing the posterior commissure, thence entering the crura pinealis (legs of the pineal gland) and depositing in the gland, through re-agency, its substances held in solution. When the process of reaction operating in the conarium (pineal gland) has deposited in this body its solids, held until that time in solution by the nerve juices elaborated in the corpora albicantia, the fluid thus further refined by the elaborations and reactions of the pineal gland is finally conveyed to the arbor vitæ in the cerebellum, through the corpora quadrigemina.

The inferior basilar ganglia, or terminal poles of the cerebrum, comprise the fornix, constituting the floor of the lateral ventricles. The anterior portion of the fornix—the corpus striatum (the striated or grooved body) is the terminal pole of the sensory fibers, as derived from the convolutions and merging into the striatum. This being the pole of sensation from the brain, it becomes the center and pole of motion toward the body. The fibers originating in the cortical (cellular) substance of the corpus striatum, continue down the anterior portion of the spinal cord and constitute the motory portion and function of the projection system. The corpus striatum receives the fibers from the cortical area of the cerebrum. Its striated or grooved appearance is the result of an alternation of strata, of cellular and fibrillous or gray and white matter. Between the cerebrum and the body,—and its function toward the body, or in its exoteric office,—the stratum is a vicarious center; that is, it is involuntary, and performs the office of the cerebrum even when that in its voluntary and waking function is at rest. In its esoteric office, it is the prime voluntary impulser of the involuntary activities of the cortical circumference.

If we seek for a cause for the striated appearance of the corpora striata, or grooved bodies, and therefore for the complexity in their functions as indicated by such manifestation, it may be discovered to reside in the arrangement of the cortex as related to and modified by the special emplacement of the arachnoid membrane. The pia mater (soft mother) directly intermediates the arachnoid and cortex on the summits of the convolutions, while the sub-arachnoid fluid lies between the pia mater and the arachne in the valleys or grooves. In this arrangement, the fibers of the serous arachne reach the cells of the cortical area over the summits of the convolutions, with only the intervention of the pia mater; while over the chasms bridged by the arachne, the pia mater and arachne are separated by the sub-arachnoid fluid. These insular formations of the convolutions distinguish the cells of the cortical area by two general kinds; namely, those forming the summits and separated from the arachne only by the pia mater, and those arranged in the chasms and separated from the arachne by the depths of the convolutions and the fluid contained therein.

In the expansion of the cortex by the respiration of the cerebrum, the sub-arachnoid cavity or space is alternately filled and emptied of its fluid, precisely as in the corresponding operation in the central cavities or ventricles. In the respiration of the cells, when expansion takes place, the cortical substance swells or expands so as to fill or close up the sub-arachnoid cavities, thus pressing out their contents. This juxtaposes the cells or corpuscles forming the sides of the greater and lesser indentations or furrows, bringing them into such close relation as to interchange their forces. The forms, relations, and functions, as arranged throughout the contingencies of cortex and its various environments, namely, the three membranes of the brain, are reproduced in the striatum and thalamus, they being the inverse manifestation of the forms and functions of the cerebral convolutions.

The predictions concerning the Lord Jesus all pointed to his manifestation through the posterity of Judah and the royal lineage of David. He came according to these predictions. The Shepherd to the Gentiles must also come according to prediction, which is, that he should come through Joseph's posterity and through the lineage of Ephraim.

The individual man is the undivided or unwidowed man. Such a personality is one in whom the male and female forms and principles are united, constituting the integral structure. The Adamic man—before the disintegration of the Adam, the higher genus—was the man created in the image and likeness of God, male and female, not in two forms, but in the one integral being.

The Destruction of the Money Power.

Factors for Breaking the Bonds Forged by the Jew; the Golden God of Jew and Gentile; Establishment of the Genuine System of Equitable Commerce.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE SOLUTION of the labor problem must be found in the destruction of the money power, by the destruction of the power of money. This destruction can be effected only by co-operative industrial education, the equitable distribution of the products of industry to the producers, and communal co-operative living, in obedience to the laws of life and immortality. The power able to induce such a simultaneity of social reform, is the science of the laws operative to produce perfection in every domain of existence, which science we denominate Universology. This science, in conjunction with such a love of it as will lead to its application to life, will result in perfect unity, in the economic utilization of all the resources of the universe, and the kingdom of heaven will be manifest in earth.

The kingdoms of this world are at present under the dominion of the most potential powers of evil, sciences falsely so called. The personal emissaries of fallacy direct the activities of every domain of natural life, to the end of perpetuating evil and its consequences. In the domain of secular commerce, they have placed the stamp of a fictitious valuation upon the metal gold, making it a god to express the will of its Gentile worshipers and Jewish priesthood, that the few who possess it shall rule over and oppress the many. The Gentile nations are a Judaizing, priestridden people in every respect. In the domain of secular commerce, the apostate Jew guards and controls the world's exchequers, and thereby determines the fate of every existing nation. In the most famous seats of learning, especially in the universities of Europe, we find Jews dictating the prevailing fallacious dogmas to the world's scholarship. The press, that tremendous factor in shaping the national life, is said to be widely controlled by the marvelous intellectual and financial abilities of Jewish emissaries of fallacy. It would seem that the 19th century Jew possessed the acme gratification of his carnal desires, for he inherits and rules the world of sensuous mortality, as the sovereign power behind all thrones. This power is not without its source, which is well known to the truly scientific mind. Its source is obedience to the law of male circumcision, which generates and conserves in the Jewish brain the supreme force of the human organism. This force his demoralized will polarizes in the god of his choice,—Mammon, the god of this wicked and perverse generation of Jews and Gentiles.

Judas was the index of the polarity of the retrogressive Jew, representative of the house left desolate when Jehovah, the rightful Lord of the universe, was cast out from Judah. Jesus the Christ was Jehovah, the fulfilment of the law of love for God's humanity. He was Good, which is the pure refined gold of the divine kingdom of righteousness. This gold was despised and rejected by the carnal Jew, but received by the church of God,—Jew and Gentile united spiritually by the love of this Christ of God. This church, the bride of Christ, had an unredeemed, polluted temple in earth, a body of death, mortal and corruptible, which is fitly named hell; and into this the Lord descended. This body of death, the Christendom of this era, has continuously made of herself an harlot, and sold her virtue for the gold of Judas, represented by the Jewish priests of the money power and the pagan kingdoms of this world. The adulteries of these enemies of the only living and true God, the spirit of the ascended Lord, have produced an army of harlots and a world of their sinful progeny, ground under the curse of burdens too heavy to be borne.

The retrogressive Christian church of the Christian era and the retrogressive Jewish church are now alike anti-Christian and one in their allegiance to the abomination that maketh desolate. All have sinned, have forgotten the weightier matters of the law, and have heeded the traditions of false science, and the foolish and vain babblings of fools. This is the record of retrogressive Jew and Gentile, Lo Ammi, lost Israel.

The Whole (or Holy) house of Israel, the progressive spirit of the seed of Abraham, involving the saved of all nations and all ages, named Elohi Jehovah, has steadily ascended until it has reached the throne of the universe, the central mind of its anthropotic confines, and there reigns as knowledge, the Guiding Star of universal destiny. Before this imperial power, Jew and Gentile alike must stand for judgment according to deeds done in the body. Jew and Gentile alike bear "the mark of the beast," the mark of the prostitution of all power in earth; both have forgotten God, and disobeyed all the laws of life and immortality, and served the will of the sensual flesh, the mammon of unrighteousness.

What, then, is Justice to the Jew and Justice to the Gentile?

Jehovah is the seed of Deity. The disintegration (by dematerialization) of this seed and the dissemination of its spirit entities into the wills of receptive humanity, constitute the planting of the seed Elohim, the Gods. This seed was planted at the beginning of what is known as the Christian era. The seed as planted was called the Holy Ghost. The harvest of this planting is at the end of the Christian era, and will be the sons of God, projected from the Tree of Life, Jehovah in bridal glory. The sin against the Holy Ghost is its rejection at the time of its planting, at the beginning of the cycle for the development of the arch-natural manifestation of the divine Sonship. This sin the Jews as a nation committed. The consequence of this is the completion of their retrogression, through their intensifying devotion to the graven images of fallacy. This their national sin was pronounced, by the law of necessity, as unforgivable at the termination of the Jewish age, or during the Christian age, the cycle of the development of the divine human from its seed. Until another seed time, the Jew must remain retrogressive and destructive. The promise remains, however, that the Spirit of the Father (and Abraham is the father of the multitudes, peoples, nations, and tongues which inhabit the earth, and also the heir of the world) shall renew the minds and quicken the mortal bodies of receptive humanity.

The time is at hand for the Almighty Father of light to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, for the reproduction of everything after its own kind, and for the reaping of all that has been sown, in the cycles of the past. This is the time of the restitution of all things, spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. With the true Jew must rest the work of restitution to the body of Jehovah,—the bride of Christ,—of divine commercial power in earth. He who is the true Jew inwardly may, in the order of law, use a remnant of the true Jew outwardly as the executive instrumentality of his will, in the destruction of the old heavens and old earth. These comprise all the existing churches and governments of the world, the serfs of retrogressive Judaism, which are represented by the inhuman personifications of the money power. Antichrist, the nominal Christian church, is the inferior of the Jew, and therefore,—though in league with her master,—is his subject. The heel of the Jew may be said to be on the neck of the Gentile, who is begging for his life.

Happily, the Almighty is now ushering in the day of equity, and providing a way of salvation for each in his own order, by the destruction of both. The day, the way, the truth, and the life are involved in that unique product of universal life and death—the cross of Christ. This cross is the unity of the stick of Judah and the stick of Joseph in the power of Ephraim,—true science. This product of the cross is the Sign unto the Gentiles, the Sign of the Son of man in heaven. This man is the High priest of the order of Levi, the priesthood of conjunction, serving to conjoin God and man, Jew and Gentile, in the final relationships of the divine universal unity.

This Sun of divine justice decrees that the old heavens and the old earth must pass away, having fulfilled the law of their being and justified their past existence in the production of the recreative power of new heavens and a new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness.

This power, generated by the love and wisdom of Jehovah, is the science of the laws of life and immortality now taught by the Messenger of the Covenant, the promised Shepherd from Joseph, the Stone of Israel. This is the Rock of Jehovah's choice, on which he builds his city, the New Jerusalem,—the Church Triumphant. He is Elohi, the Mighty One of forces, the Seer, the Patriarch, the Prophet, Priest, and King, whom Jehovah clothes with his own flesh, and crowns with glory and honor. This one the Gentiles will seek, and before him all the circumcised will bow. He is the great Alchemist, who will fuse and transmute all the elements of his universe into the gold of divine goodness, who recognizes neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, but sees all who have sinned as consumed, and all who are purified by his fires as One, alive in Christ, who was dead, but is alive for ever more.

Jew and Gentile alike must, for restoration to the glories of the terrestrial and of the celestial, come under and obey the laws, obedience to which produces Jehovah. Jew and Gentile alike must keep the commandments; and to keep them, must become poor through making many rich. To make this possible, the Messenger of the Covenant serves the science of the laws of equity by establishing the Bureau of Equitable Commerce. This scientific economic institution provides for the equitable distribution of all the divinely legitimate wealth of the world, and destroys money by destroying the necessity for its use. Identification with this divine providence insures escape from the terrors of the final destruction, to be wrought by the floods of fallacy undating and disintegrating all existing institutions. Its doors are open to all who hunger and thirst for righteousness, in the domain of secular commerce. the Jewish Rothschild and the Gentile Rockefeller are equally welcome, with the modern Lazarus, to share in the benefits of commercial equity and co-operative industry, if they will lay all they have on the altar of God's humanity and enter the school of Christ, to learn to perform uses to the neighbor, and to in honor prefer Him who serves the least in the name of the greatest.

What Would Jesus Do to Reform the World?

A Glance at Rev. Sheldon's Popular Story, "In His Steps," Suggestive of Another Patch on the Tattered Garments of the Old World.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

WITH THE title of "In His Steps," the Rev. C. M. Sheldon, of Kansas City, Mo., has written a story, that as a book is said to have had a greater sale than any other ever published,—three million copies having been sold in England. It has just appeared as a serial story in the New York Tri-Weekly World. As a presentment of efforts to walk in the "steps" of Jesus, it is largely the play of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet left out. The introduction starts out with a scene in a popular pastor's study. The preparation of the Sunday's discourse was interrupted by the ringing of the door bell, which, as no one else was at home, the pastor answered. One of the hopeless "out of works" was the intruder. He was kindly referred to the tender mercies of another, and dismissed without relief.

After the delivery of the sermon the next day, without invitation, before the audience was dismissed, this same shabby man—who was a practical printer and had tramped, hungry and faint, to the verge of exhaustion, hunting work—by way of enforcing the text, which was, "In His Steps," if not the sermon, proceeded to tell his story of want and starvation in a land of plenty. At the close of it, so great was his weakness that he fell to the floor. The now conscience-smitten pastor insisted on taking him to his own house, and nursing him with his own hands until, at the end of the week, he died.

That one week's care for a suffering man wrought a wonderful change in the care-taker. That pulpit no longer poured forth finely wrought platitudes to tickle the ears of polite, finical hearers. Before, it had carefully avoided all questions not entirely popular, such as the saloon and politics; but now it boldly plead for whatever the speaker saw to be a need of humanity. At the end of the first sermon, the pastor asked whoever wished to do so to tarry for a little season. When the audience was gone, a hundred were found to remain. The preacher asked as many as wished to do so, to join him in a covenant to continue for one year, that they would do nothing until they had asked, "What would Jesus do in this case?" and that they would do just what they thought He would do. About all present took this vow.

Among them was a young lady of fine musical talent and education, with a voice that would certainly make her fortune on the stage. Already she had tempting offers from different managers who were eager to engage her; but she declined them all, much to the disgust of ambitious relatives, and sang in a tent meeting in the slums of the city, to attract and help convert the vicious and outcast element that there frequented. One of the suitors that sought her hand, she rejected because he had no high aim in life. Afterward, when he was converted in the tent meetings, she married him, much to the content of the minister and all the saints of this new departure. The inference is supposed to be, that this was walking "in His steps," although He never married; and history, that is now unpopular and hence kept in the background, shows that the early Christians who received his Spirit when it was poured out, and hence, having his Spirit, the Holy Ghost,—the divine seed, actually walked "in His steps," did not marry, and those that had wives lived as though they had them not.

But as that Spirit, being subject to death according to the law of seed, died in humanity and will no more be available for human needs until it comes again, as it came before, by a holy body being converted to spirit, it is true now as it was before it came, that there is no Holy Ghost. "But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believed on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet [the word given is not of the text]; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." His glorification was his change from the form of body to spirit, in which form it could be "eaten," appropriated, as he commanded his disciples to do, telling them that they would have no life in them if they did not. Being ignorant of these facts, and that every body of men, like each individual body, generates the spirit that carries it along and enables it to put forth the energy and power which it manifests, these people, like the church, falsely attribute the power and success of their movement to the Holy Ghost.

The editor of one of the largest newspapers was among the principal members in this company of people that agreed to walk "in His steps." He set out bravely to keep his vow, although as a result, bankruptcy stared him in the face. A young millionaire heiress had taken the vow, and no longer considered herself the irresponsible owner of what she had, as before, so she consecrated half a million of it to the support of this Christian enterprise. The narrative is indefinite, so we do not know just how this capital was managed; but in the absence of any condemnation of the ordinary way of managing capital, to wit, letting it out on usury, we presume that was the way thrifty persons would manage it. By what words and acts they inferred that that was the way He would do, it would be interesting to know. Certainly, all the acts and words of His life are against such inference. Those into whom his Spirit went after his translation, brought all their possessions and put them into a common fund; they were distributed to every one that had need, "and they had all things common." Some more of these sanctified millions were invested by this convert and her brother, also a convert, in the purchase of the slum part of the city, on which fine buildings were erected, for what, the narrative did not say; presumably, to rent to a better class of citizens. Once, the preacher—the leader of this movement, admitted that the early Christians were communists, and raised the question as to whether it might not be their duty to walk "in His steps" in that matter also; but that seemed to be as far as they got in that direction. Think, if you can, reader, of Jesus holding property, or taking rent or interest! Of course, if He would not, no man can do so while walking "in His steps."

A great merchant undertook to carry on his business, walking "in His steps," and came near making a failure. A railroad manager also tried it, and had to go back to his old position of operator,—much to the disgust of his ambitious family. The news of this new departure made considerable stir in the religious world. A pastor of one of the great churches of Chicago, a college mate of the man who was the originator of the movement, went to investigate the merits of it. After careful inspection he went home, and after preaching a sermon in which he described what he saw, he made a proposition of the same kind to his own church, and about one hundred members joined him in a like effort. This pastor was the intimate friend of another, whom he calls the Bishop, a very able man and a popular pastor. They had not followed their Master for naught, as each had a considerable fund laid away on interest, I presume, for a rainy day. It was finally agreed between them that they should pool their assets and invest them in buildings for a college settlement. Each resigned his pastorate and went into this new enterprise. They had a room where they held meetings and tried to stem the tide of wickedness.

In this branch of the movement, the young woman who gets the highest credit for her good deeds, is the daughter of a millionaire speculator who, in the face of failure, committed suicide, leaving his daughter bankrupt. She wrought great benevolent deeds in connection with her business, which seems to have been that of a baker, and teaching poor people how to cook, free of charge. One of her most approved deeds was to marry a reputable young man, also a worker, a carpenter.

In course of time, Rev. Henry Maxwell, the man who started the movement, came to Chicago to note the progress of his great work. In a meeting at the Settlement, outsiders were allowed to speak. Among them was a man who spoke of his family, his poverty, and his unavailing efforts to earn the means for their support, and then asked how a man in his condition could "walk in His steps." The minister looked thoughtful, hesitated, and finally said that there were probably others there better able to answer the question than he,—but the question remained unanswered.

The book closes with a kind of revery or vision of Rev. Maxwell, in which he saw, in the future, great reforms as the result of the efforts made to "walk in His steps." We freely admit that the state of affairs represented in this story would be an improvement upon the utter selfishness that now characterizes most of the acts of men in church and state; but it would be only a small patch on a garment already moth eaten and hopelessly rotten. What the world needs, and will soon have, is the new garment of Christ's righteousness,—the glorious Kingdom of heaven established in earth. The value of the book lies in its power to set people to thinking in the line of the world's greatest needs, rather than in its suggestions for remedying them. Above all men, the clergyman is least fitted, either by precept or example, to help people "walk in His steps." His very calling, by which he gains his living and power, according to history, is one of the first outward developments of the great apostasy. The apostasy from God and righteousness cannot fit men to "walk in His steps," which are the steps of God. While training in the ranks of the enemy of all righteousness, men do not learn the step of the soldier of the cross. To the men, ministers, or people who still dwell in mystic Babylon, the first step leading unto "His steps," must be taken in obedience to the command: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE DREYFUS case has reached the importance and magnitude of universal interest. For weeks, the entire world awaited the results of the second court-martial; and when the verdict of "guilty," was made known, a great wave of indignation swept from east to west over the nations. There has been a world-wide mental revolt against the results of the great military conspiracy of France. The entire American, English, and German press has raised a powerful protest against the unjust and inconsistent sentence. In the effort to convict Capt. Dreyfus, the generals and the judges have convicted themselves before the great tribunal of the world. The testimony of the numerous witnesses has been made public; and it is the conviction of millions of people in Europe and America that justice has been throttled in France, and that a grievous wrong has been committed against an innocent man charged with high treason. The second court-martial was conducted with an outrageous defiance to all rules of evidence, and in open defiance to the instructions of the supreme court of cassation, which granted the new trial under the conviction that Dreyfus is innocent. It is apparent to all that the band of conspirators—composed of the principal generals of the French army—was extraordinarily active in the prosecution, not from a sense of justice, but with the view to covering up their own work of persecuting their victim. The verdict itself is obviously a compromise; it condemns the prisoner to ten years' detention in a military prison, and was rendered with the indefinite and unsatisfactory explanation that there were "extenuating circumstances" which mitigate the punishment. The former sentence was to life imprisonment—in solitary confinement. Though it was proven beyond a doubt by chirographical experts and by the confession of Esterhazy, that Dreyfus did not write the bordereau, the judges undertook to save themselves from the censure of the army by compromising the case with the dishonorable and cowardly heads of the military power. The strong sentiment of the world is likely to have its ultimate influence against the republic of France; the world expects an awful reflex to sweep over France and produce the downfall of the Jesuitical anti-Semites. The Dreyfus fight for liberty will continue; it is hoped that he will be pardoned, or released on the basis of having already suffered sufficient punishment to satisfy the new sentence; unless such a course is taken, a crisis is feared. The sentiment of the world boycotted Spain in 1898, and left the proud nation to the mercy of a conquering power, and it would permit dire vengeance to wreck the Latin republic. The boasted claim of the superiority of the French people, the hypocritical veil of pretension and a false education are being torn away, demonstrating the fact that the governments of the so called Christian nations of the modern world are but travesties on liberty, ravishing justice and mocking righteousness at the expense of the liberties of the people!

Nineteenth century imagination is productive of numerous new and fallacious theories concerning the shape of the earth. It has been made to possess about all the forms which speculation can invent. The popular idea, the groundwork of the prodigious fallacy of the Copernican system of astronomy, is that the earth is a convex globe. The idea is entertained by some who pose as advocates of truth, that the earth is flat. A German aeronaut puts the earth in the shape of a cone, with the rounded base in the north, and the apex in the south. A South Dakota man supposes it to be square, with a circular concavo-convex surface—like a saucer bulged in the center, fitted in a square block. A Texas man enjoys the supposition that the earth is a jug, with the mouth in the north, inhabited inside. The latest conclusion of U. S. geodetic surveyors is, that the earth is shaped like a spinning top. An Ohio man holds that it is in the shape of a human being, while the famous Symmes advocated that the earth is habitable both inside and outside, with a hole of communication at the north pole. The very latest idea, entertained by a man in Florida, is that the earth is a star—not simply a shining body in the heavens, but that it is a five-pointed star, the points being the southern extremities of America, Australia, Africa, Asia, and Europe, with a great gulf in the center, and with the Atlantic and Pacific oceans between the gulf and the land. The extremity of Europe extends as far south as South America, while Africa is between Australia and Asia. Whether this star possesses a flat, concave, or convex surface is not clear; perhaps it is just a star, but the announcement is not very star tling. Next!

The United Christian party is an organization of ultra-orthodox minds on the basis of the vitiated truths of Christianity. The idea is to infuse into the American government the religious sentiments which pervade the fragmentary church. Its motto is, "What would Jesus do?" and the text made prominent in its literature is, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder." We would enjoy having some of the warmest advocates of the principles of this party, explain why Jesus did not institute such a movement. It is true that the government shall be upon his shoulder; but it is also true that when His government is established, it will break in pieces the kingdoms and republics that now exist. It will not do this by placing a patch of reform upon the corrupt body politic, but by a complete renovation of the modern world. The Christian party announces that it is not its intention to unite church and state; it makes this announcement because it is known that the idea of church and state in unity is not a popular one. If it grows rapidly it must not contain that which is antagonistic to popular views. The genuine kingdom of the Almighty, when manifest in the world, will be the unity of church and state, in which the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from the New Jerusalem, in which the divine will will be done in all the affairs of men, as it was done in the spiritual heavens of the perfect Man at the beginning of the age. The great King cannot rule a republic.

"Modern socialism is based on the materialistic philosophy. The socialist's conception of the universe is the materialist's conception; hence the uncompromising stand taken by modern socialists. It is for this reason that we bitterly oppose all Utopian schemes of remedying the existing evils through colonization and municipalizing," says an exchange. Then there is such a thing as founding a system of industrial reform upon a conception of the form of the universe! The modern ideas of democracy are in accord with the Copernican system of astronomy—without center and circumference. Modern reform founded on the principles of democracy, repudiates all scientific emphasis of the fact of the necessity of an imperial center about which a nucleus of absolute unity may be formed. The Koreshan System of industrial and commercial reform, as well as its science of government, is founded upon the demonstrated fact that the universe is an organic structure, with specific functions which must find their correspondence in the true system of organic reform. The popular conception of the universe has never been proven to be true; it is speculation—it is fallacious; and any system of reform founded upon it is equally fallacious and useless in its application to the affairs of humanity.

The laws of alchemy are the inherent modes of action of the substances which comprise the great world of existence. The alchemist knows that to produce desired results in his laboratory, it is absolutely essential that he conform to the conditions and laws by which alone his work may be accomplished. He knows that if he does not make application of the knowledge of those laws which inhere in the very qualities of the substances with which he deals, there is no power in heaven or in earth to produce what he desires. The universe exists by virtue of the operation of law. Man is daily and hourly subject to the laws of his physical existence. When the principles of the alchemy of mind and matter are comprehended, it is known that to become immortal, specific laws must be obeyed. Man can no more reach the immortal state without fulfilling the conditions which are absolutely necessary to the attainment of that state, than water can be produced without the union of oxygen and hydrogen. The modern mental scientists who assert the possibility of their overcoming death while in ignorance of the laws upon which immortality depends, can no more attain to the immortal state than a man who is ignorant of the principles of mathematics can solve intricate problems in spherical trigonometry.

The effort of the modern clergyman and metaphysician is to imitate the early church in doctrines and practice, just as people in the days of Jesus undertook to imitate Moses. There was a harmony of difference between Moses and Jesus; that difference was the result of progress during the centuries of experience of humanity between the beginning and the ending of the Jewish dispensation. There is a corresponding difference between the quality of truth promulgated in Koreshanity and the quality of truth taught by Jesus; it is the result of the metamorphosis of mental energy imparted by the Messiah of nineteen hundred years ago. The interior life of the Jewish people was involved in Jesus, whence the evolution of life during the Christian dispensation sprang. If an involution of humanity occurred at the close of the Jewish dispensation, it is just as inevitable that a corresponding involution must occur at the close of the Christian dispensation. Koreshanity proclaims the fact of such an involution—the science of all truth in a single personality, the Head of the new dispensation, the Founder of the new church, the Messiah of the age.

Dr. Votaw, of the Chicago University, in the chair of New Testament literature, asserts that "religion is the worst taught of all subjects," and suggests revolutionary methods in the promulgation of the Christian religion. It is true that hundreds of thousands in the churches and Sunday schools, undertake to teach the people without the slightest conception of the science of the divine Being, and in utter ignorance of the scientific interpretation of the Bible. But is religion "worse taught" than astronomy, chemistry, and physics? Is it worse taught than social, industrial, and political economy? If there is truth in mathematics, there is also truth concerning religion and other branches of human research and thought, and the absolute truth of each is as exact and as susceptible of direct demonstration as is mathematics. Whenever any subject is presented from the basis of a false premise, it is badly taught; and we assert that "science" as well as religion is worse taught today than at any other period of the world's history.

Astronomers meet with a difficulty in spectral analyses of the various stars of the firmament. It has been ascertained that there are lines photographed in the spectrum which are of atmospheric origin, and experiments have been made for the purpose of determining what vapors in the atmosphere produce the lines; but thus far, the efforts to get the lines which will answer the purpose have not been satisfactory. Prof. Pickering has tried it by the interposition of various vapors in the path of the light; but the experiments have been failures. Spectra of a given star taken at different points, with the atmosphere in different conditions, contain different lines. We maintain that the astronomer analyzes, not the elements that are contained in the stars, but only the energies radiating from the stars, after they have passed through the various strata of the atmosphere, and after they have been transmuted in transmission. They analyze the energies of light and darkness with the qualities which they possess upon entering the telespectroscope.

How strange it would be to the modern world, for men not to die! It would be strange, because man expects to die while desiring that he may live. Man will continue to die as long as there is a conflict between expectation and desire. There must come a revolt against death, and the battle must be fought scientifically. The mind of progressive humanity must become positively polarized for the stupendous conflict. Victory over death in the natural world constitutes the greatest victory in the universe. It is the means of reaching the highest degree of life; and it requires the application of the principles and laws of absolute science. The greatest use that can be made of the human intellect is in mastering the problems of life, and in bringing the entire man to meet the conditions upon which the attainment of the deathless state depends.

The recent efforts of the medical trust in Chicago to drive out all schools of healing except its own, through legal persecution, have been nullified by the rendering of an official opinion by the Illinois state's attorney-general on the subject of so called spiritual healing or mental methods, where no medicines are used. According to his interpretation of the laws of the state, any person has the right to say what means shall be employed for his recovery; and that if patients die under mental, faith, or spiritual treatment, the attending ministers or metaphysicians cannot be prosecuted. The medical men are not satisfied with this decision; if the present laws are just, and the above decision truly interprets them, they desire to have them repealed and the decision reversed!

It is said that there is no conflict between religion and science. There is not, nor has there ever been; but there is decided inharmony between modern so called science and the true religion. There is also a marked difference between fallacious astronomy and chemistry, and the Bible. There has been a war of discussion between the representatives of the church and the agnostic schools of science; but the war has ceased. The way in which harmony between them was effected, was through the surrender of the clergymen to the nebular hypothesis and the theories of Darwin. This is the unity of fallacious science and fallacious theology. Koreshan Universology is the unity of true science and religion, it is the scientific religion, the religion of science.

The occult center of the mortal self is the positive pole of polarity of the substances of fallacy. It is the dark point from which modern occultists obtain their inspiration. Science is intellectual; and when, in the progress of humanity through the ages and cycles, the intellect becomes illumined, the positive pole of truth is external, and reveals the truth concerning the external world, as well as the internal. There is no such thing as a scientific occultism, or occult science. That which is occult is hidden; it is mysterious. When mystery is revealed it is no longer occult.

Nineteen hundred years ago, there was developed in a group of progressive people, a soul consciousness of the universe; the expression of that consciousness was the divine philosophy. A scientific age demands science, or the intellectual consciousness of all the laws operative in the universe. It is only through intellectual consciousness or comprehension of the universe, that man can overcome corruption in both mind and body, and become externally immortal.

Dr. Votaw's demand for the "reconstruction of religious education," must be preceded by the reconstruction of religion itself. No system of education is worth a farthing unless that which is taught is absolutely true. Koreshanity meets the demands of the times by not only revolutionizing the systems of religious education, but by revolutionizing religion as well.

An Englishman has discovered a process of taking pictures in the dark, and holds that light is not absolutely essential to producing effects on the camera plate. If mental pictures can be formed with the mind in a state of intellectual darkness, such as obtains in the modern world, certainly, pictures may be produced in the camera in physical darkness!

A common idea is that mind exists in the atmosphere, and that the brain is a mere reflector of thought. Of course, this is indefinite; but it is "high science" in some schools of thought. It is noticeable that there is no proof that minds have ever thought independently of an organic structure.

There can be no true brotherhood in humanity without a paternal government. The popular idea of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, in the present chaotic condition of the world, is fit for sentiment only; no attempt is made toward a practical application of it.

Modern scientists have failed to solve the problems of the universe, for the simple reason that they have not sufficient mental capacity to comprehend the meaning of the facts of common observation and experience.

When men are exiled and condemned to work the mines of frigid Siberia, it is despotism; but when men volunteer to sacrifice their lives in clamoring for gold in the frozen Klondike, it is freedom!

"As a rule, what costs the most effort to acquire and care for, is worth the least." If that is the rule, the knowledge of the truth is a most extraordinary exception!

Koreshans are past the stage of being taught by men who say they do not know; and the entire world will soon repudiate agnostic scientists.

Modern Christians presume to be clay in the hands of the potter; but many of them are lumps of putty in the hands of corrupt politicians.

The man with the hoe, the hammer, and the trowel, will not be free until the time of the recognition of the Man with the true science.

The modern god, located beyond the confines of the limitless Copernican universe, is too far away to hear the prayers of his people!

The basis of organic social life is love for the neighbor. The competitive system is founded on the opposite principle.

The mental world of humanity is in as great chaos as the social, industrial, and political world.

The world must obtain its absolute freedom through obedience to immutable law.

Fallacy is the expression of a corresponding quality of life in the mortal man.

Hell is constantly being created by those who do not know they are in it.

The French generals have proven themselves to be generally bad.

The Prophet's burden is the greatest of all.

What Supports the Hollow Globe in Space?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—As you have invited me to investigate Koreshan Universology, I will say that I always try to consider everything that comes up. But there are many new theories published that I do not understand; and then, there is so much confusion of theories that it is difficult to know when one hears the truth. I have been taught that the church is right, and that I could find the way of life in it; but I find the teachings of the church to be untrue. I have also been taught that the earth is round like a ball, and that we live on the outside of it; but I may find that this is all fallacy. It is on this point that I want light, and I hope you will not consider it impertinent if I ask you a few questions.

(1) Why, if the Koreshan view of the earth is correct, do the sails of a ship appear first when the vessel is coming into view, and lastly the hull?

(2) It does not seem to me to be unreasonable to suppose that the mutual attraction of the sun, planets, and earth would hold these bodies in space; but if we place the sun, planets, and stars on the inside, how could these bodies so attract the outside of the earth as to hold it in space?

(3) How could day and night occur if the sun was on the inside?

I ask these questions in good faith, hoping that you will publish them and reply, as is your custom. There are two of us here that are interested in these questions being answered before we go on with the investigation of the new astronomy.—C. C. F. Reinhardt, Tex.

The way to ascertain whether or not a system is true, is to test the premise upon which any system or theory, new or old, is constructed; if the premise is fallacious, the system is untrue. Every theory has some kind of a premise; and if one has the mental capacity to ascertain what the premise is, and can discover the true method of test and apply it, one can ascertain whether a theory is true or false. The Copernican system of astronomy is founded upon the idea that the earth is a convex globe, inhabited on the outside, and moving through space as an astronomical body. We are living upon the earth's surface; its surface is accessible, and quite within the reach of investigation and experimental test.

If the earth's surface is not convex, there can be no truth in the entire system of modern astronomy. By both ocular and geodetic evidences, through a long series of experiments and survey, we have demonstrated that the surface of the earth is concave, and therefore we know that the old school astronomy is not true. We have published to the world the results of our experiments; many of which can be duplicated by any one with a good telescope on the sea-shore. Modern theology has developed alongside the fallacious astronomical system. The church has been compelled to keep pace with the rapid extension of worlds in the fallacious, infinite space of the old astronomy. It must suppose a great spirit pervading the infinite abyss—a supposed being to create and perpetuate the billions of solar systems imposed upon the mind of the modern world by the astronomer. Modern theology is as fallacious as its companion fallacy,—astronomy.

(1) Our correspondent has no doubt noted the result of recent scientific experiments on Lake Michigan, published in the last issue of THE FLAMING SWORD. The illustrated article is quite sufficient to answer the above question concerning the invisible ship's hull. Factors of geoliner foreshortening and perspective vanish, at the distant horizon, an amount of vertical space equal to the altitude of the eye at the point of observation. The horizon is the vanishing point of geoliner vision. The telescope extends the vanishing point, and makes visible objects on the water between the vanishing point to the naked eye, and the vanishing point through the telescope.

(2) When one comes to consider the Koreshan System of astronomy, all assumptions which find place in the old system must be laid aside. One cannot reach logical conclusions from the true premise of the earth's concavity, by the application of hypotheses which are employed in the Copernican system. The hypothesis of centrifugal and centripetal forces as applied to the sun, moon, and planets in the theory of Newton, was invented to explain the supposed motion of these bodies in accordance with the previous conclusion that they were in infinite space, and needed support to hold them in space. The modern astronomers know of no center and circumference in the infinite universe, and therefore know of no static planes of either matter or force. In order to hold the moon in its orbit, it is made to revolve about the earth; the earth and sister planets to revolve about the sun; the sun, about a larger sun; the larger sun about a still larger sun, and so on, ad infinitum, throughout the infinite fallacy.

The cellular universe has both center and circumference. The shell is composed of material substances which are deposited through the materialization of solar energies, in their static planes, or planes of rest. The central sun is the center, where all the energies of the universe meet; it is a great center of metamorphosis or transmutation of all energies which levitate or rise up from the shell of the earth. The central sun cannot fall from its place, because it is at the only place where it could be a sun; it is at the static point of levic energies. The visible sun is a projection or reflection of the central sun, on the upper surface of our atmosphere; it is in an external static plane, hence it cannot rise above nor fall below its plane of rest. Likewise, the planets and stars are points of combustion of energies, in their planes; the stars are electric lights of the physical heavens, maintaining their places through both ascending and descending energies.

The universe does not exist in infinite space. The earth fills all the space there is. There is no space on the outside of the earth, for space is the dimension or measure of extension of existing things. The universe has form, and is therefore limited, because limitation is an inexpugnable factor of form. The space of the universe is limited to its form. There is nothing outside of the earth to attract it to another place; and there is no other place in which the universe could exist, because the one cellular structure occupies the only place there is. There is no location elsewhere. So far from its falling anywhere else, there is no power in the universe that is capable of moving it in any direction except its own direction,—in its own space. It has motion in itself; and there can be no motion, sensation, nor life outside of its own environ, which is the limitation, the most outward expression of its interior life. When that limit is reached, there is no more. It is the end, the terminal point of external space, beyond which there is absolutely nothing.

(3) The central sun is light on one side and dark on the other; it is the inevitable result of its functions of absorption and reflection; it revolves on its axis by virtue of its attraction and repulsion. The energies of light proceed from the light side, and refocalize in the visible sun at a distance of about 1,000 miles above the earth's concave surface. The central sun rotates on its axis once in 24 hours, and produces a corresponding revolution of its projection in the same time. The projected sun illumines just one half of the earth's surface, and its revolution in the earth produces alternate day and night,—successive noons and midnights on every meridian. Its spiral motion north and south is the cause of the seasons. The relation of the projected and invisible suns may be seen by a study of the diagrams on the last page of THE FLAMING SWORD.

Equatorial Diameter and the Earth's Curvature.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—It is held by astronomers that the earth's equatorial diameter is about 26 miles longer than its polar diameter. This would place the equator about thirteen miles higher all around, than it would be if the earth were a perfect sphere. In other words, there would be a rise in the earth from the poles to the equator, of about 10 feet to the mile; the Mississippi river would be running up hill at this ratio. Now how could this be? And how does this ratio of the rise tally with the 8 inches to the mile curvature? 10 feet to the mile would be so much in excess of the 8-inch ratio, that it would produce an enormous difference in the direction and ratio of the meridian arc from pole to equator. Please explain.—SUBSCRIBER.

There is a great deal of foolish speculation concerning the rise between the pole and the equator. It is certain that the earth cannot have two ratios of curvature in the same place and at the same time. If the earth is larger in diameter at the equator than through the poles, it is so because the static planes of materialization of the substances comprising the shell, constitute a spheroid instead of a perfect sphere; the waters of the sea are in their static plane or equilibrium from pole to equator, and there is no up hill, though the equator be farther from the center of the earth than the poles. The Mississippi river flows down from Lake Itasca to the Gulf; that is, its source has a greater altitude above the sea level than its mouth; consequently, the water gravitates from the source to the Gulf.

If the earth is bulged at the equator, no matter whether the earth is convex or concave, it is flatter at the poles than at the equator. The actual ratio of curvature of a sphere 7,935 miles in diameter, is 7.92 inches to the mile, increasing its angles and distance from a given tangent, as to the square of the distance. If the normal curvation of a perfect sphere 7,935 miles in diameter is 7.92 inches to the mile, it would follow that if the earth is flattened 13 miles at each pole, it curves a little less than 7.92 inches in the vicinity of the poles, and a little more than that ratio near the equator. The curvature would still be "about 8 inches to the mile."

The difficulty with the above inquirer is, that the ratio of curvature from a given tangent, and the ratio of divergence of two lines, are confused in the mind. The curvature on both a perfect sphere 7,935 miles in diameter, and a sphere of the same size, flattened 13 miles at the poles, would be about 3,967 miles in one fourth the earth's circumference. If we place a tangent at the pole, it is obvious that the sphere curves away from that tangent to the equator; the amount of curvature is the semi-diameter. The curvature of a sphere from an external tangent at the pole would amount to the semi-diameter of the sphere, or 3,967 miles, in the distance that lies between the pole and equator along the meridian. The ratio of divergence of the arc of a spheroid from the arc of the perfect sphere, amounts to only 13 miles in the 6,229 miles of the meridian arc, or about 11 feet for each mile, without increase as to the square of the distance. This latter ratio is but the ratio of divergence of two curved lines not parallel. The two arcs would curve so nearly in the same direction that there would be but very little difference in the actual ratio of curvation.

On a spheroid 10 feet in diameter, with difference of equatorial and polar diameters in the proper proportion, to represent the spheroid of the earth under consideration, would amount to only .39 of an inch, swelling only .195 of an inch on each side at the equator, which would be scarcely appreciable to the eye. The curvation of such a spheroid is practically the same as that of a perfect sphere 10 feet in diameter, amounting to 5 feet, or the semi-diameter, in one fourth of its circumference.

Mystic Masonry.

PART I.

The Problem of the Philosopher's Stone from the Standpoint of the Mason.

JOSIAH GROSS, in "The Square and Compass," New Orleans, La

DURING the 18th century, with its great achievements in science and also in irreligion, when materialism and atheism threatened to overthrow all religious beliefs, there arose a strictly Masonic order known as that of Mystic Masonry. It had a Swedenborgian flavor, asserted the existence of spirits, invoked them in the lodge, and was also decidedly alchemical. It believed that the Philosopher's Stone and the Elixir of Life were possible to scientific research. In its alchemical teachings, it believed in the transmutation of metals wherewith to beautify the temple. We will endeavor to penetrate the veil of this mysticism, and while we may not understand, it may be interesting.

It is generally believed that the ancients had information that we do not possess. Some contend that it was supernaturally given; others less religiously inclined, ascribe it to the wisdom of sages who represented the intuitional man, the greater, keener brain, the intellect supernaturally sharpened by necessity, essentially the brain that lived when the world was younger.

For my part, I am willing to admit that there are evidences that the man of three or four thousand years ago knew more than any one now living. That wisdom belonged to Abraham, Moses, Melchizedek, and others. They knew secrets connected with the future life of man, the life after the ego is bare of flesh. They called up the dead, they knew the password of Jehovah. What this word was, is the true word which we have lost; how they called up their Samuels is perhaps a secret. Mystic Masonry was an attempt to learn anew these secrets. Undoubtedly, this arcana belonged to the primitive church and to the primitive craft. The form of the Catholic ritual (which is the best representation of primitive churches that we have, and I hope that brethren will not, by reason of antagonism thereto, be blinded to its beauties,) and the form of the Masonic ritualism both bear internal evidences of these secrets, and also, that to both it has been lost. The Catholic church does not admit that; does the craft claim to possess it?

The true word was not obtained and a substitute took its place. When will the true one be recovered, and what will be the process? The Catholic ritual has many beautiful suggestions that find their parallel in Masonry. The enthronement of woman, the mother principle of the Master, or God, Mia, or Mary, the mother earth, the ceremony of the Holy Moon or Mass, and many others having a like esoteric origin. And I believe that the Jewish church has many striking parallels; indeed it may be said to be a part of Masonry, or vice versa.

That Freemasonry is the container of beautiful and eternal principles, I must admit. It holds great secrets, and today they are indeed secrets, for none know them. Nor are there any who know the secrets of the church, all belief to the contrary notwithstanding. Both are carefully guarding the empty form, the vacant casket, for the spirit is gone.

We will not further discuss what the churches claim to do. Despite the great beauty of their rituals, their elevated moral philosophy, and their superexalted claims, the results are disappointing. There is no cohesion; there is a breaking away, a falling apart, a disintegration that foretells the doom.

Anciently, they had the secret that could bind as with hoops of steel; but down the ages they have wandered farther and farther away from it. What has been the fate of Masonry in this connection? Do we profess to have retained the exact form, and therein the true secret? I have been told by eminent craftsmen that Freemasonry held a secret, and that many belonged to lodges all their lives without discovering it. This is a proper subject to discuss, for the time comes when men must learn this secret anew. What is this secret that is ordinarily undiscoverable and cannot be communicated, but must be thought out and evolved from the inner consciousness of the neophyte? And they who have discovered this secret, if any such there be, have they left us no hint other than that it may be a perception of higher moral truths, the realization of the bond of perfect brotherhood, a thought-plane that puts man beyond temporal sorrows?

What they have given out has been very little, and of very little use in the search for the Philosopher's Stone. What, then, is the true word, the true secret? when and how are we to receive it? and what preparation are we making to bring about the necessary conditions to receive the new Messenger of the Covenant?

The Earth a Concave Sphere.

A New York Paper Briefly Reviews the Koreshan Astronomy and Its Demonstrations.

The Rev. U. G. Mitchell, who has recently done a very excellent work for the Unitarians in northern New York, more especially in Gouverneur and Lowville, and who has preached in the Universalist church of this city, has been in town during the last few weeks on a very peculiar errand. Mr. Mitchell is now the New York state agent of the Guiding Star Publishing House, of Chicago, and this business concern is engaged in the publishing of books, weekly papers, and other literature in defense and promulgation of the very startling proposition that our earth is a hollow globe 8,000 miles in diameter, and that we live inside the earth on a concave surface, and that the entire solar system is also contained inside of this globe, 8,000 miles across.

At the head of this business concern is DR. CYRUS R. TEED, formerly a physician in Utica N. Y., and better known by the name of KORESH; consequently his system of astronomy is known as the Koreshan System to distinguish it from the Copernican system, which is just now the commonly accepted one. DR. TEED has advocated for over thirty years the idea that the earth is a concave sphere; and about five years ago, a prominent man by the name of Prof. U. G. Morrow, became a convert to his idea. This latter gentleman within the last two years took charge of a surveying party on the west coast of Florida, and this party, by the actual running of a mechanical line on the water's surface for four miles, demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt that the surface of our globe is concave and not convex, consequently we are inhabiting a concave sphere. This remarkable demonstration was heralded all over the world and caused a tremendous amount of discussion. The first of last October, the book describing the survey and giving further details came from the press, and there has been such a demand for it that three editions have been published. Hundreds of copies have been sold in northern New York, and are being carefully considered by very many of our best people. If DR. TEED's idea and Prof. U. G. Morrow's survey should prove to be correct, this, to say the very least, would produce a tremendous revolution in scientific and other circles.—The Watertown (N. Y.) Re-Union.

Chat With Readers.

The Flaming Sword Appreciated by Its Readers.

THE FLAMING SWORD is widely quoted by the press of America and England. It is safe to say that not less than 10,000 lines of matter contained in THE FLAMING SWORD during the past year have been reproduced by our exchanges. These quotations have appeared not only in the reform press, but also in religious and metaphysical journals. The Koreshan System is undoubtedly exerting a great influence in the field of journalism. We are greatly pleased that this is so, and it will be highly gratifying and interesting to our readers; it is a testimony of our progress.

With our readers, THE FLAMING SWORD stands at the head on all lines of truth and true reform; thousands appreciate its force and enjoy its contents. We have received numerous letters from readers who state that THE FLAMING SWORD is read from beginning to end before other papers are perused. One writes that he reads THE SWORD all through the evening it is received,—something which he does not do in the case of any other of the twenty papers which he receives. This is an example of the extent of the appreciation of our efforts to make THE FLAMING SWORD the most interesting journal in existence.

Active Co-operation Desired.

To the end that we may continue to progress toward the goal of our ideals, and to success in the work of promulgating the truth, it is necessary that our friends actively co-operate with us. We are confined to the office; we reach people through correspondence and through THE FLAMING SWORD. There is a large circumference of people which we cannot reach except through the activity of our friends. If each present reader should procure one new subscription during the next thirty days, it would double our subscription list, and accomplish more than we could do in a year if left without the field work of interested readers. We desire the active co-operation of all interested in the spread of the marvelous truth of Koreshanity; we want to come in closer touch with our friends, so that we may reach out through them to others who desire the truth. We have the instruments with which you can work—THE FLAMING SWORD, the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, pamphlets, and circulars. Are you improving your opportunities? Help us to keep up a vigorous campaign all the year round.

A Word About Unpaid Subscriptions.

Another item is to keep in mind the relation of reader and publisher. We mail THE FLAMING SWORD on the basis of paid subscriptions; and each year, renewals of subscriptions should be made—it hinders us if they are not promptly paid. There are a number of subscribers who have allowed the matter to escape their attention, and their subscriptions are overdue. Do not forget us; it is a matter of only a dollar or so with you; it means hundreds to us. We will greatly appreciate it if each one will observe the date on the printed tab on the wrapper; if that date is in the past, the subscription is overdue. It would greatly assist us in the work of THE FLAMING SWORD if each one who is in arrears, would forward the amount due within the next week or two—at once if possible.

Read the Directions on Page 2.

Always read carefully the directions on page 2, before sending us remittance. These directions will inform you how to remit—by money order, bank draft, express order, payable to The Guiding Star Publishing House, Chicago, Ill. Please do not send personal checks on banks, because we have to pay for collection of the same; be sure to put the war-tax stamp on exchange where required. Cash in letters is not safe unless registered. We prefer stamps for sums less than $1.00.

We are always glad to hear from our readers; good letters greatly encourage us, and our readers also when the letters are published. Write us freely, and keep in touch with the spirit of our work; it will help both you and us.

The Guiding Star Assembly of the Koreshan Unity has provided a Hall at 316 West Sixty-third street, Chicago, in the interest of Koreshan propaganda; and we make announcement of the order of lectures for each week, beginning Sep. 17, 1899.

Sunday, 3 P. M., Public Service of the Koreshan Ecclesia.

Monday evening, Lecture on Koreshan Astronomy, by Prof. U. G. Morrow, Editor of THE FLAMING SWORD.

Thursday evening, Gospel meeting, conducted by Berthaldine, Matrona, President of Society Arch-Triumphant.

Friday evening, Lecture on Social subjects in interest of the Bureau of Equitable Commerce.

Saturday afternoon, 3 o'clock, Woman's Meeting for the study of Koreshan Science; conducted by Berthaldine, Matrona.

Koreshanity is the perfection of truth, since it involves all there is of the mysteries of our origin and destiny, the fulfillment of all prophecy, and the philosophy of Jesus combined with the science of all law as given in the marvelous exposition of KORESH.

The Social Question Solved!

Employment and Equitable
Remuneration for all
Co-operators.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce,

[Successor to the Industrial Co-Operative Union of America.]

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural; in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be Saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

The Organ and Function of Individuality.

Part III.

Co-ordinate Functions and Faculties of the Cerebral Hemispheres; Centers of Mental Sensation and the Motory Equatorial Zone; Mistakes of Phrenologists.

IN PURSUING the discussion of the mental and physiological functions of the organ of individuality, we desire to urge upon the student of Koreshanity the important fact that all of the organs of the cerebrum (including individualism) are classified in pairs, according to both physiological and mental requirements, for which we will adduce specific and cogent reasons. Some writers on mental and psychic science and phenomena, have attempted to convey the impression that the hemispheres of the encephalon are respectively male and female; the right side being masculine and the left side feminine. This is a radical error founded upon general and specific misconceptions, through ignorance of cerebral anatomy and physiology. The conarium (pineal gland) and glandula vita (pituitary body) are respectively the masculine and feminine poles of the sexual axis. The lateral hemispheres are inversely masculoid and feminoid. This inversely co-ordinate mental and physiological co-operation depends entirely upon the construction of the cortex and fiber, which we will proceed to describe.

The cortex is composed of layers of spherical cells; these may be denominated spherules. In some places it consists of but two, and in other places of three distinct laminae, separated by a very attenuate film of fibrous tissue. The cells are centers of organo-vital elaboration, and the fibers are channels of communication both of the cerebral essences and the electro-magnetic energies generated through cellular respiration, the basis of which is a vital alchemy. The external layer of the cortex of the right hemisphere exercises the mental function of the affectional force,—the love of being, or the desire to be conscientious, the love of co-ordination as in individualism or undividedness, the love of form, size, weight, color, order, number, etc., throughout every organ and faculty of the right side; while the left hemisphere exercises the general mental function of the scientific use and direction of the faculties. The second layer embraces the wisdom of the faculties on the right side, and their good or uses on the left. This is what is implied in the inverse co-ordination of right and left mental function.

If we make an anatomical examination of the organ of individuality, extending this analysis into the chain of its associate groups of cortical cells, we are enabled to disclose a spiral revolution from sinciput to occiput, enclosing in the circuit of the gyrus or spire not merely the series of seven organs situated along the line of the superciliary ridge, but a corresponding and co-ordinate group in the middle gyrus of the occipital lobe. This last we have denominated the equatorial circle of the alimentary axis. Between these, the intercellular film affords the magneto-electric communication, by means of which the gyrus is established and maintained. By the gyrus, we here mean the convolution or circuit of energy, through its media of communication, the cells and fiber, not the portion of the brain merely. The attenuate film of fiber between the cortical area is composed of innumerable insulated wires, so to speak, infinitely finer than the most delicate web of the silk worm or the spider. These are the channels of interco-ordination of the cells of the distal regions of the cortex. A communication between the sinciput and occiput, through a fibrous connection of the two points, is reinforced by every cortical cell along the line of communication; for every cell sends out its line of attachment, and thence its energy, into the general current.

