A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes God in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of univesal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Secret of the Success of Koreshanity.

Its Foundation is Demonstrated Science, and the Cosmos is the Pattern for its Government; the Difference Between Experimental Socialism and Scientific Imperialism.

IT MAY BE INTERESTING to many of the recent accessions to our subscription list, to learn something in detail of the progress of the Koreshan movement. Its most distinguishing characteristic from all the socialistic movements of modern times, including such as have been tried and have proved failures for many reasons, and others now in experimental progress, lies in the fact that its spirit of liberty is found in the organic force of centralization. The government of Koreshanity has taken for its pattern the form and function of the alchemico-organic (physical) universe. It has come within the province of the Founder of Koreshanity to comprehend the laws of organic structure as they obtain in that great field of observation known as the astronomical domain, which, according to the most approved modern judgment, is beyond the comprehension of the human mind.

We have set aside and ignored those modern methods of investigation which every man of sense knows to be predicated upon assumptions, the results of which are uncertain hypotheses erected as scientific edifices by one set of investigators, to be torn down as useless by the succeeding set. There does not exist in the field of so called astronomical "science" one positive statement concerning either form or function, that is not purely hypothetical. No man can know either the form or the function of an incomprehensible universe; and from the very fact of such a confession of ignorance on the part of the great men of "science," the trash that has been accumulating for centuries as scientific lore, is not worth the time and mental energy expended upon an effort to become familiar with its vagaries.

Koreshan Science is a revelation of the principles of organic law as they obtain in the cosmic structure; and knowing both the laws of form and the laws of function, we are enabled to take them as the true pattern for the establishment of order in social relations. The physical universe is in the form of man; it is the type of the man in his greatest magnitude. We wish it to be distinctly understood, that we are not now dealing in metaphor or in figure of speech. The physical universe is the great cosmic egg. It has its boundaries and limitations; it is not an illimitable thing, for such a thing could not be. It has its central limit in its astral nucleus, and its circumferential limit in the shell or rind of the great unincubated form.

The alchemico-organic world is an imperialism. Every stellar center in the great cosmic field has all the liberties of its motions and directions. The heavenly bodies move in the orbits in which they are fixed by the inexorable laws of organic arrangement, but in which they have the perfect liberty of momentum in their normal spheres of activity—their normal spheres being their only spheres of action. The perfect man in his least form is in the form of the universe. The world never possessed a truer conviction than that obtaining with the ancients, wherein it was known that the individual man was the microcosm—the little universe, for he not only contains all the elements and principles that obtain in the great universe, but his aggregation of forms and function corresponds in every detail to the universe as a whole. The individual man was therefore the microcosm, while the great universe is the macrocosm.

Just as unmistakably as that the physical universe is in the form of man in the unincubated state, so society when perfected in its organic life is in the form of the man in the incubated state. The government to be established in the earth, will be constructed according to the laws of organic order as they obtain in the great alchemico-organic cosmos. Koreshanity means the organic structure of society. A fundamental principle of organic life and power is that of centralization; hence Koreshanity begins its inception and career as an organic force in the world, with its imperial Head.

We are building the holy City and its Temple of humanity, as one would build an edifice of architectural magnificence. We build it thus because it is the edifice in which, when complete and perfect, the God of all the universe will dwell. The social structure is the habitation of Deity; it is the form of architectural glory. We are constructing the habitation of the living Jehovah, the House of many mansions, of which the Lord said: "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am ye may be also." So far as our growth is concerned, we are comparatively small; but the solidarity of our institution augments from day to day, and there begins to be manifest a permanency which is promising to those who live by faith and in the hope of a fulfilment of the predictions of the Master Builder. We are merging toward a condition of self-support, but we have been compelled to reach this state through hardships, privations, and persecutions—but not beyond endurance. It is an unprecedented achievement for a people whose purposes and modes of life are diametrically opposed to all the tendencies of the age, to successfully meet the opposition of the church, the commercial world, and of society in the heart of a great city like Chicago; but the Koreshan Unity, a communistic body, has passed through its struggles in the very midst of this cesspool of hades, and it lives to tell the tale.

It has been claimed that community life cannot be a success; that it has been tried repeatedly and unsuccessfully, and that every communistic effort is doomed to failure. No communistic effort was ever launched, embracing the principles which constitute the foundation of the Koreshan Unity and of Koreshanity. We possess the laws of organic order, and for this reason we will succeed where all other movements are destined to fail. This movement alone of all the socialistic efforts will attain perfection and perpetuity. We have started the nuclei of several industries, which begin to manifest signs of permanency. The great hope of every Koreshan, however, is fixed in the unerring purpose of an illumined intellect to create the psychic battery from which there will proceed the culminating baptism of the ages.

Those who are interested in the literature of Koreshanity may labor under the false impression that our work is more theoretical than practical. We are promulgating the theories of Socialistic Imperialism, but while we propound the theories we are practically demonstrating the work. As we progress in the solidarity of our empire, where the Lord God is the supreme Imperial power upon the throne of our inmost affections, we observe another but antithetical empire in process of centralization. It is the imperialism of the money power. As we write, the editorial page of the Chicago Chronicle lies before us, from which we quote this significant item from the first column of its page: "Socialism is held up in many places as the only remedy for trusts. The only remedy for socialism will be imperialism." The Chronicle predicts more wisely than it knows. The imperialism of the money power is the great Gog against which Magog will arise and pit its final force of disintegration. The money power is the roof of the house divided against itself, of which the great middle and lower classes will be made the floor; these two will fall together, for the money power with all its boasted security will meet its final doom and woe.

The Imperialism of Koreshanity is a new factor in the arena of the final contest of giants. The Lord God will meet in battle array the supreme deity of the modern world, and the money god upon whose banner is inscribed, "the trust is our inheritance," will fall with the crisis; and then will be fulfilled in the literal degree the prediction of John the Revelator: "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven; and the great dragon was cast out." It is the power of truth as manifest in Koreshanity, against the money power and the god of men as manifest more conspicuously in the United States than in any other country in the world. The Chicago Chronicle hit the nail on the head when it said: "The only remedy for socialism will be imperialism." It will be and is the Imperialism of Koreshanity.

Every age terminates in a certain degree of integralism; and every succeeding age commences with the inte-gralism developed as the product of the prior cycle or dispensation.

The Age Ends in Conflict and Catastrophe.

The Formidable Power of the Trust is the Result of Competism; Purpose of the Revolution; Koreshanity the Ark of Safety.

IT IS USELESS for the people to rely on what any political party may offer as a pledge for the correction of the trust plague. The trust is the money power; it has come to stay until the end. Those predictions founded upon the philanthropy of the millionaire are falsely predicated, and are only intended to deceive.

In the secular world there is no god but money. The worship of this god is the worship of mammon, and this love is the beast which, in the beginning, was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. "But," you will say, "if this is an evil god, or an evil beast,—this love of money,—then God did not create it." We answer: "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things." Why does the Lord create evil? Because he cannot help it. Evil comes as the reaction from good, and the voluntary power and process by which the Lord creates good reacts in the involuntary of the Lord, by which the Lord involuntarily produces evil.

The love of money and the money power constitute the love and power through which the great climax of revolution terminates the dispensation. No political party can effect a cure for this great evil. Money is too powerful, and the heart of the human race is too corrupt and susceptible to withstand the sinuosities of the great serpent. There is no hope for the world but in the revolution of the heart itself; and this can only come through the breath of God in man, in a new baptism about to be poured upon the world.

When the Jewish church reached the limit of its corruptibility (when the dispensation had attained the fulness of its iniquity), it was obliterated in the bloody catastrophe in which the age terminated. Before the end came, God breathed upon the people through the operation of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit overshadowed the world, because the source of the Spirit had been manifest in the personality of the Lord Jesus. Had there been no Lord Jesus, there could have been no baptism. The Christian age will end in a greater revolution, in a greater catastrophe, but before that great and dreadful day of the Lord, now at hand, Elijah the prophet—God the Lord in person, will appear to inaugurate a greater baptism than that by which the Christian dispensation was ushered in.

The battle of God and Magog cannot be averted by any cries of peace! peace! The time of peace has not yet arrived. Peace will come after the great conflict. In our prediction of the coming of the great crisis and catastrophe, we are now merely giving the warning of what will come in the secular domain of human activity. The battle of Gog and Magog will also be fought on the social and religious planes of life, and the dispensation will terminate amidst the three great woes.

Is the world growing better? It is reaching the climax of its glory and perfection in the manifestation of the Sons of God. It is reaching its disaster through the degeneracy of the masses of the people whose love is in the competitive system, which is begotten of the devil and born of hell, and is diametrically opposed to the principles and practices of communism as ordained of God, and made operative 1900 years ago through the office and mission of the Lord Jesus, the Son of God and Creator of the universe. The new dispensation will begin in an organic Communism, the direct outgrowth of the planting of the Lord Christ in the soul of the human race.

We rejoice in the heading up of the money power. We have made these predictions for thirty years. The centralization of the wealth of the world is the false imperialism which, when fully ripened, will inaugurate that other great battle—the battle of Armageddon. This is the power of evil against truth and good, the Imperialism of Jehovah. This battle is that of the wealth of the world and the power of the competitive system against the riches of truth, equally centralized and all powerful.

There will come a great conflict. This is not the battle of Gog and Magog, but the battle of Armageddon. It is the final power of the hells against the power of God and his Anointed. God himself will end the strife through his power to conquer the world, and in this power alone is the hope of the world against the evils into which the great political powers of the nation and the world have led us. Koreshanity is the ark of safety. God has prepared this place and ark of safety from the storms of revolution about to sweep the face of the earth, the storms through which the old heavens and the old earth will be made to pass away. The old church and state are grown hoary with age and iniquity; with the besom of destruction they are to be swept away by the new light and glory of the ages.

The Koreshan System involves the science of life and its application to all human relations and activities. As the science of life, it is the science of practical Christianity.

The Rarity of Christian Charity.

Modern Misconceptions of Charity; the False Philanthropy which Prevails Throughout Christendom; True Charity Demands the Establishment of a New Social Order.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

UNDER THE SUN where all is vanity, "alas for the rarity of Christian charity." The world utterly lacks a divine conception of true Christian charity, the normal expression of love for humanity. The voice of its chief Exemplifier, the one righteous Judge declares: "If ye love me keep my commandments." In the day of final judgment He will say: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me;" and "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

Recently, we picked up a little tract in a suburban station, entitled "Inasmuch," which propelled the following train of reflections: The purpose of the little tract is to stimulate impulses to the modern variety of popular Christian charity, which we rate as one of the greatest hindrances to the destruction of the "abomination which maketh desolate." The tract offers suggestions as to the good we all might do if we only would. These suggestions are ludicrous and pitiful in the presence of the gigantic hydra-headed social evils promoted by modern Christianity. We present a few of them as recalled:

(1) Since in the homes of abundance, books and papers accumulate so fast their disposition is a problem, why not send them to the homes of the poor in the cities, the distant prairie homes, sailing vessels, etc., in memoriam of our Lord's saying, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me"? (2) Then there is the toy of which Amy has tired, (Amy, so overloaded with gifts from uncles and aunts,) why not send it to the poor wasted children in the hospitals? (3) There also are the advertising cards of which Hugh has gathered so many and is wearied; why not send them to the bright-eyed heathen children in India? (4) There is that worn-out dress of Amy's, somewhat soiled, to be sure; and that outgrown suit of Joe's that he cannot get into; why not give them to some of the least of the Lord's little sisters and brothers "inasmuch" as they are now useless to yourself?

We call these suggestions disgusting evidences of the degenerate state of all popular modern conceptions of the Christian charity which the Lord Jesus taught and exemplified. True Christian charity demands far more, even in its least forms, than consignments of second-hand goods fit only to be burned into fertilizers, but which are so often offered to the brother in need, in the name of Christ. Divine Christian charity, or the equity of love, demands that the brethren in Christ shall in honor prefer one another, from the least to the greatest in official service. It demands the common purse for their commonwealth, and a liberal distribution of its contents, "good measure pressed down and running over," according to needs, and coöperative industry in the production of that commonwealth according to ability.

The modern competitive strife, from greed of gain, characterizing the whole nominal Christian church, which creates all the necessity for the repulsive forms of modern charity, is wholly inconsistent with the teachings of the Lord Jesus and the form of social life he instituted. To the young ruler who came to Jesus with the conviction that he was living in obedience to the law of love, and who sought eternal life, the Lord said—to give him a revelation of his inherent sinful selfishness—"Go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and come and follow me." He went away sorrowful, because he knew the intensity of his pride in the control of his great possessions. To surrender them to the Lord, the one genuine poor man in the world, meant the overcoming or subjugation of himself for the blessing of the many. He was so short-sighted, so lacking in the science of the law, that he could not see that in blessing others by coöperation with the Lord in the establishment of equity, a harvest of blessings must be his rich reward in unity with the Lord of the harvest, who institutes equity, and thereby has eternal life.

To Christ alone belongs all. He who was rich, it is written, became poor that through his poverty many might be made rich. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Christ is still with us and still poor; for our God is a continual sacrifice for the establishment of the righteousness of the equitable distribution of the products of his coöperative industry. The true Christ or God Anointed is always the chief representative of the divine science of equity, the gift of the science of law in its universal operations.

The Christ is the store-house to whom all the tithes of all wealth belong. He alone is worthy of being the chief monopolist, the final trust of all men. There is nothing small about the Lord in his giving or demanding. He is in the perfect science of his being, and fears not to distribute all, even his flesh, which he periodically gives for the renewal of the life of the world. Alas! the world is dead to the goodness of His charity; and modern Christianity, the great vivisectionist, demands his perpetual crucifixion between thieves, and gives him daily, gall and vinegar to drink in its name.

Who shall stand in the day when He appeareth to judge the earth by the standard of his righteousness—that love which is the fulfilment of the law? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart. No hands are clean that clutch at the filthy lucre of the competitive system, save for the purpose of its utter destruction. No heart is pure save the heart devoid of the greed of gain, the heart that beats only to force the free distribution of all the goods of life to every corpuscle of the great body of humanity, according as its need shall be. Donations of ancient newspapers and second-hand duds, as well as other wonderfully reprehensible works done in His name, will never furnish an escape from the condemnation of the law of divine love, which demands that our all be placed on the altar of the commonwealth.

Salvation by faith alone is not offered in this day of the Lord—the day of final judgment, in which the science of the law goes forth, and upon which we have certainly entered; for it is going forth to be received or rejected. No one may now escape justice according to works, who ignores this supreme power of the Almighty, his science of the law, the power of God by which he preserves his own being. Its presence ends the day of grace, and indicates the day of judgment when men shall be tried as gold is tried, and refined as silver is refined, and become known as men of God by their fruits, and judged by their works. In this day the Lord says: "Blessed are they that do his commandments."

People who really want the approval which cometh from God only, who do not care to give alms to be seen of men, must turn their backs on the competitive system originating in the greed of gain, and place themselves under the instruction of the divine science of true Christian charity, or the equitable distribution of the products of coöperative industry—the common wealth of the coöperatives. The so called Christian charities, great and small, of the present time are a stench in the nostrils of the Almighty. Carnegie's gifts of millions—to be invested in schools and libraries—are no better deeds when judged by the laws of equity, than the distributions of garbage and old clothes donated in the slums, as God's gifts of food and clothing. All these nominal charities are necessitated solely by man's inhumanity to man, and are but patches on a worn-out garment that is become the filthy rags of a degenerate self-righteousness which rejected the holy Seed of the righteousness of God.

As alleviations of human misery for the moment, these charities serve in the end but to perpetuate and multiply diseased and rotten forms of life. Everyone shrinks from becoming an object of modern charity, who has so far by success in the general competition escaped the lot. How many of our modern ladies bountiful would willingly become objects of a charity like unto their own? How many would cheerfully put the old soiled garments of others on the backs of their daintily clad children, or fill their stomachs with the "cold victuals" of the stranger? All have a horror of such a possibility, yet they persistently uphold all the institutions of religion, learning, and commerce which perpetuate the conditions so abhorrent.

Not too soon may the ax which the Lord laid at the root of the tree of competition, the love of money, be lifted to fell and to destroy it, root and branch. Divine charity, which wields the Flaming Sword of the science of the law, must become the destruction of the money power—the love of evil deeds of disobedience to the law. Divine charity must devote its celestial energy of love to the wisdom of lifting as the standard of righteousness in earth, the science of that Decalogue which the Lord Christ fulfils.

All the divine forces in the universe are now demanded for the regulation of coöperative industries, and the equitable distribution of the products of those industries according to human needs and accredited performance of use. Justice demands that the strong shall bear the infirmities of the weak, for such is the divine use of strength. Oppression of the poor and needy must soon become a thing of the past. The concerted action of the brains of the great trust promoters could find nobler service than the creating of trusts and combines for the greater oppression of the poor; but they reject the converting power—the science of the law.

The great brain of the Almighty, the brain of his Anointed Lord, must be the treasure house of Jehovah. He, the self-emptying, must become the center of genuine charity, of reciprocity, of equitable distribution. The Lord who was rich but for our sakes became poor, is the one now to be enriched with all possessions, for he will share with absolute equity his great inheritance, his well-known and greatly beloved universe. In His name alone can the poor in spirit be blessed, and the meek inherit the earth.

The Sweeping Power of Private Capitalism.

Growing Sentiment Against the Present Order of Things; Significant Movements in the Direction of Public Ownership; Modern Evils cannot Long Prevail.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

IN THE Review of Reviews for May, we learn of the efforts of the London County Council to complete the acquirement, by the public, of all the tramways of the great metropolis, also the furnishing electric lighting and water supply adequate, and of the best quality. Mr. Millin says that the progressive party won by adopting a policy of "municipal socialism, and endeavoring to use the organization of municipal government for the purpose of improving the public services, lowering the public charges, improving the treatment of the men employed, and lightening the public burdens." He says, that "the idea of using the public administration for the purpose of dispensing with the private capitalist is the question of the future, and together with the settlement of the land question, will dominate the future of parties." He suggests that the public must grapple boldly with the question of accumulation and ownership of property.

To begin with, the immense drink traffic should be nationalized or municipalized, so that the enormous profits on $1,200,000,000 invested in fostering the drinking habits of the people might be saved, and the private incentive to increase the trade might be made to cease. All drinking for private profit, Mr. Millin thinks, should be stopped. If it were possible, of course, it would be far better to blot the whole drink curse out of existence; but while the Englishman's insane appetite for liquor, especially beer, must be satisfied, of course it ought to be done without making the few enormously rich out of the hard earnings of the poor. If the people themselves manufactured the vile stuffs they drink, there would not be the temptation to adulterate it with the poisons that are now known to make it a still more deadly potion to the drinker, and government would be making wise provision for the protection of the public health as well as purse.

This same writer thinks that the party which shall seek to apply the same principle to private capitalism in all its forms will sweep all things before it, as the Progressives have in the cases already tried in London. When the masses of people in every country become sensible enough to go and do likewise, the money-changer class that now rules and ruins the world will find it convenient to strike its tents and move on, and oppressed and weary humanity will be able to draw a free breath again after ages of oppression. The same spirit of common sense and common honesty has been getting abroad a little in some of the other cities of Great Britain, and far beyond all, in her remote colony of New Zealand, whose great progress in this line is attracting the attention of the world.

While municipalization of some public utilities is making some progress here, greatly to the shame of our boasted freedom, so completely has the Goddess of liberty allowed her hands to be fettered by mammon and monopoly, that with all our glorying we are falling far in the rear of the procession, and allowing the hoary despotisms to get the start of us in many things. We have distanced them in our reverence for the golden calf; under the deceptive plea of eminent domain, we have suffered monopoly to steal our public highways, and to charge us for passage all that the traffic will bear; we have suffered these monopolies to deny us government savings-banks, parcels express, government telegraph and telephone, and destroy all individual enterprise and independence. They are fast gathering God's green earth into few hands, disinheriting the great mass of his children and making of them wage slaves and tramps.

Despite all present seeming, it is written over the broad arches of heaven that righteousness only is eternal. The treasures of the Incas, piled mountain high, of which Spain robbed them, only sank her ship of state to the bottom where she is now slowly rotting away. Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished. The very grain of the universe is against injustice. Though the Boss Tweeds say, "What are you going to do about it?" they will yet flee from the presence of outraged justice and be compelled to look through prison bars. Though vengeance be long delayed, it will certainly sweep away all the bulwarks of wrong. No weapon has ever been, or can ever be forged by men or devils, that can forever defend the evil or permanently destroy the good. The practical infidelity of the present, both in and out of the church, believes "because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily," that there is no such thing as an eternal truth and its opposite lie, but that one thing is about as good as another, and that truth and falsehood, good and evil, right and wrong, are only relative, and creatures of circumstance; and that if they are not, owing to our necessary limitations, we are not expected to, indeed, cannot know them; such teachings, wherever found, are doctrines of devils, not utterances of truth and righteousness.

Such chinks and crevices as those being opened by the London County Council and New Zealand, that far-off island which in our first knowledge of it was inhabited by cannibals, reveal the cleavage through which may suddenly, or at least rapidly rush the deluge of cosmic forces that shall relegate to the limbo of the hoary despotisms of earth, the nightmare of private capitalism that has for ages darkened the whole heavens of civilized man.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

ANOTHER CASE of religious controversy has developed. The directors of Union Theological Seminary are considering the advance sheets of Prof. George H. Gilbert's book on the "Revelation of Jesus." If they decide that the teachings of this book are heretical, it is said that the author will be forced to resign his chair of New Testament Exegesis. Charges of heresy were brought against him a year ago, and he was given leave of absence to prepare for publication the work which he had projected. The pre-existence of Jesus Christ forms the thesis of the book. Had Christ or had he not a personal pre-existence? From a consideration of three passages relating to this subject in John, Prof. Gilbert concludes that the words of Jesus do not involve any claim to personal pre-existence. "God foresaw the Messiah in history, so his pre-existence was merely ideal." It is plain that this controversy involves the whole doctrine of the trinity. Koreshanity holds that Jesus was one with the Father just as he declared: "I and the Father are one,"—that he was the very fulness of the Godhead bodily, the Father to whom he prayed being his own interior mind, the centralization of the spiritual forces of the universe. This is quite different from the idea that God, who was one person, foresaw the Messiah as an historical character to come, a person distinct from himself. Not three persons and one God, but one God with a triunity of attributes, is the Koreshan concept. If Jesus was God and the latter has existed personally from all eternity, then Jesus had and claimed the same attributes. By what logic is it proved that God is personal? Because man is personal, and no quality or attribute can obtain in effect beyond what is found in cause. What is meant by the pre-existence of Deity? Did God live before he made the world and before he made man? Assuredly not. Koreshanity holds that God and his humanity have existed from all eternity without beginning of years or end of days, by virtue of their reciprocal relationship. This statement implies no contradiction of the preceding proposition, which refers to this relationship as that of cause and effect. God evolves from man as man evolves from God, and neither could exist without the other or ever did maintain a prior and independent life. God is first in quality but not in time. There are two grand movements of progression and retrogression through the aion, and the aions follow each other with no break. Time is only a relative term from an Anglo-Saxon root, to cut, hence time is what is cut off from eternity. From one embodiment to another, a certain portion of the lower humanity to whom Jesus said: "Ye are of your father the devil" (God's involuntary power) progresses toward Divinity through experience in the hells, a term which comprehends all spheres of natural and spiritual life where mortality prevails. At the point of union where God and man conjoin there is a corresponding descent of entities which produces a corresponding retrogression. One of the three passages which Prof. Gilbert cites is this: "What then if ye behold the Son of man ascending where he was before?" This was fulfilled in the translation of Jesus when he converted his body to Holy Spirit and not only baptized the church in his descending degree, but ascended to the Father, meaning that his ascending spirit was conjoined to his own interior. The Lord, the Messiah, disappeared from the natural world and entered into conjunction with God the invisible Father. The same explanation covers the second passage: "Now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world (meaning a cycle or age) was."

The solidarity of the Chinese empire has preserved the old order intact. Corresponding in some manner to the shell of the cosmic egg, it has acted as an environing sphere to bind together and guard all that pertains to the natural sense-life. By the old order is meant the continuance of the lines of natural generation according to which men live, they scarce know why, transmit their life to offspring destined in turn to pass away in a few brief years, then die. China is the great bulwark of family life; ancestor worship is a prominent feature of her religion, and the patriarchal system which renders the father an absolute despot prevails. The exaltation of family life and the degrading position accorded to women are the two main features shown by a study of Chinese customs. Their classics teach that a woman's lot consists of three stages of obedience; first to her father, second to her husband, then if her husband dies, to her son. While other nations have begun to concede some measure of freedom to woman, China has steadily maintained the sanctity of musty traditions. But no wall of conservatism can shut out the divine purpose which extends to every nation as well as to every individual. All will reach the climax of human destiny either in this age or in an age to come. The disintegration of the Chinese empire and the exaltation of woman are both factors in the establishment of the new order of divine propagation, in which woman is redeemed from the curse and the Sons of God are begotten in purity. By an extraordinary series of events, a woman has control of the Chinese empire. False and unscrupulous, she is the typical product of centuries of oppression, and she represents the opposite of the true mother principle appointed to control and guide the destinies of the new kingdom. The divine and enlightened womanhood is constructive in all her functions. The dowager empress as the head of the anti-reform and the anti-foreign party, has been the accelerating cause of the friction that led to the popular uprising. Through the influence of woman, ignorant and wicked, the disintegration of the old order has begun. Through the function of woman exalted and purified by an influx of divine wisdom, the new order will be constructed. Two years ago the reform movement in China, headed by the young emperor, was spreading with rapidity. This in itself involved certain dissolution, but the process has been immensely hastened by the opposition of the conservatives under the leadership of the empress, whose latest move is the appointment of a board of regents to hamper the emperor,—that is, to produce more friction. Now the result of the friction of atoms is to wear them away until they reach the point of transformation to energy. General transformation of what is called the Celestial empire will soon ensue from present chaos. For the first time in history a native woman has appeared on the lecture platform in China, and addressed an audience of five hundred persons. The nation that held her in bondage and the religion that denied her a soul are doomed. The indemnities demanded by the covetous powers will impoverish the Chinese, while the passions aroused by the partition of the empire will create more friction among the Allies. As before stated, increased friction means general acceleration toward the transformation of the world.

The word element means first principle, from the Latin elementum. There are some specific applications of the term that it may be interesting to consider. The bread and the wine of the sacrament are called the elements. They typify the flesh and the blood of Christ. The Lord knew that he was soon to convert his body to spiritual substance, when in the form of pneumatic and psychic energy it would be received by his disciples. He used the bread and the wine of the last Supper as symbols of the love and wisdom of Deity, which are the first principles of the universe, hence elements; so this application of the term by the church is symbolically correct. But love and wisdom like spirit and matter or light and heat are interconvertible. Chemistry distinguishes a certain number of primary substances or elements which it defines as indestructible; they may enter into combination with each other, but they cannot be decomposed. Alchemy on the other hand, as proved by Koreshan Science, contends that there are no indestructible substances, and all the elements of science are interconvertible. A chemical union is not a recombination, but a combustion in which substances are actually destroyed and created; hence the union should be called alchemical. Theosophists have much to say of elementals, by which they mean spirits peculiar to earth, air, fire, and water. These are really spirits in the spiritual world, located in the human brain, and Theosophists see them clairvoyantly. Before death, they lived in the natural world. It is true that persons at different periods in their development possess certain qualities corresponding to the four elements of the ancients. There are no nature spirits evolved out of fire in the Theosophical sense. The salamander was a creature fabled to live in the fire. The word is from a Greek root meaning care, anxiety. Those who are able to pass through the fire unhurt are those who reach the Sonship or the status of Divinity.

The Scientific American has the following note: "It is estimated that at an altitude of over 60 miles, the atmosphere will consist of 95 per cent hydrogen. It is suggested that this may be the source of the occluded hydrogen usually found in meteoric fragments." According to Koreshan Science, meteors are materialized through the meeting of levic and gravic energies within our own atmosphere of oxygen and nitrogen, the depth of which is about 900 miles. Above our atmosphere and resting upon it, is one of pure hydrogen. At the junction of the two atmospheres, combustion takes place, oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen are burned up, while new levic and gravic energies are created that ascend and descend. Free hydrogen is not eliminated in this combustion, and there is none to be found in our atmosphere. If it is found in meteoric fragments, and meteors are materialized in the lower atmosphere, then hydrogen must be created in the same combustion that produces the meteor itself. Scientists think that meteors come shooting down with almost inconceivable velocity from celestial spaces millions of miles away, and that hydrogen is an indestructible element. Now the question is, how can a mass of matter already fully materialized, in traversing a stratum of hydrogen at such velocity, absorb an indestructible element so that large amounts of occluded or absorbed hydrogen are found in meteoric fragments? It may be asked in this connection, how clouds and rainfall are produced if there is no free hydrogen within our atmosphere. Gravitic energies created at the junction of the lower and middle atmospheres descend to meet levitic energies created in the combustion that is constantly taking place between the water surfaces and the air. Clouds are formed and rain is precipitated wherever these specific energies meet. Fogs seem to rise, but close examination shows that every atom of vapor is really falling.

The May Cosmopolitan contains an article by Richard T. Ely, upon the conditions requisite to social progress. Religion is first named among these essentials. "Religion is needed for enlightenment and strength, and without the aid of religion there is little hope for social progress." Last in order and in strong contrast with the opening statement, appear these words: "Regulated competition within its own proper sphere is one of the conditions of social progress." The writer closes with a plea for legislation to protect the interests of the wage-earning population. Is it possible that he perceives no logical gap between the two conditions which he makes coincident? Love to the neighbor with care for all the interests of the neighbor is the bond of religious fellowship, while self-interest is the sole impulse of competition. The two principles are directly opposite, and no social progress can be at the same time religious and competitive. After making religion the first essential toward improvement, the writer goes on to speak of the necessity for legislation to curtail monopoly. When the heart is subjected to the religious impulse, monopoly will die a natural death. It is not an outgrowth of love to God and man which constitutes religion as defined by the Lord himself. Under the competitive impulse monopoly has acquired such tremendous force that no legislation can check its momentum. Nothing but the transformation of the human heart can prevent the centralization of wealth.

The clergy and the laity of Chicago are discussing a pertinent subject of inquiry proposed by the Record-Herald of this city: "Why the gospel is not preached." We take pleasure in informing them that the gospel is preached every Sunday at Koreshan Hall. There are meeting places in Chicago where good tidings of great joy to the world, are proclaimed. The gospel of the new age, the gospel of the science of natural things, of immortal life and the coming of the Lord, is eloquently and patiently set forth in the wickedest city in the world. The reason why the gospel is not preached in the churches of Chicago, is because every vestige of its primitive meaning has been lost in the great declension. Where can a clergyman be found who is able to give a scientific exposition of the phenomena of the ascension or translation of Jesus Christ? Is there one among them who will assert with authority that he knows the law of the resurrection from the dead?

Another confirmation of Koreshan predictions is found in certain figures relative to the food and fuel supply of the world, compiled by one of our local dailies. While British ships still carry the bulk of the world's fuel, the coal-producing area of the United States is many times greater than that of any other country, and during the past two years our production has exceeded that of Great Britain by more than six millions of tons. Ten years ago the English product was in excess of ours by forty millions of tons. Just now the question of an export tax of one shilling a ton in England tends to reduce the coal export still further. It does not require any remarkable foresight to predict now, in view of such statistics, that the United States is destined to furnish fuel and, as other facts show, food for the world. But such predictions appeared in Koreshan literature years ago, before American resources had been discovered or exploited.

Action and reaction are equal. The billion dollar steel trust is to be matched by a Railway Workers' Union to include all the employes of the United States. Labor and capital are centralizing so rapidly that the events of each succeeding day are momentous. The object of combination and centralization is to avoid friction,—at least, that is what both parties declare with apparent sincerity, yet they know that each designs to intimidate the other. The issue will defeat the avowed object; the force of the conflict will be in proportion to the power centralized.

The reason why a prominent clergyman recently preached upon Mrs. Humphrey Ward's "Eleanor," is because he wanted a novel subject.

Koreshanity says that co-operation is the law of the universe. Darwinism says it is competition.

He who knows the destiny of the atom knows also the destiny of man.

Combustion involves life and death, creation and destruction.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED BY KORESH.

The Four Corners of the Earth.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) What and where are the four corners of the earth? In that connection, please explain what is meant in Rev. vii: 1, 2, 3. (2) We are taught that every fire of combustion generates ascending and descending energies, but as from these fires at the center there can be no farther ascent, and from those at the periphery of the shell there can be no farther descent, what becomes of these energies? Do they cease to so generate? Any light on the subject will be appreciated.—J. S. S., Estero, Fla.

(1) The four corners of the earth are the two equinoctial and two solstitial points in the sun's passage on the ecliptic. These are the four cardinal constellations and signs. These, however, are only the correspondences of the anthropistic corners. The four corners of the earth in the spiritual degree, are the four cardinal doctrines of immortality. One corner is the doctrine of the humanity of God in the unity of the Godhead as one personality, through the begetting power of Deity. The second corner is the doctrine of the possibility of the attainment of Sonship through regeneration from the planting of the Lord God in the human race. The third corner is the doctrine of the unity of God and man. The fourth corner is the doctrine of the final supremacy of man over all the works of creation. In this doctrine is involved the creative possibility and power of man as the God-men in whom reside all creative functions, and upon whom recreation and the perpetuity of the universe depend.

In this reply we have merely defined the four corners in two specific domains. In the secular (social) world, the four corners are the four great fundamental principles of organic unity; namely, commerce, agriculture, construction, and mental and physical culture.

There are many other domains, the four corners of which—upon the basis of correspondence, could be defined. Moses, Elias, Jesus, and the Messenger of the Covenant are these four angels; they are now embodied in the one personality. A vision on the Mount would reveal these, as Moses, Elias, and Jesus were made manifest to Peter, James, and John on the Mount. In this sense, the four angels are the four points of the four degrees. A wind is the operation of the Spirit, as in the case of the Holy Spirit 1900 years ago. The four winds are the four qualities of spiritual power, in the descent and operation of the heart of God in man, as it will be manifest in the baptism to come.

(2) When a refined energy reaches the center it can ascend no farther in space, but it can develop a more refined energy which passes into another and finer dimension, until the limit is attained. This is inversely true from the finer to the more gross. Space is defined by its center and its circumference. There are seven primary laminæ in the circumference of the shell. These are metallic. There are also five mineral plates, hence there are twelve qualities of energy—anodic and cathodic, passing inversely from the two extremes of center and circumference. This provides for twelve qualities of energy constantly converging to the astral nucleus, and radiating from the nucleus toward circumferences. This, therefore, provides for as many dimensions in space as there are degrees of alchemico organic energy interchanging from center to circumference. In the anthropostic domain, there are as many corresponding spiritual degrees, for the two domains or spheres are related through the principles of correspondent analogy.

The Order of the Planets.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) From my general reading of Koreshan Astronomy, I derive the inference that the emplacements of the planets we see in the sky is the reverse of their order in the Copernican system; that is, that Mercury revolves farthest from the astral center, and that Neptune's position is nearest the astral center. Am I correct? (2) Do the planets correspond to the metallic rinds of the environ in the order of their occurrence—Neptune to gold, Uranus to silver, Saturn to copper, Jupiter to zinc, Mars to iron, Venus to tin, and Mercury to plumbum? Or have they a totally different correspondence?—E. W., Lakeside, Calif.

The emplacements of the planetary disci in the laminæ are—in their relation to our point of observation on the surface of the earth—the reverse of what they would be under the Copernican system, but their reflections in the heavens are the same; that is, the order is the same as in the Copernican or Newtonian astronomy. It is understood, of course, that the planets are movable disci between the planes of mineral and metallic strata which comprise the cosmic rind of the cell. Mercury is the nearest us in the cosmic rinds, but its reflected focal point is farthest from us, toward the astral nucleus. This order is observed throughout.

(2) The planets do correspond somewhat to the order named in the question; but as a disc passes in its course between two plates or laminæ, it partakes of the two substances between which it moves. The disci are primarily mercurial, but the mercury is an amalgamator and combines the metallic substance of the surfaces over which it passes. They move by peristalsis, through the alternate expansion and contraction of the laminæ. This vermicular action is caused by the alternate caloric and cruosine energy from the actinic solar radiations.

Each planetary disc in its turn reaches a point where there is an opening from one planetary orbit into another. At this opening there is a discharge from the material substance of one disc to the succeeding one. This operation continues until a great cavity is reached, a general dump, so to speak, where there is a perpetual fire in which the entire substance is reduced to energy and returned as such to the astral nucleus, as a convergent alchemical spirit. This place is the material correspondence of the origin of the orthodox hell. The orthodox conception of hell is a perversion of the ancients' true knowledge of this eternal fire.

The seven planetary divisions correspond to the seven divisions of the alimentary canal. These constitute the actual bowels of the earth. In correspondent relation of the cosmic shell to the form as it exists after incubation, these seven disci would constitute a continuous canal as in the human intestine; hence the divisions of the alimentary canal correspond to the seven planets.

Fair Play for China.

Dr. Smyth Defends the Chinese, and Points out Crimes Perpetrated by the Powers.

This is a good time, when the Powers are trying to reach some settlement of the crisis in China, and when the recent crimes against foreigners are fresh in our memories, to remind ourselves of the outrages which China has suffered at our own hands. She has offended deeply, but fairness will acknowledge that she has had much and great provocation. Whatever may be done, the West is not in a position to pursue a policy of revenge, for some of our own acts have been among the chief incitements to the recent outbreak. I wish to tell of some of them here. I was in China when all that I shall mention occurred, and I know something of the impression which they made on the Chinese people. Some of them I witnessed with my own eyes.

Sixteen years ago there was perpetrated within ten miles of Foochow, where I was then living, one of the crimes of the century. The French were engaged in the conquest of Tonquin, a country which had long been a tributary of China. The Chinese government, though opposed to the French proceedings, took no active measures to check them. However just its claim, it did not feel strong enough to fight. A good many Chinese, however, went over the border from the provinces of Kwang Tung and Kwang Hsi to help the Tonquinese, and for this the French demanded an indemnity of $16,000,000. The Chinese government denied responsibility, and refused to pay.

The French then began to threaten, but without success. Two war-ships entered the Min River in July and anchored opposite the arsenal, ten miles below Foochow, and twenty miles from the river's mouth. Others followed at intervals till there was a large fleet present. There were two large forts at the mouth of the river, and two others ten miles farther up, but they never interfered with the freedom of movement of the French. It was not thought that, entering the river in a time of peace, they would do what they afterward did. The Chinese, however, made what preparations they could for defense in case of treachery. They collected a fleet of eleven small cruisers and gun-boats, and a large number of antiquated and useless war-junks.

On Saturday morning, the 23d of August, the largest of the French ships steamed out of the river, but returned in a few hours with another still larger. They passed in without opposition, but no sooner were they safely above the forts and with the rest of the fleet than they opened fire. In less than half an hour ten of the Chinese gun-boats and most of the war-junks were sunk, and over three thousand of their sailors killed. For days one could hardly cross the river between its mouth and the scene of the outrage without seeing some of these victims of French treachery and brutality. No declaration of war preceded this attack. The French ships entered the river while the two countries were still at peace, and the whole outrage was as treacherous as it was cruel. Up at the city the foreigners were protected by British and American gun-boats. The people had provocation enough to rise and attack us. If they had done so, and some of us had been murdered, the Chinese would have been denounced in the usual fashion as savages, and the three thousand of their countrymen who were killed would never have been thought of.

I remember well the anxiety of those trying days. There were no foreigners, except the French, who did not acknowledge the infamy of the whole proceeding. Foreigners of other nationalities were so ashamed of it, and so fearful of the consequences, that they placed on their gateposts notices to show the people that they were not French. The crime is remembered by the Chinese of the Fokien province to this day. It is remembered by Chinese everywhere. The name of France is execrated wherever in the empire it is heard, and all foreigners suffer for it. The people do not know enough to distinguish between one country and another. The brutal treachery of one blackened the reputation of all.

The next outrage occurred at Shanghai, in July of 1898, and was so sudden that though I was in the city only a few days before, I did not hear a word as to the possibility of it. Just outside the French settlement there was a large Ningpo rest-house, at which the bodies of Ningpo people who died at Shanghai were kept till they could be taken back to their native city. To the Chinese the building had all the sacredness which a cemetery has in this country. The French consul wanted to buy it to enlarge the settlement, and claimed that by an old agreement he had a right to do so. The trustees of the rest-house denied that there was such a contract, and refused to sell. The consul, after fruitless attempts to induce them to part with the building, proceeded suddenly to tear down the wall which surrounded it. A great crowd collected and drove off his workmen. But he was determined to carry out his plans at all hazards, and from a French cruiser anchored in the river, he had landed a force of sailors and marines, who fired upon the people and shot twenty of them dead on the street. Of what crime were these sufferers guilty? Of nothing but defending against French spoliation the temporary resting-place of their dead.

From that day to this no reparation or apology has ever been made by the French government for that cruel outrage. The death of a single foreigner costs China dearly. A couple of years ago the murder of two by a mob cost her a great harbor and the control of a province; but the slaughter of twenty Chinese, not by a furious mob, but by order of an official of the French government, was not deemed of sufficient importance to require even a verbal apology. For a lesser crime on the part of Chinese the removal of a viceroy would have been demanded. For that, so far as I know, a consul was not even reprimanded.

The monstrous demands enforced two years ago by Germany for the murder of two missionaries by a mob, are not as widely and fully known as they should be. Everybody knows that Kiao Chiao, the finest harbor on the coast, was seized, but that was not all. The German government forced the Chinese to concede to it entire control of the industrial development of the province. If any company, whether Chinese or foreign, wishes to build a railway or open a mine anywhere in Shantung, permission must be asked from Germany. The authority of China over its own territory is not recognized.

Some of the methods which the Germans employed to terrify the people into submission were high-handed in the extreme. Take the following as an example: Two Germans who were traveling in the interior were attacked and driven back to the coast. The commander at Kiao Chiao resolved to teach the people a lesson, and burned the two offending villages. This made matters worse, for many entirely innocent people were among the sufferers.

It was predicted by many foreigners at the time, that a bitter harvest would come from that crime. And it did come, for nothing is more certain than that the course of Germany in Shantung was the immediate cause of the Boxer uprising.

The manner in which various foreign governments have parceled out China into "spheres of influence" among themselves, should always be included in the catalogue of offenses committed against the Chinese people. A great part of the empire has thus been divided without the slightest regard to the wishes of its government. Last year Russia and England made such division a matter of treaty negotiation between themselves. It was agreed and declared that Manchuria should be the "sphere of influence" of the former, and the Yang-tse valley the sphere of the latter. In the foreign press the great central region, the richest part of the country, is spoken of as if England had some real claim to it, and the great Southern provinces of Kwang Tung, Kwang Hsi, and Yunnan are written of as if they were in some way mortgaged to most conspicuous of all; the result, instead of peace, was the Boxer fury.

What is needed now is not punitive expeditions, oppressive indemnities, and wholesale slaughter. These methods involve innocent and guilty alike in a common ruin. We have had too much share ourselves in creating the past to resort to such brutalities as these. What we want is security for the future, and, to get that, we must put aside all thoughts of violence. The guilty should be punished if they can be caught, but the whole empire should not be kept in confusion till they are caught. There should be indemnities, but not so heavy as to crush the myriads of people, the vast majority of the Chinese who have had no part or lot in the uprising. Let the indemnity be sufficient to make good actual loss, that will be heavy enough to be borne. In a word, healing is far more in place than retaliation. There should be justice, but it should be tempered with a large quantity of mercy. Righteousness and consideration will do more to secure our safety in the future than heavy indemnities, the razing of forts, the prohibition of the import of arms, or any other measures which would remind the Chinese people perpetually of the injustice of foreigners and their own intolerable humiliation.—REV. GEO. B. SMYTH, in Leatie's Weekly.

Manual Training in Schools.

Dr. Hirsch's Plan of New Education in Contrast with Present Cramming Methods.

To most people who are familiar with the tendency of our youth to leave the public schools before the upper grammar grades are reached, the introduction of manual training is easily justified on the ground that it stimulates the interest of pupils in school work and increases the percentage of those who remain through the full course of study. The utilitarians are also satisfied with it because the training it gives is calculated to enable men and women to wage more successfully the battle of life, teaching them dexterity in the use of their hands, and imparting a wider and more practical knowledge of the laws of physics and the principles of mechanics.

Before his congregation, Dr. Emil G. Hirsch made a plea for manual training in the schools, based upon higher grounds than these. He declared that manual training, as understood by the new education, has its credentials from a higher court than that of the utilities. It holds a vital place in the reliance of the new education, because it promises to make fuller men and women of the young under its influences. It imparts a greater measure of manhood, and therefore means greater energy of moral character.

Dr. Hirsch maintains that it is the aim of manual training to co-ordinate these three factors: The intellect, the emotions,

Lecture by Koresh.

The Founder of Koreshanity will deliver a Lecture on Koreshan Universology, Sunday, 3:30 p. m., May 12, 1901, at Koreshan Hall, 4th floor, 315-19 Englewood ave., Chicago.

A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in advanced thought.

France. Japan also has her sphere in the province of Fokien, and Italy wanted hers in the province of Chekiang. There is hardly a place on the whole east coast of China which is not said to be in the sphere of some Power or other except the one which owns it.

For the last two years China has been subjected to a series of insults, any one of which would have driven a Western country to war. She was justified in supposing that the Powers meditated partition, she was criminal only in the methods which she employed to prevent it. There is one lesson pertinent to the present negotiations which these outrages by foreign countries should teach us. They failed in accomplishing their purpose because they were unjust and cruelly severe. It has been a cardinal doctrine with many in the West that the East respected nothing but fear, and would yield to nothing but violence. It was held, therefore, that in dealing with Orientals the object should be, by sheer severity to terrify, to crush them into submission. This method has failed in China. Germany tried it with a vengeance, and her failure has been the

and the executive or will power. There must be harmonious development of self in order to reach the highest moral potentiality. The more power men command, the more may be asked of them. It is the strongest argument in favor of manual training, that it enables a boy to "discover" himself. Says Dr. Hirsch:

It is essential that every component of the human family be given the chance to discover himself, to find out for what work he is fitted. Manual training is explorative. It helps the young to develop not merely one faculty but three. Hitherto one gifted for constructive work with his hand may never have found out that this was his destiny, because the school made only appeal to his head. Give the boy a chance to try his abilities and talents at the bench and the anvil. Many a discoverer may have been permitted to miss his divine mission because the school did not open his eyes to the truth for another post he was better dowered than that of clerk.

The utilitarian argument in favor of manual training has been widely discussed. That it tends to largely increase the percentage of boys who remain in school through the entire course of study is also generally conceded by educators. But the argument of moral potentiality, so ably advanced by Dr. Hirsch, is, after all, the strongest defense of manual training. That which employs the law of creative work to develop harmoniously the mental and moral powers of a child, certainly has the highest value in fitting it for citizenship and for the obligations of life.—Record-Herald, Chicago.

List of Human Wonders.

It Requires but a Glance to Prove that Man is a Marvel, Fearfully and Wonderfully Made.

Wonders at home, by familiarity, cease to excite astonishment; but thence it happens that many know but little about the "house we live in"—the human body. We look upon a house from the outside, just as a whole, or unit, never thinking of the many rooms, the curious passages, and the ingenious internal arrangements of the house, or of the wonderful structure of man, the harmony and adaptations of all his parts.

In the human skeleton, about the time of maturity, are 165 bones. The muscles are about 500 in number. The length of the alimentary canal is about 32 feet. The amount of blood in an adult averages 30 pounds, or fully one fifth of the entire weight.

The heart is six inches in length and four inches in diameter, and beats seventy times per minute, 4,200 times per hour, 100,800 per day, 36,772,000 times per year, 2,564,440,000 in three score and ten; at each beat two and a half ounces of blood are thrown out of it, one hundred and seventy-five ounces per minute, six hundred and fifty-six pounds per hour, seven and three-fourths tons per day. All the blood in the body passes through the heart in three minutes. This little organ by its ceaseless industry, in the allotted span the Psalmist gave to man, lifts the enormous weight of 270,700,200 tons.

The lungs will contain about one gallon of air, at their usual degree of inflation. We breathe on an average, 1,200 times per hour, inhale 600 gallons of air, or 24,000 gallons per day. The aggregate surface of air cells of the lungs exceeds 20,000 square inches, an area very nearly equal to the floor of a room twelve feet square.

The average weight of the brain of an adult male is three pounds and eight ounces; of a female, two pounds and four ounces. The nerves are all connected with it, directly or by the spinal marrow. These nerves, together with their branches and minute ramifications, probably exceed ten millions in number, forming a "body-guard" outnumbering by far the greatest army ever marshaled.

The skin is composed of three layers, and varies from one fourth to one eighth of an inch in thickness. Its average area in an adult is estimated to be 2,000 square inches. The atmospheric pressure being about fourteen pounds to the square inch, a person of medium size is subject to a pressure of 40,000 pounds.

Each square inch of skin contains about 3,500 sweating tubes, or perspiratory pores, each of which may be likened to a little drain tile, one fourth of an inch long, making an aggregate length of the entire surface of the body of 201,166 feet, or a tile ditch, for draining the body, almost forty miles long.—Cincinnati Journal.

Religious Statistics for 1900.

Mere Estimates of Growth of Religious Bodies; Gains of a Decade Hide Failures of Past few Years.

"The Annual Statistics of Religious Bodies in the United States," published by The Independent in the issue of Jan. 3d, furnishes an interesting and fertile field of study. We are aware that the multitude of sources from which the information must be gained, the carelessness and indifference of many of those who furnish the figures, and inevitable overlapping and confusion in many of the items, conspire to make such tables far from exact. The compiler has been so much impressed with this fact that he has not thought it worth while to give the totals of his tables. We are sure, however, they will be interesting, even if they are only approximate. The columns as to membership give a total of 27,566,787 belonging to all religious bodies in the United States. In these are included 211,627 Jews, 65,000 Greek Catholics, 345,000 Mormons, 71,000 Unitarians, 48,426 Universalists, 1,000,000 christian scientists, [We have seen this estimate corrected for 100,000.—EDITOR FLAMING SWORD], 8,500 Armenians, 26,500 Independent Catholics, and 8,610,226 Roman Catholics, while 17,926,033 are given as members of what are known as evangelical churches.

Of the Protestant bodies, the Methodists of thirteen varieties lead in numbers, with 5,846,132 members, and the Baptists, which the compiler divides into seven bodies, come next with 4,579,394 members. The Lutherans, in five divisions, have 1,665,878, and the Presbyterians of twelve shades, 1,575,698.

Of the separately organized bodies, the Baptists stand first with 4,446,833 members; the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, reports 2,716,437; the Methodist Episcopal, South, 1,457,864; the Presbyterians, North, 973,433; the Disciples of Christ, 1,149,982; the Protestant Episcopalians, 716,431; and the Congregationalists, 629,874.

In percentage of growth, the Lutherans lead with three and one half per cent gain for the ten years, the Episcopalians follow with three and nine twentieths per cent increase, and the Disciples with three and one fifth per cent. The larger denominations come close together, and have from two and three twentieths to two and eleven twentieths per cent increase. This it should be remembered is for ten years, making the annual gain between two and three tenths of one per cent. The most astonishing increase is that of the christian scientists, who report a membership of 1,000,000 [See Editor's remarks above]—a gain of 991,000 since 1890, of which 920,000 is reported as the gain for the single year of 1900.—Watchman.

No Chance for Investments.

A man whose father was one of the great operators of Wall street, who controlled so many millions that he was able to wreck or make great business enterprises, said to the writer recently at a dinner, that all investment was becoming doubtful; he did not know where to put a dollar. All classes of enterprises were so largely at the disposal of manipulation in the street, one day depressed far below par and the next raised far above, always with a like purpose, the one of serving individual interests, that investment in securities quoted on the street had become a lottery. It was in the power of four or five men, by manipulation of the stock or by starting a parallel enterprise, or by any other of the numerous methods so well known, to make or break literally anything or anybody. Here were the methods of the father being applied to the son's disadvantage. Greater whales had appeared in the seas, which were capable of swallowing the sharks; the sharks were in jeopardy.

No well-informed man in the business world today, but believes that with two or three hundred millions at his disposal, a brain as able as some of those now in active careers may in turn attack and crush one leading business interest after another, until even the millionaires may be swept from the field and practically all the wealth of the country concentrated in one great corporation.—Social Democratic Herald.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

The Cosmopolitan.—The May number contains two articles that will be widely read by those interested in social questions. Mr. Charles S. Gleed considers the Steel Trust and Its Makers, taking an optimistic view of the great combination. Richard T. Ely writes upon Social Progress. Thomas Mitchell Pierce furnishes some attractive full-page illustrations for Lady Jeune's pleasant article on The Art of Entertaining. Three of Mr. Pierce's designs are quite in the style of Mr. Gibson's work. Allen Sangree describes General De Wet and His Campaign. The initial article by Waldon Fawcett treats of the Envoys at Washington. This number is excellent.

Review of Reviews.—The frontispiece is a portrait of Edward Everett Hale in his eightieth year. The close of Dr. Hale's long pastorate from which he has just retired, renders the character sketch of his career by George P. Morris very timely. Dr. Hale is called the "youngest-spirited old man today in Boston." Russia's Readiness for War, by Charles Johnston, and the Navy of Japan, by Samuel E. Moffett are packed with information. Funston: A Kansas Product, gives affectionate reminiscences of Funston's student work at the University of Kansas by his friend and teacher, James H. Canfield. All the departments are full of interest this month. The Review of Reviews gives us the cream of the leading magazines.

Cram's Magazine.—The April number of this Monthly Journal of History, Geography, and Topics of the Day, has a notable article on the Abuse of Drugs in America, by Dr. Eugene Murray-Aaron, which we recommend as food for reflection. Our Foreign Trade and Its Possibilities, by Cyrus E. Allen, A. M., shows encouraging figures relative to the growth of our exports. The Nation's Tribute to John A. Logan, with a cut of the new statue, forms a pleasing contribution from the editor.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland floss, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

Bureau of Equitable Commerce, of the Koreshan Unity.

Under the Koreshan System of Co-operation, the cost of production is reduced to the minimum; and we offer to our friends more goods and more work for a given sum of money than can be obtained in the competitive world. We have established four new departments to our work. Orders promptly filled by mail or express. Correspondence and patronage solicited.

Our High-Grade, Hand-Finished Razor Strops.

A good strop is indispensable to one that uses a razor. A good razor is of little use unless it has a fine edge, and that cannot be obtained in any other way than with a good strop and a knowledge of how to use the same and keep it in condition. A strop in poor shape means a razor in poor condition. Full directions with every strop.

We manufacture our celebrated High-grade Razor Strops, the best strops manufactured. If you shave, you need one; you would be delighted with one of these. The prices are low considering the superior quality of the goods and workmanship.

Single, horse-hide, 50c. Double shell and canvas, several grades from 75c to $1.25. Extra fine material and finish, 1.50. Packed in neat box. Also strops at 10c, 25c, and 40c.—send 8c. for postage on orders less than 50c. Mail orders a specialty.

Improved alarm clock, rotary hammer, $1.00; postpaid. Watch repairing a specialty. Watches repaired and returned in good condition, by mail, for 1.00. Extra charge only in case of serious breakage. All work guaranteed.

Watch for "our prices" in comparison with the regular prices on articles.

A good family Medical Battery is very useful. We will send you a first-class Battery, consisting of 1 dry battery; 1 sponge; 1 foot-plate; and electrodes, for only $7.50. Price, by others, $10.00.

Musical Department.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell: we inhabit the Earth. KORESHIAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes God in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of univocal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Zodiacal Signs and Dispensational Progress.

Movement of the Sign on the Dial of the Heavens; Division of Time into Dispensations; Scientific Chronology and the Coming of the Messiah.

SINCE THE BEGINNING of the Christian dispensation the world has been looking for the coming of the Son of man. In whatsoever manner the primitive Christians looked for the Lord's coming, it is obvious that the modern conceptions of the Christ's manifestation are conflicting and vague.

Not until recent years has the conception obtained, of regularity in eras or dispensations; and even now comparatively few people in the "Christian church" know anything of the progress of time cycles as marking the endings and beginnings of definite and uniform periods of progress, as indicated by the movement of the sign on the ecliptic, and corresponding events in the cycles of human development.

One of the most specific and obvious of time-markings in the alchemico-organic cosmos, is the movement of the sign on the ecliptic. By this, we mean the sign Aries' moving through the twelve Zodiacal constellations. In the alchemico-organic heavens there are twelve divisions of stars comprising the Zodiacal belt. On the earth, corresponding to these, there are twelve stationary divisions. The twelve divisions of stars are the twelve constellations; the twelve divisions on the earth are the twelve corresponding signs. The sign is the first division. This is at the point on the equator where the sun crosses the line at the vernal equinox, and is called Aries. The change of the relation of the stellar groups to the stationary divisions on the earth is the movement of the sign, and especially the change of the relation of these groups to the point Aries on the equator.

At the time when the sun crosses the line, that is, when he is vertical to the equator, some specific point on the ecliptic is perpendicular with the position of the sun and the terrestrial equator. In one year from that time, when the sun is crossing the line, that point on the ecliptic has moved 50 seconds of a degree. This is called the movement of the sign. It is not only the change of the ecliptic in its relation to the equator on the earth, but it is a change of the sun as related to that point on the ecliptic. This movement is only known by the change of the stars in the constellations in their relation to the sun and the equator, or any specifically marked point on the earth along the sun's yearly course through the Zodiacal belt.

In order to obtain a comprehensive understanding of this great astronomical time-piece, we must possess not only a knowledge of the sun's movement, but the movements of the moon and planets on the ecliptic. A comprehension of this complicated clock-work of the Almighty enables us to know absolutely the dispensational divisions as they pertain to the affairs of individuals, nations, and eras. In order to acquire a comprehensive knowledge of the relation of these movements to human events, a deeper insight into astrological principles than has been manifest in modern prophetic mentality is obviously essential.

Professor Totten, who is a representative chronologist, having—as he believes—attained a more thorough conception of chronological principles and data than any other man, has egregiously failed to apply his principles to individual and national affairs. He, with many others who are thinking along the lines in which he is specially interested, predicted the evacuation of Jerusalem by the unholy Turk at a particular time marked by his system of chronology. We do not dispute his claims to an accurate chronological method, but we do dispute the accuracy of his application of the system to human events and progress.

The natural Jew as he exists today, scattered throughout almost every nation under the sun, does not figure in that final restoration to be consummated in the purpose of God in what has been termed the “coming of the Son of man.” The Jews rejected the Holy Spirit at the beginning of the dispensation, and cannot, therefore, become the fruit of regeneration at the closing up—the consummation, of the era. The Son of man will not come to the Jews as a people. Some Jews did receive the Holy Spirit, and through Jewish lines—that is, through their Jewish posterity—passed into a state of declension, and at the end of the age will be receptive to the truth of the resurrection. But no people of any race that rejected the Holy Spirit as it was poured out and shed upon the church 1900 years ago, can by any possibility come into the fruition of the Sons of God at this coming harvest.

The return of the Jews to Jerusalem for the purpose of meeting the Son of God in the natural air, is a proposition that has no foundation whatsoever in the laws of regeneration, nor does it come within the prophetic declaration of either the Jewish or Christian school. The House of Judah was saved in the Lord and his church. The ten tribes, the House of Ephraim, were carried away, absorbed by intermarriage, and lost their identity as Israelites; and with their absorption of the Lord and his church, the twelve tribes became, so far as their outward manifestation is concerned, the Gentile world. The Germanic family (this includes the Latin races) is the product of the intermarriage of the ten tribes with Media, Persia, and Assyria.

The ten tribes were lost because they obliterated their identity as had been predicted of them. The twelve tribes will not be returned to the old obsolete Jerusalem, nor is there anything in the Bible that would even hint at such a result. The twelve tribes are gathered as John saw them in the heavens, in the spiritual heavens, in the New Jerusalem, to descend into the natural world, wheresoever the Messenger of the Covenant provides for the establishment of the city of God. Concerning this Messenger, the Scriptures are definite and unambiguous. The name of this Messenger is CYRUS, and he carries all the other credentials designated, as the indices of his authority.

The identical Joseph, with his new name and incarnated humanity, to whom the promises were made, will have attained perfection through his metempsychosis, and will stand forth as the representative of the House of Ephraim, not in the old world, but in the new. God has so ordained, and the materialistic Adventists will not change the purpose and power of the Most High to accomplish what he will.

Waning Vitality of the Modern Man.

Cause of Multiplying Ills Looked for in Bacteria Rather than in Sensual Wastes of Life; Abuses of Functions; the Cure for Degeneracy.

THE MICROBE CRAZE is in a fair way to make lunatics of a mass of people who, under ordinary circumstances, might be regarded level-headed. It is against the law now, for any person to expectorate on the streets of Chicago. Wholesome legislation is a good thing; but the function can be overwrought, and sometimes laws can be enacted that cannot be executed; in such cases the result is overmuch waste of energy. The question of human vitality and longevity is of the greatest importance, and is one which should demand the first and highest consideration; but the cause of pathological conditions lies deeper than in the mucous membrane of the human lungs.

The organs of the human body and their functions are so constructed that they may not only perform the ordinary physiological uses of incrementation and excrementation, but they may also, when in a state of vital activity, resist the encroachments of exotic elements. Sound and healthy lungs may be, and often-times are exposed to the introduction—through the process of respiration—of foul and irritating substances with which the atmosphere is surcharged. They secrete a large amount of mucus, which always resists foreign substances, and is the means of their elimination. Expectoration is one of the healthful processes of organic function, and no function of the organism is more important.

We can administer better service to the population of Chicago and in our legislative halls, than the idiotic promulgation of absurd laws. Let the people once comprehend the fact that the violation of physiological principles and laws has more to do with the waning vitality and longevity of the race than sputa on the streets of any city, and they will become a law unto themselves in this regard, and put to shame the puerile attempts to change the pathological character of a morbid and degenerate race by superficial and ridiculous legislation.

The humanity of this age has become a rotten and sensual mass, so corrupt that a mere hint at its degeneracy is enough to consign one to everlasting ignominy. The sex function on the normal plane is for the purpose of propagation and the generation of substantial and esoteric pabulum. Both the male and female sexes generate ultimate interior products of the tree of human life. These products may be utilized for either one of the two purposes; namely, the reabsorption of the substance normally produced on this tree, or its transmission for the purposes of propagation. Both of these uses are normally legitimate. The propagative sex function is for no other purpose than the propagation of the species. A false conception of the uses of cohabitation and a careless consideration of this fundamental use of a sacred function, have led the race into a specious belief and a corresponding abnormal cultivation of the sex desire.

The propagative function of the reproductive organs is not their most essential function. The function of the perpetuity of life, that upon which eternal life depends, is exclusively the conservative power of man's sex nature. The waste of sex energy through the abnormal cultivation of sensual desire, depletes the vital reservoirs of the soul, and supplies the flame of lust which constitutes the hell fire and damnation of the human race. The mere external control of the function in question is not enough to give to the physiological structure the power of conservation and vital potency. There is deep within the soul of man a potential religious font,—the reservoir of the elixir of life; it is the vortex of solar virtue, and the essential resource of being. Directly related to this fountain and resource of eternal perpetuity, are the fibers of either its supply or exhaustion. There can be no remedy for those wastes of the body induced through sensuality, aside from a correct determination of the religious center and its normal restoration to a conjunction with the central and divine ego, in which reside the immaculate virtues.

Two things are primarily essential to a restoration of the human family to its normal state of resistance and recuperation. These are, first, a conservation of the sex energies of both male and female; second, their utilization through the conserved power of centralization. It is for this reason that the Koreshan Unity has its existence. Nothing short of the ideal purity of the Christian conception of the Lord's character, wrought out in the lives of his followers, can bring to the world its final restoration. That man who pretends to follow the Lord and yet who believes and teaches that it is right to indulge in the pleasures of sensuality, has very little conception of the principles of immortal life, or of the character of arch-natural possibility.

The Christ of 1900 years ago is the recognized ideal and acknowledged pattern of the highest human perfection; and yet, a man disgraces himself in the eyes of modern civilization who dares to fulfil, or claim to fulfil, in his own life the principles which the Lord, both by precept and example, demonstrated to be essential to divine attainment. Microbes will not hurt any man who conserves his vital forces through the highest purification of his desires.

The Central Mystery of Godliness.

The Humanity of Deity was the Most Pronounced and Emphatic Declaration of Jesus the Christ; the Supremacy of Mind and the Dominion of Man.

EVERY PERSON in the world has some phase of theology. Behind every conception, though it may be atheistic, there is an acknowledgment of some supreme power which the world universally confesses to be incomprehensible and mysterious. The theology of primitive Christianity contains a revelation of the central mystery of Godliness; and the more that revelation is subjected to the tests of scientific criticism, the more conspicuously it stands forth as the pronounced and emphatic declaration of the Deistic fiat and dictum.

Every law of nature and super-nature, so far as that law is ascertained and its principles known, becomes subject to the mind of man. When a law is even partially understood it may be harnessed by man's ingenuity and for his purposes, and compelled to subserve his will. This would indicate at least that the human mind, now generally in its infancy, has the tendency to amplify until every law in the universe shall become known, and therefore made subject to the human will. This logical deduction is in exact accord with the Biblical statement that the Lord God placed the man whom he had created above all the works that he, the Lord, had made. This is a most reasonable conclusion.

Mind is the supreme thing in the universe; and it does not require a great amount of reasoning to be made conscious of the fact that there can be no mind outside of brains, and thence that when the mind of Deity is revealed, it places that mind within the human organism. It is thus that the theology of primitive Christianity pronounced the great and fundamental truth of immortality and eternal life, in the declaration of the presence of the SON OF GOD.

The mentality of the human race converges toward two antithetical poles or extremes of pneumatic and psychic congeries. These polar extremities are not outside of human existence, but within the sphere of the great intellectual and affectional forces of human mentality. One of these polar extremities is the point and acme of the truth and good of the human race, while the other is the point of fallacy and evil. Each of these polarizations is essential to the existence of the other. One is God, the other is the devil. They both exist today; they have existed in and through the eternal past, and will exist through the eternal future. As mentality cannot exist independently of brains in the human organism, it follows that the human organism is from everlasting to everlasting. The pivotal point of truth and good of the entire humanity constitutes the throne and altar of the entire aggregated consciousness of the human race. This invisible point and congeries of mentality, the center of love and wisdom, must and do depend upon the perpetual existence of organic life in its material and tangible existence.

The reciprocal relation of God and man is of such a character that neither could exist without the other; the invisible depends upon, and is related to the visible and tangible. In the beginning of the Christian era, this invisible point came so near its external manifestation that it was clothed upon with its own personal and material garb as the Son of God. God, the Father-Mother, inhabited the personal Son. It was thus that the personality and individuality of Jehovah were brought to the light and revealed to that little people whom God had prepared through many reëmbodiments, to accept the revelation of the mystery of Godliness. The invisible Godhood could not perpetuate his being eternally upon the throne and altar of his glory, except by virtue of the fact that a Son should be raised up from and out of the human race, to sit on that throne.

The Lord—the Son of God and heir to the eternal throne of God—was absorbed, entering into an absolute unity with the Godhead. The Lord Jesus was not a personality distinct from the Father; he was absorbed, and took upon himself the consciousness of the Father, so that they were and are indissolubly one in individuality, one in consciousness, one in glory, and veritably Man.

Methods and Motives of Modern Research.

Effort of Modern Teachers to Adapt their Theories to Suit Popular Taste; Difference Between this Method and the Course Pursued by Jesus the Messiah.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

THE AMERICAN BRANCH of the Society for Psychological Research, Boston, concludes that the scientific labors of the psychologists and the moral exhortations of the religious organizations are likely to be, in some degree at least, ineffectual so long as they are conducted in ignorance, and so in disregard of what men really want. In view of this conviction the body has circulated, accompanied with certain explanations, a set of questions the answers to which are intended to determine the consensus of opinion concerning the desirability of a future existence. Personally, we have not seen these circulars. We rely upon quotations in the review by a prominent newspaper, to reproduce this touch of reasoning, and also the first and fourth questions, which read thus: (1) "Would you prefer to live after death, or not?" (4) "Do you now feel the question of a future life to be of urgent importance to your mental comfort?"

It is but fair to the American branch of the Society for Psychological Research to state in the outset, that in so far as the intent was revealed to us, there was not the shadow of a lurking insinuation that the established universal procedure would suffer intermeddling, even should said ballot disfavor future existence. The sole expressed motive is to adjust the teachings of the American branch of the Society for Psychological Research to the majority of sentiment, be it pro or con; for, says the society, it is only when the facts (which, in other words, mean the sentiments and desires of men) have been ascertained that they can be argued from for the various purposes of the scientist, the philosopher, and the theologian.

Koreshanity regards the great Philosopher of nineteen hundred years ago as the unique Example for the guidance of men. Koreshans turn from time-servers—from all exponents of modern science—to Him, the continent of God's eternal truths; they turn from a manner of dissemination as false as the character of the teaching disseminated, to the straightforward methods of the Son of the living God they conform! He needed not to know what the people wanted; he gave the world what it needed, and we appreciate an irreconcilable abyss between the words: "Would you prefer to live after death or not?" and his answer, "Keep the commandments," when questioned concerning the path to eternal life.

The teachers of the world are half-hearted and wholly ignorant. They speak not as those having authority. Pulpit, press, and the train of lesser lights pander to the tendencies of men. The Christ, understanding the tendencies of the fallen race, unswervingly presented the doctrines of righteousness, and in order to nail them to the moral and religious escutcheons of men, crossed himself with the sensual race; he became the truth in them, the spiritual life in them. Money, the root of all evil, which tainted Him not, buys and sells the entirety of our accepted teachers. Such is the legitimate fruit of the time.

The record of such fruit is a clause in the manuscript of destiny, and it will provoke this inquiry: "If such be destiny, why cry out upon its victims?" Our cry is made upon the same principle that one shouts in the ear of the full-timed sleep. One is destined to sleep; one is destined to waken. It is the period of the world's awakening. Arouse! ye sleepers. Consider the animus of the guessers; critically inspect the quality of the guess-work. Ye guessers, though it be destiny to guess, take heed of the words: "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" Science is knowledge; it is not guess-work. Like unto God it is the same yesterday, today, and forever.

The Tree of Life requires the entire Mazzarothic cycle of twelve months or dispensations for the development of its supreme and ultimate harvest. At the close of each of the twelve divisions of this grand year, the Tree yields a fruit in consonance with the genus of the time. Each issue bears a specific relationship to all the preceding and the following, but the sum of the eleven fruitages pivots upon the twelfth. The people whom Noah and Moses instructed and exalted each one degree toward immortal life, and the surrounding people who desired not and received not of the exaltation, composed the conditions with which the ministry of these Messengers of the Most High were opposed.

If the fruit of no two dispensations is identical, neither are the attending conditions, though fruit and conditions constitute a chain whose links are vitally related and sustain a correspondential resemblance the result of principles in process of consecutive evolution. Any exact phase returns but once in 24,000 years, when returns the corresponding epoch in the following grand cycle. Hence, we see that the fallacies culminating with the close of the Noatic age did not appear in the Jewish age as an exact copy. Noah met and denounced the fallacies of his time, while Moses dealt with a qualified expression of the same character during his visible career.

The denunciations of the Lord Jesus upon the traditions of the Jews, and the flight of the money-changers before the small cords wielded single-handed, are facts of history knocking at the door of present reality. "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. * * * Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind; and if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

We stand at the foot of the Christian dispensation. The genuine Christ teaching is dead in the hearts of men. Modern Christianity has gone to seed in theosophy, christian science, and modern spiritism; and the men who essay to teach these fallacies, in deference to their god—money, must first feel the pulse of the people! And such are the conditions to be met and overcome by God's Messenger to the close of his grand year.

Heaven Defined and Located.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

IN ITS DERIVATION the word heaven means heaved up, elevated. It is not an elevated physical earth, but an exalted human earth—a humanity lifted up out of the lower, imperfect, sinful one. Its inhabitants will be men in earth, not spirits or ghosts. They will live—not die and become food for worms. When they go from earth they will go the new and living way, not the old dead way which all men since Jesus have gone. The seed and archetype of this higher kind of humanity, the ripened fruit of the Jewish tree of lives, came in the earth in fulfilment of his cycle of being, in the end of the Jewish and in the beginning of the Christian age. He was the product of the Jewish people, the ripened fruit of that age. When He was gathered the tree died.

It is only ripened fruit that can propagate its kind. Jesus was the only ripe fruit of his kind that has come in the earth during what is commonly called the historic period. Being Seed, "not seeds as of many, but thy seed, which is Christ," He came to be planted in his own earth—the human will. In the form of Holy Ghost, the Comforter, a real, life-giving substance that came from the going away of Jesus' holy (whole, perfect) body to spirit—energy, force, it entered those who desired it as the seed of a new life that would, in the maturity of its fruit, in its harvest in the end of that age, produce a multiplied crop—beings who would have life like that of the Seed sown.

Substance exists in two forms—matter and spirit. These are constantly changing places, or there could be no life. Of the food eaten yesterday or the day before, a part—by means of the processes of the laboratory of the physical system, has been changed from the form of matter to that of energy or spirit, on the physical plane; and from that condition it has been changed back to other multitudinous forms and qualities of matter that make up the parts of the physical structure. A portion has been converted to energy, and that again has been changed to the vast number of correlated energies which constitute the multiplex activities of the mind and body.

When the multiplied harvest of that living, life-giving Seed comes (and we are on the eve of that coming), there will come "new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," of which there is little in earth at present. As there is a physical earth and above it physical heavens, so there is in man an earth, and above it are heavens—his spirit and soul, or intellect and will. The Seed of this coming kingdom of heaven, during his life in earth,—before he was finally sown in, and crossed with humanity by his translation, said of himself: "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." When he said: "I am in the Father and the Father in me," he also said, in effect, "I am in heaven and heaven is in me."

What is heaven, then? It is a state or quality of spirit that is in a man or men. No man has lived in earth since the time of the Lord Jesus, who showed by what he did that he had in him the same quality of spirit that dwelt in Jesus and prompted all his acts. When the time comes, and come it will, because it will be the harvest of literal Seed sown in literal and actual earth, the kingdom of heaven will come in earth, and will bear rule in it. A kingdom will be born in a day, as the prophet Isaiah declares. It will then appear that heaven is a real condition in earth, controlling the outward physical conditions of all men, having its habitat in the men who, because of the Seed planted in them in the beginning of the age, have attained to the heavenly quality of spirit which was in the Seed—Jesus Christ. They will thus attain to the kingdom of which the Lord assured Pilate he (Jesus) was born king, but which was not of that world—age. Heaven is in man; not in the sinful man of the present, but in the perfect God-Man; each man in his own time and order—some perhaps many ages hence—will, through the resurrection, which is reincarnation, reach heaven by the one living way.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE ADHERENTS of every cult claim that Jesus Christ was the originator of their own line of thought. The anarchists, socialists, spiritualists, and others quote His teachings to show that he was one with them, but they support their claims by referring to his words upon particular occasions. They do not consider His life, character, and doctrine taken together as a whole. "Jesus was the great anarchist," someone says confidently, but he forgets that Jesus said: "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's," thereby recognizing the principle of subservience to the dominant power during the separation of church and state, or the fact that destruction of order and authority avails nothing unless supplemented by the science of construction. No anarchist has presented a plan of government that promises to fulfil the visions of peace and order seen by the rapt eyes of the Hebrew bards. Jesus did not incite the Jewish people nor his own disciples to violence and insurrection. He said that his kingdom was not of this world, meaning that the time would not come to set up the kingdom of righteousness in earth until the end of the age. His mission toward the church was spiritual. He did not give the science of natural things, but he was perfectly acquainted with philosophic principles. For example, Jesus summarized the Decalogue in the philosophic degree as comprising love to God and man, but he did not formulate its application to immortal life. He uttered a great philosophic truth when he said: "It must needs be that offenses come, but woe unto him by whom the offense cometh." A rational apprehension of the law of necessity brings the mind into a state of rest. To see present evils clearly without understanding why they exist, occasions unhappiness and perplexity with a loss of mental balance. Unrest either physical or mental is always lack of equilibrium. Here, for instance, are certain statistics compiled by the sociological department of the Chicago University, which the Social Democratic Herald sets before its readers: It is a study of work and wages in Chicago sweat shops, where women were found toiling ten hours a day, six days in the week, at the rate of forty cents a week, or twenty-one dollars a year. Such figures are calculated to induce the belief that there is nothing but gravic force in the universe, that evil is stronger than good, and waste exceeds supply. This is the attitude of the pessimist, but it is not the Koreshan attitude toward the world. The Koreshan state may be defined as that of balance occasioned by a full recognition of the equilibrium of forces in all domains. Levity and gravity are equal. The ascending product in combustion is always equal to the descending. Evil conditions are necessary, but woe unto him by whom the offense cometh. There is no failure of justice in the sure reckoning of the ages. Such conditions must obtain for a time because the universe is founded upon the law of polar opposites. The Koreshan attitude is that of understanding, which precludes anxiety. We are not "calamity howlers" nor pessimists. We see things as they are, but we also see whither they are tending. The angel of hope is nearest in the darkest hour.

Again and again the cry of famine comes from Russia. Not so long ago, the sufferings of the peasants were said to be so great that sympathetic contributions from the United States were sent to relieve their misery. Some idea of the moujik's life may be gained from the fact that a Russian laborer is paid fifteen cents a day. If he has a horse and cart, he gets forty-five cents, his own service being graciously counted of equal value with either of them! These figures are reported by one of our exchanges. It is well for those who think of the Greek church as representative of any degree of true religion, to contrast the story of the moujik with that of the fabulous wealth in charge of the Russian church. According to Malcolm Talbot in the Arena, the largest gold reserve in the world is the "sacred fund" of Russia, amounting to four billion dollars, which has been accumulated and guarded chiefly by the State church out of the regular contributions which it receives from all the subjects of the Czar, even the poorest moujik being expected to make his offering. No matter if the moujik is starving and whole provinces are depopulated for lack of grain, this sacred fund must lie untouched. It belongs to the empire, but it is in the care of the church. In Koreshan symbology, Russia represents the power of Christ, the Word, to resurrect himself from the dormant church as the bear is able to arouse himself after hibernation. Russia as a type of power has this reserve of strength. What so powerful as gold today? The conservation of what is called a sacred fund symbolizes the conservation of the mental and physical energies of man's being through chaste living, which form the sacred resources of immortal life. The existence of such a fund in Russia has been kept a profound secret; official reports are silent on this subject; but now in the last days of the Muscovite empire, the secret has been disclosed. The unity of church and state as consolidated in their imperial head, is threatened. Prince Kropotkin said recently: "For the first time in the history of Russia for the last hundred years, the Committee of Ministers has discussed the orders of the Czar and disapproved them." The Ministry was moved to intervene between the ignoble despotism which the Czar has exerted against the cause of education in his cruel insults to the students of St. Petersburg. The Christian church throughout the world is threatened with dissolution, but now the secret of immortal life whose power lies in the hidden riches of chastity is made known.

The "New Social Apostolate" that Prof. Herron is teaching, hopes for a "revolution of good will through the incoming of spiritual forces." The kingdom of heaven must come, as he thinks, through the existence of reconstructive ideals of life and society among the people. These are general truths whose value depends upon some exact scientific knowledge behind them. What are the spiritual forces named, whence do they come, and in what manner will they act to revolutionize society? If Prof. Herron knows, let him set forth these points very plainly. All the statements of the Social Crusaders seem vague. Koreshan Science answers the questions very definitely, and avers that the descent of the New Jerusalem will change the entire order of things. If the descent of the New Jerusalem is a vague term, let it be definitely explained. The New Jerusalem consists of spirits who are perfected in love and wisdom. They are now in the spiritual world, gathered into the brain of one person who is the medium or channel for their descent into the natural world. This is the Messianic law of which christian socialism takes no account. Desire for holiness, for purity, for a change in human affairs, will lead some who believe Koreshan doctrine to conserve the sex energies and polarize their thoughts. Strength of desire will produce the translation or the electrical combustion of the Mediator in whom these spiritual forces or beings center, together with those who long for a baptism. Out of this combustion or alchemical union, the Sons of God, a new race, will be created and will descend to dwell with men, to shed the sweet influence of their presence over the weary and heavy laden. Then shall the earth rejoice and God, even our God shall bless us. This is not a fairy tale. The Gods will be real beings, visible and tangible in the form of men, yet perfect in body, soul, and spirit. Has christian socialism such definite knowledge of the incoming spiritual forces to offer?

Every now and then the astronomers report the appearance of a new comet or the return of an old one. They say that two comets are due this year, and they have just discovered a new one which was first seen at Cape of Good Hope April 25, then later, from Yerkes and Harvard Observatories. Koreshan Astronomy asserts that all comets are new ones. It is true that their orbits may be determined and that at certain intervals what seems to be the same comet comes back, but it is only one of the same order, not the identical comet. These mysterious phenomena as Copernican astronomers regard them are due to prismatic action. They are derived from the sun by the cutting off of solar energy at the colures, and they return to feed its eternal fires; hence like man their origin and destiny are one. Comets are first generated as rings of energy whirling rapidly around the poles; these rings break and contract into lenses; so comets are nothing more than lenses or prisms and their long trains are due to refractions of sunlight. This explanation of their nature will keep the anxious-hearted from wakeful nights and much solicitude. The human race is in no danger from the erratic orbs which sweep in spirals through the atmosphere. There is a theory that when a comet, like that last seen, has two or more tails or streamers, each is composed of a different substance. As the light passes through the lens, one divergence may refract the red rays, another the orange or the green.

Lord Curzon, the Indian Viceroy, has astonished Christendom by advising the Mohammedan students to keep to the Moslem belief. Lord Curzon is quite right. Beliefs are a matter of growth and pertain to different stages of mental development. It is better for a person to keep his own belief until his reason leads him to cast it aside as worthless. There is a great difference between religion and belief, a term which is derived from the Anglo-Saxon and simply means dear; hence a belief is something that is dear to a person, something in which he takes delight—it may be a fetich or the prophet Mohammed. Beliefs are always relative, while religion pertains to fixed truth and concerns itself with one continuous and eternal process—the rebinding of man to God. To speak exactly, there are only seven great religions in the course of a cycle. One succeeds and fulfils the other, each proceeding from its Messianic Founder. The object of religion is to bring man to the status of Divinity.

The chattel slave was at least protected by his master's interest in the preservation of a valuable piece of property. Self-interest led the owner in most cases to nourish and keep his slave in proper working trim. Physically he must be ready for the market. But the wage slave has not even the principle of self-interest in his favor. It matters nothing to the great corporation that employs him whether he serve it or not; a hundred others stand ready to take his place. He is only a human atom. Who cares whether he live or die? "But the wage slave has the means of emancipation in his hands. He has the ballot," cries the socialist. What has the ballot done for him? Has it checked the combination of capital? Has it given him freedom, culture, education, recreation, the bare necessities of life? What has the ballot done for the freedman of the South in the past thirty years?

A protective tariff is conducive to the interests of the trusts, and for that reason this country will never enjoy free trade so long as the money power rules. Free trade is ethically right, but no legislation in favor of it is possible before the strength of wealth is broken. Mr. Bryan Holt argued before the Industrial Commission, that even the great steel trust would be handicapped if deprived of tariff protection. Where is the mouse to fasten the bell on the cat? The money power is too strong for legislation. A mightier force must meet and conquer it in open combat.

A correspondent from Texas objects to our remarks upon the incongruity of founding a school of anarchy. He thinks that we are not versed in the philosophy of that movement which, he writes, "teaches liberty, the mother of order." We have always understood that anarchy taught individual license, and we combat as false the idea that order will spring out of unrestricted liberty. Order and liberty are coincident and reciprocal in their relationship. There can be no liberty apart from the organized unity of society as a whole.

Dr. Loeb explains the instincts on the basis of the physical and chemical properties of protoplasm. Koreshanity explains the instincts on the basis of the reciprocal relation between mind and matter, as coincident with the fact of reincarnation. Every atom of matter as it travels from the mineral to the human plane is impressed with the character of its experience.

Every corpuscle in the human body as the man passes from one embodiment to another, is impressed with its own psychic or soul quality.

An estimate of Tolstoy which appears this month in the North American Review, sums up his philosophy as a reversion to primitive Christianity. This is wholly erroneous. The central thought of primitive Christianity was the Messianic law and personality, neither of which Tolstoy is able to conceive scientifically. Certain ideas concerning communistic life do not constitute primitive Christianity, lacking this doctrine which the Russian writer discards.

Materialism exalts the atom and degrades the man. It calls the atom indestructible, but believes that man may be annihilated.

It does not require a very powerful ecclesiastical microscope to discover the bacteria of heresy.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED BY KORESH.

Warning Against False Messiahs.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) Will you please explain Matt. xxiv: 23-28, and the warning against those who claim to be Messengers or Messiahs? This appears to be against the idea that a Messiah should come and locate in Chicago or elsewhere. (2) If it is not right to take usury, why was such language used as Matt. xxv: 27? "Thou oughtest, therefore, to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury."—Mrs. T. E. D.

Jesus was speaking to his disciples and to no one else, when he said: "If any man shall say unto you," etc. The Disciples had accepted their Messiah and were promulgating His doctrines; therefore, should they meet any one claiming to be the Christ, or should any one announce that some one besides the true Messiah was the Christ, they were not to believe him.

But this has a deeper reference also, for it pertains to the end of the age. The twelve Disciples were to become, with all others redeemed through the Lord Jesus, involved in the one personality who constitutes the Messiah at the end of the age; therefore to these twelve who are involved in the one individual at the end of the dispensation, it was said: "Behold, I have told you before." To this personality, the Messenger of the Covenant, it is declared: "Wherefore, if they shall say, behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers [in the "silence" of christian science]; believe it not."

The entire spiritual world of the angelic spheres is gathered into one man. It is from this man that the New Jerusalem will descend from God out of heaven, where she is prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. As the twelve Apostles in the spirit have become twelve spiritual principles, which constitute the twelve foundation truths of the new Gospel, they are in the personality of the Shepherd who gathers them with his arm, into his bosom.

The folding up of the Lord's napkin in the sepulcher and the placing of it where the head had lain, symbolized the folding of the twelve disciples into the head, that is, into the Messianic personality at the end of the age. The eagles are the knowledges of truth, and these knowledges are gathered where the Lord's body will be resurrected; that is, in the genuine Messenger. The Lord did not say to the world generally: "If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not;" but as before stated, to his own disciples.

The lightning, the illumination which will come from the new baptism, will come from the East—the rising, and will extend to the West—the setting. Nothing in the Scriptures can offset the plain declaration of the Bible. The Messiah is promised at the end of the Christian age, from the posterity of Joseph. The name of this Messiah is given in Isaiah xlv: 28. "That saith of Cyrus, He is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem [the New Jerusalem], thou shalt be built; and to the temple, thy foundation shall be laid." Read also, Isaiah xlv: 1. "Thus saith the Lord to his anointed [Christ], to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates, and the gates shall not be shut."

This is a prophetic declaration of the Messenger of the Covenant to come at the end of the age. The Messiah of this age will carry these credentials, but many will present other and false claims. "For there shall arise false christs [because there is a true one] and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." If in the last day the false christs are to show great signs and wonders, then the genuine Messiah may more quietly perform his work. He will carry the credentials as already announced.

(2) The great mistake made by the theologians regarding the Lord's parables, is in the conception that when speaking of the kingdom of heaven he has reference always to a state or place of perfection. The kingdom of heaven degenerates into the kingdom of unrighteousness. This is true both of external and internal domains of progression and retrogression.

The kingdom of heaven—the church, was in a holy state in its inception; but when the church fell the kingdom of heaven became corrupt, and the lord of the corrupt church was represented as a usurer. This is because the church took on pagan conditions. When the one came saying, "Lord, I know thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed: And I was afraid, and I went and hid thy talent in the earth [in the corrupt church]: Lo, there thou hast that is thine," his lord confessed that his statement was true, for he replied: "Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed; thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." This is what any "hard man," a usurer, would say. The Lord Jesus was declaring in parable the truth regarding the state into which the church would fall, and which now in its condition fulfils his prediction.

Levic and Gravic Energies.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Will you kindly answer the following question: In CELLULAR COSMOGONY, page 164, I find it stated that gravic energy descends, and that levic energy ascends. If that is the case, and there are really two forms of energy, why is it that a small balloon charged with hydrogen gas will ascend readily through the atmosphere, and if it is placed in a glass cylinder it will ascend to the top and remain there? If now the cylinder be connected to an air pump and the air wholly or partly exhausted, the balloon immediately falls to the bottom of the cylinder. If levic force causes it to ascend, should it not hold it up after the air has been exhausted? Does not this prove that gravic force, operating through the medium of the atmosphere, causes the balloon to ascend because it is lighter than the air, and the air forces it up just as it brings down any object that is heavier than the air?—T. M. Y., West Elizabeth, Pa.

Levic energy operates in relation to normal conditions in a normal way, and in relation to abnormal conditions in an abnormal way. Glass is a non-conductor of certain energies, but a conductor of certain other energies. Hydrogen, when separated from the atmosphere as described, is not subject to the levic energy, which can only operate through and in relation to the atmospheric medium. One might ask why a person weighing one hundred and fifty pounds may be easily lifted while alive, but will require four times the amount of strength to lift after death; or, why does a person sag down in the hands of another and increase his weight so much as to make it almost impossible to support the weight, while the same weight is easily supported when the person merely submits himself to being lifted? This does not prove anything.

Anodic and cathodic currents are known to exist in every sphere of activity. Were it not for this fact, there could be no equilibrium in Nature.

Abuse of Drugs in America.

An Army of People Annually Taking Proprietary Nostrums for Real and Fancied Ills.

In the course of an excellent editorial, the Canadian Practitioner, one of the foremost medical journals of the Dominion, speaks as follows:

"If one were to answer the question, What is the greatest abuse of the present day? it would be the indiscriminate taking of drugs as proprietary nostrums. The mischief that is constantly being done to the community by taking so much proprietary medicine is enormous. In the first place, the people are induced, by the wiles of the advertiser, to take some preparation, of the composition of which they know nothing. In this way very harmful drugs may be introduced into their systems. In some cases a dangerous craving may be acquired for the narcotics which enter into the composition of some of these nostrums. Persons are often taking drugs when they have no need for them. On the other hand, by the use of these drugs they are often laying the foundation for serious trouble.

"In the next place many persons take it upon themselves, by the aid of advertisements, to diagnose their own cases and prescribe for themselves according to the fancy that may strike them, as the result of the study of these advertisements. Wrong drugs are thus usually taken, and valuable time lost to the patient.

"Another feature of the sale of medicines, as placed before the public by the nostrum vender, is the claim of curative powers that do not exist in any drug, or combination of drugs. According to these preposterous claims, all forms of heart disease are cured, no matter whether functional or organic. The kidneys in like manner are made to yield to the potency of some so called cure; the granular contracted kidney once again assumes its normal shape, size, and texture, the rigid arteries become soft and flexible; and the health is again restored to its former vigor. All the experience of the medical world is given the lie. The crumpled broken-down heart valves, and the small, hardened kidneys are again compelled to do duty of perfect quality.

"In all this we have the most monstrous fraud and deception. In some cases it is ignorance, so far as the vender is concerned, but in the majority of instances there is wilful deception for the love of gain. It is fraud of the most diabolical sort, and should not be tolerated for a single day. No man should be allowed to advertise a quality for his goods which they do not possess. It is a variety of confidence game, or practice, that invariably humbugs the buyer and fraudulently enriches the maker. The law is not strict on the sale of poisons and certain noxious drugs; and yet, under the name of some proprietary article, bromides, chloral, opium, cocaine, alcohol, ergot, etc., can be obtained in any quantity.

"Here then is a crying evil. What is the remedy? One would be to prohibit the sale and advertising of proprietary medicines, but especially if they contain any of the drugs in the poison or noxious list. It may be some time before our legislators can be educated up to this standard. There then remains a partial remedy that should at once be put in force—the exact composition of every proprietary medicine should be printed in plain language on the wrappers. In this way the people could see for themselves that some greatly vaunted medicine was only ditch water. Further, these nostrums would be ordered off the market if they contained noxious or poisonous drugs."

This suggestion, of publicity for medical fakirs as for trusts and combines, strikes the right key. The public, under such regime would see that some vaunted celery tonic contained no celery, but depended upon that dangerous drug, elixir of coca, for its temporary and even harmful effects. Or, that some fig syrup or elixir depended not at all on figs, in any form, but on the cheap and common cascara sagrada, for which under the proprietary name the public paid quadruple prices.