Were the organ of individuality ever so large, as an organ, for the exercise of a mental function, it could not perform its use except in association with its co-ordinate faculties. If we confine our consideration of the use of individuality to the least of all its functions, namely, the discrimination of individual persons and things, we must include form, size, weight, color, etc., because it is by the aid of these faculties that the organ in question is able to differentiate one individual from another. Not only does individuality, as a mental organ, apply its avocation in consociate effort with the other divisions of the inferior gyrus of the frontal lobe, but its co-ordination with the equatorial limit of the optical or visual axis has as much to do with the execution of its function, as has its merely local attribute. This is true, because the motic zone or annulus of the mental energy involved in the exercise of the faculty, is as important for the accomplishment of its use as the sensory; for as the organ of individuality is sensory as to its mental quality, therefore, in the region of the occiput must we find the motic power of its mental activity. This is true, because every sphere of the universe, whether in the field of merely alchemico-organic (astronomo-physical) form and motion, or in the corresponding domains of mental and spiritual being, there are axes, poles, and equators of relation.

In that belt of the physical cosmos lying between the tropics of Cancer and Capricorn, we find the motic zone of all the motions of the heavens and the earth. If through the law of analogical correspondence we can locate the zone or annulus of the equator in the cerebrum, we may determine the primary motic sources of encephalic activity. No one will question or dispute the fact, that great mental power must depend largely upon good physiological feeding power of the body, and that the supply of substance through the physiological action of the gastric organ and its associate alimentary canal, is an essential factor in the phrenological economy; and it ought also to be undisputed, that the specific exercise of an organ causes to be derived into itself blood and nerve juice specifically adapted to the organ and function operating. The blood and nerve supply reach the encephalic centers through the food supplied to the stomach, hence there must exist a special bond of unity between the divisions of the digestive tract and the cerebral organs.

We know that the stomach is supplied with both sensory and motory nerves from a specific region of the spinal column, and that these sensory and motory roots are impulsed from the brain, whence they derive their energy. Every specific function of sensation and motion originates in a specific brain center; and no man can be a phrenologist who does not know both the mental and physiological correlation of these centers of elaboration. The motory roots of the spinal nerves lie in the anterior region of the cord, while the sensory roots are formed in the posterior region. They have their origin in the corresponding parts of the cerebrum. Mentally, the organs of the inferior gyrus of the frontal lobe are the centers of mental sensation, while the equatorial zone is motory in mental attribute. Physiologically, the organs of the inferior frontal gyrus are motory, while the organs of the equatorial zone are sensory. It is deduced, therefore, that the inferior gyrus sends its nerves to the alimentary canal; that the organs of individuality, form, size, weight, color, order, and number comprise the alimentary canal of the cerebrum, and that the motions of the corresponding tract in the body are derived from the above-named centers.

It is a fact that there is a conflict of opinion with so called phrenologists and physiologists, arising from a misunderstanding by each of the complex functions of the organs of the brain. The ordinary physiologist denies the attitude and claims of the phrenologist, on the ground of what little he knows of the physiological character of certain brain centers; a few of which have been located and defined in a very partial degree through vivisection alone, which must always be accompanied with pathological conditions that modify and conflict with physiological activity and function. The ordinary phrenologist is non compos regarding the physiology of the phrenological "bumps."

We have thus far confined the discussion of the phreno-physiology of the organ under consideration, to the external mentality and its coincident physiological relations. These considerations only involve, primarily, the external cortical area. In entering more deeply into mental analysis, we have to distinctively embrace in our proposition, the under layer or laminæ of the cortex; and in so doing, we enter upon the domain of that realm which constitutes the border-land of the inner soul. This is the basis of that sphere of phenomena which has come to be regarded so differently by various classes of investigators and phenomena hunters, called the occult and psychic. To comprehend what is implied in the term inner soul, the student should become well acquainted with terms and their full significance. The Greek pneuma (breath, air, wind, spirit), has distinct reference to the organ and function of respiration, whether in the body or in the head. The spirit of respiration, then, is the pneuma. In the animal, the organ is called the lungs. In the body of the human it is called the lungs; these are the organs of the pneuma or respiration, hence in certain pathological states we have the term pneumonia.

The spirit of respiration in the head elaborates the pneuma (spirit) of the head, which strictly corresponds to the pneuma (spirit) of the lungs. The spirit of the mind is the intellectual (light) principle, hence the light (as in the animal creation) of the spiritual degree. We have also the various degrees of the psuche (psyche).

The character or letter y is employed in anglicizing the word psuche, because the Greek u is always rendered y in English. The term or word psyche, soul, has the corresponding relation to the blood that pneuma has to the breath. In the body, the pneuma and psyche are so intimately associated in function as to be derived into one organ and to comprise one elaboration, but they enter upon two distinct channels of distribution. The pneuma is the breath, the psyche is the blood. This is true in every domain of life.

Setting Up the Gold Standard.

American Bankers' Association Voices the Sentiments of the Republican Party; Gold Standard Party Hastening the Coming Crisis; the Golden Calf Exalted in the Hearts of the People.

IT WILL be remembered by the readers of THE FLAMING SWORD, that during the last national campaign we predicted the success of the gold standard party, on the ground that the golden calf would be elevated to the sanctuary of the modern soul, to the altitude of the highest human love,—the love of money. This prediction we predicated upon the basis that as the golden calf set up in the most holy place in the reign of Manasseh, king of Judah, was the sign (in type) for the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem, so the exaltation of the modern god, Moloch, the golden calf in antitype, must occupy the same exalted place in the hearts of the people before the vengeance of God could be displayed in the overthrow of the evils now afflicting society. Before us as we write, is the San Francisco Examiner, from which we quote the following:

The American Bankers' Association puts itself on record unequivocally in favor of the gold standard today, by adopting a resolution, the meaning of which nobody can mistake. That action, taken in connection with the placing of Colonel Myron T. Herrick, President McKinley's close friend, in line for the Presidency of the association in 1901, made it quite a day for the National Administration. The adoption of the gold standard resolution was not, perhaps, a surprise. The association is a sound-money body from end to end. Heretofore, all attempts to induce the association to take any action which might be regarded as of a political character have failed; but today the view was taken that the money question was one which ought to be elevated above politics. So when the resolution was brought forward, the association forgot its historic rule and voted for the declaration enthusiastically and unanimously. The resolution in full follows: "The bankers of the United States most earnestly recommend that the Congress of the United States at its next session enact a law to more forcibly and unequivocally establish the gold standard measure of all values in the United States; that all obligations of the Government, and all paper money, including circulating notes of national banks, shall be redeemed in gold coin, and that the legal tender notes of the United States, when paid into the Treasury, shall not be reissued except upon the deposit of an equivalent amount of gold coin."

While it is a fact that the republican party went before the people with the sop to put forth its best endeavors to insure bimetallism to the United States, it was never the intention of the oligarchy—in whose interests the republican party was run—to fulfil the pledge. The superficial attitude and blind of the republican party, is well stated in Mr. Bryan's recent speech in San Francisco:

You tell me that the victory of 1896 was a victory for the gold standard. I point out the fact that three parties united in denouncing the gold standard as un-American and anti-American. Three parties united in the pledge that that gold standard should be driven out of the United States and back to England, whence it came. And six millions and a half of voters marched under the banner of independent bimetallism, and not one of them was bought, and not one of them was intimidated.

You tell me that the republicans outvoted us. I tell you that according to returns, they had 7,000,000. But for what did those 7,000,000 vote? You say they voted the republican ticket; but that ticket ran on a platform, and what did the platform say? The platform pledged the republican party to do what it could to get rid of the gold standard by international agreement, and when the vote was counted, 13,000,000 people had voted for candidates pledged to double the standard as against the gold standard, and only 132,000 (less than one per cent of the voters of the United States) had supported the only ticket that was ever pledged to the gold standard, as a good thing in the United States. And the first thing that the republican President did, was to send a commission of three distinguished men all the way to Europe to get rid of the gold standard.

You tell me the gold standard is a blessing. I cannot believe it, because I have so much confidence in the judgment of President William McKinley, that I do not think he would send three men all the way to Europe to get rid of a good thing. If I were willing enough to doubt the judgment of the President, I am not audacious enough to bring an indictment against the whole republican congress, because a republican congress appropriated $100,000 to pay the expenses of the commission while it was in Europe trying to get rid of the gold standard. And I know that the republican congressmen are so careful of the people's money, that they would not vote away $100,000 trying to get rid of a blessing.

It was never the purpose of the leaders of the republican party to fulfil the pledge made to the people, nor did many of the 7,000,000 republican voters give any consideration to whether the single standard or bimetallism was the preferable thing. The efforts of the money power in the expenditure of millions of dollars to insure an administration which they could manipulate in the interests of the money lenders of the world, succeeded in accomplishing satisfactory results to that power. The seven millions of people who were in favor of the gold standard, or indifferent as to the policy of the republican party, but who would follow it though it went straight into perdition, are enthusiastic over the one great thing that the republican party has accomplished,—the destruction of Spanish dominion in America. The last administration of the democratic party lost the opportunity of a generation; the republican party seized it, and the hearts of the American people pulsate in unison over the achievement. The enthusiasm will not subside before another election.

The democratic party may embody in its issues many strong points; but it looks today as if the opposition to American expansion and subjugation of a rebellion against the authority of the United States, is so flagrantly weak as to obscure whatsoever merit might otherwise be found in the democratic array of issues. It is not a question of what is right or wrong. What enthuses the soul of the American people more than any other question, is the point at issue. If all the peace commissioners of the world lately gathered at the Hague were to travel throughout the United States, they might call forth a quiet observation from the curious; but let Admiral Dewey pass over the same ground; throughout the land the cannons would roar, the military and naval forces would parade, the fireworks exhibit, and the eloquence of national orators would resound the praises of the hero of Manila, the conqueror of the Spanish Asiatic squadron.

The great and central principle of the republican party is fallacious. Protection, so called, is the dura mater of the trust system of America, and the gold standard is the first-born and legitimate offspring of the trust. Let the child sit upon the throne and rule until the people learn, by the saddest experience, the lesson of their bond-age. The United States is engaged in a war in which millions of its money is put into circulation throughout the country; besides this, the money power will see to it that under the republican administration money enough is circulated to fulfil the prediction of "good times,"—for let it be understood that it is entirely within the power of the monopolists of the world to either create good or bad times at will.

We are hastening toward the vortex of revolution. The contraction of the so called standard of exchange to a limit easily within the control of the bankers of the world, enables the money power to apply the contortions of the great commercial serpent which, like a boa-constrictor, folds within its toils the great mass of the people who, by the subtlety of commercial wisdom, are purposely degraded. Neither republicanism nor democracy can correct the abuses which the competitive system has brought upon the world. To double the amount of money, as proposed by the bimetallists, would only postpone the crisis and prolong the agony of the evil day. The competitive system will be swept away, not by the tardy process of social evolution, but through the culmination of the process of regeneration which began nineteen hundred years ago, and whose fruit will mature at the closing scene of the old dispensation.

The hope of humanity is in the promise of the birth of the new kingdom, the kingdom of righteousness, the Lord Christ constituting the germ and archetypical beginning. The Lord and his church of communism planted at the beginning of the age will bring forth its fruit, the church of the new dispensation. It will arise from the ashes of the impending revolution, which throughout the world will be violent and universally destructive.

The Degeneracy of Modern Justice.

IN THE recent trial and conviction of Captain Dreyfus, we have an illustration of the degeneracy of the principle of justice, not merely in France, where this great judicial farce has been enacted, but throughout the boasted civilization of the world. It is not alone in France that the innocent are made to expiate the guilt of the criminal; for since the condemnation of the Lord of Glory, and his crucifixion at Golgotha by the very people who pretended to watch for his advent, the world has wreaked its vengeance upon the advancing lights of religious, moral, and social refinement and progress, and has martyred, indiscriminately and brutally, those bold and aggressive pioneers of human liberty, whom succeeding generations have exalted to the altitude of hero worship.

God pity and protect the man who, by force of circumstance and conviction, finds himself arrayed against the flow of the popular tides of degeneracy and corruption which mark the tread of the race in its headlong momentum toward the goals of its inordinate and misguided ambition! Some man has betrayed his country, a treason which does not conflict with the religious and pecuniary sentiment or interests of the masses of other countries; all the evidences are in favor of the accused and against another party, and the innate sense of justice in men is aroused against the court of inquisition, which, sitting in a Christian country of the nineteenth century civilization, excluded the testimony bearing upon, and in favor of the accused,—whom the world believes to be innocent. The five men who voted for the conviction and degradation of the martyr to military pomp, glory, and power in the French republic, possess the same freaky quality of the sense of integrity which pervades the shrunken souls of those who cry the loudest against this climax of modern barbarism and injustice.

Touch the pockets, social life, or political aspirations and leanings—in our own country—of the great newspaper leaders of the American continent and the world! justice becomes as dormant as a butchered animal; the tiger of animosity is aroused, and the darts of calumny and vilification are hurled without mercy, and in violation of their own interpretation of the judicial principle and the law of its proper administration. We know whereof we speak; for it is in the light of personal experience when we say that the judgment of the daily press of the world is as brutal as the inquisitorial court, whose one-sided justice cursed the innocent man Dreyfus.

How Royal Found His Opportunity.

L. E. BORDEN.

“SAY, MAMMA, what can I do? I want to help, too.” The speaker, a little boy of eight, with a pair of earnest blue eyes, cropped hair, and a linen blouse and knickerbockers, tugged at his mother’s gown impatiently; at the same time, he was trying restlessly to balance himself upon one leg like a stork.

“What do you mean, Roy?” she asked, glancing up from her sewing, with a puzzled air. “Why, what you and the rest were talking about—to help the dear Master. What can I do?”

The eastern Branch of the Koreshan Society had just held its weekly meeting at the house of Mrs. Crofton, and various plans had been enthusiastically discussed, by which the true-hearted members of the little band proposed to carry on the beautiful work of Truth. As usual, each member reported at least one effort made since the last meeting, to present the subject of Koreshan Science to some outsider; questions asked by inquirers, and the best methods of interesting strangers, were carefully considered. Miss Allston, the President, in a few thoughtful words begged the members to mark each day by some word or act of loving service to the Leader whose whole life had been one long sacrifice for the sake of truth and humanity. She never thought she was sowing seed in a child’s heart, but here was Roy and his question as the result of her plea.

Mrs. Crofton put down her work—she was hemming table linen to send to the Co-operative Home in Chicago—and beamed encouragingly upon the boy.

“It is time to go to school now, Royal,” she said gently, “so we can’t talk any more about it this morning. Suppose you try to find out for yourself. You know Koreshan Science teaches us to answer our own questions. Watch all day, and tell me tonight what you found to do for the Master.”

“All right, mamma, good bye!” and Roy went skipping down the walk.

It was three o’clock in the afternoon, and the children in the third grade of the Emerson school were reciting in Geography. It must be confessed that the lesson was a failure, and Miss Marshall was rather cross—how could she help losing patience occasionally with fifty wriggling, restless little atoms on the alert to take advantage of an instant when the teacher’s eyes were turned?

“Attention there, boys! Jamie, don’t shuffle your feet. Helen, what are you laughing at? Come down and sit by my desk. Now Ned, what is the shape of the earth?”

“Round like a ball or an orange, and slightly flattened at the poles,” answered Ned glibly.

“That is right. I’m glad there is one boy in this class who has studied his lesson. I shall keep after school the next one who misses a question. Upon what side of the earth do we live?”

It was Roy’s turn next; he knew the answer in the book, but his mother had taken pains to explain to him the Cellular Cosmogony, how we really lived in a great cell or egg, although the man who wrote the Geography did not know it. Quick as a flash, it occurred to the boy that here was his opportunity. He hesitated a moment, only a moment, thinking how the children would laugh and how Miss Marshall would keep him after school; then, regardless of consequences, he answered bravely: “We live inside the earth.”

Yes, it was just as he expected; the children giggled, and Miss Marshall said sternly, “Royal Crofton will remain after school and study his Geography lesson.” It was too bad, when his sister had promised to take him to the Park if he came home early that night.

Roy put up his hand and began to speak eagerly; he wanted to explain that he knew the answer in the book, but Miss Marshall thought he was saucy and that made matters worse. She never allowed the children to answer back. There was a big lump in Roy’s throat; he put his head down on his desk and cried a little. By the time school was out, he felt better and was able to recite his lesson perfectly. When that question came again, he said: “Miss Marshall, I know it says in the book that we live on the outside of the earth, but my mother is a Koreshan, and she told me that we live inside, and the earth is a great egg.”

Miss Marshall stared in surprise. “What is a Koreshan?” she asked.

“Oh! its science, and it’s beautiful and it makes folks happy,” replied the boy rapturously, if rather vaguely. “And they do say we live inside the earth,” he repeated stoutly.

“But why do they say that?” inquired his teacher.

This was going beyond Roy's depth, but he plunged in boldly; "I don't know, ~~the~~ 'am, but I guess it's the 'air line.'"

The answer, so truthful, left Miss Marshall doubly mystified. It chanced, however, that she had lately been reading Bulwer Lytton's romance, and it immediately occurred to her that the novelist had located the coming race in the center of the earth; this invested the idea, for her, with a certain familiarity, though of course she regarded it only as a flight of the writer's imagination.

When Roy told his mother all about it that night, she said tenderly: "I hope, my son, that I shall always improve my opportunities as well as you have improved yours today." Then she wrote a note to send Miss Marshall, with a copy of "CELLULAR COSMOGONY," both of which Roy handed to his teacher the next morning. It is safe to say that she read the book with much interest, and then asked for more of the same literature; in fact, Roy's friends think that Miss Marshall is going to be a Koreshan too.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

CURRENT HISTORY is a great panorama of human life and activity; the scenes of the great events of the world pass before us as the great circle of time hastens in its revolution to the culmination. What ominous signs are presented to the view of the world's millions! The leaves of the great book of human history turn, one by one; the book is read and interpreted. One can read the symbols displayed in the great pages only as one understands the processes of linking the present and the future. The past and future are connected by the present; and the student of current history can receive the greatest benefit from contemplation of events which are now transpiring, through a scientific interpretation of the human world; and the correct interpretation of passing events is the business of the true Prophet. Every man voluntarily or involuntarily reaches conclusions as to what the result of the present conditions will be; there are thousands of incoherent speculations and irrational conclusions as to what the future will bring forth for humanity. Is there no way of determining absolutely whether the great future has happiness or misery in store for the world? Are the sufferings of humanity to increase or diminish? are questions of vital interest. We may take a problem in mathematics and determine accurately the product by calculation; certain mathematical relations must be known; certain mathematical laws and principles must be applied, for in no other way can accurate results be obtained. Are there corresponding processes involved in determining what the future products in the world of man will be? Koreshanity answers all such questions in the affirmative. Astronomy affords a notable illustration of the possibility of foreseeing the future scientifically. It is possible to predict eclipses for thousands of years to come, from the basis of observations of eclipses for three thousand years past. There are eclipse cycles, which must in time repeat the same phenomena. There is a specific relation existing between man and cosmos; events in human history transpire simultaneously with events in the various other kingdoms of the universe. The simultaneity of events in all planes of existence, demonstrates the relation of all events, the relation of every part in every plane to the whole, and to the Cause of the whole. The precessions in humanity correspond exactly with the precessions in the physical heavens. In the human world there is a great cycle of 24,000 years; the solar precessional cycle is of exactly the same length. All through the ages, the sun in its precession has marched westward through the great belt of the Zodiac, as the positive pole of civilization has passed westward through humanity. From a scientific and astronomical standpoint, we are able to locate in the near future a marvelous transformation in humanity and in the physical cosmos. Current history is susceptible of being interpreted rationally. Koreshanity is a system of scientific prophecy; the great Voice of humanity speaks to the world through current history; through the facts of the physical world; through the ominous signs in the physical heavens, and through the Man, declaring the approach of a New Era, preceded by a revolution, the border line of transition and transformation, beyond which will burst forth upon the world the brilliant Light of universal Day!

Race prejudice has broken out in the North. Race wars have been common enough in the South, where the interests of the white man have been in conflict with the interests of the Negro ever since the signing of the proclamation of emancipation. For the past twenty-five years, the North has sympathized with the Negro and has rejoiced in his freedom. The division of labor into two general classes is the cause of a new conflict. The labor unions have endeavored to monopolize the field of employment, just as the corporations have monopolized the field of commerce and of money. Whoever endeavors to antagonize the labor trusts endangers his life. This is demonstrated by events which have transpired in the northern states of the free American republic, where all citizens are supposed to possess equal rights. Negroes imported from the South to take the places of men who have broken their contracts and have ceased to work through effort to compel the employers to make concessions asked for by the agitators, have been shot down by men who hold cards of membership in the unions. These Negroes have not been shot down for crimes for which Negroes are tortured in the South, but because they have, in pursuit of their rights to obtain employment wherever possible, come North to fill the vacancies in the mines and foundries of the great corporations! We are on the verge of the great war of labor against itself; the war of labor against capital; the war of the forces which bind and oppress, and the forces of the bound and the oppressed. The conflict is inevitable; the present generation will enter the reign of terror!

The majority of the laboring men of the world do not own homes; they are continually building for others, and paying rent on the houses in which they live; they are producing food for others, and purchase food for themselves; they are manufacturing clothing, and go thinly clad themselves. They are laboring to enrich the few, and impoverishing themselves; they receive a mere pittance of what they earn. In the United States there are 19,000,000 working people, toiling to support themselves and the remaining 56,000,000, a few of which live in luxury, in the enjoyment of their accumulated millions of dollars. There is in America, a vast army toiling to produce what the greater army consumes and wastes. The present method of enslaving millions under oppressive conditions from which they are unable to extricate themselves, is a gigantic evil soon to be destroyed, — not by treaty, not by peaceful evolution of the new era, but through a conflict of forces, through a terrible revolution. Modern civilization is not sufficiently civilized to institute, for the purpose of providing for all the people, a system of equitable distribution of the wealth of the world. No government is true or just which permits such a stupendous system of stealing the products of industry by the few, as is protected by the laws of every civilized nation in the world !

We can read the character of the modern world in what it does and what it thinks about, and in the extremes to which it goes to satisfy abnormal appetites. We read degeneracy in the faces of the millions. The saloon and other institutions of debauchery exist because of the demands of an army of degenerates for means of dissipation. The daily press and other forms of sensational literature, supply the millions with substances that are impure. The decadence of the drama, and a corresponding decadence in literature and art, do not evince that progress, — that ability of mind and nobility of man which should characterize a truly civilized world. The quality of human life in the closing century of the Christian dispensation, is productive of the world's great fallacies. The optimists proclaim that the world is growing better ; but the facts contradict them, and attest on every hand that man is degenerating—rapidly failing and declining in very heart and mind, dying at the very tap-root of life ! Modern social reform will never remove these gigantic evils, nor cure humanity's maladies. Humanity must be rejuvenated from the center of conserved life, from the positive pole of intellectual strength and illumination. The tables must be turned, and the customs of the age revolutionized.

A speaker has said that the "God-made man is the original savage." We presume the idea is to impress upon the mind that the civilized man of the nineteenth century is a man-made improvement. The doctrine that the Almighty was not able to create a perfect man, pervades the school of "higher criticism." It is held that if man fell at all, he fell upward, contrary to the laws of gravitation; although the theory is that man has descended from the monkey. We might paraphrase the quotation and say, in accordance with the facts, that the man-made god of orthodoxy is an unnatural tyrant; and we are sure that if the modern man is not able to create a civilized god, he is not able to create a civilized man ! The true God is man-made—created and generated out of humanity. God is the true man; the first cause of all things is man. The degeneracy of man is productive of evil and fallacy, such as exist in the world today. The regenerate Man is the author of truth and good, and is coming again to enlighten the world and transform it.

"The greatest mystery in the universe is life. Every living organism is a mystery. The least worm of the dust is infinitely more wonderful than a whole universe of dead matter. By what strange power living beings appropriate matter whereby they grow and maintain their forms and their activities, no man has yet been able to understand." This is an admission of the failure of modern science to comprehend the functions of living forms; an admission that chemistry is unable to analyze the properties and qualities of life; an admission that the modern physiologist cannot comprehend the process of digestion. The discovery of what life is, has been left to the great Alchemist, who has solved the problems of being and existence. Koreshan Science reveals the mysteries of universal form and function, and defines the relations of spirit and matter, of mind and cosmos. When these relations are known, it is demonstrable that life does not originate in an unknown and unknowable being, but in the periodical involution of that which is comprehensible.

There is but one direction from the center of a circle, and that is outward to the circumference. There is a point of altitude in universal space in the physical cosmos where there is but one direction, and that point is at the great center of the great cell of the earth. When the highest point is reached, there is no direction but down. There are two places in the earth where there is no east nor west. At the exact north polar point there is no direction but south; at that point there is no east nor west, and no north. At the south pole there is no direction but north; at that point there is no east nor west, and no south. There is a point in human progress where it is impossible to go further without going down; that is the highest point in anthropotic altitude. There is a corresponding or antithetical point in human retrogression, which is the terminal point of descent; when that point is reached, it is impossible to experience further change without beginning to rise in the scale of human progress.

History records facts of revolutions in society, and rapid changes in the political world in the past. Great nations have reached the climax of their career, and have rapidly fallen from the dizzy heights of glory. Whole peoples have, through strange conspiracy of forces and events, sunken to planes of degradation and national shame. Is there an opposite process? Is there such a thing as the regeneration of humanity? There is if there is a process of degeneration. There come times in the history of the world, when all the forces of progress centralize and express themselves in the form of a great system of truth and life. The processes through which the absolute truth is expressed to the world in any cycle or dispensation, is Messianic. Nations have been destroyed in a day through the mistakes, weakness, and profligacy of rulers; and the time is rapidly approaching when the New Nation will be born in a day, through the wisdom, strength, and economy of the tangible King of kings !

With the influence of Japan upon China, through the new Chino-Japanese alliance, the division of China and the invasion of her territory by the British and the Russians, may be checked; but it is not to be supposed that the intrigue of nations to acquire territory and commercial supremacy in the East will cease. The gold god is persistent; if resistance is offered to seizing territory under a pretext, the commercial avenues are available, and through commercial piracy an empire may ultimately be as easily captured as by warfare; and the plan is now to obtain an "open door" to the resources of the Celestial empire. The new alliance of China and Japan has added another phase of intricacy to international problems; both the East and the West will be the battle-ground of nations in the great impending revolution. Events are rapidly focalizing forces in the two hemispheres; and many of these events belong to the field of American activity.

The democratic method of development of "truth" has proved a failure. A thousand irrational thinkers take assumed and unproven hypotheses, in as many different lines of human thought and research, and evolve a thousand different theories. The thousand fragments originating in a thousand minds which have been concentrated on specific parts without a knowledge of relation of the parts to the whole, have not sufficient harmony and coherence to form a great system of truth. The genuine system of the whole truth must come through one mind with sufficient mental ability, acumen, and penetration, to reach the confines of the universe, through analytical and analogical deductions from a known fact or premise. No great system of philosophy has ever come to the world in fragments; and no system of absolute science can come except through the ingenuity of one man—the man who involves the universe.

The man who does not join in the worship of the golden god today, is considered indolent, eccentric, or insane. Nineteen hundred years ago, Jesus enjoined the young man to keep the commandments and sell all that he possessed and give the proceeds to the poor. Had he followed such a course he would have been a hero. Recently a young man, James Eads How, grandson of the famous engineer who built the great steel bridge at St. Louis, Mo., renounced his personal fortune and handed the mayor of St. Louis a check for $1,000,000, with instructions that he cash it and expend the money for the benefit of the poor. The mayor considered his act an insane one, and refused to accept the money. Mr. How refuses to spend the money for himself on the ground that he did not earn it, and therefore has no moral right to it. He will devote the million to popular, unscientific philanthropy.

The men who head the trusts have discovered that co-operation is better than competition; they are demonstrating the truth of the old maxim, "In union there is strength." Where men co-operate, greater results may be obtained from a given amount of energy than through the struggles of competition. The evils of the trusts result from the co-operation of hundreds of thousands of people for the benefit of the few. At the present time the trust is one-sided; it is a monopoly for the accumulation of wealth, without the co-ordinate and necessary distribution of the products of industry. The wealth of the world goes to the great money centers and remains there; this process impoverishes the millions. The blessings of co-operation will come when all the men who co-operate to produce the goods of commerce, come to enjoy the fruits of their labor.

It is said that the Filipinos are a liberty-loving people. All savages are liberty-loving—so are criminals; but they love the kind of liberty that is not compatible with the safety of the individual, which true liberty guarantees. No man has the right to do as he pleases, if what he pleases to do endangers the liberty and life of his neighbor. True liberty is movement in accordance with immutable law. There is not a planet nor a star in the physical heavens that has the liberty to move in any other direction than in its orbit. The true form of government of humanity will place each man in his own orbit of progress; not until then will humanity enjoy that harmony that is productive of health, wealth, and happiness.

One hundred thousand people in the state of New York are supported by charitable institutions; and there is a proportionate number of the homeless and helpless in all other states of the Union. A vast army has fallen victims of the competitive system of industry and commerce. In New York alone, there are nearly 25,000 people who are insane; while in the heart of Africa, the percentage of the insane is about one hundred times less than in civilized America! Modern civilization is attended by crimes and curses which will culminate judgments and woes in the throes of revolution.

Modern charity is a farce. Hundreds of thousands of people are rendered helpless and homeless through the merciless clamor for wealth. After all has been stolen from the enslaved, it is considered the highest form of philanthropy to donate a few stolen millions for the support of charitable institutions in order that the homeless, who ought to be in the enjoyment of the luxuries of life in common with all peoples, may become dependent, in a state of humiliation, upon the graces and charity of the more fortunate!

The people of the world are looking for new ways of doing things; but they desire new ways of doing things for the same old purposes. When the real new ways of doing things supplant the old, they will accomplish new things for new purposes. Man needs to know how to think, how to be happy and contented, and how to become rejuvenated with the energies of life. The new ways are coming; they are scientific; and when applied will make a new humanity, a New World!

It is not considered dishonorable for union workmen to take the places of non-union men wherever possible; but it is considered a crime for non-union men to take the place of union workmen, when the union man throws down his tools and refuses to work! The tyrannical power of the unions is manifest in their methods the world over;—in the strikes, and in the persecution and murder of non-union men who seek to be employed by whomsoever is willing to utilize their skill.

The great body of humanity must have a head which contains the consciousness of the whole. The plant produces its seed in accordance with the same law by which humanity involves itself in the Seed-man. There is a specific fruit borne at the end of every twelfth division of the great Mazzarothic year. We are now at the end of a dispensation; the old church and state must pass away; the new church and state, the kingdom of God, must take the place of the old.

It is not always wise to move in the direction of least resistance; the politician and the preacher pursue this course. It is sometimes necessary to stem the current of popular opinion and prejudice for the sake of truth; and only the true Reformer is able to endure until actual success is accomplished.

If the wheels of American progress turn on the axis of scientific, religious, and economic revolution, they auto-mobilize in the direction of the goal of true liberty and life.

America has expanded its territory during the past year, and has done well; if its people have correspondingly enlarged their mental scope, they have done better.

America has ordered the killing of the fatted calf at New York to celebrate the return of Admiral Dewey from the far country of the Philippines.

If we were to accept the premise of the anti-imperialists, we might conclude that the positive pole of human liberty is located in the Philippines!

The greatest display of genuine palmistry will be in reading the palms of victory in the hands of those who overcome death in the natural world.

It is better to know the true solution of a problem, than to investigate all of the opinions and theories of those who have not solved it.

"It is better to be wise than to be fortunate." Very good; but the man who is wise is more fortunate than all others.

Both the farmers and the capitalists water their stock, and worship the golden calf.

The sins of the world will not be expiated until the golden calf is sacrificed.

Perseverance in the right direction is the secret of genuine success.

The mind is the superior half of the world.

Originality is greater than imitation.

Truths are the riches of the mind.

Mental Scientists and the Science of Immortality.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Admitting immortality to be possible only in the biune state, what law prevents the mental scientists from making such physiological and anatomical changes in the human structure necessary to immortality? They are practically demonstrating the power of thought to change form; and holy desire formed an externally biune being capable of bringing to birth a Son of God nineteen hundred years ago. If the divine seed or spirit was planted in all, or a part of humanity, it would seem that now the inherent power and desire for immortality would be more effective in changing form and life than at the time Jesus came into the world. I am not considering a Messiah for this age unnecessary; but I want a clearer comprehension of the Messianic law, and ability to distinguish between the true and the false mental science; for there seems to be truth in mental science in harmony with Koreshan Science.—A READER.

Previous to the coming of Jesus, three great men appeared in the world, each having a specific function which contributed to the production of the Son of God in humanity nineteen hundred years ago. These three men were Abraham, Moses, and Elijah. The matured fruit of all progress during the Jewish dispensation was one perfect man, in possession of the perfect truth in the degree corresponding to the quality of life manifest in him. There were in Jerusalem at the time of Jesus, thousands of people who had descended from Abraham; they were people to whom Moses and Elijah ministered. Now what hindered these thousands from attaining to the same state of immortal existence to which Jesus attained? Were they not Jews? Had they not been taught by the prophets, and ministered unto by the priests? We will tell you what hindered them: There could not be two or more positive poles of the absolute truth at the same time.

The life of Jesus was poured out upon a group of progressive people; not such as already possessed life corresponding to the life Jesus had, but such as possessed certain faculties of perception of the truth he preached, and became receptive to his influence; they constituted, under his direction and work, a great battery of life when he went into them. The substances they received have come down through the age in specific channels; and at the end of the dispensation, involution of truth and life in one personality is just as inevitable as it was nineteen hundred years ago. The energies to produce the great transformation in the harvest, must reach a point of positive polation in the Medium of transposition of the life of the old dispensation to the temples of the new age. Truth and life must enter into unity in the one center of elaboration, ere the immortal state is reached.

Truth in the spiritual degree was manifest in Swedenborg; but he did not attain to immortality, because he did not possess the life. Life, in its progress toward the point of involution, was manifest in Ann Lee; but she did not attain to immortality, because she did not possess the truth,—the knowledge requisite to the application of the laws of life. When the truth and the life appear in conjunction in one personality, then the necessary substances unite and ultimate in the science of life—the knowledges of what transformations are necessary to the attainment of immortality in the flesh. That which hinders so called mental scientists from reaching this state is the total absence of both truth and life in them.

The modern mental scientists deny the necessity of a Messiah; and the doctrines they promulgate are decidedly anti-Messianic. They disregard the very principles and laws upon which immortality depends; and moreover, they do not know what immortality is. This is evident from the fact that every one of the numerous plagiarists of the Koreshan doctrine of the possibility of attainment of immortality in the natural world, expect to live right on in the present segmented condition, in dual forms. It is thought that each man may, independently of all others, become immortal, merely by asserting himself to be immortal, or by so applying the mind to the subject as to gradually grow into the immortal condition. Is there any idea of polarity in such a hope? Has such a theory a demonstrated premise? Have these people a knowledge of the laws which perpetuate the universe? Do they know the origin and destiny of man, and the laws by which the universe is created? We would answer most emphatically and positively, No!

The processes of attainment of immortality must be accompanied by positive knowledge of what man's destiny is, before he can determine his objective point. The mental scientists deny that God is personal; they hold that he is incapable of becoming a man; that he never appears as a Messiah; and if their conclusions were true, they should expect, in becoming immortal, that they should not be in the natural state, but in the state in which God is supposed to be—an infinite spirit; for if God is not immortal man, how, in attaining to the Godhood, could man be immortal? You see the inconsistency of endeavoring to make the Koreshan doctrine of immortality fit in with previous, occult conceptions of metaphysicians!

Koreshans are not under the spell of the unscientific delusion, that viduals or divided beings can become immortal in the divided state. The transformation is decidedly radical; and every man who reaches immortality, must do so in obedience to immutable law; by entering the fires of theocrasis or burning up of the body; by entering into conjunction, through functions of divine Maternity, with co-ordinate qualities of life necessary to complete the man and make him whole—biune. Every man reaching the immortal state must do so through being born into that state; and at the end of this dispensation that birth is from the plane in which the divine mind has been operative during the age—in the soul; consequently, projection or materialization from the one Medium of divine maternal functions, obtains. We do not believe that there can be two supreme divine Fathers at the same time, any more than there can be two central suns in the universe. We can scientifically demonstrate the utter impossibility of there being two or more personalities of the divine Motherhood performing the same functions at the same time. There is no way to immortality but through the one way,—in obedience to scientific law; and there is no power in heaven or in earth by which man can reach immortality except through knowledge of what the laws of immortality are; and the science of immortality is not taught in any other school of thought than Koreshanity. Koreshanity is strictly Messianic; it would be absolutely worthless if it were not.

Viewing Divergent Perpendiculars with the Telescope.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—An Adventist preacher, whom I have met, denies the Koreshan claim that the earth is concave, and asserts that he has been a student of astronomy for twenty years, and that it has often been proven by the telescope that perpendiculars diverge as they rise from the earth. This, he said, was proven by taking observations of some star or planet at different points on the earth's surface. Is this true?—S.H., Concord Wash.

The telescope, in the eyes of most people, is a miraculous instrument, which fills them with wonder! To the ignorant, it is a kind of machine-gun, behind which they endeavor to protect themselves from logical arguments concerning the form of the earth. Many people claim to be able to see ghosts with the naked eye; but the feat is certainly outdone by the man who is able to view, with the telescope, intangible perpendicular lines extending into the physical heavens!

The Adventist preacher may consider himself able to deny that the earth is concave; but his propositions betray the fact that he does not even understand the popular system, else he would know that there is not a single star, visible either to the naked eye or through the telescope, that presents the slightest horizontal parallax. A few stars have an annual parallax or shift, but always less than a second of arc.

Suppose we take into consideration the parallax of the moon. The moon presents a horizontal parallax of 57'—the greatest parallax of any object observable in the physical heavens. When the moon has shifted the angular distance of 57' from its apparent place when observed directly from a point beneath the moon, how does the astronomer know whether that angular distance of 57' is greater or less than 57' of space upon the earth's surface? On the basis of the supposition that perpendiculars diverge from a convex earth having a diameter of 7,935 miles, he concludes that the moon is about 240,000 miles from the earth. If the perpendiculars converge above us in the center of the concave earth, the moon's parallax or shift, when translated into the terms of miles, would be a less amount of space than a corresponding number of minutes of a degree upon the earth. There is not a man living that knows anything about the old system, who would for a moment claim that observations of lunar parallax prove that perpendiculars diverge from the earth. The astronomers assume that they do, and make calculations from that basis.

It would be well if those of our readers who have not been educated in the old school astronomy, would purchase a standard text-book on astronomy, and satisfy themselves concerning the methods employed by the professional astronomer. Our readers could then instantly refute the claims of demagogues and braggadocios who know nothing about the old system. A great difficulty encountered in the promulgation of the Koreshan Astronomy, is the prevailing ignorance of the people concerning the system which we overthrow. The Koreshan System accounts for all astronomical phenomena, and accepts all facts of astronomical observation; these facts cannot be used as the basis of objection against the Koreshan System, except by those who have not given the Koreshan Astronomy sufficient thought to see how they are applied. The old system is a perversion of the truth; the facts of astronomical observation find their true place in the system that is absolutely true—the System that is susceptible of absolute demonstration.

Mystic Masonry.

PART II.

The Problem of Death and Resurrection in the Church and Masonic Orders.

JOSIAH GROSS, in "The Square and Compass," New Orleans, La.

IN THE church we have limbo; in the Order, the north gate,—places where the spirit descends into spiritual darkness. The church professes to resurrect this spirit body in its identical mundane form in the spirit world, but it would appear that we resurrect not only the spirit in the spirit world, but also the body in this world. The mystic Masons formed a circle and united in prayer, which brought about a condition of harmony and magnetic polarity; and under these conditions they professed to materialize an astral body in the form of the deceased, who communicated a substitute word. For what reason the widow's son did not communicate the word, does not appear. Perhaps their spook was not the genuine Hiram. From Masonic esotericism, it would seem that the return of the perfected body that went out by the north gate, is imperative to a final return of the truth.

The church which is satisfied with the spirit form has wandered far away. It is the return of the material body, the transmutation of a corruptible cell to that of an immortal cell, the translation without intervening death, the overcoming of desire, the circumscribing of the passions, for which we give appropriate symbols to the initiate, that hold the true secret that has been lost. It is a question of physical immortality. Did the widow's son come only in spirit? Or did he come at the supreme moment, though the flesh cleaved from the bone, with apparent physical perfection in response to the prayer of beseeching humanity? Jesus said: A "spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." He was not a spirit, but himself in his habiliments. Was the act of Solomon a conjuration of the Master Magician, a vision drawn to satisfy or mystify the brethren? or was it a true natural body, such as Jesus said he had? If the latter, why a substitute word? But that was lost; the attempt to restore the natural body to life was a failure. Solomon did not do it, the secret was lost to him in the death of the widow's son.

We may here digress from the main subject for a little while, and question the nature of the Philosopher's Stone and the Elixir of Life. Let us suppose, by way of elucidation, that the process might be something like this, and to illustrate, we must draw from the theories of the spiritualists, theosophists, Buddhists, and others: We live a day, sleep a night, live a life, sleep a life. Life on the earth plane is succeeded by one in Devachan, the spirit plane, the illusory dreamland, preparatory to reincarnation. Then again, the type of the natural world becomes the type of the human world. There is the law of seed-time and harvest. The seed is implanted, grows, blooms, and returns to seed. It is the law of reincarnation of the wheat. There is a persistence of vital force in the seed. There is an immaterial dynamis present, which causes the human ovum to build for itself a new body. It is not chance, it is law. The force of man does not manifest itself in the cow. The specific dynamis of the acorn will appropriate matter to form the oak tree. Plant a peach-seed beside it, and from the same material that produced the oak, there comes the peach tree.

There is something beyond the inherent energy of mere matter. It is not possible that under the same conditions there could be different results. Life never came but from pre-existent life. Should it so happen that it is not necessary to reincarnate the seed of man, but to live on a thousand years as the ancients did, to do that requires a perception of a secret. That secret is to know wherein consists the dynamis of the human cell, so that when its life is feeble it may be restored indefinitely. Science, while it demonstrates that the body may survive fifteen hundred years' continual use, has not neared the secret of the essential dynamis of the peach-stone. The cells clog up and we die. How to maintain a spiritual force so that renewal may go on for a long time, is the secret. For with it is the secret of the transmutation of this cell to immortality. With small dynamis we live but few years, the well-spring is feeble. Anciently, it was very strong, and was acquired by a physical process. What was it?

Probably, we might get an idea of the process by the following hypothesis: Daily, we get hydrocarbons from burnt bread or cake; proteids of meat and eggs supply nitrogen; we drink hydrogen and oxygen every day; the individual elements alone are not poisonous, but they are when combined. The atoms of the body are in continual motion, and nerve terminals recognize and are affected by molecular movements. An alkaloid absorbed into circulation reaches a nerve terminal, and its impress is made there by its molecular motion. Should the quantity be so great that the molecular motion continues to irritate the nerve terminals, the physiological effect will be superemphasized and we have poisoning. If, however, we could so regulate the flowing stream of life that there never could be superemphasis, life might go on forever.

Now, this type of resurrection in Masonry is a type of the hereafter, but more excellently a type of the reinvigoration of life on this plane. "I will myself descend into the grave"—and without failure, had he known the real secret, he would have brought forth the widow's son. Jesus, under similar circumstances would have brought forth the natural Hiram. Probably a resurrection under these conditions was the assembling together of magnetic aura circulating in an astral body, what theosophists call a kama-rupa, which would be very effective for spectacular purposes, but would hardly bring the true word, for the kama-rupa is not the true ego, and has none of its knowledge.

In the Field of Koreshan Propaganda.

Weekly Synopsis of Topics Discussed by Koreshan Lecturers.

Koreshan Hall, 316 W. 63d St., Chicago.

MONDAY EVENING, Sept. 18.—Lecture by Prof. U. G. Morrow, on Koreshan Astronomy. Notwithstanding the fact that this was the initial lecture of a series, the attendance was large, and every seat filled. The lecturer dwelt more particularly upon the unsolved problems of modern astronomy (see July number of McClure's). Koreshans do not dispute the facts, but the assumptions, of modern astronomy. Astronomers study parts of the universe, without comprehending their orderly arrangement into an organic whole, and reach fallacious conclusions. For illustration: seven blind men once attended the menagerie. They requested the keeper to show them the elephant, as they had never seen it. Accordingly, he stationed them at the trunk, tusks, ears, legs, and tail, respectively, of the animal in question. Later, one of the blind men was interrogated as to whether they had seen the elephant. "Oh yes! it is like a snake, and one end is so funny. There are two holes that it blows through." "Not so," replied the man at the tusks. "It is like a club, for did I not feel it, myself?" A third averred that it was like a fan; several of them, that it was large and cylindrical, like a tree trunk; and the man at the tail was equally positive that the elephant resembled a whip. Modern astronomers have an elephant on their hands. What will they do with it?

The Copernican system was logically refuted on the ground of its palpable absurdities and inconsistencies; it was shown to contradict known facts and laws of physics; and has become the basis of modern theological fallacies and illogical attacks of "higher criticism" of the Bible.

SATURDAY EVENING, Sept. 16, 63d and Halsted sts.—Subject: "Social Purity." A marked contrast was shown between the Koreshan concept of purity and the almost universal rottenness of the present social fabric. The speaker then requested all who considered themselves physically perfect, to raise their hands; but not a hand was seen. It was then shown that through ignorant violation of the laws of life humanity was rapidly deteriorating, and unless those days be shortened no flesh could be saved. The meeting was well attended, and intense interest was manifested.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 20.—Meeting began at State and Adams sts., with large attendance, but police compelled us to move to a point below Jackson St. While free speech cannot be absolutely forbidden in this "land of liberty," there seems to be a concerted action between police and property owners to accomplish that end, but by different methods. Speakers are being driven farther south each week, until eventually they will find themselves forced out of town on the installment plan!

The subject of the evening was: "Trusts, the Legitimate Outcome of Democracy." Mention was made of the recent Anti-Trust Convention in Chicago. Here were assembled people from all parts of the country, for the purpose of annihilating trusts. What was accomplished? Absolutely nothing; for the reason that there was no unanimity of action upon any line. The time is ripe for a Leader to appear: a Moses, in whom the people can polarize, and who is able to lead them out of the competitive wilderness. He is here!—ALLEN H. ANDREWS, Reporter.

SPECIAL.—We open this new department of THE FLAMING SWORD in the interest of the Koreshan propaganda work everywhere; and we request concise items of interest from Koreshan workers in the field. Brief reports of all meetings of branch Assemblies of the Society Arch-Triumphant, special lectures, and items of interest from canvassers are solicited. The Flaming Sword's High Class Exchanges.

The Saturday Evening Post.—We are pleased to announce that this weekly magazine of extraordinary merit is being enlarged from a 16-page to a 24-page weekly, with double number every fourth week. The Fall Fiction number will have a handsome colored cover, and 32 pages of short stories and entertaining articles by well-known and popular writers. It will be on all news stands September 28; the price remains the same—5 cents a copy. As the Post is now published, it certainly stands among the very best publications in the world. The copies which come to our office are eagerly sought and read by a number of our people. Those of our readers who desire an extraordinarily clean and choice weekly, will find it in the Post. It is not a newspaper; it is not of the sensational order. Every one who reads it comes in close touch with the very best popular thought of the world. The contents of each number are highly entertaining, and we are promised that future numbers will surpass anything yet published. Address, Curtis Publishing Co., 425 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa. The subscription per year is $2.50.

Leslie's Weekly.—The home-coming of Admiral Dewey is the principal subject of illustration in the current number of Leslie's Weekly—together with the magnificent preparations being made for his welcome; especially the Triumphal Arch, which the nation's greatest sculptors and artists are erecting in New York City. A particularly attractive feature is the full-length, double-page, 9-color portrait of Admiral Dewey. The entire gallery of photographs in the current issue is superb, inclusive of a spicy page of photographs by amateurs. One can intelligently join in the Dewey celebration by obtaining a copy of the Dewey number of Lentie's Weekly.

Teachers' World.—A 48-page monthly magazine, published for the benefit of teachers of common school branches. Its suggestions are very practical and helpful in the daily work of those who have pupils in charge. It is used in the Koreshan school at Estero, Fla. Each number contains lessons on drawing, penmanship, mathematics, geography, etc.; besides a large pictorial supplement of great industries of the world. $1.00 per year. Bemis Pub. Co., 13 Astor Place, New York City.

Printers' Ink.—A 48-page weekly journal for advertisers, endorsed by the leading advertisers of the world. It is published by experts in unique advertising matter and displays. It is invaluable to all who have anything to advertise, because it gives the key-notes to successful advertising in all branches of business. The fact that it has an enormous circulation at $5.00 per year subscription, is proof of its value. Geo. P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce Street, New York City.

Success.—The issue for September 23 is filled with first-class attractions; the first page is a beautiful picture of Columbia crowning the Victor of Manila Bay; and the illustrated stories of Admiral Dewey as told by his men, covering four pages: are very appropriate. Other features are, How to Succeed as a Physician; America in the Far East; Familiar Talks; Editorials; Questions of the Hour, etc. $1.50 yearly. Cooper Union, New York City.

The Hesperian.—A quarterly illustrated literary magazine, at 50 cents a year. It is at the opposite pole to sensational journalism; it strikes out on new lines, and possesses some literary merit. The principal articles in the October-December number are: The Greater America Exposition at Omaha; the Influence of Commerce upon Language; Is Literature Remunerative? Published at 7th and Pine streets, St. Louis, Mo.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. CO., 4006 Grand Boulevard Chicago, Ill.

The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural, in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity, Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follies. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

A few of the above 2-cent pamphlets are out of print, and a few new ones not mentioned are substituted. If any are missing in packages received it is because we cannot now supply them. List will be revised next week.

The Organ and Function of Individuality.

Part IV.

Individuality is the Undividedness of Mental and Physiological Observation and Function; Laws of Universal Polarity; Supreme Function of Individuality is Messianic.

THE FUNCTION of respiration in the body may be taken as illustrative of the function of respiration in the brain and in the mind. The pneumogastric nerve is the nerve of respiration. Some of its branches communicate with the lungs, and constitute the channels of communication with the head. Not only does the atmosphere of oxygen and nitrogen penetrate the cells of respiration in the lungs, but the venous blood, as well, enters the substance of the lungs from the heart; hence we have the common pneuma and psyche blending, that is, the air and blood commingling in the parenchyma of the lungs, in the function of respiration. Through this physiological operation another pneuma—distinct from the inhaled and exhaled air—obtains, namely, the spirit or energy generated in that process of combustion which destroys the white and dark blood cells in the lungs, marries them, and creates the arterial cells. This is taken up by the pneumogastric nerve and conveyed to the cells of the brain, communicating to these cells the physiological energy of the momentum of encephalic respiration. The union taking place in the brain cells by their respiratory function generates another pneuma, while at the same time and by the same operation, a higher psyche is also generated. (It would be impossible to pursue the study of psychology independently of the study of pneumatology, as the spirit of the nerve is generated at the point where the blood has its origin.) From the foregoing, it will be noticed that psychic (soul) and pneumatic (spirit) phenomena are in no sense identical. They are as essentially distinct as are the blood, and the energies generated in the production of the blood.

The Deeper Pneumatic and Psychic Phenomena Have Their Origin in the Sub-Membranous Cells of the Cortex.

The under lamina of the cortical substance sustains the same axillary, polar, and equatorial relations as does the external cortex, with the exception of the inverse action of the frontal and occipital cells; the frontal being sensory, and the occipital, motory in their relation to physiological action. The submembranous cortex does not derive its serum directly from the terminal ramifications of the arterial system, which distributes its supply through the pia mater to the external cells. The alchemical elaboration which takes place in the outer lamina transmits a greatly refined essence to the submembranous area, and also discharges—by induction—the magneto-electricity generated in the external cortex. The student should never lose sight of the fact that every mental phenomenon, whether belonging to the external or internal mind, has its origin in and depends upon the elaborations of the gray matter or cortical substance of the encephalon. It may be well here to emphasize the reiteration, that the cell is the location of the invisible, which is the subjective world; and that without the existence of the brain itself, the spiritual world could in no wise obtain. This fact must include the inference that the material and spiritual domains are necessarily coexistent.

In our analysis of the character and location of the occult world, we define the groundwork of its habitation and the spheres of its activity. The laws governing psychic or phenomenal subjective powers involve the creation of poles, axes, and zones or equators of form and motion. These include the principles and laws of organic unity. We are justified (in view of the difficulty that the ordinary mind has in comprehending these profound and newly-enunciated truths) in a restatement of the difference between the phenomenal possibilities of mental power as individualized, and as aggregated and exemplified in organic unity. We will use the illustration of the steel bar, which we have so often employed to designate the difference between the polarity of the atom and the polarity of the mass. Each atom of the piece of steel is a magnet, independently and exclusively. The bar has no aggregate magnetic force that can be utilized, because the atoms of the mass are not polarized upon a focal aggregation of atoms. Though every atom in the bar is a minute magnet of itself, its magnetic energy is dissipated because of a want of polarization. The atoms of the steel are alive and constantly moving. Their movement produces friction, and friction invariably generates magnetism. Sweep a lodestone over the bar, or relate it to a swiftly-moving body, and it becomes magnetic. It is not because new magnetic power has been imparted to the bar, but because the positive sides of all the atoms are unitized upon a central point in the bar, by which means the magnetic energy of the atoms, which before was dissipated, is now collected into the magnetic vortex. The steel bar has become a magnet, and its magnetism can be utilized.