Many people have no idea to what extent "patent medicine" fiends are being multiplied in this land. The physician realizes it, because all too often, and usually too late, he is called on to counteract the insidious but hopelessly permanent effects of the abuse of opium, coca, pepsin, mercury, iodide of potassium, salicylic acid, wintergreen, and many another drug. An example of how widely irrational this kind of "fiend" becomes is clearly shown in a recent report of a Philadelphia case, as reported in Our Silent Partner, an excellent advertising organ, in its April issue. The account is headed, "What Boyce Swallowed," and is as follows:

"Mrs. Andrew Boyce of Philadelphia has obtained a court order, requiring that her husband provide money toward her support. For the past two years she has provided funds for sustenance of the family by cleaning offices and doing other work. Andrew has claimed to be ill. Mrs. Boyce has successfully alleged before the court that her other half will be in better health if he goes to work. In the course of proceedings, Mrs. Boyce claimed that her husband was a patent medicine fiend. Here is a list of medicines that he bought during a period of 91 weeks:

Incidental to the above, Mrs. Boyce says her husband used many gallons of advertised mineral waters, and she showed the judge a quantity of circulars descriptive of various proprietary liquids that he has been considering the feasibility of taking."

To the ordinary reader, the one with sense enough not to diagnose his own case without previous long-continued study of Anatomy, Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, Materia Medica, etc., but knowing enough to depend on the man who has made a conscientious study thereof for a prescription, this account will seem to be wildly overdrawn, and Mrs. Boyce will seem to have been swearing to the impossible. To the physician who daily has to deal with the neurasthenic and other wrecks, human ships stranded years before their time on the sea of self-diagnosis and by the billows of advertised nostrums, Andrew Boyce will be recognized simply as a rather extreme type of a now very prevalent species of the genus Homo—Homme gullibilus, let us name him.

In fairness, it should be said here that in Andrew Boyce's selection of nostrums designed for his supposititious ill, as above printed, there appear the names of some of undoubted medical worth, and of a rather larger number of no harmful tendency—or any tendency whatever, for that matter. Among them, however, are to be detected some that, because of an undue proportion of alcohol, or of the presence of opium, coca, or other like drugs, are to be ranked as dangerous and sure in time to undermine the health and, as well, the will power of those addicted to their abuse. However, this is not the chief danger that this case so excellently illustrates; that is, and it is facile princeps among these dangers, that of self-diagnosis, of the self-classifying of disorders in some organ, the very location, shape, and purpose or duty of which Boyce and ignoramuses of his type could not declare.

What were the symptoms, what was the medical misapprehension in his wobbling and spongy imagination that called for Swamp Root and a Vermifuge, for Peruna and Swayne's Specific, together, for example? The well-informed chemist, at such a report, must burst into a roar of derisive merriment, until suddenly he is sobered with the thought that with Andrew Boyces this land is now crowded.

In this whole list there is not one remedy that could stand the test of publishing its formula on the bottle label; not because the remedy would then be copied by physicians, for well-informed physicians can write prescriptions that will medicinally duplicate every one in the list; but because of one of two reasons. First, because its medical insufficiency would be detected; or, second, because the enormous profits in its manufacture would become apparent. There are few dollar remedies on the market that cannot be produced by the large wholesale drug houses for seven cents a bottle, labeled and wrapped ready for sale. A well-known sarsaparilla costs less than six cents ready for the market. This is by no means "all velvet," all profit; perhaps as much as $300,000 a year are spent on some medicines largely sold in this country, for advertising alone, and this the "patient" must pay for.

There is one feature of this "nostrum publicity," as advertising men call patent medicine puffing, that is also worthy of passing notice. To illustrate it, let me cite an at-present notable case. The governor of a prominent state, himself the bearer of a proud and honored name, now allows his rather unprepossessing counterfeit presentment to largely stare newspaper readers in the face, over his testimonial as to the virtues of a certain widely-advertised nostrum, or proprietary medicine. Now, I am not prepared to assert that this remedy did not benefit the man who thus cheapens himself and his great office; but I do most emphatically assert that, whether it did or did not is "all Greek" to him. He was out of sorts, let us admit; he tried various remedies without relief, let us concede; after taking this remedy he felt better—was "well," perhaps. Certain metabolic changes had taken place in his system; but how does he, who asked off-hand would be unable to define the word metabolic, know what those changes were, and how much less can he know as to what produced them? He does not even know that he is not today, deep in his system, nursing an effect of this nostrum that in time shall not lead to his permanent undoing. In fact, like the famed Danbury News Man's millwright, his knowledge "is wofully hedged in by limits and hampered by doubts." In a word—he is densely ignorant of all that is necessary to make such a declaration with exact knowledge. Yet he lends his name, the glamour of his office, the proud name of a revered ancestor, and the fame of his state to a positive statement regarding which he is by training and habits of mind utterly unfitted to make.

What wonder, then, that the Andrew Boyces of weaker intellect yield to the apparent leadership of such testimonial givers! Have the latter any responsibility for the multiplication of the former?—DR. EUGENE MURRAY-AARON, in Cram's Magazine.

Woman's Ascendancy.

Women Lead in Education in the West, while Men Fall Behind in Higher Branches.

That the education of women in the United States is increasing out of all proportion to the education of the male population is a significant showing for this first year of the twentieth century. Women suffragists are reading in the Lecture by Koresh.

The Founder of Koreshanity will deliver a Lecture on Koreshan Universology, Sunday, 3:30 p. m., May 26, 1901, at Koreshan Hall, 4th floor, 315-19 Englewood ave., Chicago.

A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in advanced thought.

statistics the signs of a universal ballot that cannot long be denied to male and female citizens alike, arguing that when one third more women than men are graduated every year, the time is coming when the present condition of the ballot would leave ignorant men to govern the intelligent womanhood of the country.

"How long," asks a suffragist, "shall ignorance be continued in the power of office and ballot, and the educated be disfranchised and kept in subjection, while Liberty, represented by a woman, stands holding her giant torch in New York harbor, boasting in silence of her enlightenment?"

To show that her reference to "ignorance" and "education" is not for oratorical effect, this champion of American womanhood goes into embarrassing statistics and quotes masculinity to her purpose, showing that in 1899 the high schools of the United States graduated 36,124 girls and only 20,344 boys.

Glimpse of the Future.

"At this rate," she asks, "where shall we be in 1925, or 1950, or in the year 2000? What will be the proportion of educated women to educated men? In a hundred years from now, shall the comparatively ignorant male population of the country dictate the government of the educated female portion of it?"

Figures upon which these questions are based were obtained from William T. Harris, National Commissioner of Education, and an unquestioned authority. The commissioner compiled them for the Woman's Journal of Boston, and as they were submitted they read:

In 1899 the public high schools of the State classed by the Bureau of Education as the North Atlantic Division (Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania) graduated 6,856 boys and 11,489 girls.

The South Atlantic Division (Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida) graduated 862 boys and 1,764 girls.

The South Central Division (Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory) graduated 1,086 boys and 2,295 girls.

The North Central Division (Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas) graduated 10,457 boys and 18,597 girls.

The Western Division (Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and California) graduated 1,083 boys 1,979 girls.

In the whole United States, the public high schools in 1899 graduated 20,344 boys and 36,124 girls.

Women Increasing in Colleges.

For fear that Commissioner Harris' statements might be challenged with reference to the higher education, he was asked for figures from the colleges and universities. He says of this attendance:

"In the colleges the young men as yet outnumber the young women; but the colleges are fast going the way of the high schools, and for the same reason. Between 1872 and 1899 the number of male college students in proportion to the whole population nearly doubled; but during the same period the number of female college students in proportion to the population increased more than six times. The competition between men in business is constantly growing keener, while the prejudice against higher education for women is constantly growing less. As a result of these two factors combined, the disparity bids fair to increase indefinitely."

Recently, Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, one of the distinguished educators of the United States, said in a speech:

"Today only three State universities in the nation exclude women, and those are in Virginia, Georgia, and Louisiana. This change in the status of women has brought about a state of things where today more girls than young men are preparing for college, and before many years the young women will outnumber the men in the colleges and universities."

"Of the sixty colleges and universities of this country of the highest standing, only nine refuse to women their degrees. Every college founded since the war has been founded for both men and women. Practically, all schools below the high school are in the hands of women, and 80 per cent of the teachers in the New England high schools are women."

Women's Lead Increases.

On the same subject of increased attendance of women in the schools, the dean of Barnard College, Columbia University, reports of women that "it is obvious that should the regular ratio of increase during the last three years be maintained during the coming three years, the number of candidates for the bachelor's degree will reach nearly 500 at the end of that period."

Stanford University has limited the attendance of women to 500, for the reason that in seven years they threatened to outnumber the men. For next May it has a graduating class of 166, of which eighty-one are women, although the percentage of women in the school is only 33.1-3 of the total enrollment.

In view of these figures and the further fact that the university of today, with its special fields, its departments of practical education, and its thorough training for professional life, is an educator in the broadest sense, it is asked with especial emphasis, how long shall the women product of these institutions of higher learning be denied suffrage, and how long may it be before they have the greater degree of education and are dominated by an ignorant political body of men?

Argument of Suffragists.

"A short time ago," said an earnest suffragist, "arrangements were made to confer the voting power upon several thousand Indians in northern New York, who somehow had escaped the dragnet for votes which never misses anything located near the barge office. Now, the dispatches tell us, preparations are being made for the wholesale enfranchisement of the Chickasaws and Choctaws in the Indian Territory. There is not a tribe on the Western plains so ignorant and degraded that they cannot have the ballot whenever they will deign to accept it. The Hawaiians and the Porto Ricans have been received into the political body with open arms. It can hardly wait to gather the Filipinos in its capacious embrace, and it stands ready to endow with full citizenship all the men of Cuba so soon as they shall have illustrated their utter incapacity for government.

"But the men of the United States stand in a solid wall of opposition to the granting of a vote to American women, while with unbroken unanimity they echo the demand of the great authority at Princeton—'Give the rank and file a chance'—no matter how rank it happens to be."—Chicago Tribune.

The Sweatshop Evil.

Work and Wages in Chicago Dens; Statistics Compiled by Investigator.

Miss Nellie Mason Auten, a graduate student of the department of sociology at the University of Chicago, has just completed, under the auspices of that institution, the most thorough investigation ever made of sweatshops in Chicago. In her report she summarizes the prices paid by contractors and wholesale dealers, and shows that the wages of the victims of the vicious system are steadily falling. From the report we gather the following facts:

Women were found working ten hours a day, six days in the week, making 40 cents per week (a rate of two thirds of a cent an hour!) or $21 a year. Many workmen and women employed at making garments, with average work of thirty-one weeks out of the fifty-two, are paid five cents an hour. One woman, a pants finisher, worked eleven hours per day and made 30 cents a week, while many were earning less than a dollar a week. Many were earning less than $100 a year, and in a large number of cases where the whole family is employed, the entire income was from $100 to $300 a year.

A contractor gets 20 cents for a child's coat, and out of that he must pay for the making and get his profit! For a man's coat he gets 80 cents, where five years ago he received $1.25, and ten years ago $1.50. One contractor receives eight cents a pair for knee pants, and that is a cent less than last year.

Seldom did she find proper sanitary accommodations, and often, in the coldest weather, she found the rooms stiflingly close but entirely unheated. Some of the shops are in basements, where the evils are even more exaggerated because of the bad air and worse darkness.

The manufacturer feels it no affair of his how the work is done. The contractor is pressed to keep his contracts and feels no interest in the conditions under which his employes work. The landlord is content to get the most rent he can without asking questions. The consumer is always ready for bargains. And so it is that the man, uneducated, perhaps unskilled, has to say: "Yes, I must keep on working, even though my back is breaking and my eyes will scarcely stay open, for wife and the little ones must have bread, and I must work now if it kills, for soon there will be no work to do." And there are 35,853 such workers in the garment trades.

After suggesting several palliatives, Miss Auten says: "Closely related with those who expect much from organization of the workers are those who feel that the whole existing order of society is unjust, and that the remedy is to be found in Socialism, a state of society in which each man shall have just what he produces, no more and no less. It is undoubtedly true that at present there is a class who do little or nothing to add to the sum total of the world's goods, and yet who have most. It is also true that many of those who work hardest have least. Something is wrong if these conditions can exist, and whether or not the solution lies in the inauguration of the Socialistic state, it is a serious question whether, if it is true that each person has a 'right to be himself such as he is,' he has not also the right to have undiminished that which he produces.—Social Democratic Herald.

Astrological Forecast of 1901.

General Unrest, Political Disturbances, and Moral Degeneracy Predicted for The World.

On the 21st of March 1901, we enter upon a new year called Plava. The planetary cabinet of this year has been already given by us in the book entitled "Vikari and its Prospects." We shall, however, repeat them here for ready reference. The lunar year Plava begins on a Thursday, and Jupiter (Guru) will be the King, Saturn will be the Prime Minister, Venus becomes the Commander-in-chief, and Mars becomes the director general of vegetation. The sun governs all serials. Venus rules all commercial transactions as also clouds. Jupiter controls sap, and Moon rules miscellaneous. Gopala controls all cattle.

There are four eclipses, two of the Moon, and two of the Sun. The first lunar eclipse takes place on the 3rd of May and on the 18th of the same month there will be a solar eclipse. The second lunar eclipse takes place on October 27, and on the 11th of November there will be another solar eclipse. These lunar and solar eclipses following close upon each other, have special influences upon the terrestrial and the celestial phenomena. The year on the whole will not have peace or prosperity. Political disturbances will continue. Plague, famine, destruction of property by fire and water will characterize the progress of this year. There will be much misery among the royal families and priestly classes. Science will advance while morals will greatly degenerate. Women will play a prominent part in mercantile, legal, political and military affairs.

This year on account of the combust of Jupiter and Venus, will be considered inauspicious for 'all beneficial purposes, such as marriages, investiture of thread, construction of buildings and undertaking of new business. This is due to the state of combustion, which Jupiter and Venus get during the most auspicious months. The ministry of Saturn with the help of Mars controlling vegetation, is prejudicial to the healthy growth of vegetation and the prosperity of nations through the instrumentality of the evil-minded statesmen.—Astrological Magazine, Madras, India.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

Mind.—The Rev. R. Heber Newton, D. D., contributes a second article on the Training of Thought as a Life Force, to the May number. Other subjects treated are: Mysticism and Science by Frank Burr Marsh, The Influence of Sex on Development, The Unity of Life and The Word of God. William Kent in the editorial department protests against competitive sports and contests in the schools, contrasting ambition with aspiration. Alliance Publishing Co., Life Building, New York.

Leslie's Weekly.—The Pan-American Souvenir number for May 11, has a special cover design and beautiful illustrations. There is a full page cut of the wonderful electrical tower, fountains and basin; also a double page panoramic view of the exposition. Matters of interest concerning the Buffalo Fair are fully treated. Minister Conger writes on the Chinese situation and opposes the partition of the Empire. Everybody will want this issue for it is superb.

Saturday Evening Post.—The opening article in the issue for May 4, Carnegie's Thirty Young Partners, by Paul Latzke, describes the making of a millionaire. Charles A. Shieren, once Mayor of Brooklyn, gives excellent advice to young men. Both serials continue, and Robert Ellis Thompson writing upon, Leisure Not a Waste of Time, calls attention to the American mania for overwork. 5 cents a copy, at the news-stands.

The Interpreter.—There are two magazines of this name published. That which is edited by Major Ogden Whitlock, at 1645 Lawrence street, in Denver, Colo., is an exponent of the Cellular Cosmogony and Koreshan thought. The Angel of the Incarnation, an attractive serial, is continued in the May number, and is full of Koreshan ideas. Another article entitled, The Angels, is strong and clear, ending with a fine tribute to Koresh.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland floss, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

Bureau of Equitable Commerce, of the Koreshan Unity.

Under the Koreshan System of Co-operation, the cost of production is reduced to the minimum; and we offer to our friends more goods and more work for a given sum of money than can be obtained in the competitive world. We have established four new departments to our work. Orders promptly filled by mail or express. Correspondence and patronage solicited.

Our High-Grade, Hand-Finished Razor Strops.

A good razor is of little use unless it has a fine edge, and that cannot be obtained in any other way than with a good strop and a knowledge of how to use the same and keep it in condition. A strop in poor shape means a razor in poor condition. Full directions with every strop.

We manufacture our celebrated High-grade Razor Strops, the best strops manufactured. If you shave, you need one; you would be delighted with one of these. The prices are low considering the superior quality of the goods and workmanship.

Single, horse-hide, 50c. Double swing shell and canvas, several grades from 75c to $1.25. Extra fine material and finish, 1.50. Packed in neat box. Also strops at 10c., 25c., and 40c.—send 8c. for postage on orders less than 50c. Mail orders a specialty.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Science of Alchemy and Law of Absorption.

Alchemy and Chemistry Differentiated; Inconsistencies of Modern Schools of Thought; Absorption of Mentalities into the Central Star of the Universal Man.

IN MAKING A STUDY of the question of what the Buddhist denominates absorption into Nirvana, it is important to differentiate between the two schools of thought; namely, the chemical and the alchemical. The man who believes in chemistry cannot consistently accept the doctrine of evolution nor the nebular hypothesis. Chemistry assumes the theory of the indestructibility of the atom, and its eternity. "The atom is eternal and indestructible," is the axiom of the chemist. The school of alchemy is the school of transmutation. The two phases of thought, however, have so indiscriminately entered into the conglomeration of scholastic cult, and the lines of differentiation have been so carelessly drawn, that the scholastic mind has become an aggregation of heterogeneous conceptions.

The main purpose of this communication is to differentiate the two phases of thought, that a clear concept may be entertained of the laws and principles which underlie the doctrine of absorption. Absorption into Nirvana involves the law of that character of human progress which eventuates in the transition of the human being from his material, tangible, and visible existence to some condition not perceptible to the outward sense. The theory of absorption implies that when a man reaches the point of overcoming,—having attained perfection in his natural life,—he passes through a transition which modern interpretation defines to be an obliteration of his identity and consciousness. This interpretation placed by modern Christianity upon the Buddhistic idea of absorption into universal consciousness or unconsciousness, not defined, results from the vagueness of the Christian's idealism of Deity. Deity is an all-pervasive spirit, according to modern conception, as it were a great illimitable mental ocean. Absorption into this ocean of illimitability, the Christian concludes, must necessarily constitute a loss of identity and independent individual existence, because the modern Christian's mentality is befogged by the modern secular scholastic cult.

To study the law of absorption, means that the mind must become familiar with the law of the cross. By the law of the cross, we mean the law of transmutation. This involves a knowledge of the origin and destiny of matter. In the sense in which chemistry deals with matter, there is no such thing as an atom of matter. There is a least divisible form of matter. When matter has reached by friction or agitation (the vibration of matter) its least possible division or reduction, any further agitation changes it to spirit. The destruction of the atom and its transition to spirit (physical energy) constitute the source of constant spiritual supply. The law operates inversely, for the source of matter is the transformation of spirit. Spirit, which is as substantial as matter, in its materialization becomes matter; but to insure this constant transmutability, there must eternally exist the two coördinate states and qualities of substance. These two states and qualities are differentiated by the two coördinate terms—spirit and matter. Matter is not spirit, but it becomes spirit; spirit is not matter, but it becomes matter. This quality of interchangeability belongs to the two states of the one substance. Matter is constantly one half of the universe; spirit is constantly the other half; substance is a term that covers both spirit and matter.

According to chemistry, matter is atomic—atoms of matter are indestructible, eternal, and unchangeable. Different substances, as water and sulphuric acid, are merely different combinations of atoms; water being composed of two equivalents of hydrogen and one of oxygen, while sulphuric acid is $H^2 S O_4$, which means there are two parts of hydrogen, one of sulphur, and four of oxygen. This the alchemical system absolutely denies. When different forms of substance enter into what has been denominated chemical compounds, the substances are utterly destroyed as to their distinctive characters, and the combination is a creation of a distinct substance.

The doctrine of evolution is founded upon the basic principle of the transmutation of matter as above defined; hence we reiterate the statement that no man who believes in chemistry can consistently accept the doctrine of evolution, nor can any man accept the doctrine of Buddhism and theosophy, and at the same time believe in the chemical theory. The theosophist who pretends to believe in both, simply shows his ignorance. The higher alchemy pertains to the principles which belong to the life of man as that life relates to the life of God and to the Gods, to the Son of God, and to the Sons of God.

There are two distinct qualities of absorption. These depend upon the great fundamental truth of material existence; namely, center and circumference of form and function. The universal man (involving the external human, the spiritual human, and the angelic, with the realm of the Deities, which includes, therefore, somic, pneumatic, and psychic existence) is in the form of the alchemico-organic cosmos (the physical world), and is the man in his greatest magnitude. This humanity has a center and a circumference. The center of intellect and affection, wisdom and love, is God. Every domain corresponds to every other in the fact that it has its own center and circumferential sphere. It follows, then, that in the progress of human development there must appear a central figure called the Son of God and the Son of man. The absorption of this personality whenever he appears, is an absorption into the focal center or nucleus of being; the Son thus sits upon the throne of his Father.

There also comes in the progress of human development, a time when there obtains a coördinate absorption. This absorption is not finally into the central nucleus, but into the order of intellectualities; these are the Deities or Gods. The process of absorption is through the operation of the higher alchemy. Man is composed of every material in the universe. As the so called elements are destructible, convertible, and not eternal, they are subject to the great law of transmutation. Not only are they convertible from one substance to another, but they are convertible to spirit. Man thus reaches his perfection, obliterating the desires of his lower life and augmenting the aspirations of his ascending purposes until he annihilates his lower self and is absorbed into his interior Godhood. He is thus enabled to ascend beyond the angelic spheres into the realm of Deity.

If we study the record of the Christ of the Christian dispensation, we could wonder at the ignorance of those who pretend to teach the doctrine of absorption and cannot recognize the truth regarding the claims of Jesus the Lord to the Sonship of God, and the fact that in his absorption he sat upon the throne of his eternal Father, becoming one—in that throne—with the Godhead into which he was absorbed.

Organic life culminates in the highest form of matter, in which resides and obtains the highest quality of spirit. This organic form is man. He reaches his final perfection by ascertaining the laws of his being, and thence making an application of those principles to his life. Man attains to his highest material state (in which there is a corresponding and coördinate function) through a knowledge of natural and physiological law. The attainment of natural immortality or the highest life in the body, which is man's arch-natural being, depends upon a scrupulous discrimination and application to life of the highest physiological principles and laws. These are to be found in the Mosaic Decalogue.

The Christian church today lays great stress on the physical crucifixion of Jesus. Genuine Christianity, in so far as it relates to the cross of the Lord, sees in it the great law of alchemy, wherein, through the dematerialization of the Lord's visible body, its material substance was transmuted to the spirit of dissemination, and was thence absorbed in its radiant transmission, into the church of its receptivity. Thus the Spirit of Jehovah (that is, the Christ of God) entered into, and commingled with the spirit of the church. This union of God and man constituted the cross of Christ, that is, the crossing of the Spirit of God, which was holy, with the spirit of man, which was unholy. The crucifixion on the cross of wood, while a fact, was but a type or figure of the genuine crucifixion of God and man. It is by this genuine cross that the Lord was planted in the race, to regenerate (reproduce) the Sons of God.

The doctrine of alchemy centers supremely in the transmutation of the Lord, the law of transmutation being the law of the crucifixion. The Christ was the paschal Lamb, the passover. This Lamb passed over from his personal being—through becoming the Holy Spirit—to the church, his substance being transmitted, appropriated, and assimilated by the church. In this fact we have the application of the law of transubstantiation, a principle recognized by Romanism, but its truth perverted and missapplied. The transubstantiation of the Lord's body is not found in the wafer of Catholicism, for that is but the figure. It is, however, the figure of the real fact; namely, the passing over of the Lord's life (body, soul, and spirit) to become the life of the world. Compare this doctrine of common sense, grounded in reason, with the vagary of modern Evangelism, of which the M. E. church is representative.

There are three persons in the Godhead, according to the doctrines and creeds of Trinitarianism. One person of the Father, one person of the Son, one person of the Holy Ghost. These three persons were three invisible, spiritual, and eternal beings. They are each one God, each equal to either of the others. Each one is God in perfection, for each has the attributes of all. One of these persons, the Son, as old as his Father, by virtue of a mutual agreement took upon himself a natural form, hence he is called God incarnate, God in the flesh; and the Roman church emphasizes the phraseology, "Mother of God," as pertaining to the Virgin Mary, because she was the natural mother of the Lord Jesus. No one in the church would dare to say the mother of a part of God.

In the Methodist Catechism, the church which we have declared to represent what is called Evangelical Christianity, it is claimed that "we worship a God without body or parts," while at the same time it knows it has defined God to possess three distinct parts at least—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. It further says, that the Lord ascended up into heaven with his body, where he sits at the right hand of the Father.

Now, there were three spiritual beings upon the throne. One of these, the Son, as old as the Father, took upon himself the human form with which he ascended into heaven. There are now, not only the three original spiritual beings, but one of these spiritual beings took on a human body, and carried that body up into heaven, where the four (three spirits and one body) constitute God. God was destitute of a body, but now, one part of God, the Son, has a body. This body, or the Lord as a material being in a spiritual world, or in the heavens, is worshiped as God by the Methodist church, and yet its catechism tells us "we worship a God without body or parts."

It does not seem possible that so consummate an idiot could have existed; but when we count the idiotic believers in this ecclesiastical and theological rot by the millions, we are dumbfounded and disgusted. It is time that this theological carbuncle be punctured and probed to its core. The Lord was literally eaten by his church. That appropriation was through the possibility and fact of His transmutation and transubstantiation.

The Brotherhood of the New Order.

Prevailing Fallacies Concerning the Brotherhood of Chaotic Humanity; the Genuine Reformer Must Understand Man and Cosmos; the Sons of God are Archists, not Anarchists.

ALL "REFORMERS" agree upon the desirability of some social arrangement by which the principles of equity and justice may be made to apply to all human affairs. With a certain class there is a prevalent conception that God is our common Father, and there is necessarily a common and universal brotherhood; hence the hackneyed phrase: "the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." In this general conception of the relation of humanity to the Cause and Source of its being, the human mind—like a great pendulum—oscillates from the one extreme to the other of its vibration from the central point of gravity. The Christian church has departed from the genuine principles of primitive Christianity, and through its deviation from, and perversion of the principles, precepts, and practices of Christian charity and fellowship, has brought the doctrines of the Lord Christ into disrepute with many, and the mental pendulum swings as far in one direction as it was out of norm in the other.

In our study of the general character of man in the relation of that character to the Source of being, we must explore man as we would explore any other phase and domain of universal activity. It is only upon the basis of the principles of correspondential analogy, that we may acquire any true knowledge of socialistic function. At the present time, the visible humanity is in a state of universal chaos; hence there are no cosmic functions operative only so far as this chaos is one of the factors in the progress and function of the universal cosmos, for the reason that cosmos and chaos are antithetical coördinates in the universal sphere of activity. If chaos in its domain were not an eternal accompaniment of cosmos or order, the universe could have no existence; for the very principle of activity implies the wearing out by friction of the forms of order wherever they exist.

The alchemico-organic cosmos has its sphere of light and its coördinate sphere of darkness, its time of light in certain places, and its times of darkness in the same places; it also has its focal point of light and its focal point of darkness. These two focal points so approximate each other as to comprise a light and a dark star center—two stellar nuclei which revolve around each other, related to a central axis. This pertains exclusively to the alchemico-organic (physical) cosmos. One of these stellar points is the constant point of order, whence is derived pure light and pure heat; the other point is that from whence is derived darkness, and cold, and disorder. Disorder at its point and state of activity is as constant as the point and state of order, therefore the creator and the destroyer are fundamental factors, if not mental attributes, of being itself; and these two factors may be denominated, the one eternal, the other, from everlasting to everlasting.

When in the activity of any sphere of operation there are wearing out and waste from that sphere, there is a precipitation or fall into the underlying sphere; such precipitation belongs to the law and operation of gravity, coördinate with which there are also the law and operation of levity. We therefore must admit the existence of ascending and descending principles and forms; and this is true of every sphere, every domain, and every phase of activity in life and death. It is thus that we may observe, if we will, the two directions of all things not only in physics, but also in metaphysics; and when we consider the operation of the law of correspondential analogy, we may readily observe the corresponding ascent and descent of every individual of the human race.

It does not require a very profound reasoner to understand the fact that thousands of the race are descending, under the influence of mental darkness and evil, to the realm of hades, while others—under the guidance and guardianship of the center of mental light and heat (love)—are ascending toward the Father-Mother of the divine and eternal life. These latter comprise a brotherhood when the state of their perfection is attained and they come into a knowledge of their relations of fellowship, and they have a Father-Mother—the Lord God. The very laws of being compel us to distinguish between those who may comprise a brotherhood and a fellowship of organic unity, and such as are under the domain and influence of fallacy and evil, and cannot, under any consideration, influence, or power, attain to order and brotherhood.

In the development of the ascending forms of life, there is an ultimate attainment to the perfection of a general order. This order comprises suborders, genera, and species, the degrees of which are so defined that there can be no encroachment of one sphere upon another, nor of one member upon another, any more than the constellations in the alchemico-organic cosmos can encroach upon one another. In this state and stage of development, every member of the order has the laws of the universe written in the heart; the laws of order are understood, and the love of order governs the entire fellowship so that any written code outside of that which is written in the heart is nonessential. This condition with its quality of life has its reflex in the perversions of truth in what is called anarchy, for it is an absolutely eternal law that every thing and quality in the universe has its opposite, and every plane of cosmos has its antithetical chaos. "Anarchy," or that which is called anarchy, is but the reflex of truth and good as they obtain in the order of the Sons of God. Every Son of God is a law unto himself; he is therefore not an anarchist, but the archist, because he is a law unto himself—the law being written in the heart—and he requires no law outside of himself to guide his life. Change the life of the individuals first, and the environment will be made to conform to the quality of the mass.

The environment of Christendom during the universal sway of Catholicism was the power of the Roman Catholic church, with its hell and purgatory, having their keys in the hands of the papal hierarchy. The growth of the liberty of thought and the breaking away from the restraints of the church of Rome, changed the environment. The change came in the mind first, and the change of mind changed the environment. This is according to the law of progress. Do away with law and order, even though the law be arbitrary, and let loose the fiends of chaos under the conviction that if we change the environment we will improve conditions, and we would precipitate among men the activities of the most consummate hell and disorder. The anarchy of today is but the reflex of the heavenly Archy.

While the heart of man is in the chaotic state and stage of its being, worldly governments must and will obtain. All worldly governments are degenerate departures from the original divine kingdom in the earth. They will continue until the new kingdom of heaven is established in the earth, when they will be dissipated by the power of God's rulership. Then will be fulfilled the prediction: the old heavens and the old earth shall pass away, and there will be new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. The new heavens and new earth will be the new church and the new state, the remarriage of God and man.

The only true standard of value is the relation of demand and supply. The false standard of value is the fictitious margins of protection. The remedy is the destruction of the possibility to create fictitious margins, either by government, or by any other power or combination.

Medical Practitioners and the Undertakers.

Dr. Dowie is now worth probably $1,000,000 in his own right and is more than ever a power for evil, and he owes it all to the insane persecution of a section of the Chicago press. When virulent attacks are made on a man on account of his religious opinions and medical theories, no matter how absurd or even harmful they may be, it may be reckoned on with certainty that, in this country at least, it will gain him sympathy and support. Everyone knows that there are greater abuses in Chicago than Dowieism that are not molested. Indeed, a much larger sect than Zion holds and practices practically the same system that Dowie does and with impunity. In a free country people ought not to be dragooned into employing physicians and taking medicine. With all due respect to the noble medical profession, it must be conceded that its success in treating disease does not seem to demand that the treatment shall be compulsory.—Chicago Chronicle.

If statistics were taken, relatively, in the practice of the self-styled "Regular" profession and the doing-nothing system of Dowie, the disparagement would be largely in favor of the humbuggery of Dowie. It is a notorious fact, that tons of the most poisonous drugs are poured down the throats of the people constantly; and those who have observed in small communities where there has been freedom from disease and the necessity for the employment of physicians, know that upon the entrance and location of a physician in the place, the undertaker's business has been almost immediately set up. The undertakers follow closely in the wake of the "Regulars." More people are killed by the drugs administered by these killed (?) "Regulars" than would die of disease if let alone; and the very fact that the "Regular" profession must be sustained by special legislation and its compulsory employment, is a disgraceful commentary on the success of the profession.

The Recognized Power of Education.

The Influence of Modern Education and the Prevailing Evils of Civilization; Fallacy Productive of Present Social Conditions; Purpose of the Koreshan University System.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE PRESENT prevalent hatred of declared allegiance to formulated creeds and dogmas is due to the fact that those extant have produced evil fruit, being put forth from a university system based upon fallacies. Men have assumed to know what they did not know, and have educated the officials of both church and state to exercise faith according to the pernicious errors of science falsely so called. State and church have united in sustaining the false prophet, who in turn has sustained them—on the one hand in an adulterous consortism, and on the other in complete divorce. The false prophet, represented in one sphere by the bull of papal infallibility, has been the power behind both throne and altar to uphold the desecration of both church and state, through the prostitution of their divine uses.

It cannot be denied that all nations and churches depend primarily upon their prophets or educators, whom they make morally responsible for enthroning in the minds of rising generations, either saving truth or destructive fallacy. It is written: "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." False science or fallacy generates darkness. Prophets and Apostles have united in foretelling a time of gross darkness to culminate at the end of the Christian era, when the world should be under the dominion of science falsely so called. That time is scientifically determined to be now. Today, on the thrones of all nations and before the altars of all churches, men are dominating the people who have been trained to serve the powers of evil by emissaries of the false prophet. The emissaries of the false prophet call themselves scientists of theology and physics, and other departments of science.

Most potentially they preside in schools, colleges, and universities. Here they are supposed to enlighten the minds of humanity and prepare men and women for the skilled performance of use, as functionaries of both church and state.

The authorized educators of the church of Rome so fully recognize the vital importance to its welfare, of educating the young in harmony with its creeds and dogmas, that it is satisfied only when it can control the training of its children during their most tender and impressionable years. Romish educators claim that their absolute control of a child's mind till the age of seven, almost certainly ensures the termination of its career in the fellowship and communion of the Roman Catholic church. On the other hand, the agnostic powers of state control feel equally sure that if the education of the child can be made absolutely secular, then the divorce of church and state is rendered permanent, the control of the pagan money power is protected, the only living and true God relegated to the sphere of the occult, and so called liberty of thought enjoyed, accompanied by perpetual license to do evil.

It is written: "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." A single Eye, one true Prophet or infallible Pope, is a preëminently desirable factor in all divine human organizations. State and church require the unifying power of this single Eye for God's glory—which is man's good. The Seer ordained of God prepares the way of the Grand Man of God, that ultimate holy Temple of humanity, exemplifying the conjugal bliss of the divine marriage of God and man in the unity of church and state, and the resulting harmony of universal intellection and affection, and consequent righteousness of all personal action.

If this present evil world is under the dominion of science falsely so called, the emissaries of fallacy are even now educating the minds and hearts of the rising generation to violate all the laws that underlie the legitimate relations of church and state, of man and woman, and of man to man. What then must be the awful fate, imminent as the outcome of existing institutions? It is appalling when we realize that the development of these institutions has been accompanied by the discovery of such resources of power and wealth which, if perverted, can mean naught but the terrific destruction of all present boundaries of law and order, and the letting loose of all the horrors of the lowest hells. All forms of evil are hydra-headed and prolific in their vile secretions and disseminations. The very god of hades is a hydra, a three-headed monstrosity, productive of sin, disease, and death.

One Head, one grand master mind, a reasoner who can dethrone satan from the intellect of man and plant the feet of his understanding upon the will of the flesh to subdue it, is the one true Prophet or Eye of God who can supply this world's ever-present, supreme need. Such a Prophet must offer, as a bed-rock of rest for a rational faith in that greatest promise of the universe, the one known Son of God, the knowledge of an irrefutable premise for all logical deductions, leading men to center in him their holiest aspirations. Such a prophet alone can lead the advancing hosts of rational men and angels out of the present impenetrable darkness into marvelous light, life, and liberty.

The Aquarian age, as its sign indicates, is to be an age of triumphs for absolute science only. From Aquarius proceeds the distribution of the pure river of the water of life, issuing from the throne of God and of the Lamb. Wisdom and love constitute a divine unit in the solvent of absolute science, whose Prophet is the single Eye of God. The child brought forth as the product of the divine unity, to walk in light, is the kingdom of God in earth, a Grand Man whose every member is a God.

A little, mortal, human child groping in the dark is a bundle of marvelous possibilities, a world of spirit entities, a field for the production of both wheat and tares—the elements of heaven and hell. True science institutes for mortal children a true system of education, which draws out all a child contains of good and evil, wheat and tares, and determines the destiny of all its elements. The wheat is garnered into the apex of all human development, conjunctive unity of humanity with the mind of God, while the tares are gathered into bundles for God's burning. The Prophet of God, the promoter of this scientific education, furnishes the flame for their consumption, and is the storehouse or granary into which all wheat is gathered. The field of humanity is prepared for a new growth of wheat by the burning of the tares, the annihilation of the vile body of death whose energies war against the spirit of the truth—eternal life of the immortal Word. The destruction of the wicked is a source of great enlightenment to all the prospective children of the kingdom, who, knowing good and evil, choose God for their portion.

Nineteen hundred years ago, the glory of the Jewish race culminated in the production of one Prophet of truth, whose philosophy was taught by word and deed, and whose living Word became—by the divine method of instruction, theocrasis—the impartation of his final and perfect Word of life to his disciples, and a source of continuous inspiration. This has caused them to breathe out holy aspirations for the light of His life—the wisdom and understanding of the law, ever since, for men would change their vile bodies of death for that glorious body of life—his image and likeness. The science of this attainment is the one thing worth knowing. Holy desire is substantial energy, which focalizes at the throne of God—the seat of omnipotence. Before the throne is the altar; the transmutation power is in the unity of the two in applied science, which restores to all men a substantial supply for all their needs according to the quality and tensivity of their desires.

The Golden Age is made golden by the harvest of all holy desires generated by the philosophy of Jehovah and matured by his Eloah, the science of the Sun of righteousness. The Prophet of the Golden Age is the desire of all nations in least form. He prepares the way for universal instruction in righteousness, by theocrasis, and by the organization of the College of Life, destined to develop as the divine University system. Through the agency of this he institutes the kingdom of divine uses, and calls from heaven the Church Triumphant to mother its children. The all-involving Motherhood is represented by the dominance of divine wisdom in all divine institutions of learning, and by the feminine form of the Elohist headship of the universe, the true papacy of the law of love.

The new university System instructs all would-be kings and priests unto God, in the science of the divine uses of the kingdom of the Gods in the Church Triumphant. The Church Triumphant is the matrix of all social orders, built on the foundation of the science of Universology into a great temple of hewn stones fitly joined together, and whose interior is a holy place for the worship of the only living and true God, the Holy Spirit of man perfected in Jehovah's image and likeness. In the social orders of the kingdom of uses, true science reveals to man that divine love is the fulfilling or obeying the laws of Moses, which are the laws of divine life. The science of their application in application makes love's labor light in every sense, and a joy of duty.

It is the purpose of the Koreshan University System, now organized as the College of Life, to meet the present supreme need of the world by the institution of educational processes under the instruction of genuine science. "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue, knowledge," wrote the Apostle to the churches. The supreme virtue is the spirit of obedience to what is known to be right. All instruction in righteousness in the Koreshan University is strictly scientific, and is received and applied in the kingdom of divine uses, mothered by the church of the Most High, the home of all true disciples. Home instruction in the best methods of economizing time and effort that recreation may be perpetual, is the offer of this new institution of learning, of which Universology, the science of all truth, is the foundation. It must be entered soon or later by all who would become children of the divine kingdom, men in Christ Jesus. Requisite for admission is the teachableness of children who know that they know not, and desire to be taught by one so wise that he knows, and knows that he knows, a genuine Prophet ordained of God.

The Home or Ecclesia of the College of Life is the correspondent of the universe of known form, limitations, and organized functions. The State is the society of Jesus, the Arch Triumphant, who went about doing good, distributing according to human needs the common wealth of all its members. The College is the universal generator of light and heat, by the applied science of the law for the life of the home and all its inhabitants. The curriculum is superior to all other courses of study. The graduates are God-men thoroughly furnished unto all good works. The entrance fee is all that you are and have and hope to be—the whole-hearted consecration of the mortal to the immortal or divine life. "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way." The gate is the needle's eye; and the way is the anointed and translated Prophet, who prepares the table of the Lord in the presence of his enemies. His head is anointed with oil; his cup runneth over. "Drink ye all of it," for it is filled from the fountain of genuine science—the pure river of the water of life.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

IT IS CLAIMED that the present Administration has inaugurated a period of peace and prosperity that will be known in history as the beginning of a permanent empire. The surrender of Aguinaldo and the pacification of the Philippines give occasion for the boast that a republican victory has shown that imperialism and the centralization of power are opposed to war and insurrection. No doubt it is true that Aguinaldo was discouraged by the result of the last election, though he did not surrender voluntarily. He was captured by a ruse. It is also true that imperialism as a divine principle founded deep in the nature of all things, does make for peace; but there is no valid evidence to prove that unity and concord have begun, nor do the signs of the hour justify the inference that a permanent empire can grow out of the dominant party. The eyes of all nations have been turned toward the President of the United States in his journey through the country. It has been in every sense an imperial progress, and from southland to westland the enthusiasm attending his passage has increased as he approached the Golden Gate where it reached its climax. The city of the Angels gave him joyous greeting and prepared a beautiful pageant in his honor. Roses were showered upon his carriage, until he sat knee deep in the fragrant petals. The Presidential cortege drove over beds of roses, and flowers of all kinds formed the triumphal arch beneath which it passed. In his speech at Memphis, Tenn., at the outset of his journey, President McKinley spoke of the welcome accorded him as expressive of the universal good feeling existing among the people, irrespective of state or political lines. "What a mighty, resistless power for good is a united nation of free men! It makes for peace and prestige, for progress and liberty. No citizen of the republic rejoices more than I do at this happy state, and none will do more within his sphere to continue and strengthen it." These words formed part of the address of April 30. What has happened among the free men of this united and happy nation during the brief interval? The consolidation of the two great opposing forces—labor and capital, has been accelerated to a degree that seems appalling unless the mind is able to grasp the situation in all its bearings. Every day is marked by a new project or a threatened strike, and the entire country has passed through the severest financial crisis it has ever known.

While the head of this administration was feted at Los Angeles, Wall street became a scene of mad excitement. The very day those ceremonies which seem to show such harmony of feeling took place, will be memorable as Blue Thursday—a day when thousands of small speculators were ruined. The press, as the organ of the money power, speaks lightly of this disaster, and dwells upon the noble conduct of the bankers who steadied the market so quickly; but even the press admits that great numbers of the middle class lost everything, while the large firms escaped. This is the old, old story! Can this be called a united nation of free men, when the gambling instincts of merciless and mercenary stock brokers can produce such fluctuations in finance? The fortunate who were of course among those already more than wealthy, bought stock at 84 and sold at 700 in the swift mounting of values. The President of the United States is virtually an emperor, and the honors he receives are almost as imperialistic as if the inauguration ceremonies had given him a crown; but peace and prosperity do not wait upon an empire that is founded upon the love of money and impelled by competition. Its future history will be written in blood. The cup of discontent is filled to the brim and must soon overflow. Despite the demonstrations that seem to evince unanimity of feeling, there is another and an opposing force that is gathering strength every day. In the ancient banquets when the guests were crowned with flowers and sated with meats, the emblem of death was set before their eyes to remind them of mortality. While flowers were showered upon the brilliant cortege in California, a specter was gliding in and out among the throng,—the specter of the wage slave, and his pale forehead wore no garland.

Contact with Nature develops the love of the beautiful, but only so far as it is accompanied by a perception of cosmic harmony. The science of æsthetics is properly an outgrowth of the science of cosmogony. Nature must be understood before she can be loved. It has been widely contended that scientific understanding and poetic feeling are incompatible, while in reality the one presupposes the other. Most of our poetry is in the minor key because the poet's mind cannot reconcile the tragedy of human life with the exquisite symphony of a soft spring morning. The thunderbolt and the earthquake form a puzzling contrast to the sunset and the moonbeams streaming over the waters. Those arts which depend upon a sympathetic comprehension of Nature are now imperfect. The introduction of Koreshan Science will be followed by the growth of the æsthetic faculty in those who come into a perception of the divine harmony of Nature's laws. In a great tree, grace of outline and majesty of proportion awaken keener delights when accompanied by knowledge that the cycle of vegetable life illustrates the wonderful law of involution and evolution, by which God himself infolds and unfolds. From individuals the mind passes to generals, and grasps the vast whole as one complete thought—another illustration of the one law. No one can enjoy Nature as depicted by the impressionist school of art, which places upon canvas only the reflection of a passing mood in the painter occasioned by a false impression of some phase of natural beauty. The result is a painful incongruity sadly miscalled a work of art. Painting and poetry are both inexpressibly sad because they are both dominated by Darwin's interpretation of Nature. Our sweetest songs should be those which tell of joyous thought, our grandest pictures, those which instantly awaken sublime emotions in the soul. To realize that the same law is inherent in God and in the atom, gives æsthetic as well as scientific delight. Æsthetics is the science of the beautiful, and beauty and truth are one in essence. Figures of speech are the ornaments of truth, and a metaphor is the carrying over of the life of one domain into that of another; it involves the law of the cross and the law of transmutation. Jesus was the Lion of the tribe of Judah. This is metaphorical language. It is a comparison founded upon an innate resemblance, and it bears across the spirit or the idea of the noblest creature in the animal kingdom into the God kingdom, through the human as the mediator between them. Jesus said: "I am the bread of life," using a metaphor. His translation was the bearing over of the life of the God kingdom into the human kingdom through the action of the law of transmutation. Again, when it is said that figures are the flowers of speech, mathematics are married to language, both conjoining in the floral kingdom. It is objected that correspondences are not scientific but arbitrary, depending upon the fancy of the interpreter. There are correspondences in different degrees, but all correspondences founded in pure truth are exact. Let reason be the arbiter, and forbear to sneer at the language of symbolism, which is God's speech, full of beauty.

It is the function of this publication to respond to inquiries on subjects concerning which all men are in doubt. By their own confession they stand convicted of ignorance regarding the nature of the soul. A modern clergyman whose text is the soul and whose sermon is reported in one of the Chicago Sunday papers, opens his discourse by a frank disavowal of any information on his chosen subject. "As to what the soul is, of what elements it is composed, neither you nor I dare make any dogmatic assertion. * * * Whether the soul consists of some sublimated material substance, like the ether which fills interplanetary spaces, or is essentially different from anything we call matter, is a question which at present puzzles the thoughtful world." Koreshan Science dares to make a positive statement concerning the subject in debate. Physical light and heat are the product of the combustion of matter. Mental light and heat, or intellect and love, which constitute the spirit and the soul of man, are also created by the combustion of matter in the cells of the brain. The reciprocal action of mind and matter is the great secret of life.

Astronomers cannot decide whether the sun's corona is reflected sunlight or a luminous gas. The corona is actually created at the time of eclipse by the meeting and combustion of two energies, one coming from the sun, the other from the moon, so neither of the current theories is correct. Parties of astronomers went to Sumatra to observe the eclipse visible there May 17. They were looking at a sun which they believe to be 92,000,000 miles away. What they really saw is a projected sun only a thousand miles away, at the junction of our atmosphere with the sea of hydrogen above. They were searching for inter-Mercurial planets, but in reality there are only seven planets—all of which are known. They were trying to ascertain the nature of the corona, caused as they think by the intervention of the moon, about 92,000,000 miles distant from the sun, between the eye and the sun; but the sun and moon are really very near each other, and the corona is a wonderful electromagnetic phenomenon. The sun is crowned when its central radiations of light are cut off. Only in the thick darkness is its crown visible.

Why is a great combination of interests like the union of the Standard Oil and the Steel Manufacturing Companies called a trust? Ostensibly, it is because the board of managers is supposed to hold in trust the affairs of the corporation, and the stockholders trust them to protect their interests. Names at the present time imply a perversion of principles. The board of managers keeps the rich cream for itself and—waters the general stock. Trust and truth are terms which are one in origin. What truth does the modern trust embody? The centralization of trust in the truth as communicated to the world through the gospel of the new age, will adjust industry and commerce. We do not use the word truth in a relative sense as dependent upon man's perceptive powers. Truth is fixed, eternal, inhering in the Godhead, and at stated intervals it is communicated to the world. These periods of enlightenment occur in accordance with the laws of demand and supply. When a contingent of humanity is ripe enough to desire genuine science it receives what it asks.

"There may be two conceptions of the egg," writes Dr. Loeb, "either a complex animal structure, or it is made up of a few simple elements which will in time result in the full grown animal. The process of development is not only a morphological but a chemical differentiation. From our point of view,—that of knowledge,—the chick develops from the egg by cellular changes which are all alchemical in their nature. In other words, the same laws that operated to produce the egg itself, conspire to develop the chick—attraction of atoms every one of which has its own psychic and pneumatic qualities, and union which is a combustion resulting from the energy of attraction. There is no such recombination of elements as chemistry believes. Embryology is a continuous creation. Every corpuscle is an alchemical retort where the transmutation of substances takes place. Morphological changes are alchemical changes.

All mental forces are substantial, and love is the most life-giving. By means of it, conjunction between different spheres is effected and the life of one plane is carried over into another. To come into immortal life and form conjunction with the God kingdom, man must cut off the lower animal tendencies. Love is alchemical union in which numerous ascending and descending products are created. Affection for animals affords man an opportunity to send down the lower animal spirit, receiving in return the ascending desires of the lower kingdom. The divine animal spirit is the breath of lives; animal being from anima, the breath, the life.

The idea of spiritual salvation without works is the logical antecedent of the idea of material salvation without works. If man may hope to gain the delights of heaven without the works of righteousness, which are chastity, love, and use, he will very naturally try to gain the advantages of earth without performance of use to society,—hence this sudden outbreak of speculation, which means wealth without work—fortune for me, ruin for my neighbor; idleness for me, eleven hours a day for him.

How many object lessons like Blue Thursday will the common people of this country require before they will rise in their might to protest in some peaceable manner if it be possible, if not, vi et armis against an economic system that is subject to such derangements?

Thought generated by the mind that holds the truth is the dynamic force of revolution.

The torch of Koreshan Science will illumine every dark spot in the universe.

"Be ye patient even as I am patient," is the fiat of supreme Wisdom.

The mind that is impressed by error cannot express the truth.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED BY KORESH.

Koreshan View of Moral Responsibility.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I would like to have you discuss (1) the subject of moral responsibility from the Koreshan standpoint, and show difference between it and the popular view. (2) Please state some of the principal uses and abuses of reward and punishment. (3) Define the term sin, and locate the responsibility for its existence. (4) What, in the physical world, corresponds to sin in humanity?—G. F. H., Ft. Worth, Tex.

(1) A man is morally responsible when he knows the law. Let us take for illustration the general attitude of mankind under the common law of marriage. A man regards it a sin to violate the monogamic law of marital relation, or to indulge in sexual pleasure without that garb of legality which the law imposes and permits. The relation once legalized, he ordinarily does not regard excess as any violation of the marital law. This is because of his false education. He sins ignorantly under the guise of legality; it is, however, none the less destructive to his mental and physical integrity. The sin of ignorance is destructive to his being. It is through the experience of these sins of ignorance that men acquire wisdom to know the law.

The Koreshan differs in his ideas of moral responsibility from the popular view, in that he has a deeper insight into what the law of life demands. Suppose we take the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." The popular idea is that I must not go into my neighbor's domain and help myself to the property which belongs to my fellow, either as a neighbor or a stranger; but the laws of the country provide that men like Carnegie, Rockefeller, J. Pierpont Morgan, etc., may steal—under the legitimate rights of the competitive system—millions or even billions of dollars from the slaves which the competitive system has made. From the competitive standpoint this is not a violation of moral obligation, but from a righteous standpoint it is a violation.

Our moral obligation to humanity would equitably distribute this wealth, as belonging to the men who have created it. We would not do this in violation of the laws as we have made them, for we believe in law and order, but we would change the laws. We would not, however, expect to accomplish this by any reformation not revolutionary, nor by any process of gradual change in popular sentiment on the basis of social evolution, but through the manner that our knowledge of law predetermines; namely, through a great and marvelous baptism about to be poured upon the race.

(2) The entire system of rewards and punishments is predicated upon the basis of competitiveness, fear, and cupidity. This system is absolutely false. It requires a radical revolution in the soul itself to eliminate from the thoughts the selfish tendency. There is such a thing as the performance of use from the impulse of love to the neighbor. If one has not experienced this prompting he cannot be taught to believe in it.

(3) Sin is the violation of law. This is true on every plane of activity. Physiological sins are violations of physiological laws. There are deeper physiological laws than are commonly known. The responsibility for existence is in the love of existence—a love abiding eternally in being itself.

(4) For example, the radiations of the sun's energies—light, heat, electricity, magnetism, etc., the transformation of these energies to vegetable and animal growth, and then to the debris of vegetable and animal waste.

Koreshan Optics and Cosmogony.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—You say that foreshortening does not take place in space, nor on the surface of the earth and sky, but within the eye. A critic wants to know why the plate in a camera, having no visual force nor curves of vision, registers the picture as the eye sees it.

I see that the Koreshan theory of optics and the Cellular Cosmogony fit. While reasoning from analogy I can come to no other conclusion than that the Koreshan Astronomy is true, so must accept the theory of vision in harmony with it; but I would like to understand it from other reasons than analogy. Will you kindly state briefly what proofs, if any, support the Koreshan theory of optics, leaving out the authority of KORESH, his illumination, and the certainty of the concave curvature as determined by geodetic survey? I see the importance of such demonstration, yet without such proof, and allowing Koreshan assumption to the same extent as Copernican assumption (and you have the same right), the Koreshan Astronomy still seems greatly superior to the Copernican in quality and quantity of satisfying proofs of truth, reaching into every domain.—M. A. P., Antioch, O.

(1) There is nothing in matter that is not acted upon and made to yield energy. The sensitive plate of a camera acts precisely as does the sensitive plate of the vitreous chamber; namely, the retina. The camera is an artificial eye. It has not a brain behind it to receive the picture, nor can it supply its own coating of collodion, as can the eye. What the eye has by nature, the artist supplies to the camera. The plate has a force corresponding to the visual force. The visual force comes from the brain cells, but the force of the camera is in the light entering the camera and in the destruction of material and its conversion to energy on the plate.

The form of the eye, the relation of its organs, and the necessary agreement of function with form all go to show that the Koreshan theory of vision is true. In normal conditions, there can be no conflict between form and function. The rapid nerve exhaustion, in rapid change of scenery, is one of the simplest proofs that visual energy is derived from the brain cells, which derive their supply through the vascular and nervous systems. We have records of cases of exhaustion from the waste of energy through vision, and under our own observation in many instances have we seen complete nervous exhaustion through the excessive use of the eye in the rapid resupply of the visual films on the retina.

Inquiries Concerning the Future.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) When the birth of the Sons of God takes place, will the remainder of humanity be purged of its wickedness, and will children born during the Golden Age be without sin? Will the 144,000 be independent of physical sustenance? (2) Will the ascending life of the Messiah of the age be the ruling God of the next cycle of 24,000 years?

Will he be martyred as was Jesus? (3) Does the devil perpetually renew himself and become incarnated in the person of one man, even as does God?—M. W., Otumwa, Ia.

(1) When the Sons of God are born, created, they will influence the entire race of men, but all men will not be purged of their sins. They will receive a new impulse, and the human hells will be subjugated and brought into order. Children born during the Golden Age, after the higher law of reproduction, will be born according to the normal plane of that sphere. This does not apply to all people, but only to such in the marital order as have reached the plane of scientific propagation.

The Sons of God will have the power to appropriate material food supplies, and in order to accomplish some results devolving upon them, will sometimes resort to common sustenance. This is to a certain extent optional. The quantity will be comparatively slight, and of the most simple kind.

(2) The ascending and centralizing conjunctive life of the Messiah of this age becomes one with the nucleus of the universe; hence he now is heir to the throne of God, and will sit upon that throne and rule the universe in love. He will be martyred, but not as Jesus was, for his martyrdom will not be by a crucifixion.

(3) The devil perpetually renews himself, and he does become incarnate. The devil was incarnate nineteen hundred years ago, in Judas Iscariot. He was the focal point of the dark or fallacious energies of the race. As a focal point of activity, he executed the will of the mass which focalized in him, and became specifically manifest when he was given the sop from the Lord, and satan entered him.

Primitive Church Communistic.

The Teaching of Jesus and His Disciples was Against Private Ownership of Property.

Jesus stood unequivocally against the private ownership of property. By both word and practice in His little fellowship, he advocated always the common ownership and use of all things. "They had all things common." The right of common use was never a debatable question with Him in his teaching. His command to the rich young ruler who would inherit eternal life, was to sell all that he had and give to the poor; that is, wherever there was need of food, whether of body or mind. The unqualified condition by which one could be His disciple, was that he must forsake absolutely and completely all private wealth.

"Except a man forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." Again, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth." To the really earnest seeker for truth, there cannot possibly be any misunderstanding of Jesus' position with regard to man's economic relations to his fellow-man.

Common Ownership Required.

Common ownership was the universal economic practice of early Christianity. It was the condition of fellowship among the twelve. It was true for the seventy; it was the immediate result of conversion of the three thousand at Pentecost. It is the significant fact in the account of another body of five thousand that believed and committed themselves to the Christian fellowship. It was considered so essential to discipleship that there is recorded the sudden striking dead by the very power of truth itself, of a man and his wife who would come into the brotherhood, but would keep back for private ownership a part of what they possessed. It would seem that it was absolutely fatal to be untrue to this requirement. It was the unflinching practice of the early church until the time of Constantine.

A bishop betrayed Christianity into the hands of authority by the Emperor's adoption of the name, popularizing the movement at the expense of the surrender of this hitherto unconditional requirement—that all private wealth must be exchanged for common wealth upon entering the Christian brotherhood. This step made the religion of Jesus popular, but was fatal to the quality of its life. From that day to this we have not had a true, but a perverted Christianity. The basic thing upon which it is today perverted is this very question of the ownership and use of property. This is the significant fact in all that is included in Phillips Brooks' famous saying that "It cannot be proved that Christianity is a failure, for it has never been tried in modern times."

Now, Jesus was either correct or he was not in his teaching and practice on this most vital question of the economic life. If he was correct, then the churches of the twentieth century that profess the name of Christianity must either fulfil and live the economic as well as other requirements of the Gospel, or forever stand convicted of hypocrisy before an enlightened public conscience. If Jesus was not correct, or was impractical in this part of his doctrine, the very serious question is raised as to whether he may not be incorrect in other parts of his doctrine and practice. The whole of His teaching stands or falls together as a code of human conduct and as a basis of religious experience.

The Truth Must be Lived.

If we accept the teachings of Jesus on economics as correct, then it at once becomes the most revolutionary truth that can be stated today—both for the individual and for the social whole. It means the complete overturning of our whole present order of things. It means that the world today is absolutely mammonistic in all the manner and conversation of its life. It means that private wealth is wrong; that common wealth only has an ethical right to existence. It means that the man who makes one dollar under the present system is just as mammonistic as the man who makes a million under the same system. Jesus said: "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon!"—Forward Movement Herald.

Development of the South.

Tangible Evidences Pointing to the Fulfillment of Korashan Prophecies Concerning the South and West Indies.

We are to see in the near future a great change in the distribution of immigrants in this country. For a quarter of a century the tides have been flowing to the West and the Northwest, but great numbers are henceforth sure to go to the South. This rich part of our country—rich in the way of minerals and soil—has attracted far more people from other sections than it has settlers from Europe. Several facts explain the reason. In the first place, the transcontinental railroads have had their agents busily at work in Europe, and have operated in connection with the steamship companies.

The immigrant in buying his ticket in Europe, generally bought it to some Western or Northwestern point. Another thing was the large number of lynchings in the South, which, being reported in European newspapers, gave the impression that in the Southern states life was not secure and property was not protected. These influences are passing away. The South itself has for some time been taking steps to show how false the general inference is. As a matter of fact, people live as securely in the Southern states as in any other section of the world. The few cases of lynching are horrible, but they do not portray the actual conditions of the different states of the South.

The industrial branches have done a superb service in showing the opportunities open in the South, especially in the way of manufacturing, and they are still adding to their usefulness in this direction. But best of all, probably, in the way of the new influences, is the coming of practical business men from Northern and Western sections. Go to a Southern city today, and you will find these men not only making money rapidly, but taking active part in the social and political life. Then, too, the large profits which the cotton mills and other factories are making will attract in greater measure those who have money to invest and those who wish to utilize the opportunities.

It is in its way a fine thing that the Southerners are to hold a West Indian Exposition at Charleston, South Carolina. There is no purpose, so far as the managers have expressed themselves, to do anything but to encourage the commerce of the West India Islands to trade with the Southern states. But when the exhibits are shown, we predict that there will be a curious result. The South will show that it can produce practically everything that the West Indies are raising, and that it can show manufacturing products equal to the best of the North.

The exposition at Atlanta years ago was a success in demonstrating to the country the beginnings of the new life of the new South. Bad management made the New Orleans Exposition a failure, but the other expositions that followed it had their meed of prosperity, and it is quite likely that Charleston will reap the reward of its enterprise.

The figures of the growth of the South since the Civil War seem more miracle than fact. In many states values have increased tenfold; in some particular spots, a hundred and a thousand fold. There was a time, not many years ago, when the South received a set-back second only in its disastrous effects to the Civil War, and that was through the outbreak of speculation and the almost universal exploitation of land booms. But all that has gone. The people have recovered and have settled down to the normal, and now the growth is legitimate development; and thus all who, wanting to change their abode, have gone there are finding out that it is a goodly place, inhabited by goodly people.—LYNN ROBY MEEKINS, in Saturday Evening Post.

Skepticism in Germany.

Decline of the Church in the East; the German Empire Reaping a Harvest of Infidelity.

The following article from an unknown writer, describes the condition of affairs in Germany as it was in 1879, and in the main as it probably is today. And when we remember that not far from two millions of the German people have already come to America, we surely cannot be indifferent to these facts.

"Germany is reaping the harvest of advanced thought or skepticism. Crime increased during the six years, 1873-79, in Prussia from 50 to 200 or 300 per cent; the imprisonments in Prussia, Hanover, and the Rhine provinces alone have risen from 102,077 in 1872, to 193,734 in 1876, and the number today is reckoned at 150,000. The prisons are all full, and patriotic men are urging the formation of a penal colony on some island of the Pacific or section of Western Africa. A few months ago the chaplain of the imperial family, Mr. Bauer, in a sermon preached before the Emperor and princes, said:

"Affection, faith, and obedience to the Word of God are unknown in this country, in this our great German Fatherland, which formerly was justly called the home of the faith. On the contrary, it really seems as if it were the father of all lies who is now worshiped in Prussia. What formerly was considered generous and noble is now looked upon with contempt; and theft and swindling are called by the euphonic name 'business.' Marriages are concluded without the blessing of the church, concluded 'on trial,' to be broken, if not found to answer. We still have a Sunday, but it is only a Sunday in name, as the people work during church hours, and spend the afternoon and evening in rioting in the public houses and music halls; while the upper classes rush to the races, preferring to hear the panting of the tortured horses to hearing the Word of God, which is ridiculed in the press and turned into blasphemy in the popular assemblies; the servants of God are insulted daily.'

"The Berlin correspondents of English journals add: 'The German clerical newspapers, Protestant as well as Catholic, are writing in a like strain.' Berlin, with a population of one million, has only 110 ministers of religion—both Protestant and Roman Catholic, and the average attendance at each place of worship is below one hundred. House to house inquiries show that in the same city 'in less than one house out of eight is there any regular use or even possession of the Bible.' The state of religion and morals in the country is a cause of the greatest grief and anxiety to many of the best citizens. This social deterioration and increase of crime does not come from ignorance. Nor does the prevalence of immorality arise from a lack of artistic and æsthetic culture. Nor is intemperance the cause. The one chief reason for the degeneration of a once noble people is the substitution of skepticism for the faith in the Scriptures."—The Christian.

Groping of Scientists.

Vivisection a Growing Fad in the Medical World; Thousands of Animals Tortured that a New Theory Take its Place Among the Fallacies.

Twenty thousand domestic animals have been experimented on at Trenton, N. J., with a view to making discoveries about their brains and nervous systems. Among them are monkeys, dogs, calves, rabbits, guinea pigs, and goats. Most of them have holes in their heads, with glass windows fitted in, through which the experimenters are constantly watching the circulation of the brain. Delicate instruments record the changes produced by various kinds of treatment. These animals are experimented on by Drs. Warner and Arnold, who are developing a new system of treatment, called the chano-neural therapy. This consists in treating diseases by regulating the nerve and brain centers, controlling the parts of the body affected. The animals are expected to show how the nerves and brains of human beings may be manipulated.

Lecture by Koresh.

The Founder of Koreshanity will deliver a Lecture on Koreshan Universology, Sunday, 3: 30 p. m., May 26, 1901, at Koreshan Hall, 4th floor, 315-19 Englewood ave., Chicago.

A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in advanced thought.

Just think of twenty thousand innocent, helpless animals being tortured, and for what? Many hundreds of years the medical fraternity has been in existence, and for a greater period of time it has been classed among the so called sciences. Drugs of all kinds have driven our people into early graves, and now, in the dawn of this new century, the doctors think by means of cruel experiments on weak, resistless animals that they can prove that drugs should no longer be used in the curing of diseases. They can easily prove that without barbecuing animals.

We have so called Christians in our land, who send missionaries to other countries to teach the people to worship our kind of a God, to pray as we do, and meddle generally in religious and social affairs of others. We spend millions of dollars on churches in which to worship a certain kind of god; we pride ourselves upon our superior ethics, and yet stand passively by while twenty thousand little animals are gathered in one institution with holes in their heads, parts of their anatomy destroyed, and all kinds of nauseating and hideous treatment gone through. This in a civilized land! Had we not better send to China for missionaries, and to India for people to teach us kindness, to these little creatures? The thought of the punishment to which these dumb brutes are subject is enough to cause an uprising among humane people. Vivisection is a heinous crime, standing as a shameless blot on the pages of history of a supposed-to-be highly civilized section. Oh! the crimes committed in the name of science.—Faith and Hope Messenger.

Utah's Anti-Vaccination Law.

The following law was lately adopted in Utah. "That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any Board of Health, Board of Education, or any other Public Board, acting in this State under police regulations or otherwise, to compel, by resolution, order, or proceedings of any kind, the vaccination of any child or person of any age, or making vaccination a condition precedent to the attendance at any public or private school in the State of Utah, either a pupil or a teacher."

This law was first passed by the legislature and vetoed by the Governor; then was passed again by the legislature over the Governor's veto, which takes a two thirds majority. It will not be long before other States will follow suit. The people will be free to vaccinate or not as their conscience dictates.—Hygieio-Therapy, Kokomo, Ind.

The Flaming Sword in India.

We have been receiving copies of THE FLAMING SWORD. It apparently appears to be against the usually received tenets of Christianity, and contains some references to a new form of religious upheaval called Koreshanity. The latter appears to be a complete system of the science of the great universe of life, and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. References to astrological principles are also found in our new contemporary, and his arguments are convincing.—The Astrological Magazine, Madras, India.

THE LIBRARY of the Koreshan System contains brief expositions of the Universology of KORESH, in its unique interpretation of the Laws, Phenomena, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence, and in the scientific revelation of the character of God and Man and their relations. This Unique Literature is specially adapted to meet the demands of the truth-seeker and to satisfy the commendable curiosity of the modern mind.

A glimpse of Koreshan Universology, in its application to human thought and life, preparatory to the establishment of the Social Theocratic System, called the Kingdom of God, may be obtained by a careful study of fundamental principles.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Conspiracy of the Medical Trust.

Legal Farce Enacted in Chicago; Steps Taken to Force People to Drink Drugs; Allopathic School Alarmed Concerning Success of Mental Healing.

AS WE WRITE, one of the greatest legal farces that has ever characterized "jurisprudence" is being enacted in Chicago. The interests of the medical profession are being jeopardized through the growing tendency of the masses of the people to seek relief from their ailments through sources other than drug medication. The Allopathic school of medicine is a failure, and the people are waking to the fact that where drugs and the dispensers of drugs have failed to afford relief, there is a possibility, after all, of bringing into requisition the reserve force of mental power. Physicians and their drugs have failed in thousands of instances, where cures have been effected through the power of mental suggestion and other mental operations. This is an every-day experience, and observation warrants the conviction that so called medicine as practiced by the "Regular" profession is empiricism. The fact that the medical profession is undergoing an unprecedented excitement and alarm for its safety, and is resorting to legal processes for its security, are evidences of the truth of our assertions.

Patients have died despite the psychological efforts of Dowie and his adherents; and because they have died without the aid of the "Regulars," Dowie is subjected to the venomous and vicious persecution of the medical profession, reinforced by the daily press of Chicago, the leading element of which boasts that it employs the habitual writers of fiction to produce its best results. A recent case reported by the Chicago daily press, died in the hands of the "Regulars" after a lingering illness, where, in addition to the ordinary medical treatment, the streets were blockaded that no noise from the outside world might jar the nervous susceptibilities of the sick girl—but she died. Why were there not set up a hue and cry that if this girl, drugged to death by the profession, had been left to the influence of Dowie and prayer, she would have recovered, as have been done in so many instances? Has it come to such a pass in this country, where we boast of personal liberty, that we must submit to the experiments of the medical profession whether we will or not, and pour down our throats the poisonous nostrums against which every sentiment of our being revolts? If a man has any personal rights whatsoever, may he not at least claim the right to the kind of medication which he prefers?

We have reached that stage of progress in our liberty where, if we would indulge in the pursuit of happiness,—a guarantee vouched to us by the Constitution of the United States,—we must belong to some trust and take the medicine which the trust prescribes. If we would "buy or sell," we must belong to the banking trust; if we would work, we must join the labor-union trust, or be beaten with clubs or brickbats; if we are sick, we must submit to the medical trust, which in the state of Illinois is at present under a law which, contrary to the Constitution of the state, was hurried through the Senate without the readings which the law imposes, and pushed through the legislature for the purpose of placing the entire medical faculty of the state under subjection to the most bigoted, senseless, arbitrary, and venomous combination that has ever infested society. We speak of the Allopathic school of medicine.

There can be no question of the power of mental suggestion, nor of the fact that the methods employed by the Eddyites and Dowieites, as well as hundreds of others, are successful in treating the sick. We do not object to Dowie on that basis. We do not believe that he is ignorant of the fact that his success is due to his psychological powers, and that he works upon the credulity of the people by cloaking his operations precisely as Mrs. Eddy has done, with the guise of religion, which is his guise of hypocrisy.

Healing by psychological or mental influence has never been as successful under the Eddy system, or under the operation of Dowie, or any of the hundreds who practice "hypnotism," as it was thirty or forty years ago under Mr. Bryant and Professor Newton, who went through this country healing the sick and performing miracles, and yet neither of them pretended that he accomplished his cures by any other process than psychological or mental power. They were not religious men, and did not pretend to exert a religious influence.

We enjoy the discomfiture of the "Regular" quacks, the profession and practice of whom are known to be a system of empiricism, as confessed by the noblest men who have ever stood at the head of the medical profession. There is no law, nor can there be one which can prevent a man from telling the world that every person has the right to depend on faith, if he desires to exercise faith; or on mental suggestion, if he wants mental suggestion, or on nothing, if he prefers to be let alone by a class of men who have murdered more people by the administration of poisons than have ever died from natural causes.

The strongest legal point yet made against Mr. Dowie, up to date, is that a nurse applied a little vaseline on a rag, to the burn of a patient with whom Dowie had nothing to do. The vaseline had not been sterilized before using; this report was created by a writer of fiction or the purpose of creating public sentiment, which is supposed to succeed where the law fails. There is no legal point against Dowie, but there is a public sentiment induced through sensational novel writers, employed by the most sensational newspaper forger that hell ever let loose.

It is claimed that Dowie is worth millions of dollars. It may be so. It is claimed that his methods are illegitimate; but they are along the lines of the competitive system, which is one great scheme of gigantic robbery; and if he is as successful as some of the other millionaires it need excite no jealousy, for he is in the swim for all there is in it—like all the rest of the money robbers and hoarders. He is virtuous in that he is raiding and discomfiting that school of monopoly which shows its weakness in attempting to secure special legislation to compel the people to take its drugs. If the medical profession cannot stand its hand with the mental healers of all classes, in a fair test submitted to public opinion, it ought to go by the board. It demonstrates its absolute helplessness and medical impotence when it resorts to legislation to compel the citizens of a state to submit to its imbecility.

Human happiness is a possible attainment, to which all men and women have the right to aspire. As a state or condition to be gained by a correct adjustment of all relations, it is within the reach of every human being, and can be enforced by the due exercise of that degree of liberty vouched to American citizens under the Constitutional provisions already insured. This adjustment can be wrought through organization, under the leadership of a mind whose adamant integrity shall tower above every possibility of temptation. This generation should produce a character supreme above the love of money, the love of worldly honor, the love of family and of country, even, exalting him into the realm of that universal philanthropy which ignores everything save the unswerving purpose of placing the race upon the pedestal of equitable and just relationship.

The basis or foundation of wealth is not merely gold, but gold, silver, mercury, copper, zinc, iron, coal, earth, wood, water, in fact, every product which must constitute the objective point of all labor. None of these should be made to appear to hold a value not intrinsic. Protection on any article of commerce is a lie and a steal stamped upon the face of it; and any government that will so place a fictitious valuation, violates its intrinsic worth and is a lying and thieving government.

In the Maelstrom of Commercial Prostitution.

The World Moves under the Impulse of the Perverted Love of Money; Centralization of Wealth and Power; Deliverance Must Come Through Organic Unity.

THE GATHERED WEALTH throughout the world is the product of the industry of the masses who have divided the proceeds of their industry, giving the lion's share to the few, while depriving themselves of the necessities of existence. The heaped-up treasures of darkness are merely held in store for equitable and honorable disbursement to the industrial masses, when they have become sufficiently disciplined and educated to provide for the equitable adjustment of wealth, and to maintain the perpetuity of such equitable adjustment through an orderly system of commercial equity and integralism.

For more than thirty years the republican party has insidiously robbed the industrial masses through a great system of special legislation instituted by the bankers, brokers, bondholders, and monopolists of America, aided by the influence of British gold. For over thirty years the financial policy of the republican party, through its specious legislation and its violated pledges to the people, has been merging toward a great monetary crisis. In the meantime, the democratic party has been in power, and through its suicidal policy has shown its incompetency to cope with the emergency and give relief. As well attempt to restore a putrefying mass of garbage by throwing freshly cut vegetation upon the heap, as to attempt the reformation of the Congress of the United States by sending an honest but misguided republican or democrat to that corrupted and corrupting body. The salvation of the country resides in its ability to establish an industrial army, unitized upon one central principle on which all can unite for the protection of its interests.

An equilibrated commerce—the collection and distribution of the resources of Nature and the products of honest industry—must necessarily constitute that central principle. To insure such equity, all the avenues of transportation must be so controlled as to remove these channels of interchange from the power of monopoly, and to place them in the hands of the producers of the country and the world. A just commercial principle, then, must comprise the nucleus of the great movement for human amelioration. Commerce is the central impulse of universal activity. All the laws embraced in the active impulses of life may be found in this nucleus and originator of motion. When we remove the cause or impulse of human activities from the domain of religious, moral, and social or domestic energizing—where commerce of those spheres also comprises the determinate purpose of life in those spheres—to the plane of purely secular existence, we must cease to appeal to religious, moral, and social conceptions, and substitute a direct appeal to the sentiment prevailing in the moving mass.

Every person can comprehend the fact that the love of money moves the secular world, and that the impulse to activity in the secular domain is the love of money; hence, that the commercial idea is the central idea. Money, then, may be defined to be the guard or criterion of commercial interchange or uses of life. It need not exist as gold, silver, or paper, necessarily; for any provision that the people may institute for the regulation of the exchanges of the world may constitute money, though it be an unwritten but active sentiment. The term money, (Latin, moneta.) originally signified the guard of women. The term money had its origin from Juno—it being a surname of that Goddess. Juno was the sister and wife of Jupiter. She was the Queen of heaven, the guardian deity of woman, and the fountress of marriage. The word mint (Anglo-Saxon, mynet), coin, is from moneta, and is so called because money was first coined in the temple of Juno or Moneta.

Any responsible person, corporation, or association may issue notes or bills of exchange on the basis of a reputation to fulfil all obligations, and the notes of such person, corporation, or association will be received wheresoever the reputation for ability to meet the obligations may extend. Individuals, corporations, or associations should never issue bonds of obligation to pay in kind that which they do not possess and have no means of possessing. The people of the United States have been compelled to issue bonds of obligation to a foreign power, not in the products of industry, which they could abundantly supply, but in gold, to exceed ten times the amount out of the mines and in their possession. They have done this through a dishonest and misrepresentative body elected by themselves. This power—the Congress of the United States, elected to serve the people—has been purchased and influenced by the bankers and bondholders of this country and England, and through political rings has constituted itself a plutocracy to tyrannize over and oppress the people. If the masses would rise as one mighty phalanx to overthrow the usurper, it must be through the power of organic force—a power developed through the potential element of organized unity, and in accord with the Constitutional law of the land.

While we deplore the conditions brought upon the laboring classes through more than thirty years of political plunder, and while we reassert that the time is at hand when the people will throw off the yoke of their bondage and the thralldom of wage slavery, and relegate plutocratic tyranny to the oblivion which it deserves, we condemn the methods employed by the labor organizations to bring about the desired change. The safety of any people is in the enforcement of the laws made to regulate society. When the laws become oppressive, the Constitution provides the remedy. If at any time the Constitution fails to meet the genius of the age, it is the prerogative of the people to formulate a new one; but the forms of order should always be observed.

We are in the maelstrom of commercial prostitution. Laws have been created in the interests of falsely called capital, and expressly designed to subjugate and enthrall the poor. Profligacy in the appropriation and expenditure of the public funds, causing an augmentation of the burdens of the people, has actuated the officials of our country, and the public servants have constituted themselves political autocrats. The remedy lies not in waste of time and the destruction of property. Such methods are not the inspirations of the spirit of economy; they are not inspired by the influence in which a people may securely repose its keeping. The times demand a radical change in the administration of public affairs. The Government is so completely prostituted to the interests of the oligarchy, and so thoroughly consigned to the manipulations of debased and debauching political rings for speculative purposes, that it is a hopeless task to undertake the operation of renovating legislation through processes now employed.

In our work of formulating an organic unity, we have nothing less in view than the general unification of industry under an equitably adjusted system of progressive order in the application of industrial skill to production. This is to be wrought through our industrial school system, applied to every branch and phase of artistic, literary, and mechanical use. The system necessarily provides for the ownership of its railroad, telegraph, telephone, postal, and other service. In order to insure uniformity and alacrity in response to the general and specific directions of the order, there is to be instituted military discipline, which is to be extended to both sexes, and to be made universal.

Abolition of the Reign of Lawyers.

Legislation is at Present Against the Interests of the People; Technicalities the Loophole for Legal Hypocrisies and Unjust Decisions; the Abuse of the Courts.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

Judge Emden, of London, contributes to the Nineteenth Century a noteworthy article on the subject, "Is Law for the People or for the Lawyers?" He shows that the law and the courts, under the present English legal methods, are for the lawyers and not for the people. He remarks that the lawyers of England have a great monopoly, but they are working their own ruin by refusing to admit modern business methods into the courts. All that Judge Emden says on this point applies with even greater force to Illinois.—Chicago Tribune.

ENGLISH LEGAL PROCEDURE has been simplified by the sweeping away of cumbrous technicalities to a point far beyond what has been reached in this country; yet Judge Emden complains that "justice is still smothered under a mass of useless and costly formalities." In most cases, the point at issue is clear on both sides until the lawyers obscure it with a mass of legal verbiage and entangle it in the maze of legal technicalities. There should be but one hearing and no appeals; less injustice would be done by an occasional wrong decision than by the endless expense and uncertainty of appeals, out of which the lawyers alone make capital. He says that too many lawyers are sent to Parliament, and as a result the laws are shaped for the benefit of lawyers, having their meaning not couched in plain English but wound about and hidden under a mass of mathematical details so dear to lawyers but ruinous to the people.

In ancient times lawyers were disqualified from sitting in the House of Commons, and at one time Roman law forbade them to take a fee. Prynne says that their exclusion "shortened the duration of the session, facilitated the dispatch of business, and had the desirable effect of restoring laws to their primitive Saxon simplicity and making them most like God's commandments." Lord Chief Justice Willes said many years ago: "Whatever you do, never go to law; submit rather to almost any imposition, bear any oppression, rather than exhaust your spirits and your pockets in what is called a court of justice." Judge Emden says the advice is as good now as when it was first spoken. It has far more fitness to conditions in this country than it has in England. There the commercial world is beginning to act upon it with the result that lawyers are finding much of their most profitable business slipping away from them, by means of arbitration and other less expensive procedure. The same is becoming true in this country, where many of the greatest commercial concerns strictly forbid their agents ever to resort to the law to collect claims.

The paraphernalia of lawyers and courts are fast being cast off as worn-out habiliments, too costly and cumbersome for the new civilization. They have long ceased to afford any protection to the rights and property of the poor—the great mass of the people of every country. The writer once said to one of Chicago's great lawyers, that he knew the rich could generally, in one way or another, buy whatever they wanted, right or wrong, in the courts, but that the poor man had no standing in them unless dragged before the bar as a criminal, and, as a consequence, no rights that any one was bound to respect, since the defense of these cost money—which he had not. His reply was, that he sometimes thought the courts ought to be abolished. Once, when there was an application before the legislature of Illinois for more judges for Chicago, a commission of that body was sent to learn whether there was an actual need of such increase. Some of the judges themselves showed by the actual figures that the courts cost the people more money than the amounts collected; that is, they were an actual expense instead of a benefit.

In the deluge of fallacy—religious, economic, social, and legal—that now floods the earth, there is none more destructive to the well-being of men as citizens, than the well-nigh universal one that the training and calling of a lawyer constitute the best possible preparation for a legislator. The wisest and most experienced law-makers testify that most of the trouble in legislation and the principal source of bad laws, are the lawyers who manage to become the majority in all legislative bodies. We need not necessarily infer from this that as a body lawyers are more selfish and evilly disposed than other men. Their very education instead of peculiarly fitting them, as the people suppose, really unfits them for the business of law-making. The cause is not far to seek: the lawyer is tied hand and foot by precedent, and is entirely incapacitated for action where precedents fail him, as they often, perhaps always, do in some measure fail the legislator.

Some lawyers become useful legislators, but it is always after they have overcome the defects of their special education. Even among intelligent lawyers the temptation to shape legislation in their own interests is always before them, and they know they can do so without exciting the suspicions of other classes. An intelligent regard for the rights of other classes would require that there be not one lawyer chosen as a legislator where now there are one hundred. It is the business of the wise legislator to make precedents, not to be the slave of them.

There is another reason, still more weighty. Thomas Carlyle suggests that it is contained in that famous dictum of Demosthenes, in answer to the question as to the first, second, and third requisites of an orator, which was action—(Greek, hupokriseis; English, hypocrisy—the act of the play-actor). Fittingly, Carlyle, the poor peasant boy of Anandale, asks, why not better have the truth? The lawyer, whether pleader of human law or of God's law, is most covetous of the gifts of the orator—play-actor, and hence is unfitted to promote the ends of justice and truth. In the House of Lords, Carlyle listened for two or three hours to the oratory of noble lords, two or three centuries of which efforts he said, would not have affected him; but the venerable iron Duke, the worst speaker he ever heard, for fifteen minutes, "hawing, haing, humming, etched and scratched me out gradually a recognizable portrait of the fact, and was the only noble lord who had spoken at all." Can so many doctors, solemn pedants, and professors for some 2,000 years past—can Longinus, Demosthenes, Cicero, and all the ministers, parliaments, stump orators, and spouting places in this lower world be unanimously wearing, instead of aureoles about their heads, long ears on each side of them, unanimously sinning against Nature's fact, and stultifying and confiscating themselves and their sublime classical labors?

Privately, we have not the least doubt of it, but possess no means of saying so to advantage. "Hupokriseis is not good enough for me." Hypocrisy as cause will produce only hypocrisy as result. When the most intelligent man of his generation, to whom it was an unpardonable crime to write a word which, after careful study he had not found to be true, seriously talks in that way, it need not startle us that but a single man of his cotemporaries—the German Goethe, understands that a prophet, indeed, hath spoken. The weighty condemnation that Jesus pronounced upon all lawyers, in the light of Koreshanity, will soon be vindicated to all men, and the cruel reign of lawyers will forever cease.

The Christ According to Modern Standard.

Great Disparity Between Jesus the Messiah and Christians of the Present Time; Contrast of Character of Advents and Exits of True and False Claimants to Divine Sonship.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

WAS CHRIST A CHRISTIAN? a Christian after the modern standard, we mean. Identical growths proceed from identical principles, conform to identical laws, and are thus established as identical. Let us consider the weight of evidence as bearing upon an imaginary claim put forth by the Son of God, for fellowship with these latter-day sons of his Father. In projecting two antithetical chains of facts which in some quarter may provoke profitable thought, we place diametrically opposed advents and exits in contrast. We oppose the introduction and the conclusion of the Child of God of nineteen hundred years ago, with the same events in the history of the children of God of today; for the comprehension of the character of a life necessitates circumspection of its beginning and ending as an object. The inner man, compound of the principles of life, cannot be disassociated from the body—the medium of its manifestation. Though but a fragment of the career of either existence, we will treat the arrival in the manger and the arrival in the cradle as the beginning, respectively, of the Son and the sons; and the departure in the cloud and the departure in the coffin, as the ending of the same.

Constant witnesses are we to the passing of the modern children: "The black earth yawns, the mortal disappears;" and in all the field of today's Christianity there exist no expectation and no earnest desire to abandon the beaten path of death. The strength of this subjugation is rooted in the experience of the centuries; it rests upon the sum of all observation; it is crowned by unquestioning obedience. Before the devil's power—death, God's children bend the knee, and vaunt of victory as unsubstantiated by evidence as it is unreal in fact. If death's behest falls by violence from a Christian foe, God's child summons his ebbing strength for a return blow, and the Christian world dubs him hero if he blots out his brother in the Lord. If the apparent summons is not obeyed, it is not triumph, but truce; it is the postponement of the inevitable—the putting off of those changes too horrible for mention, which must soon or late befall the spirit—deserted body. This lapse from seeming life to a state of recognized corruption, is the unquestioned finale of the man who is ushered into the visible through the channel of sensual birth.

Barring liaisons and acknowledged carnalities, these children of the Most High are begotten in the “bonds of holy wedlock,” a large per cent of which is contracted upon the basis of the consideration of wealth, social standing, or lasciviousness masquerading in robes of righteousness. Of such issue no angel of the Lord is herald; no starry sign makes acclaim; no wise one, guided by the unerring finger-board of God’s establishing, falls down and worships. In contradistinction to such procedure and sequent estate,—the inheritance of these modern children,—let us turn to that of the Child of 1900 years ago. The Record of His existence declares him to have been begotten of God and born of a Virgin. The grief and solicitude of the just man, Joseph, were canceled by the angel of the Lord, who in a dream acquainted him with the true status of the mother and of the unborn child; and the angelic mandate was fulfilled in the name Jesus, for him who should “save his people from their sins.” Arisen in the East was His star—God’s symbol of his beloved Son; and the time did not lack minds to read this signal of the Almighty written upon the responsive heavens.

The hour came for the fulfilment of the Lord’s promise to be in his disciples as the Comforter. (John xiv: 17-20). The true destination of our Lord—of his cross with the race, whereby he was able to verify the prophecy of the angel, that he should save his people from their sins—we will not urge. Should we say with the modern Christian world that He transited his material being to a spiritual heaven, it would not simplify the problem of unlikeness; it would not annul his prayer in the agony of death: “Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.” Still would remain the memories that cluster around the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, wherein death was vanquished; from which the Christ walked forth free, leaving the angels of shining raiment to abate the sorrow and perplexity of his loved ones.

Such, in small, are some of the salient episodes of the rising and setting of the Sun of Righteousness. Should He, the only begotten of God, appear and claim a brother’s place in the modern Christian ranks, could such claim be allowed on the score of likeness?

The Supreme Test of Systems.

ROLLIN W. GRAY.

MANY PERSONS not familiar with the so called scientific methods and the amount of real knowledge which constitutes a modern science, imagine that in order to be able to determine the truth or fallacy of any particular science or philosophy, one must be familiar with every detail of recorded phenomena and conclusion relative to the same. Not only do the people at large believe this, but a great many so called scientists themselves hold this to be the case. We purpose showing that this conclusion is erroneous.

Given the fundamental principle of any system of philosophy, or the basic premise of any science, and it can be readily determined by rational processes what the ultimate conclusion must be. It is not necessary to become familiar with all the collated facts and observations of phenomena, together with the deductions of so called authorities, in order to determine if a system be true or false. First prove the premise. If the premise is true, and the logic is connected and coherent, the conclusion must be true. If the premise is a false assumption, logic makes ultimate assumption inevitable.

Let us state a case in point: The Copernican system of astronomy is founded upon the assumption that the surface of the earth is convex; this is the premise upon which the entire superstructure of modern astronomy rests. If it can be demonstrated by any means that the earth’s surface does really curve convexly, then the premise is true, and the probabilities are that the system in the main is correct. If the premise cannot be proven to be true, then “it must follow as the night the day,” that the entire system is fallacious. It is not necessary to spend the major portion of one’s lifetime in acquiring a knowledge of modern astronomy to be able to judge whether or not the system is true. For such purpose, only that part of astronomy which has direct relation to the earth’s surface need be studied. In direct contradistinction to the premise of the Copernican Astronomy, the Koreshan System of Cosmogony is founded upon the premise that the surface of the earth is concave, curving concavely at the ratio of about eight inches per mile.

The astronomer offers as proof of the correctness of the modern system, the fact that a ship sailing away from shore disappears hull first and mast last. But it has been observed when the hull of a ship has disappeared entirely beyond the horizon of the supposed convexity, that it can be brought into view again, down to the water’s edge, by means of the telescope. This proves conclusively that no convexity exists on the surface on which the vessel sails; and the conclusion that the earth is convex is necessarily erroneous.

The fact that the earth is being continually circumnavigated is offered as proof of convexity. This proves nothing except that the earth is spherical. A little reason and observation are sufficient to show that an object can be moved around on the inside of a hollow globe as easily as upon the outside. The waters upon which ships sail constitute a portion of the inner surface of the earth's shell.

The fact that a circular shadow is observed on the moon during a lunar eclipse, is considered to be conclusive evidence that the earth is a sphere moving through space. The fact that a disc held in the right position toward a light will cast a circular shadow, necessarily relegates this "proof" outside the pale of evidences. All other so called evidences of the accuracy of the modern system of astronomy are on a par with the above.

Let us contrast these so called evidences of the earth's convexity with the direct proof that the earth is a concave cell: "A straight line extended at right angles to a perpendicular post, will meet the surface of the earth or water at a distance proportionate to the height of the perpendicular." This has been demonstrated to be true by actual experiment. It is in startling contrast with the lack of direct evidence supposed to prove the Copernican system; and it shows conclusively how erroneous is the supposition that one must be fully acquainted with all the details of a science before one has a right to judge of its truth or fallacy. These suggestions are offered to new readers and investigators of Koreshanity, in order to give them the most direct method of deciding which system is the true one. After acceptance of Koreshanity, astronomy in all its details, and the Koreshan System in its many ramifications and departments, involving all the facts of ancient and modern research, may be studied with both pleasure and profit. Koreshan Scientists are not only familiar with the Koreshan Universology, but with the details of the many systems extant throughout the world.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

DR. BASILE AGAPON of Athens, Greece, sends fraternal greeting to THE FLAMING SWORD and a copy of his pamphlet, L'Evangile Philosophique or the Philosophical Gospel. We take much pleasure in acknowledging his courtesy, and will summarize some of the thoughts presented in this little French work, contrasting them with Koreshan views. It is gratifying to hear from our readers in distant lands, and receive assurance that Koreshan literature is known abroad. The object of the Philosophical Gospel, as stated at the outset, is to set forth the mysteries of the holy faith of our fathers in the light cast upon them by modern science. Dr. Agapon believes that man has developed through evolutionary processes. Adamic man was the anthropoid ape. Adam's paradise was only that of the animal soul. However, he was destined to become God, hence he must eat of the fruit of civilization in order to know good and evil. The doctrine of predestination is comprised in the law of heredity. The immortality of the animal soul consists in the reproduction of the same type through each new birth. Koreshan Science teaches that Adamic man was man made in the image and likeness of God, pure and holy, a different genus, a higher race of beings, revealed to the world nineteen hundred years ago in the person of Jesus Christ. The first Adam, who was the veritable Son of God, was planted in humanity—not in anthropoid apes—at the beginning of the cycle of Mazzaroth, 24,000 years ago, in order to increase and multiply. This was the first of seven baptisms, all designed to raise man to the status of Divinity, all coming from the translation of a man who is the Messiah. By what means does the Philosophical Gospel teach that man will become God? By the gradual disappearance or transformation of the physical body through the growth of the Spirit, which will put forth such organs as it needs of a more ethereal construction. Dr. Agapon's conception of the office of Christ seems vague, and he has not reached the Koreshan doctrine of conquering death in the physical body—not by a gradual process of overcoming by will power, but through the actual and specific reception of the very substance of the flesh of the Messiah transformed to spiritual energy. On page 82 appears this idea of the Trinity: "Let us say that this book, which is the gospel, represents the Father. But this same book may be reproduced by another edition. The new copies will thus represent the Son. There still remains the summary of ideas which the gospel contains, and this summary represents the Holy Ghost." On page 85, speaking of the unity of the three persons of the Trinity, the author writes: "The Holy Spirit is only infinite knowledge." The teachings of the Philosophical Gospel are summed up on page 85 in the proposition: "Man's destiny is to become God, the means to that end being the gradual conquest of knowledge, that is to say, of the Holy Spirit." The Koreshan conceives of the Trinity as one person, the Lord Jesus Christ, with a triunity of attributes. It is a beautiful and a holy doctrine which appeals to the reason and to the heart. Oh! that it were possible for the world to receive it in place of the vague and mystical ideas that now obtain! The Holy Spirit is something more than infinite knowledge; it is the very substance of the Lord's body, produced by the actual transmutation of matter to spirit. This baptism is about to be poured out upon those who are receptive to its influence and who are ready to listen to the Messenger of truth. Dr. Agapon's work is scholarly and thoughtful, the style clear and limpid. He is searching for the deep things of life. May his desires be crowned! May he be enabled to discern the reasonable nature of Koreshan Science!