Messianic power resides in the comprehension, utilization, and application of this principle, as one of the factors of the salvatory law. A partial knowledge of the laws of universal mental polarity, that is, the determination of a vortex of aggregate mental energy (force derived into a vortex from many mental sources), results in obtaining miraculous powers, diabolic in proportion to the evils of the minds thus partially polarized; for thousands of subjective minds may form a vortex of magical powers, while the external mind remains individualized. So called christian science furnishes an example of the vortical force of that subjective mental display, in which the external individualism of its adherents is maintained, while the pneumo-psychic mind has its general vortex. Comparatively few of the christian science devotees would be willing to admit that they are following blindly the self-constituted female christ, yet the subtle and subjective mind, or the spiritual world of a certain sphere of spiritual entities, makes the mind of the champion plagiarist of the world the vortical point of their mental determinations; in other words, the spirits of a given sphere have made this center the central pole of their efforts to counterfeit one of the particular lines of the miracles of the Lord, when here in earth nineteen hundred years ago.

The supreme function of individuality (undividedness) comes into the exercise of its full powers, when the subjective cortex throughout the entire field of the encephalon, opens to the voluntary and co-ordinate union of reciprocal activity with the external cortex; and then only, when this double field shall concentrate its electro-magnetic force onto the sincipital pole of cerebral energy. Individuality, under the exercise of its supreme and divine use, beholds the grouping of all the distinctive phases of form and active manifestation as a universal unity. It sees all forms correlated to all other forms, so that in the aggregate manifestation of form there exists but one form, with its correlate and universal function. In humanity, it beholds the imperial possibility of an external and central Majesty, with the human race as one consummately organized body, wherein obtains the order of supremacy in which the temple of God stands conspicuously forth as the divine habitation—God inresident and supremely reigning, with another subordinate humanity in the line of progress through hundreds of gradations of irresponsible but subdominant consociations.

Individuality is the undividedness of mental and physiological observation and function. The physiological action of individuality, as operative directly upon the stomach, is to reduce the ingesta to homogeneity, while the direct physiological action of form upon the duodenum, is to reform or recreate the cell in the secretion called chyle, for the ingestion of the alimentary canal. This has its correspondence in universals; for the Messianic office is that of individuality, the aggregation of the coming race into homogeneity, thence through the formate or creative process, to reorganize the social fabric through formulating the firstfruits of the resurrection of the dead. Individuality in specials and universals performs the initiatory step in the physiological progress of digestion and assimilation.

God is not come in miracle now, but in science. He comes now, not to perform works by laws known to himself, which he cannot disclose to the people, but he comes to declare the science and to remove the wonder or astonishment, through a revelation of the principles of spiritual life and their scientific unfoldment.

Structure and Function of the Human Brain.

Part V.

Analysis of the Processes of the Generation of Thought ; Vito-Alchemical Elaboration of Complex Essences Producing Corresponding Complex Forces of the Mind.

THE CORTICAL prominences of the cerebrum, as mapped out, defined, and regulated by the circumscribings of the sulci, comprise as many specific poles as there are determinations of fiber originating on those portions of summittal pia mater attached to the arachne, and terminating at the other gyral pole—the corpus striatum. The cortical summit is one pole, and the striatum is the other, of one kind of fiber. The crossings of the furrows at the bottom of the grooves or valleys, comprise one set of poles of another kind of fiber, and the striatum, again, the other pole of the same kind. The consideration of this part of our subject is so important a factor in the exposition of the laws of those morphologic transitions involving life from death, that, though seemingly prolix, we ask for indulgence while entering upon a repetition of statement regarding the general division of the cortex into the two specified kinds of corpuscle or cell substance.

All cells located on the summits of the gyri or convolutions are magneto-electric, and are those with which the arachne mediately communicates through the pia mater. These cells, located in the sides and bottoms of the grooves, and which are separated from the arachne because this membrane extends across the indentations from summit to summit, are electro-magnetic. Magnetism is the stimulus of the summittal cell, and electric energy the product of the stimulus. Electricity is the stimulus of the cells forming the sides and valleys of the gyri, and magnetic energy is the product of this stimulus. In the one set of cells the magnetic force is the impulse; in the other set, the impulse is in the electric force. The first is the expansile, and the second is the contractile force;—magnetism corresponding to heat, and electricity to light. That portion of the cortex forming the summits is dominantly cardiacal (pulsatory), and that forming the sides and the valleys, dominantly respiratory (breathing). It is well here not to make the mistake of supposing the two sets of cells to be distinctively breathing and beating cells;—the two properties unite in both. It is not enough for the reader to acquaint himself with the fact of these differences. The cause of the difference is the more important factorem.

The results of the modifications exhibited in the above noted differences of quality in cortical substance, may be observed in the body as the respiratory processes of the lungs and pulsatory processes of the heart. The heart and the lungs, in the language of symbolism, are the expressions in the body of the two fundamental principles of being, as inresident with the mind and located in the brain. In the heart is exhibited the beating impulse, and in the lungs, the slowly expanding and contracting power. Both motions are the results of a central process of combustion or burning; and the two qualities of energy upon which the two distinctive motions depend, proceed from the single action in which they have their origin. This action may be expressed in one word, fire. All forces or energies have their origin in fire, or in a process of combustion. This has its thousand-fold degrees, beginning with the most external form, and ending with the internal fires of the mind, where love (heat) and wisdom (light) are generated.

“IN GOD we trust,” is the inscription upon the two representations of the money standard of America—gold and silver. How well the power—unconsciously to the mind directing the location of the device—knew where to lodge the pole of human aspiration, and fix the climax of human love! Sure enough, the god of this world has received this crowning inscription, and the trusts of America—trusting in this god of their glory—fulfil to the letter the consummation of the curse which must inevitably follow upon the violation of the injunction, “Ye shall not make with me gods of silver, neither shall ye make unto you gods of gold.” The exaltation of the gold standard to the summit of the heart’s desire, is the final act in the consummate subtlety of the great serpent (commercial wisdom), which fulfils again the fin de siecle in the drama of a false pursuit of human happiness. The destiny of declension closes in the exaltation of this god of greed, this conjurer of the soul, to the sanctum sanctorum of modern worship; and the prescience of the quickened intellect may observe and wait yet a little longer at the watch tower of circumspection, the finale of the great tragedy.

“The love of money is the root of all evil,” therefore the destruction of the money power comes as the inevitable consequence of the sweeping whirlwind of the divine vengeance, in advance of the coming footsteps of the Son of man, who, as the conquering hero and personal manifestation of righteousness, fulfils the destiny of the race in its restoration to the kingdom of the immaculate sonship of divine regeneration.

The Mirrors of a Degenerate World.

The Daily Press Reflects the Spirit of a Corrupt Generation ; It is a Potent Factor of Evil in the Hand of the Money Power.

THERE IS no greater force for evil than the daily press of the country. Its rottenness is so apparent, that where an honest publisher and editor are found, they invariably corroborate this sweeping statement. There are few who dare assail it, because once under its ban, there is no justice nor mercy for the offender against its liberty to defame and vilify. While the money question is the only incentive to action, virtue cannot be found to constitute a characteristic of its enterprise. We speak not merely from observation. Twenty-five years of personal experience with the daily press of the world, has afforded us abundant opportunity to discern the motives which actuate the newspaper fraternity. While making the sweeping declaration concerning the daily press in general, we do not deny the exceptions to the general rule. We compliment the honest newspaper man, for he must certainly bear all the distinctions of the hero. Blood and thunder can possess no more terrors for him than the antipathy of a great newspaper, whose circulation extends into the hundreds of thousands daily, and whose editor does not hesitate to destroy the reputation of any man who dares to offend, or who may come under the influence of his malevolence.

There are some who will take issue with the above assertions, on the common ground that the press is so often found exerting its influence in the interests of justice,—as in the case of Dreyfus, who does not know that the daily press of the world, outside of his enemies in France, has been persistent and uniform in its determination to secure justice to one whom the world regards as an innocent man! Let us analyze somewhat critically the motives and the forces behind them, which have actuated the press of the world in his behalf. If it be merely the principle of disinterested justice that has called forth the mental energy in the display of eloquence and rhetoric, employed the talent of thousands of reporters, and turned the machinery of hundreds of publishing houses throughout the world, why has it not displayed an equal vigor in the case of Mrs. Maybrick, who was condemned in England under as uncertain testimony as that which convicted Dreyfus? Captain Dreyfus was the son of a member of one of the millionaire firms of Alsace, whose relation to the Jewish world gave them great influence. It is a fact that the Jews of the world not only constitute the heart of the money power, but the daily press of the world is largely, either directly or indirectly—influenced by the Jews. This is absolutely the secret of the direction of the press in the Dreyfus affair.

We regard Captain Dreyfus an innocent man, because we have seen no evidence of his guilt, and because there are unmistakable evidences of the guilt of others; and in this country, according to the theory of justice supposed to be operative, every man is innocent of crime in the eyes of the law until proven guilty. There are thousands of innocent men under condemnation, whose sufferings are as great, and where the principles of justice are as greatly violated as in this case; but the money is not in it for the daily press fraternity. The great daily papers of the world do not work for nothing, and millionaire press corporations do not accumulate their millions in legitimate newspaper work any more than any other department of corporate thievery.

We have been persecuted by the daily press, the same press which has denounced the court in the Dreyfus trial, because it refused testimony favorable to the accused. This press has taken the testimony of our enemies, and spread it broadcast throughout the world. It has eagerly sought and concocted sensational matter, regardless of truth, because it has thought it popular to berate us, and has never manifested honor enough to allow in its columns the introduction of facts regarding our character or career. We do not expect to influence the press. We know the great newspapers are indifferent to our opinions, and we can assure them that we are more than indifferent to theirs. The good opinion of such a sheet as the San Francisco Examiner, would make us ashamed. Its enmity is better than its friendship or favor. Our work is progressive. It is of such a character that it could not thrive without persecution. The persecution of the press is the sunshine of its deliverance from the obscurity from which it is emerging, and from its own inherent virtues it will command the honor and respect of that supreme genus of evolution for which our great work is instituted.

Let it be understood that we have no conflict with the Jew. From the common moral point of view, there is no better citizen. It is not through any objection to the Hebrew, the race which generated the Christ of God, that we have interjected the name in this article. But as our attorney once said to a judge in Chicago, "We want to show the animus, your Honor."

Genuine Justice to the Devil.

The Creation of His Satanic Majesty; the Devil as a Necessary Factor in Universal Economy; His Progress and Final Redemption From the Mortal Hells.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

"MARK TWAIN on the Devil," is the heading of an entertaining article in the New York Herald of September 17. It seems that Mark has seen fit to devote his charming humor in a recent article in Harper's, entitled "Concerning the Jew," to making a winning appeal for justice to the devil as well as to the Jew. He says:

I have no special regard for satan, but I can at least claim that I have no prejudice against him. It may even be that I lean a little bit his way, on account of his not having a fair show. All religions issue Bibles against him, and say the most injurious things about him, but we never hear of his side. We have none but evidence for the prosecution, and yet we have rendered the verdict. To my mind, this is un-English; it is un-American; it is French. Without this precedent, Dreyfus could not have been condemned. Of course, satan has some kind of a case; it goes without saying. It may be a poor one, but that is nothing, that can be said of any of us.

It might be a comfort to Mark, and to many another mortal being, to know that he and the devil have reached the end of the age of Pisces, the age of the proliferation of devils, and have entered the age of Aquarius, in which the devil must begin the process of transformation. The light of absolute science is now shining in this hitherto dark world of ours, to reveal the ultimatum of truth concerning the devil, as well as everything else. Aquarius, the Messenger of the Covenant, is manifest, and welcomes as disciples all who care to learn the exact science of truth relating to the devil, and to do him justice in the light of it. The devil himself is to be congratulated that he is about to receive justice from such a source.

It is written in the Record inspired by divine wisdom, that the Lord is the creator of evil, which in personification is the devil and satan. "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things." Isa. xlv:7. Koreshan Universology, which furnishes the science of truth concerning the origin and destiny of the universe, and of the laws of its perpetuity, necessarily includes conclusive scientific testimony concerning the devil and all his works. Concerning the beginning or origin of the universe, the inspired Paul wrote of the Lord Jesus in these words:

Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature: For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist; and he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence.

Koreshanity accepts this statement as true, because true science furnishes its confirmation. Koreshans are taught that the universe as a whole involves its seed, a seed involving all its germinals and terminals, which are one, called the Alpha and the Omega. If the ordinary viidual mortal will study his own organization somewhat, he will find that he is a formulation of interdependent organisms, having activities controlled by voluntary and involuntary powers. He will find that, owing to his involuntary activities, certain processes of elimination and precipitation of wastes go on; and that these wastes from a certain standpoint are repulsive and obnoxious, though essential and useful as a basis for the perpetuity of elements essential to progressive development, through the exercise of the voluntary powers to that end.

In the universal economy, every existing thing has its opposite, which in time finds expression or language in some natural form in the natural world. Evil is the opposite and opposing power of good, which gains and maintains its positive character by resisting and overcoming evil in all spheres. Every formulated thing generates its progressive and retrogressive energies; both are essential, but of opposite qualities. In ultimates, or seed forms of being,—indicative of the completion of defined cycles of development,—opposites are brought into ultimating conjunctions, as the involutions of their evolved universals. When the conditions resulting from their preceding evolutionary activities are right, or ripe, evolutionary activities reach their terminals and generate forces which reflect, and being polarized in a seed form, produce activities in conjunction with it, which, while disintegrating to the seed, are quickening both to its progressive and retrogressive powers. This disintegration of the seed is its death as seed, but newness of life to its inherent potencies upward and downward.

Jehovah Jesus, the Deific man, supreme product of the universe and its involved form, is the immortal One, seed source of immortality. This first immortal held within himself the supreme potencies of universal life and death, controlled by the divine love and wisdom, and spiritually discerned as the invisible Deity by all who loved him. Jehovah is God, or Good, in the voluntary exercise of all his powers to reproduce from himself the Elohim, the Gods, and also the devil, or evil, in the recreations from the precipitations of his involuntary powers. His disintegration as the holy seed, by the polarized forces of human love and hate generated by a prior incarnation and disintegration of the Almighty as Jehovah, supplies the universe—in both an involuntary and evolutionary order—with a vitalizing or quickening power.

Unto the progressive humanity, the Holy Ghost or Spirit of His dissolution is a quickening power,—through whom it quickens to newness of life every progressive element in the universe. The reflex of this same Spirit is to the retrogressive a savor of death unto death, and ultimates in the personification of evil in the devil and satan, the devil having the power of death—the science of its source. If the voluntary power of the divine or discriminating mind projects a true and good thought, its involuntary reflection produces a fallacy and an evil. We cannot voluntarily think of up, without involuntarily recognizing down, etc. These projections of the central mind, and ejections and disintegrations of the spirits of the perfected flesh, end in the anthropostic domain in personified involutions and evolutions, which, in the course of time, or according to the cycles of their development, are known in a universal way as the personal Gods and personal devils; and at the terminations of certain cycles, we hear of the God and the devil as culminating involutions and personifications of inherent spiritual forces.

The devil and satan express the death of Deity in the natural world, in the mortal, sensual forms of men and women. In these, the germs of reproduction descend through the flesh, fulfilling the lusts of the flesh,—disintegrating and retrogressive in every natural tendency. These perpetuate the mortal, corruptible, and corrupting manifestations of humanity, everywhere to be seen, whose elements war against the ascending energies of the intellectual or inner man, seeking the throne and altar of Deity, the perfected intellectual and affectional biunity of being. They war until, by the application of the law of polarization, under the direction of the supreme and leading intelligence inherent in the most progressive race, a Divinity is projected into the natural sphere of human life, strong to deliver and mighty to save, by the power of intelligence to control and to transform the energies of hell, or mortality, to the light and the heat, or the wisdom and the love, of heaven.

These energies once more personified and holding the balance of power in earth, earth will once more manifest in divine order the perfect fruit of every seed after its kind; and the devil and satan will be justified and valued for their legitimate use, and placed in such subjection to the powers of good for their reduction and diminution, that order and health may reign even in the world of their nethermost potencies. The real nature and origin of the “bottomless pit,” or “hell with the bottom knocked out,” and of the “cloven hoof, two horns, and the forked tail” of the devil, may be learned by a study of Koreshan Science. If any one wants to be introduced to a personal devil of modern times, let him look critically at himself in a looking-glass, and discover the multiplying evidences of his mortality,—the wages of sin. If you want to know a God personified, read the Record of Jehovah Jesus and of his works, and of the operations of his Holy Spirit. He said to the mortal humanity about him, “Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do.”

True science, the perfect fruit of wisdom and love, awakens that love in the human heart which casts out fear, and gives the will power to control every enemy of human progress, and to transform even the devil to a God, in the fulness of God’s time. A study of the conversation of Jesus with a certain young man who inquired what he should do to inherit eternal life, will reveal what is necessary to do to become like Jehovah. Jesus gave the true answer: “If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.” If at all interested in the Science of the Decalogue, and in its application to the vital and organic social life for the attainment of immortality and eternal life, study Koreshan Science. “The excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom gives life to them that have it.” Koreshan Science will teach one the most important thing to know—how the devil in one’s self, and all his works may be destroyed.

The devil originates in God’s involuntary generations. A diamond may be voluntarily burned to generate a brilliant light, but in the burning the alchemist involuntarily generates the deadly, poisonous carbonic anhydride. God, the ascending spirit of Jehovah, by voluntary obedience to the laws of conservation and polarization operative in the human race which tabernacles him, seeks to reproduce himself as the divine flesh from the diamond or Stone of humanity, the Petros, the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel. This He wills to do, but in the doing of it, he subjects this Stone to the burning of all potent forces. He will not only reproduce himself in glory as the Father of Light, the Master Scientist, in the form of the Mother of all living, but he will precipitate a terrific descending energy into the world of mortal humanity, that will burn as an unquenchable fire until the ultimate of its precipitate again reaches the point of terminal transformation, twenty-four thousand years from now, in the circumferential man, the Ancient of Days—the destroyer of death and the devil.

How May Men Know God and His Messenger or Messiah?

The Experience of Socrates in His Search for Truth; His Conclusion that a Man Must be Sent to Teach the World About God.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

THE ORACLE said that Socrates, the wisest of the heathen world, was the wisest of men. In his great modesty, he said he did not know what the god meant; he was not conscious of knowing much of anything. But the god would not lie about it, and in some way it must be true, and therefore he undertook to find out what the god meant. There were then, as now, men who made great pretensions to knowledge of their several specialties. He went to these and examined them with regard to their wonderful knowledge, but found that they knew but little, if anything, even about their specialties. After each investigation, he said to himself, “Am I wiser than this man, or am I not? He does not know much of anything, and does not know that he does not know. I don’t know much of anything, and I know that I don’t know, and this must be what the god means.” Men of shallow brains and large pretensions never relish having their subterfuges exposed, so this investigation cost him his life. But as men can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth, that death added tenfold to the power of his noble life.

Among the weighty things uttered by Socrates was this, which the agnostics of the present would do well to consider: He said that if men ever came to know the truth about God and his relation to men, it would be because God sent some man to teach them. This He did in the person of Jesus, as the world did not then believe, but confesses now. When He went away, he said he would come again, just as the seed wheat says, when sown, it will come again. It was said of Him, what is also true of any seed, that he would come as he went away, which would be as a man, not as the spirit of a man, or of God; and that the time of such coming was the end of the Christian age, or dispensation, where we are now.

How will it be possible to know this wonderful Messenger? Only in the one way that Socrates employed,—to test the knowledge of the men of his time. We learn in Revelation (which describes his coming), that when he comes he will have a new name of God, just as Moses and Jesus had; that he will not be born holy as Jesus was, but, being born in sin and shapen in iniquity, like Elijah and Moses and other men, he will have to “overcome” before the filthy garments, as Zechariah describes them, are taken off, and he has a change of raiment, “Christ’s righteousness,” put upon him, and God writes his “new name upon him,” and he comes to rule God’s courts and judge his house. He will not be born a king, as Jesus told Pilate that he was; but will, as the prophet declares, have a “fair mitre” put upon his head. He will perform, not a part, but all of God’s pleasure; he will be the son of Jesse, and his name will be Cyrus, as declared in Isaiah xlv : 28.

If we find a man with a message that only God can give him, we may rest assured that we have found God’s Messenger; and Malachi informs us that God’s Messenger is the Lord himself. When you find the man who has God’s knowledge, you have not much further to go to find God himself, as he was in Jesus—the God-man. But men say to us, no man knows, or can know, everything. Yet these same people admit that God has all knowledge, all power, all benevolence. If he has all power, then he must have power to impart his knowledge to whom he will that desires it. But few men really desire all knowledge. Most men would like to know a few things, such as will enable them to make money, or secure power over others; but they want nothing more.

“This is eternal life,—to know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent.” Jesus promised eternal life to as many as became his disciples, therefore he promised that they should come to know God and Jesus Christ. This is the life that Jesus had, in comparison with which he called all other men dead. To gain this life, a man must have—as Jesus had—God’s knowledge and that of Jesus Christ. Any man who has not this knowledge, and yet professes to be a Messiah, or the Messenger of God’s Covenant with men, is an impostor and a fraud.

KORESHANITY is a great system of practical reform in all lines of human thought, activity, and relations. It is the science of universal economy, and translates the terms of universal form and functions into every domain of life; it is as broad as the universe, and is as specific in every department as the details of every domain of the universe are complex. It has been said that Koreshanity does not touch the vital issues of the hour; that it deals too much with the problems and intricacies of man and cosmos, to effect practical reform in the social and industrial affairs of the world. Koreshanity is a revolutionary system; it is building for future ages, and it must scientifically lay the foundation of the great civilization of the future. Genuine reform must be scientific; it must be true. The great industrial system of the coming age must lie at the very foundation of the great structure of human society. The greatest form of philanthropy of which man can conceive, is the inauguration of such a system of industrial and commercial relations as will admit of equitable distribution of the products of labor among those engaged in the performance of use in the world. The chief aim and object of the founding of Koreshanity is to effect a complete renovation of human society,—the reconstruction of the new social order upon the basis of scientific law. We find in the physical cosmos the natural order and arrangement of a perfect structure; and we hold that the true social structure which will bless humanity in ages to come, must be founded upon the science of the form and function of the physical world. Koreshanity is touching the vital issues of the hour; it has solved the great problems of the world. Its principles are practically applied in the daily life of its people, in communistic and co operative effort; in moral and social life; in the endeavor to reach the Koreshan ideal of perfection and immortality in the natural world, and in the government of its orders and departments. We have no exclusive hobbies; the System is universal in its application; and its complexity—which equals the universe itself in the complexity of its details of forms and functions—bewilders the advocates of fragmentary reform, because they cannot understand it. We are not engaged in abortive efforts to bring in the new age; we are not undertaking to patch up the old order; we are not engaged in the hopeless task of making the world happy under the present competitive conditions, where individualism, patterned after the Copernican fallacy, prevails; we are not hoping to avert the revolution, nor to evolve the new order by means of the ballot box. We know what constitutes genuine reform in all its general and specific phases, and know also that the genuine reformation of the world must be attended by the Messianic function, such as impelled the primitive Christian church, through impartation of energies of rejuvenation, in the direction of practical and genuine love of a known God, and the tangible neighbor.

Prof. Dufour, a French experimentalist, has recently presented to the scientific world what he terms "new and interesting proofs that the earth is round." The nature of his experiments is that of observing the images of distant objects reflected from the surface of Lake Geneva in calm weather. The idea is, that the surface of still water reflects the images with just the degree of distortion which a careful mathematical calculation would predict on account of the shape of the earth. His observations prove that the world is round, but not convex. In all such "proofs" of the earth's convexity, the important factor of perspective foreshortening is left out of account entirely, and the hypothesis of the convex curvature of water is employed to account for the phenomenon; the processes of visual impression are overlooked. Perhaps the above is the best test which would occur to the modern scientist. If the professor had placed a target near the water, and had observed the same through a good telescope at the distance of a number of miles, with the instrument near the water, he would have seen for himself that water is not convex. The images of distant objects reflected from the water's surface manifested just the degree of distortion that a careful mathematical calculation would demonstrate to exist on a concave surface, curving at the ratio of eight inches to the mile. Modern scientists constitute a school of incompetents, facing hundreds of unsolved problems; they know it, and admit it!

The Christian dispensation has been an age of war, in which the church has been an important factor. The greatest horrors of history have been committed by Christian nations in the plundering of the world for wealth and power. It is obviously inconsistent that such war-like peoples known as Christians, should now clamor for universal peace; but there is a policy in it! In Catholic circles, it is claimed that the idea of the peace conference originated with Pope Leo XIII, and that the Czar of Russia has stolen the honor of the invention of the scheme. It matters little with whom it originated; it is beyond the power of the modern pope or potentate to proclaim peace. A higher authority must make such a declaration, after the present forces have been expended in the impending revolution. The light of the world is not in the apostate warring elements of Christendom; the Prince of Peace is not reigning in and through the modern church and state; and the glory of the New Kingdom, with all its blessings of peace, will be given neither to the vicar of the Vatican, nor to the ruler of Russia.

The people of America find themselves face to face with the great question of the trusts, and they are unable to solve the problem. Capitalism today exerts a greater power than the official representatives of the people; for money is capable of purchasing legislation in favor of the corporations, despite the people! There is no attempt among politicians to solve the problems of the hour scientifically. The recent trust conference in Chicago is an example of how the people of today undertake to meet great issues; representatives of the various schools of reform and political parties met to compare notes and opinions, and to discuss the different phases of the overtowering and overpowering influence of the trusts. The conference culminated in a debate between two great political demagogues, and no solution of the problem was reached. Every one went away with his own opinions. The truth concerning the trusts is not coming from such a source; and the economic quacks will not prescribe any genuine remedy for the alarming social diseases that are hastening the death of the old world!

The agnostic smiles contemptuously at what he is pleased to term the "hair census" of the Almighty, referred to by Jesus when he said to his disciples, "The hairs of your head are numbered." The expression is scientific, and reveals a phase of biological mathematics of which the skeptic is wholly ignorant. Hair is the ultimate product of the human structure; it represents the ultimates of life. Jesus the perfect man is called the Lamb of God; the lamb or ram is Aries, the head of the anthropistic Zodiac; the point of astronomical right ascension in the physical heavens. Jesus was the head of his disciples, the head of the church. He was sown in humanity, and the harvest of that sowing will be the 144,000 sons of God, the ultimates of life—the hairs of the divine Head; and they are all numbered, the result of the mathematical evolution, the biological product of the involved Unit of nineteen hundred years ago.

The civilized world is reaping the results of centuries of influence of the church. The church has been an important factor in the history of the passing dispensation. It has controlled the affairs of nations, and has guided the world to the verge of an awful social vortex. It has not brought peace to the nations, nor liberty to the people; it has not redeemed the world from the curse; but it has failed for centuries to practically apply a single principle of righteousness. The world is worse today than ever before; the great problems of the hour demand solution; humanity cries out for deliverance from bondage, and from social, industrial, and commercial injustice. On every hand, are tangible evidences of the failure of modern Christianity to benefit the world; the church boasts of its influence in the world, and it must now stand responsible for the results.

The competitive system of industry and commerce, in its excessive waste of energy, time, and products, is on a par with, and corresponds to, the waste of vital energies of humanity, resulting in the chaotic and confused mental states of the world. In the astronomical world, there is the monstrous fallacy of infinite space filled with worlds—sun after sun, star after star, emitting energies in infinite lines of radiation. Such a concept results in the inevitable conclusion that an enormous—a stupendous waste of physical energies would take place in such a universe. A similar fallacy is entertained in the theological world. All of these concepts and conditions belong to the old order of individualism, selfishness, democracy; mental chaos, darkness, and ignorance—an order of waste of vital energies through sensualism and other abnormalities and evils which curse the world.

The so called proofs that the earth is convex, were conceived in an unscientific age—before the geography of the earth was known, before the days of geodetic survey, before the invention of the telescope, and before there were any tests made of the earth to determine its shape. The old Egyptian astronomer, Ptolemy, who lived during the second century of the Christian era, has supplied the world with the so called proofs of convexity. Concerning his proofs, Astronomer Newcombe says: "Ptolemy's proofs that the earth is round are those still found in our school books at the end of seventeen hundred years." Modern astronomers accept the old assumptions concerning the earth's shape; their working hypotheses are evolved from the ignorance of the dark ages!

A Swedish professor has accidentally discovered a new acid in his experiments with tauric moss; the acid is known as tauric acid. It makes metals as soft and as pliable as dough. The chemist denies that baser metals can be converted to gold; but it will be no longer doubted, since any metal can be converted to dough, and money is "dough." The professor is humanitarian, and refuses to patent his process. He claims that it will revolutionize modern methods of working metals. It will not make millions for himself, because he gives the secret away.

But it will be utilized by the millionaires as a labor-saver; they will make money out of it—they will convert everything to gold!

The two fundamental departments of the Science of the universe, are cosmogony and alchemy. Cosmogony is the science of the form and functions of the great universal structure, while alchemy reveals the laws of the relation of mind and matter. The highest and the lowest planes of existence are the terminal points of the ascent and descent of life; they are the limits of the mutations of the substances which comprise the universe. The universe is the great treasure cell of knowledge and life; and alchemy is the key which unlocks the whole and reveals the arcana of nature.

Some people are startled at the "audacity" of KORESH in naming the great Koreshan System for himself. Such minds forget that the Copernican system of astronomy is named after Copernicus. The so called laws discovered by Kepler are known as Kepler's laws. Then there is the Newtonian hypothesis, after Newton; Columbia, after Columbus; Washington City, after Washington; and even the Christian church is named after the Christ. Every man who is able may, like Napoleon, place the crown upon his own head!

The science of mathematics can be comprehended by the human mind; it can be comprehended, because man himself is constructed in accordance with the laws of physiological geometry. The laws, forms, and relations of the physical cosmos may be mathematically defined. If mathematics inheres in the operation of the basic laws of the physical cosmos, it demonstrates the fact that man and cosmos are correspondentially related, and that the physical world has its perpetual origin in the mind which is capable of involving the fundamentals of all geometrical relations.

There is a conflict between individualism and communism in modern reform; and a failure of communism obtains wherever it is undertaken on the basis of democracy. There can be no communism in anarchy, though there are factions which pass by the name of anarchist-communism. The term is contradictory, for the specific reason that there is no anarchy in true communism, nor true communism in anarchy. The true communistic body is a nucleus of order, where the supreme laws which govern the universe are regarded, comprehended, and obeyed.

Who will limit the lines of human progress? If man is progressive, it must be admitted that at some time he will reach the climax of human life and intellect—that he will ultimately reach the point where he will intellectually comprehend the universe, and cease to die. It is in the order of development that he should rise above the conditions of mortality and the powers of death; and the time is at hand.

The proper use of labor-saving machinery would prove a blessing in the field of labor; it would add to the happiness, comfort, and luxury of the workingman. Under the miserable social and industrial systems of the nineteenth century, machinery increases the suffering of the laboring classes, and brings millions face to face with actual poverty and destitution!

Civilization has reached Japan; the decree of compulsory vaccination has gone forth at the instigation of the medical fraternity, and the poisonous virus is to be injected into the blood of hundreds of thousands of children of the Orient!

Every laborer contributes his quota of energy to the support of the world's industry, and should share the comforts and luxuries of the world in its prosperity.

The Copernican system places every man on the top of the convex arc; in the Koreshan hollow globe, every man is at the bottom of the concavity.

Truth is founded upon a demonstrated premise. Hypothesis is the basis of fallacy; modern science is founded upon hypotheses.

The type of the perfect man makes its impression on the pages of the great book of human history.

Sixteen to one is about the proper ratio; there are about sixteen evils in the world to one good.

The gossip's tongue would be silent, if there were no ears of a corresponding character.

The fools have no real god; they worship myth and money.

Mortal man gravitates in the die-recton of the grave.

The Telescope and the Convex Bulge.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I notice your article, "Recent Scientific Experiments on Lake Michigan," and am surprised at the conclusion you draw from the fact that the telescope brought the target into the field of vision again. From this, you drew the entirely unwarrantable conclusion that the earth's surface is concave instead of convex. You say that if the earth's crust is convex, it would be "physically impossible" for the telescope to bring objects hidden by the earth's convexity into view again.

I beg to differ with you on this point. You say, "The telescopic view reveals the fact that the greater visual power has projected the horizon still farther out on the Lake." This statement is correct; and every Copernican who knows anything, knows that all the telescope does is to project the radius of vision, until it is as though the observer stood upon the summit of the bulge caused by curvature; when, of course, the objects "down the hill" come into view again.

The telescope carried the sight to the top of the bulge, and of course the target came into view again. This could not happen if the light rays were straight; But you Koreshans argue that they curve, and consequently support the Copernican explanation of the simple phenomenon you have tried to explain, as supporting the Koreshan hypothesis.

Your conclusion, that "If it is true (the earth's convexity) when we view the lighthouse through the telescope from the same elevation as with the naked eye, no part of the objects apparently below the horizon can be seen; * * it would be physically impossible for it to be otherwise," is false. You admit that the light rays curve; you admit that the telescope projects the horizon; so you are bound to admit the fact that what the telescope really does, is to project the physical vision according to the strength of its focus, until the range of the vision of the eye through the telescope is the same as though the beholder stood at that point to which his vision is projected.—R. J. B., Pueblo, Colo.

In the last issue of THE FLAMING SWORD, we referred to the fact that minds not familiar with the claims and methods of the astronomer were wont to make many ridiculous claims for the telescope, upon coming in contact with the Koreshan evidences of the concavity of the earth's surface. We have found in our experience in promulgating the Koreshan System, that it is a common thing for the unscientific mind to invent shifts with which to evade the facts we announce to the world. The writer of the above letter does well to admit the facts of our observations, but neutralizes the admission by undertaking to evade the rational conclusions from the premise of the facts. We have met such subterfuges before, and have demonstrated their inconsistency.

We have the published statements of prominent astronomers of the world, that objects invisible to the naked eye beyond the sea horizon cannot be made visible by means of a telescope. They take this position because the theory of the earth's convexity demands it; they know perfectly well that if the earth is convex, it would be impossible to restore such objects to view. Every astronomer who undertakes to maintain the theory that the water's surface is convex, will stand upon the ground of his assertions until it is swept away by tests of actual observation.

We quote from a few astronomical authors. Prof. Peabody says, after referring to the usual phenomenon of the disappearance of the ship's hull: "If the ship moved on any other than a convex surface, it would appear again in the telescope." Proctor said that if experimenters have, with the eyes but a few inches from the surface of water, "seen an object close to the surface six miles distant, there is manifestly something wrong with the accepted theory of the earth's convexity." He declined to believe it. Again he asserts: "We finally lose sight of every part of the vessel, not from fact of distance (if it were so, the telescope would bring the ship into view again), but by the obvious interposition of the rounded or dome surface of the sea between us and the ship." So it is obvious that every one who knows anything about the Copernican theory and physics, does not agree with the writer of the above subterfuge. It is evident that telescopes are not in use on the planet Venus, else the "man from Venus" would not have made so palpable a blunder as to suppose that the telescope "carries the vision" out over the water, and at the same time takes the man to the apex of the bulge. Why, in our observations, both the man and the telescope remained at the observing station!

We hold that we were strictly correct in our conclusions from the recent experiments on Lake Michigan. We know something about the telescope, and what it accomplishes as an aid to vision. It has no function beyond the object-glass; the only effect it produces is in the eye. The rays of light from distant objects are transmitted to the object-glass, in exactly the same direction and with the same refraction as they do when passing directly to the naked eye. From the subjective lens in the telescope, the rays enter the pupil of the eye at greater angles than they do when the telescope is removed, causing the object viewed to subtend a greater angle in the eye. The images of objects formed on the retina are two-dimensional; and the only difference between a telescopic view and a view with the naked eye, is that telescopic images cover more of the retinal surface. The telescope has no effect whatever upon the transmission of rays of light, until the rays enter the tube itself. If an actual bulge of water existed between the eye and the object viewed with the naked eye, the same bulge would be seen in the telescopic field. This is obvious from the fact that the telescope is powerless to change the direction of the rays of light beyond the object-glass. For how should the light rays know when one applied the telescope to the eye, so as to curve differently to produce a different view through the telescope? You see, such a difference of curvature to suit a view over a convex bulge, is only a refraction in the mind of the inventor of the subterfuge; it is only in the imagination!

The statement is made that the telescope projects the radius of vision until it is as though the observer stood upon the "summit of the bulge caused by the convexity." The bulge is at a specific distance from the eye. If the telescope has a power of 50 diameters, and produces a view to conform to the above absurd proposition, what would a telescope with a power of 100 diameters accomplish? Would it take the observer to the same summit as the telescope with half the power? The inconsistency of such a statement is obvious, and needs no further comment.

If sufficient refraction obtained in the atmosphere to cause objects to appear in the telescope far below where they should in normal atmospheric conditions, it is evident that the same refraction would be operative when the same visual field is impressed upon the retina of the naked eye! Surveyors have tables of refraction. Refraction is not excessive; the ratio would be the same no matter what the aid to vision might be. The above letter is not a Copernican explanation; no Copernican ever thought of it, and the "man from Venus" did not, until he read the report of our observations! The professional astronomer would emphatically deny the facts to be as we observed them to be; his theory *demand*s such a denial. If the astronomer were to admit our facts, he would be compelled to admit our conclusions; for then the principal phenomenon that is thought to support convexity would be destroyed. We know that the telescope enlarges the area of visual impression on the retina of the eye, and extends the vanishing point; and we know that because it does so, there is no intervening bulge to occult targets, piers, and ships' hulls to the naked eye. There is no other rational conclusion from the basis of observed facts. The "man from Venus" has a great deal to learn yet, concerning both physical and mental science, before he can comprehend the true solution of the problems of the universe.

Mystic Masonry.

PART III.

The Search for the Mysterious Word; Must be Restored in and by a New Moses.

JOSIAH GROSS, in "The Square and Compass," New Orleans, La.

WHICHEVER way we speculate, the conviction forces itself that the Masonic phenomena were intended to illustrate the return via the natural body, and we propose to produce by our circle neither a reincarnation nor a materialization. We bring life to the natural body; even after it has passed into corruption we reassemble its dynamis and, in its identity, produce the tree. Doubtless such thoughts have come to many an initiate, and I believe that the metaphysical and esoteric side of our great ritual should be given more care and study, for perhaps somewhere within the lines indicated lies the secret we have lost.

If Solomon produced but a materialization, then he knew not the true secret; it was already in his time, lost. He gave his own password, that is, arbitrarily forced another word to take the place of the true. When the word is recovered, we shall learn what there is in the "marrow of the bones" that will, by its natural processes, retard superemphasis of the nerves, restore wasted organs, and bring immortal existence to mortality. At the time of the organization of Masonry, from the primitive crafts of Dionysian artificers, the Eleusinians, and others, this secret was lost, and this revival and the conjunction of forces were probably an attempt at its recovery. The traditions of that time told that the restoration of the physical body had been accomplished. Men had lived a thousand years in one body, and to do that they must have had the Elixir of Life. The alchemists sought to recover this principle of transmutation, not only of metals, but of the body of man.

The translation of Moses and Elijah was the type of the result they aimed at. Jesus knew this secret, and by it restored Lazarus and others to life with their original bodies, descending in the grave to do so. He was the true type of the Master Mason, for he possessed the Philosopher's Stone and the Elixir of Life. Solomon did not, but the Craft that lived before his day, when Melchizedek was its high priest, knew the arcana. This, then, was the result that the Mystic Masonry of the eighteenth century sought to attain. How to rise from death in the physical body, how to reach the atoms of the cells, and when the atom has reached the vanishing point, when it can no longer be whittled down, when it resolves into spirit and becomes an immaterial dynamis, how to again transmute it into materiality possessing the essentials of the parent tree,—that was indeed a desirable mystery.

We cannot well carry this problem further; we have reached the point where we are compelled to accept the truth of something we cannot explain. A study of the Bible will teach that in all cases the resurrection of the physical body is prophesied, not the shade, the psychedron, the kama-rupa, or linga sharira, not the germ of a spirit occupying an inconceivable fourth dimension of space, but I, myself, shall stand forth in the latter day, in my physical equipment, to give or receive the true password. This "latter day" does not mean the day of judgment, but a theocracy that will arrive much earlier; in fact, it stands to belief that we are to attain the true password on this earth, long before the dissolution. That may usher in the thousand years of peace.

The return of this physical body, this arising of the man from the grave of mortality, and the necessity for it, is, as I said, the point where we are compelled to accept the truth of something we cannot explain. All our traditions—and all other traditions having a probable origin in the original mystery—point to this consummation. Perhaps this is going into deep water with some of the brethren who may argue that all this is beyond practical planes, that charity and good fellowship, wine and oil, are all of life with which we have any concern, but that will not do. There is the mystery, the secrecy, the epitome of our existence, to be accounted for; the veil of the inner temple that we guard, but is there really anything beyond our particular veil?

The Mystic Masons devoted their attention to the unveiling of mysteries by study and speculation thereon, trying to re-discover something that needs to be re-discovered. The conditions of the times bode ill; we need a new Moses. The church disintegrates surely,—the Order may follow. We are content to go through the hollow mockery of an empty form, we will not enter metaphysical realms, and we shall perish by our own inaction. Already, the world at large believes that we hold nothing but the empty form, that our secrets are lost, and our savants thinking of other things. Like the priests of Baal, perhaps they are hunting.

Mystic Masonry conceived that the Philosopher's Stone and the Elixir of Life were the great secrets; in this day we may call them transmutations, the arrest of malignity and what not, the object to be attained is the same. We ought not to fail in giving the Golden Age the benefit of our unity and our "sublime mysteries." We must find the key to reopen the golden casket containing the Elixir and the Stone, of which we have the symbols and the traditions, but which, like that of the church, has, in the unguarded byways of a maturing materialistic civilization, been lost to us.

In the Field of Koreshan Propaganda.

Weekly Synopsis of Topics Discussed by Koreshan Lecturers.

Koreshan Hall, 316 W. 63d St., Chicago.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 24, 3 P. M.—Sermon by Rev. Berthaldine. As was shown the previous Sunday, that "The excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth understanding," so it was also set forth that understanding when acquired is of no use, except as applied to life. "Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my works."

MONDAY EVENING, SEPT. 25—Lecture on Astronomy by Prof. U. G. Morrow. The subject was handled in a masterful manner, showing the lecturer to be thoroughly conversant with both the Koreshan and Copernican systems. Among the topics elucidated were the following: Astronomy as a practical science; form and limitation of the universe as being indisputable factors of its existence; size of man as compared with the universe; what is on the outside? what holds the universe in its position? thickness of earth's crust; formation and emplacement of the metallic strata; true form of the universe a complete pattern of the coming social structure.

An extract was read from Prof. Young's Astronomy, in which he admits that that science is of almost no practical benefit to mankind today; the chief objects of its study being the mental growth concomitant with the working out of knotty problems, and the satisfaction derived from new discoveries made.

Many interesting questions were satisfactorily answered from the Koreshan standpoint, which were then contrasted with the illogical Copernican theory. For instance: What holds the universe in position? It was shown that everything in the universe tends toward its static point. Gold, when it has reached its specific plane, has no weight. Consequently, every part being located at its point of specific gravity, the complete universe weighs nothing, hence needs not to be upheld. According to the Copernican system, the earth and the planets are held in their orbits around the sun by the laws of centripetal and centrifugal force. Necessarily, then, the sun must depend upon the same laws for its emplacement, thus revolving around some greater sun, and so on, ad infinitum, without possible center and circumference.

The attendance was fair, considering the inclemency of the weather, and much interest was manifested.

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPT. 23, Halsted and 63rd sts.—Subject: "Modern Gods vs. the True God." The speaker stated that modern, so called Christianity is on trial for its life. It has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The reception of the Holy Spirit in the beginning of the Christian dispensation caused men to sell their possessions, and to bring the prices of the things that were sold and lay them at the apostles' feet, "and distribution was made unto every man, according as he had need." Such was primitive Christianity, and any religion which falls short of this standard is antichrist. But primitive Christianity was but the result of the planting of the Kingdom which was to come in the earth, and "that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Consequently, there has been a falling away, and today we find a condition of greed (aided and abetted by the church), in which every man is for himself, and devil take the hindmost. Everywhere, men are worshiping the great unknown; at the same time serving the god of this world—money. "And as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription: To the Unknown God. Whom, therefore, ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." (Acts xvii.) The world is ripe for the harvest, and when it is gathered, the old stalk (Christianity), which has borne its fruit, shall pass away.—A. H. ANDREWS, Reporter.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.—The October number is appropriately adorned with autumn colors, and contains a volume of interesting material. Hon. Lyman J. Gage has written a series of articles on Finances of our Wars, the first part appearing in the current number, The Revolution and war of 1812; one particular item stands out prominently, and that is that paper money is the money of war times. Other illustrated articles are: College Athletics; Edgar Allen Poe's College Days at Charlottesville; European Fire Fighters; Liquified Air and its Uses, showing a number of interesting experiments. The Fiction department is excellent; Frank R. Stockton contributes The Snow-Flake of the Service, a naval story; Honor Among Thieves, by Annie B. Houseman; besides continuation of April Bloom. The Editor's Marginalia is full of interest, and in many respects is unique.

Mind.—The Greenacre number, dated October, 1899, is at hand. It is devoted to the famous Greenacre movement, founded by Miss Farmer, of Maine. The articles in the present number we take to be papers read at the recent conference of the Summer School of Philosophy at Greenacre. We mention the principal articles: Greenacre; the Purpose of Greenacre; Monsalvat School of Comparative Religion; Education through Environment; a Psychological Study of Sarah J. Farmer; Psychological Aspects of Laboratory Science; Greenacre Ideals; the Land of the Mind; Vedanta Philosophy at Greenacre; Art in Ethical Development. In the Editorial department it is announced that the editorial management is changed; Mr. Charles Brodie Patterson takes charge, while Mr. John Emery McLean becomes editor of the Arena, at Boston. Mind is published at the Life Building, New York City, at $2.00 a year.

Leslie's Weekly.—This week's issue is a Dewey number from beginning to end; and the special feature is the double page supplement containing Christy's full-length picture of Admiral Dewey, in nine colors. The title-page shows the Admiral in full uniform. Other pictures show the appearance of the Olympia as she approached New York; scenes on the decks; and other interesting things connected with Dewey's home-coming. The letter-press contains stories of Dewey's life, besides the usual departments—editorials and People Talked About.

The Open Court.—The entire October number of the Open Court is devoted to a consideration of the varied and manifold relation which exist between Germany and the United States, and will be appreciated by all interested in German-American history. The frontispiece is a picture of Frederick the Great. Among the articles are: The Religion of Frederick the Great; Germany and the United States; Causes of the Estrangement between America and Germany; besides interesting paragraphs by the editor. Open Court Publishing Co., Chicago.

Word and Works.—An astronomical and meteorological monthly, edited and published by the famous St. Louis weather prophet, Rev. Irl R. Hicks; liberal and aggressive; of interest to the general reader. The most interesting departments are: Monthly Talks on Astronomy; Observations, Criticisms, and Comments; Monthly Forecasts of the Weather; Progress of Science, and the Query Corner. $1.00 yearly. 2201 Locust street, St. Louis, Mo.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Celibacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Folium. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, postpaid, for 10 cents.

A few of the above 2-cent pamphlets are out of print, and a few new ones not mentioned are substituted. If any are missing in packages received it is because we cannot now supply them. List will be revised next week.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or the Earth a Concave Sphere.

THE UNIVERSOLOGY OF KORESHANITY, By KORESH. THE NEW GEODESY, By PROF. U. G. MORROW

This is a superb Volume of scientific conclusions, written in terms of easy comprehension; the harbinger of the impending stupendous, Scientific, Religious, and Social Revolution. Step by step, from the simplest principles, in the most inviting, unique, and lucid style, we discuss and demonstrate the Physical and Astronomical Premise of the genuine Science of all Truth in all spheres of human thought and activity. Copiously and superbly illustrated by numerous Photographs, scientific Diagrams and Double-page Plates. Over 200 pages. Single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00; 10 copies, $1.80; 50 copies, $6.25; 100 copies, $12.00.

THE IDENTIFICATION OF ISRAEL. The Discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes. By A. W. K. ANDREWS, M. D.

Scientific revelation of the great problem of the age. The Inheritance of Israel—what and where? Answers the great question, Where are the dead of thousand of years past? Explanation of I Corinthians xv. The resurrection rationally and scientifically demonstrated. Price 10 cents.

Structure and Function of the Human Brain.

Part VI.

Analysis of the Processes of the Generation of Thought ; Vito-Alchemical Elaboration of Complex Subtle Substances Produces Corresponding Complex Forces of Mind.

THE VITO-ALCHEMICAL union constituting the encephalic fires, is as multiplex as the aggregation of cellular and fibrillar structure, every cell as before stated being an altar, as it were, in which the process of combustion continually proceeds, as resulting from the complex interflow of the essences and energies that unite therein. Think of a myriad of minute or micro-cosmic corpuscles, each elaborating its own complex subtle essence, and through such elaboration generating a corresponding complex force or energy, the essences or fluids compressed through the contraction of the corpuscles in the respiration of the cerebrum, and precipitated through the course of the fibers toward and into the cavities of the brain, and parts and extremities of the body. These energies flow out into an auraic sphere, to comprise the aggregate mental force composed primarily of the two distinct yet co-ordinate energetic principles of mind; namely, love and wisdom,—the light and heat principles of mental activity.

All the essences of particular regions of the brain flow into the central cavities of this complex laboratory, commingle through the vito-alchemical relation and interaction of the central cavities, and institute the beginning of a circulation having its oceanic origin and termination in the commingling of fluids or essences in the third ventricle. We shall proceed to designate and define the course of direction of this river of the water of life, as in its onward career it waters, and from its pellucid current rears the solid wood or fabric, the Tree of Life,—the human organism animated by its progress.

The fluid from the superior choroid plexus discharges itself into the lateral ventricles or cavities. This, with that of the fifth ventricle, commingles with the serum of the third, which also receives the discharge of that from the reservoir lying under the corpora quadrigemina. This is called the aqueduct of Sylvius. When the mass of the brain expands, it compresses all these above-named cavities, causing the liquids they contain to flow toward, and discharge into the glandula-vitae, or pituitary gland, the conduit of this flow into the gland being the tuber cinereum (ashy body) and infundibulum (funnel).

A wonderful process of transformation, subtle in the extreme, mutative as fire, converts the fluidiform essence to most refined, spirituous energy, holding in spiritual solution those complexities which before were liquid, after having been solid material substances. This pure spirit is absorbed by the blood through the petrosal and other central sinuses, and the imparted influence conveyed to the torcula Herophili, where the impulse centers. One most particular factor of this beginning of circulations should be here specifically noted. The pineal gland or conarium, resting upon the nates of the corpora quadrigemina, is the depository of carbonate and other solidified reactions resulting mainly through a stream or current which passes over the fornix, through the lyra, thence through the corpora albicantia, through the crura conarii, and solidifying in the pineal gland.

Through the expansion of the cells and the co-ordinate contraction of the fiber, the pineal gland is made to contract lengthwise, and thus discharge its solid contents through the posterior foramen, into the aqueduct of Sylvius. Here it is dissolved and held in solution until conveyed by the compression of the aqueduct to the third ventricle. The most noteworthy particular of this vito-alchemical elaboration and reagency, is in the fact that this solid substance formulated in the conarium or pineal gland, is the basis of the bone formation, and in fact, subsequently, of all organic solidities. It is conveyed by liquid solution from the aqueduct, and discharged into the third ventricle. It thence passes to the tuber cinereum (ashy body), an organ, the express use of which is to react upon the liquid, retouching it for processes of osseous formation. After this elaboration in the tuber cinereum, it passes through the funnel (infundibulum) into the glandula vitæ, as before stated. It is now discharged or eliminated as pure spirit, whence, through the sinuses, it passes to the wine press of Herophilus.

When the venus blood holding this spirit solution enters the torculum, at the back part and base of the cerebrum, the spirit comes in contact with the occipital pole of the dura mater (hard mother), which absorbs it and conveys it through the course of all the fibers of this fibrous tissue, reconverging it at the union of the crista frontalis with the crista galli. Here the fibers of the dura mater converge, reaching their terminal pole at the top of the vertical plate (cock's crest) of the ethmoid bone. The ethmoid ossifies by three centers, which comprise the three points of that continuous flow of osseous or bone spirit which, in its onward career, constructs the bony fabric or framework of the body. The whole system of bone formation and structure is evolved through these three ossifying poles. It first formulates the periosteum, in one direction depositing the bone substance, and in the other, evolving muscular origins, and thence the muscular fabric, the wastes of which again find their way into the returning blood current, ultimately returning to the cortex of the brain for re-elaboration, to pursue the repetition of its vascular and solid circuit.

The Sweeping Power of Monopoly.

Great Issues in the Closing Drama of the Centuries; the Lost Silver Cause; the Messianic Voice Warning the World of Revolution.