The term usury was formerly employed to designate any rate of interest received for money or property loaned, but it is now applied only to extortionate or illegal rates. The practice of taking usury is condemned even among those who shelter themselves behind the corrupt enactments of farcical courts of justice. In the divine sense, usury is compensation for service performed, or the natural increase of a talent through exercise in exemplification of the law of love: "Give and it shall be given unto you." It is the legitimate reward accruing from use to the neighbor. In the parable of the talents, the unprofitable servant is reproached by his master in these words: "Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." The Greek word here is tokos, offspring. The unprofitable servant is Christ, who buried his talent—his own substance—in the earth (humanity), where he was cast into outer darkness, that is, into sinful states in order that he might there beget offspring, the Sons of God. To put money to the exchangers was to descend into the hells of the competitive system, where there is in very truth weeping and gnashing of teeth. The Jew was not allowed to take usury of his brother, but of a stranger he might take interest upon money or whatsoever goods were lent. He was solemnly enjoined to keep this law, in order that the blessing of God might rest upon him and follow him into the promised land. The Hebrew word usury comes from a root that means to bite, and it refers specifically to the bite or the sting of the serpent, perverted commercial wisdom or the love of money substituted for the love of wisdom. The money lenders of today are adders in the path to bite the heels of the poor man. The less he has, the more they compel him to pay, and woe unto him if necessity oblige him to borrow in the hope of meeting their extortionate demands. Is it right-ful to take interest at the present day? The Koreshan who is looking for a speedy entrance into the promised land (unselfish states) will not lend upon usury to his brother.

One of Ingersoll's disciples has arranged a form for agnostic marriage ceremonies, and is said to be preparing rituals for the dedication of infants to agnosticism, and the confirmation of children in the belief that there is no God. Parents may try to impress their own beliefs upon their children, and may devote them from birth to the service of a given cause, but the law of re-embodiment provides that each human being shall move in his own orbit and fulfil his own destiny. Environment and education cannot change the direction of motion. He who is on the retrogressive line will pursue the natural tendency of his nature until he has reached the limit—the point of terminal transformation to opposites, and vice versa. Two children of the same family surrounded by the same influences, with the same obstacles to surmount, will choose lines of conduct that are diametrically opposite. How many boys would spend their evenings like Lincoln, studying by the light of a pine-knot, after working hard all day? How many youths of fifteen would deliberately resolve like Franklin to eat no meat for a term of years in order to devote the money saved to education? Re-embodiment usually takes place in lines of consanguinity, but while one child serves as a channel to transmit the returning life of his natural ancestors, another may be wholly different, owing to an influx of higher entities attracted by the mental state of his parents. While it may be said that a man is the product of his past, every corpuscle in his body bearing the psychic or pneumatic impress of that experience, the two great divisions of humanity as progressive and retrogressive must be considered.

Etymology (Greek, etymon, true, logos, word) is that department of philology which treats of the primitive meaning of words. In the ultimate it refers to the true Word, the origin of all speech, the Lord Jesus Christ. Hence the various languages with all the words comprised by each, may be traced back to one root, the original Word. Philology is a general term expressive of the science of the love of words or love for the Word. It is evident that in their first sense all words are grounded in divine truth, but in their secondary or derived sense the true meaning is perverted. A study of words is a study of origins, and the impetus received from the science of philology may act either as centripetal or centrifugal force, according to the natural direction of a person's mind. A notable example may be found in the case of Renan, who was influenced by philology to abandon the dogmas of the church and write his "Life of Jesus," the most powerful engine of destruction directed against Catholicism since the eighteenth century, when Voltaire and a cohort of philosophers constructed that famous battering-ram—the Encyclopædia. Nor has Protestant Christianity suffered less from the attacks of what is known as the "higher criticism," a school of thought which really began with Renan's book. Words are a sure index to character. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." The words which a man puts forth are of his own spiritual substance, and by the law of increase the seed sown, whether of wheat or tares, will not return unto him void. Jesus the Word was sown in humanity, there to increase and multiply in the Sons of God, perfect living Words.

The editorial section of Hearst's Chicago American recently contained an article entitled the "New Religion." According to the writer, Mr. Dam, it has sprung up during the past thirty years and is already deeply rooted in the minds of the people. He describes it as embracing a new conception of God and a new conception of man in his relations to God. To quote his exact words, "The new Religio-Scientific conception of God is that of an all-pervading something which cannot be described in terms of matter because it is non-material." The Scriptures most emphatically describe God in terms of matter. The Word was God, and "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Jesus is called the very fulness of the Godhead bodily, and he said: "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Is not the first commandment an unreasonable injunction if applied only to a great equilibrating force? Is it possible for a man to say truthfully, "Oh! Thou infinite abstraction! I know not who nor what Thou art, but I love Thee with all my heart and soul, might, mind, and strength?" Will he not rather say with Peter, speaking to the visible and tangible Man of sorrows whom the disciples knew and loved, who ate and drank in their midst, sharing with them the common things of material life: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"?

In the personality of Jesus the severity which marks discernment was perfectly blended with compassion for human weakness. He knew what was in man; he knew when to denounce as well as when to approve, but the deepest feelings of his nature were shown in the tenderness with which his heart yearned over Jerusalem, the city which was to cast him out and crucify him as a malefactor between two thieves. As He stood among the people, their sufferings moved him to anguish, and he cried unto them in the market place, that whosoever would might come unto him and take of the water of life. But the passers by kept hurrying on, each busy with his own small cares. There were few who paused to listen to the wonderful message or to ask its import. Touched with great pity for human need, the Lord exclaimed in the last despairing accents of rejected love: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Thus the world is judged by the invitation of divine love.

Sects and religions multiply. He who is wise will provide himself with an ultimate test. The soul that is sincere in its longings for righteousness will be swift to recognize any influence that quickens its aspirations toward God. Koreshanity is a religion of works not of emotions. It is the only definitely structured system of universal truth complete in every department and founded upon a mathematical premise. Its influence upon the hearts and lives of those who accept it is uplifting.

There are no accidents; words are spiritual entities and nomenclature is grounded in metaphysics—witness the fact that the great trust which is swallowing up all the lesser trusts is the Steel Trust.

The renaissance of art is to come through the revelation of the beauty of holiness. Perfection which is wholeness will be manifest in the Sons of God.

If "sound money" prevented the panic from spreading, why did not "sound money" prevent the panic from coming?

God is the source of all originality.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED BY KORESH.

Mode of Primitive Baptism.

(1) Is there any history which says the first Christians were baptized by simply wading into water until their feet were covered? In the case of the baptism of the Ethiopian by Philip, the statement is that they both went down into the water and Philip baptized him. Now if the baptism consisted of his feet being covered, what propriety is there in saying that Philip baptized him? Does not the language imply that the baptism was something performed by Philip upon his person in addition to and after they had both gone down into the water, presumably covering their feet? (2) Did baptism in water remit sins as is held by Campbellites, Mormons, Catholics, and others? If so, how or in what sense did it do so?—J. L. T., Mobile, Texas.

(1) John's baptism was a baptism by natural water; that is, the baptism as it was understood externally. The Lord's baptism was a baptism by the Spirit or the Holy Ghost. You will note the fact that when the subject of baptism was being discussed the question was asked: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" and the answer was: "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. * * Unto what, then, were ye baptized? And they said, unto John's baptism."

Now, the Lord's baptism was the baptism by Philip in addition to John's baptism, which was for an external sign and only involved the feet. Our authority for the fact that baptism was simply the immersion of the feet, is the testimony of the Lord himself when he washed the Disciples' feet, and then declared to Peter: "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." The Lord's baptism of the Holy Spirit was made—in this instance—through the instrumentality of Philip; hence there is the utmost propriety in saying that he was baptized (with the Holy Ghost) by Philip.

Baptism in water was a type merely, of the change of the mortal to the immortal flesh. It was a type of that purification which is accomplished by the descent into hell (the grave), and the resurrection at the end of the age. John baptized the Lord Jesus. He not only baptized him in natural water, as a sign, but he remitted the sins of the Lord, who went to John as declared, confessing his sins, being baptized for their remission. Baptism in natural water does not remit sin, but repentance, confession, and the reception of the Spirit did. John anointed the Lord with the Spirit. This was his remission.

(2) If you will take the premise of the Campbellite denomination and follow its logic, you can readily see the mistake made by the Campbellites. The premise of that body of worshipers is in the fact that they declare the Bible to be the Word of God. If the Bible is the Word of God, then it is God, for the Bible itself declares: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." It also declares that "the Word [God] was made flesh and dwelt among us." The Word, then, was the Lord Jesus Christ. If the Bible is the Word, and not Christ, and as the Spirit is in and from the Word, then the only Spirit is the influence of the Bible. If you believe the Bible and are baptized by immersion in natural water, then you receive the Spirit, as the Bible is the only Spirit and the only God, according to their premise; but we deny the premise.

The Lord Jesus, the Son of God, and therefore the visible Jehovah, as manifest 1900 years ago, was the Word. He derived his power from John the Baptist, who baptized him by water as a visible sign, but overshadowed him by the Spirit which passed from himself and lighted upon Jesus, as seen by John in the form of a dove—the sign of the Spirit in its power of regeneration.

Holy Spirit Previous to Jesus' Translation.

(1) If the Holy Spirit did not exist till the body of Jesus was transmuted to spirit, how was the revelation that Jesus was the Son of God made to Peter, as declared in Matthew 16th? If the "Father" did not exist till the ascension of Jesus, how could the "Father" reveal anything to Peter? (2) If there was no Holy Spirit outside of Jesus, how could Simeon have it revealed to him by the Holy Spirit that Jesus was the Messiah of the prophets?—J. L. T., Mobile, Tex.

(1) The Spirit of the Father was in John. When the Lord was baptized, it was carried over to Jesus the Lord. It radiated from the interior of the Lord to the interior of Peter. The revelation that Jesus was the Son of God, was an interior psychic phenomenon from the Lord himself. The power and possibility of Fatherhood existed in the Son of God. The Lord as the Son of God did not become the Father until he had begotten, for the simple reason that no son is father until he begets offspring. The fact that the Lord was begotten and generated, and had the Father of his generation in him, proves the Father did exist in the Lord as the Son of God, and from this personality it was revealed to Peter that Jesus was the Son of God.

(2) The Spirit operating in the interior of Jesus could—by pneumo-psychic transmission—reveal to Simeon that He (Jesus) was the Messiah. The Holy Spirit was centralized in the Lord; it was disseminated after the Lord's translation.

Concerning the Editor.

An Explanation of Professor Morrow's Silence in The Flaming Sword During the Past Five Weeks.

The readers of this periodical have all missed the cheerful and inspiring voice of the editor. His prolonged silence has puzzled them, and they desire to know its cause. On April 18 Professor Morrow was seized with acute inflammation of the ear, which culminated in an abscess. On May 22, when he was hoping to resume his work immediately, a second and more severe attack ensued. No serious apprehensions are felt on his account, but he requires ample time and rest to recuperate. During his entire illness, notwithstanding the intensity of his sufferings, the interests of THE FLAMING SWORD and of Koreshanity have been uppermost in his thoughts. His devotion to this cause has led him to disregard pain, and his mind has turned with fortitude and self-forgetfulness to scientific invention. No explanation of his silence has hitherto been given, because he expected with each issue to discharge his editorial functions. A large measure of sympathy accompanied with earnest hopes for his speedy recovery is extended to Professor Morrow by fellow members of the household of faith, by adherents to the Koreshan cult all over the world, and by a host of warm friends whose respect and admiration he has won.—LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

The Solar Motor.

Ingenious Use of Power from the Sun, by a California Man.

Below will be found extracts from an article which recently appeared in the Imperial Farmer, of Los Angeles, Cal., describing the Solar Motor now in use near Pasadena in that state.

The editor of the Imperial Farmer has seen many very wonderful things in Southern California in the space of a generation. He has seen Riverside transformed from the most barren and hopeless of deserts into one of the most famous orchards and gardens in the world. He has seen a dry slope of wheat-stubble become, in the Redlands of today, the winter home of wealth and fashion. He has seen seeds of industry and society, humbly planted in the heart of the San Bernardino Valley, wax beautiful and prosperous and blossom into Ontarios and Pomonas. He has seen the rising tide of development not only submerge the vacant valleys, but creep up along the foothills; and even upon the stern tops of the mountains he has seen the energy and genius of man plant railroads and hotels.

The editor of the Farmer has seen so much accomplished that he has cultivated the habit of not being surprised at anything. He was not surprised when he found that the irrigated area of Southern California had practically been doubled by water development as the result of the drouth. He was not surprised when it was suggested that the great Colorado desert be moistened by the river of the same name, and that a district of something like a million acres was to be wrested from the hand of aridity. Nor was he surprised when an old friend recently invited him to visit the Ostrich Farm at South Pasadena, and behold how inventive genius had succeeded at last in hitching an engine to the sun.

The Solar Motor is a success. It operates a compound engine and centrifugal pump by means of steam, and that steam is created with no other fuel than the heat of the sun concentrated upon a boiler, which is the focal point in the center of a large reflector lined with many small mirrors. We have no idea that this device, which thus eliminates all cost of fuel at a single stroke, has reached the limit of its possibilities. But already it has recorded the following performance: developed a steam pressure of 210 pounds; evaporated 192 pounds of water per hour under 150 pounds of steam pressure; driven a ten-horse power engine and centrifugal pump; elevated 1,400 gallons of water per minute (equal to a flow of 155 miners' inches) twelve feet from an underground tank.

We do not know why, if this can be done with a single reflector, ten times as much cannot be done when several reflectors are grouped about a central engine, since it is patent that the efficiency of steam increases with the size of the engine. Nor do we see any reason why steam power generated by solar heat will not serve all other industrial uses as readily as it will pump water. Apparently there are no insuperable obstacles to the storage of this power, so that it can be used nights and cloudy days, though this would necessitate the generation of electricity and use of storage batteries until other and cheaper methods shall have been devised. It is easy to spin a web of possibilities to come from this new invention; and if there are doubters, they need only be reminded of the fate of all the other pessimists who have been run over by the swift wheels of events in the West.

The prohibitive cost of fuel has greatly retarded the growth of mining districts in many places, compelled communities of considerable size to do without ice-plants, and deprived small towns of domestic water and of electric lighting systems. But most important of all, the cost of pumping has kept millions of acres barren which could not well be irrigated from reservoirs or streams. If the Solar Motor can be constructed cheaply enough to meet these conditions, there is certainly a wide field for it, and it may be one of the most potent influences in the development of the West during the new century.

The operation of the Solar Motor is quite simple. The effort has been to make it entirely automatic, so that the saving in the item of labor might be as complete as the saving in the item of fuel. In the morning the reflector must be brought into focus. A boy can do this by turning a head lever. In an hour the engine is ready to start, with 150 pounds of steam showing on the gauge. A turn of the throttle valve starts the engine and the pump is soon in full operation. "But," says some one, "the sun is traveling all day." Yes, and the reflector travels with it. This is accomplished by means of a clock-work arrangement which releases the reflector once each minute, so that it keeps in true focus all day long, driving the engine from within an hour and a half of sunrise to half an hour of sunset. This means about eight hours' work in winter and about thirteen in summer. It is expected that the motor will be good for fifteen horse power in the summer, when the sun falls vertically, and is therefore more effective. Difference in atmospheric temperature makes no appreciable difference in the heat of the boiler, but with a low winter sun the solar rays must penetrate a greater depth of atmosphere about the earth. This reduces the efficiency of the motor somewhat.—The Commoner, Lincoln, Neb.

Consider the Workers.

Do You Who Buy Things Ever Think of Those Who Make Them?

The absolute ignorance of the people who buy things, about the conditions that prevail in the homes and shops of the people who make things, will be the wonder of the less stupid generations of future years. Those of us who live in fine houses and touch electric bells for a living, know more about the Greeks and Romans than we do about the living men and women who perform the useful work of the world.

Many a wealthy man lives in a fool's paradise. He is not wilfully indifferent to the sufferings of others, he is only ignorant. As he dictates to his stenographer, he does not know that her mother is dying of consumption for lack of the railway fare to Colorado. She is to him as much a part of the office furniture as the telephone. He does not know that the paper upon which his letters are written was made in a Hol-yoke factory by half naked slaves who get 10 cents an hour. He does not know that his clothes were made in a New York sweatshop, and that little 5-year old tot pulled out the bastings.

He does not know that the chair he sits in was made by the women carpenters of Michigan, who toil among boards and shavings and whirling belts for $8 a week. He does not know that the glass out of which he sips his ice water was made by a dying glass blower, killed by the unhealthy conditions of his trade. He does not know as he watches the curling smoke wreaths that his cigar was made by a young Jewess who suffered from nicotine poisoning, nor that the match with which he lit it was dipped by a pretty Swede girl who died shortly afterward of "phossy jaw."

When we look at a skyscraper, how many of us think of the men who built it? How many have ever given ten minutes' thought to the dangers which these structural iron workers have to face every day? No insurance company will take these men as risks on any terms. Their union is their only protection. When one of them is disabled, he receives $5 a week from his union, and in the event of his death his widow receives $75. There are so many accidents that the union cannot afford to pay more. As one of them said to me not long since, "The motto of our craft is, 'We do not die: we are killed.'"

How few of us know the hardships endured by the men who dug the foundations for these skyscrapers! In Manhattan, the piers or caissons on which our high buildings rest are sunk from 60 to 130 feet beneath the surface. The "sand dogs" who do the digging, work at the bottom of an iron shaft filled with compressed air. Every one of them suffers severely soon or later from the terrific air pressure. They do not feel any evil effects while at work, but after they have reached the surface they frequently get what they call the "bends," a sort of tightening of the muscles, which is apt to leave them crippled. It gives them the most severe pain, and no doctor has been found who can cope with it. Rheumatism is nothing in comparison with it.

None but the most robust laborers can escape the "bends" and endure the compressed air work for as long as four or five years. When the shaft is 125 feet deep, the pressure is so great that the men cannot stand it longer than 45 minutes, at a time. Two shifts, or 90 minutes are counted as a day's work, for which they receive $2.50 each, enough to pay for a back seat at the opera.

If all the members of the Albany legislature were compelled to do the work of the structural iron workers or the "sand dogs" for just one week, there would be the greatest boom in good labor legislation that this state has ever seen.—HERBERT N. CASSON, in New York Journal.

Men of Action.

An Example of Success Achieved Without Red-Tape Machinery.

Having accomplished the feat of arms which the gold-laced, highly-trained major-generals have for two years been steadily failing to accomplish, the capture of Aguinaldo, General Funston must now prepare to have heaped upon him by the War Department the opprobrium which he deserves. He must be made to realize that although he captured the head and front of what the major-generals studiously term "the organized opposition to the United States forces," he did it in a manner which violated most of the regulations of the United States Army, several of the articles of war, and a variety of the rules which are learned at West Point.

But Funston, then a common volunteer—and from Kansas at that—broke into this Philippine business without the invitation of the adjutant-generals and major-generals and other red-tape experts who have been playing with it for two years, and therefore he can hardly be expected to know all the rules of the game. Now that it is all over he doubtless bitterly realizes what bad form he displayed in his precipitate action in the forest, when he grabbed the lithe insurgent chief around the waist and told him to lie quiet or get hurt. He did not realize at that moment how very much this rude action savored of the arrest of a disturber of the peace by a common policeman.

With Aguinaldo safe under lock and key, the high-salaried and expertly-trained members of the How Not to Do It Club are verbose in their explanations of how that wily chieftain should have been captured without doing violence to the traditions of the Army and of the Infallible Red Tape Division of the Government service. When Funston learned from a Filipino traitor just where Aguinaldo was, he should have shot the traitor at sunrise for being a spy. Then, with a band and a few regiments of troops he should have moved grandly to a position a few miles from Aguinaldo's capital, and, should any of the troops have been left after the ambuscades they would have passed through, he should have sent a detachment of them ahead under a white flag to tell Aguinaldo that the great American general was willing to grant him an audience. Meanwhile, he should have cabled to the Infallible Red Tape Division of the Government at Washington to learn what terms he might offer the insurgent chief when he surrendered. After a wait of two or three days, during which Aguinaldo would have moved a few hundred miles farther into the country, the survivors of the white flag detachment would have returned and have had the honor to report that they had failed to find Aguinaldo. Thus General Funston, while he would not have actually captured the chieftain, would at least have shown proper respect for the traditions and precedents of the Army, and could have returned with flying flags to Manila.

But, with that blatant disregard of the sacred cow known as "the customs of the service" which ever characterizes the blundering volunteer officer, Funston got the strange idea that the way to end the insurrection was to capture Aguinaldo, and that the way to capture Aguinaldo was to go out and get him.—FRANK X. FINNEGAN, in Saturday Evening Post.

Million Dollar Salaries.

Modern High Salaries Eclipsed by the Million Dollar Salaries Paid by the Trusts.

In the midst of its daily feast of wars and devastations, the world has had a pleasant little shock of surprise in hearing that Mr. C. M. Schwab, the head of the new United States Steel Corporation, is to draw a salary of a million dollars a year, or, in round numbers, twenty thousand dollars a week. Some time ago it was asserted that Mr. Rockefeller had expressed a willingness to pay that amount to anybody capable of taking the cares of his business off his hands.

Mr. Perkins, who is the new partner in the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., is said to have had a guarantee that the income of his new position shall not be less than a quarter of a million a year. Of course, it may be a good deal more. Mr. Schwab and Mr. Perkins are both young men in their thirties.

Evidently we are reaching a period in which the world will accustom itself to an entirely new scale of salaries. We may yet have a labor union of trust presidents fixing a minimum wage scale of a million dollars a year, enforced by threats of a strike. The time when an increase in the Lecture by Koresh.

The Founder of Koreshanity will deliver a Lecture on Koreshan Universology, Sunday, 3:30 p. m., June 2, 1901, at Koreshan Hall, 4th floor, 315-19 Englewood ave., Chicago.

A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in advanced thought.

salary of the president of the United States from $35,000 to $50,000 a year shocked the economical sense of the country, seems an age of remote antiquity.

The possibility that used to be held before the dazzled eyes of every American boy was that of growing up to be President of the United States. The new possibility is that of drawing a million-dollar salary. Such a salary is the prize that ability wrests from wealth. The men who draw this pay are not those who inherited millions, but who were born with the power to work and to direct the work of others. Mr. Schwab has been described as a "human thunderbolt." If his employers pay him a million dollars a year, it is because they know that they can get several times a million out of him. He may have men in his office drawing less in a year than he does in a day, who are his superiors in general intelligence, who could write better novels than he could, draw better pictures, express a more skilled appreciation of plays, frame better national policies, and pass for men of abler minds.

Not only could the Steel Trust not afford to pay one of those men a million dollars a year for managing its affairs—it could not afford to let him manage its affairs if he paid for the privilege. Just that peculiar combination of qualities which Mr. Schwab possesses is needed to keep such an enterprise from wreck and make it profitable to its owners. The men who have the power of industrial generalship will be the Cæsars and Napoleons of future history, and they will win the rewards that have gone to military generalship in the past.—SAMUEL E. MOFFETT, in Saturday Evening Post.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

L'Evangile Philosophique, par Le Docteur Basile Agapon, D'Athenes, Membre de la Societe de Psychotherapie a Paris.—Le but de cette petite brochure d'environ cent pages est d'expliquer par les lumieres de la science moderne les dogmes de l'Eglise. La perte de l'Humanite adamique, l'Avenement du Christ comme Dieu, le Mystere de la Trinite et le Mystere de l'Eternel sont des sujets dont on traite. Parlant du second avnement du Christ comme Dieu, l'auteur affirme que le Christ sera la Personnalite universelle, c'est a dire Dieu qui embrassera toutes les personnalites. Le Christ est le seul pont pour passer a Dieu, Quant a l'office actuel du Christ l'ecrivain distingue ne partage pas les vues de la Koreshanite qui affirme la-dessus qu'une certaine partie de l'humanite, c'est-a-dire ceux qui constituent le fruit de cet age—doit prochainement recevoir le baptême de feu provenant de la transformation en energie electro-magnetique du corps materielle de celui qui remplit aujourd'hui les fonctions du Messie. C'est lui qui menera a un foyer l'amour et la haine du monde. Ceux qui croient a ses doctrines et aspirant a la vie eternelle passeront avec lui par le feu biologique dont ils sortiront Fils de Dieu, Etres Immortels. Pour L'Evangile. THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is enmeshed at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

The Great Conspiracies of Capital and Labor.

The Vital Issue Between Them, and its Culminating Struggle; a Page of Prophecy with a Scientific Diagnosis of the Condition of the Times.

WE HAVE REACHED that point in our history when the people are out of the question—so far as any voice in the conduct of public affairs is concerned. That we have reached the condition of imperialism there can be no reasonable dispute; but it does not reside in the fact of our possession of insular territory, because the separation of our lands by bodies of water does not affect the status of territorial relationship, nor can the character of the nationality and its religion enter as factors into the discussion of the subject, because our laws provide for the greatest latitude in citizenship and in religious conviction and practice. Our present status of imperialism is that of the money power. This great danger which confronts us is not confined to one phase merely of the greed of the money god; it is dual in its manifestation, and perfectly fulfils the prophetic declarations in Revelation which have been made concerning this power: "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns [powers] like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." When we study the character of this beast on the most material plane of activity, and compare its operations with the predictions of its functions, it becomes perfectly obvious that the beast of Revelation comprises the two phases of the money power which we are about to diagnose.

The beast has two horns like a lamb. The lamb or ram signifies the begetting power. The begetting power as pertaining to the principles of production, in the present phase of production, belongs to the capitalist on the one hand and the laborer on the other. The Lamb of God is the begetting personality and power of Deity. The power of production is the power to beget on the secular plane of activity, hence this power is spoken of as the beast having two horns like a lamb. It speaks as a dragon, because the dragon or serpent implies the wisdom of commerce, and this wisdom is displayed in its double aspect as having two distinct forces. Both of these forces display the wisdom of the serpent. It is a beast coming up out of the earth, because it is secular in its manifestation and power.

We speak from personal observation and the experience of friends, in the announcement of the fact of the audacity of the ordinary laborer and his impudence in interfering with the rights of the American citizen. It is a burning disgrace to our boasted civilization that an American, regardless of the fact that he has not yet been forced into a labor-union, cannot determine and direct his legitimate desire in his right to perform a day's work. All the indications of the times go to show that the money power, as represented by the trust and the labor consolidation, constitutes the great beast of Revelation—for the image of this beast had power to control the commercial world. No man can buy or sell without the mark of the beast either in his forehead (the money-controlling power) or in his hand (the labor power). If we analyze this prophetic declaration, we will find that the facts as they exist at this perilous juncture of human affairs go to corroborate and fulfil the prediction. Let a moderate dealer in any manufactured commodity attempt to place his goods on the market, and he is met with the question: "Have your goods the union label?" If not, the merchant will tell him that he cannot handle them. This fact is not the exception to the rule, it is of the most common occurrence; and the growing solidarity of labor-unionism is rendering it more and more difficult for men to pursue the course of liberty in what should constitute their inalienable rights, and to attain that freedom and happiness which the Constitution of the government pretends to guarantee. The small dealers are being forced out of the world of trade. In what direction? Surely in the way of the laboring mass, or into penury and despair.

The consolidation of the money-power into the great billion-dollar trust is not the worst feature of the tendency to combine. The effort of the bankers and brokers of the monetary world to control the output of the great resources of the entire industrial system, is not the most dangerous feature of the present peril. Our trouble lies deeper than this; the intelligence which is giving impulse and direction to the labor world, is as subtle in its conception and as persistent in its purpose as the merciless power of corporations and trusts. These two great contending factions are the powers of hell let loose for the great and dreadful day of the Lord. Let us urge upon the world today the fact of the impending crisis, and that it is hastening to the day of doom. This is not the frenzy of pessimism nor the relinquishment of hope; it is the result of a deliberate and considerate diagnosis of the conditions of the times, and such a commensurate knowledge of the future as to enable us to determine a perfectly accurate prognostication.

The part which the great political parties have played in this tragedy of human destiny, in so far as their ignorance has been displayed, is that they have not been able to observe the inevitable results of the two conspiracies they have fostered and abetted. Both of the great parties have curried favor with every resource of evil for the purpose of political aggrandizement. Both parties have attempted to conciliate the combination of money and the combination of labor. The party now in power has openly demonstrated its purpose to favor the world-wide monopoly of the gigantic commercial trust, and to trample the rights of the people under foot. It is the consort of the banking usurpation and of the whisky trust. It is the generator of the world's most gigantic conspiracy to defraud the masses of the inhabitants of the world of their freedom and their happiness.

There exists a common belief that this question of "capital and labor" has but two phases. There is no greater mistake; leading men with their leading publications have seen only the necessity of choosing one of two sides to the controversy; thus they are arraying themselves in favor of the people, as they declare, or in favor of the trust, as is plainly obvious. The republican papers are universally in favor of the party and the administration which have unmistakably shown their love of the money power in the form of the commercial-trust conspiracy, and in the centralization of this power. Such publications as the New York Journal, Hearst's San Francisco paper, and Hearst's Chicago American favor the working man's trust, as if to side with the labor-union-conspiracy is more righteous than to support conspiracy in the shape of banking and commercial monopoly.

The democratic party is posing as the people's friend, and will be forced more and more into this phase of the great issue and its culminating struggle. The only logical determination of the democratic party is toward and with the labor conspiracy, as against the financial trust conspiracy. This will constitute an array of potential force sufficiently gratifying to that love of usurpation upon which depends the world's catastrophe. We abominate the power that would conspire against the liberty of the individual, whether that influence is in the form of a banking conspiracy, the billion-dollar trust, or the labor-union. Both parties have exhibited flagrant cowardice in that they, while aware of the existence of these two monstrous conspiracies, have not enforced legislation that would prevent, had it been in the order of law, the consummation of their tendencies and purpose.

Beyond the coming conflict is observed the radiant beams of the sun of social liberty, portrayed by inspired men, of ages lost in the obscurations of the clouds of materialism wherein the truths of prophecy and revelation are made to appear as so much mysticism and the vagaries of obsolete mental darkness. Another power, distinct from both capital and labor, arises on the earth and sea of human destiny and hope. This is a combination of God and man—it is the power of the Lion of the tribe of Judah in the arena of the bulls and the bears. It will be arrayed against both capital and labor, because so called capital is but the legal, not morally legitimate, robbery of the creator of all the wealth in existence; and against labor, because labor is but another name for wage slavery.

When the labor-union sues for higher wages and shorter hours, it admits the right of the usurper of its liberty to perpetuate the bondage of the wage slave. Industry as it will be operative in the final adjustment of human affairs in the new social order, will in no sense be denominated labor. It will be one of the most gratifying phases of recreation—re-creation. Nothing can be more gratifying than the pursuit of invention for the sake of the love of invention, the pursuit of music for the love of music, the pursuit of agriculture and the development of architecture for their specific uses, and the inestimable satisfaction growing out of the exercise of the ruling faculties of distinctive minds. There will be no labor in the kingdom of righteousness which the Lord comes to establish. There will be a complete regulation of industry, and the commercial enterprises of the world will include the equitable collection and distribution of the world's products. These will not come until after the catastrophe.

Since the so called Reformation, satan has been let loose, and has gone forth to gather the contending forces of Gog and Magog for battle, as has been predicted. These forces on the secular plane of human activity and contention, are the powers of the combination of wealth and the combination of the wage slaves. The culmination of this controversy can have no other termination than in the catastrophe which the two great political parties are coöperatively forcing to a climax.

Scientific System of Political Economy.

Prevailing Fallacies and Present Unbalanced Condition of Affairs; What Political Economy Implies; the Principles of Divine Uses and Commercial Equity.

BERTHA LDINE, MATRONA.

THE SUPREMACY dominant power of science falsely so called has found able promulgators of fallacy in every domain of human life. Results incalculably disastrous to human weal, have been wrought through the agency of teachers communicating the fallacies constituting the accepted so called science of political economy. The "dismal science" some call it; such gloomy hopelessness does it engender in the minds of men groping in its darkness, yet seeking light with which to usher in the day of the kingdom of righteousness.

The Universology of Koreshanity offers to the thinker an entirely new and altogether scientific system of political economy, which has power to dispel the gloom from all befogged intellects, and to banish mental fogs with the irradiations of the sunshine of justified hopes. Koreshan Science of political economy is based upon the perfect understanding of the laws and principles operating to maintain the equilibrium of the universe, the laws and principles determining the equitable distribution of all the resources of Deity. Genuine political economy implies, primarily, the science of the righteous use of all the resources of life.

Life in its most divine aspect is Jehovah, the fulness of the Godhead bodily. The known Jehovah, the Lord Jesus Christ, was the life of the world or cosmos he involved, because Eloah—the science of his divine being, was the inresident of his soul. This indwelling presence of Eloah made of Jehovah the Light of the world, as well as its life. He being a living exponent of divine love and wisdom in the fulness of life, we do well to look to him for wisdom concerning the foundation principle of equity, which is reciprocity. Freely, said He, ye have received, freely give.

The Lord Jesus is the one man known through history, who possessed the absolute science of the righteous use of all the resources of the universal life, of which he was the perfected involution. He therefore has been the only legitimate political economist before the world for nineteen hundred years, yet humanity has not heeded his instructions or example, in the adoption of any scientific methods of social organization, because incapable of comprehending the science of his Divinity, of his immortal, incorruptible being. Comprehending Himself and the universe he involved, he gave himself, the Life of a world to come, to make the world that was dead in trespasses and sins, which constituted his environment, alive to his righteousness.

The Lord in his dissolution became a consuming fire, which burned him into receptive humanity to become the final consummation of its devout hopes for the possession of the light of his life, the science of the laws of his being, by the application of which they might be clothed upon with his image and likeness. The fire He kindled has burned in the wicked as an age-lasting, unquenchable fire of love and longing for his quality of life. It has been a fire infolding itself, and at last "that wicked" is revealed who must become the burning and shining light of the Lord's sacrificed life; sacrificed to make men know and do his will. This Light, which will reveal and judge the quick and the dead, reveals both the mysteries of Godliness and the mysteries of iniquity, and is the light that enlighteneth every man that cometh into life. This light of genuine science, the water of life, burns with unquenchable fire the dross of the wicked, to whom was imparted the fibrin of the flesh of Christ—the spiritual Seed of Israel.

Jehovah Jesus, Lion of the tribe of Judah, is the Heart of commercial equity—divine political economy. Out of this Heart are the issues of life, who are to be born of water and of fire. Jehovah, the Lord our righteousness, instituted the free circulation of the blood of his final covenant with humanity, when he poured out his soul unto death in obedience to the law of the cross. To His Godhead we owe every debt of gratitude for the light of his life, which has given to Lucifer, his Messenger, that torch of divine wisdom—the gospel of genuine science. From this gospel we must learn the political economy of the divine kingdom of righteousness.

No man has a moral right to anything which he will not use for the common weal—that is, for the good of all. The sole legitimate purpose of government is the service of the foundation principles of equity, presented and illustrated by the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord made of himself the chief servant of humanity in applying these principles. He declared that the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. The Christ, or firstfruit of a world or order of things, is its involved completeness, who is the chief servant and the Head of a world to come. The principles he enunciates and illustrates are to be the dominating principles in securing every enactment of equity in the days of his kingdom.

From the Spirit of the Word, generated by the giving of Himself to the world for the life of his order, he reproduces the final letter or science of the Word, this Word being God, or the law fulfilled in personality. This letter, or science of the Word, kills the old man of sin or iniquity, and the spirit of this man of sin, slain of the Lord and dead in Christ, makes alive a man of God thoroughly furnished unto all good works. This letter of the law, or science of the Decalogue, reveals to the world the mind of Christ, and the sphere receptive to it becomes the body politic of a new order of things, new heavens and a new earth. The Christ is always the firstfruit of every divine cosmos, whether of celestial, spiritual, or natural degree, and the science of the law constitutes his anointing.

The Lord Jesus imparted to his church the firstfruits of the Spirit of the arch-natural life of the kingdom of the Gods in earth. He taught his church to pray for, or desire that kingdom to come in earth in its arch-natural degree. In Himself they beheld it in the celesto-natural, he being a Son of man in the heavenly state of manifest celestial love and wisdom. The church militant has steadfastly prayed for the kingdom of God to come in earth, of which Jehovah was the Holy Seed—the Father-Mother. His Motherhood has become the Church Triumphant in the heavens, triumphant in the spirit of wisdom and understanding given by an absolute science of the laws of life and immortality. The Fatherhood is manifest in the Apostolic successor of the Lord Jesus, and must be recognized by his credentials as the legitimate Head of the church militant, as he is of the Church Triumphant. This church must be reduced to the divine economy of scientifically related orders, which will follow in Apostolic succession the great head of the church, into the kingdom of the Gods in earth. The keys of this kingdom are obedience and confession—obedience to the science of the law, and confession of its divine origin or name.

The science of the law is the conjoining power of the Lord coming up in the sons of men, to meet the Bride—the New Jerusalem descending from God out of heaven adorned for her husband. In the scientific reunion or divine marriage of church and state, we will have manifest the first principle of political economy. "It is not good for man to be alone," says inspired Writ. The Lord's House is primarily the virginal being, Jehovah, Bride and Bridegroom in one form, individual, that is, undivided. The division of this House is the beginning of the fall of man and the wastes of profligation. The reorganization of the Lord's House involves sex separation from every form of adultery, and polarization in a reuniting power which will constitute a holy covenant of unity and the conservator of the reunited soul forces of man and woman.

What is true of man and woman is true of church and state. These two must separate themselves from every form of adultery with political and ecclesiastical fallacy and evil, and enter into a covenant relation, the conservator of which is the absolute science of truth. Economy, or the righteous use of the resources of life, is impossible in a body politic or house divided. Church and state must be united in and by that sire and scion of both, the source of science, the Koreshan University System, whose fitting symbol is the eagle of the United States, the crown of whose imperial government must finally be surmounted by it. Thus shall the world give honor to the Father's name to be written in the forehead of every Son of righteousness; for the eagle signifies that power of science, theocracy, by which in the divine economy men are begotten and born the Sons of God.

The state exists in righteousness only for the service of the highest, holiest interests of men of whom the church is called to be the nourishing mother. The familiar saying that "economy is wealth," is true of divine economy. Wealth means weal or good. Obedience to the law of divine love makes manifest the righteous use of all things, and wealth of every degree and quality is the certain accompaniment. With the powers of church and state reunited and represented in a Head anointed with the God science, the coöperation of all men in confessed interdependence will proceed by orderly methods, and manifest the united potencies of the two in good results which it hath not entered into the heart of mortal man to conceive.

To the called and chosen heirs of the divine kingdom of righteous uses, the Seed of Abraham, it was said: "All things are yours, for ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." The man of God, thoroughly furnished unto all good works by every good and perfect gift which cometh from above, that is, from the sphere of the divine unity of the intellectual and affectional principles in science, is the first ripe fruit of this age, and is the sign of the Son of man in heaven. This Sign is the foretold Elijah the Prophet, the restorer of all things divine, therefore of the divine science of political economy, the Light of the Lord God who is to illumine the world with the radiance of divine glory. This science is derived in its celestial, spiritual, natural, and arch-natural degrees by the applied law of correspondence, from the Koreshan Science of the Cosmogony of the universe, in its least and greatest forms.

The first step to be taken by the would-be disciple of divine political economy, is that of placing himself in the College of Life under—that is, in obedience to the law. In the loyalty of true discipleship he will be led into the state of Christ, and will become the estate or inheritance of the New Jerusalem—the heart of God, on which the law is written. The inheritors of the New Jerusalem will have the divine image and likeness individually and collectively, which constitute the holy Temple of the Most High in its least and greatest forms, an institution of social order protective in all its restraints and adjustments of the holiest form of individual life, liberty, and happiness.

The Creed of Count Tolstoi.

The Conceptions of the Venerable Russian do not Involve the Messiahship and Godhood of Jesus the Christ; the Truth of Primitive Christianity.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

Nothing matters with God but truth. In order to worship God, he must needs reject the teachings of the orthodox church. By them the teachings of Christ are disfigured, transformed into grossest sorcery, ablution, unction, movements of the body, incantations, deglutitions of piles of bread, all of which has nothing to do with that teaching which only commands men to love one another, not to render bad for evil, not to judge others, not to kill. * * * They behave like the brigand who murdered a whole family of five or six persons in order to steal an old clock and forty kopeks. If Christ could come back he would sweep them out with their instruments of witchcraft.—COUNT TOLSTOI.

COUNT TOLSTOI, in referring to the writ of excommunication, says it is illegal, arbitrary, unjustifiable, mendacious, libelous, and calculated to promote evil sentiments and unworthy deeds; that its issue has already so stirred the hatred of bigots, that he is daily threatened with assassination. Concerning the Messiah, he remarks: "I believe that the will of God was never so precisely explained as in the doctrine of the Man Christ; but one cannot regard Christ as God and offer prayers to him without committing the greatest sacrilege. If another doctrine should arise that satisfied me better, I should not hesitate to adopt it, for nothing matters to God but truth."

The trouble with Tolstoi's creed, as with that of the corrupt and persecuting church which he rightfully condemns, is, that while Tolstoi rejects the mountains of practical unrighteousness and atheism that deform the other, both are in like ignorance of the truth that makes men free—the true God. Both professing to believe in eternal life, are ignorant of the fountain and source of it—Jesus Christ. "This is eternal life, to know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." Jesus said to the Jews, that the God whom they professed to worship was his Father, and that that Father—God, dwelt in him; and he might have truthfully added, dwelt nowhere else, at that time. Tolstoi's brother, doubting Phillip, said to the Lord (God) Jesus Christ: "Show us the Father [God] and it sufficeth us; Jesus saith unto him, have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me. Phillip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, show us the Father?"

The aged Tolstoi has not recognized God in Jesus Christ, and yet he supposes—so saturated is he still with the false teachings of an apostate, persecuting church—that he knows God. He has not yet learned that when he has found the man in whom is the perfect truth, he has nowhere else to go to find God—the supreme Good. He thinks he could not worship—pray to him, "without committing the greatest sacrilege." Did not the early (the only real) Christians so believe and practice? When to those learned and polite heathen Athenians Paul declared the UNKNOWN god that made heaven and earth, he preached none other God than Jesus Christ.

It is plain that Tolstoi's idea of worship is yet the superstitious one taught, not in the Bible, but by the lying priests of an apostate church, in order to enslave to them the masses whom they have made ignorant of the truth. If we spoke the Greek language, in which the New Testament was written, we would as readily speak of worshipping a man as God. Worship is worthship, recognizing a being's worth and rendering the respect and obedience due. The man who wants a house built and has not the requisite knowledge and ability, must worthship—recognize and reward—the ability of one that has. If he wants to build for himself a higher spiritual habitation, and finds himself lacking the skill and ability requisite, he must find some one to help build it, who has them; and it will always be some man—a God Man—God manifest in the flesh, as was Jesus, who in the beginning was the Word, with the Father, and was made flesh and dwelt among us.

There is no other way under heaven, given among men whereby Tolstoi or any other man can be saved; and any praying to another being is "committing the greatest sacrilege." But, says our great-hearted old Russian friend: "If Christ could come back he would sweep them out with their instruments of witchcraft." What sort of ideas can Tolstoi have of Christ, who has no doubt that if he could only come back he would certainly be able to sweep out this terrible power of an apostate church? Having such power to work while here, has He not power to come back as he promised? Most certainly He has, and will yet sweep them all out with the whole pious but godless brood of mammon-worshippers who now rule the world. Who cannot see that such power is none other than the power of God, and that the owner and wielder of it must be God?

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE DECEITFULNESS OF RICHES is a phrase which is often employed but seldom subjected to scientific analysis. It was first used by our Lord, who was the continent of truth, and therefore best fitted to characterize the subtle workings of the great power which makes for unrighteousness. In expounding to His disciples the parable of the sower, he compared this particular quality of riches to thorns which spring up and choke the Word so that he (not it) becomes unfruitful. Christ himself was the Word which was sown in the church, but the love of money has prevented it from bringing forth the fruits of the spirit. Riches are termed deceitful because they blind the eyes, or as St. Paul puts it: "The god of this world has blinded the minds of those which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." Self-deception is the most dangerous foe to righteousness. The lack of ability to think and to reason clearly, which is a special feature of the condition of the world, is psychologically due to the attempt to serve two masters. Mental weakness, confusion, and insanity follow division of force. The churches say: "Let us revise our creeds to comport with our enlightenment; our membership has increased; we have built costly and beautiful edifices; we spend great sums in charity, and our missionary work was never so well supported. Are we not rich and increased in goods?" But the Lord in his advent confronts them and his eyes are like a flame of fire: "Thou art wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked. Know thyself for what thou art," He cries. Our millionaires are complacently happy in the thought that heaven has endowed them with the capacity for building up immense fortunes in order that they may act as stewards for the Lord. They open coffee houses, found libraries, and endow colleges to win praise of men. The time servers form another class whose eyes are blinded by the god of this world. Such are they who join themselves to a popular cause which promises advancement, believing that the service of humanity tempts them when their secret hopes are toward personal reward. When Jesus hung upon the cross, he wore a crown of thorns. His death there was a type of his spiritual death as the Word sown in the race, and the cruel thorns which pierced that divine brow were a type of the sorrows that would oppress him through the dominance of the money power, in his efforts to crown himself and sit down upon the throne of immortality at the end of the age.