WHEN we take into consideration the fact that the great bulk of our millionaire and billionaire trust combinations is water, and realize also the certainty and regularity of the money panics, and that these panics are in proportion to the apparent prosperity preceding them, men have reason to be alarmed at the immediate future of the country and the world. The leaders of the two parties are deceiving both themselves and the people, in the attitude they bear to the gold and silver question. This is not the issue before the world. The question of doubling the volume of money is one which no statesman would waste his eloquence upon for fifteen minutes. Politicians may use it to blindfold the poor patient asses—the people who are willing to be led blindly by blind guides; and were the bimetallic proposition made a successful issue, it would not relieve the burden of the ass.

It will not benefit the masses, to double the volume of money in the hands of the millionaire individual and the billionaire corporation. When in an emergency the government of the United States defied the banks and made its own money, it found the secret of financial independence for the people. When this secret was discovered by the government, it was quickly observed by the money monopolists, and they set to work to destroy the nation's money, for they knew that what is for the interests of the masses of the people, is opposed to the interests of the banker and the bondholder; and let us here repeat: That which the national banking system of the United States regards as a sound monetary system, and which benefits the banker and the trust, is necessarily the thing that the people do not want.

Let not the world deceive itself through the subtlety of the great commercial serpent, whether its skin be the color of gold, or of silver, or mottled with both. The doctrine that gold is valuable only because it had the stamp of the government upon it, first issued from the Guiding Star Publishing House, and through the publications of the Koreshan Unity; and we have no reason to change our opinion regarding this intrinsic and self-evident truth. If the governments of the world should unanimously decide to demonetize gold,—as they have done silver,—it would not be held at one twentieth its present valuation. Every silver dollar having the government stamp on it, is worth one hundred cents because of the stamp; while the same amount of silver without the stamp, is only valued at about one half the amount. Every silver dollar valued at one hundred cents because of the stamp, is watered just that amount; more, in fact, for the silver not coined is worth about fifty cents because of its possible monetary—not commercial—demand. The determination of the bankers of the world to contract the money volume, is that they may the more easily regulate the industries, control supply and demand, and perpetuate the great mass of the people in the abject slavery of the bond power of the world.

There is no religious, moral, nor social sympathy between the rich and the poor. The rich man abhors the poor neighbor, and the opulent purpose to degrade the masses and maintain that degradation by the very force of that distinction which money renders possible. The present government of the United States, under the absolute control of the monopolist who determines legislation for the rich against the poor, was made by a democratic people, by democratic processes, through the instrumentality of a democratic government. We have no sympathy with, no faith in, a people boasting of political liberty, who would run a government in the interests of the banking system of the world, having its pulsating center at the very heart of British aristocracy.

While we write, we are under the wing of a railroad monopoly, the power of which is sustained by those chosen by the people to represent them at Washington. A big railroad magnate not far from the Pacific coast, absolutely determines what the people of the Pacific coast may or may not have, and what they shall pay for it. The process is to purchase the House of Representatives, enough of whom are purchasable, to carry any scheme in the interest of this magnate, through that legislative department of the government. It is different with the Senate. These people cannot be bought, but they can be made to place themselves in compromising positions through the subtle machinations of this same magnate. High-toned houses of assignation are maintained; Senators are inveigled through women placed there for this very purpose, and once they are entrapped, there is no escape. The magnate then dictates the kind of legislation he demands—and he gets it. The national heart and soul are polluted. Corruption permeates the cell and fiber of the national structure, and the remedy lies deeper than the monetary problem.

It is too bad that what might be the eloquence of a great man, should be utterly wasted on the question of bimetallism. The battle of gold and silver, like the better one on the greenback, has been fought and lost. The hero of Manila has returned to the United States, and the acclaim of an enthusiastic populace re-echoes in thunder tones throughout the country, its approval of the course of the present administration toward the Spanish government. On the tide of this popular wave, the lesser things sink into obscurity.

The government, by force of circumstance, has placed itself within the pale of the international combination which must soon play the closing act of the great drama of the centuries. The world is hastening forward to the vortex of its catastrophe, and the exaltation of the gold god to the sanctuary of the most holy place, is the signal for the final dissolution. The time is not yet for the waving of the olive-branch. The Christ of God must and will actuate the heart of men. The time is nearly ripe for the Lord to descend upon the mount of Olives, not on the ancient and figurative mount in Palestine,—which was but a type,—but upon the real mountain, the soul of humanity as it is heaping up in the new world, in the aggregation of those who know the processes, time, and place of the Messianic appearance.

The woe which terminates the curse upon the serpent—the money power, the wisdom of commerce perverted—is about to be precipitated upon the race. We give the warning note. The wise will understand; and not far hence the world will know that THE FLAMING SWORD is the genuine weapon of the Messenger of the Covenant. There will be no improvement in the conduct of government, until the Christ of God renews the baptism of the world, and the heart of man is regenerated.

The Social System of Koreshanity.

Koreshan Sociology Differentiated From the Schemes of Agitators; Scientific Methods Employed in the World's Reformation; the New Church and State.

WE HAVE been asked by a reader of THE FLAMING SWORD and Koreshan literature, if we advocate a social and industrial system in connection with our other work. We do not just see how a person can read THE SWORD for any length of time, or even one number, and be ignorant of the fact that a new industrial, social, and economical system constitutes the very foundation of our Koreshan Universology. In the detail of the changes to be wrought in the development and construction of a new social order, we do not differ materially from the ordinary socialist. In the method of its attainment, we differ radically. The new government will consist of a universal trust, in which every member of the society will constitute an equitable shareholder. The general business, with all its details, will be conducted by the universal body through its agents, who will manage and direct its interests. There will be no private or corporate ownership in any of the lines of trade, in commerce, in agriculture, or in mechanics. The government will own everything, and conduct all business in every department and detail. By the government, we mean the people. In the consideration of the question of the attainment of this condition, the source of the power which inaugurates and maintains the social and political transformation, we are diametrically opposed to the agitators in the various departments of so called social and industrial reform.

We have the history of the world as a sure basis of the world's progress. The advancement of human life is governed by the same law of cycles as that which determines the movement of the sign Aries through the Zodiacal belt, or through the ecliptic in the movement called the precession of the equinoxes. The history of the development of modern civilization embraces, as the primal factor of its momentum, the baptism of the world by a power called the Holy Spirit. It produced a revolution in the hearts of men, a radical change of heart in the cognition of the character of Deity and human relation to God, and also changed the conception of the human mind as to the relations of men to each other. This was not merely and solely a theoretical change, for with the change in theory came the power to perform the works of human uses. The theory of love to God and the neighbor was not brought to the world by the Lord Jesus the Christ; it had, however, become as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. The Lord not only emphasized the declaration of a law as old as Deity, but by his power he made it incumbent and possible to fulfil it.

That God is the Father of the righteous man, or that the righteous man is the offspring of Deity, is not new to the world; it is as old as the everlasting hills. As in the days of the Lord the Jews had forgotten it, so now the world generally has lost sight of the fact that God is the Father of the righteous man; and this is because—in the separation, or the divorce, of humanity from God—man has fallen into hell, submitted himself to the hellish law of generation, and is begotten and born of the devil; hence, as he was in the Lord's time, so now he is the offspring of the devil, which accounts for man's opposition to being called the offspring of Deity.

The fact is, the human race has fallen from the condition attained by the church at the beginning of the Christian age, according to the declaration: "That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first." The fall has come, and now—at the end of this age, as in its beginning—there will be instituted a new church. It is upon the basis of our knowledge of the law of seed time and harvest in anthropostic progress, as in the physical world, that we predicate our predictions of the institution of a new church in the earth. There is no Fatherhood of God to such as are not regenerated from God; and no brotherhood of man with such as are begotten of the devil and perform his works. "Ye are of your father the devil, and the works of your father ye will do," said the Lord; and there has been no improvement in the status of love in the human heart since the fall of the Christian church.

The world makes a mistake when it imagines the possibility of a social and economical evolution of society. If all the socialists and anarchists of the world could unite in the formation of a distinct party, the socialists themselves would be surprised at its numerical weakness. New conditions of society have never come in that way, and especially at the termination of cycles does the law of organic progress fix its seal in the specific nucleus of a new beginning. Rome, one of the greatest empires the world has projected, did not originate in the general evolution of social and political progress, but by the involution of the genius who conceived the project of founding a city. It began in the brains of the consummate genius who drove the stake and who, through the force of persistence, perfected and executed the enterprise, and imparted the pneumatic and psychic energy of that genius to the succeeding generations giving character to the Latin race.

The Lord Jesus was the greatest of the world's products. In him were involved the vital and vitalizing potentialities of an evolution so distinct from the ordinary tendencies of the human mind and life, as to distinguish the Lord as the immortal one, the one from above, while all others were from beneath. Those who are to comprise the primary stones of the new Temple, the heart of the Empire of Righteousness, will in no wise be backward in the recognition of the Christ as the archetype of the evolving genus, the Father-Mother of the race of sons of God who are to become the nucleus of a new foundation, the beginning of the crowning dispensation of the ages.

In the commencement of every dispensation there occurs a re-union or re-marriage of God and man. This re-union is a re-tying, and is expressed in the term religion, a word which signifies to bind or tie again. The end of every age or dispensation finds the church in a state of adultery. This occasions the divorce of God and man, which manifests itself also in the divorce of church and state. The complete divorce of church and state marks the end of the dispensation, and therefore the time for a re-tying, marriage or religion (re-ligare), hence, the time referred to in Revelation; namely, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."

Social evolutionists look for a final unfoldment of the human family into adjusted social and political states universally insuring the happiness of mankind, but so far they have failed to locate the germ or seed of such evolution.

Mrs. Earnest's Experience in Co-Operative Effort.

L. E. BORDEN.

MRS. EARNEST had a natural bias toward co-operation. She is a Koreshan now, but long before she heard of the Bureau of Equitable Commerce, she used to besiege her friends with schemes which they deemed Quixotic, all tending to simplify the present mode of living, through united effort. The prejudice which she had to face, gave her a vivid conception of the selfishness that lurks in the heart of poor humanity.

By dint of patient exertions, she persuaded the ladies up and down Auburn street, where she lives, to form a co-operative sewing-circle, that met at the different houses in turn, every Thursday afternoon. For a time, the sewing-circle was very popular, and more than one tired mother of many children welcomed such a lift with her fall or spring sewing, and looked with grateful eyes at the pile of little garments that a single meeting had left ready for wear. Being a progressive woman, anxious to devise ways and means of further benefit to the community, Mrs. Earnest next hit upon a brilliant idea.

"I tell you what it is, ladies," she exclaimed eagerly, one bright summer day, when the sewing-circle met at her house and various members of the society were grouped about her shady verandah, all busily working, while the whirl of two sewing-machines sounded cheerfully from the parlors, "what we ought to have, is co-operative housekeeping. We might have a common kitchen and dining-room right here on this street. I am sure we could save money by inviting our friends, and only think how it would lighten our labors, and how much time we could save for reading and study!"

Mrs. Earnest expected that a chorus of delighted voices would welcome her project, but a dead silence followed, which showed her that for some reason or other, her words had fallen amiss.

"You don't seem very enthusiastic," she added dryly, after waiting a moment for some one to speak. "What's the matter with the idea?"

"Oh, my dear," objected Mrs. Ames, "you forget the men. They never would stand it in the world."

"No, indeed!" said a frail, consumptive looking woman, with great decision. "My husband thinks that nobody's bread but mine is fit to eat. When we go up to his brother's to tea, he makes me do up a couple of slices in a napkin and carry them over for him. Ezry's wife don't mind it now, though she was kinder put out about it at first."

"I think it's only natural for a man to like his wife's cooking best. I know Hiram wouldn't give up my apple-pie. He wants it three times a day, but he never touches pie away from home," chimed in another voice. "No, Mrs. Earnest, there's no use in talking about a co-operative kitchen, and meals in common. Why, the men would all be quarreling over the best cuts of meat. It wouldn't work."

That was the general verdict, although they were ready to admit that the co-operative plan would greatly reduce both labor and expense. Poor Mrs. Earnest found that appetite is the stronghold of selfishness. It was easy to see that those women would be quite as unwilling as their husbands to sacrifice the family larder, no matter how much their strength might be taxed to fill its groaning shelves. A sadder and a wiser woman, she said good-bye to the delightful project which she had fancied was sure to find favor in the eyes of her neighbors. The sewing-circle still remained to comfort her in the midst of disappointment, but alas! even that was doomed. The fatal day soon came when Mrs. Chester brought her sister to the meeting, and proposed her name for membership.

Now, it was well known that in former days Mrs. Chester's sister had deviated from the straight and narrow path of virtue. Nobody had anything to say against her now, and what with her drunken husband and crippled boy, the poor little woman had need enough of friends and sympathy; but at her advent, a majority of the staid and respectable matrons of Auburn street, made haste to gather up the skirts of their garments lest the touch of hers should contaminate them. In vain Mrs. Earnest begged and pleaded, protesting that while they ran no moral danger themselves, from the newcomer, they might be of the greatest service to her. It was written that the sewing-circle should split upon the rock of Mrs. Chester's sister.

After this experience of the rarity of Christian charity, Mrs. Earnest was too discouraged to start any more co-operative enterprises. She felt convinced that human nature was too selfish to be led into better conditions, and must struggle on, bearing its load as best it might. When she heard of the Koreshan movement, she was swift to welcome it, as holding the only solution of the problem, since it provides for the transformation of the individual as prerequisite to the establishment of social order.

"I am a Koreshan," she told her friends, "because I feel that, so far as I press toward these ideals, I am already growing more unselfish, and because I believe with all my heart, that through this truth God is going to baptize the world. When I join the Unity, I shall remember that those people are not yet baptized, but like me, they are only waiting in hope."

Setting aside entirely the question of the Christ or Messianic principle of salvation for the race, the economy of nature is practically a failure if, in the progress of evolution as working through human development, the world is not to advance to the practical establishment of such a kingdom of righteous and divine brotherhood as is prophetically involved in the Lord's prayer.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE TRIUMPHAL entry into Rome by Titus, after the destruction of Jerusalem, is outdone by the home-coming of Admiral Dewey. Nearly 5,000,000 people filled New York to overflowing; and the magnificent demonstration of America's reverence for the modern hero is unparalleled in all history. The strong man stood amazed, tearful, and speechless,—almost overwhelmed at the marvelous display; and he was overjoyed when he passed under the triumphal arch on Madison Square. In the hearts of the American people, Admiral Dewey stands foremost in war and in peace. The magnificent display in New York is of startling significance; the people demand a tangible man to worship—a hero that fulfils the popular ideal of integrity and bravery. All through the history of the world, people have had their heroes; and they have worshiped them with greater pomp and display than they have ever manifested in the worship of an unknown god. Man is disposed to love heroes who succeed in achieving deeds of valor; who display marvelous courage, and manifest strength of character which commands respect. We find here an indisputable evidence that man instinctively worships man; the heart of man responds to the noble in the knowable, and pays tribute to the tangible. It is impossible to worship imaginary characteristics which do not exist in humanity; an unknown god in the sky has never been able to call forth from the human heart such outbursts of enthusiasm as was displayed in the presence of the American Admiral in the East! Man cannot worship that which is unknown, nor that which is beyond the possibility of his attainment. The objective goal must be the object of his own aspiration. Man can love the climax of human attainment, because his heart responds in hope of being what his object of worship is. The world demands a genuine Hero, and the genuine Hero is about to be manifest to the world. He is not an insignificant hero, whose principal achievement is the destruction of the power of a single nation; but the Man who has power to overcome death,—man's greatest and most formidable enemy! The time is coming when the world will appreciate the marvelous truth that the perfect man is God. The Almighty is unveiling himself to modern minds; and the hour is approaching when he will merge forth from mortality, the great living Hero of the ages, to stimulate the world to life and happiness! The greatest possible force that a circumference of humanity can ever generate, the greatest tide of love that can ever flow from heart to heart, will be in the worship of the coming human God! Myths will sink into insignificance, when the revelation of the mysteries of the Maker of man bursts forth in its effulgence, to dispel the night of ignorance. The brilliant light will soon pour forth from the great anthropostic Sun, to whom the people will exultingly point and exclaim: "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us!"

The different languages of the world are expressions of different qualities of life which obtain in humanity; because language is one form of expression of life—the other form being the human form, spoken through processes of the generation of man. Both language and life originate in the same organ in the human brain; the organ which controls the tongue, the organ of speech, is the initial point from which the entities proceed in the direction of generation. The specific quality of life of a people determines its language. In the study of a language, we come in touch with the spirit of the people in whom the language originated. The Sanscrit takes us back to the ancients who spoke the Sanscrit language. The Latin language is the expression of the life of the Romans. Koreshanity deals specifically with the ethnological factors of the development of the different languages, and traces the English language through specific ethnological channels, and reveals the fact that the great factor in the development of the Anglo-Saxon race and language, was the life of Jesus the Messiah, transmitted from generation to generation through specific lines in the great westward march of civilization. The English language is clothed in Latin forms—in Latin letters. The theology of Christendom came from Rome; and the life of the Anglo-Saxon peoples has been sifted through the peoples of the great Roman empire. Jesus, the great Word, was spoken into the human race; and the great stream of superior mental force and life potencies, through a period of nineteen hundred years, has changed the character, life, and language of millions and millions of people. The history, language, and ethnological development of the English and American peoples are scientifically explained from the basis of the fundamentals of the cross of God and man, which has obtained during the Christian dispensation. The mind and force of one Man, projected into humanity, through Messianic function, from the positive pole of impulse, has wrought all the marvels of the nineteenth century. The baptism of the world with divine potencies has borne its fruit in the Science which constitutes the ultimates of truth and life, the true interpretation of the language of God, as expressed in the physical cosmos, in the Bible, and in the universe of humanity.

Great Britain stands at the zenith of her glory; she possesses territory in both the eastern and the western hemisphere. She controls the world's commerce, and she controls the world's time. It is noon-time with Great Britain; her capital is on the great meridian of the equinoctial colure, over which the sun is at noon on March 21, the beginning of spring. The zenith point of the sun in the physical heavens at that time, is the beginning of astronomical right ascension. The world's longitude is reckoned east and west from the meridian of Greenwich, the great astronomical observatory in London. On the opposite side of the earth, 180° east or west, is the meridian which constitutes the boundary line between the eastern and western hemispheres; at this meridian, day begins and ends. The calendar day which prevails throughout the world of marine activity is derived from London time; and London is the capital of the great maritime nation. America rivals England; the great Eagle has, during the past year, spread his wings over the longitude of 180°. America has become a sea power, and is in position to control the Pacific, the peaceful ocean. America broods over the elements of peace; the noon mark is about to be reached in American history. The United States has crossed the line at which day begins and ends; it has reached just as far west from 180° longitude, in its possession of the Philippines, as Washington City is west from London. The time is at hand when America will succeed England in dominating the seas and in controlling the world's commerce; and the ascendancy of America to universal power will change the world's geography and the world's time; it will revolutionize the world, and mark the beginning of a New Era in humanity.

During the past one hundred and twenty-five years, a score or more republics have come into existence, growing out of complex conditions which had obtained in the monarchies of Europe. The fact of the existence of modern republics is of stupendous import; it indicates that we are on the border-lines of a new era.

There are specific cycles of human life, and corresponding epochs of history. Two thousand years ago the great Jewish dispensation was drawing to a close; the equinoctial colure was nearing the terminal star in the constellation Aries, ready to cross over into Pisces, the new astronomical field of solar progress. At the same time, the great republic of Rome, the only republic in all the world at that time, was about to end. The time came in the history of Rome when imperialism was demanded; and imperialism came with the Cæsars. From the time of the breaking-down of the Roman republic, there was not another great republic until the American republic was established. Another age has passed; and the close of the Christian dispensation is notably marked by the existence of republics. The equinoctial is passing from Pisces to Aquarius. We are entering upon a new era in humanity, and a new government is demanded; and it will come! We are on the border-lines of a new dispensation. A new man is about to become a factor in the world's history, as stupendous a factor as was Jesus—and more; for even greater works than Jesus did, will he do. The signs are in the physical heavens; in the progress of humanity; in the Bible; in the current events of the world; and in the remarkable and astonishing historical parallel of dispensational times and factors, as manifest in the ancient and the modern republics.

The world is full of incompetent specialists who have not the mental ability to formulate a complete system of science, embracing all departments of human research and investigation. The astronomer can find nothing in his theory suggestive of a consistent system of human government; he finds no keys to theology nor cosmogony. The politician leaves the subject of morals and religion to the priest; and the priest pursues his work independently of the chemist and the sociologist. The modern scientist is unable to reason from effect to cause, and consequently cannot determine what are the laws of creation. With these diverse fragments, the leaders of the world are drifting; they cannot solve the great problems of the universe. Without a knowledge of the laws which govern the physical cosmos, the social reformer is unable to determine the character of the social order which would scientifically relate the individual to the world of man. Koreshanity is a complete system in itself; it is not a fragment; it is not a fad; it is not a fallacy. It is the unveiling of the universe, of cause and effect, the Creator and the created. It is science, religion, sociology, and industrial and political economy in one. Knowledge is power; and the knowledge of the universe is the power that will ultimately rule the world, when the knowledge of Koreshanity becomes universal.

Truth, in its descent from the great anthropotic Sun of nineteen hundred years ago, through the mental atmospheres of humanity, passes through transmutations analogous to the changes which the energies from the central sun of the physical cosmos undergo in their transmission to the earth. The qualities of solar energies change with the character of the media of transmission. The sunlight becomes of use to the external world, when it passes into the external atmosphere; so truth that is susceptible of being applied to human life, is science transmitted through the central atmospheres of the mind, to the external mind or intellect. Koreshan Science is intellectual, the scientific result of the radiation of the energies of truth from the central human Sun, into the soul of humanity. It is the external truth, through which the body of man may be redeemed and made immortal. As science, it is susceptible of practical application to human affairs and relations, embracing social, industrial, commercial, and political domains. True science is the light of the mind; it is the illumination of the external atmosphere of the world of humanity.

The idea that the universe is spacially infinite is absurd. The common theory is that an infinite God created an infinite universe. The very proposition that he once began such a universe, contradicts the conclusion; for it is obvious that if he began a universe which he determined to be infinite, he could never make it so, either in time or in space, because he could never complete it. The universe is complete, hence finite, limited. A universe in which there is more work to do to extend it farther into space, could not be limitless; and according to the usual conception, no matter how far the universe might be extended, there would still be room for other worlds beyond. If the Almighty had begun trillions of ages ago filling infinite space with worlds, radially, at the rate of trillions of miles per second, there would still be infinitely more space beyond than at any other time could be filled with matter! The infinite world theory is irrational and absurd, and will soon be supplanted by the rational and demonstrable conception that the universe of existence is necessarily limited.

How changeful is the old church of Rome! The church of "infallible doctrines" changes in her attitude to the world to suit the circumstances. After centuries of temporal power and sovereignty in the world, after ruling over the kings of Europe in various shades of unity of church and state as ostensible phases of the divine kingdom, with a tangible representative of the King of kings, it has been found necessary, in the fight for power in America, to make the claim that the Roman church is supremely democratic! The "infallible" church, in both conduct and doctrine, that could persecute Copernicus and Galileo for promulgating new astronomical views, and afterward accept the very views which it had decided to be heretical, is certainly consistent enough to assume any new face that it sees fit to make for the sake of policy!

The laws of social architecture and construction are analogous to the laws of world-building. The great basis of all universal activity is the form of the physical cosmos. In the cosmos, there are specific laws of order and relation, and specific functions of every part; these laws of order, relation, and function are natural, because the cosmos is natural. The great social structure of the coming age will be constructed after the pattern of the physical universe. With such a basis, social reconstruction becomes a science; without it, it can only be a chimerical scheme, unworthy of the name of scientific socialism, and incapable of reforming the world. Koreshan Sociology is scientific, founded upon the laws inherent and ever active in man and cosmos.

The modern scientist is not touching the vital issues of the hour! He is not able to do so. As evidence that he is not, we appeal to any of the scientific conventions held during the present century. In a recent scientific gathering at Columbus, O., a discussion of the "gadfly" was listened to; phases of zoology, geology, and other things remote from the vital questions which concern humanity. The astronomical world is concerned about "other worlds;" the theologian, about the "land beyond the skies;" and the politicians make for themselves palatial homes in this one. Meanwhile, the people are concerned about practical redemption from industrial and political slavery. Koreshanity is astronomical, theological, and sociological, the science of all true reform; it is the hope of the world.

While the Czar's olive branch is waving, revolutions are occurring in Venezuela, Peru, and Santo Domingo; Great Britain is on the verge of war with the Boers; America is fighting the Filipinos, and Russia threatens to seize a portion of India. Spain is bordering on anarchy; Servia and Montenegro threaten war with each other; cabinets of a score of nations change every six months because of internal difficulties; strikes are becoming more numerous and violent. Social, industrial, and commercial fields are being shaken from center to circumference. World-wide revolution is ominous; the signs are appearing in all parts of the world!

"Life fills all extension so full that there is no room for death." But the fact remains that death exists, and now prevails in all the world. The world is so full of death and fallacy, that there is scarcely any room for life and truth. The greatest battle of the universe is the battle of life and death. Only through the recognition of the fact that death exists, can death be overcome; its cause must be discovered, and its roots eradicated from man. If there is no evil, no death, and no fallacy in the world, what is there to reform? What is there to overcome?

All through the ages of the earth's long night of ignorance, both the people and their kings have been unjust. Jesus informed the Jews that their fathers killed the prophets, and then the children built monuments in memory of the martyrs. The great Macaulay said that the world enthrone its oppressors and crucifies its saviors. Whom have the people of modern civilization placed in power? The men who have the money. The money kings are honored; they live in luxury, with the fruit of the labor of millions in their possession!

The church war is breaking out again in England; thousands of British churchmen are becoming more concerned over the use of candles and incense at church service than they are concerning actual, practical service to humanity. While the church dignitaries are quarreling over religious customs which a corrupt daughter has derived from her Catholic mother, the people are becoming disgusted with the vagaries of modern Christianity!

Materialists say that all is matter; there is no spirit. The christian scientists assert that all is spirit; there is no matter. The two theories are antitheses, and occupy extremes; each denies the other necessary half of the universe. The universe is composed of both spirit and matter; and the true science of the universe must necessarily be the science of both states or domains to which substance is convertible. Anything short of this is fallacious.

The contention of the anti-imperialists is a superficial issue. They strain at the gnats which they observe in the American policy of expansion, and swallow the great camels of competition which create the social, industrial, commercial, and political conditions through which the gnats exist.

The English Lion cannot get glory out of a conflict with the Boers; but he may obtain gold and diamonds from the South African mines.

The sowing of Jesus in humanity nineteen hundred years ago, was the fall of Lucifer, the bright and morning Star, from heaven to hell.

The knowledge of God is limited; when he knows all things, he knows all there is to know, and can know no more.

The science of all truth is the telescope that brings the universe close to the eyes of the truth-seeker.

Koreshanity is the unity of idealism and realism; the unity of truth and life in the tangible Man.

The trust is the climax of capitalism under the system of competition and democracy.

Typhoons of a false commercialism are preparing to sweep across the sea of humanity.

The diamonds of the mind are more valuable than the diamonds of the mine.

Dewey is the hero of the hour; he is not the hero of the age.

Only those who desire the truth will be attracted by it.

The trusts trust in the fictitious gold god.

Koreshan Science Contains No Hypotheses Nor Inconsistencies.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I will say that you are right about concavity; your Chicago experiments of August 27 prove it. The mathematical theory, however, is wrong. I have caught the key, and will now go on to develop it.

I write you about your experiments, which I have been carefully considering lately. It is obvious that they agree with each other, and give conclusive testimony that we are living upon the inside surface of a spheroidal earth. I have carefully examined again, the account of the Rectilinear survey, and it seems accurate enough to prove that the earth is hollow. But granting that, the new determinations of the laws of light must logically follow from the premise; and the explanations given are not consistent deductions from the premise, and contradict each other in every way. In fact, the cosmogonic theories of KORESH are as full of hypotheses as any other system; and so far as I have seen, he expects people to accept them, not as hypotheses, but as truths. I say this, because I know the truth as far as I have gone in developing the system of cosmogony from the basis of the concave arc; and the truth is not in accordance with the theories of KORESH. On the convex hypothesis, constant new hypotheses have to be made, while on the concave hypothesis, each new law and fact of observation forces mathematically, the only correct explanation of the facts.

If you will carefully consider the enclosed demonstration, and discuss it in THE FLAMING SWORD, I think it would be of profit. It would be too bad to have what is certainly the most important series of experiments of the world's history, spoiled by incorrect explanations.—W. L. A., Black Hall, Conn.

It would indeed, be too bad to have the Koreshan series of scientific experiments spoiled by incorrect explanations, for it would spoil the entire System as it is now promulgated; and this is exactly the reason why the entire System should be left in the hands of the Discoverer of the form and function of the universe, and not left to be developed by a man who has been reading Koreshan literature and investigating a few of its conclusions, for only about six months! To whatever extent the mind fails to perceive the absolute harmony of premise and conclusion in every branch of the System, it fails to understand it; and the inconsistencies which seem to the above writer to exist in the Koreshan System, are but the palpable contradictions of his own illogical conclusions.

Koreshanity is a complete system of science; it is already developed, and is in accordance with the facts at every point. The only way in which it can be developed further, is by practical application of it to human affairs. There can be no true explanation of phenomena until the absolute science of optics and physics is understood; all of the factors and functions of vision must be known. So far as we can observe in several letters, the above writer does not manifest that he has the slightest conception of the laws of visual impression. In the several attempted explanations of our many experiments, perspective foreshortening is left out of the question entirely. We are glad that any one can, to any extent, perceive truth in the Koreshan Astronomy; but we must caution the investigator against jumping at irrational conclusions from the premise. Koreshan physics and optics are in strict harmony with the fundamental premise that the earth's surface is concave; for in these branches it is scientifically determined and defined just how the concave universe produced the phenomena that we observe. We will shortly begin a series of articles on perspective foreshortening and the laws of vision, for the purpose of demonstrating from the standpoint of optics, and through the mathematical factors of optics involved, the actual concavity of the earth.

We have carefully looked over and considered the so called "demonstration," referred to above. A ridiculous mistake is made concerning the transmission of light from the objects beyond the horizon viewed by means of the telescope. Only last week, we published an attempt at the defense of the Copernican system—the assumption that the telescope so curved the rays of light from the objects over the summit of the convex water, as to bring the objects into view; this subterfuge was resorted to, because it is obvious that it is impossible to see through a hill of water. But now we have the conclusion before us, that in all our experiments wherein targets and ships' hulls were restored to view by means of the telescope, we saw through the water—not water in the form of a convex dome, but through water which is concave! A number of geometrical formulæ were used in connection with the index of refraction in water, resulting in the tracing of an imaginary path for a single ray of light through air and water. The object of this "explanation" is to explain how the horizon of the telescope appears to be more distant than the horizon of the naked eye.

The conclusion that we saw through miles of water is preposterous. It is impossible to see more than a few feet into the water of Lake Michigan, and certainly not more than a few inches into the black water of the Chicago river which flows through the Old Drainage Canal, on which some of our experiments were performed. If, instead of the surface being water, in our recent experiments, it were smooth ground surface, curving at the same ratio, the same phenomena of the horizon would have resulted. We have the facts of similar experiments being conducted on Lake Geneva covered with ice and snow, making the surface absolutely impervious to vision. Such an argument as is put forth by our correspondent would be ridiculous if used by a Copernican advocate, to prove that we could see through the bulge; it is all the more ridiculous when used by any one having reached the conclusion that the surface of the earth is concave. The inconsistencies of our friend are worse than the blunders of our opponents! Try again.

Koreshan Cosmogony vs. the Plane Theory.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I notice that you combat sphericity with concavity; and as I have been reading a good deal concerning the idea of the earth being more or less flat, neither convex nor concave, I wish you had more fully explained where the flat idea is wrong, as set forth by many in England and America during the past 30 years. However, I shall look up your book again soon, and try to better understand it.—A. E. H., London, England.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I must say that the Koreshan theory of the concave earth is startling, and seems to be unanswerable; but your theory regarding the heavens is beyond my comprehension. I want fuller explanation. I do not understand your theory of eclipses, the moon's lunations and phases, the seasons, co-ordinate altitudes and latitudes, solar time, etc. At present I am not concerned about your other views, but I would like first, to get the geographical and astronomical questions settled in my own mind. Advocates of the flat earth theory maintain that there is no long night in the south polar regions, corresponding to that in the north; and that navigation in southern seas can only be explained by supposing that the meridians diverge south of the equator. I had almost made up my mind to accept the flat earth theory; but now I am all upset again. Can you help me to solve my astronomical difficulties?—E. B. S., Winnipeg, Man.

The only way to determine whether or not any system is true or false, is by actual test of its premise; if the premise is wrong, the system cannot be true. The experiments of Parallax in England were sufficient to prove that the earth is not convex; but he did not possess the science of optics, and consequently was not able to demonstrate the earth's true contour from the basis of his experiments. He assumed that the earth is flat. We are thoroughly acquainted with the flat earth theory, and have all the published details of experiments and observations used against the convex idea.

The series of experiments conducted by the Koreshan Geodetic Staff, covered a wider range than the experiments of Parallax; our tests were more crucial. We have tested the earth's contour mechanically, by means of the actual survey of a straight line. The rectiline did not indicate a convex surface; it did not run parallel with a flat earth; but was a chord of arc. In other words, an absolutely straight line from one part of the earth to another is over a concave surface, farthest from the arc in the middle of the chord. The ratio of the earth's concave curvature we determined to be about 8 inches to the mile.

The flat earth idea is fundamentally wrong. It is only a departure from the Copernican system, not the antithesis of the popular fallacy. We maintain that the universe is a great cell; that all life is cellular—generated within a cell, and that the great universe, an aggregation of all cells, is a great cellular structure; its metallic environ being the firmament spoken of by Moses. The Koreshan conclusions are reached through analytical, analogical, synthetical, mathematical, and geometrical processes; and demonstrated by actual views of the earth's concavity, and actual test of the contour by mechanical means.

The System is revolutionary; it explains all phenomena from an entirely new basis. It is difficult for a mind not familiar with the laws of vision, perspective, and alchemy to reach conclusions from the basis of the concave earth, without the assistance of Koreshan teachers. We can certainly settle in the mind of all candid investigators, all difficulties encountered in the study in any part of the universe; but it requires much study on the part of the enquirer,—an examination of the details of the form and functions of the great alchemico-organic structure in which we live. The investigator must take time to digest what we have published in years past; the files of THE FLAMING SWORD, which we can supply, are full of explanations of all these questions; and we hope during the coming year, to make still further and clearer explanations of astronomical phenomena, including eclipses, the mysteries of the moon, the orbit of the sun, planetary motions, and other astronomical questions.

The advocates of the flat earth enormously exaggerate the facts concerning the distances in the extreme south. The usual "proof" that the meridians continue to diverge in the south, is the famous voyage of H. M. S. Challenger, traversing the distance of 69,000 miles in three years. This is only a part of the truth. It was on a sounding expedition; and its zig-zag path from point to point, making cross lines in going from point to point, touching at various islands and points of land, covered the distance of 69,000 miles in a concave cell, 8,000 miles in diameter. The facts are embodied in the reports of the voyage, contained in volumes in any large city library. The vessel was not lost; its path is mapped out. The distance in miles can be traced on a map of the concave earth; and it fits in such an earth; if the same route had been made on a flat earth, nearly 50,000 in circumference, the voyage would have been nearly 150,000 miles!

Every southern navigator who has ever crossed the Antarctic circle asserts that long night obtains in the south the same as in the north; and in December of each year, the sun can be seen in the south at midnight, looking over the south pole, just the same as it can be seen in the north at midnight in June. The facts can be had from volumes in libraries.

We have the time tables of a number of the world's great steamship companies, who circumnavigate the southern regions scores of times every year. They loop the south pole; they sail from England, around Cape Good Hope, eastward to Australia, then through Oceanica, to Cape Horn, and return to England in less than 80 days, covering only 24,000 miles; whereas on a flat earth, the distance covered would be 42,000 miles. No navigator would think of such a conclusion; because it does not fit the facts!

Koreshan Astro-Anthroposophy and Solar Biology.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—THE FLAMING SWORD is, to me, worth all my other papers put together. It is all meat, and strong meat at that. KORESH is the most forceful writer in the world today.

I annex a question, which I think is of general interest: Does Koreshanity leave undisturbed (like eclipses), Astrology and Solar Biology?—J. D. P., Kingston, Ont.

Thinking people are beginning to recognize the force of the truth of Koreshanity. It is the only rational system in all the world, because it is the only system of science that is founded upon a demonstrated premise; all others are founded on hypotheses. It solves all the great problems which have puzzled the world for ages. Knowledge is power; and the knowledge of the universe and its laws, enables the Koreshan scientific Prophet to write with a force of expression unequalled by any other writer in either ancient or modern times.

If we understand the above question, it is to inquire whether Koreshanity accepts modern astrology, or has it an astrology of its own. Koreshan Astrology is just as radically revolutionary as is its Astronomy. Scientific astrology must have for its basis, a specific understanding of the physical cosmos and its relation to man; and we hold that modern astrologers do not possess such an understanding.

We do not leave undisturbed the theory of eclipses taught in the astronomical world. The cause of eclipses, both of the sun and of the moon, is radically different from that conceived by the astronomers. The earth being a cell, it can never come between the sun and the moon to cast a shadow on the lunar surface. The moon does not shine by reflecting the sun's direct rays. The moon possesses a light of her own. The moon is projected from the earth's shell, and is the earth's image in the physical heavens. When the moon is eclipsed, dark discs in the earth's shell, moving between the metallic strata, cut off the energies which form the moon; hence the eclipse, or cutting-off.

Koreshan Astro-Anthroposophy is of greater utility and covers a greater scope than is possible to modern astrology. It takes into consideration not only the position of the planets in right ascension, but also the laws of solar and planetary precessions and cycles, as related to human progress. The universe of humanity is the primary effect of Cause, and the physical cosmos is the secondary effect. Humanity and the alchemico-organic world are correlated and co-ordinated, because they both have their origin in the same Cause. The astronomical epochs of solar precession agree exactly with the epochs and dispensations of human progress and history. Every man is born under a certain star; but the star that directly influences him is a human star, which in its motion and character, corresponds to some particular star in the physical heavens. Because man and cosmos are analogous, scientific observation and analysis of stars may determine the character of the mental influences which conspired to bring the man into existence, and therefore may determine the character of the man.

The human world is superior to the alchemico-organic world; the superior must rule the inferior. Instead of the physical stars influencing and ruling in humanity, the stars in the physical heavens derive their impulses from humanity, and therefore, the true relation of man and cosmos forces exactly opposite conclusions to those entertained by astrologers, who have lost the keys of astrological analysis of human character, relations, and life.

Koreshans Surprise and Puzzle Their Old Friends by Positive Acceptance of Koreshanity.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Recently, I had the pleasure of meeting an old friend past sixty-five years of age, who is a very enthusiastic Dunkard. We have talked on many good things from the written Word betimes; but on this occasion my conversation was so different to him, he looked at me with surprise, and remarked "You are badly side tracked." I kindly said in response, "I have simply left the side track of fallacy, and am now on the straight, main track, where truth, by my obedience, will make me free."

At the time, I had before me a copy of THE SWORD of August 18, 1899, and at a suitable time in our conversation, I read to him the answer to the query under the head, "There is None Good but God." During the reading he frequently interrupted by saying, "That is not in the Bible!" I kindly bade him give careful attention. When I finished he exclaimed, "Why, that fellow speaks as one assuming authority. Beware of false Christs!" I said, "It is apparent that you are no more receptive to truth than that young lawyer nineteen hundred years ago, or you would have recognized the scientific mind from which that answer emanated, which teaches the doctrine of Emanuel,—God with us, tangible, in the external world."

"You should not read every wind of doctrine," he said, "and allow your mind to become poisoned; but adhere to your Bible." "Just so," I replied; "through the Scientific System of KORESH, I am being enabled to solve many heretofore dark, Scriptural sayings that none but rational minds receive." At this juncture, I propounded a few questions. He would reply by saying, "I don't know! You are prying into something that no man will ever know! The mysteries of the kingdom are far beyond man's comprehension."

"Then it manifests that you worship an unknown quantity in the church of agnosticism," I kindly replied; "and the Christ of the Living God, who was a man, and involved the mysteries of creation. He was the veritable Creator!" He left me saying, "You are badly off; however, I would like to have the paper (THE SWORD) you just read from." I promised to get some and mail him one.—C. D. In the Field of Koreshan Propaganda.

Weekly Synopsis of Topics Discussed by Koreshan Lecturers.

Koreshan Hall, 316 W. 63d St., Chicago.

THURSDAY EVENING, SEPT. 28.—Lecture on Astronomy, by Prof U. G. Morrow. To any one believing the Copernican system to be established upon an absolutely demonstrated premise, this lecture must have been a revelation. A court of inquiry was instituted to show cause why the Copernican system of astronomy should not longer be enumerated in the category of the sciences. Witnesses for the plaintiff: The published admissions of such authorities as Professors Newcomb, Proctor, Young, Peabody, and other eminent astronomers. Witnesses for the defense: The accepted proofs of the earth's convexity. Jury: the audience.

It is claimed for the Copernican system, that it explains phenomena. So also did the Tyconic and Ptolemaic systems, centuries ago. One of the first witnesses called to the stand in this connection was Prof. Proctor, whose testimony is as follows (see "Astronomy," Encyclopedia Britannica, Vol. II, page 777): "It is not too much to say that Tycho's system is not only fully equal to the Copernican in its fitness to explain the observed relations, but that, until the law of gravitation had been established, the arguments for the Tychonic system, modified so as to correspond to Kepler's discovery of the shapes of the different orbits, were almost equal in weight to those used by the disciples of Copernicus."

Prof. Woodhouse next testifies: "When we consider that the advocates of the earth's stationary position can account for and explain the celestial phenomena as accurately, to their own thinking, as we can to ours, in addition to which they have the evidences of their senses, which we have not, and Scriptures and facts in their favor, which we have not, it is not without some show of reason that they maintain the superiority of their system. Whereas, we must be content at present, to take for granted the truth of the hypothesis of the earth's motion for one thing. We shall never, indeed, arrive at a time when we shall be able to pronounce it absolutely proved to be true. * * * However perfect our theory may appear, in our estimation, and however satisfactorily the Newtonian hypothesis may seem to account for all celestial phenomena, yet we are here compelled to admit the astounding truth, that if our premise be disputed and our facts challenged, the whole range of astronomy does not contain the proofs of its own accuracy."

The generally accepted proofs of the earth's convexity were next disposed of, as demonstrating nothing more than the earth's sphericity, and far more satisfactorily accounted for from the concave basis. That the idea of convexity far antedates the time of Copernicus, is evidenced by Prof. Newcomb, who says: "Ptolemy's proofs that the earth is round are still found in our school-books at the end of seventeen hundred years."

Among the subjects explained, both from the Koreshan and Copernican basis, were the following: Eclipses; distance of the sun; the tides; day and night; the seasons; vanishing of ship's hulls; velocity of light; and apparent concavity of the heavens.

SUNDAY, OCT. 1, 3 P. M.—Sermon by Rev. Berthaldine. Subject: Reincarnation, or the Resurrection of the Dead. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Jesus appeared in the beginning of the dispensation as the archetype of a new genus or race. By theocrasis his body was dissolved and converted to Holy Spirit, this spirit being the seed planted in humanity, which is to ultimate in the multiplied harvest (the sons of God) at the end of the age now culminating. These are they which have been made alive in Christ the resurrection.

MONDAY EVENING, OCT. 2.—Lecture on Astronomy by Prof. Morrow. Forceful and interesting from beginning to end, from premise to the conclusion that the earth is the only physical world. Facts of the most common observation were used in demonstration. The entire lecture pencilled in the direction of a remarkable conclusion—a startling demonstration, an astonishing and unlooked for climax of argument. A remarkable correspondence was shown to exist between the physical heavens and the earth; facts of corresponding poles, equators, ecliptics, Zodiacs, longitudes, and latitudes. The twelve constellations of the Zodiac were shown to correspond to particular locations in the earth—the signs in the earth, located as to longitude and latitude, and pointed out on the map. It was proven that there are vastly more stars in the northern hemisphere of the heavens, corresponding to the northern land hemisphere of the earth.

The final demonstration, the climax and culmination of the unanswerable line of logic, was the correspondence between the Milky Way and earth's great American and Asiatic mountain ranges. Striking maps of the heavens and the earth were exhibited by means of charts; the Milky Way was shown to follow in the heavens, exactly the same direction that the mountain ranges extend in the earth, proving the specific relation of the heavens and the earth, and the conclusion that the earth is the only physical world.

SATURDAY EVENING Sept. 30.—Halsted and 63d sts. Subject: Modern Religious Fads. Various schemes of salvation were touched upon, all of which and but partial and disintegrative. Everywhere, people are demanding a practical religion; one that does not speculate concerning "mansions in the skies," but which deals with the affairs of men here in the earth. Koreshanity brings to the world today a constructive religion, instituting the new heavens and earth (church and state), wherein dwelleth righteousness.

TUESDAY EVENING, Oct. 3.—State and Quincy Sts. Subject: The Apex of all Discoveries,—the Universe. The meeting was rendered doubly interesting by reason of a fine set of charts illustrating both the Koreshan and Copernican Systems of Astronomy. The audience was immense; being so large at times as to tax the efforts of the speaker. Many telling blows were administered to the Copernican system. It was demonstrated to be at variance with true religion and sociology; a system without center or circumference, and devoid of economy in all its parts. Koreshanity is one vast harmony of astronomy, religion, sociology; no note of which is in discord with another. To accept a part is to believe all. Center and circumference being reciprocally related, there is no loss of energy, hence it is self-perpetuating.

Many questions were satisfactorily answered, and a large quantity of literature distributed.—A. H. ANDREWS, Reporter.

In New York State.

REV. U. G. MITCHELL canvasses for Cellular Cosmogony.—Orders books by the hundred; report from Syracuse says, that KORESH is well known there, and many speak highly of him. Canvasser arouses considerable interest and is making progress. Has interviewed the editors. Book purchased by president of Syracuse University, and many prominent people are obtaining copies. Rev. Mitchell addresses Theosophical society on the Cellular Cosmogony, and may talk to the Spiritualists. Leaves books at libraries. Finds considerable agitation in all parts of the state concerning the shape of the earth; a great field is opening to Koreshan workers everywhere.

The Flaming Sword's High Class Exchanges.

Saturday Evening Post, Sept. 30.—We are highly pleased with the appearance of the Fall Fiction number, 32 pages. It is almost typographically perfect, with beautiful covers in colors—a beautiful specimen of the printers' art. It is simply superb; and all students of literature will appreciate this excellent production; its enlargement is evidence of the prosperity of the Post. The principal story is The Freedom of the Sea, by Cyrus Townsend Brady. It is followed by five others by the most popular writers: The Sergeant's Private Madhouse; Under the Eaves; A New Sensation; the Plunger's £1,000 Bank-Notes, and A Stolen Sweetheart. The timely general articles are: Blaine's Life Tragedy, by Ex-Senator Ingalls; the Making of a Journalist, by Julian Ralph; also, Men of Action, and Americans in Paris. Public Occurrences that are Making History, Men and Women of the Hour, and the Editorials, are full of interest. During the coming winter, Hon. Thomas B. Reed, ex-Speaker of the House, will be a frequent contributor to the Post. These papers will, in the main, deal with national affairs, and will form a most important contribution to the history of American politics. Mr. Reed's first paper will appear October 7, Paris and French Justice; it is unlike those that are to follow, in that it crosses the Atlantic and takes up a foreign subject—the Dreyfus case. The Post is a high-class weekly; subscription $2.50 a year; single copies, only 5 cents. 425 Arch street, Philadelphia.

American Monthly Review of Reviews.—Summed up in the October number of this popular magazine, are all of the important events of the world during September; and all the great social and political questions are discussed. In it appears a recapitulation of the Dreyfus case, by W. T. Stead; while the editor discusses the subject of the South African situation; Chicago Trust Conference; Bryan's position on the Silver Question, and the general political issue in the state campaigns now in progress. Chief Quartermaster Pope describes the work of supply departments of the American army in the Philippines. Hon. Thomas L. James, formerly postmaster general, now president of the Lincoln National Bank, New York, writes concerning the New Era of Prosperity, presenting important statistical data bearing on the recent remarkable increase of American export trade, and other phenomena in industrial and commercial lines. Probably the most interesting feature of the current number of the Review of Reviews, as in all others, is, The Progress of the World, by the editor, in which, under subheads, all the important news and subjects now agitating the world, are discussed. No student of current history should be without this valuable monthly review of the world. At news stands; 25 cts. per copy; or $2.50 per year by subscription. 13 Astor Place, New York City.

Popular Science.—A journal of popular science news, astronomy, chemistry, botany, archeology, minerology, hygiene, and general scientific subjects. Makes a specialty of curiosities and oddities discovered in scientific research. The October number contains a description of carnivorous plants, the habits of numerous insects and smaller animals, the heavens for October, the Moon and the Weather, the Expected Star Shower of November 13, Relics of Mastodons, Questions and Answers, etc. $2.00 yearly. 108 Fulton st. New York City.

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO.

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Shepherd of Israel.

A tracing, through well-known ethnic channels, of the fulfilment of the promise of a Shepherd from Joseph to the Gentiles. The key to ethnology and science of racial mixture. Price 10 cents.

Judgment.

A startling and truthful portrayal of the demands of justice—a solution of the sex question. Should be read by every man, woman, and child in the world. A profound scientific work—unlike anything else published. Price 5 cents.

Koreshan Geodetic Service.

Written and published before the Florida Coast Survey, with results shown beforehand. Price 2 cents.

The Covenant of Life.

A concise answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" The first principles, successive steps, the culmination. 2 cents.

A More Literal Exposition

Of the Decalogue—companion pamphlet to Science of the Decalogue, with practical application. 2 cents.

Proclamation.

Woman's liberation proclaimed—the most remarkable document of modern times. 2 cents.

Where Is the Lord?

The mystery of Jesus' ascension uncovered. Explanation of the "Lord's Supper," and demonstration of how the Lord will return. 2 cents.

Other Pamphlets and Leaflets

By Koresh are: Fundamental Principles and the Covenant Defined, Mnemonics, Corresponding Price, The Mission of the Lord, Response to Inquirers, Cardinal Points of Koreshanity; Cellbacy, Symbolism of the Title Page of Flaming Sword, The Law of God, and Koreshan Follum. 2 cents each.

SPECIAL—All of the above 2-cent pamphlets sent by mail, post-paid, for 10 cents.

A few of the above 2-cent pamphlets are out of print, and a few new ones not mentioned are substituted. If any are missing in packages received it is because we cannot now supply them. List will be revised soon.

Koreshan Science of Mental Therapeutics.

Part I.

Metaphysics Defined ; Koreshan Mental Science Differentiated From "Christian Science ;" Supremacy of Mind Over Matter Through Messianic Function.

THE TERM metaphysics is a broad one. It involves all that domain of being and existence which lies beyond nature. The word itself is compounded of two Greek words—meta and phusikos; meta meaning beyond; and phusikos, nature. Therefore, it must comprehend much more than the mere process and domain of healing. In fact, when the domain of metaphysics is completely attained to, there will be no healing to effect with those who have entered into the life of that domain.

It is a prostitution of the term metaphysics, to circumscribe or limit its signification to the single department of healing the sick. Nothing less than abject ignorance, arrogance, or conceit would so diminish the title and its application as to thus prostitute the word. To use the term mental science as applicable only to the healing department of the mental science schema, is equally subversive of the use of words, and as indicative of ignorance or assumption as the present prostitution of the term metaphysics. But to employ the term Christian science, as many are doing, with the above defined limitation, is a more unwarrantable scortation than either of the others.

The term Christian science is more broad and deep than either of the terms above referred to, because it embraces in its significance not only all that is beyond nature,—not only all that the term metaphysics includes, but the genuine science of nature, as well as the beyond nature. Genuine Christian science means the science of immortality, as well as the true science of nature; and the science of immortality means the knowledge of the principles of immortal life and their application to life itself. Jesus the Christ said of himself: "I came to bring life and immortality to light." This does not mean merely that department of science pertaining to physical healing; to relieve suffering,—to mitigate the pangs to which human physical existence is heir, constitutes an important factor in the study and application of the science; but it by no means comprises the whole, nor any considerable part of the system.

The term Christ is the Anglicized Greek word for Anointed, which in Hebrew is Messiah, and applies to the divine personal manifestation in any age of the world. Jesus was the Christ in the supreme sense, because he—being the sixth involution of the presence of the Logos or Word—was the real manifestation of the Jehovah, the very Lord, or God in the flesh. The term has come to be employed by the Christian church, in relation to the word Jesus, as common names are to the proper names of persons; and for that reason, the Christ principle has come to be employed as referring solely to Jesus the Christ.

The Christian age or dispensation terminates with the transposition of the sign in the physical heavens, from the constellation Pisces to the constellation Aquarius; and when the Christian age terminates or closes, the new age is inaugurated. This inauguration will be ushered in through the Messenger of the Covenant of this age, who will bring to the world the genuine science of life, embracing in its scope the healing power as one of its manifestations, but not the greatest, by any means. The present age, the one through which the world has passed, and which now is drawing to its close, has been denominated and known as the Christian age of the world. The succeeding one, the new dispensation, will not be known as the Christian dispensation or age of the world, neither will its system of truth be denominated Christian science.

Jesus came to bring life and immortality to light; but he did not fulfil it for the world, in his advent nineteen hundred years ago. He only fulfils the work when he comes again at the end of the age, to complete the operation for which he then sowed the seed, and which cannot ripen until the harvest, which comes at the end of the world or age. Jesus did not give the science; he only performed his work, and left the world to develop the science of immortality in the order of its progress in scientific achievement.

Koreshanity is broad and deep; and the application of one branch of the System to the removal of bodily infirmities, should not be regarded by any one as the ultima thule of its application. It is not the province of this article to treat upon the Science as a whole, but only to take up that figment of a great system (now badly prostituted by those who are attempting to practice it), and reduce it to its scientific statement. Our present treatise is upon that department solely, which pertains to natural healing, or the correction of physical infirmities; but while such is our purpose, we shall insist upon the differentiation of purely physical healing from that higher purpose of the science of Immortal Life, which culminates in the transformation of the physical and mortal corpuscle to the corpuscle of immortality,—the cell of incorruption.

We shall first insist that the students of Koreshan Science shall radically discriminate between the negation school of Metaphysics, so called, and the rational or Koreshan school or System of true science. The basis of the one is the denial of matter, sin, sickness, and death. God so loved the world, says the Scriptures, that he gave his only begotten Son to die, "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." If there be no matter, no sin, no sickness, no death, then there is no world; and there never was any occasion for the Son to die for a sin-cursed world, or to save the people from perishing.

The basis of the Koreshan System of Therapeutics, is the supremacy of mind over matter—through the power of the Messianic or Christ principle. In other words, it is the supremacy of mind over matter through the knowledge of the laws of both mind and matter, and the application of these laws in every domain to which they are applied, by the demands of those employing them. Let the student understand, then, that the Therapeutics of divine science is here the subject of treatment, and also that Therapeutics is but one branch of the great system of Koreshanity. And let there be a further understanding, that the restoration of the physical or natural mind and body to common physical or animal health, is in no degree a fulfilment of the Christian idea to usher into the world the divine or immortal life. The process of healing the sick is founded upon a few simple laws, comprehensible—when stated—to every person possessed of common sense. In order that these laws may be made applicable, they must be rigidly enforced with the Therapist and the patient.

Truth is Careful in Selecting its Advocates.

Important Announcement to Koreshans.

AS A MATTER of general advice and for self-protection, we herewith announce that we will not in any way hold ourselves responsible for the acts of self-constituted agents of our propaganda. We will not endorse any public expositor of the Koreshan Cult, who is not subject to the provisions of the organic law of the Koreshan Unity, and under the specific direction of its official Order. Persons holding diplomas of graduation from our school of Mental Therapeutics, are not thereby authorized to promulgate the doctrines of Koreshanity, with our endorsement, for mental science does not cover the ground of our cult. We do not wish it to be understood that we discountenance any person's expression of his conception of our system and its principles. We are too democratic to wish to prevent people from possessing opinions, or the right of expressing them regarding Koreshanity or anything else; but we most emphatically demur from the responsibility of the acts of people not under the control of the official System of our body.

The mere fact that an agent has in hand the disposal of our literature, does not signify that he is entitled to represent us in the organization of branch societies; and no person shall be qualified to organize an Ecclesia under the auspices of the Koreshan Unity, without the proper credentials. It is one of the laws of our order, that no married man or woman shall be received into the Ecclesiastical order (the Familistery), that is, into the homes of the institution, without the consent of the husband or wife, as the case may be. More recently, for the last number of years, it is incorporated into our law, that such consent must be written and sworn to before a Notary Public. The ordinary Branch of the Society Arch-Triumphant is in no sense an Ecclesia or Familistery. It is merely a stepping-stone to the more complete organic Unity. No person is authorized to receive and appropriate money, either for the communistic or co-operative work of the Koreshan Unity, without the proper credentials from the official management.

Oppression Felt Throughout the Civilized World.

THE WORLD has reached the condition where it has become impossible for any man even with small means, to honestly gain a livelihood, except as a menial of some robber combination. The wealth of the country and the world at large, is amassing in a ratio commensurate with the rapacious evolution of that intellectual capacity which is destined to enrich the few and enslave the many. The struggle for survival is not confined to the thousands of so called common laborers of the world;—the great army which constitutes the middle classes is beginning to experience the pressure brought to bear upon it by the cormorants of monopoly, encouraged and fostered by our misnamed liberty-sustaining institutions. That is not liberty nor freedom, which enables the intellectually great but morally rotten, to oppress the money-borrower and the wage-slave. The bondholders, land-grabbers, iron, oil, and coal-barons, and the monopolizers of the world's systems of commercial intercourse and transportation, are combined to urge the people whom they are degrading, not only to the limit of their endurance, but to a rapidly approaching great catastrophe. Will an oppressed humanity—being degraded by the insidious closing up of every avenue of legitimate competition—forever quietly submit to the iron heel of a monopolistic power, conscienceless in its moral obligation to God and to the world, gloating in its intellectual and commercial superiority, and intolerant in its insolence? Will it quietly remain the obedient slave to an organized oligarchy, the undisguised purpose of which is to enslave and oppress the world?

Restoration of the Conquering Standard.

The Standard of Jesus the Messiah, Forsaken by all Modern Christendom, is Lifted Up by Koreshanity.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

Now hear, all ye in earth that dwell!
A Savior comes to Israel!
He lifts the standard up toward Zion!
He wears the face of Judah's Lion!
Lift up the standard! Wave it high!
Before it ev'ry foe shall fly!

THE STANDARD of Koreshanity is known to the world as the Mosaic law, once fulfilled in the divine personal perfection of God, by Jesus the Christ of God, who gave his life with his philosophy, for the life of the world. This standard of vidual and social integrity has been practically despised and rejected, and made null and void by the nominally religious and scientific of the Christian era.

The spurious scientific sphere has always claimed the possession of knowledges, giving it the right of legitimate authority to govern the intellects of men, while teaching them to govern themselves by the application of science to the uses and relationships of natural life. The spurious religious sphere has as persistently claimed divine authority to dominate the wills of humanity, by subjecting them through fear of torment by an unknown, unknowable deity, or by bribery with promises of a share in the unrevealed glories of an unlocated heaven, at a future time known only to the unknowable deity.

Almost in the center of an immense drop curtain at Hopkins' famous theater in Chicago, is an advertisement of a new book just put upon the market. As remembered, it reads thus: "Christianity in its Decadence; the Cause." This "ad" is read by an immense audience twice a day, seven days in the week. It is certainly calculated to make at least a few of its readers put on their thinking caps and seek evidence of the fact stated, and a knowledge of the cause.

The masses of Christendom profess, as a rule, some kind of nominal allegiance to some form of Christianity. They usually look to what they call the church, for spiritual consolations—at least to die by, and to supply their immortal (?) souls with a free pass to the heavens of their fancy or their creed. Christendom must therefore grieve to see the decadence of Christianity so widely announced, and must suffer from the lack of assurance of faith and a firm foundation on which to stand in defense of its conglomerated, unscientific creeds. These creeds are as prolific in multiplying themselves with variations, as is the animal life of the decaying and bestial humanity which breeds them from its abnormal desires to continue in sin that grace may abound, and the law be defied.

That modern Christianity is in its decadence, becomes more demonstrable every day; also that its real nature waxes more earthly, sensual, and devilish. The cause of this, the truly scientific mind has no difficulty in determining. The cause as declared by the author of the book advertised is unknown to the writer, but Koreshanity does not hesitate a moment to declare the cause to be the forsaking of the standard of the Lord Jesus, the Messiah, whose plumb-line of integrity was the Mosaic law. This he obeyed; by this obedience he was made whole, and pronounced holy. Every mind rejecting His standard of vidual and social integrity, will share in the decadence and final oblivion of corrupt modern Christianity.

The nominal church of today is the temple of anti-christ only. His primary personification was Judas; his harvest, from the material side of adultery with the fallen church, is plutocracy, with its golden calf; and from the spiritual side of this material hell, is reflexed the abominations of the nominal church, heading up in the various phases of christian science, with its destructive fallacies. These two products of the great harlot,—Babylonish Christendom, manifest in ultimates the antichristian harvest of the devil and satan—the separated and disintegrating forms of church and state. Church and state are one, in the biune Deity of their divine origin.

Pre-eminent among the phases of Christendom's disintegration, are herds of blind people with blind guides, who have reached the conclusion that there is no material universe; therefore, as there is no matter, there is nothing the matter with the general state of non-existent things. Afflicted with the blindness of self-righteousness, they reiterate: "There is no sin, no sickness, no death." Therefore, they know no need of the Savior, who said, "My flesh I give for the life of the world." Their way of salvation is the culminating antichristian way of antichrist, the denier of the coming of Christ in the flesh, as the divine seed of the immortal, incorruptible body,—the image and likeness of our God Jehovah.

The flesh of Christ, which did not see corruption, was the legitimate product of obedience to the Mosaic law. This obedience of Christ and all his own, is learned by suffering the consequences of sin, sickness, and death, during the era of divine generation—through progressive and retrogressive embodiments. Because the Lord Jesus had learned to obey the law, he became its fruition and the seed of the divine reproduction of himself as its fulfilment. As such, he imparted the energies of his divine natural life, generated by the dematerialization of his body, to the humanity receptive to his holy Spirit, that his church, his bride, might ultimate as the science of the law in application to natural life, for the reproduction of the universal form of the divine natural man, from her own divine Motherhood. The law provides for the love of this ultimatum to be regenerated at the harvest of the Christian era, by the light which true science sheds upon the philosophy which the Lord lived and taught.

Jesus declared his material form when he said: "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Koreshanity declares in the presence of Jehovah, all is not spirit. To declare that "all is spirit," is to deny the flesh of Christ, and is an attempt to kill the hope of its reproduction. Koreshanity declares the universe to be a substance in two general conditions, called spirit and matter. It declares these to be eternally interdependent and transmutable. Koreshanity makes these declarations for the hearing of rational beings, who aspire to the inheritance of the earth in the image and likeness of Jehovah. The material universe is both the footstool and habitation of God—the eternal intellectual and affectional spirit generated and regenerated by man, in His image and likeness. He reproduces himself as spirit, from himself as matter.

Koreshanity seeks to reason with men, standing upon the firm foundation furnished by the science of universal law, derived by reasoning from a demonstrated premise—a known and proven fact. "Prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good." Koreshanity seeks to reason with this class of people, because, in consequence of their rationality, it is possible for them to be transformed by the renewing of their minds by the science of truth, and to become the sons of God, the Gods, destined to walk among men in the earth, on no less a mission than that of recreating the divine order, in all its perfection and glory, in every domain of earthly existence. This means the restoration in the earth of the Golden Age, dreamed of and foreseen by the prophets and seers, who were once involved in the prehistoric divinities of a previous Golden Age, and who possessed from the Lord the science of divine procreation.

Koreshan Science of the Decalogue is the only true science of the laws of life and immortality, which, if applied, creates in earth the divine kingdom of which Jehovah is eternally the material microcosmic pattern and involution. Material means light mother, or mother of light. All light is the product of matter in combustion; the energies of mother Earth focalize in her stellar center, the father of light, and produce the elements which, burning, disintegrate and disseminate for her revitalization, enabling her to reproduce her light-mother, the sun, in which is the father—the sun, the earth enlightener, with its function of reciprocity,—the earth's enlightenment. As God is alternately male and female in manifestation, because biune in being, so also is the physical sun alternately male and female, in the expression of language, and according to the standpoint of regard; it is spoken of by one nation as she, and by another as he,—the term used indicating the relationship borne by the nation to the anthropostic sun of its own national being.

The law in its scientific aspect, is the sun of universal being. To the receptive and adoring, it is vitalizing and constructive in all its potencies. To the repulsive and antagonistic,—its opponents because of self-righteousness,—it is destructive and disintegrating. Everything today, unable to endure its sound doctrines,—christian science being pre-eminently representative of this kind,—is disintegrative, and will be finally spirited away from the earth of the Almighty's inheritance, and, in the course of time, away down the ages, will be refocalized and precipitated into the minimum point of human materialization. This will be the standing again of a personal Judas in the presence of Jehovah, to repeat the betrayal of him with a kiss, and the selling of his body for thirty pieces of silver, thus again denying the flesh of Christ its right to its earthly inheritance.

For such a one, a place of repentance can only be found by the light of the science of the law of the Lord, the King and Creator of that body which is the temple of the Holy Spirit of love and wisdom. The science of the law is the great organizer of the anthropostic cosmos; without it, we can do nothing to bring order out of chaos. In its Messenger we have the divine imperial Pivot of human destiny, around which to rally and to exalt, and by which we in turn are to be exalted. This wisdom-stone is the Head-stone of the corner of the great Temple, typified by Solomon in all the constructions of the temple, which gave him his glory as the type and representative of the God of Israel to come. This Stone is to be brought forth with great rejoicing in the fulness of times, the harvest of Jehovah's dispensation, at which time all Israel will be regathered in the kingdom of heaven,—the dome or brain of the King,—to descend, by the overshadowing spirit of his theocrasis, and inherit the earth, and rule it in righteousness.

The Doom of Organized Charity.

Modern Charity and False Philanthropy Rank Among the Principal Curses of the Civilization of the Nineteenth Century.

L. E. BORDEN.

WITHIN the past two months, a fresh note of alarm has sounded in many quarters. The pride and the boast of the present century have hitherto united in its great systems of organized charity. Let a pessimist but venture to question for a moment whether the ratio of human progression be really swift and constant toward perfection, and a thousand voices were ready to sound the chorus: "Look at our charitable institutions, our almshouses, our asylums, and our hospitals! Think of the alleviation of misery due to these!" But the test of progress must lie in the prevention, not the alleviation of misery; and the fatal consequences of such false and mistaken methods of dealing with the evils that spring from the competitive system, begin to be apparent even to its executives and advocates.

Now they have discovered with horror and perplexity, that the whole vast network of institutional charity leads directly to the multiplication and survival of the unfit. The education and association of deaf mutes tend to swell the numbers of these unfortunates by intermarriage; so with the insane, the pauper, and the blind.

The future of the human race becomes a grave problem to a society that has been unconsciously seeking to promote the good of the individual at the expense of the common good. The Romans used to expose the deformed and the weak to perish upon an island in the Tiber, and now the puzzled sociologists are asking each other whether we must needs return to the primitive barbarity of Roman customs, in order that society may develop free from parasites. The latest demand, is for laws to prevent the intermarriage of the deaf and dumb,—another half-way measure dealing with effects instead of causes. There ought not to be any deaf and dumb. The birth of every physically or morally defective child is a crime due to the low status of the race. What humanity needs, is to be changed and raised to a higher plane. Any reform short of this, will prove as ineffectual and disastrous as the institutional charity that has been tried and found wanting.

According to the figures presented by comptroller Bird S. Coler, the city of New York paid in 1898, the sum of $2,334,456 for prisoners and public paupers, and $3,131,580 for paupers in private institutions. No wonder it is said that it is easier for an industrious and shrewd professional beggar to live in luxury in New York, than to exist in any other city in the world!

Bishop Potter is responsible for the statement, that the result of charity—whether administered and controlled by the church, the state, or the individual—has proved generally mischievous, corrupt, and corrupting. He will not concede to the popular system even the ephemeral good of helping the individual; believing that in most cases, the recipient is morally degraded by charity bestowed. Among the abuses engendered by the system, it is found that the free infirmaries are taken advantage of by the rich, who leave their carriages around the corner and present themselves as needy patients. It is hard to find places for the deserving poor in homes for the aged, because the lady managers of these institutions fill the wards with their own servants, instead of providing for these worn out dependents at their own expense.

The vast system of organized charity is doomed; its knell is sounding; it is destined to pass away with the corrupt plutocracy that called it into being. The time is coming fast, when no man will be cheated of his birthright, and then asked to be content with charity doled out by his defrauders. The watchword of the future is co-operation, and an equitable division of the products of labor will follow in its train.

Bacon amused himself by classifying the delusions of mankind, as idols of the tribe, the den, the cave, and the theater. The idols of the tribe today, are half-way measures. Bishop Potter, who condemns institutional charity as the help that harms, is an advocate of college settlements and working men's clubs. When will the reformers of society break their idols and renounce the whole competitive system—root and branch?

Origin of the Substance of the Holy Spirit.

Its Effect Upon the Primitive Church in the Institution of Communism, Contrasted With the Competitive Ghosts of Modern Christianity.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believed on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified. * * It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you. * * The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost.

IN THE FIRST quotation above, the word "given" is put in italics in the English Bible, to show that it is not in the Greek text, but is a comment of the translators. The simple declaration is, "The Holy Ghost was not yet,"—did not yet have existence which could be appropriated by men as the divine seed for the regeneration of men from the mortal, sinful race. If, as this passage plainly teaches, there was a time when one of the persons of the godhead of orthodoxy had no existence, there will come a time again when he will cease to exist;—as it is an axiom that whatever has a beginning will also have an end.

"Except I go away [said Jesus], the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, will not come to you." Why will it not? Because it is the product of the going away of His holy body to spirit, which spirit must be like the body—holy; hence, Holy Spirit, Holy Ghost. While the body is present, the product of its going away—the Holy Ghost—cannot be, has no existence, and is not, any more than electricity is present before the zinc is destroyed in the battery. Send the zinc away through the action of the acid, and the electricity will come. Otherwise it cannot come; it has no existence. But what was the evidence of the presence of the Holy Ghost when it did come?

And all that believed were together, and had all things common. * * And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men as every man had need. * * Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessed of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made to every man as he had need.

More than a hundred years later, Justin Martyr, who lived in a remote province of the Roman empire, wrote: "We who before [we became Christians, like the millionaire, professed Christians of today] had all our pleasure in getting together all the money we could, now bring all that we have into a common fund, and distribution is made to every man that has need." But this Christian communism (which was the most marked result and evidence of the pouring out of the Spirit, which was the Holy Ghost) being seed, it had to die as other seed in order to reproduce itself in the harvest of the divine Seed, at the end of the Christian dispensation, now at hand. When it reproduces itself it will be a mighty crop, to take the place of the hell-born competitive system, now ripening its bitter fruit of poverty and crime, and disinheritance for the masses of men, of all that makes life either possible or desirable.

An aged county official informed the writer that he did not need to read Koreshan literature; he went by the Bible. When asked if he and his people believed in and followed the guidance of the Holy Ghost, he answered that they did. When asked if he thought that the effect of the operation of the Holy Ghost on the hearts of men was the same now that it was nineteen hundred years ago, when it was first poured out, he said he thought it was. When informed that the record was plain, twice repeated in the Acts, that all who received that Spirit then, sold their personal possessions under its influence, "and had all things common," he could say nothing against it.

In answer to the question, whether such was the effect upon millionaire Methodists, or other professed Christians of today, who claim to have received the Holy Ghost, he admitted that it was not. When asked if he did not think it possible that they made a mistake; that it was not the Holy Ghost, but a Methodist, or some other kind of a ghost they received, he admitted that it looked as though it might be so. To a request to ponder the matter, and, if he found any way of escape from the conclusion reached, to let his interrogator know, he has made no response, although meeting him several times since. The truth is that now, as when the words of our first quotation were spoken, there is no Holy Ghost, nor will there be until He comes again as he came before, by a holy body going away to Holy Spirit.

The form and function of the physical universe constitute the type of the anthropotic. Just as there exists a physical system, with a star or stellar point as a focus, so there also exists an anthropotic universe,—the star or astral center of which is the human form. It shone visibly, and was personally manifest in the beginning of the Christian era. "I am the bright and morning Star." Again some man will overcome for the world; "And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: And he shall rule them with a rod of iron [the literal truth, or truth in ultimates or last things, which is the science of things]. * * * And I will give him the morning Star." In other words, I will give him to be the Messiah, or the Messenger of the Covenant.

Let us not deceive ourselves into the vain belief that, while we are living in the malarium of a corruptible organism, we are in the exercise and power of a living influence proceeding from ourselves. Truth is the lamp which must guide us into that divine temple of holiness, which is to be made—through the light of truth—our everlasting habitation.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

GREAT CIVILIZATIONS have had their representative cities; great empires have had their capitols. Cities are focal points of national activities; seats of religious and political power; centers of commerce, industry, education, and art. Every great religion of the past has been the heart of a civilization; every great religion has written itself in temples and tombs, as well as in books and Bibles. The light of ancient Egypt shone from the focal points of the dynasty. The glories of the Roman empire were expressed in Rome. The Roman empire itself sprang from the mother city; out and out from the great center, the influence spread and conquered the world. Babylon, Greece, and Rome were distinctive civilizations; in each were expressed specific qualities of life. Jerusalem was the architectural expression of the Jewish religion; it was the citted soul and heart of the Jewish nation. The founding of Rome and the building up of the great Roman empire were the result of determination along specific lines projected by Romulus. The Hebrew people were the result of a marvelous, gigantic religio ethnological scheme of Abraham. The supreme factor of all great civilizations is religion; it has shone out in the glories of the past, and it will warm the hearts of men in all ages to come. The nineteenth century civilization is a perversion. The present dispensation has been one of disintegration and declension. The world at the present time is in chaos. Religion is perverted, and exists in fragments. There is no great ideal in the modern world to thrill the human heart; no bond of love to unite the millions. The one great aim of the nineteenth century is to make money—to worship gold. This sentiment is expressed in all the cities of modern times. Money rules; it is the power behind the thrones of nations. Cities are constructed and maintained for the purpose of acquiring wealth and exercising the power which the money god bestows upon those who are guided by the false commercial serpent. We read the one aim in all modern industry and commerce; in the social world, in art—in all lines of human activity. There are no glories of modern civilization; it does not possess the qualities and characteristics of true greatness; if it were blotted out today, it would leave in its ruins nothing but the records of greed for gold. Will the world long continue the present perverted civilization? The world is expecting a new age, a new civilization. But it cannot come except through the formulation of an entirely new system of science, involving in itself greater factors of progress than were ever before utilized. It must involve and apply new principles of industry and commerce; reconstruct society; project a new and universal government; make the new man; create the new world. It must involve the true religion; and it must found and build the capital city of the universal government, the center of the new civilization. Koreshanity's project of world-civilization is greater than Bellamy's; Bellamy would have the world civilized without a religion, and ruled without a God. The coming civilization will be distinctively Koreshan. Koreshanity is destined to govern the world; it will express itself in a new humanity; in a new literature, and in new art, and in the most glorious and magnificent architecture. The world's progress for ages will be focalized in its cosmopolitan city of splendor and magnificence. Greater than all others will be the civilization of the future; greater than all others will be the capital city of the new world, the New Jerusalem, the tangible, material City of the Golden Age.

A little while ago, a Chicago literary gentleman severely criticised the literature and art of the Windy City, and asserted that Chicago itself is overgrown, its fiber coarse, its mentality bad, and its art miserable; that its people were engaged in one mighty struggle for money, at the expense of culture and intellectual progress. In a recent "Sermon of Chicago," a clergyman says: "Chicago has survived the fire, and has lived long enough to build a Masonic temple and an auditorium; but as yet, in the roll of earth's immortals,—the great souls that can be seen across continents, over seas, and through generations,—has Chicago one name to offer? Give me, who will, a deathless name in the realms of poetry, science, art, or prophecy." Chicago is not intellectually capable of competing with the world in the lines of art, literature, science, and prophecy; neither is it capable of recognizing and appreciating the characteristics and the credentials of the man who has the immortal name written on him. The genuine modern Prophet is without honor in his own country, and in the city in which he dwells; Chicago has not the heart to make his Science her own; and the time is coming when she will be left desolate! In the heart of the great western metropolis, resides the Founder of the greatest scientific System ever announced to the world—the greatest, not because it prevails in the world, but because it is true. There emanates from the Guiding Star Publishing House, the most profound scientific literature of the age; but the scientists and the clergymen pass it by as unworthy of notice. The Koreshan Prophet cries out against the evils and corruptions of the modern church and society, the abuses of government, and against the money power; but he is denounced by the clergy and the press as a stupendous fraud. He would purify the Christian home, and lift every man above the degraded planes of sensualism, and exalt the mind above the depravities of the pulpit and the pew, just as Jesus did nineteen hundred years ago; but now, as then, the world is too depraved to recognize the scientific Prophet, and too blind to read in the personality, the immortal Name of ages to come!

Hon. W. G. Ewing, formerly Judge of the superior court, is now a member of the christian science board of lectureship. In a recent lecture in Chicago, he endeavored to remove from the minds of the people the "prevailing prejudices" against the fallacious cult. He says: "You believe in one God, the Father of all; you believe in Jesus Christ, who healed the sick, made the blind to see, and the lame to walk; you believe in the Bible as the divinely inspired revelation of God to man; and in all these things we believe with you. Are you not in a position where you cannot say aught against us?" The very premise of christian science makes a belief in all these things, in the minds of those who accept it, utterly impossible. The denial of the existence of matter, in the first place, is a denial of the existence of the man Jesus nineteen hundred years ago. The denial of sin, sickness, and death, is a denial of His mission to save the world from sin, to heal the sick, and to destroy evil; for how would it be possible to effect redemption of the world from sin if there be no sin? How could disease be cured, if there be no sickness? How would it be possible to destroy the works of the devil, if there is no devil? If all is God, and there is but one substance, which is incapable of being changed; if there is but one mind and no more, the same yesterday, today, and forever, where would there be room for anything else, or for any one else, but God? And how could there be a God of substance, if God is only a principle? The Judge boasts of the progress of christian science, and asserts that it is a religion that cannot be flippantly ignored. It is not a credit to America that it is gaining a large following, nor to the Judge to assert that 43,000 is half a million. He asserts that christian science was founded by Jesus; according to christian science authority, it was "founded and discovered" by Mrs. Eddy. There is an impassable gulf of difference between the religion of Jesus Christ and the religion of Mrs. Eddy. The early church was fortunate enough to have a tangible Messiah, who was heroic enough to announce his claims. But how about christian science?

Koreshanity is the world's cup defender; it is the successful yacht (chaser) on the sea of humanity. The race is the human race; the cup is the divine human. The antiquated yacht, the old church and state, is in competition. Strangely enough, the old yacht has its cup, and its crew is drinking from it the wrath of the Almighty. Cups have figured conspicuously in the world's great yacht races. It is significant that in 1852 the sporting cup passed from England to America. The cup, in Bible symbolism, is well known. The cup was found in Benjamin's sack; Pharaoh's cup was the cause of the death of his chief baker. There is a cup of salvation, and a cup of divine fury. David's cup was running over; and Jesus himself drank of a cup which passed to his apostles. The cup was present at the passover "round-table;" and the cup of Joseph contained the "holy Grail." The cup signifies divine good; its opposite is divine evil or wrath. The old church has spilled the "holy Grail," and polluted the cup, which it will drain to the very dregs, until Christendom is devastated and ruined. Koreshanity sails a yacht of unique construction; it restores the cup, and in due time the world will drink from it the Elixir of Life, and live.

It is held in some circles, that science is cold and heartless; that it mars the universe, and destroys the imagination; that it obliterates God, and fails to thrill the human heart. So much the worse for the "science" which now prevails in the world. When materialism, in its last analysis of matter, from the basis of a fallacious premise, separates the atom from its correlated force and leaves only the oscillation of the atom as the origin of all sensation and motion in all domains, nothing remains but matter without life! Modern science is so far removed from the possibility of practical application to humanity; so remote from the truth, and so long divorced from the religious heart of man, that it can never make mankind happy. It is the repulsive excrescence of the age, and humanity will soon repudiate its fallacies. Give to the world a scientific religion, a science that appeals to both the reason and the heart, the intellect and the will, a science that takes hold of the religious nature of man, and new loves will be kindled, new aspirations awakened, and happiness restored. Destroy the incubus of fallacy which now afflicts the world, and let man be restored to his dominion of the universe!

It has just been "discovered" by principals of public schools of Chicago, that the educational system which has been engrafted upon the public school is fundamentally wrong. From one term to another, the ambition of the student is to pass the examinations; this work of preparation precludes the natural development or education of the mind. Prof. Parker, of Chicago, has recently made some bold assertions concerning the prevailing educational methods: "It tends to make the pupils dishonest; it teaches the children to 'cram' for examinations; it induces the young women to use all their blandishments and fascinations on the teacher, to get high marks. There is no education in the motive underlying the present course of study. It is 'cram,' and not until we make education the motive of the course, will we get ethnical education." These are the sentiments which have been expressed in THE FLAMING SWORD for years, as our readers well know; and it is not surprising that the principals of Chicago public schools should accept and use them without giving us the proper credit!

Astronomy is of service to humanity only as it is practically applied. Practical astronomy guides the mariner on the seas, fixes the boundary lines of nations, and determines the latitude and longitude of points on land and ocean; it is of benefit to the world's perverted commerce. Shall we conclude that this is the limit of the practical utility of astronomy? It should go beyond this; but modern astronomy does not do so. The knowledge of the form and function of the universe guides the Koreshan Scientist in the reformation and civilization of the world. It furnishes the natural pattern for the correct social structure, the true form of government, and the scientific religion. It guides the reason, and leads man to his destiny. Astronomy is a noble science; it is of supreme interest. Koreshanity is reviving the interest of the world in the study of the universe and the practical application of its laws to humanity.

All of the loves and passions of the mortal world are reflections and perversions of the loves and passions which obtain in the divine humanity. Tragedies of the mortal world have occurred on higher planes. The greatest conspiracies of the universe, are the conspiracies of the devil against God himself. The enemies of the Almighty seek his utter destruction; but they have never come nearer succeeding than they did nineteen hundred years ago, when God and the devil were rivals in the wooing of the maiden church. The great contest of powers make heroes. Without the great conflicts of the universe, there could be no victories, no triumphs, no glories. God is Almighty by virtue of the fact of his having achieved the greatest victories possible in the realm of existence; he triumphs over death, and through the processes makes possible the perpetuity of the universe.

If the modern church were pure and righteous, it would create righteousness in the hearts of its people; it would reform and civilize the world. If the church were true, with its millions of adherents it would be a power that would sweep every evil from the face of the earth. It would reconstruct human society; it would abolish competition; it would establish a just government, and an equitable system of commerce and industry. The modern church is a failure; it joins hands with a fallacious science and with a false commerce; its members are engaged in the conduct of all the iniquitous systems which prevail in Christendom. The church is silent on all lines of reform; the voice of progress is heard no more in it. Its days are numbered; it will be swept away with all other modern corruptions, when the sunlight of true Science bursts upon the world and illumines the minds of the people!

"Scientists" are being forced to investigate psychology and mental phenomena. They have hitherto overlooked the superior half of the universe—the world of energy and of mind; and the fact that they have done so, is indisputable evidence that they are not scientists. The mental scientists, on the other hand, are committing just as great a blunder as have the materialists. It is just as inconsistent to put forth theories concerning the mind, without a knowledge of the forms and functions in and through which the phenomena are manifest, as it is to evolve theories concerning the universe, in total disregard of the energies and functions which are continually operative in it. Koreshanity contains the only solution of the problem of the relation of mind and matter, and is, consequently, the only system that presents to the world the knowledge of man and cosmos.

There was a phase of humanitarianism and national heroism manifest in America's declaration of war against Spain in 1898; it was in the line of progress. There are no humanitarian elements in England's war with the Transvaal; it is a manifestation of greed for gold. The Spanish-American war imposed a trust upon America, which the western government cannot disregard nor shift to less responsible hands; the Filipinos are the wards of the American government, and it must restore order in the archipelago. England makes war upon an independent republic; it undertakes to force itself upon the domestic affairs of the South African republic, for the sake of gold. There is no humanitarianism involved in the Briton's attack upon the Boer; and this is all the more remarkable, since England was a principal factor in the late peace conference!

The old idea that the fall of man was unforeseen by the Almighty; that it was a work which did not belong to the order of perpetuity of the universe, and that God has since been endeavoring to repair unexpected damage done by the devil in humanity, is absurd. The fall of man is as natural as the fall and death of a seed; for in no other way can the seed reproduce itself except through death and corruption. The rise and decline of humanity are as regular as the rising and setting of the sun; the resurrection and the fall are but necessary acts in the great drama of the universe. God and the devil are the great actors on the world's stage, in which ages constitute the scenes in the tragedy of existence.

A popular journal contains a large display heading, "The Apotheosis of Dewey." Apotheosis means the act of elevation of a mortal to the rank of the gods; deification. The American people now have a tangible god, merging forth from the clouds of powder-smoke of Manila bay. The true apotheosis is the act of the mortal man putting on immortality; it was the hope of the apostle Paul, and is to be the experience of the Man who overcomes himself, through a greater battle than the battle of Manila. The very existence and use of the word apotheosis indicate the possibility of the attainment of immortality in the flesh—the exaltation of the living Man to the Godhood.

The universe is a great trust of nature, in which all its substances are in their static planes or planes of rest. Humanity will not reach a condition of universal harmony until all of the different strata are emplaced in the same order and relation in which the corresponding planes of the physical cosmos are arranged. When humanity constitutes one great, universal trust, with one central, imperial governing power, every man will be in his own natural place and plane, and chaos and disorder will cease to be.

Freedom would not be possible if the opposite condition—bondage—did not exist. Every condition in the universe has its opposite state. The very existence of death indicates that the immortal state is possible in the natural world; for how could death ever obtain unless it be through the death of life—the declension from the immortal state in the flesh? If there were no bondage, man could not hope to be free; likewise, if humanity were not mortal, there could be no possible attainment of immortality.

Astronomers and clergymen are endeavoring to create other worlds and heavens in space; Koreshanity purposes making a new world out of the old one, and transforming hell into heaven.

THE EDITOR.

The Unity of Jesus and His Disciples.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Please explain the passage of Scripture in which Jesus declares that he is in his disciples and they in him; and how they could become one, even as Jesus and the Father were one?—A READER.

Jesus prayed that his disciples might become one with him, even as he and the Father were one. It is evident that when He was in the natural world, he was not in them, nor they in him. The only unity there was at that time, was the unity of the Father—and all that constituted the Father—and the Son; the unity was in one personality, for Jesus was "the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

He said to his disciples, "If any man love me, he will keep my words; my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." This is an indication of where Jesus went when he left the natural world—he went into his disciples. But when he went into his disciples, they were not in him; he was only in them.

The time must come, in the progress of the divine mind, when the Son will be in the Father; that is, when the Father will be external, and the Son involved. This necessitates another personality, who will be the manifestation of the Father, containing the sons to be put forth into the tangible world as immortal men.

When Jesus came nineteen hundred years ago, "he gathered the lambs with his arm, and carried them in his bosom." These lambs were the spirits of the Jewish people who had lived during the Jewish age, looking forward to the coming of the Messiah. They looked forward to their resurrection in him; and in him, Abraham and millions of others were resurrected. He was the involved product of the Jewish people. At that time he could say that the Father was in him; and also legions of angels. Hence, Paul could say that the disciples have "come unto Mount Zion, unto the city of the living God, to the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, * * to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant," because all these were in the man Jesus; they were all at one with him.

Now, when are the disciples of Jesus to be in the Christ? It is clear that at one time He was in them, but they were not in him. Did he not sow himself in the early church? Was not the harvest to come, with its first resurrection? At the end of the age, the dead in the Messiah shall be raised first, in the Messiah; he gathers them in a new manifestation, just as the manifestation nineteen hundred years ago gathered up the spirits of the Jews. When shall the disciples of Jesus be in the Christ? "At that day, ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you." At the end of the Christian dispensation, when all the early church and the progressive spirits of the Christian dispensation are involved and resurrected as the New Jerusalem, in the new manifestation, they shall all be one in one personality, just as Jesus, and the Father, and the spirits of the Jewish dispensation were one, nine-hundred years ago.

Rejection of Jesus by the Jews.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Why did the Jews as a nation reject the Lord Jesus Christ? If there is a law underlying the fact, please explain it in the columns of THE FLAMING SWORD; and state the correspondence of such rejection in nature—if there be one.—A READER.

The laws of involution and evolution are co-ordinate factors of progress in all domains of the universe. Every function has its opposite function; and there necessarily obtains a retrogressive as well as a progressive evolution from every point of involution. Retrogressive evolution on any plane is the most external form of evolution; it is the limit of activities taking place in the field of progress. The truth is, the retrogressive elements are but the debris of the interior activities. They are first cast off from the central, persistent lines of determination toward the objective goal of destiny, or the fruitage of a given cycle. When the involution takes place, it is the positive pole, and is consequently the opposite of the retrogressive shell or sheath of the race-track of the specific quality of life.

The body of a plant, or the stalk which comes up from the seed planted, is made up from the cast-off elements of the central activities of the life which inheres in it. The finer and more vital elements are involved in the seed at the end of the season or cycle. The division of the elements is made as the plant grows; the substances are sifted through the cells of elaboration, with functions of discrimination. Some are placed at the circumference, and some in the central line of progress. When the seed itself appears, it appears at the extremity of the stalk. It matures there; and the final separation of seed and plant is forced by the plant. The seed is cast off by the plant, because the limit of its function in bearing the seed is accomplished. The seed is severed from the old stalk; the plant rejects it, because the tendencies of each are in opposite directions. The tendency of the plant is to die; the desire of the seed is to live.

Jesus came in contact with the elements of progressive evolution in humanity; they were his disciples, and he went into them. His life was thus transferred from one dispensation to another. He was the seed, or the mediator of transition, the door through which the substances of the Tree of Life passed from the Jewish to the Christian dispensation—from the Jewish people to the Gentiles. While there is a progressive involution, the kind that produced Jesus the Messiah, there is also a retrogressive involution, which resulted in Judas. The two poles, representing the ultimates of progression and retrogression in the Jews during the age, came in contact. Judas became the instrument of the final casting-off of the Seed from the Jewish plant or church. Through Judas, Jesus was led to his martyrdom; and through him, Jesus was legally and utterly discarded or cast off by the Jews, just as the seed of the plant is cast off from the plant.

In the Field of Koreshan Propaganda.

Weekly Synopsis of Topics Discussed by Koreshan Lecturers.

Koreshan Hall, 316 W. 63rd St., Chicago.

THURSDAY EVENING, Oct. 12.—Lecture by Rev. Berthaldine, on Social Purification. The lecturer quoted from a notable sermon by the late Dr. Talmage, in which he referred to the "easy divorce system," and the increase of prostitution throughout this country during recent years. Sensuality was the great besetting sin in the Roman empire, when verging upon its fall, and a similar condition of humanity today betokens dire events for the future. Man-made laws are now utterly impotent to stay the mad, onrushing tide of lust and depravity everywhere prevalent. The only enduring reform must come through the baptism about to be poured out upon the world, as the result of the theocrasis of the Messiah of this age.

SUNDAY, Oct. 15, 3 P. M.—Sermon by Rev. Berthaldine. Text: "Freely ye have received, freely give." A very marked tendency in the financial world at the present time, is the aggregation of capital into monopolies or trusts. Koreshans have the greatest monopoly of all,—a monopoly of the truth; not for personal aggrandizement, but for the benefit of all who will receive. Freely we have received the truth of the great Monopolist (the Messenger of the Covenant): freely we must impart the same to a world groping in darkness, for the light.

MONDAY EVENING, Oct. 16.—Lecture by Prof. Morrow, on Astronomy. The lecturer made a brief recapitulation of some of the ground covered on previous occasions, after which he demonstrated, by chart, the mathematical formula, universally accepted, for determining the ratio of the earth's curvature. This formula applies equally as well to a concave sphere as to one whose surface is convex. The greater part of the evening was devoted to a detailed account of numerous telescopic experiments with ship's hulls and targets; also a thorough explanation of geodesy; the meaning of the term; its purposes, and the methods employed. In conclusion, a general outline of the Koreshan geodetic survey was given, the detail of which constitutes the subject matter for the next lecture.

SUNDAY EVENING Oct. 15.—State and Quincy streets. Subject: "Some Phases of the Recent Peace Festival." The recent celebration in Chicago was the direct product of the mercenary spirit of the times, and had its inception in the commercial club of Chicago. The laying of the cornerstone of the new Federal building, Chicago day, was used as the main drawing card. Being the anniversary of the great fire, it made a fine "leader." The heads of the three governments of North America—ostensibly the invited guests of the people—were entertained in one continuous round of banquets, exclusively by the plutocratic clubs of the great metropolis.

The speaker put the following question, calling for a display of hands: "How many of you sat down to the mahogany tables laden with the luxuries of the industry of the people?" [No hands:] "Where were you?" [A voice like a megaphone] "Behind the door."

The lasting impression of the great parades, was the gigantic Chinese dragon in "the parade of nations;" and in evidence of the prevailing military spirit of the whole Festival, many church societies—contributing their quota of juvenile regiments—armed and drilled!

Koreshanity was shown to reveal the true cornerstone, upon which society must eventually be structured in fulfillment of the prayer: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." There was much enthusiasm at the close of the address, and many books and papers were disposed of to investigators.—ALLEN H. ANDREWS, Reporter.

Convinced of the Truth of Koreshanity.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have read THE FLAMING SWORD from beginning to end for the last year, and my interest has increased so that I am hungry for more information along this line. I am convinced of the truth of Koreshanity, but can't make it plain to others why.

Many years ago I became an advocate of reform, publishing papers, etc.; looking ever for a true plan of co-operation. I became a convert to Labor Exchange, and have been preaching and teaching these principles, believing that this was the engine that would knock the stumbling block (competition) out of humanity's way, and clear the road to a higher and better life, that it might expand to a higher and nobler, physical, mental, and spiritual plane, where true brotherhood and Fatherhood exist. But the taste I have now acquired for Koreshanity leads me to believe there is something still grander; that he who is truly progressive and searching for the truth can never cease to move onward and upward, until the goal is reached.

The movement I am connected with is a co-operative community; we moved here recently from Iola to take charge of their co-operative boarding house, and I am expecting to take charge of The Search Light at this place. This organ will, and does push the local cause; therefore, I will expect THE FLAMING SWORD on exchange.—W. A. B., Moorehead, Kan.

Doctors, Teachers, and Lawyers Reading Koreshan Literature.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have been selling some copies of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY and soliciting subscriptions for THE FLAMING SWORD; but it is slow work with me. I do not get discouraged, however, for I find some are beginning to think, and that is what we want. One man (a justice of the Peace) said yesterday, that if people generally came to believe the teachings of KORESH concerning the shell in which we live, men would never stop until they had bored through to the rind of gold. He cannot realize that gold cannot be used as at present, when men generally come to believe in Koreshanity. Some doctors, lawyers, and teachers have read the book, and no one has yet said that it is unscientific. We are getting good working people to study the teachings of KORESH, and may have more soon.—S. H., Concord, Wash.

A Plain Scientific Question Put Forth in Good Faith By Koreshans.

CELLULAR COSMOGONY, or, the Earth a Concave Sphere: By KORESH and Prof. U. G. Morrow. Paper covers, illustrated, 25 cents. The Guiding Star Publishing House, Chicago.

A generation or so ago, an American philosopher propounded the theory that this world of ours is hollow, that the interior is a reproduction or facsimile of the outer shell, and that it is peopled by human beings like ourselves. The Koreshans go further than this. They not only contend that the world is hollow, but that we are living in that concavity. Instead of inhabiting the outside of a huge ball, more or less solid, as is generally believed, they argue and endeavor to demonstrate that we occupy the inside of a vast hollow sphere, 8,000 miles in diameter and 25,000 in circumference. This contention of theirs is based on certain alleged experiments, going to show that the curve of the earth is upward instead of downward; or, in other words, that it is concave instead of convex. These experiments are fully described in the book, as well as illustrated by plates and diagrams. One of them was a costly and elaborate affair on the Gulf coast of Florida, in which, it is claimed, an absolutely straight and level line was carried along the beach for two and a half miles, the result being a clear demonstration of the truth of the Koreshan theory. It is of course not conducive to a ready acceptance of this revolutionary claim to find our old acquaintance, Dr. CYRUS R. TEED, at the bottom of it; but setting aside this brainy but mischievous crank and his Koreshan nonsense, here is a plain scientific question of immense importance that seems to be put forward in good faith. If the Florida experiment was really made as related, with the result stated, then it behooves the upholders of the Copernican theory to come forward and refute it. If we really live on the inside of the world instead of on the outside, we want to know it.—Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald.

Greatest Wonder of the Age.

The CELLULAR COSMOGONY, one volume with two parts: Part I. The Universology of Koreshanity, by KORESH, the Founder. Part II. The New Geodesy, by Prof. U. G. Morrow, the inventor of the Rectilineator and conductor "of all the experiments through which the mechanical Geodetic demonstration has been carried forward to a successful geometrical and mathematical conclusion and climax, irrefutable and overwhelming." Experiments by which the "concavity of the earth is so absolutely demonstrated as to preclude even the possibility of a doubt of its true contour, in the mind of every person honest enough to examine, without bias or prejudice, the proofs offered."

It is the first work on Astronomy and Geodesy from which the elements of assumption are excluded, because the first one written by men who know whereof they wrote, men who, instead of guessing at their premise, have demonstrated it by an infallible proof—the extension of the air line, by the use of the only accurate Geodetic Apparatus in the world—the Rectilineator. This unique volume informs you concerning the Koreshan facts vs. the Copernican hypotheses. Procure this most remarkable book; read for yourself, and learn the facts concerning the form and function of the universe. The Flaming Sword's High Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.—Current and popular events in America are aptly and strikingly illustrated in this week's issue of Leslie's Weekly. Several million dollars have been expended in this year's international yachting contest; and just now America is interested in maintaining supremacy over England in the yacht races, as in other things. The first page shows a splendid picture of the Columbia. Another interesting picture (double-page) gives an excellent idea of the yacht races. Chicago's fall festival is splendidly illustrated: The laying of the corner-stone of the Federal building; the magnificent illumination of the court of honor; President McKinley, and other features of the festival. A page contains photographs by amateurs; these photographic contests are proving interesting. The letter-press contains an illustrated story of the latest Klondike, as well as the usual departments.

The Saturday Evening Post.—Mr. Markham's most recent poem, "The Muse of Brotherhood," is one of the few really great poems that the closing years of the century have produced. In it Mr. Markham voices a lofty optimism that is at once more impressive and convincing than the notes of hopelessness and despair that characterize "The Man with the Hoe." "The Muse of Brotherhood" will appear exclusively in The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, in its issue of October 21.

Success.—This popular, illustrated weekly journal of self-help and self-education, increases in interest. Its articles are all splendidly illustrated. Its main purpose is embodied in its name; it tells how men have been successful in their undertakings, and how they have been trained for great responsibilities. On the whole, we like Success; it contains vim, enthusiasm, and courage. 16 pages; 5 cents per copy; $1.50 yearly. Cooper Union, New York City.

Human Faculty.—Advocates a new system of phrenology and physiognomy. It contains apt illustrations, employs new methods of presenting the subjects, and leaves other phrenological journals far behind.—16 pages; $1.00 per year. 317 Inter-Ocean Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

The Light of the East.—Devoted to the religion and philosophy of the Hindoos. It breathes an oriental atmosphere, and would no doubt prove interesting to many of our readers.—Published at 20 Grey street, Calcutta, India.

American Monthly Microscopical Journal—Devoted to microscopy in all its branches.—$2.00 per year; published at Washington, D. C.

A Worldly Discussion.

Near Whitsett, this state, some of the colored brethren had a discussion, in the meeting-house, as to whether or not "de worl' tu'n 'roun'." There was considerable "contendin'" for and against, but the testimony of an old colored deacon was conclusive. He said:

"Dey's no sich t'ing ez de worl' tu'nin' over—no sich t'ing, I tell you! Ef dat wuz de case, wouldn't all de water in de sea spill out, w'en de sea git upside down? Answer me dat now! En fuddermo'—could you hol' yo' balance ez hit tu'ned over?"

Here a somewhat learned brother interrupted with—

"Fer de Lawd sake, deacon, don't you know nuttin' 'bout de contraction er graduation?"

"No, suh, I don't!" thundered the deacon. "Will you please 'splain ter de meetin', what is contraction er graduation?"

"Well," replied the brother who had interrupted him, "I did know once 'pon a time, but danged ef I ain't done fergit!"—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

H. D. SILVERFRIEND, Executive Mgr.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

The Psychic Digest

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.

Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in weeks of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

* SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO. *

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission,

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

Koreshan Science of Mental Therapeutics.

Part II.

The Laws of Generation and Transmission of the Vital Force of Scientific Mental Healing; Necessary Normal Equipose and Continuity of Desire in a Given Direction.

THE LAWS of healing may be included in this general statement: Generate, economize, and transmit vital force in some one or more of its qualities. How shall vital force (dynamis) or virtue be generated? How shall it be husbanded? How shall it be transmitted? When these three questions are answered, the problem of healing is scientifically settled. How can we generate dynamis (virtue), so called by the Lord Jesus? There is but one way to develop the force of real virtue, and that is to exercise every faculty of the mind and every organ of the body divinely; that is, be virtuous, and virtue (dynamis) will be generated in abundance.

The normal state of the body and mind is essential to success in the practice of our Therapeutics. We do not mean by this, that there is no power to heal where the mind and body of the Therapist are not absolutely in a normal state. The nearer the approach to normality, the greater the success; the further the removal from a state of normality, the less successful will be the practitioner.

The law of generation of force may be stated in one word, agitation. There is no generation of force without agitation. That the student may comprehend this statement, we resort to the laws of physics, and by analogy pass over to metaphysics in the application of the law or principle. The vibration of a musical chord creates friction by its rapid tritition (rubbing) of the particles of air. The air is composed of oxygen and nitrogen; the friction of these particles by the tense chord in rapid vibration, converts them to energy by the transformation of the physical matter to physical force. The transmission of this force through space will displace material substances at long distances; as for instance, particles of sand spread out over a plate of glass, will—by the vibration of a tuning fork placed some distance away—be arranged in definite forms. The same kind of substance, with the same kind of vibration or agitation, will invariably assume the same shapes, and the forms will become settled as soon as the vibration ceases, or a state of normal rest is instituted.

Persons who are normal are always in a state of rest,—so far as their own parts are concerned; that is, every organ and every function is in a normal relation and action. This is always rest; but we do not mean by this, inactivity. A person may be constantly active, and yet always resting. Normal activity is restful always. We will illustrate this by the teeter-board. Let two children seat themselves, balanced, on the two ends of a plank resting across a bar. They may teeter for hours and not become exhausted. But let the board be moved from its poise or equilibrium, and the enjoyment is dissipated; fatigue will be the consequence of a continued exercise or activity. The activity in the one case is enjoyment, a recreation; in the other, irksome and exhaustive.

Agitation Must Precede the Rest State.

If we take sand and spread it out on a plate of glass as an illustration of disease, we may argue as follows:

The uniform layer of sand over the glass surface is the result of artificial manipulation. Its tendency—when agitated and subject to certain ethereal vibration—is to assume a definite shape, regulated by the special kind or quality of agitation. When the vibration ceases, the sand maintains the position and form occasioned by the peculiar agitation to which it was subject.

The student may inquire, "What has agitation of mind or body to do with healing the sick?" There can be no healing without agitation, therefore, inquiry into the nature of the agitation or vibration essential to a restoration to health, is both legitimate and imperative. If a person perfectly normal, that is, in perfect harmony with him or herself, a person in perfect concord, meets another in extreme discord, or out of balance, there is created an agitation of mind. If the one who is normal should be thrown out of balance by the discordant relations and conditions in the one who is unbalanced or ill, the sick one would not be benefited by the agitation, and the well one would be made sick by the discord. A thoroughly balanced person is not supposed to be thrown off guard or out of balance by the agitation of another. When a person is thoroughly well, he may remain so by observing the laws of his physiological being. This is the result of watchfulness and prayerfulness, or a desire to do righteously. Such a one is constantly on guard, because constantly surrounded by the influences of evil. Jesus said, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

While in this world, surrounded by the influences of the fleshly lusts and the determinings of the animal and lower human propensities, to maintain an equilibrium one must keep a continuous guard. Constantly maintain an equilibrium; that is, keep your balance. If the balanced Therapist (and every genuine Therapist is balanced) meets a person who is diseased, the Therapist at once perceives the discord or want of harmony between the parts, both anatomical and functional, of the patient. The tendency of such a state of functional disturbance existing in the patient, and revealed to the Therapist, is to perturb the mind of the healer; because in proportion to the harmony of the metaphysician, is the dissonance of the patient repulsive. This is because concord cannot be in agreement with discord. Concord does not agitate. Concord is reduction to equilibrium. Discord is the cause of agitation. Now comes the trial of the Therapist. If the balance of the Therapist is sufficient to maintain the normal equipoise (the state of rest), resistance is offered to the state of the patient, all the energies of the patient are aroused (agitated, vibrated), and force is generated as the result of the agitation.

Agitation of matter produces potency, by the destruction of matter and its conversion to force. The most foul matter (by the operation of complete decomposition by combustion) can be reduced to force, either in the state of light, heat, electricity, magnetism, gravity, or other qualities of force, and not only rendered inert, but helpful.

Some metaphysicians are so active in their psychic potency, as to agitate not only a few, but all of the molecules in a patient. In such case, the rubbing together of the molecules or particles of matter in the body, causes a too rapid decomposition, consequently the patient is in danger of death. This process has been falsely called chemicalization. It is the decomposition of matter by agitation (vibration), which produces friction (tritition, rubbing together), and if carried too far, destroys not only the morbid elements and reduces them to force, but destroys also the healthy molecules. It is thus seen that to be a true healer, the operator should have a scientific knowledge of the potency which he is capable of generating.