According to what is termed the Idealistic theory, we do not know whether matter really exists or whether it is merely a creation of our active mind. "We perceive that matter constantly undergoes changes, but we do not know whether those changes actually take place, or whether they are but the reflection of changes in our perception." To question the existence of matter is to charge the physical senses with bearing false witness, not merely in specific cases, but constantly and habitually as their natural function. As soon as the child opens his eyes to the light, he begins to demand something outside of himself for sustenance, and through every avenue of sense he learns from day to day to distinguish between self and environment. It is unreasonable to suppose that Nature's education is deceptive, for if matter has no objective basis then the office of the senses is only to lie. There are isolated cases where the senses give false reports, just as a person habitually truthful will sometimes be led into falsehood, but their normal function, like that of man himself, is to speak the truth. Koreshan Science affirms that the appearance of visual foreshortening whereby we are led to believe that the earth is convex instead of concave, is produced in the eye by the action of the visual force. Here is an instance where the eye deceives us; but the Scriptures tell us to judge not according to appearance, but to judge righteous judgment. Scientific understanding must supplement vision. Koreshan Science, which is the product of the entire cycle of human experience brought to a focus in one mind, does explain and correct the deception. Man is now in imperfect and sinful states—spirit, soul, and body are all defective. His eye is not single, therefore his body is not full of light. Christ, who is the Light of the world, the Eye of the body, is now in humanity as the hope of glory, not as the realization of glory in immortal life. Mirage is a case in point where knowledge resulting from experience enables the judgment to decide between appearances and facts.

The love of uses is the antithet of the love of usury. The latter enables man to enjoy the pleasures of the lower sense life; the former opens to him a whole world of higher delights. Uses were ordained from the beginning to induct man into the joys of the kingdom of heaven. To participate in heavenly uses is to know God. The love of uses brings God down to humanity, where the Creator of all becomes the servant of all. Jesus said: "If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet," meaning that the disciple is not above his Lord either in material or spiritual service. By this act of humility He also expressed in symbol a great truth referring to himself in his office as Savior. "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." Jesus was the Head of the church, which is the body. His Spirit which was then pure and holy, needing no lustration, was to pass into his disciples who constituted the church, and take on sinful conditions until his reappearance at the feet, or as the feet of the dispensation, when his first work would be to purify himself from the evils common to the race.

"The mystery of life and death is as much a mystery to the most brilliant man of this civilization as it was to the ignorant creature of the stone age." The above is a sad confession of the limitation of intellectual achievement. It is taken from a periodical whose aim is to explore occult things, and it is an avowal that may be heard coming from all quarters. Science, religion, occultism, socialism, all deplore their inability to answer the great questions. But there is one mind that contains the sum of truth and has formulated it into concrete expression. The involution and evolution of Deity in humanity; the law of reincarnation by which man, the debris of the God kingdom, passes alternately from natural to spiritual states of experience until he is ripe enough to return to God; the law of transmutation and absorption by which he finally overcomes death in the natural body and passes out alive—these are truths which explain all mysteries.

Is the development of life from the egg creation or reincarnation? It is both, for the former term in Koreshan Science never implies the production of something out of nothing. To create is to beget through the intervention of the law of transmutation. Reincarnation simply means coming again in the flesh. The sperms and germs of reproduction which unite alchemically to form the fertilized ovum are the result of the transformation of spirit to matter. Entities which have been embodied and desire to manifest again in the flesh descend from the spiritual world, located in the brain of both parents, and become these agents of reproduction. Thus the child carries with it the life of the past. The proper term is re-embodiment, each person being only a partial reincarnation of his former self. In the alchemical union of two atoms of hydrogen with one of oxygen, the water created does not represent the whole creation. It is only the descending product.

"To the morgue and then to the Potter's field." Only this single line laid on the desk beside the cold form of Allen Knapp, veteran of the civil war, who committed suicide on the day when flowers are laid upon the graves of his comrades who died in battle. The recent flurry in stocks swept away his fortune and his courage. What can infuse hope into myriads of weary hearts who are just ready to give up the struggle against the awful forces of despair? Nothing but the power of a new message fraught with the wonderful truth that God is in humanity as the personal, living Savior, not as the Oversoul. The thought of God as the Divine-Human personality gives strength and courage. He suffers with us and for us, pouring out his soul unto death that he may baptize the world.

International agreement with the establishment of fixed rates is the best way to settle the tariff question. So long as each nation maintains its own rates irrespective of any ethical consideration, jealousy and distrust will spread. Just now, Germany is disturbed and suspicious on account of the growing commercial power of the United States. Concerted action by the countries of Europe to bar our exports may be expected. Such a possibility should be prevented by mutual understanding. Self interest defeats itself as a national policy in the long run. This country cannot afford to incur the risk of a universal boycott. One of the main issues before us today is the acquirement and the maintenance of commercial supremacy which is destined to pass over to us from England.

Koreshanity holds that it is right for a man to serve God as faithfully as he would serve his country. If the interests of the family are secondary to those of the country, they are surely to be set aside for the sake of religion. The establishment of the kingdom of righteousness in the whole earth is not only the greatest issue before the world today, but it is the greatest issue of all time. The consummation of human destiny is at hand. It is twenty-four thousand years since a similar crisis occurred. Is it not incumbent upon those who are honestly convinced of these facts, to sacrifice lower relationships to the same extent as the soldier who leaves wife, children, and aged parents with the full approval and support of Christianity and civilization?

Rational views of industrial service must be inculcated. Mrs. Phelps Ward and Mr. Sheldon have recently published works upon the subject, and the Arena for June contains a thoughtful paper advocating the emancipation of domestic workers through education. The lamentations of Jeremiah are less mournful than the woeful tales related by mistress and maid. The substitution of industry for labor, the organization of society so that the laws of levitation and gravitation may act freely, and the substitution of broader relations for the narrow circle of family life, must combine to settle the difficulty. It is too complex to find adjustment outside of universal order, as Mr. Sheldon has recently learned.

It is stated that Professor Liveing and Professor Dewar have proved that free hydrogen exists in the earth's atmosphere, a point which has hitherto been disputed. Their investigation was made upon liquid air, and after removing from it every trace of nitrogen, argon, and the compounds of carbon, they found in the spectral lines of the residual gases, those of hydrogen. The constituents of liquid air are not necessarily the same as those of the atmosphere. They are created in the alchemical change or combustion by means of which liquefaction is produced. Koreshan Science denies that free hydrogen is to be found in the atmosphere.

A knowledge of the dynamic power of thought increases the sense of moral responsibility a thousand fold. It is pertinent to inquire how far a man may be the product of his neighbors' thoughts. Have they not met him constantly with the belief that he possesses certain unpleasant qualities? Has he not responded to the idea which some chance word or act of his led their imagination to form, so that the faults they deprecate should be laid to their own charge? If they would fix upon the highest attribute of his nature, hold this in mind and make it prominent, what changes might not be wrought in him!

One of our exchanges thinks that it is enough to paralyze the human mind to be told that we live on the inside of the earth's shell, and that there is nothing, not even vacuum nor room for empty space outside this shell. We maintain that everything which has form has limitation. If the universe has form it must have limits. Such logical propositions act upon dormant reasoning faculties like an electrical stimulus. There is no danger of paralysis inside the protective sphere of Koreshan Science, where all is activity.

The Senators from South Carolina did not conform to the code in their recent duel. Though the weapons used by both were sharp and pointed, each chose a different arm. Senator Tillman prodded his colleague with the historic pitchfork, and the latter responded by a thrust of the bowie knife.

Who will guard the interest of the poor man? In three instances the courts of Iowa have decided in favor of usury exacted by Building and Loan Associations. The ostensible purpose of these companies is to aid the poor man to build a home.

The shibboleth of the present is "divine discontent," but the phrase is incorrect. Discontent is not heaven-born, though it urges forward the currents that set toward the haven.

This is the season for moving, and there is a way in which it may be done without expense. Move into a beautiful new thought-dwelling by studying Koreshan Science.

The perfect circle is the symbol of Divinity.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED BY KORESH.

Mystery of Life and Being.

Some time ago I was asked the question, What is life? and gave as good an answer as I could; but I am not satisfied with the answer.—F. A. Y., Apollo, Pa.

Life is the activity of the co ordinating operations of love and wisdom, as function, in a corresponding and adaptative form. There can be no life without being. Being involves the eternal existence of an equal relationship of form and function. There exists a universal form, which contains all subordinate forms. The universal organic form is an eternal thing. Mind is the supreme functionary of activity in this form. The mind in the form depends upon the adaptations of the form. Remember now, that we speak of the form universal, in which man in his highest development is the supreme manifestation.

Man exists by virtue of the fact that the universe exists; he could not exist without it, nor could the universe exist without man. Form in the entire universe is the supreme factor of material being, while function in the entire universe is the supreme factor of active being. Form must be adequate to function, and function to form. If there had not been universal form and function eternally, there could have been no creation of them, for they are the means to the end of creation; hence it follows that creation is a continuous round of recreation in a form and in a functional co-ordinate which must eternally co-operate to perpetuate themselves.

If man had not been eternal he could not have been created. This is true, both from a common sense scientific view, and from the corroborative Scriptural view. In Genesis we read that "the Gods said let us make man in our image and likeness"—that is, just like ourselves. And the Gods made man as declared. The Gods, in the form of men, had to exist before they could reproduce men like themselves, and their means of propagation were according to the laws of propagation belonging to men who existed as the Gods; that is, as the God-men. Their means of propagation involved the power to overcome the things of sensuality, to attain immortality, and to dematerialize and ascend into their own interior consciousness; and in so doing to precipitate a spiritual dissemination by which the lower humanity could be vitalized or fecundated from the God-life.

Wisdom is the supreme light of the mind, and love is the supreme heat of the mind. They exist as co-ordinate and counterparting functions in the form of matter equal and adequate to their function. They cannot exist and act independently of their co-ordinate form. This form is human, and in its highest aspect is called God and the Son of God. Life in the supreme aspect of its activity is the voluntary purpose of the will, in the highest man, to perform the supreme function of mind through its highest medium—the body.

Man in his perfected form and function is the Tree of Life; he is also its fruit. When we say man, however, we do not mean man in his segregate form as he exists today—either male or female. The supreme attainment of man is the individual man, in whom are the two principles in masculine and feminine combination, wherein there is neither male nor female, but the two-in-one—biune. Such a man was the Lord, who possessed the form of life because the function of life was co-ordinate in him with the form.

Said the Lord Jesus: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." He had life in himself because he was the form of life—the microcosm. He was the immortal fruit of life, and in him you have the answer to the question, and also in as many as will attain life through obedience to the laws he applied. Life is the eternal man, and without man in his form and in his function there is no life.

Processes of Re-embodiment.

(1) If a man dies today, does he enter the spirit world, retaining his consciousness, and stay there until the child is conceived in which he is to be re-embodied? (2) Do the souls of men ever become so brutalized as to be compelled to retrograde down through the successively lower stages of the animal world? If so, will they ever be redeemed?—A READER.

(1) When a man dies he enters the spiritual world, retaining his consciousness in the other—the interior existence, which is not outside of man but in the human brain. When the spirit dies in the spirit world, it descends from the brain into the body of the person into whose spiritual sphere it passed at the death of the material body. The spirit in its descent becomes a vivified germ of reproduction in the matrix of its maternal parent, and is born as a partial re-embodiment of the person. We say partial re-embodiment, because the law holds good in every domain in existence, that in the disintegration of a corpuscle, molecule, or the greater organic form of being, there are generated both the ascending and descending spirits or forces of disintegration.

When the form of a man is disintegrated, his spirit passes one way and his body the other. When a spiritual being ends a definite career in the spirit world, it dies as the man dies in this world; the interior consciousness of that spirit passes on to another plane and phase of its spiritual existence, while the outer consciousness is precipitated, losing its identity. It is thus born into this world without any recollection of, or consciousness of the past. This is partial re-embodiment.

In the case of the Lord Jesus, he passed on from Abraham into many re-embodiments, and through many degrees of spiritual progress until all the spiritual and natural degrees blended in the one natural, visible, and tangible re-embodiment of Abraham in the Lord Jesus—heir of the central throne of God. Thus Abraham had progressed through his forty-two re-embodiments in the flesh, with all the degrees of his spiritual progressions, until Abraham was developed into the Son of God. We state this case merely as the representative one. In the case of the Lord, it was a full reincarnation of Abraham, with the two thousand years' additional experience.

(2) The souls of men, like men in their bodies, are either in the ascending or the descending scale of their being. All men on the descending scale are the children of evil and fallacy; that is, the children of the devil, and they do the works of their father the devil—just as the Lord Jesus declared. All men on the ascending scale are ascending, because there has been planted the spiritual power of ascent from the Lord; they thus have been begotten of the Lord, and will progress on the upward scale until they come to the new birth, when they are born of God, and are therefore the Sons of God.

Men on the descending scale descend until they have reached—as the children of the devil—the lowest round of the ladder, when they become quickened from the center of life manifest in the human form, as like Jesus, the Lord in the flesh, for their ascent. All that is degenerated, disintegrated, and scattered as corrupt will be regathered, renewed, and restored to life.

The Sin Unto Death.

Does not the language of Hebrews, 6th chapter, imply that it is possible for some of those who received the Holy Ghost and tasted of the good Word of God and the powers of the world to come, "to fall away and fail to attain the Sonship? If so, does it not conflict with the statement that all who believed and received him—the Holy Spirit—"ate his flesh and drank his blood," should without fail, be lifted up at the last day, or end of the age?—J. L. T., Mobile, Texas.

Many people who received the Holy Spirit had it taken away from them at the time it was received. You will remember the Lord's parable of the sowing of the Word. It fell into or onto different kinds of soil, and on rocky ground, and by the roadside. Some fell into soil not deep; it took root, sprang up, and afterward withered. They were once enlightened, had tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost. They had tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the world (cosmos) to come. After falling away they could not in that age be renewed to repentance.

All who believed and received Him, and had him take root in good and abiding soil, so that the Holy Spirit could pass on to the production of the Sons of God, ate his flesh and drank his blood, and appropriated and assimilated them. It requires appropriation, digestion, and assimilation to constitute acceptance.

Koreshan Scientific Astrology.

If each of us has a star in the firmament, how are we to find our particular star?—W. N. H.

Every man has his specific star; this is determined by the relation of his birth—everything being normal—to solar, lunar, stellar, and planetary configurations at birth. Among the configurative phenomena to be considered, is the exact location of the sign in its precessional aspect, a phase of astrology left entirely out of all horoscopes by every modern astrologer. In this we do not allude to the place of the sun on the ecliptic, at any given time during the year, but the point of its precessional movement.

For instance; Napoleon was born when the sign was at a particular point in its precession. It will be a cycle of about 24,000 years before a like character can exist, and then not an identical character, when the sign is at the same point, for at the time the precessions of the planets are not identical to the points of their precessions at the time of his birth. These points must be determined by a critical and specifically scientific knowledge. It is the wisdom of the Elohim—of the Gods.

Who Were Called?

It is stated in Acts ii, that "The promise is to you and to your children and all that are afar off, even of as many as the Lord our God shall call." Does not this make the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost general and for the whole age?—A SUBSCRIBER.

All are called in whom the Word of God took root nineteen hundred years ago; but all were not the chosen. The chosen are such as accepted the Holy Spirit in the highest sense then, and who now will become the Sons of God through obedience to the laws of righteousness.

There will be 144,000 Sons of God. This is the order of Melchizedek; this is the multiplied fruit of the Lord's body.

These are Bride and Bridegroom; all others who come into divine life are angels. They are the called, for they will be as declared—sanctified, justified, and glorified angels, but not as the Sons of God.

Power of the Jews to Kill.

If the Jews dared not take Jesus and put him to death for fear of being punished by the Roman authorities, how is it that they could stone Stephen to death so soon afterwards without fear of being called to account by the Roman government?—A READER.

Let us answer this question Yankee like, by asking one. If the mob of Chicago, which despises John Alexander Dowie, who makes as great a claim as Jesus did, dare not tar and feather him,—as it is in its heart to do,—why will a mob in some other city injure and kill, if possible, a follower of Dowie, right here in America (not Jerusalem) and in Chicago,—not much worse than Jerusalem?

Plutocracy in Education.

Millionaire Schwab Advises all Young Men to Start Early in the Race for Wealth.

The commencement period, when schools are closing and graduating classes are occupying public attention, is a good time to consider the influence of plutocracy upon education. Fortunately Mr. Charles Schwab, the million-dollar-a-year president of the steel trust, has spoken so plainly on the subject that little room is left for conjecture or speculation. In speaking to a class at an evening school in New York a few nights ago, he said:

"Let me advise you all to make an early start in life. The boy with the manual training and the common school education who can start in life at sixteen or seventeen can leave the boy who goes to college till he is twenty or more, so far behind in the race that he can never catch up. This, however, does not apply to the professional life. The other day I was at a gathering of some forty business men—men in industrial and manufacturing business—and the question arose as to how many were college-bred men. Of the forty only two had been graduated from college, and the rest of the party, thirty-eight in number, had received only common school educations and had started life as poor boys. So I say, as parting advice, start early."

This is the advice given by the best paid employe in the United States—the advice given by a man who receives a salary twenty times as great as that paid to the president of the United States, one hundred times as great as the salary paid to a justice of the Supreme Court, two hundred times as great as the salary paid to senators and representatives, and more than a thousand times as great as the average salary paid to ministers and school teachers. His advice shows that he misconceives the main purpose of education, and values going to school only as it enables the student to get ahead of some one in the business world.

The principal value of education lies in the fact that it disciplines the mind, enlarges the mental horizon, and enables one to view men and things in their proper relations. Education is intended to make a citizen useful to his country as well as successful. It makes its possessor the heir of the ages, and enables him to judge of the future by the experience of the past. If a boy is taken out of school at the age of sixteen or seventeen and put to work "making a fortune," he is never likely to have time to study history or political economy, and will be apt to accept without question the opinions of those who are a little ahead of him in the race for wealth—opinions which are in turn received from those still further ahead.

Plutocracy boasts that it is practical; it has no ideals, for an ideal is looked up to, while plutocracy has its face to the ground. Mr. Schwab's advice will do infinite damage to the young men of the country, but it ought to awaken the thoughtful to the tendencies of commercialism. If we are to have the oppression of a trust system at home, and the despotism of an imperial policy abroad, we must expect to see education dwarfed, social intercourse debased, and religion materialized.—Bryan's Commoner, Lincoln, Neb.

The People's Trust.

The People May Own and Control all Industries and Reap the Benefits.

If half a dozen men can own, control, and successfully manage all the railroads in the United States, why could the people not own the railroads conclusively and run them for the benefit of society?

If a few men can buy great tracts of land, organize great bonanza farms, and hire men to run these farms, why can the people not own the land collectively, and run the farming business upon a co-operative plan?

If the great department stores can do business so much cheaper than the small stores that the small stores cannot compete with them, why could the same goods not be distributed under a co-operative system even cheaper than can be done by the department stores?

If through government control of the post-office a letter can be carried across the continent, to Mexico and Canada, for two cents, why could the people not own collectively the telegraphs, telephones, post-offices, etc., and do the business for even a small per cent of what it costs under the present system?

If the working class can exist and pay interest on forty billions of debt, and dividends on five billions of watered stock in the railroads, don't you think that class would be prosperous if interest, rent, and profits were abolished?

If under a system where 60 per cent of the labor performed is wasted, the working class can exist, don't you think this world could be made much better by the adoption of a system in which the labor of all the people could be utilized, and under which there would be no waste?

Is it not evident to your mind that if society can exist under the present system, that four hours a day of honest labor where there would be no waste, would support the world in plenty, even in opulence?

If the people collectively owned all the means of production and distribution, want would be unknown among those who would apply their labor to production for a minimum length of time each day.—Social Economist, Bonham, Tex.

The Pan-American Exposition.

A Prophecy of the Unity of Pan-American Nations Commercially and Politically.

Pan-American in scope, it should be Pan-American in effect. It is said "to celebrate the achievements of a century of progress in the Western world." It should rather prophesy a century of commercial interdependence. The jealousies of the past have been natural; the prosperous giant of the North could not but be looked on with envious eyes by the strippling peoples to the southward. Trade has too often been through Liverpool and Hamburg; the Latin-American and the Yankee have too persistently misunderstood. The function of this Fair should be to end that misunderstanding. Mr. Blaine tried to do it a decade and more ago; he would have welcomed and used a Pan-American Exposition. As it is, its far-reaching effect on intertrade relations may be doubted. The difficulties, competition with our farms and mines and forests to the profit of our shops and factories, are almost insuperable. At any rate, as Charlemagne's fair at Troyes gave us a standard of weight that still measures trade exchanges, the Buffalo Fair, if it would do the same, must begin by guaranteeing a reciprocity that is truly reciprocal, and a trade that has no condescension in it.

In the wider domain of international politics, the Pan-American should mean more. What the Latin-Americans most need is stability of government. Mexico is an instance of what can be done where revolutions do not disturb; the United States is history's exemplar of prosperity through peace. This lesson will not be lost on the quick-witted Latins. Perhaps, too, the Exposition may give a new and broader meaning to the Monroe Doctrine. Present tendencies, carried to their ultimate, mean an Old World trade-war against us, and such conflicts too often develop into wars, indeed. Should such times come, the solidarity of the Americas alone would insure the peace of the world. Shoulder to shoulder they could, if need be, face the world. If this Fair tends to even modify the Monroe Doctrine from "Hands off!"—the attitude of a protecting superior—to "Hand to Hand!" the attitude of a comrade and friend—and does naught else, it will mark an epoch in the history of mankind.

As a public educator, the Exposition is already an assured success. To the average American, it opens a terra incognita. The racial characteristics, the products, the resources, the customs of Latin-America are here spread out as in an open book. On the other hand, the Latin cannot fail to be influenced by the ubiquitous evidences of a free press, cheap communication by wire, rapid transit in the largest sense, and, what he needs most of all, scientific sanitation. To our own people will be taught, as never before, that the machine is taking the place of the handworker, and that electricity is supplanting steam.—From "The Pan-American on Dedication Day," by WILLIAM H. HOTCHKISS, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

Money, Men, and Morals.

Progress of the Future Must be Upon a New Basis of Human Relation.

With all the talk about peace and good will, all the civilized nations are increasing their armies and navies as though a world-wide conflict is at hand. The church prays, "peace on earth and good will toward men." It also prays for the success of the armies of the civilized in the conflict against the heathen.

The churches collect money to send missionaries to convert the heathen to Christianity, but when the commercial nations undertake to rob the heathen of his natural rights these same missionaries stand in with the looters and assist in robbing those they profess to be interested in saving.

This demonstrates that the influence of capitalism has more influence over the church than Him who said "thou shalt not kill;" "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesars, and unto God the things that are God's." This raises the issue concerning the question of the material conditions of the people, as the socialists have suggested. The material conditions of the race (especially civilized people) influence almost entirely the actions of men in both church and state, and it has seldom, if ever, been the case that the church has not endorsed the state in all its crimes against humanity.

Just as the missionaries in China have stood in with their respective nations in looting the Chinese cities and private individuals, so have the religious leaders always stood. This is not written as a criticism upon the teachings of Jesus, but to show that the question at issue is a material one. No religion ever has risen or will rise above the civilization that professes it; and the position of the ministry and church of the civilized nations is no exception to the general rule.—Social Economist.

Influence of Despotism.

Morocco Ruined by the Rule of the Sultan; the Decline of Mohammedanism.

Morocco, a country naturally rich and fertile, is kept poor by the greed and power of the throne. It is a government of the sultan, by the sultan, and for the sultan; nothing else counts; the people have no rights; the sultan is the embodied might and right of the nation. Fields untilled, crumbling homesteads, rich minerals left untouched, ruin and desolation everywhere—all tell the story of the sultan's terrible rule. For how shall it profit a man to lay up treasures for the monarch to seize? So every talent is buried in the earth, every light is hidden under a bushel.

The Moslem religion, once a spiritual and civilizing force in Africa, now acts as a check to all progress; its morality, its soul, is dead; the petrified shell alone remains, and that is a dungeon of darkness. Within its influence all things remain stationary or else crumble into ruins.

It is difficult to believe that these degenerate Moors belong to that same great race that once conquered Spain, who were liberal minded and progressive for their time, and masters of the fine arts. When the Moors were expelled from Spain they found their chief haven in Morocco, but a strange change has come over the spirit of their dreams.

The land of the Moor is stagnant, rotting under the terrible incubus of its government and its religion. Its only hope lies in its conquest by some civilized power; its gods must be banished, its idols shattered, else it must die of its own corruption. Not from that rocky eminence whence Boabdil turned with tear-dimmed eyes to look upon the lost Granada, but from Morocco today as bend el ultimo suspiro del Moro—the last the sigh of Moor.—Exchange.

The Millionaire Caste System.

In his recent birthday speech before the Montauk Club of Brooklyn, Senator Depew dwelt with his accustomed force and eloquence upon several problems of the day, and upon none with greater emphasis than the tendency apparent among a class of the very rich in this country "to hedge themselves about with a social exclusiveness unknown in Europe." In the great social centers of Europe, the Senator went on to say, prompt and full recognition was paid to men who had enriched the world with the products of their genius in art, literature, or science, and wholly without regard to the amount of wealth they had accumulated. This is particularly true in England, where such men find "a cordial welcome and appreciative recognition in the homes, both city and country, of the proudest of the aristocracy and the descendants of the oldest and most distinguished titles among the nobility." It has remained for the "millionaire exclusives" of this democratic land to attempt to found a caste based chiefly upon money considerations and very little, if at all, upon the possession of brains or character. They seek to make all except the possessors of enormous incomes socially the second class. The Senator is right in saying that this element of our alleged aristocracy is doing more to promote socialism and anarchy by its actions than all other agencies combined. The ignorance, selfishness, and inanity of the men and women composing this element make them a disgrace to the American name. Happily their numbers are limited and their efforts are certain to be futile. A caste system founded solely upon distinctions of wealth is so repugnant to every true American principle, that it cannot grow large enough to command anything but contempt.—Leslie's Weekly.

The Originality of Jesus the Christ.

Let me remind you that in this conception of life, which he began to propagate, Jesus was not repeating the instructions of any school or any recognized teacher of his day or nation. On the contrary, he was teaching ideas that were new, strange, startling, and revolutionary. Indeed, they are so today. There is not a sentiment or suggestion in the Sermon on the Mount which does not contradict the well-nigh universal beliefs and customs of our world. Select any church or religious body you like, and ask its members whether in actual practise they hold the sentiments expressed in the Sermon on the Mount; whether they believe that the "poor in spirit" are "blessed;" whether peacemakers are generally regarded as the children of God; whether the inheritance of the earth is supposed to fall to the lot of the meek; whether a man who is persecuted for righteousness' sake is thought of as a happy man; whether the idea of loving one's enemies, of giving to him who would borrow and expecting nothing back, or behaving with equal benevolence toward the evil and the good, just as the rain and sunshine do, is very widely cherished; whether it is possible to serve God and Mammon.

The united testimony of Christendom nullifies and contradicts every principle of Jesus' teaching. It holds to a set of beatitudes entirely at variance with those which Jesus taught. It has no use for the virtues He extolled. Indeed, it gives no evidence of having any comprehension at all of the mode of life which he embodied. He emphasized the fact that prayer at set times and places is not a good thing. But Christendom tenaciously maintains the exact opposite. And nothing is esteemed more natural by the religious world today than to serve God and Mammon—God Sundays, and Mammon all the time.—REV. W. T. BROWN, in Arena.

Effect of Allied Powers in China.

Can you picture millions of people flocking to their ruined villages along the Peiho, absorbed with the idea of reconstructing their homes and cultivating once more sections of ground that had been their means of support? Everything is barren; everything is waste. The once thrifty valley is only a continuation of ruins and devastation. The military operations are the only signs of actual activity. The population stands with mouth agape and waiting. What do they wait for? They do not know. While the troops of the world wander over the face of their province there can be no peace. And the weeks fly by, the ground hungers for the seed from the hand of the sower and goes wanting. The crude plow is jammed into the soft mud of the river's bank, and grows

Koreshan Church Service.

Regular Services of the Koreshan Ecclesia (the Church Triumphant) are held every Sunday, 3:30 p. m. at Koreshan Hall, 4th floor, 315-19 Englewood ave., Chicago.

A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in advanced thought.

rusty with age and disuse. The roofs over the mud houses are not replaced. No movement is noticeable toward the reconstruction of villages and cities. The chaotic condition of things does not change. The pangs of hunger gnaw at the vitals of millions. With no means of procuring their bare necessities of life, what can these millions do?—C. FRED. ACKERMAN, in Leslie's Weekly.

BROTHERHOOD.

The crest and crowning of all good,
Life's final star, is brotherhood;
For it will bring again to earth
Her long-lost poesy and mirth;
Will send new light on every face,
A kingly power upon the race.
Come, clear the way, then, clear the way!
Blind kings and creeds have had their day.

Break the dead branches from the path,—
Our hope is in the aftermath;
Our hope is in heroic men,
Star led, to build the world again.

—EDWIN MARKHAM.

Origin of Land Monopoly.

Once upon a time the saints held a convention. It was international and harmonious. Preliminary to general business two resolutions were offered:

1. Resolved, The earth belongs to the saints.

2. Resolved, We are the saints.

The resolutions passed without a dissenting vote.—Social Democratic Herald.

THE WORLD'S A-GOIN' RIGHT.

Some people are a-growlin' an' a-howlin'
day an' night,
An' a-rantin' an' a-railin' cause the world
ain't goin' right.
They are weepin' o'er its sorrows an' they keep its woes in view,
An' they never note the sweetness o' the rose's drippin' dew.
Some people in their frettin' are forgettin'
blessings rare,
They fail to breathe the fragrance that is floatin' on the air.
They keep the thorn an' thistle an' the nettles aye in view;
They pass the blushin' roses in their haste to pluck the rue.
This world may have its failin's, but there's good enough for all,
An' we may choose the sweetness or bitterness an' gall.
An' if we seek the shadows, an' if we shun
the light,
'Tis we, an' not the world, friends, that ain't a-goin' right.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

Pan-American Exposition Booklets.—We have had the pleasure of receiving two of the beautiful pamphlets issued by the Bureau of Publicity of the Exposition at Buffalo. The motif of the great International Fair; Buffalo and the points of interest within a convenient radius of the city; the grounds and buildings, including the Electric Tower, 391 feet high, the Temple of Music, and the splendid group of Government buildings, are described and illustrated. The cover designs are symbolical; one reproduces the well-known poster, "The Spirit of Niagara", the other represents the "ancient free spirit of the cataract, bound by the electric circles of Niagara controlled." It is evident that visitors to Buffalo will find rare entertainment and instruction. Among the novelties of the midway are: Venice in America; the Streets of Mexico; the Thompson Aero-Cycle, and Roltaire's "House Upside Down." Copies of these booklets may be obtained free by addressing the Pan-American Bureau of Publicity.

Edward Carpenter: Poet and Prophet, by Ernest Crosby. This little study opens with a comparison between Carpenter and Whitman, whom he follows closely in literary style. Sympathy for the working classes led the younger poet to share a laborer's cottage near Sheffield, and to work in the fields. There he still lives, dividing his time between the manufacture of sandals and his writing. Mrs. Crosby says that Carpenter finds a microcosm in himself, and constructs a history of the world from his own experience. It seems extravagant praise to say that the name of Edward Carpenter will be cherished as one of the guides and benefactors of the race.—The Conservator, Philadelphia, Pa.

Leslie's Weekly.—The Decoration Day number comes with a laurel wreath for the dead. An article on The Blue and the Gray gives an account of the annual exercises of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the reunion of Confederate Veterans in Memphis. Minna Irving in a poem called The Patriotic Wedding, celebrates the fusion of North and South. The Confederate Charge at Chickamauga, the Nation's Temple of Fame, and the International Cup Race are among the illustrations. Is Christian Science Christian? and The Marvels of Electricity are both articles of notable interest. Judge Building, 110 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Arena.—The leading topics of the day in which everyone feels a vital interest are discussed as usual. England's Crime in South Africa, by W. T. Stead; Imperialism; the Servant Problem, and a symposium on Christian Science and Theology, are special features. B. O. Flower contributes a character sketch of W. T. Stead as the representative journalist of the transition epoch, in whom the opposing principles of the old and the new meet. 25 cents a copy. Alliance Pub. Co., Life Building, New York City.

The Saturday Evening Post.—For more than fifty years an Englishwoman (who is still living) has cherished a little sheaf of letters written by Charles Dickens. These charming letters show the novelist in a new part—that of the successful matchmaker. They tell the story of another man's courtship, and show how the writer spurred a faint heart into winning a fair lady. They will be printed—for the first time—in The Saturday Evening Post for June 15.

The Medical Iconoclast.—A monthly magazine devoted to medical freedom. Its object is to warn mankind against the indiscriminate use of drugs. It is wide awake and progressive. 10 cents a copy, $1.00 a year. The Iconoclast Pub Co., 212 Oklahoma Avenue, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland flax, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God and his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is employed at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Existence of Evil Taught by the Christ.

Inconsistency of "Christian Scientists" Concerning the Doctrines of Jesus and His Apostles ; Death and Devil Exist or the Messiah's Mission was in Vain.

IN THE NEW TESTAMENT SCRIPTURES we have a record of what purports to be the teachings of the Lord. His Disciples, when addressing him, did so most reverently as Lord or Master, in the sense of superiority—not merely as teacher. This may be confirmed in hundreds of instances by reference to the original texts. Any man who attempts to deny this shows his ignorance of the testimony of the Disciples and Apostles of the Lord, as imparted to the world in their records of his doctrines and life. The vicious attempt of the spirit of hell, manifest in "christian science" as one of the pronounced and open powers of antichrist to belittle the character of the Lord, and his mission and purpose in the world, cannot stand against the avowed opposition of the Messiah to the heinousness of the sins of the day and generation in which he performed his work, and which "put him to shame" in his ignominious death on the material cross, after his trial and condemnation as a malefactor.

If we accept any part of the Disciples' testimony we must accept it all. We cannot logically and conscientiously select that part of their records which seems to adapt itself to some preconceived notion that may have been formulated for the express purpose of denying the Lord's mission. The Lord testified to the existence of satan and the devil, the existence of sin and the perpetuity of evil. The power of this latter antichrist to nullify His declarations, must confront the vast array of recorded testimony in opposition to the spurious claims of an antichristianity which is as conspicuous as it is damnable and absurd.

"Ye are of your father the devil, and the works of your father ye will do," needed no mollifying medication from the Lord who made the unambiguous declaration; nor will it admit of the flagrant attempt at its denial by antichristian "christian science." The announcements of the Lord in his unqualified condemnation of sin, cannot be stultified by the extraction of "christian science" soothing syrup from the mutilated records of the Apostles. The Lord came to save his people from their sins—not the sins of ignorance merely, but the sins of vicious and voluntary performance. The powers of hell, while not knowing that they were crucifying the Son of God, so far as the external consciousness of those who maliciously put him to death was concerned, did know that they were falsely accusing an innocent man, and their persecution was hellish. And while he prayed: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do; he knew that he was not suffering a mere negation. The Son of God whom "christian scientists" say taught there is no sin, sickness, nor death, and therefore no such thing as suffering, found himself unable to apply his own doctrines. He so suffered as to be compelled to exclaim, in the agony of despair, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

If Jesus were the original founder of this modern humbug, and there is no sin, no sickness, no death, why did he set this remarkable example of the power of death, and in the throes of his agony exclaim, to the power of its then superdominant authority? If the Christ did not die, then all the testimony of his Apostolate goes for naught, and the story of his crucifixion is the myth that the "higher criticism" would make it; and if that be a myth, then the entire conception of what is termed primitive Christianity is a mere fabric of the imagination, and it would be better to have ignored the myth and to have founded the system of psychological power upon something more tangible than the modern Christian misconception of a relegated mythology.

Even "christian science" is not the full-fledged power of antichrist; for John—one of the most conspicuous of the Apostolic enunciators, the inspired John, the same John who wrote much of the Gospel record, and whose testimony if not true in one instance at least, ought to be doubted in all—declared the coming of a beast "ascending from the earth; and all the authority of the first beast he executes in his presence, and makes the earth and all who dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose mortal wound was healed. And he does great signs, so that even fire he makes to come down from heaven to earth in the sight of men." Now, here is the statement of John, that there is a power capable of showing signs and performing other miracles in counterfeit of the powers of the Spirit of God. Miracles are now no evidence of the power of God. Any man, no matter what his religious profession, whether of the rankest atheism, can so direct his mental force as to produce favorable or unfavorable conditions, mentally or physically. Combined psychic energy induces cumulative results proportionate to the augmentation of the aggregate mentality. There is more power either for good or evil in the union of two minds than there is in the operation of one mind alone; and the greater the combination of mentalities, the greater the power for good or for evil.

If there be any doubt of the Lord's opinion of the existence of sin and evil and their consequences, we will produce a few extracts from the records of his own personal declarations. The Lord Jesus taught that devils had an existence, and used language as definite regarding devils as regarding the existence of any other beings. He said: "If satan cast out satan, he is divided against himself; how then shall his kingdom stand? And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore, they shall be your judges. But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you. Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man? * * * He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad. Wherefore, I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men." How do the above Scriptural passages appear in the light of the Eddy statement, that there is no sin?

His name shall be called Jesus, not Christ, because he shall save his people from their sins. "And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit. O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man, out of the good treasure of the heart, bringeth forth good things: and an evil man, out of the evil treasure, bringeth forth evil things." If Mrs. Eddy's statement that there is neither sin, sickness, nor death, is not a plain contradiction of the declaration of the Lord, then there is no meaning to language.

It would ordinarily seem that if the doctrines of the Lord were to be brought into dispute on the basis of an avowed confession of the Christ, there would be some little show, at least, of an outward similarity. The audacity of the "christian science" denial of the Divinity of Jesus, and its contradiction of all Christian principles, show the stage of corruption attained by a professed Christianity. Never in the history of the progress of Christian civilization has anything appeared to more conspicuously set forth the accuracy of prediction to be fulfilled in modern times, than this modern abomination. If anything more were required to verify the truth of the prophecy of antichrist than has heretofore appeared, in "christian science" we have the climax. Mrs. Eddy has just emerged from a lawsuit, where, as she asserts, she had a non-entity for a plaintiff. She was merely fighting a phantom of her own imagination because, if all is good, then there could be no evil opposition to her claims. It must have been a peculiar relish for her to have partaken of this dessert, in the good spirit of the woman who brought the suit. Mrs. Eddy's imagination must be a vivid one, to even suppose that she was conducting a lawsuit, when she is so good and there is no evil. There was no lawsuit, according to her doctrines; and how she could have fallen into this error while teaching the contrary, is a mystery.

"The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels." "Are ye also yet without understanding? Do not ye yet understand, that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught? But those things which proceed out of the mouth come from the heart; and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies. These are the things which defile a man." "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." "Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." How could Jesus have made this lamentable mistake, that he should die, in view of the fact that there is no death, and that there was yet to come a Mrs. Eddy to contradict his emphatic declarations?

In this age of the world, when corrupt measures demand some justification to stultify the conscience and soothe its compunctions, this monstrosity called "christian science" comes to fulfil the requisition. Men who are steeped in iniquity, who have robbed the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and have turned aside the stranger from his right, and feared not the Lord of hosts, ought to be grateful to this modern comforter for the great boon of mollification coming in this nick of time. There could be nothing more acceptable to an old reprobate, rotten with iniquity, than to be told that there is no sin! And Mrs. Eddy is just the woman to give this sop. "For there shall arise false christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Signs and wonders, then, are not to be taken as evidence of the manifestation of the power of God. There are to be more convincing proofs of the genuine Messianic manifestation of this age. When the Messiah is manifest, he will confirm the office of the Christ of nineteen hundred years ago by fulfilling the commandments then enunciated, and teaching men to do them.

"Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee: As thou hast given him power over all flesh [there is no flesh according to Mrs. Eddy], that he [the Son] should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus [the] Christ, whom thou hast sent." "None of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the Scripture might be fulfilled." "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? * * * I am Jesus [the man] whom thou persecutest."

Purpose and Conduct of the Koreshan Unity.

A System of Genuine Liberty for the Promotion of Happiness : its Scope, Progress, and Ultimate Success ; Organic Fellowship in the True Form of Society.

THERE ARE SOME THINGS in connection with the workings of the Koreshan Unity that the outside world ought to know, and we take the opportunity to impart the information through THE FLAMING SWORD of this issue. There is a somewhat extensively prevailing impression that the Koreshan System is to be regarded as a continual source of social restraint, and that the Society is made up of a series of daily penances, in which it is believed there exists an aggregation of virtues that will be booked on the account of the devotee to these restraints. Our system is substitutional, providing better resources of enjoyment than can be furnished in the world outside of the Unity. Heaven is a place and condition of the utmost degrees of pleasure, the extent and variety of which are beyond the power of the ordinary human expression to convey. It is a place of supreme enjoyment, and should be so, as it is the full compensation for the experiences through which every personality has to pass in the progress of that development which is to fit one for the final beatitudes of the perfect man.

We do not contend that we have reached the heavenly state or condition, in the present development of our Order; far from it, but we are instituting the only means through which can be reached the goal of human contentment. Nor do we claim that all men will be brought into the aggregate fellowship of community life. Socialistic communities will be established throughout the world on the basis of the Koreshan Unity united life; this will be, however, only the great universal sympathetic system. It will be to the universal or Grand Man, what the sympathetic nerve is to the vidual or individual. The groupate system of Koreshanity is but one part of the perfect whole, as it will obtain in the social order of the near future. The more perfect people of the age will pass through the groupate stage of human progress.

Society in its perfect state will constitute the man in his greatest form, because a perfect social creation is in the form of man. Man in his greatest form is the macrocosm, and is like man in his least form—the microcosm. It is easy enough for men little versed in the laws of natural correspondences, to prate of the universal man and talk glibly of the macrocosm; but it is quite another thing to so thoroughly know the anatomical structure and function as to be able to construct society according to the laws of correspondential order. Humanity will take the form of a man, not in some other sphere of existence, but in the world, on this natural plane of active life and enterprise. Such an organization of society means that one mind will have the intellectual direction of the arrangement of human society into organic fellowship. In order to accomplish this, he will possess not only the knowledge of the human anatomy and its functions, but will be able to translate this language into the language of societal life.

The universe as a cosmogonic or an astronomical system is in the form of the Grand Man; it is not, however, endowed with mentality. It is composed of the correspondences of whatsoever organs are embodied in man as a living being. We will furnish one illustration: The form of what is called the physical universe is so related as to center and circumference, that it is subject to the principles of expansion and contraction as manifest in the tides. This is the correspondence of respiration in the vital man, and does not depend upon the influences attributed to the creation of the tides as set forth in the assumptive definitions given by so called astronomers. This operation of the ebb and flow called the tides, is the correspondence of respiration of the human body. It is the breathing of the physical universe. Every function of the vital and individual body has its correspondence in the alchemico-organic universe. This is not only true, but the correspondences are duplicated in the organic perfection of society. It is for this reason that the one whom God and Nature have ordained for the performance of the function of organizer, must be the adept in the comprehension and application of the laws and forms of the universe.

In the presentation of the forms and laws of what the perfect society will be, we are not intending to convey the impression that our Society has reached anything like this ideal state. We are in the pioneer stage of our progress and development, and like every other pioneer service, ours calls for willing sacrifice. We have been asked, "Why does not the Koreshan Unity supply itself with all the luxuries of life as it goes along, because it is in the full blaze of the light of alchemic knowledge?" We reply, that a condition of affluence at the present time would be a disastrous thing for the integrity of our little body. People come and try our system, and then withdraw from us because they cannot endure the things which go to make for a healthful discipline. We employ the term discipline in that broad acceptation meaning instruction of disciples, which includes the exercise of the essential restraints of tendencies which lead to ultimate destruction.

When the Israelites were in the wilderness they endured many hardships for many reasons, one or two of which may be mentioned. These were for education, and also for the exhibition of the power of God through his miraculous display—which was also disciplinary and educational. Do not appeal to us, first, to employ the great resources of alchemy in the production of material gold. Let us first make the gold of immortal life, in the transformation of the corruptible and corrupt humanity into the incorruptible Sons of God. This is one of our ulterior missions; let us perform this work. We ask for assistance from outside sources, partly because it furnishes a test of the faithfulness of our people; it enables us to become acquainted with the status of those who might make application for membership to our body, when they have not the first idea of the principle of personal sacrifice for another. We do not want members who are not with us for the amelioration of the world as a whole. It would not be out of place for those interested in our cause, but who are not in the community, to send one tenth of all their income to the Koreshan Unity for the purpose of its support and prosperity. We have never urged this, as we prefer to let our work take its most natural progress, waiting for its influence to soften the heart sufficiently to work a voluntary movement in the direction of the world's determination to make our cause a success.

We believe in attractive, harmless, and educational amusements, even if we must find them outside the Koreshan institution. Everything in human society has its origin in the heavenly amusements which constitute the recreations of the heavenly spheres. Recreation is but re-creation; and the variety found in the pleasures of amusement is one of the essential factors of the higher life. Our people can and do mingle with the world. They do this, however, from their association with the home life which is essential also to their virtue and integrity. Where amusements are of the vicious and harmful kind, they are the mere perversions of what were, in the heavens, amusements and recreations of the divine order. All the variety of heavenly recreations will be brought down to the sphere of earth, because it is in the divine purpose to fulfil the prayer indited by the Lord himself: "Thy kingdom come, and thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

We hope the impression will not prevail that it is the purpose of the Koreshan Unity to hold its followers down to the stool of repentance. We do wish them, however, to understand that if we would gain immunity from the oppressions of the world, we must gain that freedom by acts of sacrifice commensurate with the degree of attainment we wish to reach. If not in this embodiment, then in the experiences of many partial reincarnations; for it is only through these that we acquire the perfections of immortal life. The happiness of the genuine Koresban is largely in the anticipation of the future—a future he will be instrumental in creating.