A metaphysician once made this statement to us: "The patients I treat, chemicalize to such an extent that it is becoming dangerous for me to treat them, and I don't know what to do." She did not know the reason, nor did she know how to control the phenomenon;—and yet she was a "metaphysician" of the school which claims to know it all. If her system of healing had been established on the science (knowledge) of Christ, or the knowledge which Jesus Christ had, she would have fallen back upon one simple axiom (a statement made and understood by Jesus), and thereby obtained a revelation of the whole question. This axiom has its basis in the Scripture declaration: "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." The axiom may be formulated thus: Whatsoever the thought desires, may be attained to by the continuity of the desire in a given direction, until it is gratified. This metaphysician had somehow imbibed the impression that it was a good thing for the patient to "chemicalize" (for particles of matter to pass by transformation, to the stage of molecular decomposition), and had so directed her desires until it became the habitual determination of her efforts to heal.

The desire is the wish; it is the prayer, and to be efficient, must be unbroken in its continuity. The more continuous the aspiration, the more efficacious the prayer or thought. Thought is substance. The desire, the affection, which is the love of the thing you desire, and which is generated in the will by its effort, is the psychic force. It is a potential substance, and is generated by the continuity of thought thus expressed. "Pray without ceasing!" It is only by such continuation of your desire upon a given object, that your prayer is answered.

At one time, the disciples of Jesus had failed to heal a sick person brought to them. They had tried without avail. When Jesus came, he accomplished the restoration with ease. The disciples questioned Him, to know why they could not accomplish the cure. He said to them: "This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer [desire] and fasting."

The metaphysician above referred to, was not questioned concerning the methods by which she attained to this special tendency of her powers. But we venture to state emphatically, that she had received the psychological impression that the process of molecular agitation and concomitant decomposition which she called "chemicalization," was essential to the work of healing, and that her thoughts had dwelt upon that point to the exclusion of other thoughts equally essential. The lady in question was a powerful decomposer. That is, her mind was excessively active (positive) in the domain of disintegration; too much so ever to be (without radical changes) so good a healer while operating alone, as she otherwise would be with some good co-operator. She would constitute a powerful element to be accompanied with one so powerful in the recomposing domain and potency, as she was in the opposite or decomposing domain.

L. E. BORDEN.

PSYCHOLOGICAL Psychology is a new term confined to the present century—a term which marks a great advance in modern thought. The honor of originating the phrase belongs to Germany, where it was first used by Gustave Fechner, in 1860. Experimental Psychology is another name that is used interchangeably with Fechner's term, to designate what is, virtually, a new science.

The old Psychology, or "mental and moral Philosophy," was bound hand and foot by theology. In the old days, the soul was looked upon as a distinct and mysterious entity, a tenant who condescended to rent the brain, but had little more vital affiliation with it than the inmate has with his house. Nobody but the theologians was supposed to be competent to talk about the soul, and very bad guess-work they made of their prerogative.

Experimental Psychology marks the emancipation of Psychology from the trammels of theology, and shows that a truer conception of the interblending of soul and body is coming to obtain. How did the new movement originate? Well, Dr. Williams, who has recently treated the whole subject so delightfully, finds that it started in a kind-hearted desire to reform the treatment of the insane, who used to be chained in cells and dungeons like wild beasts. Study of the insane led to the idea that insanity is the result of a diseased condition of the brain, and this conclusion led directly to that of an intimate connection between mind and body.

The new science is objective; it studies the brain and the nervous system. Thanks to its influence, the ordinary High School text book of Psychology is now supplied with cuts and definitions drawn from Physiology. The student is taught that a nerve-fiber consists of three parts, an outer membrane, a white, semi-liquid sheath, and a translucent axis cylinder; that these fibers vary in diameter from $\frac{1}{14000}$ to $\frac{1}{1200}$ of an inch, and are divided into two classes,—sensory, also called afferent or in-carrying; and motor, efferent or out-carrying. He learns also that a nerve-cell is a granular body with a large nucleus and a small "nucleolus," and that a group of nerve-cells is called a ganglion; while a nerve-center is the union of a motor group and a sensory group, forming a compound ganglion. From simple facts of this nature, the student is led along to independent experimental work in the laboratory—this is an adjunct of his university training; the ordinary High School course does not extend to laboratory work.

What is the nature of the experiments that name the new science? The microscopists and the nerve physiologists have made some interesting discoveries. They have shown that the rate at which the nervous impulse travels along the fibers can be measured; that it varies in different persons, and in the same persons under different conditions; that the speed of transit is lower than that of the electric current, which "would flash half-way round the globe while a nervous impulse could travel the length of the human body—from a man's foot to his brain."

The extreme delicacy of the nervous tissues, and the minute size of the nerve-cells, which require a high power of the microscope to render them visible, show that in the mere work of devising better methods of mounting brain sections, the microscopist has found no mean task. Since a method of staining the cells with nitrate of silver was invented, the wonderful discovery has been made, that each nerve-center is able at will to shut off communication with every other. Now for the first time the finer fibrils that extend from each cell, became visible and were seen to have free extremities. As Dr. Williams says: "Each filament is held, as heretofore, to be a transmitter of impulses, but a transmitter that operates intermittently, like a telephone wire that is not always connected. One can imagine by keeping in mind the flexible nerve prolongations, how new trains of thought may be engendered through novel associations of cells; how facility of thought in different directions is acquired through the habitual making of certain nerve-cell connections; how certain bits of knowledge may escape our memory, for a time, because of a temporary incapacity of the nerve-cells to make the proper connections; and so on indefinitely."

A slight examination of the nature and discoveries of Experimental Psychology, is enough to show that as a science, it bears directly toward and leads up to the Koreshan doctrine of the interconvertibility of spirit and matter; but although its whole message treats of the mysterious and intimate relationship between the two, although its discoveries effectually disprove the old idea of the mind as a separate entity, yet does it fail to bridge the chasm. It stops short this side the truth, nor is there any indication that it will ever take the last step.

One of the exponents of the new Psychology, whose work was crowned by the Society of Arts and Sciences of London, in a course of lectures designed for the students of the American University with which he is connected, summed up the subject in these discouraging words: "We may conclude that the physiological and the psychic represent each a universe within itself, so that we cannot make the two convertible; at the same time, the correlations are so close that the psychic activity is manifested only through the physiological."

Now a little while before, in a preceding lecture of the same course, he distinctly states that "in the cell (brain cell) there takes place a transformation of potential matter into kinetic force, the nerve-cell becoming the center of the correlation of matter and energy, the resultant being the manifestation of the highest degree of vital force."

Right here, Koreshan Science would aver that the latter statement—which contains more truth than its author suspects—gives a plain contradiction to the former,—that the brain cell is the laboratory where the physiological and the psychic not only meet, but are reciprocally transformed, interconverted; that when potential matter is changed into kinetic force, a part of this force is psychic—the only kind of psychic force there is in the world, of which the human brain is the generator and reservoir.

By psychic or soul force we mean mental force, the understanding and the will, or intellect and love. The fact that we have no experience nor manifestation of psychic force apart from the brain as its organ and generator, adds a strong presumption in favor of the Koreshan idea. The phenomena of modern spiritualism offer no exception; the brain of the medium being in every case the source of the various manifestations alleged. As for the evidence of design in Nature, the laws that govern the physical universe have their origin in mind, the perfect mind of the God-man, who is periodically manifest in human form with a human brain. Spirit apart from matter has no causative force; cause lies at the nexus of matter and spirit in the brain.

Experimental Psychology is working in the right direction. In studying the brain, its structure and functions, it is investigating in the realm of causation, and has done good service in disproving the musty theories of theology. As shown above, from the lips of one of its own teachers, it finds and recognizes very definite limitations to its researches.

Judgment to the Line and Righteousness to the Plumbet.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment. * * * Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth: I have put my Spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. * * * He shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth. * * * The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them; because they refuse to do judgment. * * * Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne. * * * Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off, for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey: and the Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment.

THE MESSENGER of God's Covenant, the Messiah, the Judge upon whom God put his Spirit, who brought judgment to the Jew, was Jesus. The one spoken of in the second quotation, as given above, "shall bring forth judgment unto the Gentiles." The first Messenger came in the end of the Jewish age—the time of judgment, the "great and dreadful day of the Lord" of that age. The Messenger to the Gentiles "shall bring forth judgment unto truth." He comes at a time when there is no truth, either in church or state—heaven or earth. Adultery in every domain of existence is at its full. "He will bring forth judgment unto truth,"—set truth again upon her fallen throne. However impossible the undertaking may appear, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth." This will be the consummation of the prayer that Jesus taught: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." It is declared in Malachi:

I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.

Governmental Robbers.

Governments are in league with usurers and speculators, to rob and pauperize their own poor subjects. A few common examples will make this—impossible as it may seem—entirely apparent. In a western state, a farmer had a farm worth $1200. On this farm, a usurer held a mortgage (death grip) for $50. The usurer class that manipulates money, had made it so scarce that his neighbor farmers, with his example before them, dared not encumber themselves to help him, so they were obliged to see the whole farm, at the sale of the property, go to the usurer, or some pal of his, for the $50 and costs, said costs being the government's share of the avails of the unholy partnership of usurer and the state. To secure for the usurer the $50, the state, in effect, robbed its rightful owner of $1150, giving what remained, after deducting its own unholy wages, to the usurer, or some fellow of his, and turning the man with his wife and children, out as tramps, which it (the state) treats as criminals.

Does this look like having no "respect of persons in judgment"? It is in principle, what all present governments are doing habitually. Contrast this with the requirements in a similar case, under the only civil polity that God ever established. If, as did this farmer, a Jew got into circumstances where he needed to borrow, God's law required the rich neighbor to lend to him; and if he was not able to pay the amount at the jubilee, he must give the claim, but in no case was he allowed to take usury of a brother Jew.

A man of the speculator class, owning a piece of property which from some defect he knows to be worthless, or nearly so, will keep it as trading stock, and finally sell it at several times its real worth. He takes notes to be paid, not in money, but in a commodity which, because of misfortune, the purchaser fails to be able to so pay. He takes his claim into court, where—through neglect, or treachery of the attorney engaged to look after the case—he gets judgment for the whole amount of the notes and accrued usury. To secure payment of this unjust debt, after more than the whole worth of the property has been paid on it, levy is made upon a farm, by far the greatest part of the value of which has been made by the labor of men who were never benefited a cent by the property purchased, but who hold the relation of fellow colonists with the man who made the purchase. Will the law take the property made by these innocent men, and turn them out without visible means of support, in order to satisfy the claim of this speculator? If it should, it will not do far differently from what all governments habitually do, although it is for their interests, as well as—under present conditions—their duty to see that all their citizens have equal advantages for earning an independent living.

England is bringing the horrors of war upon a free people, under pretense of caring for the rights of her citizens. Take the following, as an example of how she cares for her native-born subjects, who have no money interests to promote:

The Hell of London.

How is it that nobody attempts to face the great problems of London? This metropolis is beyond all question the most poverty-stricken place in the whole world. Foreigners who come here and are taken through the real London, are amazed at the huge mass of hopeless misery and squalor which is concentrated on the banks of the Thames. Many of our northern cities are depressing enough, but for sheer unhuman piggeries, for utter physical and mental degradation in bulk, London easily takes the first place. What sort of chance of developing a healthy body or a capable mind, have children born and brought up amid the surroundings of fourteen people in one room? What kind of true-born Britons and imperial Englishmen will they be, who are begotten of the anaemic and worn-out creatures who alone can exist in such conditions? We read article after article on the oppressed Uitlanders of Johannesburg. Nobody cares a curse for the rotting Uitlanders of London. Yet all this degradation is not inevitable. Far from it. It is the inevitable result of the system which the rich and the powerful deliberately maintain for their own gain. Nothing but greed, apathy, and ignorance prevent London from being transformed into an earthly paradise.—Justice, London, England.

In view of undoubted facts like the above, it is the sheerest hypocrisy for England to claim that she, in forcing war upon a peaceable people, is caring for men as men. Now, as always, it is only her moneyed class, the exploiters of the labor of poor men, that she represents, and whose interests she is seeking to promote. The share-holder, not the man, is the object of her material care. In this she is not alone; she is only the leader of nations, in a long-continued career of injustice and crime against humanity. But, thanks be to the God of justice and judgment, it is written of his Messenger, the Lord of hosts: "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law." That time is at hand!

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

OPTIMISM refuses to look on the dark side of the world's picture—the true picture of the civilization of the nineteenth century. Notwithstanding the existence of thousands of modern evils and horrors, of the prevailing ignorance and insanity, chaos and corruption, disease and death, there are those who assert that "All's well with the world;" that the world is growing better, more righteous, more contented, more intellectual, and pure! It is literally astonishing that the human mind should grow so optimistic right in the face of all the palpable evidences to the contrary. It is, however, the only means the illusionist has of deceiving himself as to his own real moral condition. There is not a city in all the modern world that is not filled from center to circumference with moral and physical corruption. Cities are focal points of hell; and we find involved in them all that the world contains. We have but to examine the records of the criminal and civil courts to find evidences of the utter depravity of the modern man. Dante was unable to picture hell as horrible as it exists today in the so called civilized world! Koreshanity views the world as it is. Unlike modern Christianity, it has no excuses to make for the terrible conditions which obtain throughout the world. Christendom has an object in view, in psychologizing the millions into the belief that the world of civilization—in which the perverted gospel has been preached for centuries—is civilized. Modern Christians have the audacity to assert that the corrupt nations of the world are Christian nations, and that Christendom is the kingdom of God! The churches are headed by ranting, canting, conceited, and whitewashed Pharisees; and they baptize the church with the same spirits of pretension and hypocrisy. On the crime calendar the great majority of revolting, heinous, and stealthful crimes are charged against members of the church; and prominent churchmen are in the trusts, in the competitive system of the robbery of the people, and in all the systems of oppression,—from the kings down to the priests who shackle the minds of millions. The world is rapidly nearing the final crisis; the crash must come. The hightide of crime and corruption, dissipation and debauchery, is coming. Crime is increasing, and suicides are multiplying. Men are being lynched, tortured, and burned at the stake, with all the horrors of the Inquisition. Men drink liquid fire, eat opium, use tobacco, and other narcotics. Both homes and houses of ill-fame are full of prostitution. Every nefarious business which the mind can conceive and invent, is being conducted in all the cities of civilization. These are facts; and we have not exaggerated them. It is difficult to find words adequate to describe the terrible conditions in which humanity finds itself. It is in bondage; the conspiracies and the intrigues of hell are successful. In all domains and departments of the human world, there are perversions and corruptions; they are expressed directly from the selfish heart of humanity. The world has made its external life and conditions just what it is in mind and heart. The people have presumed to rule in the western world; society, industry, commerce, and government have been adapted to the selfish, sordid, and sensual tendencies of a retrogressive humanity. The world has clothed itself from within, with all its undesirable environments. Absolute purity is a stranger; truth is unknown to the masses. Honesty and integrity find no welcome among the common herd; and justice and liberty do not impulse the aristocracy. Is the world growing better? The university, the college, church, and society, and the government say that it is; but the facts and Koreshanity deny it. The world is as it was nineteen hundred years ago, and worse; then it murdered the Christ for telling the truth about humanity. The Koreshan Prophet, through THE FLAMING SWORD and other avenues, dares to tell the truth regarding modern civilization, regardless of the consequences. Heroes always dare to be true to truth; he who cannot make enemies, cannot make friends that can be depended upon!

The orthodox churchmen are as busily engaged in displaying their ignorance of the Bible, as are the "higher critics." The latter attack the Bible, on the ground of its contradictions to modern science, while the former make a few feeble efforts to prove that the Bible is inspired. Both the orthodox churchman and the critic accept the modern scientific theories, but the two schools of Bibliography arrive at opposite conclusions. Both sides are endeavoring to analyze the Bible; and both sides are trying to find evidences to prove their claims, in ancient hieroglyphics on tablets, and in temples and tombs; and each school claims to find testimony which conflicts with the discoveries of the other. They pursue circuitous routes to conclusions; neither school will solve the problems of the Bible. Koreshanity monopolizes the field of Biblical verification and demonstration. The Bible must be understood before it can be either logically refuted or scientifically verified. The Bible is written in the language of scientific symbolism; and not until the symbols of the universe are understood,—not until the universe itself, with all its forms and functions, is comprehended, can the language of the Bible be proven true or false. Koreshanity reads the Bible in the light of demonstrated science. If what the Bible contains is the veritable truth; if its symbolism is correct; if the laws it expresses are the laws of life, it matters not who wrote the Bible. We take truth for authority, and not authority for truth! Koreshanity demonstrates that the astronomy of the Bible is true; that its alchemy is scientific; that its symbolism involves the profound mysteries of life and creation; that its astrology is reliable; that its ethnology is faultless; that its physiology is verified by actual facts of human form and function; that its biology is the science of divine existence; that the resurrection is a possibility in humanity; that its Messianism is the very essential, fundamental, and central principle of universal perpetuity; and that its prophecies are forecasts of history, fulfilled in current events. Such demonstrations are of infinitely more value than all the archeological fragments from the debris of the past!

The people are growing tired of the modern church; its pretensions and hypocrisies are becoming repulsive to the masses. The church organizations are as full of trickery and wire-pulling as are the political organizations. The church conferences are on a par with the political conventions. The preachers and politicians are alike in many respects, and denominational enthusiasm is like that of the political parties. The church is breaking up, and leaving the old creeds. The walls of theological seminaries are crumbling; the students are crying out for something more liberal. The preachers are asking that the theological masks and muzzles be taken off, that they may speak their convictions freely. A Presbyterian minister has thrown a bomb at an annual synod; and thousands of occupants of the pulpit are realizing the truth of his startling statements: "The church will not last long under present conditions. You will soon gather around the dying embers, and wonder where the former glow is. The Sunday school is a great bulwark, not only of conservatism, but of bigotry." The many radical and startling things concerning the modern church, which have been declared through the columns of THE FLAMING SWORD for years, are now being re-echoed throughout the world. The church is a miserable failure; it needs to enter oblivion, and it is rapidly moving in the direction of destruction.

The creeds teach that the physical universe was created and built up from nothing, about 6,000 years ago; that the whole system of existence was made in 144 hours. And yet, the universe is claimed to be infinite! It seems quite remarkable that it required a longer time to make the earth and put it in shape for habitation than it did to make the infinite number of worlds of suns and stars which are supposed to fill the infinite space of the Copernican system of the universe. The processes of continent building that are now going on incessantly, are the same processes by which the continents that are now existing were made. The sun and the sea are factors in world-building and world-perpetuity. Billions of insects in the sea and on the shore are tiny workmen, instrumental in the construction of islands, peninsulas, and continents. The physical world is always being created; the ceaseless rounds of cycles are eternal. The physical world never began in point of time, and it will never end. The great clock of the ages has always been ticking off universal time; it has kept time for more ages than there are grains of sand on the sea-shore. Law is eternal; and it is eternal by virtue of the fact that it always had and always will have a physical world, a physical pediment, in which to operate. Law is but the mode of action of substances which make up the eternal whole.

It is not possible to be what has not been in the past. Whatever conditions are reached in the world, are reached in accordance with law; and all law is eternal. There is nothing that man can truly hope to obtain, that has not been possessed by others in the past; for nothing can occur in the universe that has not, in accordance with ever operative law, occurred in ages gone by. History repeats itself; the progressive poles of cycles return to the same point, and produce the same results. Men have been immortal in the past; mortality could not now be if it were not so. The sons of God are coming again; the resurrection, the standing again, is about to take place. A superior race of men existed previous to the darkened period of the world's history; they were in the world previous to the days of Noah. The three great ages of every cycle of 24,000 years, are ages in which immortal men are manifest in the world. The Iron Age is the age of mortality; the age of darkness; the age of declension and delusion,—and the Iron Age is about to end. The great Alchemist is engaged in the work of transmutation of iron to gold, and will usher the world from the Iron Age to the Golden Age of immortality. It is a scientific process, and will take place in the external, natural world of humanity.

The American government is no more imperialistic today than it was previous to the Spanish-American war. If it is oppressing the Cubans and the Filipinos now, it was oppressing seventy millions of its own people before. Do the anti-imperialists think more of the savage tribes in the Philippines than the people of America? How does it come that the Filipinos find champions among those in America who were silent during all the years of American oppression previous to the cession of the Spanish colonies? If the American government is a free government; if it is more advanced and more liberal than the small, changeful, and petulant republics of Central and South America, would not the Filipinos be benefited by becoming a part of the more advanced republic? Can the Filipinos give themselves greater freedom and greater security than the United States of America can guarantee to them as a fractional part of the integral whole, under the flag of liberty? If the American government should be driven out of the Philippines, it should also be driven out of America; but if America is the land of liberty; if it contains the highest elements of civilization and progress in all the world today, then in the name of common sense and humanity, let it expand!

Magistrates, sheriffs, constables, policemen, and detectives resort to rank injustice and persecution for the sake of money. The practice of magistrates—that of giving fifty per cent of fines to informers,—creates innumerable parasites who prey upon citizens. The Illinois flag law recently went into effect; and before the men who had been printing the flag could change their designs or use up stationery already printed, hundreds were arrested on all sorts of technical charges, under warrants signed by magistrates but filled out by constables when they had, in disguise, trapped their victims. A detective recently visited a business man and asked if he knew where a counterfeit silver dollar could be obtained; the detective wanted one for a keepsake, he said. The detective was shown a lead dollar; the detective purchased the same for fifty cents, and immediately arrested the man for passing counterfeit money. Thousands of similar cases occur every year. The injustice is obvious—a form of injustice which creates contempt for the courts, disrespect for the law, and makes anarchists.

"Social Christianity demands a Christ in humanity." The demand should be made of the proper source, and means employed to put the Christ into the people. The process is obviously Messianic. A Messiah is a man; Jesus was a man, and he went into his disciples through an incorruptible dissolution, which reduced his body to divine energy or Holy Spirit. The Christ was first objective to his disciples; he then became subjective in them. He was the divine seed which fell into the soil of the mortal world, and died during the age—as every seed must die in order to reproduce. The only way in which the Christ can get into the people of the nineteenth century, is utterly ignored in Christian socialism; it cannot put the Christ into the people, hence it cannot reform the world.

Are there too many preachers? Vastly too many of the wrong kind—the kind that is unacquainted with the principles of righteousness and of purity. It is an indisputable fact that both clergymen and criminals are multiplying. As Christianity spreads, crime increases; as civilization advances, corruption keeps pace with it. The members of a false church are engaged in a false commerce. Preachers, politicians, and other parasites and pretenders, alike oppress the people. There are too many preachers, priests, Pharisees, and false prophets; too many pulpits and pews; too many ministers who minister for mercenary purposes. The modern world has produced ignorance and insanity; selfishness and superstition; money and murder; judges and jails. The church is not civilizing the world; it is not even civilizing itself.

The modern world is perverted in life, thought, and conduct. In both desire and deed, the world disobeys the laws of existence; and the mental conceptions of a perverted world are necessarily fallacious, because the very foundation fabric and fiber of the man are corrupt. Right thinking is the key to right living. The mentality of the world is in exact correspondence with the quality of its material base; the world is full of chaos and discord in all its affairs. The self-evident corruption of the world is an infallible index to the quality of its life and mind. Its science is fallacious; its religion is superstition; and its commerce and governments are oppressive. The world should feel ashamed and conscience-smitten to call its theories scientific, and its civilization righteous.

The great astronomical telescope in preparation for the Paris exposition of 1900 is attracting considerable attention. It will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, but it will solve none of the hundreds of unsolved problems, nor settle any of the difficulties which are encountered in the popular system of astronomy. If the scientific world would expend a few hundred thousand dollars in the extension of an absolutely straight line, a number of miles in length, such as was accomplished by the Koreschan Geodetic Expedition in 1897, it would destroy every vestige of the modern fallacy, and forever settle the question of the shape of the earth for those who will not accept the facts of the Koreschan survey. A scientific retribution is coming, and the victory will be ours!

Christians and Jews are taking it upon themselves to fulfil prophecy, by inaugurating a movement for the return of the Jews to Palestine, and for the establishment of a Jewish republic, with Jerusalem as the capital. Jewish capital is behind the scheme; the money power will claim it, and control it in the event of its establishment. This movement is but the most external reflex of the genuine gathering of Israel in the New Jerusalem, which is now in the spiritual world of the Messiah of the age. Zionism purposes the restoration of the external Jew under a republican form of government; and thousands of Jews may be gulled into believing that the Jewish republic is the veritable restoration of David's throne, the re-establishment of the theocracy of Moses!

The legislature of Illinois has made the American flag a sacred thing. It has passed a law forbidding the printing of pictures of the flag on advertisements, or on goods for sale. The patriot must keep it off his letter-heads and envelopes; it must not appear in connection with any printed announcements of any business, nor adorn the windows of business houses. Small business men must not desecrate the flag; the flag must be utilized to protect the nefarious schemes of the millionaire. The flag may not drape the windows of small concerns, but it will wave over the trusts and corporations as an emblem of their prosperity. Desecration of the flag must now be left exclusively to the money gods!

Earth, air, and water, also physical and human energies, are made to contribute to the wealth of the millionaire; all of the available resources of the universe are drawn upon to satisfy the greed for money, regardless of the consequences to humanity at large. In the mad race for wealth, in the universal worship of gold, the welfare and happiness of the masses are left out of the question entirely. To all intents and purposes at the present time, the universe exists for the few. The pirates and the parasites enjoy prosperity, while the poor luxuriate in poverty!

Recent experiments in acoustics have disturbed the physicists, and have "pointed to the necessity of reconsidering certain accepted dogmas relating to the transmission of sound waves." The prevailing theory of sound is proving very unsatisfactory in scientific circles, and a new theory is demanded—a new hypothesis as a basis. It is a poor system of physics which cannot settle itself beyond the possibility of being disturbed by subsequent discoveries! Acousticians need a sound basis; but it is evident that the accepted physics does not furnish them such a premise.

Political parties cannot increase the earth's productiveness nor the laborer's skill; but the money power behind the parties so controls capital, as to make prosperity for the millionaire by appropriating the products of the earth and labor. The money barometer rises and falls in the domain of commerce; it is manipulated by commercial pirates, who prosper at the expense of the millions who are forced to serve the few!

Science is the last thing in the world that an agnostic should undertake to teach; for science is from scire, to know.

Science means knowledge; the Greek word gnosis means knowledge. Agnosis means exactly the opposite—without knowledge. An agnostic is a man without knowledge; it is impossible for such a man to teach science. The majority of the modern scientists are agnostics!

The lion-hunters of South Africa have at last encountered the king of beasts in the jungles and on the mountain sides. The formidable lion is out for gold, and purposes placing his mark on all his victims. His roar is heard in the Transvaal; it is the voice of the cannon!

The world is not living on the inside of the earth; it is dying there. Death prevails throughout humanity; and not until Koreshanity triumphs, can man be said to live anywhere.

The process of civilization of the cannibal has been aptly described by an old African chief: "First come missionary, then come rum, then come traders, then come army."

The Adventists claim to be sounding the "midnight cry;" they are crying out of darkness. Koreshanity deals with daylight!

The accumulations of the millionaire are stupendous; the privations of the people are co-loss-al.

Political candidates and corruptionists strive to make their "calling and election sure."

Protestantism is composed of mere disintegrated elements of Catholicism.

The spirits of the money power talk through the medium of exchange.

THE EDITOR.

Koreshanity the Coming World-Power.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Your bold and fearless way of attacking the corruptions of church and state, is a powerful attraction to me. Allowing Koreshanity to come straight from the devil, any fair-minded reader of the Koreshan literature and observer of the ways of the world, must acknowledge that it is far in advance of the church of today. Seeing the corruption and the poverty, you have set yourselves to the noble task of applying the only true remedy, while the churches, in company with tyrants and agnostics, are soaked in blood and carnage.

Still, I am honest enough to admit that I often find myself asking the question, Are not KORESH and his disciples the great impostors of the latter days, of whom Christ said: "Inasmuch, that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect"? Nevertheless, after reading the Koreshan literature, I am obliged to admit that KORESH is by far the greatest man in the earth today, and that Koreshanity is destined to become a power—of some kind—the world over. With your correspondent in Colorado, I am satisfied that there is an enormous supply of brains back of the Koreshan gospel; and that you can answer—to the satisfaction of Koresh-ans, at least—whatever questions we may ask you. So I pray you be patient, while I ask some more:

(1) Do you claim KORESH to be the Christ, or simply the Sign, the Messenger of Christ? (Koreshan literature appears to me to try to evade a straight answer to this); and if so, inasmuch as you claim Koreshanity to be the exact teaching of Christ, why not call him by his right name, and the gospel, Christian?

(2) IN THE FLAMING SWORD of October 6, you say that God does not know all things; while KORESH tells us that "He possesses omniscience—omni-science." You also make the statement that KORESH is in possession of the "philosopher's stone, the key to all knowledge." Again, it is said there is a simple key which "unlocks universal mystery." Is KORESH further advanced than God? Please harmonize this contradiction, lest we call you a set of blasphemers and hypocrites.—P. A. C., St. Albans, Vt.

The time has been in the history of Koreshanity, when KORESH was considered to be a weak fanatic, unworthy of notice; but the fact that thinking minds are now recognizing the superiority of his scientific System over the mental products of modern blunderers, is proof that he is making rapid progress in the direction of a stupendous triumph over fallacy in the world. The Founder of Koreshanity is today making a greater and deeper impression upon the mind of the world than ever before. Thousands of people are willing to concede the fact that he possesses a wonderful mind, which has expressed itself in a marvelous System. The agitation will increase more and more, until he wins.

Already he is a curiosity to the world. Newspaper reporters leave him after interviews, with surprise and wonder; audiences listen to his eloquence with profound attention, questioning in their own hearts whom he really is, and what is to be the result of his work. KORESH has thousands of enemies, and thousands of friends; both classes will rapidly increase until the culmination. A weak man can never have many enemies, nor many friends; the man who is able to make enemies that will fight him bitterly, is also able to make friends that are staunch and true to his System.

The next question, after admission of the manifest and self-evident stupendous force back of Koreshanity, is the question of its truth. This question cannot be settled by those who simply inquire but do not investigate. The Man and his System must be studied in order to be understood. The enemies of Koreshanity are those who know the least about it; its staunch friends are those who best know the System and its Founder. The System contains its own methods of test. How could the principles of Alchemy be tested by other methods than those which belong to Alchemy itself? Every true system has its premise. Koreshanity has a specific premise, which is susceptible of test; it defines what that premise is, as well as the methods of demonstration. If the System is true, there is but one conclusion concerning the Man with whom it originated; and that is, that the Man is as true as his System. Such a system as Koreshanity must concern the world. If it is true, it is the most magnanimous system ever brought to the knowledge of man; and the world must, in time, welcome it with joy. If it is false, the world has it to fear; because it has a potency behind it that will push it throughout the wide world!

(1) Koreshan literature does not attempt to evade clear and specific statements concerning the mission of KORESH. The great trouble is the failure on the part of the people to comprehend what to us is clear and emphatic. The fact is, that the function and mission of the Founder of Koreshanity cannot be thoroughly and satisfactorily understood and appreciated until the System itself is understood and accepted. There are so many complexities concerning the intellectual fruitage of an entire cycle of human progress, that it is difficult to answer such questions satisfactorily in a few words, or in a few pages to those who do not understand the System; it would require volumes.

We find that people are prone to jump at conclusions from old premises or suppositions; they are so liable to form erroneous and absurd conclusions, that care and judgment must be exercised in the promulgation of Koreshanity. For the most part, we do not find it necessary to express always, ultimate conclusions, where steps are necessary for the investigators. It should be sufficient for the student of Koreshanity to take the necessary logical steps in the route to inevitable conclusions, rather than to attempt to have promiscuous conclusions given them before they are able to grasp what the conclusions mean, and how they are arrived at. One would not think that a teacher of common school branches is evading the subject, because he does not at once tell the student all about the intricacies of the more advanced departments to which the branch belongs. There were many things which even the disciples of Jesus could not understand; and they were told, "Ye cannot bear them now." There is a systematic method of study of all subjects; and there is a promiscuous, haphazard, and harmful method—the one usually employed by the modern mind.

Is KORESH the veritable Jesus the Christ? No; there was but one Jesus the Christ; he lived nineteen hundred years ago. Jesus was the name of that unique, immortal personality which was manifest as the Messiah to the Jews. In Him the mind of the Almighty was manifest in the philosophic degree; he was the manifestation of the love and will of God. KORESH cannot be that personality, any more than Jesus was the personality of Moses. The Messiah of this dispensation must, of necessity, be another personality, with another name, performing a different function, because he is a manifestation of another degree of divine mentality—the scientific degree; he is the manifestation of God in the intellect; and hence puts forth an intellectual System, the Science of the Universe.

KORESH proclaims himself to be the Messiah of this dispensation, the Precursor of the coming sons of God. The Messianic manifestation of the present time is both the Messiah and the Sign of the Son of man, the Elijah who comes before the second coming of Jesus in the 144,000 sons of God. The word Christ means anointed; it is not a name, but a title. The church does not know this, and uses the word as a name! The name of the Messiah at the beginning of the age was Jesus; the literal translation of Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, is Jesus the Anointed, or the Anointed Savior. The name of the Founder of Koreshanity is KORESH; it is the Hebrew for Cyrus; and Cyrus is his legitimate, first name, by which he has been called since 1839, and is the name prophesied that he should possess when manifest to the world. Isa. xlv: 28; xlv: 1-3.

(2) There are no contradictions in Koreshan literature, nor in THE FLAMING SWORD. The seeming contradiction referred to above, is with the inquirer. We did not say in THE FLAMING SWORD of October 6, that God does not know all things; but specifically and emphatically that God does know all things. We used the following words: "The knowledge of God is limited; when he knows all things, he knows all there is to know, and can know no more." The knowledge of God is limited to the universe, which contains all things. The Almighty knows all things; hence his knowledge is limited, because there is a limit of the number of things in the evolution of a perfect cause. The knowledge of God is not infinite; for infinite means incomplete, imperfect, and unfinished. If God's knowledge were infinite, it would be incomplete and imperfect, the same as that of the mortal, ignorant man! We hold that God's knowledge is complete, and that the Deific perspective embraces the entire universe, with all its contents. There is nothing more than the universe to know.

Thought is Transmitted in the Direction of Desire.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) You say that the spirit of a man enters the anthropic or human world when he dies. If so, when a man is buried alive, and dies in the grave, what process does his spirit pass through before it enters the spiritual world? (2) Who will be the Messiah at the end of the next dispensation?—E.C.D., Cedar Lane, Pa.

(1) The mental substance of a man who dies in the grave, passes through the same processes that it would in death under any other circumstances. Neither space nor material substance offers any obstruction to the transmission of thought either in life or at death. It is a well-known fact, that gravic energies pass directly through any known material without being obstructed in anyway. If the most subtle physical energies penetrate materials, it should be easy to see that mental substance, the most subtle and refined energy in the universe, can pass through any gross material. Physical energies occupy space, and are transmitted through space; and it requires time for the transmission. In the spiritual world or world of mind, there is neither time nor space; and between mind and mind there is a relation which goes beyond and above space and time, for it belongs to that degree of substance in which there is neither time nor space; and therefore, time and space cannot be considered in the transmission of mind from personality to personality. The processes through which the mind passes in entering the spiritual world, are transmutations from one state to another.

(2) In the coming ages, sons of God will be manifest; they will be the Savors or Messiahs of future dispensations; there will be many instead of one. The names are not yet revealed; they are written in the New Jerusalem, in the Messianic manifestation at the end of the present age. The names of the divine personalities will be given, as the personalities are manifest in the tangible world; there would be no use in their being known before; for until the most progressive minds reach a certain point of progress, the names could not be comprehended; and that point is the actual point of mate-rialization into sonship. The sons of God are the only ones who will sing the new song;—the only ones who will comprehend the new names. There will, however, be a distinct individual and supreme manifestation at the beginning of every dispensation of the Golden Age, a manifestation of the femininity of God in the divine Mother.

In the Field of Koreshan Propaganda.

Weekly Synopsis of Topics Discussed by Koreshan Lecturers.

Koreshan Hall, 316 W. 63d St., Chicago.

THURSDAY EVENING, Oct. 19.—Lecture by Rev. Berthaldine, on Social Purity. Occasionally, one meets with people who deny (because ignorant of the facts) the almost universal prevalence of immorality in the world today. Oh! for an immense auditorium, where the people might congregate and there witness (as thrown by stereopticon in gigantic characters upon the screen) the true statistics of lust and depravity; the dens of infamy and blighted lives! Truly, then, might come an awakening of humanity to the necessity for purification of life.

SUNDAY, 3 P. M., Oct. 22.—Sermon by Rev. Berthaldine. Text: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." Koreshans dare to come before the world, acknowledging the man, KORESH, as the fulfilment of prophecy; the Messenger of the Covenant; the Messiah of the age. But why this belief? Is it but the vain babblings of religious fanatics, as many imagine, or have we a reason for the hope that is in us? KORESH (or Cyrus) has brought to a chaotic world a system of universal science,—the absolute truth,—all parts of which blend into one complete harmony. Necessarily, the man bringing such a message is the Messenger—the great teacher of the age.

Jesus came through the lineage of Judah; but another personality is prophesied to come through the posterity of Joseph. The name is also given: "That saith of CYRUS, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, thou shalt be built; and to the temple, thy foundation shall be laid." Much other evidence was given, of so forceful a character as to strongly impress the intelligent mind that Koreshans know whereof they speak.

MONDAY EVENING, Oct. 23.—Lecture by Prof. Morrow, on astronomy. The lecturer began with setting forth some fundamental principles of geometry, as follows: two straight perpendicular lines, drawn equally distant one from the other, are called parallel. A like term is applicable to two straight horizontal lines drawn under the same circumstances. We may take the two perpendicular and the two horizontal lines, fit them together, and we have a true square. The extension of a square is the rectangle. What is true in geometry, is equally applicable in mechanics. Geometry deals in lines and angles; mechanics, in surfaces and corners. Any good artisan can construct a perfect square or a perfect rectangle. If we place the ends of two rectangles together perfectly, the horizontal axis of rectangle No. 2 is but the extension of a like axis in rectangle No. 1, and so on, time without number. Such is the principle of the "air line," as run with the Rectilineator, in the Koreshan Geodetic Survey on the Florida west coast, and upon which principle we challenge the world. Then followed a detailed account of the late survey, and the inevitable conclusions resulting from it.

Koreshan Hall, 681-83 W. Lake St.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Oct. 18.—Lecture by Prof. Morrow, on Astronomy. This was the first of a series of lectures on the above named subject, to be held in our West Side hall. The evening was mainly devoted to showing up some of the many absurdities of the Copernican theory. The rapidly revolving (?) earth has spun the yarn from which the entire fabric of modern religion, astronomy, and sociology has been woven.

The theories of evolution and the creation were reviewed and mercilessly scored by the Professor. If God intended to create an infinite universe, he never could complete it, as the word infinite means, literally, unfinished. On the other hand, we have the great fallacy—evolution—in which dead, inert matter miraculously took upon itself motion; evolving from chaos a great system of law and order. Away with such nonsense! We want none of it! Koreshanity demonstrates the universe to have always existed. Cycles of time succeed each other as day follows night, but the physical cosmos is perpetual.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Oct. '18.—State and Randolph Sts. Subject: "On with the Dance! Peace a Delusion." This is an age of disintegration, and chaos rules supreme in all domains of human activity. The cry of "peace" is today but the song of the siren, lulling men to rest, while the great ship of state plunges on toward the rocks of perdition and destruction. The Christian dispensation has been, throughout, a career of bloodshed, and its entire history presages the character of the end. Universal revolution is the inevitable lot of a race that loves darkness rather than light, because its deeds are evil. Koreshanity is the ark of refuge for all who would seek divine mercy,—the beacon light leading to the haven of peace,—which condition obtains after the great conflict of the hosts of perdition, when the fires of hell will have burned themselves out.

SATURDAY EVENING, Oct. 21.—63d and Halsted Sts.—Subject: "The Cellular Cosmogony." Extracts were read from the writings of eminent astronomers, in which they admit having no proof of the Copernican system. The Koreshan System was explained from the premise of the earth's concavity, which being demonstrated proves all, as the entire System hinges upon this proposition. The gauntlet has been cast down to the scientific world, and we await the issue.

SUNDAY EVENING, Oct. 22.—State and Quincy Sts. A large crowd gathered immediately, upon the setting up of the astronomical charts. The topic for the evening was: "Koreshanity the Key that Unlocks all Mysteries." Notwithstanding the great ingenuity of man (as manifest in this wonderful age of discovery), the origin and destiny of the human race have remained shrouded in mystery. The endeavors of great minds to solve the mystery of the ages, have but resulted in greater perplexity. Life is a burden to the masses, as is evidenced by the constant resort to poisonous stimulants, both of mind and body. Religious systems now in vogue, are powerless to save. Everywhere is written: Mystery; Babylon the great!—the abomination of the earth! KORESH comes in the fulness of time, as the Voice of God, crying to a benighted world: "Let there be light," which light is as the brightness of the noonday sun, dissipating the shadows with its effulgent beams, and revealing the hidden mysteries of secret places.

The audience remained attentive for two and one half hours, at the termination of which many copies of the CELLULAR COSMOGONY were sold, and considerable literature gratuitously distributed.

Koresh in California.

Famous Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, the Founder of the New Religion, Visits the City of San Bernardino.

KORESH is here. The famous and remarkable Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, the Founder of a new religion, is in the city. He arrived last evening for a short visit, and is stopping at the residence of John M. Lane, No. 580 Eighth street, between E and F streets.

Dr. Teed has become noted from ocean to ocean, from the fact that, while claiming to be KORESH, the head of a new religious sect, he has taken a new departure in science; and instead of admitting that the earth is a globe surrounded by myriads of stars, each as large as our own sun, that are scattered through space for millions of millions of miles in every direction, and that our sun is but one center of a multitude of systems of similar worlds, he insists that the world is a hollow shell, with the sun 4,000 miles away, in the center of the shell; and that we all live and move and have our being upon the interior surface of this shell.

The World's News.

This is no new theory, for there has been located in Pennsylvania for nearly a hundred years, a colony with this belief as its corner-stone. [The Sun is mistaken; no member of the colony referred to entertained the idea of the hollow globe until it was presented by KORESH, the Founder of Koreshanity. The Koreshan communistic System is the first one ever founded on the science of the cellular universe. — EDITOR.] It also believes in communistic ownership of property, and is opposed to all marriages of any kind, relying upon proselyting to keep its numbers up. This last has been a failure, as there are now only about 40 members of the colony; but the property has increased in value, until each member is more than a millionaire.

The visit of KORESH to San Bernardino, is evidently to establish a branch of his church here; and to this end he will no doubt be heard at the Opera House, Pavilion, or some other place where an audience can be gathered to listen to the explanation of his peculiar religious and scientific views.

He has one convert here in John M. Lane, who was called up before the Baptist church, of which he is a member, last Monday evening, and asked to recant his Koreshan doctrines and come back into the Baptist fold. But Lane was obdurate, and while the church would not expel him, the right hand of fellowship was withdrawn from him until he should see the error of his ways and come back into the fold. This was done out of sympathy for his son, who is in the East studying for the Baptist ministry.

San Bernardino is liberal in religion and science, and will turn out en masse to listen to the distinguished visitor, should he conclude to address the people upon KORESH, or the hollow globe in which he says we dwell; and no doubt, as he is said to be a speaker of great power and magnetism, he will make many converts in this city.

"Great is KORESH, and Teed is his prophet!"—San Bernardino Daily Sun.

Promulgating a New Theory.

The Surface of the Earth Claimed to be Concave and Not Convex.

Rev. U. G. Mitchell, of Gouverneur, N. Y., formerly pastor of the Universalist church of this village, and who did a remarkable work for this church during his pastorate, is in town just now, engaged in very peculiar work. He is the New York state agent of the Guiding Star Publishing House, a religious organization of Chicago, which is engaged in the work of promulgating the idea that our earth has a concave and not a convex surface; that the earth is a great hollow globe 8,000 miles across, with the entire solar system inside; that stars can be seen through the moon; that the disappearance of vessels at sea is only a trick of the eye. They also claim to have made a survey of the surface of the Gulf of Mexico, and claim they have demonstrated that the surface of the water is concave and not convex. The theories advocated by this organization are causing, to say the least, a tremendous amount of discussion among thinking people.—Cortland (N. Y.) Evening Standard.

Wednesday, Oct. 18.—Exciting reports from the Transvaal, that the Boers have been repulsed from several towns which they had captured in English territory; battle said to have occurred at Kimberley; active movements of Boers on eastern and western Transvaal border.—English parliament adopts war policy, and determines to push the war in South Africa.—Officers in the Philippines express indignation over blunders of Gen. Otis; protest against capturing towns, and then abandoning them to insurgents.—Belgian socialists hope to control affairs of government.—Money panic in Bremen, Germany.—Anti-imperialists discuss their views in convention at Chicago.—Big frauds in life insurance discovered in Sweden.

Thursday.—Bourke Cochran and Carl Schurz champion the cause of the savage Filipinos; ask for justice to the rebels.—2,000 medical students compose a disgraceful mob and attack meeting held by Dr. Dowie, at Chicago; windows smashed, rioting occurs in hall, and offensive chemicals are thrown.—Fierce battle said to be in progress in Natal, South Africa; British display white flag at Mafeking; active war in progress, and thus far, the British have been the losers.—Serious rioting in Prague, Austria.

Friday.—Train loaded with British soldiers and officers trapped and captured by the Boers in the vicinity of Ladysmith; war news meager and unreliable; great excitement in London; English forces thought to be in danger; many skirmishes reported.—Czar of Russia refuses to establish diplomatic relations with the Vatican.—American soldiers are continually defeating the Filipinos without whipping them!—National association of spiritualists at Chicago.

Saturday.—British win in a small battle near Dundee; Boer losses said to be 800; English troops being hurried to seat of war.—Negro burned at the stake at St. Ann, Miss.—Columbia wins in final yacht race at New York; cup retained in America; Shamrock fairly and squarely beaten in all races this year.—General rioting and fighting among students of university of Vienna.—100 Russian convicts escape from mines in Siberia.—Great famine in India; prevails over 100,000 square miles of territory, embracing 1,500,000 people.

Sunday.—Another small battle between Boers and British; Boers defeated; British capture a few guns and equipments.—Tornado at Sagua, Cuba, kills 10 people, and demolishes houses and crops.—Filipinos are maneuvering to trick Gen. Otis into some sort of recognition of Filipino government.—F. Tennyson Neely, the great Chicago and New York book publisher, fails, with liability of nearly $500,000.—Germany spends £70,000 on a 10-ton experimental air-ship.

Monday.—European powers said to be planning to force England to stop war in South Africa.—Excitement in London over reports that France and Russia are planning to take advantage of the Transvaal situation.—Another battle reported at Elangslaagte; 400 Boers killed; light and frequent skirmishes on borders of Transvaal.—Mexicans and American cowboys engage in a fight at Naco, Ariz.—Mexican secretary of the treasury declares in favor of the gold standard.—Incipient revolution breaks out in U. S. Colombia.—13-year-old evangelistic freak, Claude Cooke, of England, strikes Chicago.

Tuesday.—British forces in Natal believed to be in a serious position, and in danger of massacre by the Boers; hundreds of British soldiers driven back from Transvaal border; trouble threatening for the English on western border also.—Belgium preparing to fight the oil monopoly.—State of siege continues at Barcelona, Spain; government determined to enforce payment of taxes at point of bayonet!—Cubans in convention at Havana, talk of independence.—Universalists make changes in their creed at biennial convention at Boston.—Insurgents in U. S. Colombia busy capturing and arming river steamers, and burning bridges.—If the world's peace has come, pray, what is war?

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Leslie's Weekly.—The South African war is being watched with eager interest the world over. It is not enough for the public to have the news of the military movements; the cause of the war is desired by the masses, and moreover, pictures are necessary to satisfy the people. A special feature of this week's Leslie's Weekly, is a plain and candid statement, accompanied by numerous illustrations, of the cause of the war in South Africa. Other special features of the publication include a double page illustration of the methods of harvesting the golden crops of the West; the great international yacht races, inclusive of another double page picture; President McKinley's visit to the West; the return of Gen. Funston from the Philippines; Admiral Dewey's reception in Vermont and Massachusetts. The letter press contains a number of interesting things, besides the usual departments, which are always interesting. Copies at all news stands.

The Saturday Evening Post.—The College Men's number of the Saturday Evening Post (of Philadelphia), appears this week with striking and tastefully colored covers, and contains a large account of reading matter of special interest to all college men. It is devoted especially to the facts and fiction of university and college life. The short stories are clever, humorous, and true to life, and will be read and appreciated by thousands of people interested in educational institutions. Robert W. Chambers, in "The Spirit of the North," tells of the adventures of a party of Columbia naturalists in an unknown country behind the Hudson mountains. The story of the Great College Fight between Princeton students and the passing Wild-West Show, is vividly told by Jesse Lynch Williams; and Charles Macomb Flandrau contributes Prince Protococoff and the Press Club. Among the contributors to this number, are President Benjamin Ide Wheeler, who discusses college athletics; Thomas Wentworth Higginson, who describes College Life in the Days of our Grandfathers. At all news stands this week. Price, 5 cents per copy.

The Sphinx.—A large, 80-page, well-printed and covered magazine devoted entirely to astrology; and we do not hesitate to say that it is the best popular astrological publication in America. It began in July, 1899, with a capital of $500,000, and promises to be a success. Single copies are sold at 30 cents; the annual subscription is $3.00. It is of interest to note that it is edited by a woman—Catharine H. Thompson. Among its contributors are the foremost astrologers of Europe and America. Sphinx Pub. Co., 480 Massachusetts ave., Boston, Mass.

Ecce Homo.—A magazine of progressive thought; devoted to religion, philosophy, and science; independent, and radically opposed to the superstitions of the modern church. The October number discusses the inspiration of the Bible, and Higher Criticism. $1.00 per year. 906 Turpin street, Richmond, Va.

Koreshan Propaganda in Chicago.

New Koreshan Hall Opened for Lectures on Koreshan Science.

The Guiding Star Assembly of the Koreshan Unity has provided a Hall at 316 West Sixty-third street, Chicago, in the interest of Koreshan propaganda; and we make announcement of the order of lectures for each week.

Sunday, 3 P. M., Public Service of the Koreshan Ecclesia.

Monday evening, Illustrated Lecture on Koreshan Astronomy, by Prof. U. G. Morrow, Editor of THE FLAMING SWORD. Questions answered at close of each lecture.

Thursday evening, Lecture on Social Purity, by Berthaldine, Matrona.

The College of Psychical Sciences and Unfoldment.

This school, the only one of its kind in the world, is conducted by J. C. F. GRUMBINE, the author and lecturer. It is open to students each month. The studies are eclectic, although a regular and uniform curriculum is established and operative. It is devoted exclusively to the System of Philosophy concerning Divinity, and is connected with the Order of the White Rose, branch of the Rosicrucians. The secrets and mysteries of Magic and Occultism are revealed. The mystic and potential powers of Divinity, such as Clairvoyance, Psychometry, Inspiration, Psychopathy, Ontology, Hypnotism, Telepathy, and Illumination are taught.

Special teachings are arranged for out-of-town students and belong to the college extension department. Development is thus ensured in the student's home for a nominal sum.

For booklet, percentage of Psychical Power, send a stamped, addressed envelope to J. C. F. Grumbine, 1718 West Genesee st., Syracuse, N. Y.

Clairvoyance, its Nature, Law, and Unfoldment.—How to unfold the Clairvoyant vision, see and converse with Spirits, enter at will the Spiritual world, and become a seer and adept, absolutely what it purports to be. Cloth, price $3.50.

Psychometry: How to Unfold and realize Divination and Illumination. Price 50c. Send 25c for a sample copy or $1.00 for a year's subscription to Immortality, the brilliant quarterly publication. Address, J. C. F. GRUMBINE, 1718 W. Genesee st., Syracuse, N. Y.

Offices, Factories, and Stores: 666, 681-683 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

The Bureau of Equitable Commerce, a department of the Koreshan Unity, is the result of practical application of the Koreshan principles of industry and commercial exchange; it is a genuine crusade against the competitive system. It owns and controls a number of industries, and desires the co-operation of all who wish to escape the bondage of the competitive world, and to move in the direction of human and economic liberation.

It is Engaged in the Production and Distribution of All Kinds of Merchandise; its Products go Direct from Maker to Consumer.

It operates on the basis of Co-operative Exchange, and its purpose is to incorporate all lines of industry and produce the greatest results with the least expenditure of energy, through mutual interests and co-operation.

Call for More Co-Operators.

We are now in need of co-workers in all its departments, especially in the Broom Factory, Machine Shop, Bakery, Restaurant, Grocery, and Market; and are in position to utilize the skill of all workmen who may desire to enter the co-operative movement. The co-operators share in the products and all benefits accruing to the corporation; its co-operators are thus enabled to provide for themselves in both present and future.

Occult Review of Reviews.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.

Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY and FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in weeks of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. We are constantly striving to winnow the real instruction from the chaff, so that he who runs may read. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Yearly subscription, $1. HERMETIC PUB. The Cellular Cosmogony or Koreshan Astronomy.

* SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF DR. CYRUS R. TEED, OF CHICAGO. *

The Earth is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Suns, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the laws and functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, Theocracy, and Social Economy.

The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Incarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the deepest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory ofosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profound foundation of all. Price 10 cents.

Whole No. 361

A Striking Contrast in Theology.

The Principal Tenets of the Koreshan and Orthodox Schools of Theology Placed Side by Side in Parallel Columns.

NOTE.—The Articles numbered consecutively in parallel columns are to be read in contrast; throughout the entire article under this heading the matter on the left is Koreshan, while that on the right is the orthodox belief of the church.

Koreshanity.

THERE IS but one person in the trinity; that person was the Lord Jesus, when he was in the earth at the inauguration of the Christian era.

II. The Lord (Jehovah) came into the world the fulness of the Godhead bodily, embracing three attributes—that of Fatherhood (power to beget); that of Motherhood (power to gestate), involved in the operation of the Holy Spirit proceeding from the Son as the begetting source, which, after begetting, constituted him the Father; and that of Sonship, which is the attribute of being generated from himself.

III. The Godhead in his fulness was incarnate in the flesh, the Lord, who was both Elohi and Jehovah; that is, God the Lord. He reproduced himself from a prior manifestation occurring at a corresponding time in the Zodiacal cycle, and therefore came into the world according to the operation of the Messianic law, which operates throughout the perpetually recurrent cycles of time.

IV. The Godhead possesses an interior pivotal and central entity, which is eternal. This nucleus of a pneumatic and psychic life is the central star (astral nucleus) of all being. This central star is not extrinsic to humanity, but the point of the congeries of all human affection and intellection; it is the pivot whence radiates all interior thought, and into which flow both the affections and intellections of mental energy from universal humanity, whether angelic, or the external and tangible humanity.

Orthodoxy.

THERE ARE three persons in the trinity—one person of the Father, one person of the Son, and one person of the Holy Ghost.

II. One person of the trinity (not the fulness of the Godhead bodily) came down from heaven,—leaving the other two persons up in heaven,—and clothed himself with a human body called the Son of God. He is not the Father nor the Holy Spirit, but the Son; not the offspring of himself, not having the power to beget, but co-existent with the Father and the Holy Ghost.

III. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, came into the world, not according to a definite law, but according to a specific fiat of the Father, the first time and only time, the visible Son of God from an invisible Son of God, who was the Son of God before coming into the world, and as old as the Father, for he was coexistent with him and equal to him.

IV. God is the great spirit which pervades the universe. He is illimitable, incomprehensible; that is, unknown and unknowable. According to orthodoxy, he is Father, Son, and Holy Ghost in three persons;—one of these ideas being in direct conflict with the other. His throne is everywhere and nowhere; he has no specific throne, because he is all-pervasive. At this point, modern Christian theology is in such a jumble it cannot be expressed.

V. The Son of God is the product of human development through ages of successive cycles of time, in which humanity is subjected to the experiences of retrogressive and progressive existence, both in the spiritual and material domains of consciousness, until perfection is attained. The Son of God was Abram, to whom God made the promise of attaining the divine inheritance,—that of making him his perfect Son, and the heir of the world. He was manifest in the prophets, kings, and priests in successive incarnations. He was specifically manifest in David, to whom God said: “I will make of thee my first-born, higher than the kings of the earth.” This promise was fulfilled when, in his perfection, he was reincarnated in the Lord Jesus, who was Jehovah.

VI. The Son of God does not exist as the Son, until produced in the flesh. He is then the aggregate of a composite unity of millions of spiritual entities of human beings who have been born into the world, have died, and are absorbed and blended into the central consciousness of unity. This blending of identity is without loss of consciousness or identity on the part of such as are worthy to enter the central consciousness. This is central absorption—absorption into the astral nucleus. The entity absorbed (without loss) takes on the consciousness of the central identity, so there are not two or more identities, but one consciousness. When this composite unity is made perfect through the application of the laws of overcoming, as the Son of God in the flesh, he walks with God and is not, for God takes (absorbs) him. The Son is then consumed by the fire of theocrasis (translation), is absorbed into the invisible nucleus, into the invisible Godhead, and becomes the invisible or spiritual nucleus. (See article no. 4.)

VII. When the Son of God, the offspring of humanity, therefore “the Son of man,” enters by theocrasis (a consuming fire, translation) into the central and stellar nucleus of affectional and intellectual power and pre-eminence, he precipitates (throws down) a descending spirit. This spirit radiates from the center into which He flows in his ascent, entering (in his descent), by an orderly and graduating way, into the souls of such as are prepared to receive him, into the soil, the church, into which he is planted. This is called the Holy Ghost or Spirit. It is the divine proceeding, the seed or seminal essence of Deity, by which the church (the soil—ground) is vitalized with the divine impregnating seed of regeneration (re-production), through which those who receive the seed are to become the sons of God when, in the fulness of times, the process of regeneration is complete.

The Lord becomes the Father, by virtue of the fact that he impregnates the church and brings forth his offspring, the children of the resurrection, the children of regeneration. When He said, “I have not yet ascended to the Father,” he signified that he had not yet impregnated the church by the dissemination of his seed—the Holy Spirit.

V. The Son of God incarnate, was produced without any human experience, prior to his conception by the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary. He was the first and only human Son of God. His experience in the world was only about thirty-three years’ duration, when he left the world, taking his body up into the material or physical heavens. The promises to Abraham and David have no significance, further than that this patriarch and king will possibly occupy an exalted position somewhere in the heavenly domain, now, or at some future time. The Son existed in heaven, came down suddenly to earth, fulfilled a mission for about thirty years, and went back to heaven, where he sits at the right hand of the Father,—his Father taking the second seat in the same throne.

VI. The Son of God, one of three eternal and distinct entities, is the Son all the time, not the Son because he is made so by being the Son of man, but he was eternally so. There never was a time when he was not as old as the Father, when he was not equal to the Father. He descended as a spirit, became a man, and went back as a man. His translation was not a theocrasis, but merely a levitation, not in conformity to some definite law, but the result of a miraculous fiat of the Almighty. He did not blend with the central, invisible, and spiritual Deity, but sat down on a throne having three seats, he taking the right hand, and his Father moving along one seat to the left, to make room for the Son. He was the Son of God from eternity, and not specifically and solely from humanity.

VII. The Holy Spirit comes from an indefinite source, and is an indefinite something. It is not seed; it is some power without substance. It does not proceed definitely from the Son of man, the Son of God, through his combustion, and is not the very substance of the person of the Christ. The Holy Spirit was not the product of the combustion of the Lord’s body. They do not know how or whence it proceeded, whether from the Father, or from the Son, or from both; but they know it is a person, because somebody whom they follow in theological knowledge, has told them there are three persons in the Godhead; that one of these persons is the Holy Ghost, which operated in the church 1900 years ago, and operates now in the church. They don’t know that the Holy Spirit was the seed of God; or that it was sown to die like any other seed; or that this Holy Ghost is the product of the dissolving of the body of the Son of God, and that through it the sons of God will be regenerated. They believe it is blasphemy to put forth such a doctrine, and the one who does so ought to be anathematized. They do not believe that the church was the soil in which the seed was planted; or that the seed and soil together must die to regenerate, for “the Holy Ghost can’t die.”

VIII. God has both an animal and a man life. "Who knoweth the spirit of the man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast [animal] that goeth downward?" Well, who does? The man who has wisdom. God's animal life is the descending life of God; it is the Serpent—wisdom of commerce: the Lamb or Ram of God—the act of begetting: the Lion of God—the power of commerce: the Bullock of God—the love of liberty: the Man of God—the power of justice: the Eagle of God—the power of life: the Horse of God—the restraints, liberties, adjustments, and appropriations of commerce: the Dove of God—the symbol of the consummation of regeneration, therefore peace in earth. These are some of the symbolic representations of God's animal existence, through which he perpetually operates with men in the domain of material existence. Through these God has the power of constantly dying, while at the same time he eternally lives as the man-God. It is by these that God renews his life, rejuvenates his being, and perpetuates his eternity. The Lamb of God is the divine human—capable of dying.

IX. The Lord God (Jehoyah, Elohi, Elias, Elijah) is both a spiritual and a natural man. As manifest in the beginning of the Christian era, He was both the Father and the Son. He was the Word, involving its prophetic and priestly character and power; he was prophet, priest, and king. He constituted the two witnesses, for he said: "I bear witness of myself; and the Father who dwelleth in me, beareth witness of me." The two witnesses which lay dead in the streets of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, "where also our Lord was crucified," are none other than the Lord, who, after his resurrection from the tomb of Joseph, was dissolved and became Holy Spirit, which was sown as the Word of God in the church. Because of the operation of the law of the death of the seed sown,—expressed in the language, "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die,"—the Word (God) in his animal life was sown in the church by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and by this planting, dies in and with the church into which the Holy Ghost—the two witnesses, descended.

Sodom and Egypt constitute the church in its declension. The Lord is both the truth and the good of the church. These are both dead. The daily sacrifice was taken away when the church went fully over to paganism, at which time the abomination which maketh desolate was set up. This was the establishment of pagan Romanism. From this time on, there was a period of 1335 days, which implies one thousand three hundred and thirty-five years, extending from 535 to 1870. At this time, the secular power of Rome was destroyed, and the city of Rome became the capital of Italy. The empire of France under the third Napoleon was overthrown, and upon the ruins of the empire the French republic was established. Germany, which consisted of a number of petty kingdoms, VIII. Orthodox Christians give to the world no definite idea of the animal significances made as sacrificial offerings by the Jews. These all point to Christ, but how and why, they care not. Why the serpent was lifted up on the pole in the wilderness instead of the Lamb, they know not. They know that somehow the serpent on the pole pointed to the Savior of the world; further than this they do not care, for this is a mystery the people need not know.

Why Elijah was called "the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof," they do not know; and why the rider comes on a white horse, and thousands of his saints follow him on white horses, is a mystery they do not, and cannot understand. They do not believe that God dies through his animal life, nor that he dies through any part of his existence. "God cannot die." The Lamb of God which died on the cross was not God's animal life, but a mere humanity. The humanity of the Christ was not divine.

IX. The evangelical church denies the Divinity of God's humanity, in that it holds to the doctrine that the Christ had two natures,—one nature which was divine, and another nature which was human. The human nature did not differ from the ordinary human nature of the mortal and corruptible humanity, because the Lord took upon himself "our nature," which was purely human. Jesus was the Word as to his divine nature, but not the Word as to his human nature. This is a denial of the truth that the Word, who was God, and who was in the beginning with God, "was made flesh and dwelt among us." The Word cannot die, therefore the two witnesses who lay dead in the streets of the great city, could not be the Lord Jesus Christ, for he ascended into heaven; hence the mystery of the two witnesses is not to be known till after death, when all mysteries shall be revealed.

The orthodox church is ignorant of the law of seed sowing, as pertaining to the Word—God. It cannot interpret the parable of the Lord regarding the Sower who sows the Word. "Behold, there went out a sower to sow." Mark iv:3. "The sower soweth the Word." Mark iv:14. Of the fact that the Word is God, and that the sowing was done after the resurrection of the Lord's body—after his theocrasis (translation), the church is in utter ignorance. It does not know that the Sower sowed the Word by the operation of the Holy Spirit; that the Holy Spirit was the substance of the Lord's body, and that when the Word was sown as the Holy Ghost, it had to die as all seed dies when sown, in order to reproduce and multiply.

The evangelical church does not know that the dark ages came as a result of the death of the Word in the church, and that during this time, there obtained the abomination of desolation, set up when the church had so far declined as to become pagan under the influence became united in the vast empire of Germany, under the supremacy of the king of Prussia, who was made emperor of Germany. At that time, Spain became a republic. Then, also, the New Jerusalem became unified by a spiritual consummation, an ingathering of those who were made blessed, in their preparation for descent as the Bride, the Lamb's wife, purified and made white in the blood of the Lamb, and in the state of beatification as John saw her, described in the following language: "I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." During this period the two witnesses—the Word, that is, the Lord God as to his animal life—were dead. During the time that the Lord, Adam, the two witnesses, lay dead, God took the woman, the New Jerusalem, from his rib (strength) and prepared her as the Bride.

X. The Lord was the involved product of the human race. He was the supreme fruit of generation—the highest generated. The kingdoms of nature develop successively, from lowest to highest. The mineral produces the vegetable, because the vegetable vitalizes the mineral. The vegetable produces the animal, because the animal vitalizes the vegetable; the animal produces the human, because the human vitalizes the animal. The law of evolution does not cease its operations with the propagation of the mortal humanity. As the mineral evolves the vegetable, and the vegetable, the animal, and the animal, the human, so the human projects a new, higher, and supreme genus—the sons of God. As every grade of development, in its evolution, is preceded by the involved germ of such evolution, so before the sons of God (the new genus) are produced, the involution of the new genus must first be generated.

The generation of the man-God, the God-man, confirms the doctrine of development. The doctrine of evolution, with its co-ordinate and coincident involution, is reasonable; and according to the law for the necessity of the generation of the firstfruit of a superior genus of men, we have a record of the involution of the God-man, Jesus the Christ, produced through the operation of the principle of parthenogenesis, or virginal propagation. The firstfruits obtained; the Son of man, the Son of God, was planted back in the race sufficiently developed to receive and absorb him, from which—through the process of regeneration from the progressive type—will develop the fixed type of the sons (offspring) of God.

The Son of God, manifest as the personal Jehovah in the beginning of the age, will therefore bring forth at the end of the dispensation, the product of his planting. This product will be his own offspring, the sons of God, who will fulfil in themselves the promise: To as many as believe in his name, gives he power to become the sons of God. Thus God will have consummated at the of pagan Rome. Of this process of regeneration, as beginning when God was sown in the church by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and to fructify in the resurrection of the dead at the end of the Christian or Piscatorial age, the church is totally ignorant. Of the fact that the Christ, the Word, was sown in the beginning of the Christian era, to culminate in the harvest of the age, the manifestation of the sons of God as a new genus or race of men called the sons of God, the orthodox church has no conception. The church is totally ignorant of the fact that the New Jerusalem is made up, in the spiritual world, of those who have died in the natural world, and who at the time of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit accepted the Word, fulfilling the purpose of the Lord that they should appropriate him: "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life [when?], and I will raise him up at the last day (at the end of the age). "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed."

X. What has the orthodox church to say upon this subject? Absolutely nothing. The doctrine of atonement (at-one-ment) has no significance. While the Scriptures define the line of the progressive development of Jesus from Abraham down to his birth from the Virgin Mary, the church is ignorant of the fact, that, while he came of the tribe of Judah and of the lineage of David, this line was also the line of his generation; that is, of his production. It is not known in the church that in the outline of Judah's genealogy, the Scriptures define specifically the progress of Abraham through the Mosaic or Abrahamic age, while he is in process of perfecting his character through a succession of natural and spiritual states and careers, from which he ultimately merges as the Son of God. The book of the generation of Jesus the Christ, is the period of time in which (and the processes in that period by which) Abram completes his generation, and becomes the involved product of the higher genus.

The Christian church denies both the doctrine of involution and evolution, while the atheistic and infidel evolutionists deny the doctrine as set forth in the Scriptures—both parties being entirely ignorant of the character of the law. The orthodox church denies the law of parthenogenesis, or virginal propagation, maintaining that the production of the Lord was by a special dispensation and power of Providence, in which the principles of law were not necessarily called into action.

Evangelical Christianity, so called, denies the law of the Lord's planting, and of the regeneration of the sons of God through evolution. The doctrines of the church are vague regarding regeneration, regarding the condition and place of the dead, regarding the status of the saved,—whether they be angels, lower than the angels, or higher than the angels. The church is ignorant regarding the day of judgment—as to time and character. The church is ignorant of the progression of the human race in cycles of time, in which there is a perpetually re-end of the grand cycle of twenty-four thousand years, a corresponding development to the genus he created at the beginning of the same, or end of the preceding cycle; that is, the production of man in his own image and likeness, the fruition of the age, to be absorbed into the invisible Elohim.

XI. Mankind, such as is ripe enough to become the firstfruits of the present age, will attain to immortal life here in the body; not through faith or belief, not through the exercise of the will power merely, but by knowing the laws of life and making an application of them. Man is not immortal, neither in the pneuma (spirit), psuche (soul), nor soma (body). Immortal life is an acquisition to be attained by the firstfruits of immortality, by a process of overcoming. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be his son."

It is not merely a fact corroborated both by the Old and New Testaments, that spirits exist as conscious entities after the death of the body, but also by Emanuel Swedenborg, from his own most abundant experience, and through the testimony of modern spiritualism. This is regarded by many as establishing the truth of immortality. Such, however, is not the case. The mere fact that the spirit of a person exists after the death of the body, does not constitute satisfactory assurance of immortal life. Birth and death both take place in the natural world. The same thing correspondentially obtains in the spiritual world;—people enter the spiritual sphere at all ages. Their entrance there corresponds somewhat to birth into this world; they pass their careers there, and succumb to what corresponds to death in the natural world. When such a change occurs in the spiritual domain, the spirits precipitate the descending degree of their spirit, which passes into the material body of those who exist in the natural world, to enter into rebirth. This is partial re-embodiment, not as it has been denominated, a full re-incarnation. The process of successive re-embodiments, none of which are the full reincarnation of the individual, is the passage of the individual existence through the hells. The purpose of this passage is the experience essential to the development of the consciousness and identity, in the progress toward the perfection of life as it merges into ultimate and eternal sonship, which it does in the final reincarnation of a cycle, when the individuality awakes in the body to a memory of past conditions and to the incorruptible state, when reincarnation ceases, and the person has attained to immortality, this being the resurrection of the dead. This is the reproduction of the personality.

current seed-time and harvest that will never cease—a seed-time and harvest applying to the creation of the sons of God, just as there is a seed-time and harvest in every domain of God's organic creation. It has no conception of the rejuvenation of the fathers, by turning the hearts of the fathers to the children raised up to be absorbed.

XI. According to the teachings of orthodox and evangelical Christianity, and the world generally, man has an immortal spirit. This is a common conviction. According to the church, the converted man has an immortal spirit, which goes to heaven and to blissful peace at the death of the body. If it be an unconverted immortal soul or spirit, it goes to hell to become roast for the gods and angels. The means by which the wrath of God is appeased, and the immortal spirit of the sinner becomes the immortal spirit of the redeemed, is mere faith in the blood of Christ, regardless of the works of the law of God. "Ye are saved by faith without the works of the law." [A statement of Paul, misunderstood and wrongly applied. KORESH.] The spirit of the converted man goes directly to heaven, where it remains until the judgment, when (as is supposed) it is summoned again before the judgment seat for revision. Why there should be a final judgment after the doomed have gone to hell, before the judgment is set and the saved are made happy in heaven, the orthodox and evangelical Christians are unable to say; but we can assure the inquirer that the final judgment is a certainty, and that the righteous and the wicked will be on hand to get the final decision in their respective cases.

The resurrection of the dead is neither understood nor agreed upon by orthodoxy. Some think the resurrection occurs to every person when he goes over into the spiritual world, and that the Lord comes to take the good spirits to himself, and that this is the coming of Christ. According to this conception, which is becoming quite common in the church, Christ comes to all genuine Christians at death. They think it may become a chestnut after a time, but any kind of a belief is better than suspense. Others think there is to be a final resurrection, where the disintegrated bodies of the corrupt dead will come up out of the physical graveyard, a gruesome spectacle—but as "all things are possible with God," and he is full of surprises, they rather expect to see the material graves open—if they happen to be here at so late a date. But they are not paying as much attention to the method of the Lord's coming and the resurrection of the dead now, as they once were in a habit of doing, anyway.

According to all the teachings of the Old and the New Testament, the Lord Jesus should descend into the race and take upon himself the actual state of the fallen nature, as typified by the pollution of the sanctuary. He should overcome the sinful nature which he thus acquires, and through his overcoming be enabled to lead the race into immortal life through his own purification, as typified by the purification of the high priest.

In the Editorial Perspective.

THE EDITOR.

THE PROCESSES of creation are unknown to the modern scientific and theological world. The astronomer writes about the evolution of worlds and the evolution of life; and the clergyman preaches about the Creator of the heavens and the earth. Both classes of minds are in ignorance of the scientific laws and functions of creation and perpetuity of the physical cosmos and the world of man. It is a fundamental law of Koreshanity that Cause cannot put forth that which it does not contain; therefore, all effect must have originally been in the cause. We find expressed in all domains, forms and functions, matter and energy. These are but expressions of Cause, and therefore Cause possesses form and functions, matter and energy. Every form having functions has been brought into existence by a corresponding form having corresponding functions. This is a universal law, operative in all domains of existence, from the lowest to the highest plane. We maintain that the creative Cause of the universe is the highest product of the universe, because there must necessarily be an involution preceding an evolution; and the involution puts forth that which it involves, and nothing more. The highest product of the universe is the perfect man, the God-man; he is the microcosm, the entire world involved, the universe in its least form. The creative pivot, the cause-point of all things is composed of mind and matter. The creative function obtains at the very nexus of spirit and matter. The Creator, therefore, is as natural as the effect, and as spiritual as that which it produces. Man is composed of both mind and matter; and the Cause which produced him was composed of both mind and matter. This is Messianism; it is scientific; it is Biblical. It was declared of Jesus of Nazareth, who was born of the Virgin Mary, that he was the Creator of all things in heaven and in earth; that he was the Seed-man, the Living Word, the mighty God, and the everlasting Father. We might examine with profit, the etymology of a few words, and reach the same conclusion. It is unquestionable that the word physical pertains to natural things, for this is the inherent meaning of the word. It is derived from the Greek word φυσικός (phusikos), which means natural. Now the very root from which a great class of words embodying the meaning of the word natural, inclusive of φυσικός, is φηω (phuō), which means to bring forth, to beget, to produce, to exist, to have naturally. Φύσας (phusas) means father, the natural father; φύλον (phulon) means a race of people, while φύλλον (phullon) means a natural leaf, from φηω (phuō), from which φημι (phēmi) a son, "that which has been produced," originated. The Latin feo and firtus are from the same word, and remotely, fundus, foundation. Now, physical existence is the natural foundation of all activities. It is self-evident that without a physical basis there could be no creation or created universe; and we assert that without a physical basis in the Cause, there could be no creative function; for there is no function without form. We find this to be the emphatic meaning of the word φυσίζωσις (phusizoos), that which bestows life, that which creates. Φυσίζωσις (phusizoos) is from φηω (phuō), to beget, to have or create naturally, and ζωή (zōē), which means life. By the etymology of the word physical, which pertains to natural things, it is demonstrable that the processes of creation have a natural foundation in both cause and effect, through laws operative in a material form having creative functions! Jesus the Christ was a man; the great conjunction of God and man; the nexus of the divine mind and matter; the pivot of creation; the spirito-natural seed of humanity, and the perpetuator of both God and man, the impulser of both the natural and spiritual worlds, the Creator of all things in heaven and in earth, and the maker of the universe. This is the scientific God of Koreshanity.

Since the time of the sixteenth century reformation, the old church has been at war with itself. Factions have seceded from the mother, the Catholic church; and the factions have divided into sects, until now there are scores of divisions which constitute the modern church. Every sect has been originated by some leader, and the success and extent of the influence of each sect have depended upon the personal force of the founder. Every such leader has been the object of persecution by the masses, and thousands of people have been martyrs to the causes which they espoused and promulgated. The forces of prejudice have been transmuted to physical force, which has taken away both property and life; and men have entered martyrdom for the sake of their personal convictions. The disintegrative processes continue to the present hour. A few years ago, Dr. Dowie originated a new sect, the Christian Catholic church. He has located in Chicago, and a little war is imminent. He has challenged the clergymen and the physicians of Chicago; and the worst elements of the city have responded with brickbats, stones, eggs, and noxious chemicals. Students of universities and colleges, attending what are called the most enlightened institutions of the age, become instruments for the expression of the hatred of the hypocritical church for any one who undertakes to uncover its corruptions to the view of the world. Alongside the hundreds of students, are the low and the lewd, who gladly yield their infamous influence in defense of the doctors! Are such persons civilized? They are but representatives of the classes and the masses who, for any sufficient provocation by encroachment upon the secret guards of unnamed sins and crimes, would rise in a body to destroy the forceful offender of the foul spirits of sensualism. We are not championing the cause of Dr. Dowie; he heads a perverted religion; but we admire the courage of any man who dares to any degree, to protest against the corruptions of the old order of the world. He is calling forth the latent barbarism of Chicago, and is rapidly disintegrating certain elements of the old church. The war of the church against itself is but a process of preparing the way for greater and grander things in the establishment of Koreshanity. The more barriers that are burned away in the ecclesiastical war, the fewer obstacles Koreshans will encounter at the time of the final consummation!

An astrological journal contains an article which endeavors to answer the question, "Why socialism cannot eventuate." The writer claims to be familiar with all the socialistic and communistic systems extant, and undertakes to show from an astrological standpoint that socialism can never be a success; for different persons are born under different stars, and possess different temperaments, which will not admit of united effort on a common ground. This, however, does not preclude all men of widely different temperaments engaging in the one pursuit for money under the competitive system! One point of failure of the usual line of socialistic schemes and colonies, is in the introduction of the idea of equality, when in fact there is no equality in humanity, any more than there is in the physical cosmos. The old argument is, that some men are born to succeed and others to fail; and that such violent contrasts can never be brought to a common goal in the destiny of communism. The trouble is, that critics of socialism and communism are fighting the spurious systems which have been founded, and which have failed. The communism of Koreshanity is scientific; it is quite a different thing from the Brook farm and other unscientific, enthusiastic attempts, which have resulted in failure. It is not the purpose of Koreshanity to crush out ambition, nor to deaden aspiration; it does not undertake to force its adherents to one common level on any basis. It is founded upon the pattern of the physical cosmos, and has a place for all mental and moral grades and dispositions. It turns ambition into a different channel than that of money-making; it utilizes the aspirations of the genius, and its many departments are so related as to adjust all minds and talents in one great system, in the order in which the different planes obtain in the cosmic cell of the physical world. We hold that the many phases of unscientific socialism and communism cannot eventuate except in catastrophe; but this does not militate against the ultimate success of Koreshan socialism; the ultimate purpose is to transcend the fallacious, paltry ideals of the present time, and finally extend throughout the world as the superior government of the Golden Age!

Scientific geology, geogony, and geography confirm the Koreshan conclusion that the universe is eternal, and that the processes of its creation are in progress continually. The earth was in existence trillions of ages ago, and will exist throughout all the eternity of ages of the future. The "scientists" cannot settle among themselves what the processes of world-formation are. There are two principal theories of the nebular hypothesis; one is, that the great nebula from which the present solar system originated, was intensely hot; while the other theory teaches the opposite—that the nebulous mass was intensely cold. The only nebulae that have ever existed and contributed their quota of energies in the work of world formation, were like those which now exist in the interior atmospheres of the cellular universe. The great shell of the earth has always existed; there are records in the earth today, of cosmological events which took place millions of years ago. The old idea that the universe was made 6,000 years ago, is rapidly vanishing; and in the near future it will not be entertained by a single rational mind in all the world. The earth's mountain ranges have been thrown up by natural processes—the result of rapid contractions of the shell in great cataclysms in ages past; and on every continent there are evidences that the seas once covered land, which is now dry and habitable. Take up a map of the world and observe a striking evidence that at some time in the great past, the eastern and western continents were joined together. When Davis strait and Baffin's bay did not exist, Greenland was united with Labrador and the northern islands of the western hemisphere; Newfoundland and Nova Scotia were fitted between England and Spain, filling up the bay of Biscay; the western extremity of Africa nestled in the western Atlantic, and South America filled the niche in western Africa. The continental outlines contain striking evidences of a former junction of the continents; and the explanation of the processes of the divorce and the widening of the ocean between, belongs exclusively to Koreshan Science.

The devil cannot be fought until it is known where he is; evil cannot be eradicated from humanity until its root is attacked and destroyed. The goal of destiny cannot be reached until it is known where and what it is. The devil is safe in hell so long as hell is an unknown quantity; and heaven is out of reach until God becomes knowable. Abstractions are powerless to remove obstructions. The church handles abstractions; it deals in the names of things without a knowledge of what and where the things are. The church is helpless and lost amid a maze of myths, marvels, and mysteries. The world and the church are in the very hell which the Bible reveals; the millions do not know that they are in outer darkness, and are making no effort to get out of it. They are perpetuating the very conditions and loves which make hell possible. Today, sensualism is made sacred. Religious and superstitious guards are placed about the lust, selfishness, depravity, and conceit of the masses. Death is made the gateway to heaven, and the devil is mistaken for God. Koreshanity is the opposite of the apostate church; it does not deal in abstractions. It reveals God; it exposes the devil; it locates heaven, and discovers hell. It distinguishes between the new and living way to heaven, and the way of death chosen by the church. Koreshanity is a religio-scientific protest against sensualism; it calls upon every progressive mind to overcome all perverted loves, and to rise in the scale of existence from death to life!

The bacteriological fad is said to be losing its influence. During the past fifteen years, the germ theory of disease has prevailed; it is a theory that disease is not caused by any actual inherent physiological or mental abnormality, but by reason of attacks of armies of minute bacilli, which are supposed to prey upon the human system. The pendulum is swinging the other way now; researches in bacteriology have failed to produce anything of benefit to the sick. What does Koreshanity have to say about microbes? There are billions of microbes; they are objects of microscopical observation, and different kinds of microbes are present in individuals afflicted with different diseases; that is, each disease is accompanied with specific species of bacteria. But the microbes are not the cause of disease. They are scavengers, feeding upon specific poisons; and when the poison is consumed, the microbes disappear and the patient recovers. Medicines may be taken which will counteract and eliminate the poison, and the microbes will disappear when nothing is left for them to feed upon. Microbes are the friends of humanity, not its enemies; but the ignorance of the medical fraternity has made them scapegoats for human sins!

The political parties are arranging their pieces upon the great American chessboard, awaiting the results of the fall elections in eight states, before the game begins in earnest. The anti-imperialists will endeavor to checkmate the administration, but the secret gambit of the republican party is expected to decide the game in 1900. The coming elections will indicate which way the wind is blowing at the present time; but the money gods seem to have power to change the direction of the pneumatic currents on the political sea, and to land the vessel of the party at Washington at the close of the campaign tempest. Besides, the party which championed the cause of Cuba, drove Spain from the western hemisphere, and aroused unbounded national enthusiasm, will not be easily defeated by a party whose chief aim now is to evade the responsibilities of the American victory over a European power, and apply a contractile, instead of expansile, force to national interests and progress.

Astronomers are puzzled over new discoveries relative to the rotation of Jupiter and the sun. Jupiter has been considered as a solid planet, revolving on an axis. All points on the surface of a solid sphere must complete their revolutions in equal times; but it has been found that the surface rotation of Jupiter at its equator is more rapid than the surface near the poles. This is contrary to the old belief concerning Jupiter. The different points on the sun's surface revolve in different times also; and this is contrary to all previous conclusions concerning the sun. The modern astronomy is continually changing; every new discovery contradicts some previous conclusion, because the old school astronomers have never yet reached a true conclusion from a single fact observed in all the history of the development of the modern system!

The universe is the great laboratory of Nature. Alchemy is as profound as the universe itself, because it is the science of all universal activities, and defines the laws of all mutations of mind and matter. When Alchemy is scientifically comprehended, man can produce all of the transmutations and transformations which obtain in the physical world, and consequently rule the physical cosmos. Through Alchemy death will be overcome; mortality will be transmuted to immortality, and corruption to incorruption. The physical universe is continually transmuting baser substances to gold; and when the great Alchemist produces corresponding results in the domain of human life, the Iron Age will be transformed to the Golden Age. He will create the new world from the basis of the old—he will "make all things new."

Masks cover the faces of the millions. Society is full of shams; fashion covers up the mental blanks, and the cloak of the church hides a multitude of sins. The ingenuity of the modern man is constantly devising new schemes for adding fictitious values to personalities which are morally and mentally worthless! Koreshanity comes for the purpose of unmasking the world; THE FLAMING SWORD tears away the veils that hide the corruptions of civilization. Scientific truth is the X-ray which penetrates the opaque coverings—the secret guards about the human heart. The time of uncovering of all things has come. Universal hallucinations, fallacies, and mysteries must vanish when the human reason takes possession of the mental dungeons and ventilates them with the atmosphere of natural science.

The stereotyped cry of those who are opposed to communism, is that it is contrary to human nature. It is contrary to human nature as it now exists; the competitive system is the outgrowth of human retrogressive tendency, and is adapted to its present state of selfishness. The secret of success in communism is the process of changing the nature of man—not by endeavoring to change environments merely, but by the transformation of the mind through the introduction of a superior mental dynamis. Communism will not be a success until it has back of it the fundamental laws of the re-formation of a nucleus—the conversion of a group of humanity from selfishness to the opposite state. Koreshan Communism is the only scientific communism, and is the only communism that will succeed.

It cannot be said that the modern man is shiftless. Millions of people who have become free from the dogmas of the church, are constantly shifting from one belief to another, ever looking out for something new. Fallacy is unstable; it is founded upon the sands of human ignorance. The entire world is lost on the great Sahara, led hither and thither by illusive mirages and mental hallucinations. Great caravans follow leaders who are wandering aimlessly; it is sufficient for the leaders if they gain a following. Millions of others choose paths of their own, which lead from the great oasis of truth. They are lost and unable to determine the true latitude and longitude of human progress. To them the past is darkened, the present is meaningless, and the future is unknown.

Jails, penitentiaries, insane asylums, charitable institutions, and banks; churches, houses of ill-fame, saloons, gambling-houses, stock-exchanges, boards of trade, bucket-shops and sweat-shops; drug stores, cemeteries, and crematories; opium dens and tobacco stores; criminal, civil, and police courts; standing armies and engines of destruction on land and sea; corporations and trusts; lawyers, detectives, hold-ups, pick-pockets, and burglars; hypocrites, agnostics, idiots, advocates of fallacies, and devils,—with thousands of other evils and abnormities, constitute the startling, stupendous, abnormal products of the nineteenth century Christian civilization!

The anti-polygamists may find it easier to unseat the Mormon congressman than the sultan of Sulu—now a part of the United States territory, and ruled by a powerful polygamist. Besides, the Mormon congressman has a small church back of him; while the ruler of Sulu has behind him the millions of Mohammedans.

Koreshan Science is the anthropotic solar spectrum thrown upon the screen of the rational faculties; it is the spectral analysis of the astral nucleus of humanity, the revelation of the interior world, and the solution of the problems in all domains of natural existence.

A fundamental is that which constitutes a natural foundation of mentality; for it is a fundamental. The external foundation of human mentality is the human body.

The natural, physical cosmos cannot disagree with God; the effect infallibly expresses the Cause. The science of the universe of creation reveals the Creator.

In the promulgation of Koreshanity, it is not only necessary to illustrate its conclusions, but also to develop the faculty of intellectual perception in the people.

Koreshanity is the voice of authority; it is genuine science spoken from the throne of all truth, in contrast with the agnosticism of the modern scribes.

The standards of the modern church and political parties are not upright, because they are inclined in the direction of the money power.

Man can never realize the strength of the bonds of modern corruption and sensualism until he attempts to break them.

The governments of the world are founded upon false principles, and will ultimately be foundered on the results.

Labor-saving inventions take labor away from the laborer and give the profits to the corporations and the trusts.

Koreshanity is fighting to quench the fires of hell, while the millions are persistently feeding the flames!

The people have cultivated the tree of competitive industry, and they must now endure its fruit—the trusts.

The chain of so called evidences in proof of modern astronomy, is no stronger than its weakest link!

Modern society is artificial; education is a polish, and the church is a cloak of hypocrisy.

The pious cant of the clergyman is as bad as the impious can't of the agnostic.

THE EDITOR.

The Divine Father, Mother, and Son.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) What is the relative time and duration in the 24,000-year cycle in which the three forms of God—Father, Mother, and Son, are manifest? (2) When does truth become subjective in man? (3) When is there war in heaven? and what is the power of hell that usurps authority in heaven? Most hearty thanks for your full and kind answers to my many questions in the past.—M. A. P., Antioch, O.

(1) God, in his completeness, is not three forms, but one form—one personality with three specific and supreme attributes. Jesus the Christ was the perfect biune and triune manifestation of Deity. He was biune in generative functions, and he was triune in specific attributes. He was Father, Mother, and Son in one. Jesus was composed of pneuma, psuche, and soma,—spirit, soul, and body; the spirit was the Father, the psuche was the Mother, and the soma, the external man, was the Son. He was the supreme seed and perpetuator of the life of God and humanity; he was the perfect humano-divine personality, with power to reproduce himself through a higher process than sensual generation on the mortal plane.

Every seed in the vegetable kingdom is father, mother, and son. The external seed is the son, involving the functions of the male and the female in itself; hence it possesses the power to reproduce itself through its own inherent functions. Correspondentially, Jesus was the seed of humanity; he was the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last, at one and the same time, in one personality; he was the conjunction of the ages, the product of the old dispensation and the head of the new creation.

There is a sense, however, in which the Father, Mother, and Son are each specifically dominant in different manifestations. Jesus the Christ was the Son of God; he was Abram, the high father. He planted himself in the race, and at the end of the age, reaches the amplification of his Fatherhood; he becomes Abraham, the father of the multitude—the 144,000 sons of God. The amplification of the Fatherhood is in the Messianic manifestation at the close of the Christian dispensation. In the great conjunction of the anthropotic Sun and Moon, the masculinity of Deity is immediately transformed to the divine Femininity, in the external form of the personality of the divine Mother, in fulfilment of the declaration, "A woman shall compass a man," "and She shall be called the Lord our Righteousness." The woman is the glory of the man; and the divine Mother, when manifest in the natural world, is the glory of God. When the Almighty comes in "power and great glory," he comes in the manifestation of himself in the divine Mother, with power to produce the sons of God. The time elapsing between the manifestation of the Son of God, to the time of the manifestation of the sons of God through the personality and functions of the divine Mother, is a little over 1900 years.

(2) Truth becomes subjective in man when he is able to comprehend and apply it. "I will send you Elijah the prophet;" "and when the Spirit of Truth is come, He will guide you into all truth." There is no truth outside of personality; and the science of all truth will first come in a single personality, as the objective Messiah. He becomes subjective in his following, when, through the fires of theocrasis, he becomes transmuted to spirit and enters them as the "Spirit of Truth."

(3) In Jesus the Christ the spiritual heavens were as perfect as himself. There was no war there; all was peaceful and joyous. There was no chaos, no darkness. But that personality was broken up and disseminated in the race, and entered the hells of the mortal world. Jesus has been reigning in the hells during the age. The cross of the divine Man with the devil's flesh has taken place during the Christian dispensation; God and the devil were in process of elaboration together in the great crucible of humanity, and through the process, Jesus the Almighty took upon himself the sins of the world; he entered the sensual nature and mind of the mortal man, and was "tried in all points like as we are." The ultimate product of this cross is the Messianic manifestation at the end of this dispensation, who constitutes the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, which, through a process of purification, becomes transformed to the veritable Tree of Life. God and the elements of hell are in conflict in the "man of sin," who overcomes death in himself. The great battle of Armageddon is the war in heaven, beginning in the heavens or spiritual world of the present Messiah.

The tabernacle was polluted during the great period of atonement, and becomes manifest at the end of the age as the polluted tabernacle, as Joshua (the Savior), "clothed with filthy garments," which must be put off through a stupendous victory over death through a war in heaven. The powers which have been usurped in heaven are the powers of darkness during the time that God and the devil exchange places; when Jesus began to enter the hells, the devil began to enter heaven. The poles have been reversed, and God becomes external in mind and body. The usurping powers in heaven are the powers of the devil—fallacy, mortality, and sensuality; they are perverted loves in the mortal will, and must be overcome, one by one, by scientific processes, until the last enemy—death, is vanquished!

Republic or Kingdom?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—IN THE FLAMING SWORD of Sept. 15, I find your remarks about the United Christian Party. Will you kindly permit me to make a few remarks about this organization? Its object is to unite all professed Christians into one grand party, to stand pledged to work and vote for righteous principles. You have made some comments on the text made prominent in our literature: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder." That child's name is "The United Christian Party." When its principles are expressed in laws, then will come an end of representative government; and the people will never, of their own accord, go back to the evil and destructive form of government, whose representatives have not only prostituted the Goddess of Liberty, but have sold themselves to the money power.—A. F. F. J., Dorchester, Wis.

The United Christian Party is a religious-political party, composed of people who desire to control the affairs of the republic of the United States of America. It would not change the form of government, except in the elimination of its representative features, and in the establishment of direct legislation. The government would still be democratic—democratic in the extreme. Now this is the kind of a government which the new party talks about; and the party itself is claimed to be divine. Here is something new in the line of prophetic interpretation. A little political party is the child born, the son given, upon which the government is to rest; it hopes to be the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace!

We desire to point out a discrepancy here: The very government to which the prophet refers is a kingdom, whose King shall sit upon the throne of David; the zeal of the Almighty is to perform the work of establishing it with judgment and justice. There is a radical difference between a republic and a kingdom; the new party desires to conduct a republic, while the Almighty is anxious to establish a kingdom! So, somehow, it occurs to us that this new party cannot be a fulfilment of the prophecy.

Now, look down the long avenues of time, and view the universal government of the Golden Age, with all the grandeur and glory which human progress is capable of creating, and ask, what is to be the name of that government? Our friend answers, that it is the United Christian Party! The great government of the future to rest upon a party? Can a party be the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace? Why, in the name of all that is rational, we assert that the child born, the son given, was a Man, to whom all power in heaven and in earth was given—Jesus the Christ, the true Man, and the true God.

Out of Darkness Into Light!

▲ Bright Young Mind Wrestles with the Forces of Orthodoxy and Overcomes!

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I have become profoundly interested in one of the recent triumphs of Koreshan Science over the darkness of error. I thought this might be interesting and helpful to FLAMING SWORD readers. This person whom I have in mind was, until a short time ago, a loyal adherent to the orthodox faith. Recently, he became disgusted with its narrowness. "Why," he said to me, "I cannot believe in the God of the churches, for to me their God is no God at all. He is but a tangled maze of contradiction and schism, which they attempt to explain by saying: 'His ways are past finding out;' but that won't do for me. I cannot worship God unless I understand what and whom I am worshipping."

My friend was on the verge of infidelity, when the Truth—as it is in Koreshan Science—was suddenly brought to his attention. After the first reading, he said what he had not been able to say for months, "I believe in God!" Not the God as portrayed by the churches, mind you, but the God of the fuller conception of KORESH. That God could lay claim to the Godhead, not because his wisdom was unsearchable, but because the knowledge of him was life!

Still, of course, it was difficult for this person to break through the bonds of orthodoxy, which had shackled him all his life. The claims of KORESH rather staggered him for the time. Then he began to study the claims of Jesus the Christ to Messiahship. If he had lived in the time of Christ, reasoned he, could he have accepted him? After studying the subject in all its phases, he saw that the same difficulty would have presented itself then as now; namely, the struggle with preconceived ideas. If he had never heard of the Christ, how could he prove His Divinity? First, he would look up the record of his advent as foretold in the Old Testament, and then compare it with that as recorded in the Gospels. Then he would test the words and deeds of Christ, whether they be of God or men.

Now, applying this rule to Koreshan Science, he began in like manner to study the book of Isaiah, which tells of Cyrus, the Shepherd of Israel, who is to come through Joseph. He found that it certainly upheld all the claims of KORESH, and fully explained his mission. But what has KORESH done that he may be considered greater than mere man? Who, with the necessary ability, can read CELLULAR COSMOGONY and not be convinced of the veracity of its statements, and the superior knowledge of its discoverer? What has he done? Why, he has conquered the "great" things of the age, and broken down the foundations of the "mighty"! Who can do more than that?

Then the doctrine of reincarnation came up. He studied I Cor. xv, upon which the church bases its belief in the resurrection of the body. He threw prejudice to the winds, and said, "I will know what St. Paul meant!" And he did know. The knowledge came to him in a flash,—the law of salvation as ordained by the Most High! Today, there is no happier man than he, for he has discovered Truth for himself. He not only believes in Koreshan Science, but he knows it is the Truth of God, for he has proven it, and it has stood the test! Yours for the triumph of the Kingdom,—A KORESHAN.

Weekly Synopsis of Topics Discussed by Koreshan Lecturers.

Koreshan Hall, 316 W. 63d St., Chicago.

THURSDAY EVENING, Oct. 26.—Lecture by KORESH. Having just returned from an extended western lecture tour, the distinguished Founder of Koreshanity has not been heard in Chicago for some time; but those who assembled to greet him were well repaid for what they missed in his absence, by hearing this gifted orator at his best upon a subject of unusual interest: viz. "Jonah and the Whale." The lecture was one of such scope as to preclude the possibility of giving but a mere outline in a brief report.

Much of the Bible (especially the Old Testament) is written in symbolic language. This language must be understood in order to secure a true comprehension of the Biblical meaning. Jonah is a Hebrew word, signifying dove, which is a type of the Holy Spirit. Nineveh means, literally, the life of the fish (fish symbolizing prolificness, or sensual generation). The sending of Jonah to Nineveh and his being swallowed by the fish, portrays the descent of the Holy Spirit (1900 years ago) into the sensual humanity which received it. This humanity was the "great fish" (sensual generation) which swallowed Jonah, and eventuated in the Anglo-Saxon race, from which Jonah will be cast up in the resurrection, now at hand. These facts have their correspondence in the physical heavens, where for over two thousand years the sign has been passing through the constellation Cetus, or whale. See FLAMING SWORD, Vol. I, No. 14.

SUNDAY, Oct. 29, 3 P. M. Sermon by KORESH, from the text: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." The entire discourse might be summed up in the statement that there is no salvation except through obedience to the commandments.

The so called Christian church teaches that it is unnecessary to keep the law,—"Jesus paid it all." The Christian dispensation has been a dispensation of mercy, because the commandments have not been understood; hence could not be kept. We have now reached the scientific age. The science of the Decalogue has been revealed, which, alone, when applied, will bring immortality to the race.

MONDAY EVENING, Oct. 30.—Lecture by Prof. Morrow, on Astronomy. Optics and Optical Illusions was the particular topic of the evening. The lecture was illustrated by several new charts of the eye, perpendicular and geolinear foreshortening, magic cubes, etc. Many appearances (accepted by modern scientists as facts) were demonstrated, beyond question, to be merely optical illusions. Many questions were answered; after which the audience had the pleasure of listening to a few forcible remarks by KORESH. He said, the general tendency of investigators is to ignore the Koreshan premise. They try to trip us up on the details of our astronomy, ignoring the fact that a straight line, extended at right angles from a given perpendicular, will strike the water at a distance proportionate to the height of the perpendicular. This is our premise, upon which we challenge the scientific world, and it dares not face the issue! The meeting closed amidst a round of applause for the speaker.

Koreshan Hall, 681-83 W. Lake St.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Oct. 25.—Lecture by Prof. Morrow, on Astronomy. The system of astronomy (termed Copernican) now in vogue, is believed by the world at large to be identically the same as that originally promulgated by Copernicus several centuries ago. Such, however, is not the case. Numerous modifications have been made from time to time, until there is now scarcely a vestige of the original system remaining. Copernicus taught that the planets revolve in perfectly circular orbits. Later, this idea was controverted by Kepler, who held the planetary orbits to be elliptical in form. Newton's laws of gravitation were entirely contradictory to many preconceived ideas, but are now repudiated by all astronomers who wish to "keep up with the procession." As it is in science, so has it been in religion. The truths (?) of the past are the absurdities today; the beliefs of today, the inconsistencies of tomorrow.

We, as Koreshans, are somewhat at a disadvantage in teaching our system of astronomy. The masses are so ignorant concerning even the Copernican system, that in order to secure an opportunity for demolishing it in their minds, we must first instruct them as to what the Copernican system is!

Many astronomical bubbles were burst during the lecture, and several questions ably answered at the close of the lecture. Attendance fair, and much interest shown.

SUNDAY EVENING, Oct. 29.—Lecture by KORESH. The discourse was of a general character, embracing the Koreshan Cosmogony to a considerable extent. The plumb-line and level were shown to be not only applicable to cosmogony, but to the commercial domain as well; the man who deals squarely being the upright man. While we do not in any sense do away with spiritual things, it is the special province of Koreshanity to deal with practical things in a material world, thus constituting a firm foundation upon which the spiritual kingdom may be established.

City Street Meetings, Conducted by Mr. W. R. Wallace, at Flaming Sword Wagon.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Oct. 25.—State and Quincy sts. Subject: "The Indisputable Premise of Koreshanity." A large crowd gathered as usual, many of whom we recognized as in regular attendance at our street meetings. The lecture was illustrated with the charts, including a new one of the Rectilineator. The point was developed, that if it has been possible for one man (as Copernicus) to project his mentality for several centuries into future generations upon the basis of a fallacy, how much more will the man influence humanity who brings to it the absolute truth in all domains.

Intense interest is being awakened in the subject of the earth's contour. One young man in the audience stated that he had photographed the surface of Lake Michigan through a leveled camera. The water horizon was shown to be about midway the height of the photograph; which fact he considered as entirely corroborating the concave idea of the Koreshans. —ALLEN H. ANDREWS.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.—Interesting at this particular time is the illustrated article, Among the Boers, by an Englishwoman. It gives something of an idea of the life and customs of the people against whom England is fighting; and the numerous illustrations from photographs, bring one in close touch with South Africa. Hon. Lyman J. Gage continues his series, "Finances of Our Wars," and covers the ground of the Civil war and the Spanish-American war, with valuable facts concerning the kind of money in use in war times. Just in time, too, is the Story of the November Meteors, the Stellar Bombardment, with illustrations of large meteorites which have fallen to the earth. Coaching as a Sport; The Old Folks at Home in New England, are also interesting illustrated articles. And the short stories, Aunt Betty; the Gentleman of the Road; West Pointer and the Volunteer, are excellent. Frank Leslie's makes a special offer for a short time; the yearly subscription of $1.00; but those who subscribe now, will receive a beautiful calendar in six groups, in colors, 10x12 inches, tied with silk ribbon, free. You may subscribe through the office of THE FLAMING SWORD, making money orders payable to the Guiding Star Publishing House.

American Monthly Review of Reviews.—The chief editorial topic of the Review of Reviews for November, is the war in South Africa. In "The Progress of the World," the editor gives a full exposition of the British and Boer sides of the quarrel. W. T. Stead contributes a character sketch of Cecil Rhodes, the man who is greatly responsible for the war. The Problem of Territorial Expansion is discussed by President Schurman, of the Philippine peace commission. The Results of the Peace Conference in their Relations to the Monroe Doctrine, is a carefully prepared paper by Mr. F. W. Holls. Other contributions are unusually interesting, while the editor's departments give a bird's-eye view of the most important events which have transpired during the month of October. The Review of Reviews is sought by all students of current history. 25 cents a copy; 13 Astor Place, New York City.

The Open Court.—This number contains articles of extraordinary interest. Frontispiece: Confucius. Rhyme and Rhythm of the Koran, by Prof. Warren of Boston University, is attractive; the Life and Doctrines of Confucius are also concisely told. The main article is The Birth of Christianity, with sketches of John the Baptist and Jesus of Nazareth; it is well written and worthy of study. Another feature is the contribution on the Crucifix, with about 25 illustrations of the various forms of the cross in use during the Christian dispensation. Open Court Publishing Co., Chicago.

Leslie's Weekly.—The war in the Transvaal is a subject of illustration in this week's Leslie's Weekly; also McKinley's trip to the West; Women's closely contested golf tournament in Philadelphia links; Dewey's new home; three exciting movements in the international yacht race. A special feature is the double-page picture illustrating a story by H. Irving Hancock, concerning the geisha girls of Japan. The editorial departments, the page of personals, and other usual features complete an excellent number of this popular weekly.

Mind.—The November number contains a number of interesting articles: Original Thought and Free Expression; the Failure of Success; Why do I Exist? Gnomia; Sabbaths and Festivals; Voices from Mt. Lebanon. The Medical Tragedy in rhyme, entitled Rip Van Fossil, is full of satire, as well as truth. 20 cents per copy; Life Building, New York City.

"THE HERMETIST"

Is a 16-page monthly magazine, the organ of the Hermetic Brotherhood. Its motto is: "Get Understanding." It deals with Mysticism in a common-sense way. It teaches that if Occult Power can be of help to mankind it ought to be made practical. It seeks all the time to tell its readers how to use the powers they have neglected for so many centuries. It never forgets that the wisest Masters of Wisdom have always said: "Seek ye first the kingdom (power) of God and His righteousness (unselfish purpose) and all other things shall be added unto you." No knowledge of truth that can make man better or happier is ever barred its columns, nor its influence. The Literature of Koreshanity

The Library of the Koreshan System contains Brief Expositions of Koreshan Science,

Which uncovers the Mystery of the Ages. Modern science has failed to discover the Laws, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence.

Koreshanity is a genuine interpretation of Phenomena and Form as expressed in the Universe. It is a true index to the character of God and man, and their relations. All Truth-seekers should read this Unique Literature, and move in advance of the tidal wave of progress. The most radical subjects are ably, freely, and fearlessly discussed therein.