Dispensational Progress of Truth and Life.

The Law of Abandonment and Factors of Rejuvenation ; Changing Creeds and Present Chaos ; the Seed Man and the Crowning Fruitage of the Age.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

IN REMARKING upon the subject of religion and the churches, a recent writer declares that every church from the Roman to the Baptist, which broadens its creeds to meet the evolutionary intellectual progress of the time, will maintain its position; and that every one which does not, will decay and be abandoned, through that law of abandonment which, as its leaders ought to know, has long been actively in progress. The all-pervading law of abandonment is not better understood by the author of the preceding, than it is by the institutions at which he directs his remarks. From the heart of the central sun to the outermost deposit of the earth's crust, abandonment and advent are the extremes which self-balance the axis of their conjunction. From that August Majesty—the focal point of the human universe, to the circumferential limit thereof, change, compound of abandonment and its opposite, the latter canceling the deficit created by the former, is one of the factors of rejuvenation, and hence of perpetuation. To whatsoever realm the thought may turn, yesterday's abandonment with its accompaniment of decay, is the mold from which springs the growth of today.

The advent of the Christian era witnessed the Almighty's abandonment of his perfect and sacred person to absorption and decay in the sensual race, that from it might spring Himself multiplied 144,000 times. In this transaction is observed the supreme function of the supreme, the highest phase of mutation. Genuine Life—converged in the Seed-Man, the climax and apex of all conceivable things, the Son of man, the Son of God—as a germinal beginning is planted in the race. True to the law of production from seed,—for the Christ came not to destroy but to fulfil the law,—this Seed died in the race, which race corresponds to the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, wherein waslain his body pending its resuscitation. From this tomb He emerged alive. The coming forth is emblematical of His reappearance in the humanity; for as he overcame death in the rock-hewn tomb, so shall he overcome death in the hearts of stone into which he was ultimately precipitated, and earth shall blossom as the rose in this the light of her crowning fruitage. This grand finale depends upon every possible change, seen and unseen, in the alchemico-organic and in the anthropostic universe; every possible change, recognized and unrecognized, depends upon this grand finale. The response of situation to situation is perfect; the interdependence completes a grand cycle of involution and evolution, which has repeated itself world without beginning, and will continue world without end.

When the darkness is so dense that science is a farce, religion a fallacy, and the ignorance of the signs of the times is complete, which state ripens in the completion of the age, it is in the order of law that inspiration or illumination, in man as its continent, comes for the enlightenment of such as will receive. The sign Aries is passing from the constellation Pisces into the constellation Aquarius. The old age is passing out; the man in illumination is here. Those who read by the light of his mind, are able to say that the church which conforms its creeds to the desires of fallen man, is of fallen man and not of God. It is a dead body—the legitimate sequence of a living body. From this decay will spring a living and Godly organization, but as different from the God-ordained Christian production as that church was different from the God-ordained Jewish hierarchy. It will be the Aquarial or Koresban Church, and its sway will extend to the uttermost parts of the earth.

It is said that the new religio-scientific explanation of God is that of an "all-pervading something which cannot be described in terms of matter because it is non-material." This idea is not new; the delusion is as old as the time elapsed since the death of the true conception of the Eternal One. The "higher criticism" is but a higher name for the atheism which has clouded man's perception of Biblical teaching, and has lost to him Isaiah's key to the manifestation of God: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." He of whom this is said taught his disciples to pray for the coming of his kingdom. The conjunction of this thought with that conveyed in the text—"The government shall be upon His shoulder," moves one with its mighty significance. "The carnal mind is enmity against God." In the coming time—the Golden Age, sensual man will cease to direct the affairs of men. Church and State combined will stand forth in the regal authority which companions Godly integrity; and in that glorious day of light, purity, and loveliness, the sundered church and state of today will be but the chronicle of a hideous nightmare of the chaotic darkness of the past.

Usury at Harvard College.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

BOSTON, May 1.—Barney Bennett, the "old clothes" man of Harvard, who is said to have made $10,000 a year by lending money to impecunious students, has been taken in hand by the college authorities. Dean Briggs has petitioned the license committee of Cambridge to revoke Bennett's license, and it is said that at a private hearing given by the committee the dean told some startling stories of usurious methods. Instances where interest of 50 per cent and upward was charged were cited.

Bennett's method was to put an advertisement in the college papers that he would call for clothes. He would agree to accommodate the needy student with $50 or $100 if the student would favor him with a note for double the sum. Many accepted his terms. In one case Bennett presented a claim for $4,000 against two students. Another student received $180 and gave a two months' note for $330. When the note came due Barney presented it with $4.95 for incidentals.—Record-Herald, Chicago.

USURER HARVARD and usurer Bennett are both on the same platform. On the Bible principle that whoso offends in one point is guilty of all, the one has little of which to boast over the other. From another standpoint, the latter may indeed be less reprehensible than the former. They differ not in kind, only in degree. What plea in extenuation of his crime Bennett may have, because of ignorance and evil environment, we know not. He appears to have been licensed to steal by a robber government, and has only transgressed by stealing more than the law allowed; while Harvard, whose infancy was fed by contributions from pious poor men, of a peck of corn a week, that she might train up a Godly ministry to keep the knowledge of a God of justice from dying out of the earth, in defiance of the direct command of that God, thundered from Sinai against all usurers, now in her adult age lives upon usury, and by her example and precepts renders it possible for the old thief, Bennett, to pile up his mountains of accursed wealth out of the necessities of poor students. In the eyes of right thinking men and a God of justice, which, think you, will be found to be the greatest sinner—worthy to be beaten with most and heaviest stripes?

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

AN ARTICLE taken from the Boston Transcript reports some of the latest speculations, not in Wall nor Lombard street, but in that greater realm of speculative activity called modern science. The atomic theory which has obtained for a century and a half is being discarded for what is termed the corpuscular hypothesis, which holds that atoms are made up of little constellations of smaller particles or corpuscles. No decision has been reached in regard to the nature of these corpuscles. Some physicists believe they are not matter in any ordinary acceptation of the term, but are, so to speak, merely "disembodied charges" of electricity. It is admitted that so far as experience has hitherto gone, electric charges are known only as united to matter; but Dr. Johnstone Stoney and Dr. Lamor have both speculated on the properties of such charges if isolated, which by the former have been named electrons. It is interesting to trace the series of erroneous theories which proceed in logical sequence from a false premise. First, the idea of a God without body or parts; next, that of souls in a spiritual world remote from humanity; then the belief in thought without brains, and finally, "disembodied charges" of electricity. Would it not be more reasonable to argue from what is seen and known? When the material basis of supply is exhausted, there is no further production of electricity; no thought ever originated apart from a material brain; no bodiless spirit floats through space, independently of a material organism; analogically, no Infinite spirit without body or parts is diffused through a measureless universe. All spirit—divine, human, animal, or physical, is the product of the transmutation of matter. The idea now advanced, that matter is built up of interlocked positive and negative electrons so that nothing but two enormous charges of electricity would remain if it were possible to separate them in any given mass, is simply a slight modification of the old chemical hypothesis that electricity already existed in the substances combined and is merely set free by chemical action. No one outside of Koreshan Science has grasped the law of transmutation. Charles W. Price, editor of the Electrical Review, contributes an article on the marvels wrought by this wonderful agent, to the current number of Leslie's Weekly. "Who so powerful as the electrician," he concludes,— "the man who has annihilated time and space, mastered heat and cold, and chained the lightning as a bond slave to labor for all eternity?" Yet with all his powers, the wizard knows not the nature of the slave he holds in thrall, though like Prospero he may force the spirits of earth and air to serve him. Mr. Price states at the beginning of his article that electricity is not a substance; that it is a condition of matter propagated with great speed along conducting wires. The Founder of Koreshan Science demonstrated thirty years ago, by actual experiments, that electricity is a substance produced by the transformation or the burning up of matter. At the same time he discovered the existence and the nature of what the old-school scientists still name the unknown ray, though they profess to explain it in some manner. Mr. Price says that he asked a friend to define its operation as clearly as possible. He was told that the "X ray is a rapid transverse undulation set up by the impact of gaseous molecular ions driven by a cathode stream, which is produced by the action of a high electro-motive force upon matter in a condition of extreme gaseous tenuity." Though the false idea of the immutability of the atom is being destroyed by the theory that the basis of matter is electrical, the old school scientists have not bridged the gulf between the so called corpuscle and the atom. They never will until they accept the law of the cross. What they call electrons, are vortices where matter is being converted to energy by alchemical combustion.

The inspiration of the Scriptures has become a moot point. The nature and degree of interior momentum and enlightenment imparted to the authors of the Bible are questions that can only be settled by appeal to a higher tribunal. Archeological discoveries, natural science, and the witness which the Biblical records bear of themselves have led to various decisions of the lower courts, all of which are contested. On this, as on every vital issue, Truth from the Throne must send out its fiat. Nothing less than this, supported by absolute, irrefragable proofs will find credence. The world is tired of shams and opinions. The system of science which we advocate rests upon a demonstrated mathematical basis. Other proofs as original and incontrovertible will follow. Enough has already been published to convince reasoning minds of the divine origin of Koreshan doctrine, which proclaims the veracity of the holy Scriptures in their symbolical, scientific, and historical aspect. The Bible was not written by modern inspirational methods; it is not a specimen of automatic writing. The thoughts of its authors were exalted, and they received intimations of the universal significance of concrete things. They opened their windows toward Jerusalem, whence the light and the glory of God shone into their minds. The sublime concepts which Moses and Isaiah clothed with beauty and simplicity, never flowed from intermediate spheres whose influx moves the fingers while the brain is dormant. They did not reveal the science of the Word, which includes that of natural things in detail. That work was reserved until the present age; but all that they wrote was in consonance with those details.

"We owe no allegiance to any church, sect, society, ism, ology, fad, political party, class or creed. Neither have we assumed the responsibility of doing other people's thinking. We are not out in search of faithful followers who are too lazy to think for themselves." The editor of the periodical which makes the above statement, goes on to say that such persons would better attach themselves to "christian science" or the Cellular Cosmogony. He advocates a declaration of mental independence oblivious of the fact that interdependence and co-operation belong to the divine standard of righteousness. Pride believes that it can stand alone—that the human mind in its natural condition is self illuminated. There never was a time when the creed of vainglory was so widely held. There are thousands who join in reciting its tenets, yet there never was such mental confusion and social disorder. Results prove that it does not and it cannot lead to rest of thought. When the editor in question classes "christian science" and the Cellular Cosmogony together, he shows plainly that he has not lived up to his creed—that he is letting somebody do his thinking for him. He would better investigate for himself, and not take opinions "as boys learn to spell." Reason and experience bear witness to the fact that man can penetrate the mysteries of Being. The Mind that holds them from age to age must reveal them. These arcana are made known in the form of general principles. Understanding of Koreshan doctrine and the Cellular Cosmogony opens the interiors of the mind so that, reasoning from generals to particulars, men may answer their own questions.

It is generally admitted that the Supreme Court decisions in the Porto Rican cases make directly for imperialism. The Administration is jubilant at this endorsement of its policy. Everything is going its way, and Chauncy Depew has already launched the idea of a third term for President McKinley, whose title is virtually Emperor. But how is the Administration going to settle the dispute between labor and capital? Does it hope with the optimistic Mr. Machem, in the Cosmopolitan, that J. Pierpont Morgan is destined to be the great harmonizing agency? Does it look to arbitration? Is it not rather hastening forward in careless indifference to what may follow, bent only upon securing its own ends in the spirit of the French king whose famous mot, "After me the deluge," has become the accepted phrase to express supreme disregard for all consequences save personal disaster? The machinists' strike proves that arbitration will not suffice to settle the differences that may arise between employer and workman. Mr. Morgan, whatever his personality, has given no evidences of conversion to co-operative ideals. His ambition seems to covet monetary supremacy rather than the blessing promised to the peacemaker.

The dedication of the Hall of Fame in New York, where tablets were unveiled bearing the names of those who rank above their fellows as leaders and benefactors, is a reminder of the truth that great men are factors of progression for the race. They are focal points of energy like the stars above, to give light to the mental world. They are centers of motion to give impulsion to thousands of minds. Let us honor them not only for the service they perform, but as living testimony pointing toward the law of Messianic aggregation. It is not always easy to look outside of self and pay tribute to the superior qualities of another. Hence there is a school of thought vastly popular just now, whose devotees say: "Let us keep out of the throng that is rushing wildly hither and thither, after leaders, prophets, sages, and seers. Let us look within ourselves and see the little flame which burns steadily there. Let us know that we have within us the light of the Spirit which naught can extinguish." These words are quoted from one of our exchanges. They represent the principle of self-righteousness which opposes the Messiah in his coming.

The art of writing depends upon the clear expression of truth. Thought and style in the highest sense cannot be separated. Capacity to grasp the concepts of being carries with it the ability of impartation. The mind of God creates its own style, but it cannot create the power of comprehension in those who lack understanding. Vapid nothings may be clothed in fine phrases, but they only deceive those who prefer sound to sense. They do not produce the impression of beauty upon the discriminating. Judged by true canons of art, the literature of the day is largely worthless because it is empty. Mere fluency without original ideas does not constitute art. The reader's object should be to gain information and enlarge his views. Even when relaxation is the object, and humorous writings are chosen, the story fails to please unless it presents fresh thought in an enlivening manner. The jest and the epigram must be pointed with truth in order to provoke a laugh.

American manufactures are coming to the front in an encouraging manner. Immense orders for railway supplies from Ecuador show the confidence that is felt in our productions. Better goods can be furnished at lower cost in the United States than in any other country in the world. Tariff reduction must facilitate the expansion of our industrial interests. The finest textile fabrics for which France has long been famous, as well as the most highly wrought specimens of mechanical art, are being manufactured right here. The American workman is not only more fertile in invention, but his eye and his hand are quicker and surer. French taste is no better than American taste, and this nation is destined to be the arbiter elegantiarum of the new age and the coming race.

America holds the key to the Chinese situation. Symbolism is the higher language through which God speaks to the world. The events of history are all symbolic and prophetic. Through the Intervention of Minister Conger, the National Museum has been presented with the lock and key to the front gate of the sacred city in Pekin. America has given birth to Koreshanity, which holds the key to the New Jerusalem—the Holy City whose establishment in earth means universal adjustment.

Some men haunt their neighbors' houses with the ghosts of evil thoughts.

The law of the conservation of energy applies to thought.

Veneering looks well until it begins to come off in spots.

Editorial Discussions and Miscellany.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED BY KORESH.

The Unchangeableness of Deity.

"I am the Lord; I change not, therefore you sons of Jacob are not consumed." "God is not a man that he should lie, nor the Son of man that he should repent." How can these declarations be harmonized with the Koreshan doctrine, that God is man and changes his state of condition?—J. L. T. Mobile, Texas.

We study the character of God on the basis of correspondences derived from a knowledge of the form and function of the physical universe. God is to humanity what the sun of the physical (alchemico-organic) universe is to the earth. The sun does not change, but the substances of the sun are in a state of constant precipitation. The very substance of the sun is constantly changing. This does not change the sun. God, who is ever within the humanity, is like the sun; he does not change, but it is one of the laws of this unchangeable God, that he clothes himself with his external form and absorbs that form into the eternal spiritual consciousness that he may not be changeable. God is not a man in the common acceptance of this term; the Lord, however, is the arch-natural man. In this Lord, the man in whom God resides, God is Spirit. God the Lord, manifest as the Son of God, passes down into the race by his descending degree.

The descent of the Holy Spirit was occasioned by the burning up of the Lord's body, its conversion to Spirit, and its dissemination. When the Lord descended, there was at the same time, an ascent of the ascending spirit into the invisible Godhead. The Lord both ascended and descended, as the Scriptures declare. The descending spirit is the spirit of regeneration, that is, the spirit of reproduction. The descending spirit is constantly changing as the descending energies of the sun are constantly changing. If one cannot see the law of correspondences as it obtains in God's universal economy, it is useless for him to attempt to comprehend God. Yet it is for man to know God in all the intricacies of his being.

The Tilt of the Poles.

If there is absolutely nothing outside of the universe, how can you consistently speak of a "tilt of the poles"? (See diagram on back cover of Sword previous to March, 1901.) It would seem to me that a "tilt of the poles" would necessarily involve some point outside: would it not? This question has been bothering me considerably of late.—J. W. E., Cactus, Kans.

The questioner seems to be laboring under the difficulty of attempting to attach the Koreshan Cosmogony to the old Copernican astronomy. The sun, moon, and stars are within the sphere of the earth's circumference. This fact cannot be conceived without the elimination of the old astronomy from the mind. This is the first prerequisite in the appropriation of the truth. After this is done, try and comprehend the fact that the sun we see is a small body about one thousand miles from us—or from the earth's surface. The yearly course of the sun is oblique to the equator of the earth, about twenty-three and one half degrees. This obliquity describes a plane which is oblique to the plane of the equator. The axis of the equatorial plane is on the line of the meridians, while the axis of the plane of the ecliptic is slightly oblique to the meridians. The poles, therefore, of the ecliptical axis are one side of the poles of the equatorial axis. The axis and poles of the heavens inside, not outside, the earth are oblique to the axis and poles of the earth itself. These relations are not altered from the fact that we live inside of the earth. The axis of the earth is oblique to the axis of the heavens.

Organized Charity.

Its Wrong Method and Harmful Results; Perverted Society and False Philanthropy.

Society, the state, and the nation are responsible for the existing order of things. There are in this country tens of thousands of able-bodied persons out of employment. These masses must be fed in one way or another. If they could obtain work, the labor would help to strengthen their physical bodies and also develop their minds; but if they have to live on what they receive from charity organizations or private individuals, then there is little hope of civic progress. An unholy system that makes it possible for certain persons to own thousands of times more of this world's goods than they need or can possibly use, carries within itself abject poverty. One extreme begets the other—the millionaire is father to the tramp. Then let society and the nation, who are responsible alike for the wealth and the poverty, find some way whereby the poor shall have an opportunity to work and shall receive sufficient compensation at least to hold soul and body together. Let our social leaders and legislators cease making slaves or beggars of people through their unrighteous charity. Let them not heap up judgment and condemnation upon themselves, but rather try at least to do something that will make human existence for countless thousands less of a struggle for bread.

This nation has been likened to a great family of which the highest and lowest members form equally important parts—a republic in which each works for all and all work for each. It is only so in name, however, as the statement is a mere figure of speech. A family that would fail to care for its weakest members, one wherein the strong would prey upon the weak, would hardly be considered worthy of the name.

A nation that allows its sons and daughters to starve when it might provide them with sufficient work to insure a comfortable living, and at the same time sends thousands of its wage earners to distant parts of the earth to slaughter their brother men, can hardly be regarded as having any of the paternal or maternal instincts awakened. "But," says some one, "paternal government is infernal!" And our so called wise men take up the cry and harp upon it, attempting to show the dire injuries that would result to the nation in helping its own. It is right, it would seem, to take fathers and sons from their homes and give them employment in fighting men, but it is not right for the government to engage in any extensive operation wherein tens of thousands of men might be employed, not in a way that would carry distress or sorrow into the family life, as war does, but by which every participant would be benefited.

Think of the great amount of good that could be accomplished by an army of peace—in building good roads, in developing waste land, and in doing many other things in which the government could profitably employ men! Such public enterprise would strengthen our country and develop our commerce in a way that neither war nor any other agency could ever approach. Organized charity would not thrive to the degree that it now enjoys, and nonproducers would not draw fat salaries in dispensing it. There should be no need nor toleration of nine tenths of such organizations as now exist. If everyone able to work were given an opportunity to do so, those unable to work might perhaps be cared for by organized charity; but in all probability they would be cared for by members of their own families, who would doubtless earn sufficient to support themselves as well as those unable to work.

The organized charity needed by the world today is a righteous distribution of its wealth—not that it should be divided equally among all its people (because if it were it would not remain so for any length of time), but that the laborer is entitled, first, to work, and, secondly, to a fair proportion of what he produces; and if in his service to humanity he become infirm or unable to work, then his past labor should entitle him to be cared for in some way other than by a charity organization.—CHAS. BRODIE PATTERSON, in The Arena.

The World's Coal Supply.

Who Authorized the Monopoly of Fuel to Increase the Power of the Money Gods?

Behold the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth, and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.—James v: 4.

Under the earth's surface at various depths, in veins of varying thickness, lies the world's supply of coal. Millions of years before men came here, this coal was stored away to supply them with heat when in the fulness of time they should arrive on earth to fulfil their mysterious and still unexplained errand.

During thousands of centuries the coal was stored slowly, and during thousands of centuries it was packed into a stony condition by the pressure of the weight piled up above it. Today men dig it out and sell it. In the production of this coal you would naturally say that there were only two great agencies: First, God, who made the coal and stored it away to be used. Second, the men, and women, and children who work in the mines, living in darkness and grime and bringing the coal to the surface. But there must be some other great agency responsible for this coal and for this reason:

The coal product of great Britain last year sold for $300,000,000. The total amount paid to all men, and women, and children who dug the coal out of the ground was $50,000,000. Two hundred and fifty millions of dollars, five sixths of the entire product, went to some one else. Of course that "some one else" is the mine owner, the coal speculator. We do not believe that the power which made the coal and gave it to men is quite satisfied with the conditions under which the coal is dug.

We have an idea that a situation which involves extravagant prices for the poor who use the coal, very small pay for the poor who dig it, and $250,000,000 for men who neither made the coal nor dig it is not satisfactory to the maker of coal mines and the Ruler of the world.

We sincerely believe that in His own time he will change a system which needs changing so badly. We believe that a change will come and that it will be radical. For divine disapproval of the grab-balls is written too clearly to admit of any varied interpretation:

Go to now, ye rich men; weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth eaten.

Your gold and silver are cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.—James v: 1-3.

The existence of a half-starved miner is not pleasant, the life of a woman working in the mines is horrible, and the stealing of five sixths of the coal from those who dig it out is abominable. But we have an idea that when the time comes to straighten out accounts the miners will not have the hardest part of the bargain.—New York Journal.

Aerial Navigation.

Hofman's New Flying Machine Differs Radically From all Other Contrivances.

Following hard upon the heels of the Viennese engineer, William Kress, whose aeroplane has been illustrated and described in the Scientific American, comes a Berlin inventor, Regierungsrath J. Hofman, who has constructed what is claimed to be a working model of a flying machine.

Kress, for lack of funds, was severely hampered in building his device. Unable to purchase a motor—an obstacle which, we are glad to note, has been overcome with the assistance of the Emperor of Austria—Kress could test his contrivance only on water. Hofman, on the other hand, did not immediately proceed with the building of a full-sized machine, but has first constructed a model on a scale of 1 to 10.

To start and to land are the most difficult feats in operating a flying machine. For this reason ingenious inventors, among them Prof. Langley, have erected special frames from which they start their machines in order to secure sufficient living force, the machines themselves being merely of sufficient strength to meet the requirements of the speed to be attained.

Hofman's machine differs materially from the contrivances of these inventors, in so far as he uses no particular launch-frame or other construction. He employs legs which are provided with wheels at their lower ends, and which are suddenly drawn from the ground close to the body when the propellers are set in motion. Robbed of its support, the machine falls, driven forward by its propellers. But the machine drops barely a second; beneath the wings, projecting far out from each side, sufficient air has collected to sustain the entire apparatus. New masses of air continually collect beneath the wings, so that, it is claimed, the buoyant force of the air becomes so great that the machine is not only supported in its flight, but is even driven further upward, there to be maintained at the desired height by the action of its propellers.

The little steam-engine used to drive the propellers is supplied with steam at a pressure of 165 pounds by a boiler composed of seventy-two water-tubes. The engine itself is made of steel. For a full-sized flying machine, Hofman intends to use coal as fuel, although the firing of the boiler with petroleum has also been contemplated.

The wing or sail surfaces have an area of over 21 feet, and project laterally to a distance of 4.66 feet. The entire weight of the model is 7.7 pounds.—Scientific American.

A Modern Fable.

Illustrating the Moral and Immoral Conditions Prevailing Throughout Civilization.

Fat Salary once invited a number of friends to a swell dinner in order to talk over plans for Social Progress. As the subject was a delicate one, only such guests were invited as would inspire awe by reason of their great names. The guest of honor was the Hon. S. T. Policy, who comes from a very respectable family, which was further represented by Business Policy, Social Policy, Government Policy, and others. Among the other guests present were Popular Sermon, Editorial Wisdom, Good Investment, Gilt Edged Security, Watered Stock, Political Pull, Handsome Income, Legal Advice, and Eminent Respectability.

The guests who were noticeable for their absence were Simple Justice, who has to work overtime as a blindfolded statue on the courthouse and cannot get away for social functions; Equal Opportunity, who is not on good terms with the host, and Sound Principle, who has said things that offended several of the guests, and has not a decent suit of clothes to wear anyhow. The result of the company's deliberations was to appoint a committee consisting of Blower Horne, Richly N. Dowd, and Miss Sweet Charity, who were empowered to hire a secretary and stenographer to take charge of Social Progress and raise necessary funds for its support. The committee, after consultation, selected as secretary a gentleman of great tact and discretion, Prof. Thusfar N. Nofarther, who has been duly empowered to attend to all business connected with Social Progress, and to relieve the benevolent patrons of all responsibility.—Straight Edge.

Millionaire Morgan and the Gamblers.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, leading citizen of the world, crossed the ocean. Two professional gamblers on the boat gave a modest imitation of big financial deals. They played with the other passengers—but not with Mr. Morgan. Mr. Morgan sat down, took one look at the small professional gamblers, and was horrified to discover that these gentlemen had arranged what is known as a "sure thing." The gamblers could not lose, the passengers were bound to lose.

The two professionals, of course, did not get eleven hundred million dollars, or even one million. But they did get twenty-five hundred dollars. Mr. Morgan denounced them to the other passengers, and they were compelled to give back the money. Honor to J. Pierpont Morgan for his quickness of sight and promptness of action! We thank him, on behalf of a great public, for having thwarted a wicked attempt.

We hope the two professional gamblers will never be so impertinent as to walk down to the corner of Wall and Broad streets, in New York, where Mr. Morgan has his office, and give their opinion of the game that is played there. We learn with considerable indignation that when the gamblers were exposed, they alleged that there was an element of humor in their being exposed by Mr. Morgan. There was nothing humorous about it. There is an enormous difference between selling for eleven hundred millions something that you never owned, and working the insidious ace from the bottom of the pack into your own hand.—Newspaper Union.

Crime Against Civilization.

If a crime is defined as an act the doing of which is prohibited by law, stock speculation cannot be considered criminal, but when the word crime is used in its broader sense to describe an act which offends against morality or the public welfare, it certainly includes that species of gambling upon the market which endangers the community as well as injures the participants. A record of Wall street's doings for the last week is an indictment against our boasted civilization. That such transactions are allowed is as much a reflection upon the intelligence of the country as it is upon the conscience of the people. It is little less than amazing that a few men should be permitted to corner the market for their own selfish purposes, beat down the prices of one stock and boom the price of another stock, demoralizing business and jeopardizing the interests of all classes of society. It is reported that the slump in stocks amounted to seven hundred millions in value, and that the New York banks had to put up nearly twenty millions of dollars to prevent a panic. How will the historian describe an age in which a petty thief is severely punished while great criminals go unwhipped? It often takes an object lesson to arouse the people to the evils of a bad system, and the recent fluctuations in the stock market, costly as they have been, will be cheap if they lead to legislation which will put an end to stock gambling, erroneously described as "business."—The Commoner, Lincoln, Neb.

Tribute to the Koreshan Prophet.

Because the time is ripe for another general and special Messenger of truth, a man is in the flesh today that is an incomparable mentality. If the world does not know who he is, men have something interesting to find out. The time is up.

Koreshan Church Service.

Regular Services of the Koreshan Ecclesia (the Church Triumphant) are held every Sunday, 3:30 p. m., at Koreshan Hall, 4th floor, 315-19 Englewood ave., Chicago.

A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in advanced thought.

His name is known by some. He has changed the mentality of the whole world in more than considerable measure since 1870. He has rediscovered or re-broached the lost arts or forgotten laws of the universe; as for instance, organic unity, alchemy, reembodyment, reincarnation, and has restated the Cellular Cosmogony, as well as told the location of the spiritual world and heaven. The entire Scriptures are open to him, and it is he that is inspiring their interpretation at this time. Others may not see in this man what we see. What we do see in him are such entities as Socrates, Napoleon, Shakespeare, Elijah, Jesus coming back again! For this reason we welcome him with joy, because he has power to bring the angels!—The Interpreter, Denver, Colo.

The United States "Is," not "Are."

It took the American people nearly three generations to make up their minds whether they were a mere confederacy or a nation. They finally settled that question upon the battlefield. Since Appomattox there has been no doubt that the United States "is" a nation. By common consent the Constitution was amended to make its grammar accord with its facts.

We no longer speak of the Senate or of Congress as "they," as did the Constitution framers. Neither do we capitalize every noun, nor spell "choose" "chuse," as they did. To say "the United States are" now, is as antiquated as to follow Shakespeare in saying "it lifted up its head." Those who use the plural prove themselves either more nice than wise or blindly obstinate. All real and progressive Americans say "the United States is" because that is the fact.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Beer in Manila.

Mr. Frank G. Carpenter, writing from Manila, says:

"About the only thing that is now being imported here in great quantities from America is beer. This was brought to Manila by the shipload as soon as the Americans took possession of the country. I crossed the Pacific with the agent of one firm, who made $250,000 by getting his cargo of beer in first. Other men have done almost as well, and today all the leading makes of American beer are sold here.

"The beer is largely consumed by Americans. Within six months after our troops landed the number of Manila's saloons was multiplied by ten. There are now one hundred here, where there was one before, the chief support of all being the American soldiers. The beer sells at high prices, the ordinary bottle costing twenty-five cents in gold, or more than three times as much as at home."—Watchman.

No Free Press in Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 29.—The prohibition of the publication of the Noroe Vremya for a week because of its editorial articles on the labor troubles, is creating an immense sensation, as indicating extraordinary nervousness on the part of the government.

The Noroe Vremya is second only to the Moscow Vladomatie in conservatism, and is usually allowed greater latitude than are the other papers. The editorial in question is mild as compared with many governmental publications on the labor situation in more quiet times. It merely said the operatives were poorly paid for excessively hard work, and were beginning to be influenced by Western literature, and suggested that the government carry on the work begun for emancipation and enforce social reforms.—Exchange.

A Fable for Moderns.

In a community of animals the fox once set himself up as a doctor. Proposing to his customers to be perfectly fair, he said he would take no pay except where there was a cure. He prescribed in all cases of sickness and took a fee from all that got well. This seemed fair enough to the animals, and even generous. But the fox soon became rich, since everyone that got sick recovered many times while he died only once; so that each animal contributed often to the fox, and only once got his services for nothing.—AUSTIN BIERBAUER, in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

Cost of Crime in America.

Eugene Smith, of New York, has written an article on "The Cost of Crime," which has been given government sanction by publication as an official document. Mr. Smith estimates, after going into the matter carefully and studiously, that the cost of crime to the people of the United States reaches a total of $800,000,000 annually. And to think that we are still pegging along in an effort to "suppress" crime, without giving any thought to the causes which lead to crime, and making consequently no effort to remove those causes. —The Critic, Rich Hill, Mo.

Artificial Eclipses.

An Experiment Upsets Copernican Idea that Eclipses must be Produced by Globes.

A yet more extraordinary counterfeit of natural processes is the result of an ingenious Englishman's experiments. A total eclipse of the sun is so rare a spectacle that, when one occurs, it excites a more widespread interest than almost any mere sublunary event. The notion of presenting a counterfeit of such a phenomenon in a drawing-room, to order, is certainly remarkable, and the plan adopted for the purpose is of a notably novel character. It depends not at all upon the reproduction of photographs of an actual eclipse, but is wholly artificial.

A rectangular tank of glass is the principal feature of the apparatus employed in this simple experiment, which may be reproduced by anybody who will take a small amount of trouble for the amusement of himself and his friends. If you happen to have a small aquarium it will do first rate. Fill it with clean water, and add a tablespoonful of alcoholic solution of mastic, which, being thrown down in a fine precipitate, will give to the water a milky appearance.

Next take an ordinary six-candle-power incandescent lamp, and pass the wires that lead to it through a short glass tube, fastening the lamp tightly with sealing-wax to the end of the tube, so that no water can be admitted to the latter during the subsequent proceedings. The arrangement should be such that the lamp will stand at right angles with the tube, and to the tip of the lamp must be firmly attached a disk of metal somewhat greater in diameter than the lamp itself.

Now immerse the whole affair in the aquarium in such a way that the metal disk shall be held close against the front glass of the tank. Darken the room, seat the spectators in front of the tank, and turn on the electric current. Immediately (the metal disk representing the moon) the onlookers will behold a beautiful representation of a total eclipse of the sun, with an exquisite corona caused by the scattering of light by the small particles of mastic suspended in the water.

To render the effect perfect, a small quantity of solution of malachite-green aniline dye should be put into the water, giving to the sky—which is represented by the water—the peculiar and weirdly greenish tint that characterizes the real sky on the occasion of a solar eclipse. This, too, brings out with greater distinctness the corona, which extends its misty streamers of pearly lustre and exquisite texture far out into the background of the counterfeit heavens. The effect is exactly like that of an actual eclipse, and a photograph of it would be accepted even by the most expert astronomer as an actual snap-shot of the celestial phenomenon.—The Saturday Evening Post.

The Drink Curse in England.

Dr. Cunningham Geike, in drawing some comparisons between England and the United States, and showing the alarming prevalence of the drink habit in the former country, says: "Here in England the woes of intemperance may be judged by its sad commonness, for the consumption of strong drink in the States is not much more than half, per head, of that with us. Were our outlay on alcohol no higher than yours, it would save us no less than $285,000,000 a year—and how many woes would that heal? Our drink bill for 1898 was nearly $772,500,000, which comes to nearly $33 for every living creature old enough to crave such drink. In my parish, I found many workmen who drank over $7.00 a week out of a wage of $10.00. Workingmen are three fourths of our population, and it is believed that they spend $500,000,000 yearly on worse than useless drink. An American in my congregation told me he had to close a factory opened by him at Wolverhampton, from his workmen never making a whole week, some coming to work only on Wednesdays, and even then they would get boys to smuggle beer into the factory. No wonder we have 126,000 public houses in the United Kingdom, with a capital of $1,150,000,000!"—Last Days.

The Trusts' and the Socialists' Hope.

Awaiting the outcome of our dealings with the trust, stands Socialism, says Charles J. Bullock in the June Atlantic. The "Billion-Dollar Trust" seems to furnish a practical demonstration of the possibility of organizing the largest industries upon a national scale, and the socialist applauds the efforts of Mr. Morgan and his associates. The concentration of all the railroads into a few groups, controlled by a single set of interests, is a brilliant triumph for the policy of centralization; and for this, too, Mr. Morgan has the gratitude of every socialist. The popular discontent caused by the monopolization of one necessary of life after another prepares the soil in a manner ideally perfect for the sowing of socialistic seed, and it is a significant fact that American Socialism has first become an appreciable force in this era of trusts and combinations. * * * If thinking men ever become convinced that in manufacturing and other industries competition is impossible and monopoly inevitable, only two possible alternatives will then present themselves—public or private monopoly; and those who are now occupied with the formation or justification of trusts will be chiefly responsible in case the balance finally swings in the direction of Socialism.

Dog Banquets and Starving Children.

A Mrs. Eugene Clark, one of the four hundred, owns a pet Japanese dog. In order to please her pet, she arranged for a dog banquet. Invitations, written in English and Japanese, were sent to twenty canines of like nationality, who through their owners, accepted the invitations, and came in carriages, each accompanied by a nurse, clothed in full Japanese costume. A table, six inches high, was loaded with fried chicken, Japanese cake, candy, and sweetmeats. In this way the dear little dogs were entertained for three hours, and then carefully wrapped up in silk-embroidered blankets, and taken home in carriages. And in this same city, women were sewing in dingy, low-walled rooms, for a miserable wage of thirty cents per day; here also were to be found thousands of children, poorly clad and homeless, to whom motherly care or a woman's caress would seem the strangest thing in the world.—The Young Lutheran.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland floss, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity, not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communist. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is enmeshed at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

The Creation of Good and Evil.

Problems of Existence which "Christian Science" Fails to Solve; Primary Assumption of the Popular Fallacy; the Relation of Deity to the Mortal World.

"CHRISTIAN SCIENCE" makes certain claims on a primary assumption, an assumption predicated upon an almost universal misconception of the character of Deity, and in direct violation of the principles of human reason. There is a law of mental action through which the mind may reason a priori and a posteriori. The objection to the exercise of this power of the mind originated with the Roman church, when in its universal sway it claimed the right to subject the reason, compelling the mind of the laity to exercise faith alone, which in the church was a blind faith—a declension of the original faith which was founded on knowledge, not on ignorance. "Christian science" goes the old church one better; it stultifies the reason, and with it the entire intellect, the only basis upon which the thought of a spiritual reality can be considered. The mind could not possibly conjecture a quality called spirit except by contrast, and matter must necessarily exist by virtue of the law of contrast—one of the supreme factors of mentality.

"Christian science," so called, makes its first appeal to what it calls the mortal mind, to decide upon the merits of the immortal mind, its location, and its status. It assumes something concerning God, which is not only contrary to reason but contrary to every precept of the Bible. In the Bible we read that the Gods made the heaven and the earth. There is no conflict of opinion among scholars as to the fact of the plural signification of this noun. The term Elohim is employed throughout the entire chapter. "And the Gods said, let us make man in our image, and after our likeness: and let them [the men the Gods created] have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." Gen. i: 26.

In connection with the use of the plural noun, Gods, there is employed the singular personal pronoun, which has always been a great puzzle to the scholars and theologians. This has grown from the fact that the doctors of divinity have doctored Divinity too much, without a proper diagnosis of his case. The modern Christian world has been dealing with a sick god, and they (the people) have made him sick through their ignorance of the fundamental principles of being. No man nor woman has the right to interpret the term Gods to signify anything but the plain statement—Gods. It was the Spirit of these Gods that moved upon the waters. This Spirit was the divine proceeding from the Gods, they constituting the order of Melchizedek, of whom Jesus, the Son of God, was declared to be the High Priest.

We maintain that the doctors of cult and divinity had no right to translate the term Gods in the singular, as they have done, because it leads to false conclusions regarding theology. The question of the singular pronoun can be settled upon the basis of the science of religion. The body of Christ, which is declared to be one, is made up of many members. The Lord Christ, as Jesus, was the Head of this church, and the twelve Apostles were its foundations. It was one body with one unifying Head, but as its membership was plural, all possessing the one Spirit were the children of God, hence the Sons of God, therefore the Gods, when the final process of regeneration has made them the perfect Sons. As members of one body we would say them or they, while as one body with the one Head, Jesus—the Son of God, we would say he.

“Christian science” assumes that God is a great universal spirit not made up of individualities, but a homogeneous character, a conception derived from the general ignorance of the human mind. We deny the right of “christian science” to the assumption without its proof. When “christian science” has proven that such is the character of Deity, it will have some foundation for its argument. The Gods are not one homogeneous spirit; if they had been, the Revelator of creation would not have said: “And the Gods said, let us make man in our image and after our likeness: and let them [man, generic] have dominion.” The Gods constitute the supreme order of beings. Their attributes are the attributes of Deity, hence they have the powers of re-creation; therefore they said, “Let us make man;” that is, many men—as the phraseology of the Scriptures unqualifiedly proves.

“In the beginning the Gods created the heaven and the earth.” Was this a spiritual earth? If so, all we ask of the “christian scientist” is to prove it. This earth which the Gods created, was without form and void, and the Spirit of the Gods moved upon the face of the waters. And the Gods said, “let there be light; and there was light.” In the second chapter and fourth verse we gain a new conception of the character of Deity, for there we find a new appellation for God. It is Yaveh—the Gods (Yaveh, Elohim). It is contended by many of the Hebraists, that this new form is employed because a new writer has come upon the scene of action. We maintain that it is because a new condition has arisen, by virtue of the fact of another development. The Gods, that is, the order of Melchizedek, have focalized their powers in the germ of their reproduction, in the Jehovistic man; namely, the Lord. This is because the Gods cannot re-create except through the natural archetype—the germ in its tangible state and form.

The Lord Jesus was the recurrent manifestation of the Yaveh, or the Jehovah. “Christian science” is an assumption that conditions, at least of the mind, can exist without adequate cause; or if a cause be admitted, the cause has no defined expression; nor can “christian science” state the reason for the existence of the hallucination into which the good God has allowed himself or what he has created to fall. It matters not whether we feel pain or think we feel pain, the suffering is the same; and if God is all Good, and if all that he creates is all Good, and the Good forgets itself or himself and thinks itself to be evil and sin and sickness and death, the effect is the same, and the assumption is infinitely worse. The fact is, we may say God, the first Great Cause, Zeus, Theos, Spirit, or jumbo; the principle remains, that cause—whatsoever it may be—can project nothing that does not obtain in the cause.

“Christian science” admits and denies the existence of mortal mind in the same breath. Whether it denies or affirms the existence of mortal mind, the condition has to be confronted, and the condition tells with equal force against the goodness and power of everything in the universe. If mortal mind exists, it does so by virtue of the fact that there is an adequate cause for its existence in the power that can and does create it. We unqualifiedly denounce the lie of “christian science,” that the Jehovah God is Spirit. This lie is the foundation of the entire fabrication of this monstrosity. The conditions that obtain now are the conditions of evil, and these conditions have an origin. Can the human reason ascertain the cause of this evil?

The end of man, so far as the mind can discern, is corruptibility. This condition must constitute the premise of whatsoever logical formula we may apply to the process of investigation. Our premise, then, is that we are under the fact of the existence of mortality, or under the belief of the fact of the existence of mortality. This fact, or belief in the fact, has an adequate cause. No one will pretend to deny the belief, for the proofs are so abundant that the belief cannot be questioned. The premise is demonstrated; now we can begin the argument. The “christian scientist” says that there is no argument, for the dictum of Mrs. Eddy settles the matter. Still the fact confronts Mrs. Eddy, that we will argue the question.

That we may give special emphasis to what may follow, we quote from the Bible—the book from which Mrs. Eddy claims to derive her philosophy: “I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord [Jehovah] do all these things.” We will not pretend to ask the people to believe this because the Bible declares it, merely, but we will proceed to show that the cause of things does accomplish this condition, and that the Biblical testimony agrees with the facts as they obtain. We will show that the Cause of things is responsible for the fact of mortality with mortal mind, or for the belief of mortal mind which has gotten us into this dilemma. We observe life and death, or we seem to observe what the mind thinks to be death. We can only conclude that this condition of thought had its source in causation. We therefore declare that there exists a possibility in the cause, to degenerate to the condition of the belief of mortality in mind.

We contend that the mortal mind does not know, nor can it know the character of God. We further contend that the mortal mind appears to exist in a mortal body. This appearance of a mortal body had, also, an adequate cause. We wish to inquire what the nature or character of the original Good, or the original God, or the original Spirit could be that could contain the possibility of reaching the "hallucination" that it is a mortal mind, and that this mind exists in a mortal body. Mrs. Eddy knows that there is a belief in an immortal mind. By what process does she distinguish the real from the unreal? How will Mrs. Eddy prove that if the senses of the human race fool them in the one instance, they will not in the other? When we deny the power of the human faculties to observe and define evil, we deny their power to know and to define good; and also the power of discriminating between good and evil. If good has its origin in causation, evil has its origin in causation; and if one is eternal, the other is everlasting. If belief in the mortal mind can exist in effect, it can and does exist in cause. There existed in cause the belief of the mortal mind, or the belief could not have existed in effect. If belief of the mortal mind existed in cause, it existed by virtue of its being a factor of existence; hence mortality is a part of this great system of universal being. Belief in the mortal mind existed in the cause, for the reason that the mind of cause knew by discrimination that immortality involved both life and death.

Let us examine a little further into the character of evil and its uses in the economy of being. "And Jehovah, the Gods, commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Here is a tree, the fruit of which is the knowledge of good and evil. Why did God make man into such a tree, and then command him that he should not partake of it? The tree is man himself, who contains both good and evil, who also attains the knowledge of good and evil, which is the fruit of the tree. Man must not eat of this fruit—good and evil, but, knowing good and evil by his powers of discrimination, must reject the evil and become the fruit of the Tree of Life. Man in his ascending life obeys the injunction and does not eat, but in his descending life he does eat of the tree, and descends into hell to acquire the experiences which enable him to become again the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

We have conclusively shown, reasoning a posteriori, that there exists in causation a belief in the existence of the mortal mind; and not only so, but there exists in causation a belief, as well, in the existence of a mortal body. Will Mrs. Eddy or her followers accept the horn of the dilemma, that causation believes in something that does not exist, or that the creative power believes in the creation of a material body, when the existence of a material body is beyond the possibility of a fact?

If God be all good, why does he project evil? Let us extend the rational formula a little further. We find man to be endowed with involuntary functions, and surrounded with environments over which he has no control. Did he derive these factors of being and environment with or without an adequate cause? If with an adequate cause, then the cause did reside in the very origin of existence; it follows, therefore, that cause is both involuntary and voluntary. We find, then, the very source of and necessity for evil. It is the involuntary power of God. God forms light by his voluntary action, and darkness follows as its involuntary consequence. God makes peace by his voluntary purpose and action, and he creates evil as the reactive sequence of his voluntary activity for good. Thus we are enabled to reconcile the fact of the existence of evil with the goodness of God, showing that while the responsibility for evil obtains with the Creator, it obtains with God's involuntary power. It throws a new light upon the character of God, and upon the purpose for which fallen man was and is created, and for which evil exists and may be overcome, not by its denial, à la Mrs. Eddy, but by overcoming evil with good, according to the direct and unmistakable injunction of the Bible.

Jesus was severe in his denunciation of those who lived for personal emolument, forgetting their obligation to God and men. Did He stand in human form today, with the divine fervor and zeal for righteousness urging him as advocate for the downtrodden and helpless ones of earth, he would enter the pulpits of our land and say to those who preach for hire: "Why frame ye your oratory that it tickleth the ear of the robbers of God's poor? Lust and voluptuousness are conspicuously marked upon you. You are bloated with sensualism and selfishness, and your pride is communicated to your very temples, which you build for the accommodation of the rich, while the poor are most worthy of God's gospel. He would say to the law-makers, your legislation is all in favor of the rich, and you are sustained in your iniquity by the very power which professes most of all to be the oracle of God. The whole system of religion and legislation is an abomination, and shall be wiped out with the besom of destruction, and its place taken by that which shall exalt the lowly.