From the Writings of Koresh:

Koreshan Science.

The fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity differentiated from other systems of religion; the necessity of practical application of Koreshan Science to life, in the attainment of immortality. The Messianic law and prophecies of the Lord's appearing discussed. Price 10 cents.

The Science of the Decalogue.

The first scientific explanation of the law of Moses, and solution of the mystery of Sinai. A revelation of the ten principles of life, showing that the law can be kept when scientifically understood. 10 cents.

Reincarnation or Resurrection of the Dead.

Complete and rational answer to the question, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" An uncovering of the greatest mystery of the universe. Unlike the reincarnation theory of Theosophy. This work is a masterpiece at making clear the profoundest question of all. Price 10 cents.

Emanuel Swedenborg; His Mission.

Contains the key to interpretation of the writings of the Swedish Seer. The transformation of the spiritual degree of the Word to the natural in the manifestation of the divine human. Price 10 cents.

The Descent of the New Jerusalem.

The Location of the Invisible Heavenly City in the Interior Mental Atmospheres of Humanity; and the Processes of the Descent into the External World.

IN ORDER to comprehend the character of the holy city, New Jerusalem, the Bride, the Lamb's wife, and to entertain a true conception of the purpose of her descent and the method of the fulfilment of John's prescient observation, the mind must so embrace a knowledge of the laws of correspondential proportion, as to be able to define the adjustments of form and function as they shall obtain in universal social organism.

John saw the holy city coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. One of the foremost considerations in the analysis of this part of the vision of the Revelator, is to distinguish between the heaven whence the descent was made, and its correspondent physical heaven, whence proceed the energies of the various forms and qualities of natural life. There are multitudes of people who—if at all interested in the fulfilment of the promises of the Lord concerning the evolution of the kingdom of righteousness in the earth and the reconjunction of God and man—entertain the fallacy, that somewhere in the physical universe, aside from the material world in which we dwell, there exists some kind of a material heaven for the indwelling of spiritual and celestial beings.

The physical heavens do not constitute the abode of angelic or heavenly beings, but they do correspond to the analogical states in man, because man comprises the environment of the various heavenly degrees of anthropostic existence. The invisible world—invisible to the natural eye—is made up of spiritual existences, entities who dwell within man, the basis of whose existence is the material gray substance called the cortex of the encephalic mass. Spiritual beings do not dwell in space. They inhabit people, the humanity comprising the environment or shell, so to speak, of the occult (hidden) world.

When the student of Koreshanity reaches the point where he can differentiate between the existence of the stars of the physical cosmos and the mental stars of the anthropostic correspondential cosmos, he has made a long stride in that substantial progress which denotes the advancement of an intellectual career toward its Deific and final destiny. Within the shell of the alchemico-organic (physical) cosmos, there are three distinct atmospheric strata. These comprise the three atmospheres which surround the central sun. They are the spheres or domains of three degrees of stellar or astral fields, the only visible one to the eye being that astral realm within the atmosphere of oxygen and nitrogen, in which the external humanity dwells. These physical heavens—in which are the three distinct realms of natural stars—correspond to the three spiritual domains within that environment called human life. There is a correspondence between the star in the physical heavens and the mental star constituting the intellectual (light) center of the anthropostic heavens—the heavens of human existence.

The New Jerusalem constitutes the internal or occult Zodiac of the middle degree of the invisible world. It is a spiritual city, into which the advanced spiritual angels have been gathered from all the countries and peoples of the world, who have looked forward to the coming of the Lord. This gathering is from the spiritual spheres made up of all such as have been natural men and women in the natural world, but who have died in the natural world and have reached the state of overcoming in the spiritual domain, and become so chaste that they have no more desire toward the sensualities of the flesh. They have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

The angels of the New Jerusalem are gathered into one personality in the natural world. This person is the Sign of the Lord's coming, Elijah the Prophet. It is he who will overcome and upon whom is written "the name of my God," "my new name," and the name of the New Jerusalem, the holy city, "the city of my God." The name of the holy city will be written upon one personality; and as the name of God is written upon this personality, he must constitute that Divinity of whom it is said: "Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king, * * * whom I will raise up unto them."

The New Jerusalem has twelve foundation principles, each of which may be analyzed and translated into the foundation principles of natural life. When the language of the spiritual degree is translated into the language of the natural world, the difference is so great that no man, not having the key to this metamorphosis, can comprehend the character of the foundation principles of natural being. The language of spiritual life must be reduced to that of the natural, before the natural humanity can attain to immortality; for it is a positive truth that immortality must be attained in the natural body;—this mortal must put on (be transformed to) immortality, and this corruptible must put on (be transformed to) incorruption. This can only be accomplished through the application of the natural science of life.

The descent of the holy city is the materialization of the principles (spiritual entities) of the heart of the angelic realm, by their descent into the material forms now existing. Through this descent, which is the marriage of the heavens and the earth, the new humanity is produced, for it is the conjunction upon which depends the fruition of the age, in that great consummation called the resurrection of the dead.

The Great Apostasy of the Age.

The Inevitable Fate of the Primitive Church Foreseen by the Apostle to the Gentiles; Church Declension in Accordance with Law; the New Church and State.

"THE DEVIL ought to learn some new reason for starting his next church," says the Baptist Flag. We begin to think that the devil has exhausted his resources on the line of new reasons, for since the so called reformation, he has started so many churches, Baptist included, that his column of reasons must have given out. "We have already enough that have started, to make amends for the failure of the one Christ started," says the same writer.

The Baptist Flag ought to learn the fact that God started the Jewish church, and that it was not a failure, though it declined and became an enemy to its originator. It was not a failure, in that before its destruction and dispersion, it produced a new church. The "church Christ started" was not a failure, even though it has fulfilled the prediction that before that time cometh there shall be a falling away first, and "that man of sin shall be revealed"—in the church. The so called Christian church of today, is not the church that "Christ started." The church He started, made the keeping of the commandments the basis of Christian life. The church of today, including the Baptist church, denies and falsifies this doctrine of the Lord: "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." John xv:10. Is this the doctrine and life of the members of the Baptist church? "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you."

Is the Baptist Flag ignorant of the fact that the present life of the Baptist church is an unmistakable declension from the life of primitive Christianity? "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Does the Baptist church teach that the commandments of the Lord can be kept by its members? I have yet to find the Baptist preacher or layman who pretends to regard it possible for any man to keep the commandments.

If ye love me, keep my commandments, said the Lord. * * * If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou, then, show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.

It certainly is not a doctrine of any of the "evangelical" churches, that the Son of God was also the Father; that the entire triunity of the Godhead was in the Lord Jesus, the Christ; that he was the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and that in him all fulness dwelt. The common doctrine of the trinity, borrowed from paganized Catholicism, is not the doctrine of the Bible. The church that "Christ started" has gone to the devil. "Behold, I make all things new." This means that at the end of the Christian dispensation, now closing, the old church will be destroyed, and there will be a new church, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Messianic Factor of World-Reformation.

The Radical Character of Koreshan Social Purification; the Unmasking of Modern Pharisees Through the Revelation of the Science of All Truth.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

TO BE THOROUGH, one must be radical. Thousands of would-be reformers have not hesitated to probe the wounded and corrupting body politic, in order to locate the seat of its constitutional disturbances, and to define the cause of the total disarrangement of its ever-dying humanity. Their manipulations have been demonstrably unskilful, merciless, and cruel. Results furnish an irrefutable demonstration of mortal ignorance of the laws of that life and immortality brought to light in the gospel of Jesus, the Christ of God.

Men and women have not been honest before Jehovah, in their search for truth in his name. Inherent as part and parcel of their mortal condition, is their fear of a compelled self-condemnation before Jehovah's awful throne, where the mortal heart is laid bare in the radiant white light of the law's fulfilment in His own true, divine manhood. When men are asked to turn for light to the science of the law, endorsed and fulfilled by the man Christ Jesus, they feel as the Pharisees must have felt when they appeared in his presence to condemn the Magdalene, and the Lord wrote that never-to-be-forgotten sentence: "Let him that is without sin among you, cast the first stone." They one and all knew that in the eyes of one too pure to behold iniquity and not gladly die for its transmutation, they were one and all guilty of the sin they condemned in the woman, —the prostitution of their sex functions. He that is guilty in one point, is guilty of all; for the unity of divine love is involved in each.

The Pharisees still make broad their phylacteries, still give alms to be seen of men, and seek to stone others for their own sins focalized in their victims. Evil is present with us, in its harvest fulness of multiplied forms. In the midst of as crooked and perverse a generation as ever walked the earth in its nethermost hells, there stands one who is an unknown quantity, a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense. He wears the garb of the publicans and sinners, and recognizes the hopeless wretchedness of those who continue in sin in this body of death. He reasons as did Elias of old, of righteousness and judgment, and offers—as the sovereign remedy for sin and the source of all true reform—the application of the science of the law, of which he is demonstrably the supreme living exponent.

The law of God's divine manhood, the law operative to perpetuate the life of God in the universe, must be known and understood if laws for a righteous social organization and its perpetuity are to be in harmony with it, to effect the production of man as an individual, and as a collective body in the image and likeness of God in the flesh, a living soul. Genuine social purification can be effected only by a social purifier, personified.

There are those whose standards of social purity are so remote from that of Jehovah, and so demonstrably hell-born, that they are ready to accept the leadership of devils and demagogues of every description, even that of the devils principled in the determination to have naught to do with a Messianic manifestation in any form, apart from themselves, no matter what credentials, Scriptural or scientific, he may possess; such were the rejectors and crucifiers of Jesus the Messiah, who was the door from the Jewish to the Christian era. They committed the unpardonable sin of their generation, 1900 years ago, in their rejection of the Holy Spirit, the seminal essence of Jehovah, and are consequently unprepared for the recognition of Jehovah's standard of righteousness today—the harvest time of his era. They are therefore unprepared to receive the science of His crucifixion, his obedience to the law of the cross, by which he fulfils all righteousness, and appears as the just one—the justifier of all who were buried with him by baptism into his death.

The rejectors of true science prefer to build upon the shifting sands of time, rather than upon Petros the Rock, their stone of stumbling and rock of offense, because he would blockade the broad road to destruction, turn back the river Euphrates, and lead his people like a flock into the straight and narrow way which leads to life eternal.

Society is to be most radically purified, and is already furnished with a Purifier who will kindle the fire unto which this world is reserved. He has erected the standard of Jehovah, and thrown upon it the searchlight of Universology—the science of universal law. This standard he will never surrender; he has raised it for ages of glorification. The sunlight risen upon it to glorify it will not decline till the night of God's natural day veils it, and the moon and the stars guard the slumber of his animal life in the Garden of Eden.

Behold, I will send my Messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the Messenger of the Covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver [divine truth]: and he shall purify the sons of Levi [conjunction with God], and purge them as gold [divine good] and silver [truth], that they may offer unto the Lord [not unto God] an offering in righteousness.

Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.

The sons of Levi, in whom the purifying effects of the science of the law, and obedience thereunto are to be manifest, are those who have eaten of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil during the Christian era, and have thereby been rendered discriminating. This acquisition of discrimination prepares them for the manifestation of the Tree of Life, and themselves to appear as its fruit. These wise ones who are to shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, are lovers of the law of Moses as fulfilled by Jesus the Christ.

The Lord Jesus was the holy seed of the Tree of Life; his planting brought forth a tree, and that tree has produced a righteous Branch, bringing forth the fruits and holy seed once more of the Tree of Lives, which have absorbed all the progressive energies of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. This righteous Branch is the Messenger of the Covenant and the cross of Christ. The sons of Levi will rally round this High Priest of power, and enter with him the school of Christ, the crucible of the divine Alchemist,—that social fellowship in obedience to the laws of divine life, in which alone the human heart can be searched and tried, and its wicked ways revealed.

The mission of the Messenger of almighty love and wisdom, is to subject the wicked to its burning, to his heat and his light, for their purification and transmutation. These purified sons of Levi will constitute, through their final conjunction with Deity, the primary nucleus, in the divine economy, of the Arch Triumphant social order. In this, that celestial order of kings and priests—the order of Melchizedek—will be manifest in earth. These will rule and reign in earth, and will establish equity in every domain of life.

The foolish and vain babblers about social reform, social purity, social equality, socialism, godless, and worse than godless,—the nominally Christian, will soon be forced to realize that the one and only source of divine social purification is "the Messenger of the Covenant." He is the legitimate guardian of the Ark, in which are the sacred law of Moses and Aaron's rod that budded. Divine prescience guards all things, it keeps the way of the Tree of Life, turns back the wisdom of this world's wise and makes it foolishness: He it is who can anoint the waiting sons of Levi, with power to effect all the essential sacrifices for the animal life of Deity, and will eat with them the passover at the marriage supper of the Lamb. He it is with whom they must be co-operators in building the New Jerusalem in earth, to be the earthly social center of divine commercial equity, where wisdom will be personified and reign supreme for ages. In this center of purified social order, the humanity of Deity will be continuously manifest, to dignify and sanctify all flesh, preserving the science of the law which creates the true brotherhood of man, through the adoration of the Fatherhood and Motherhood of God, in divine biune conjunction.

It is lamentably useless to prate of social purification without the purifier, so self-evident is the desperate social need of him. Koreshan Science leaves mortal man without a hope of aught apart from the promised Messianic manifestation,—the Messenger of truth. The testimony of every progressive atom in the universe is against such a hope. Every progressive atom is demonstrably polarized in the sun of universal alchemico-organic being; and every progressive man and woman must become polarized in that "Son of man," who is the Messianic Sun of human destiny, if he would be purified, by the divine organo-vital solar energies, for the attainment of divine sonship. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." This is the inspired recognition of the law of polarization for divine revitalization and social purification, and the restoration of all divine things.

"Let no man deceive you." There is only one way to escape deception,—demand the legitimate credentials foretold by prophecy and revealed by the science of the law. There is but one way, one truth, one life, one door leading the kings and priests unto God, from one dispensation to another. There is just one Messianic infoldment of each dispensational fruitage, and this One is the sole possessor of the legitimate titles and powers. He alone can polarize and draw unto himself those predestined by virtue of the begetting in the seed-time, to follow him in the glories of the resurrection harvest. To this supreme involution of the new order, it is given to be caught up and translated to the glory of the sun, and to draw all men unto him.

The fulness of the Gentiles is manifest; Horos, the Sign of the Sun of man, declares the day and hour known only to the Father of light. He alone can read the cosmogony of his universe and give the light of the anthropotic sun to those who sit in the darkness of the valley and shadow of death.

Despite all opposition, the Messenger's work of refining and purifying will go right on;—THE SWORD will do its mighty work; the axe will be laid at the root of the tree, and the golden calf will be melted. The sons of Levi will seek their Father in the Father's house; they will find a place for repentance, and will do works meet for repentance. They will let their light—the wonderful light of the science of truth—shine. The world will yet behold their good works, and the families of the earth be blessed by the holy seed. Their Father in earth shall be made king of the highest heavens, and his name shall be made holy.

Forces Operative in Church Batteries.

Ninety-three souls had been converted at a cost of $201.90 for tent meetings and evangelistic services. That is only $2.17 for each convert: a small investment, but what a return!—Dr. H. F. Carpenter, in Messiah's Advocate.

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. * * * The poor have the gospel preached to them. * * * Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere, preaching the word.

IN THE TIMES of the early and only real Christians, before the rise—as the first marked outward stage of the great apostasy—of the standing order of the clergy in A. D. 210, and before the first church edifice was erected, about A. D. 160, when all Christians were kings and priests unto God, and equally entitled to preach his gospel, nearly the whole Roman world was converted to the new religion in a very short time. In A. D. 104, the younger Pliny, who was Roman governor of the remote province of Bythnia, informed the emperor Trajan—who was then persecuting the Christians—that they had become so numerous that the Roman temples were almost deserted, and their worship long since suspended. The historian Coleman says:

It must stand confessed, to the immortal honor of the earliest missionaries of the gospel of Christ, that in the short space of one hundred and fifty years, they had published its glad tidings to all the principal nations of the earth; to men of every color, clime, and condition. They had gained their conquests in the Roman legion, in the camp, the cabinet, and the court; and carried them up even to the throne of the Cæsars.

All this was not the work of a learned and trained order of the clergy, or of great missionary societies which at vast expense train and send out men and women to convert the heathen, but of the simple testimony of individual Christians who, since they were moved by the new Spirit—the Holy Ghost, had something better to communicate than the world knew, in the pursuit of their various callings, for they earned their own subsistence, or, when they were scattered by persecution, “went everywhere, preaching the word.” They had received one Spirit—the Holy Ghost, that came from Jesus’ holy body going away to holy Spirit; therefore they talked one language,—not a babel of conflicting tongues like the religionists of today, who profess to be followers of Christ, and to have received the Holy Ghost. When they talked about regeneration, they knew what it meant; that the process of it was age-long, beginning with the reception of the Holy Ghost (the divine seed), and ending with Christ being perfectly formed in them, so that in the end of the age,—the time of the harvest of that seed, the resurrection from the dead,—they would stand on Mount Zion as the sons of God, redeemed from among men. They knew that this would not take place in some future, imaginary spiritual world, but right here in earth, according to the prayer indited by Jesus, when he said: “Thy kingdom come; thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven.”

Having a definite gospel to preach, and having a perfect knowledge of its terms, so that one of them did not say one thing and another something else on the same subject, their united and consistent testimony prevailed, especially since it was added to good and consistent lives. In Isaiah it is declared:

My people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge; and their honorable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst. Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

Those real conversions to Christ, to God, were without money and above price. Far be it from us to say that these cheap conversions are not realities! It would be far better for the subjects of them if they were not.

As every body—whether lower animal or human—generates its own spirit, which enables it to live and put forth its various activities, so every body of men, as a church, political party, or society, by means of consociate activity, generates the spirit which produces all the results of that activity. In times of high political excitement, a life-long democrat becoming negative to the spirit generated in a powerful republican meeting, may be converted, and ever afterward remain a strong republican.

As the prophet declares, “hell hath enlarged herself” until all men are in it; to which fact Jesus testified when he said to all the men of that time and of this: “Ye are of your father the devil,” hence are in hell. Being in that condition,—because of ignorance, for God declares, “My people have gone into captivity because they have no knowledge,”—a man enters an A. C. camp meeting, and being ignorant of the facts in the case, and becoming negative to the spirit generated there, which is not the spirit of Christ, but of the A. C. body, is converted, not to Christ, nor to God, but to the A. C. faith. Being deceived as to the fact that he is yet in hell, and assured that he is now sure of heaven when he dies, he has certainly become “twofold more a child of hell” than he was before; and his chances to get out of hell, if accomplished at all, must be in this life, for as long as he is subject to death he is in hell.

Cheap things are usually dear at any price; cheap conversions are pinchbeck, not gold. As to genuine conversion by the Holy Ghost, there are none now, for the Holy Ghost is not available as the divine seed, as it was not in the time spoken of in John vii:39, and will not be again until it comes, as it did then, by a holy body, soul, and spirit going away to Holy Ghost—the Comforter, and being sent unto men, as Jesus said he would send it.

WHO IS CYRUS of Bible prophecy? The clergyman is at a loss to explain. The popular theology forces the conclusion that the king of Persia, who lived during the sixth century B. C., is referred to; he was a heathen king, outside of the Hebrew race entirely. If the prophecies refer specifically to that personality of ancient times, in what way did he fulfil the predictions concerning his office? "That saith of CYRUS, He is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure." "Thus saith the Lord to his Anointed [Hebrew, Messiah; Greek, Christos] to CYRUS, whose right hand I have holden to subdue nations before him." Was Cyrus the king of Persia, the Messiah? Did he perform Messianic functions? The clergyman must answer in the affirmative, or deny that the prophecies were true. Were the prophecies highly figurative? If so, were the prophecies of Jesus of the same character? A christian science journal undertakes to solve the problem. Hitherto, it has been supposed by that school that Christ was a principle—a great principle which Jesus exemplified in himself; and yet it is admitted that the real Christ was originally the man Jesus. Now the announcement is made, as a veritable reflex from Koreshanity, which is being plagiarized by the hundreds of teachers, that Cyrus is also the Christ; that "Cyrus stands for the I in each of us"! The fact is, that Biblical prophecies refer to two personal Messiahs: one coming through the lineage of Judah, as the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah," and the other through the lineage of Joseph, as the "Shepherd, the Stone of Israel." Jesus had a splendid beginning in Abraham. The personality who is to fulfil the predictions of the Shepherd to perform all God's pleasure, and before whom the Almighty takes special pains to subdue nations before him for his special benefit, had a good beginning in Cyrus, the king of Persia, whose spirit the "Lord stirred up," and to whom he promised all the nations of the earth. The Persian king did not possess them in ancient times, any more than Abraham inherited the earth. Abraham looked forward to the fulfilment of the promises made to him, in the climax of the dispensation, the personality of Jesus, and likewise, the king of Persia reaps his reward in the goal of his destiny, at the beginning of the Cyrusian (Koreshan) dispensation, in the manifestation of the anthropotic Sun, the great luminary of the human world!

A number of our readers cannot understand our attitude toward America and the civilized world. The trend of hundreds of our editorials is, that the governments of the world are corrupt, and the people uncivilized; while in other editorials we laud American progress, praise its heroes, and sustain the American war policy in the Philippines. We have been asked which attitude is correct? We answer, both! Nineteen hundred years ago, the Jewish nation was corrupt. The masses were retrogressive; they were opposed to truth and purity; but out of the masses came the most progressive Man of the age, with a circumferential following, with sufficient potency to head a new dispensation. Progressive as well as retrogressive evolution takes place in the same people, in the same nation, in the same world. America contains the elements of corruption as well as the elements of progress. Its corruptions extend to the most external affairs of the nation; but the forces of progress impulse the entire mass in the direction of the final goal of liberty. The scientific Eye can distinguish between the two elements, and point out which is dominant in every national transaction. Some of our readers do not understand this, and charge us with inconsistency. We have simply gone further into the intricacies of the great problems than other journals. The retrogressive elements are going to destruction; the victory is to be achieved through the progressive elements involved in the nation. When the evil is destroyed, only the good will remain. We are both pessimistic and optimistic. We condemn and commend; we see both the dark side and the light side of American affairs, and know what the result will be. Our friends will, in time, recognize the fact that the judgment of THE FLAMING SWORD is reliable upon all questions of the hour. In time, they will get our view-point, and see the world in its true perspective!

The very meaning of the Greek word for sun, is indicative of the character of the universal luminary, as well as its functions, and the character of the substances radiating from it. The central sun is the helical constant of the universe, the positive pole of the great electro-magnetic battery of the physical cosmos, the seed of the mineral kingdom. ἥλιος (helios) means sun, from ἑλῆ (hèle), a root from which a great family of words is derived, including ἑλῆξ (helix), which means that which is rolled, coiled, or wound around; a spiral. The coil in the electro-magnet is a helix ἑλίσσω (helisso), meaning to roll or turn around, while εἰλω (eilo), means to wrap up, to shut in, to roll together, to involve. The central sun of the physical world is a helix, the turning in or involution of the circumferential shell. The universe, from the Latin uni, one; and vertere, to turn, turns or rolls in itself, in its own helix, the sun. The central sun has a spiral or helical motion; while the projected sun has a specific spiral motion, as related to the physical belt of the Zodiac in the earth's shell; making the whole a great dynamo with its magnetic field and revolving armatures, as well as positive and negative poles at right angles with the plane of revolution. The energies from this great helix are electrical. The word electricity is from ἡλεκτρον (electron), which is derived from ἥλιος (helios), the sun; and the word ἡλεκτωρ (elector) means the beaming sun! The sun is the magneto-electric pole or helix of the universal battery, the involution or rolling-in of the cosmos. In the Copernican system, these words can have no such meaning. The Koreshan System is true to the last analysis of all things, of all languages, of all life, and of all forms and functions.

It is claimed that America is a Christian country; that it is the land of Bibles, and that its laws are founded upon Christian principles. While the modern Christian religion is not recognized as the state religion, it is, nevertheless, practically the national religion. Chaplains for its legislative bodies and armies are paid by the government to address the Almighty concerning the affairs of the nation, while the national representatives talk to the people and to one another concerning their pet schemes for benefiting the money power. Is the American nation a Christian nation? It is, after the modern conception; but it is not righteous. The government caters to the millionaires and the trusts; the municipal powers put a premium on crime by licensing saloons, houses of ill-fame, and other iniquitous and nefarious establishments. The nation encourages that kind of industry and commerce which is rapidly making paupers of the masses and enriching the few; and thousands of the members of the church are engaged in the various unjust lines of business in the hellish competitive system. Has the church built up this nation? If she has, as she boasts, the people must soon or later, demand that she share the responsibilities for the crime of modern civilization! The office of the modern church is to deify the corrupt governments; to sanctify the devil in the home, and to invoke blessings upon the nefarious schemes of industrial and commercial pirates. It sanctifies the selfishness and hypocrisy of the vidual; throws a halo about the corruption of society, and sends the criminal on the gallows to the heavens of their choice. In the interest of reform, the church is silent; it pardons crime, and whitewashes the corruptions of the age!

The straws of the November elections show which way the political wind blows. It is a great republican sweep, which causes rejoicing in Washington. Rome reached her crisis quickly, when there was virtually one powerful party which controlled everything its own way. The great pageant which follows the elephant through the gateway between the centuries, will at last reach the circus tents, where the cyclone of revolution will demolish the whole, and clear the rings. The menagerie will be uncaged to spread terror among the natives. We desire to see America advance toward the culmination; it will come sooner, if the quibblers are relegated to the rear of the procession. It would be better to transmute a great nation, with its billions of wealth and its vast expanse of territory covering half a world, than a scrimping nation in the democratic style of anti-imperialism and anti-expansion. Americans have at last discovered that the "let-alone policy" will not make a great and powerful nation of the western republic. It must compete with the other nations; in this age, the age of hell, it must do as others do who are in hell. America at the present time, cannot rise in the scale of power except through oppression; but it would be better to press on through oppression, than not to press on at all. Where injustice must reign, it is better to be heroically unjust, than to have a nation made up of vacillating material, unfit for any use, and having no power. A strong character in hell will make a strong character in heaven; the worse the devil the better the god—when the devil is converted. The same is true of nations!

The President's proclamation of prosperity and peace, under the head of "Thanksgiving," contains a few inconsistencies. He enumerates a number of things for which he says the American nation has exceptional cause for the giving of profound thanks to the Most High. No great pestilences have invaded our shores; there are abundant crops; national finances have been strengthened and public credit sustained; in all branches of industry and trade there has been an unequaled degree of prosperity,—even to the formation of gigantic trusts! Patriotism has been exalted in the victory of America over Spain; and therefore a day is set apart for national worship of the beneficent promoter of American prosperity. If we compare this proclamation with the promise of the republican party in 1896, it would seem reasonable to conclude that the thanks of the nation are due to the President! Has not the gold party fulfilled its promise? It has brought that kind of prosperity which makes possible the closing paragraph of the President's proclamation, in which he recommends that on the appointed day "labor shall cease from its accustomed toil, and charity abound toward the sick, poor, and needy"! A nation truly prosperous, and having innumerable things for which to be thankful to God Almighty, would have neither sick, nor poor, nor needy!

God and man in the human kingdom, sustain the same relation as seed and plant in the vegetable kingdom. The identity of the seed is preserved in the central line of persistency of the life of the plant, and the seed is produced from the plant as the aggregation and unity of the most progressive cells of the plant. The Almighty masquerades through the ages in the masses of humanity, marching through the central and most interior spheres of human life, periodically manifesting himself in the external world at the end of specific dispensations and cycles.

The seed is the cause-point in the creation and perpetuity in every plane of existence, from God down to the mineral kingdom, with its perpetual pivot and pole—the central sun. The astral nucleus is to the physical universe what God is to humanity. The sun baptizes the physical earth with energies that are absolutely necessary to mundane activities; and likewise, the Almighty, as the anthropostic Sun, renews the life of humanity in himself, and radiates the Elixir of Life to receptive circumferences. The Koreshan theology is scientific; Koreshanity is the scientific religion.

The earth's atmosphere is soon to be invaded by countless thousands of meteors; and the world is to witness a stupendous pyrotechnic display in the physical heavens. For four consecutive days, a stream of meteors will pour forth from the constellation Leo; the meteors are known as leonids. If the nights of November 13 to 16 are clear, from midnight until morning, the showers may be seen at about the altitude that the sun is visible in August. Of course the public will be interested in this phase of astronomy, both before and after the display—Koreshans especially, because there are a number of things involved which contradict the Copernican conclusions; and we will point them out when the showers are over. Note first, that for four consecutive nights, the radiant point from which the meteors proceed is in a single constellation of the physical heavens—a fact easily comprehended from the basis of Koreshan Astronomy, with its revolving sphere of the heavens within the cell; but which will puzzle the Copernican to explain on the basis of a whirling earth, with a thin film of atmosphere surrounding it, with the meteors streaming forth from space!

The Biblical prophecies concerning the falling of the stars, have no direct reference to the falling meteors in the physical world. The Adventists, in their "midnight cry," ignorant of the fact that meteors fall every thirty-three years, have pointed to the great pyrotechnic display of 1833 as the sign of the Lord's coming. The stars fell nineteen hundred years ago; they were the mental stars which fell from the spiritual heavens of the Man Jesus, into the earth of the early church. Another shower of stars is about to precipitate the substances of the divine baptism into hundreds of thousands of people. The falling of the stars foretold in prophecy, will take place at the time of the conjunction of the anthropostic Sun and Moon, immediately after the great tribulation which is coming upon the earth. These signs will constitute the signal of the coming of the Lord in power and great glory, in the establishment of his kingdom in the earth, the beginning of the universal day in both the world of humanity and the physical cosmos.

The British empire hangs by a slender thread; it is facing an issue which will determine whether or not it will longer enjoy commercial supremacy. We have watched the English army on the borders of the Transvaal; we have seen the army surrounded by hardy, determined Boers, and have witnessed the surprise of England at the reverses experienced in the present war. Before the war, President Kruger said that "if in the end we must yield to the demands of Great Britain, we will do it at a sacrifice which will astonish humanity!" With the Orange Free State in alliance; with the prospect of hundreds of thousands of Boers in Cape Colony arising in arms against the British, and with the prospect of the protest of other nations against the English blunder, can England stand the strain? If not, it will be the first step in her downfall!

Reliable statistics of the world's wealth and commerce are furnished by the Philadelphia Commercial Museum. From the reports we gather that from the standpoint of wealth, the United States of America ranks first among the nations of the world. Great Britain has only about 75 per cent, France 60 per cent, and Germany 50 per cent as much wealth as the American nation. In annual products of manufacturing industries, the United States also ranks first, while Great Britain falls to 44 per cent. With wealth comes power. America is in the ascendant, while in the same scale, the British fall to second place. The pole of progress is in America; the kingdom of the Almighty will be established in America, and all great events are penciling toward the final focus!

The anti-imperialists have before them the actual facts that the Philippine islands have been ceded to the United States, and are as much the territory of the United States as the Indian territory, Arizona, or Alaska. When Indians go on raids in these territories, they are rightfully suppressed by force of arms. Since the cession of the Philippines, in accordance with the terms of the Spanish-American treaty and American purchase, the inhabitants have risen in rebellion. Civilization has marched westward as the aborigines have decreased in numbers. Has the progress of America in its own territory been justifiable? Will the anti-imperialists ask the United States to make the Indians of America free and independent? If not, why the Filipinos?

The Americans love all kinds of fights and wars, and worship the heroes of every conflict. They have prize fights, political fights, church fights, dog fights, cock fights, labor fights, industrial and commercial fights, and fights in the Philippines. The war spirit is everywhere; there is even war in heaven, as well as in hell. War settles great questions; it is a case of the survival of the fittest, the victory of the supremest.

The writers of the Bible understood the language of symbolism and the laws of correspondence which relate humanity to the physical world. The Bible describes what takes place in the domain of human life; it is the scientific language of Cause expressed in symbolism. Higher criticism, in utter ignorance of man and the analogous universe, undertakes to condemn the Bible because it does not agree with the absurdities of modern science!

The Almighty has both right and left hands. With his right he reaches into the heavens; with his left, he reaches down into the hells. Jesus was right; he was exalted as the right hand of the power of Deity, and ultimately the army of the regenerated will be placed on the right hand; the goats will constitute all that is left of humanity!

A mind may appear brilliant, and yet be only a meteor in the world's mental atmosphere. Hundreds of so called leaders shine only for a time; they burn out and are seen no more. They are worthless, compared with the permanent, glittering stars and the shining sun in the intellectual firmament.

It is said that thousands of people in Egypt live in tombs. They do the same in America and other countries. Every mortal man is a tomb; humanity is an immense cemetery. Nineteen hundred years ago the Pharisees were "whited sepulchers,"—and the modern churchmen are no better!

In the world's parliament of religions, some common ground was sought on which all creeds and popular religions could stand together. It was discovered in the congress; it is the ground on which they now stand, and on which they will all be destroyed—ignorance of the truth!

The military stars are falling from the British constellation Leo, as we approach the time of the great pyrotechnic display of the leonids or meteors from the constellation Leo in the physical heavens. The meteors are falling in the air on the borders of the Transvaal.

The endeavor of the "higher critics" to criticise the intricacies of Bible symbolism, is on a par with the effort of the ten-year-old child to criticise the formulæ of intricate trigonometrical problems!

A famous journalist has said that "If all editors hated an untruth as they do a libel suit, we would be basking in a journalistic millenium!"

The Illinois flag law is declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional and unjust, and is made void. How many others are just like it?

THE EDITOR.

The Flaming Sword and the Filipinos.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—In the issue of October 6, you say that "the anti-imperialists are straining at gnats and swallowing camels," insinuating—acknowledging—that the American war of conquest in the Philippines is an unholy war; while in another issue, I find you upholding that war. You are bold to take the right side and speak the truth concerning England and the Transvaal war; but what are you trying to do with the United States and the Philippines? Stand by both sides?

Why are you so liberal with plain and truthful expressions concerning England's war with the Boers, but so stingy and careful with your expressions about our war with the Filipinos? Two weeks ago, you leaned a little toward the Filipinos; today, you lean a great deal the other way. Where are you? This appears to be about the only question in existence that you are afraid to declare the truth about, as you see it. It does not look reasonable that a man of your calibre can consistently uphold this war with the Filipinos; especially, since you are laboring under a divinely-inspired Leader. Or does the administration pay you big for doing so? You justify yourself in a reply to a question of mine recently concerning advertisements in THE FLAMING SWORD, by saying that Jesus advises to make friends with the mammon of unrighteousness. If so, what is the difference between that and any other bribe? Or is it necessary to destroy the Filipinos for some reason not realized by the outside world, as in the case of the Hebrews, who, KORESH says, "through an intuitive consciousness, saw the importance of destroying certain nations to preserve the race from which must come the Son of God"?—P. A. C., St. Albans, Vt.

In the first quotation made above, we referred to the anti imperialists, not the imperialists. The anti-imperialists "strain at gnats" or the so called mistakes of the administration in the Spanish-American war and its results, and swallow the "camels" of democracy, competition, and other gigantic evils of the nineteenth century, which make the "gnats" possible. For the life of us, we cannot see how any one can conceive that such a statement is sustaining the Filipinos, nor that the statement contradicts a subsequent editorial. We caution our readers not to jump at conclusions as to our meaning. In the quotation first referred to, we meant just what we said—not what was supposed that we said and meant.

We have definite conclusions concerning all of the great questions of the hour; we make specific statements concerning our position in each, and are fearless in our expressions. During the past year, THE FLAMING SWORD has contained some very emphatic articles on the Philippine question, and all our readers, except new subscribers, understand our position. The reason our correspondent has not seen these articles and paragraphs, is because he has been receiving THE FLAMING SWORD but a comparatively short time. Ours is the broad view of the situation, consistent with the progress of a nation of destiny. It is that America assumed the responsibilities of the Spanish-American war, and it must assume the responsibility for the results. It had as much right to purchase the Philippines as it had to purchase Florida, Louisiana, California, and Alaska. Surely, if America is the most advanced nation in the world, it can give a greater degree of liberty and security to the Filipinos by making them a part of the American nation, than the Filipinos can give to themselves. Or do you think that the Filipinos are more advanced than the Americans?

We have canvassed the situation thoroughly from a scientific standpoint—the standpoint of scientific prophecy; and we contend that our attitude toward the Filipinos is correct. America is ultimately to control the world; and in order to do so, it must make a beginning. It must gain power; it must gain wealth; acquire territory, control the seas, and subdue nations. Under the leadership of Moses and Joshua, the Israelites marched into Canaan and took possession of what is now Palestine. From the standpoint of the natives, it was an unjust war; but from the standpoint of the Hebrews, it was the only thing that they could do and fulfil the purpose of the Almighty in and through them. For similar reasons, we maintain that America must conduct wars of conquest. It is conceded even by the anti-imperialists, that the territory of the United States belongs to the Americans. But where did they get it? They stole it from the Indians!

The Americans have gradually conquered and exterminated the millions of the aborigines; and the result is the greatest nation in the earth! Would it have been in the interests of progress to permit the Indians to continue to control the American continent? Would the destiny of the Anglo-Saxon race have ever been reached if, through an anti-war policy, the whites had left the Indians alone? If it was right to establish a great civilization in the western world in the way it has been established, it is right now to further expand over 1200 islands of the Philippine archipelago and other islands, by similar methods. What if a phase of injustice does obtain in the process? It is the inevitable. Carbonic anhydride is the inevitable result of the burning of the diamond; the chemist must create the poison in creating the forces in the burning of the diamond. Until perfection is reached, evils must result from the march of the Almighty through a great people. Solomon's temple was erected on the ground obtained through wars of conquest; and the Christ came out of the people that waged the wars. The Almighty makes even the wrath and the corruptions of the people to praise him!

We have made such editorial expressions over and over again. Does it look as though we had omitted just one question from our discussions? We are not conscious of there being a single subject under agitation in the world, or within the range of possible suggestion by any mind, that we are afraid to take up and discuss when necessary. The history of Koreshanity is a demonstration of the truth of this statement. We are antagonized by every faction under the sun. We encounter the forces of competition, and of a false commercial and industrial system; we are opposed to the corruptions of governments, the hypocrisy of the church, and the selfishness and sensualism of the individual. We resent the suggestion that we are employed by the administration to defend its Filipino war policy. We take bold stands upon questions from a scientific point of view, regardless of whom it may offend, or whom it may please.

We are patriotic for scientific reasons; we have a rational admiration for the American nation; it has its faults, its evils, and its corruptions; but out of it will come the glories of the Golden Age. We reach our logical conclusions and express them with force and emphasis; we are teaching the people; thousands listen to us. We have the truth, and know it; and there is no possibility of changing our mind by any possible form of attack, because we know our ground. The United States has become what it is through the power that is behind its guns; and it must continue to resort to the arbitrations of war as long as hell exists in humanity. God Almighty does not shrink from crushing those who stand in his way; he annihilates nations whenever necessary; and those who do not like his methods must stand in his way and get the worst of it, or run!

The Christ is not in the Masses.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—In March 17, 1899, FLAMING SWORD, page 7, you say: "The Christ is in a very, very few only." And on page 10 of same number you say: "The man Jesus was composed of millions of spirits of men who had lived in the past." This, as I view it, is a little contradictory. Do not imagine that I am finding fault—I do not feel capable of doing so; but I want to learn all I can of the Koreshan System, that I may understand it as you do. I hope we may all have the Christ within us sometime.—B. C. C., Leocompton, Kan.

There is no contradiction in the above statements. If, as the prophet foretold concerning the involution at the end of the Jewish age, Jesus "gathered the lambs with his arm and carried them in his bosom," he certainly was a composite man. He was the resurrection of an age; all who had died during the Jewish dispensation, looking forward to the coming of the Messiah, found their resurrection in him. He was the resurrection of the thousands and the millions. Abraham was in him; in him, Abraham reached his inheritance. Jesus was the resurrection of David; he was David's son and David's Lord. David spoke of Jesus when he spoke of himself, so the apostle Peter said. Moses was in Jesus; and so was Elijah. Moses and Elijah were manifest when Jesus was transfigured—metamorphosed; they came out of him, and were seen by the Apostles. Paul enumerated not only the church of the living God, but the holy City, an innumerable company of angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect, in Jesus.

Now, look at Jesus as he stood among the Jews nineteen hundred years ago, as the involution of the age. He was in reality composed of millions of spirits; yet he stood alone. No one else contained the spirit of the Almighty, because the Almighty had anointed Jesus with his own spirit—all of it, not a part of it—to preach the gospel of glad tidings. We could truly say at that time, that the Christ was in one personality only. It can be readily seen that there is no contradiction in such a statement. He said to those about him, "I am from my Father, which is in heaven; ye are of your father the devil." He told them that he was from above, while they were from beneath. It is a settled fact, according to his own statements, that the Christ at that time, was not in the masses, until he sowed himself in them. Is not this clear?

The Flaming Sword.

The early church contained the Christ. He went into his disciples; he was the Seed planted in the mortal soil. The seed germinated and died during the age; the church was formed and fell away. But just as during the Jewish age there were lines of progress converging to one focus, so there have been persistent lines in the interior of humanity. An involution obtains again; the truth comes in one man again; although composed of millions of entities, he stands alone. Others have only so much of him or his truth, as they are able to comprehend and appropriate the mental substance emanating from the one. We may say again, with emphasis, that "the Christ is in a very, very few only;" but he will be in the many when, through the processes of theocrasis, he is disseminated to the many, and begins the work of overcoming for each, in each of those who are to become sons of God.

In the Field of Koreshan Propaganda.

Weekly Synopsis of Topics Discussed by Koreshan Lecturers.

Koreshan Hall, 326 W. 63d St., Chicago.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 2.—Lecture by KORESH. The possibilities of human attainment to the condition of theocrasis (translation) and the laws governing the same, were set forth in a train of logical deduction which admitted of no controversy. There are two processes of combustion, or the conversion of matter to energy. One is almost instantaneous, the other of longer duration. A tree may die, and for years undergo a rotting process, by which it is transmuted to energy. On the other hand, we may submit it to the flames, and the same object is attained by more rapid methods. What is true in the vegetable domain is true of the human. Mentality is the most potential of all forces. Intense love and hate, pivoted in a personality understanding the law of theocrasis, will generate a friction (or fire) sufficient to consume the physical body and transmute it to spirit. This was accomplished by Jesus nineteen hundred years ago, and the same law holds true today.

SUNDAY, NOV. 5, 3 P. M. Sermon by KORESH. Subject: The New Jerusalem (Rev. xxi). The spirits of all who died during the Jewish age, looking for the coming of the Messiah, were gathered into Jesus, the Shepherd. "He gathered the lambs with his arm, and carried them in his bosom." When He went away, his body was transmuted to Holy Spirit, and those who received the baptism became the receptacles of the spirits which had been gathered in him. The spiritual entities aggregated in the Messianic center of this age, constitute the New Jerusalem, now about to descend into the humanity prepared for its reception.

MONDAY EVENING, NOV. 6. Lecture on Astronomy, by Prof. Morrow. The Copernican theory (that gigantic air castle built upon the shifting sands of hypothesis) was sharply contrasted with the Koreshan System, whose premise is as absolute as the universe itself. The meteoric shower (predicted for November 13, 14, and 15,) constituted the theme for a very entertaining talk. Several questions were answered, among which was: What has astronomy to do with salvation? This question was later enlarged upon by KORESH, who said that the subject of astronomy and cosmogony was of so much importance that the Bible begins with it, as evidenced in the narrative of creation. God is not, however, generally supposed to know much concerning the form and function of the universe which he created. The universe is the macrocosm (great world), which is self-perpetuating—hence eternal. Man is the microcosm (little world), who—when perfected—becomes immortal, resembling the pattern—the physical universe.

Koreshan Hall, 681-83 W. Lake St.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 1.—Lecture by Prof. Morrow, on Astronomy. A fine, new chart of the great pyramid had been prepared, upon which the Professor discoursed at some length. The building of this pyramid involved a marvelous comprehension of astronomy, geometry, and mathematics. Modern mechanical appliances would be powerless to even lift the immense stones used in its construction, and the perfection of the mason work is beyond present possibility. A critical study of the subject proves, beyond a doubt the existence of a prehistoric civilization, with which the spurious civilization of today presents no comparison.

Adjacent to the site of the great pyramid, is a heap of fragments hewn from the stones used in building the structure. These have their correspondence in the fragmentary truths in the world today; a worthless heap of shapeless rubbish, gratifying only to the curiosity seeker, but not entering into the construction of the great Pyramid—the Temple of truth now in process of erection.

SUNDAY EVENING, NOV. 5. Sermon by KORESH, from the text: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." (John xv: 13.) The world has no conception of love today. That which is denominated love, is merely lustful passion. The ten commandments are summed up in the word love; the only true love being the performance of use to the neighbor.

SUNDAY EVENING, NOV. 5.—State and Quincy Sts. Meeting opened by Mr. Rollin Gray, who spoke for a short time upon the Koreshan premise, after which the audience was addressed by Mr. Wallace, who chose for his subject "The corrupt Church and State." Much discussion followed the close of the meeting. Many people are defending Koreshanity against all comers, and evidences are not lacking of the onward march of our work in this great metropolis.

The Earth a Hollow Globe.

A New York Paper Briefly Reviews the Koreshan System of Astronomy.

The earth is not round like a ball, and it does not revolve on its axis. It is a hollow globe, 8,000 miles across. The sun, moon, and stars are inside, and we live on the concave interior surface. Science is all at fault in its theorizing. These are some of the beliefs which a missionary is trying to propagate in Binghamton, presenting in evidence, elaborate geometrical calculation, figures, and experiments.

The Rev. U. G. Mitchell is in Binghamton, as the New York State agent and missionary for the Koreshan organization of Chicago, a newly-organized body, which claims that the speculations of modern scientists and astronomers have had more to do with the making of infidels and skeptics than all other agencies put together. In order to prove the correctness of the Bible, the Koreshans try to prove that the earth is stationary; and that the heavens revolve, and that when a ship sails around the world, it sails around the entire solar system—which, is scurrying around inside in a queer sort of fashion. KORESH, the founder and high prophet of the sect, waves away the stumbling block of the apparent disappearance of vessels at sea, as "only a trick of the eye"—which an account of elaborate experiments detailed in their book CELLULAR COSMOGONY is said to explain.

Stars can be seen through the moon, say the Koreshans. From a balloon, the earth always appears as a basin. And in support of these theories, they claim to have carried on experiments upon the surface of Lake Michigan, and to have made a survey upon the Gulf coast of Florida, costing thousands of dollars and taking months of time, and demonstrating beyond question that the earth is concave and not convex. Mr. Mitchell, has traveled over a large part of the country advocating the seidesas and distributing literature.

The ordinary man might wonder how Koresh is going to explain how it is that the sun "rises and sets," and leaves folks in the dark, if the luminary is inside of us all the time. But this doesn't faze the new scientist in the least. "The phenomenon of sunrise," says CELLULAR COSMOGONY airily, "as explained in the Koreshan System, is not caused by the rotation of the earth, with apparent sunrise above the convex surface, as in the Copernican system; but by the sun coming into our sphere of vision, and thus bursting into view.  The Bible does not convey the idea that the sun ascends in the morning, and goes down or descends in the evening, but that it comes into view, as in Eccl. i:5. The sun ariseth [Heb. zarach, bursts forth], and the sun goeth down [bo, goes in] and hasteneth to the place where he arose [zarach, bursts forth.] When the sun "sets," it simply goes out of our field of vision.—Binghamton (N.Y.) Republican.

Koreshan Astronomy Being Discussed in the Schools.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—The schools in this vicinity are considerably stirred up over the CELLULAR COSMOGONY. Some students ask their teachers about it, but the teachers are unable to answer them. Some of the teachers have advised the scholars not to buy the book. One of them said to a boy, in answer to the question, "Do we live on the inside?" "We'll not talk about that now; we are on the outside of the earth." The evening I remained in Colton, three schoolboys came and asked me if I was the lady who was teaching that we are on the inside of the earth; I replied that I was. They said their teacher had told them that we were not living on the "inside." I explained the Geodetic Survey to them. I frequently meet with people who "know all about Koreshanity," because they have read the newspapers! I have had several opportunities to tell the women of Colton who spoke against KORESH, that I knew him to be the purest man in the earth; and in spite of what they had heard, what I said seemed to have considerable influence with them.—Lydia P. C., Koreshan Missionary, San Bernardino, Cal.

Keep Koreshanity Before the People!

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I enclose money order for bundle of Cosmogonies. Mrs. W. is a member of our class, and a very valuable one. She accepts Koreshanity, and her knowledge of the Bible is extremely helpful to the younger members. I am pleased to tell you that the Librarian of our public library is very much interested in the CELLULAR COSMOGONY, and has consented to have THE FLAMING SWORD put on file in the reading room. An eminent scientist of our city, Prof. O., is much interested in Koreshan Astronomy, as are also several teachers and pupils of the high schools. I am sure that we can get a large audience for KORESH when he comes.—Mrs. M. L. N., Springfield, Mass.

The Flaming Sword's High-Class Exchanges.

The Cosmopolitan.—An important subject, The Woman Question, is discussed by Olive Schreiner; it is a discussion of woman's sphere of usefulness, her field of labor, and the changes that have taken place in her condition and affairs during the present century. It demands woman's rights, and will be read with interest by all progressive women as well as men. This number begins with the Paris Exposition, covering the elaborate plans for the French world's fair in 1900, with a number of beautiful illustrations. Ancient and Modern Spectacles contrasts gatherings in Rome with the Dewey celebration in New York. How the World Dances, with 20 illustrations, is instructive, showing the various dancing customs of the world, from the dervishes to the ballet dancers. A beautifully illustrated scientific article appears, showing photographs of various electrical discharges. Another article of interest to the public as well as to engineers, is In the Engine Room of a Warship, illustrated by photographs. The three stories are excellent and interesting: Frenchy's Last Job, a marine story; A Triangular Dinner Party, is a Thanksgiving story, full of ludicrous situations; and a Nineteenth-Century Daughter of Pharaoh. The Cosmopolitan is only 10 cents a copy, and is one of the best 10-cent magazines published. $1.00 per year. New York City.

Leslie's Weekly.—We always welcome the arrival of Leslie's Weekly, with its elaborate and striking pictures from the field of popular events. The world is now watching the war between the British and the Boers; and while England may triumph in the end, the Boers have an excellent chance, as is shown in a very interesting article this week. Excellent illustrations from the seat of war in the Transvaal occupy two pages of the issue. A double-page is devoted to an admirable drawing of striking boldness, picturing an engineer grasping the lever of a train running a mile a minute. The Society Girl is one of Stanlaw's most attractive full-page drawings of an American type of beauty. A page of Chinatown in New York appears, also a full-page drawing, and Sad News from the Far-off Philippines. All the usual departments and excellent editorials.

Success.—This journal has had considerable success since it became a weekly, about a year ago. It has increased in interest and usefulness, and is now brighter than ever. The Philippine question, and the war in the Transvaal are subjects of discussion everywhere; and Success has its share of valuable information on these subjects. This week's issue contains a discussion of The Problem of the Philippines, by Raymon Reyes Lala, an educated Filipino, telling of the prospects of the Philippines under American rule. Several pages are devoted to the Transvaal war and the Boers as a people. Talks with Young Men; Men, Women, and events; Editorials and short stories are interesting departments. Enlarged to 20 pages; 5 cents per copy; $1.50 yearly. Cooper Union, New York City. Or, order through the Guiding Star Publishing House.

Printer's Ink.—The most valuable advertiser's journal; devoted to unique and effective advertising; full of interesting things in all lines of business. Suggestive to writers as well as readers. It contains ideas boiled down. Yearly, $5.00. No. 10 Spruce St., New York City.

Revista de Sociedade Psychica de S. Paulo.—Published in the Spanish language, devoted to the investigation of occult subjects. Organ of Psychical Society of S. Paulo, Brazil. The Society receives THE FLAMING SWORD.

Ten Cents per Copy; One Dollar a Year.

Edited by ROBERT SHEERIN, M. D.

A MONTHLY compendium of the contemporaneous thoughts and writings of the World on Mental Science and Occultism. It will be quite conspicuous from all other publications devoted to these subjects. Instead of furnishing the reader with original articles, editorials, or reviews, it will give an able DIGEST AND REVIEW of the best opinions, thoughts and writings of all the important psychological and occult papers, Magazines and Reviews, gathered from the world over. It has no editorials of its own. It is not its purpose to present the views of its editor, but to represent the best thought, the latest discoveries and writings as far as expressed in the Psychic and Occult Science Literature of the world. The reader will be kept thoroughly posted on these subjects by regularly perusing its pages, and he will find all sides of such studies represented FAIRLY AND FULLY, with no attempt on the part of the editor to mould his judgment in reading.

A TREASURE FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Most Psychic and Occult students have neither the time nor money to spend in reading the vast array of periodicals devoted to their line of study, and it is the purpose of The Psychic Digest and Occult Review of Reviews, to supply their wants in this respect.

You will profit more from a few hours reading of this Journal than in WEEKS of study put upon other periodicals. You cannot possibly gain better satisfaction for many times the expenditure elsewhere.

This Journal is clubbed with The Suggester and Thinker—both sent for one year for $1.50. Write for other premiums.