Attainment of Immortality in the Flesh.

Analysis of a New Phase of Fallacious Mental Science; the Character and Purpose of the Immortal State; the Messiah and the Divine Baptism.

THERE EXISTS A SPECIES of mental "science," with a very specious current of sophistry running through it and permeating the fabrication. It involves the conception of immortal life in the body. Its basic proposition includes the declaration that man can and will attain a state in which the death of the body or its dissolution is overcome. This kind of mental science ignores the very basis upon which all mentality is operative. There is no mental science that does not embody a thorough knowledge of the engine of mental generation. There is no mind in the universe that does not depend upon, and is not associated with brain substance and quality. The word science signifies knowledge. Mental science is mental knowledge. As the human brain is the engine for the generation of mental energy, it follows absolutely that the foundation of all mental knowledge is a thorough and systematic knowledge of the anatomy and physiology of not only the brains, but of all that upon which the brains depend. It is a notorious fact that "mental science," "christian science," and theosophy—the modern interpretation of Buddhism, are attempts to settle questions out of the domain of their legitimate spheres of operation.

It has been contended for over thirty years in Koreshanity, that the human race will attain immortal life, and that this attainment is to be reached in the body. Enoch reached it, thus "walked with God: and he was not; for God took him;" Moses reached it and was taken; Elijah reached it and was taken into the throne of Deity, and subsequently, the Lord Jesus attained immortality in the flesh and was absorbed into his Deific throne. These were central absorptions, but none the less absolutely indicative of the great truth of man's possibility of attaining life. Now, what Koreshanity contends—in contradistinction to all the spurious claims on this line—is, that immortality will be the result of a knowledge of the arch-natural physiology, and the scientific application of the arch-natural physiological laws. We absolutely deny that immortality can be acquired by mere mental exertion. Desire is but one factor in the acquisition of the immortal state. Mere desire will not effect immortal life in the body.

We furthermore contend, that when the immortal state is reached the life will be transited to the eternal realm, which is not on the plane of material existence. The conviction which is gaining ground, that when the body attains immortality the fruition is to be an eternal one in the flesh, has its origin in the most consummate ignorance. The mind that conceives it does so because the last vestige of spirituality is eliminated from the constitution of the personality. Immortality in the body will be reached in the process of human development, because it is the only place where it can obtain. It is the fruit of the Tree of Life. When the fruit is ripe, it is then plucked and appropriated. The process of appropriation is the dissolution of the body and its absorption. The absorption of the human organism with its mental increment, does not imply any loss of identity or individuality. When the human organism has reached its fruition of immortal life, it is then prepared to enter into the conjunctive unity of its being with the mentality for which it was ripened, when it becomes one with its own inner consciousness.

One of the conspicuous claims for a spurious immortality, is that there is a God within every man and woman; this assertion is without any scientific foundation. God will be manifest first with one man in this age of the world; that man is the Elijah that the prophets of old predicted would precede "the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." It is the Spirit of God the Lord manifest to usher in the kingdom through the great and dreadful day of the Lord. There will be no deviation from the prescribed methods outlined by the Hebrew prophets, and we are prepared to wage the final contest with all the false and spurious prophets of these modern times,—as to the authorized prophetic distinctions.

If mankind would live the life of a distinctive sphere, it must desist from the application of the things that work for, and contribute to the life of another sphere. The spermatation and germination of the present human existence ultimate in the development of the mortal form and function; mortality is the legitimate fruit of the present so called "life" of man. Nothing will ever be added to the function of natural generation to improve its character. Mortal humanity is ripe, its seed produces its kind; it cannot, nor will it ever produce any other fruit than that of mortal being. If this mortal is to put on immortality, and this corruptible, incorruptibility, it will be accomplished by the application of new principles. Desire is one factor in the process of immortal attainment. We have pointed out the law of transition from the mortal to the immortal state. It is in direct conflict with the sensual tendencies of the mortal man and his sensual pleasures; but desire must be accompanied with the correct intellectual direction in order to accomplish the acquisition of life.

Can the spermatinal and germinal resources of life be devoted to any other or better use than that which procures for man the immortal state? If so, what is that use, and what is the method of its operation? This question answered, the question of immortality is settled. The comprehension of the law will not suit the sensual mind. The laws which pertain to the germ of reproduction in any sphere, are operative with the germs of any other sphere. We may take the kernel of wheat as representative of all seeds in all domains. Has the wheat any other use than that of reproduction in the wheat generative domain? If it has another use, then all seeds have other uses than in the direction of reproduction. The wheat has two pronounced and distinctive uses; one is that of reproduction, the other is that of appropriation for a higher existence. We sow the wheat that it may reproduce its kind. The seed of mortal humanity is sown that it may reproduce mortal humanity. It will not, nor can it produce any fruit but the fruit of mortal being. Wheat is appropriated that it may afford life to a higher plane of being. This identical law centers in the uses of the germ and sperm of natural existence. The root of immortal being centers in the reproductive powers of our being, and it is for Koreshanity to prescribe the principles which conduce to the immortal state and to apply them. As the wheat must cease to reproduce on the plane of the wheat cycle before it can be devoted to its higher and perfect use, so the human seed must cease to be applied either for illegitimate pleasure or for reproduction, before it can be utilized for the higher and perfect use of man.

The Lord said: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." This has direct and only reference to one man, the High Priest of the new age. This is because one man will apply the laws of life in himself, which will constitute him the life-giver to the world. It is for this reason that it is declared: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." Elijah is the great factor in the ushering in of the new dispensation, because he will become the pole of mental concentration and combustion essential for the inauguration of the coming conflagration. The first act of the humanity which is to be transited from the old to the new, is the conservation of the sex energies. This means that there shall be applied the law of restraint, which cannot be exercised but through the principle of substitution. So long as the affections tend toward the act of reproduction, or the act of mere pleasure, for the gratification of the passions, there will follow the consequences of the violation of the higher physiological law, the law of immortality, which is the arch-natural life.

The new use of the sex energies is their appropriation to the life of immortality. To insure the operation of the higher principles, there must be instituted a higher love, and this resides in the religious sentiment of the human heart. The soul must be enthused with something higher than with the love of self and personal pleasure. There is a thousandfold greater satisfaction when once this joy is realized in the performance of use to the neighbor, than in the exercise of the functions of life in attempting to gain individual happiness in personal pleasures. Mental energy is generated in the brains of people, and is as diversified as the laboratory is complex. Mental energy is substantial and flows in the direction of the desires, and it can be regulated to flow for the uses of life when once these uses are comprehended, and the proper direction becomes the desire of the will, subject to the intellect. The will, in which reside the pleasures, should not be the guide to our activities. In the present condition of the race, the will has been the guide to life. It is for this reason that death is the fruitage of human expectation. The light of the mind is the science of all things, and in this light men must walk if they will find the final joys of the kingdom. The intellect should be the guide to life, and the will, the devoted servant. It is for this reason that the Lord demanded, in his day, the absolute subjugation of the will of his followers to the Light which he brought to the world. "I am the Light of the world," said He.

The intense exaltation of the will, guided by the intellectual principle of the mind, draws up into the mind from the body, the spermal and germinal essences of life, and mutates them for higher uses. There is no power in the individual mind capable of utilizing these potential energies. It is only through the polarization of thousands of minds into one, the one, that the breath of God in the race can be realized. It is for this reason that the Almighty God has provided, and the laws of being have so fixed this eternal principle, that there can be no life without the regular Messianic manifestations in their order, and according to their uses in each specific presence.

There can be but one basis for the establishment of the kingdom of righteousness, and that is the system of brotherly love—to be evolved or unfolded from the Christ (Messiah) or God-Man, the archetype and seed whence the kingdom has its origin.

No government can have the divine sanction until justice is practically established in every department of its jurisdiction.

The object of all truth is to demonstrate the processes of life.

The Coming Era of Human Equity.

The Principles of Equitable Commerce in all Domains of Relation and Exchange; the Kingdom of the Gods and Its Perfect Social System.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

EQUITABLE COMMERCE, or the exchange of the products of industry, value for value as related to industry, must be established under the auspices of a judicial head presiding over a representative judicial body, anointed by an intelligent devotion to the commonweal. The law written in our members, that if one member suffers all suffer, is a foundation law of the universe that has found multitudinous forms of expression, glibly reiterated by the masses, but practically ignored by the organizers of the social and ecclesiastical institutions which tolerate established usages, perpetuating evils that inflict untold suffering. Society's Redeemer from sin and all its concomitants has for his primary work as a Redeemer, the establishment of a Guiding Star Assembly, or primary nucleus of scientific social order, made up of individuals fully cognizant of that law of interdependence which preserves the organic universe intact for the involution and evolution of its myriad forms of life, in which its God—Jehovah, the perfect Man, is honored and glorified.

It is a self-evident fact that the head and body, or center and circumference, of any organic structure are absolutely interdependent for the maintenance of the structure's integrity. Jehovah, the Lord Jesus, sought a place to lay his head, or a sphere in which to establish his Headship, and he agonized to impart his life to its universal form of united head and body. He declared to those having aspirations for the state of immortal Deific potency like his own, "without me ye can do nothing," knowing himself to be their legitimate imperial Head—source of corresponding life. "One is your Master, even Christ," said he, "and all ye are brethren." It is recorded of this body of brethren, that they had diversities of gifts, and were vessels to both honor and dishonor; that is, servants of both his voluntary and involuntary powers. Their individual value to Him and to his body as a whole, was determined by their efficiency as members appointed to diverse and specific functions.

A crown of life was promised to every good and faithful servant, and entrance into the joy of his Lord. To those who were appointed to the most sacrificial services, the more abundant honors were assigned; for a law of compensation ever works to preserve the equity of the final adjustments. In the judgments of the Almighty, injustice does not operate. To the unjust, the Lord invariably appears unjust; and to the filthy, filthy; but to the upright he is visible as he is—the just man justified in all his ways. The divine use of the science of Cosmology is realized through the service it renders the human mind as a basis of reasoning with the Lord. The Lord says to aspiring humanity: "Come now, and let us reason together; * * though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

The social and individual sins of this present evil world are scarlet of the deepest dye, having their origin in satan's seat,—satan being a woman sitting upon a scarlet colored beast, known to the Almighty as a harlot and the mother of harlots; for she is a church in adultery with a state from beneath, conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity. The time has come for this woman to repent and return to a state of righteousness, originating in the Lord our righteousness, born from above—from the New Jerusalem, the Lamb's wife, and the Mother of the Sons of God.

The state of righteousness is founded on the laws of equity which have been stated by Moses, the lawgiver, in ten categories called the Decalogue, and by the Lord Jesus in a briefer statement, who involved them as two-in-one, declaring their likeness. These wonderful laws of equity, obedience to which ushers in the Theocratic Kingdom, to be obeyed must be scientifically comprehended from the basis of their universal enactments, most universally summed up in the members of a perfect man, a divine being who generates and is regenerated from the Deific mind.

The God-Man alone knows himself and perceives all the laws of the universe written in his members, the tablets of the universal heart of being, out of which are the issues of life. Such a man was the Lord Jesus, who imparted the Spirit of his dissolved life to the world that his mind might be in men, with its omnipotent, transforming powers, aggregated from its evolution into its final involution—the age-lasting Father of his Theocratic Kingdom in earth, the resting-place of His eternal kingdom in the heavens.

Only a man with the mind of God and the experiences of a mortal is fitted to be emplaced by mortal humanity in the position of Leader, at the head of racial progression and social reconstruction. Mortal individuals are but corpuscles of the universal humanity, ultimately transmuted and translated to the Theocratic Kingdom of the Gods. So highly and sensitively organized is the perfect Man, that the introduction into his system of a single diseased corpuscle means his separation from perfection until the corpuscle is transmuted and absorbed, or eliminated. Diseased germs entering a receptive constitution, proliferate so rapidly that the body of the constituency is speedily made a vile body of death.

Progressive mortals, assuming all men to be born free and equal, or balanced, framed the Constitution of the United States, but their mortality—the consequence of their iniquities—made it receptive to the most diseased germs of every nation; thus the body politic of the United States has been filled up with their sensual proliferations, becoming a vile body of death; and did not the most progressive spirit in the universe control its destiny, there would be no hope of its resurrection from the dead, as the divine United States of the Imperial Theocratic Kingdom.

The dead body of the Lord, however, is here in "Columbia, the Gem of the ocean," and here the eagles are gathered, and the Spirit of the Lord will brood over the waters—upon the multitude of peoples, nations, and tongues gathered here, where new heavens and a new earth will be created. God-Men alone can be born free and equal in the United States; God-Men are virginal beings, balanced as to masculinity and femininity, constituted individuals, being male and female as to potencies, in one form. These know no forms of adultery; they do not stand under but above the law, which was the school-master of their vidual mortal state, to bring them into their immortal or Jehovistic estate.

Mortal men are in the processes of creation which ultimate at the terminus of given cycles in the production of God's image and likeness; therefore they must come under the law for formulation and development, as corpuscles of the final Grand Man possessing the full consciousness and powers of Deity.

Koreshanity, which gives the genuine science of the Decalogue to the world, declares and proves that men, in order to obey the first commandment of the Decalogue, must know the Lord, and provides the means for attaining this knowledge by rational, scientific processes. Without a knowledge of the Lord, his wisdom and understanding of themselves and their legitimate relations to him and to each other cannot be imparted to them for their conversion or transmutation from a mortal and corruptible state to an immortal and incorruptible state. The Lord God, therefore, names himself periodically, that is, becomes personal among men, that those who seek to know him may find him, if they are sufficiently developed in rationality to be able to recognize him through the exercise of their rational faculties. If such as come to know him are principled in the love of truth and righteousness because of having been begotten of his holy Seed, they will follow the Lord when they know him, and become as clay in his hands, that he may fashion them in accordance with his beneficent purpose, which is to make of them living stones in his holy temple. He fashions them by the force of the science of the law, which is love. Love exercised scientifically, in the performance of uses for the commonweal, means the production of all things which God can give his humanity richly to enjoy, and the equitable exchange of those productions to the end that every rational want be satisfied.

God calls by his Voice every man in his order, into specific orders, corresponding to all the functional orders or members of a man who is an incubated universe, the universe being a sphere into which he unfolds; every quality of the mind being expressed by a corresponding object in the universe. How great then is man, perfected in the image and likeness of God! Jehovah's Voice is calling now, calling upon all men to repent and return to the Lord God of Israel. The standard of the law is the rallying point. The establishment of coöperative industries, equitable exchanges, and the institution of a communistic treasury, on the basis of Koreshan Science applied to life, are works meet for repentance. Legitimate results will follow these works. The wisdom and understanding of the law will be glorified in the eyes of all men; length of days, and wealth which this world can neither give nor take away—all that is involved in immortality and eternal life, will be the portion of the righteous. The Koreshans' door is open to all who will accept their Leader and endeavor to perform the works defined. Keen intellects and wills yielding to the influence of righteous laws are imperatively needed in pioneer workers, and Nature's noblemen can find no higher or holier vocation than Koreshanity freely offers them.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THEORIES AND BELIEFS do not originate by accident. They spring from interior states and degrees of development, hence the tenacity with which they are held and their time of survival indicate the spiritual status of the race. The indestructibility of the atom is a cardinal error of belief springing from the condition of the human heart, which is now hard as the nether millstone. Any evidence that this theory is passing away would come as a message of hope and joy, showing that the time is approaching when the heart of stone will be changed into a heart of flesh, according to the gracious promises wherewith God has comforted his people through every bitter experience. The figurative language of the Bible is susceptible of scientific exposition in the natural degree. The literal heart of stone is the pineal gland or the conarium of the brain, where diamond—the hardest of all substances is held in solution in the cerebral fluid. Through the function of this gland, material generation goes on and the hard conditions of sensual, mortal life are maintained. The destruction of the con-arium means the transference of power to a new brain center, with a complete revulsion of all the currents which now set toward the lower life; it means the transformation of the will, which is the heart of the personality, so that purity and holiness become the supreme objects of affection; it means, finally, the entrance into immortal life. The ten commandments were written upon tables of stone, typifying the enforcement of the law so long as the hardness of the natural heart requires external principles to guide the will; but there is coming a time when the law will be written by the Spirit of the living God, "not in tables of stone but in fleshly tables of the heart." Just as atoms of the hardest and most insoluble substances, like silicon, may be destroyed as matter and converted to energy or working force through friction, so the longest-lived theories will yield to the friction of contact with truth and be transformed from useless hypotheses to practical ideas. The skill which has harnessed Niagara will discover a thousand new and wonderful methods of application, when the true nature of electricity as disclosed by Koreshan Science is universally accepted. Invention is in its infancy, despite the marvels already accomplished; and those who assert that the future can never duplicate the discoveries of the last half century take no cognizance of the fact that we are standing on the threshold of a fairer age.

If education means to lead out or to draw out, why is it that the whole system is so largely devoted to taking in facts? If a college course of four years be included, the period during which youth is under instruction covers the ages from five to twenty-two. During this time there is a constant stowing away of information until the mind from overloading, grows confused and torpid. Genuine education will alternate impression and expression. It will bring out the genius of the individual. Any fact learned is received into its appropriate cortical cell or cells. How may this knowledge be retained? By stimulating the cell which is kept alive by delight in the information and its immediate devotion to use—that is, by imparting it to others with sincere desire that they may share in the joy. Mental digestion is accomplished through the exercise of the reasoning faculties, by means of which facts collated form new concepts by alchemical union in the cell. Mere repetition of phrases is no more than reading aloud. Substances which pass through the alimentary canal undigested do not become a constituent part of the body. The process of education would be accomplished in this wise—think over the ideas received, calling into play as many faculties of the mind as possible; then, digestion accomplished, give out of the strength of life, of the new substances formed. Now the exercise of the law of association will aid the memory, and impartation as distinguished from repetition sustains the cell on the principle: "Give and it shall be given unto you."

The Professor of Political Economy in Columbia University is responsible for the following assertions which show how the science is taught in great educational centers. "Of the utmost importance then is the rescuing of competition from extinction, for not only does this afford the key to success in solving the problems of commercial expansion, but it creates the condition of healthy progress in all the practical arts. Inventions will follow each other in bewildering succession, forces of Nature will be pressed into service in enlarging measure, and the earning power of labor will go steadily on, provided only that an effective competition shall be kept alive." Does Professor Clark see any signs of the waning of competition? Is it not in the zenith of its power? But where are the conditions of healthy progress which it has created in all the practical arts? Does he find them in the great machinists' strike in opposition to which the National Metal Trades Association has pledged a fund of half a million? Are they seen in the lowering brows and menacing attitude of the European powers ready to combine against the "American peril"? When competition is active, the commercial expansion of one nation involves it in war with its rivals. Does the earning power of labor go steadily on when the workman is forced to battle for his rights? Political economists must consider some of these questions.

The story of the temptation in the Garden of Eden troubles Mrs. Stanton. She thinks it is insulting to woman, consequently she has prepared an expurgated edition of the Scriptures in conformity with her ideas of good taste and justice. But there is a higher meaning to the narrative, which exalts rather than debases woman. The fall of Adam refers to the method by which God plants himself in the race. He is tempted by the woman—this is the power of attraction between Christ and the church as represented by the woman. The serpent, being wisdom in the divine sense, tells her that immortality or the fruit of the Tree of Lives is supremely desirable. She knows that this is attainable only through her power to beguile the man to eat with her—to leave the perfect biune state and baptize the church with his own spirit, thus becoming subject to sin and the laws of natural generation. Hence the first result of the fall is the loss of pristine innocence, the condition of Christ in whom the inherent bride or feminine principle, precluded impurity. It is evident that this interpretation of the story imputes to woman a great longing for righteousness through her Lord.

Every word has its psychic or soul quality, which may be found through its radical. One of the most beautiful and tender is the term compassion. It means to suffer with, and it is used many times in the Gospel narratives to qualify our Lord's interior emotions toward the multitudes. He saw them in all their frailty and their evil intent. He knew that they would presently turn against him the venom of their rage, yet he was touched with compassion toward them for he saw also that they were burdened and sad. The Lord is gracious and full of compassion because in his progress through the race, he suffers with it and experience begets a pitiful tenderness for human weakness. Love co-ordinates with wisdom and He who knows men best, loves them best, albeit they turn and rend him. How is this possible? Ah! this is the great miracle. To the natural mind it is impossible, but that is to be changed by a baptism of fire.

Are women deficient in creative genius? This question has given rise to much discussion in literary circles, and the inferiority of women authors has been stoutly maintained even by members of their own sex. Literary productions which are the offshoot of a degenerate age cannot be taken as fair samples of the inherent capabilities of woman. It is more important to know what her powers and possibilities actually are and how they will be shown in future, than to decide whether she has thus far created a character in fiction that will live. The function of woman is to construct, hence art is her province; but her love must conjoin with science. She must be vivified by the masculine intelligence; this implies the declaration of the supreme truths of life before woman can fulfil her destiny as the initiator of art. Creation is the product of two forces, therefore the biune genus is the only creator in the true sense of the term.

While President McKinley was making his triumphal progress from the White House to the Golden Gate, commenting in his speeches upon the success of the Administration, President Schwab of the steel trust was also taking a journey through the Mahoning, Shenango, and Ohio valleys, to decide how many iron and steel works should be closed because their goods could be produced with less cost at Pittsburgh. The New York World shows that the greater magnate's little tour of inspection meant the ruin of whole townships, thousands of men out of work, distress, beggary, and vast sums of money saved to the trust. Are not the prosperity of the country and the success of the Administration open questions?

How shall we account for the conflict of testimony concerning a new movement like Koreshanity? Persons whose veracity seems unquestionable and whose claims to consideration appear to be good, take such opposite views in the matter. Well, how shall we account for the different views taken of the character of Christ nineteen hundred years ago? He was called a winebibber, a frequenter of publicans and sinners; some said that he had a devil; others that he was a pestilent fellow; but Peter, who had known Him intimately in the relations of common life, where the foibles of the greatest men come out, said emphatically: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

The subject of automatic writing has engaged the attention of Mr. Wm. T. Stead, and his reports are considered the most important contributions of the year to psychical research. He adopts the theory of conscious and subconscious mind to account for such phenomena. This conception is vague. It does not settle the main question as to the nature of mind and the combination of the mental faculties. All these are covered by the great truth that the spiritual world is in man, the layers of cortical substance with their surrounding membranes, defining different degrees and spheres of activity for those who have died in the natural world.

A universal system of science and religion must present proofs on all lines to appeal to minds in different stages of development. The Koreshan System offers, first, a mechanically demonstrated mathematical proof of the Cellular Cosmogony; then, theological proof in the shape of a distinct line of prophecy in regard to the Shepherd from Joseph, running through the Scriptures. It also gives proofs from analogy in Cosmogony and Psychology that appeal to the higher reason. The whole system, is, in truth, an appeal to reason.

The love of God reaches its ultimate in the sacrifice of truth for life. Jesus was the truth in its concrete form. In the declaration of truth the world is judged, but the will of God is also to comfort the world, to give it peace, contentment, and righteousness only possible through immortal life. Hence Jesus went away in order that the Comforter might come. No man took his life from him, but he yielded it up, fully, freely, that the Holy Spirit might be planted in the church, as the seed of immortality attainable at the end of the age.

"A reward of $1,000 will be given to the man, woman, or child who will furnish positive proof of a God, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ (as a Savior), the soul, the devil, heaven or hell, or the truth of the Bible." The above lines are quoted from a "freethought" periodical. Minds that conceive and project such an offer are as incapable of conviction in regard to fundamental truths of being, as infants are of grasping higher mathematics. They are too firmly polarized in materialism to admit of the reception of spiritual verities.

It was when the earth was without form and void that the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. Man is the earth, and he has lost the idea of form in all its relations. His theories are shapeless. The most prominent are those of an impersonal Deity who is principle, hence not in human form; of an illimitable, therefore a formless universe and of men and women in the divided state where the elements of perfect form are lacking.

"If there is a personal God and a personal devil, why does not the former destroy the latter?" Because in so doing He would destroy himself, for God cannot exist without the means of subsistence furnished him by the devil.

The acceptance of Koreshan doctrine brings joy; its application to life brings sorrow. Through the former man learns his origin and destiny; through the latter he learns to know himself for what he is—the slave of self.

Order means beauty, but beauty is attainable only through the harmonious adjustment of various means to an end; hence it implies restraint.

The world is dark but the divine hand and will are very near it in the darkness.

There is no contentment outside of the kingdom of heaven.

Editorial Discussions and Miscellany.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED BY KORESH.

Rising and Setting of the Sun.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Please answer the following questions: (1) If the sun is placed in the center of the universe, why does it appear to rise in the East and set in the West? (2) If the sun's reflection is shut off by a disc revolving, why does it appear to be as large in the morning and evening as at midday? I was asked these questions, and could not answer satisfactorily, so would like to have them answered in THE SWORD.—J. W., Fruitdale, Ala.

This question has been answered a number of times, but as the questioner may have failed to see the explanations, we are pleased to render further information. There is a central star at the center of the cosmos, around which is the central sun. Between the sun and the earth there are three atmospheres, through which the sun cannot directly shine. The sun which is seen is not the central one; it is a projected focus of the central luminary. This focus is on our atmosphere, about nine hundred miles from the earth. The central sun revolves on its axis, and the light of this sun is projected, focalized, and revolves in its orbit inside of the sphere. The reason it appears to rise in the East and set in the West, is because of distal foreshortening, a principle that must be learned from the literature if the reader does not understand the law of its operation.

The sun does not shine at all times in the same place, because it has a dark and a light side; and for this reason, as the central sun revolves and can only project its light in the direction of its light side, it can only focalize a light in the line of its photoic direction. The projected sun, the one we observe, has an orbit of something over eighteen thousand miles. The "sun's reflection," the light of the sun, is cut off by a disk only in eclipses, not by disappearing at night.

Man's Ego and Personality.

When and where does personality begin and end, or is it eternal? Was there ever a time when I, the same ego I now am, did not exist? And will there ever come a time when I will cease to exist as a distinctly separate personality apart from, if not independent of all other egos? Mrs Eddy says: "If life ever had a beginning it would have an ending."—G. H. H., Marshall, Texas.

Person is derived from the Latin persona, mask or covering. Persona is to God what the seed of a tree is to its inherent energy. A tree cannot be produced from its spirit, nor from its form as a tree, but only from the visible and tangible germ. The material seed is the mask of the tree, which in the seed is the tree in its least form. What the seed is to the tree—the acorn for instance—the Son of man was to the universe. Jesus the Lord God was the Persona of the universe in its least form; that is, in the form of the man. The person is created in matter, and with the development of the spiritual function the form progresses to perfection.

Every man has a beginning as to his natural life; he also has an ending as to the same life. Mrs. Eddy declares the truth when she says that if life had a begining it would have an ending. She knows nothing of the law of that conjunctive unity, by which the mortal overcomes mortality and is absorbed into a consciousness which never had a beginning and will never have an ending. At the times of conjunctive unity, when the fruitions of life are complete, the mentalities which have been produced as new creations are brought into conjunction with the spiritual individualities to which they belong, and for which they are ripened.

At the end of the Zodiacal cycle there will be the culmination of the fruit of the Tree of Life. This fruit will be the immortal Sons of God; it is the perfection of the firstfruits of immortality—of the resurrection. These Sons of God are the product of a succession of experiences through which the spirits have passed in a succession of natural and spiritual existences. When the arch-natural men are perfected, they will ultimately be absorbed into the now invisible egos of whom they constitute the persons. When the conjunctive unity is accomplished, the persona is removed, the mask is taken off. It is by this process that the Elohim, the Gods, rejuvenate and perpetuate their eternal lives.

There are definite periods of the ripening of the Sons of God, and at these appointed times, when the fruit of the humanity is matured, it is taken into the spiritual entities and assimilated. At the time of this assimilation, there is a precipitation of the waste resulting from the conjunctive unity. This waste contains the reflex of the spiritual being, carried down into the soil of humanity for another development. From this waste new personalities begin to be developed. Personality begins with this development. Personality reaches its perfection in the immortal man, who constitutes the Son of God, or the immortal men who constitute the Sons of God. Personality, therefore, has no ending nor beginning. This is also corroborated in the testimony of Jesus through John the Revelator, for the Lord said: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last,"—Mrs. Eddy to the contrary notwithstanding. We would take the testimony of either John or the Lord Jesus Christ before that of Mrs. Eddy, whose mission it is to deny that the Christ is come in the flesh, and who is therefore antichrist, according to the Scriptures.

There is a spiritual ego toward which every man is developing, but the ego of the one in process of development is a new life, only awaking to the real being when it is absorbed. It enters into conjunction with the circuit of its own eternal existence. This is an unquestionably hard thing to comprehend, because of it it is said: "I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." The power of this conjunction has to be experienced before it can be fully comprehended. It may be believed, it may be accepted, but to be comprehended it must be realized.

Dr. Herron Cast Out.

The Church's Charges and the Doctor's Defense; Herron Denounces the Present Marriage System.

GRINNELL, IA., June 4.—(Special.)—George D. Herron today was dismissed formally from the Christian ministry and from membership in the Congregational church by a council called to sit in judgment upon him. The council, including representatives of eight churches in the district and summoned by the members of the Congregational church of this city, found Mr. Herron guilty on each of the three counts in the indictment. A letter from Mr. Herron explaining his views, accepting the decision of the council as final, but seeking in no way to deny the charges, was read at the council. The finding was as follows:

"At a council held in the first Congregational church of Grinnell, on the 4th of June, 1901, to consider the right to church membership and ministerial standing of George D. Herron, the following findings were rendered:

"First.—That the charge of immoral and unchristian conduct is sustained by the findings of the court which at Algona on March 21, 1901, granted a decree of divorce to Mary Everhard Herron from her husband on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment.

"Second.—The same charge is further sustained by evidence presented to the council showing that George D. Herron's manner toward the wife, who consecrated her life to the effort to make him happy, relieve him of care, and aid him in what she believed to be his high calling, has been that of unfeeling and selfish indifference, and at least since 1896 of studied neglect, culminating in a heartless desertion and the final tragedy of divorce.

"Third.—The same charge is further sustained by confession contained in the paper written by Mr. Herron in his own defense and read to the council. In this paper he denies the right of society to sanction or undo the marriage tie between man and woman, presents a view of conjugal relation, parenthood, and the home which is abhorrent to enlightened Christian sentiment, and which confirms the council in the opinion that this action of George D. Herron is simply the criminal desertion of a worthy wife and devoted mother by a man who has deliberately falsified his marriage vows.

"In view of these findings it is resolved:

"That we recommend to the Grinnell association that the name of George D. Herron be dropped from its roll of membership. Resolved, also,

"That we express our conviction that George D. Herron has forfeited all right to be known by the churches of our faith and order as a minister of the gospel, and that he is by vote of the council deposed from the Christian ministry."

Dr. Herron's Able Defense.

"I would ask you to kindly let me explain, however, that I did not desert my children. No father loves his children more than I. But I have long held it a principle that children belong first to their mother. They will have a good mother, and the life of a man given to the socialist revolution cannot fail to be more or less the life of an outcast, as the revolution intensifies and arrays a ruling class against a working class in a final issue and crisis.

"I do not see why the matter of adequate financial provision should have been made a basis of complaint or discussion. As to what friends enabled me to do this, that is a matter into which the public has no right to inquire.

"In order that your action may be complete, let me say that I do not believe the present marriage system is sacred or good. If love and truth are the basis of morality, then a marriage system which makes one human being the property of another, without regard to the well-being of either the owned or the owner, seems to me the soul of blasphemy and immorality. The family founded on force is a survival of slavery."

Mr. Herron then enters into a lengthy discussion of his views on real unions, in which he says: "I thoroughly believe in the vital and abiding union of one man with one woman as a true basis of the family life. But we shall have few such unions until we have a free family. Lives that are essentially one, co-operative in the love and truth that make oneness, need no law of state or church to bind or keep them together."

The present social system is denounced by Mr. Herron, who holds that morality is based upon appearances. Religion, conduct, customs, good names, international diplomacies, and business successes, he claims, are built upon outward show. He declares real truth should be foremost, and more important than the marriage system or any other institution.

All that came upon him, Mr. Herron says, springs from his effort to be true to the truth. The life which he is condemned for not living he holds a lie. He claims he is guiltless of all the grave charges, and that his soul is white. He goes on:

"Into the public discussion of the action

you are judging, has come the name of another than myself—that of Miss Rand; and I suppose your judgment, at least in the public mind, will be upon her as well as upon myself. It is said and assumed that the separation in question was obtained in order that a marriage between Miss Rand and myself might be consummated. That is not true, for the causes that led to this crisis existed long before I knew Miss Rand. It is true that the comradeship between Miss Rand and myself entered into this crisis, and that whenever and wherever she will permit me to announce her to the world as my wife, I shall do so.

"Instead of the reputed wealth of public prints, she would come to me practically without money, her inheritance from her father pledged away for her lifetime, and she dependent upon her mother for bread. The world has ruthlessly taken away her good name, and this has been done by that part of the world where you of this council live, upon whose college campus she has left a part of her inheritance and seven years of beautiful service.

"We ask for no vindication; we can expect none. If the chasm into which we have been swept together closes in about us, we shall not murmur, nor judge our judges, nor seek for mercy, nor ask any one to defend us or stand by us or with us. We face the fact that if we join our lives in this chasm, we condemn ourselves in the eyes of the world. We shall accept this condemnation with open eyes and deliberate purpose, willingly paying the uttermost farthing exacted, for the truth which the world cannot touch or take away after it has done its worst.

"And now you may judge us. But let me say that I would rather be the worst that has been said about me, rather be worse than the severest denunciation has made me out to be, than to sit in one of your places as my judge, or in the place of those clergymen who have sought to destroy my good name without knowing anything of the causes or facts they were judging. If my good name is gone, and my small value to the world with it, I think the church has paid a dear price for this destruction, however worthy its motives."—Chicago Tribune.

Tolstoi's Contradictions.

Sketch of the Venerable Count; Things which Changed his Course and Made his Career.

The spiritual biography of Count Tolstoi is studied with contradictions, writes Christian Brinton in The Critic. As a prophet, he typifies perpetual motion. From arid materialism he oscillated toward qualified orthodoxy, and later, under the inspiration of Sutayeff, a poor stone-cutter preacher whom he afterward disowned, he blazed forth as the rediscoverer of the true doctrine of Christ, re-edited the gospels, and reduced his life to the primitive level of the moujik. It was a magnificent negation of material progress, it smacked of the New Testament and of old Rousseau. With a touch of fustian and of futility, he cast aside broadcloth and clad himself in sheepskin, a round cap, and the rough boots of the moujik. All of which was both sincere and artificial, and not unaccountable in the avowed vegetarian who has been known to consume huge cuts of beef on the sly.

Religion, which was once his best weapon against the State, he has now turned upon. Anti-state and anti-church sentiments surge within him. His doctrine of no government is paralleled by his stamping on the sacraments. Twice daily this arch-seditionist, this apostle of Christian anarchy, sits under "The Tree of the Poor" while a handful of bewildered Jassnaya Paljana peasants gather about. He talks much with the moujik, but puts little of the real moujik into his novels. He is a sturdy, toil-stained moralist, full of specific goodness, but incapable of formulating a valid moral dynamic. There is much that is heroic and much that is pitiful in his self-abnegation. Literature and aesthetics aside, his chief contribution lies in a confused recognition of the fact that moral and economic regeneration must go hand in hand.—The Hesperian, St. Louis, Mo.

Another Edition Ready.

The Fourth Edition of the Cellular Cosmogony Completed and Ready for all Orders.

We are glad to announce that after some delay, a new edition of THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY is just off the press. The Guiding Star Publishing House is now able to fill all orders for this book, for which there is great demand. A new chapter by KORESH has been added in the form of an Addendum, illustrating some simple principles of geolinear and distal foreshortening, which greatly enhances the value of the work.

This new edition affords all our friends and propagandists opportunity for renewed efforts in the work of getting Koreshan Universology before the people. Thousands of COSMOGONIES are already distributed throughout America and Europe—and yet it is only the beginning of the great conflict and contest of systems. Let further and numerous orders give the great work another impetus in the direction of ultimate success and triumph.—EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.

Preachers in Luxury.

Many of the New York Clergymen Receive Munificent Salaries.

To be the minister in one of New York's big churches is to occupy a lucrative and desirable position. The salaries are large and the perquisites often double the salary. It was said that the late Dr. John Hall had an income of between $55,000 and $60,000 a year. Of this, his salary was $25,000 and the rest was for marriage fees and other incidentals. Dr. Morgan Dix of Trinity receives $25,000 per annum, and his perquisites are quite as much as were Dr. Hall's. He has also about twenty assistant curates, none of whom gets less than $2,500 per annum. Not less is the income of Dr. Greer, rector of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal church, for besides a large salary he officiates at more fashionable weddings than any other minister in New York. Dr. Huntington of Grace church probably comes third in the list of high-priced preachers. Dr. MacArthur of Calvary church is the best paid Baptist minister in the city, although his salary does not equal that of some of the Episcopal rectors. But his parish is large, and he is in frequent demand at weddings. By a sort of unwritten law among the clergy, the minister's wife always receives all wedding fees. They are supposed to be her pin money. Some ministers who are unmarried set this sum aside for charity. Clergymen who have big churches and wealthy congregations receive a substantial recompense for officiating on these occasions. The custom of giving big marriage fees is every year increasing, and the bigger the fee the more complimentary it is supposed to be for the bride. For his services at the christening of the little ones of the rich, the rector also gets a nice check. When it is remembered that handsome residences are thrown in by the large churches, in addition to the regular salary, it will be seen that a call to a rich metropolitan church is not to be despised.—Exchange.

This Unique Literature is specially adapted to meet the demands of the truth-seeker and to satisfy the commendable curiosity of the modern mind.

A glimpse of Koreshan Universology, in its application to human thought and life, preparatory to the establishment of the Social Theocratic System, called the Kingdom of God, may be obtained by a careful study of fundamental principles.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and blune, with a trinity of specific attributes God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Nearing the Harvest of the Ages.

The Ripening of the Fruit of the Tree of Life; Koreshanity's Message and Mission; the Coming of the Lord in His Own Regeneration.

THE SUPREME FUNCTION of Koreshanity is to be found in the maturation of the fruit of the dispensation. The age began with the fruition in generation of the primate Son. The Hebrew dispensation culminated in the Son of man, who was the end of the old age and the beginning of the new. The Christian dispensation ends with the manifestation of the Sons of God—product of the planting of the Son of God. In the manifestation of the Lord, the Jewish age had consummated the first perfect ripe fruit of human development. The processes of involution, the coördinate of human evolution, matured in the perfect manhood of the God-Man—the archetype of the new, arch-natural genus.

When the Christ had reached the perfect fruition of his life, in the attainment of immortality in the flesh, God recorded there his name, for the man Jesus was the name of God. He, the Christ, the immaculate Son of God, was the diamond point of the calamus scriptorius (writing reed), with which the divine inscription was rendered. The chastity of the Lord comprised the white stone that is promised to him who shall overcome. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it."

The law of human progress provides for the recurrent creation of the only Begotten, an event which repeats itself at the regular fulfillments of the grand cycle of Mazzaroth, periods culminating when the sign Aries is in its own constellation. Such a relation of the astronomical phases determined the time of the manifestation of the Son of God. Jesus the Lord was not called the only Begotten because God could not generate more than one Son, but because he was the first-fruit, the archetype of a new order of beings, a new race of men to inhabit the earth. The Lord was generated that he might regenerate; in other words, he was produced that he might reproduce a multiplication of his kind. The Lord Christ was the fruit; the human race constituted the soil into which the Lord was planted for the purpose of reproducing his kind.

We have come now for the first time in the history of church declension, when it is possible for the mystery of the Trinity to be revealed. The Lord Jesus Christ, as it has been declared of him, constituted the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He was the Son, because he was produced in humanity, from God who had planted his life in the race. He had the Father in him, because in his own planting in the race by the operation of the Holy Spirit, he could reproduce from himself the many Sons of God—the product of his own life in the race. Humanity is the soil in which the Son of God was planted. When the early church received the Holy Spirit it received the Seed of God, for the Holy Ghost was the divine seminal essence, the holy divine proceeding from the Lord; that is, from the Son of God, who becomes the Father by virtue of the fact that he is planted in the race and produces his offspring. The Lord Jesus was generated; his children are regenerated.

There can be no greater heresy than that fostered and promulgated in the church, to the effect that God adopts children into his kingdom. This fallacy has crept into ecclesiastical dogma through the misrendering of one single passage of Scripture. Paul declared: "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now [this was nineteen hundred years ago]. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption; to wit, the redemption of our body." Paul said only a part of this Scriptural passage; the false portion the translators have made him say, which is just enough to constitute the declaration a prodigious fallacy. This fallacious rendering has introduced a misconception of the truth, and has made of the church a false expositor of the Word. The word whio-thesian means the putting on of the Son. It is in the purpose of the Almighty to regenerate his Sons; he therefore has not planned for the adoption of alien children, except by the process of regeneration, which means reproduction. This reproduction is from His first Begotten, through the planting of this first Begotten in the race; that is, in his church. This mystery is the discovery of the "philosopher's stone." It involves the law of transmutation, the higher alchemy, the great law of the cross, the law by which the Christ of God, through the operation of the Holy Spirit, crossed himself with the fallen humanity for the purpose of transforming that humanity to the Sons of God.

The primate Son is the product of development; he is created from the fallen human race. His creation is the building up and the perfecting of one man, developed through the central line of progress and manifest through various stages of reincarnation, until he reaches the perfection of Sonship, to sit in the eternal throne of Deity where, as the Son and heir of the eternal inheritance, he rejuvenates the Godhead. When He reaches the perfection of his Sonship, he constitutes the flesh in which the Godhead is invisibly hidden.

As the Lord, the first Begotten, was planted in the church nineteen hundred years ago, his offspring will be the first to confess him as the Son of God now, in the end of the age, when the fruit of the Tree of Life matures. There can be nothing more natural than that the offspring of that planting will know of the Divinity of the Lord and be willing to confess his name. It is the Godhead in the flesh, the immortal flesh, that the Sons of God will rejoice in; and there will spring up every kind of denial of the Sons of God in material form. This denial is the unmistakable sign of anti-christ. Their confession, a confession that not only perceives in the Son the everlasting Father, and the Mother as well, "For he who hath the Bride is the Bridegroom," but the confession of a belief of the manifestation of the Messenger of the Covenant, according to the expression of God and Nature as prescribed in the "Prophets and the Gospels, will indicate the true chosen ones of this the end of the age.

The Sons of God to be brought into the new and immaculate life, will be the result of a specific transformation of the present corrupt humanity. The New Jerusalem, now in heaven, made up of the spirits gathered from the Christian world and aggregated into groups as the angelic spheres, is ready to descend into the natural world, not as separate from the humanity which exists as corruptible, but to unite in conjunction with the present human race now ready for the influx. John saw the New Jerusalem descending from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. The husband is the resurrecting humanity; it is for this reason that she descends. She comes down from heaven to meet her husband; she does not descend from the alchemico-organic heaven, but from the spiritual world, the spiritual degrees of existence, whence she flows from internals to externals. She descends through the manifestation and function of Elijah the prophet. It is thus that the office of Elijah fulfils the prediction of Malachi the prophet, that "he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers."

The time is at hand for the fructification of the fruit of the Tree of Life—the manifestation of the Sons of God. The Sons of God to be created in the conjunction of the internal with the external, constitute the fruit of immortality, the fruit of the Tree of Life. The two witnesses—the Lord) "who lay dead in the streets of the great city," this great city is the church into which the Lord descended when, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, he began his descent into the hells of a degenerate human race—constitute the husband of the New Jerusalem. Jesus said: "I am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me." These are the two witnesses, who descended into humanity and lay dead in the church until the New Jerusalem comes down to resurrect them. It will be plainly observed that the Lord himself comprised the two witnesses, and that it was the Lord crucified in the church who is dead and will arise by the descent of his Bride, the New Jerusalem—not the old church.

The first consideration of the Koreshan System is to gather the firstfruits of the Tree of Life. After this fruit is harvested, there will speedily follow the general organization of universal society. Social organization can never come in its perfection until, through the power of the Almighty, the world is baptized with a new baptism, the overshadowing function of Deity, the pouring out of the breath of the Father from the personality of the Messenger, Elijah the prophet. God never has baptized the world but through his Messengers, and he never will. This is the orderly way—the only way. God operates through law, not the law he makes, but the law which inheres in the very constitution of the life of God.

The Great Conquest of Death.

The Success of Jesus and the Failure of Buddha; the Difference Between the Vagaries of Tradition and the Living Truths in the Central Line of Progress.

MEN TALK AND WRITE glibly of the resurrection and of heaven from the ordinary Christian point of view, and of Devachan and Nirvana from the theosophical, advancing vague and speculative hypotheses founded upon research into the musty records of declining memories. These verbiages, theoretically endorsed but practically ignored, comprise the substrata of sand upon which theosophy and modern Christianity are superstructured. Christianity as it obtains today, —without the vitalizing waters of the river of life, or the promise of the fruit of the Tree of Life; without genuine faith and wise and practical charity; without a vestige or relic of primitive truth as it inhered with the early Christian believers, or of good, as applied in the virtues of practical obedience to the law as understood, —is a paganized product, the remains of an adulterated Christian declension. As such, it is being relegated to its father's house in hades, as rapidly as the crumbling processes of disintegration can hasten its departure. Its conceptions of the resurrection (anastasia) and heaven are vague and without distinction, and so grossly undefined that scarcely two in any given denomination of its schismatic body are agreed as touching the character and time of the resurrection, to say nothing of the distinctive views of so important a Christian doctrine as held by the various and conflicting denominations of so called Christianity.

Modern Christianity has the advantage of theosophy in that it is a tree (Christian and pagan) having one of its roots in the practical attainment of the states of Devachan and Nirvana, demonstrated in the resurrection and theocrasis of Jesus the Lord, vitalizer of the river of the water of life and the Tree of Life; while theosophy is but the surreptitious projection of Buddhist vagaries from research of antediluvian traditions rehearsed by the Indian seer, and emesized by the modern devotee of this phase of antichristian paganism. The Lord Jesus gave to the world his thesis of morals, after having exploited the domains of immortality. He attained to a transcendental materialism, mastered a knowledge of the fourth dimension, furnished a complete analysis of the molecule, and defined the limitation of the atom and the law of its transposition. He was enabled, therefore, to reach the state of Devachan, or the resurrection, and thence to pass by absorption into Nirvana by his theocrasis, in the dissolution of every atomic and molecular form. Buddha accomplished neither of these, and, having no practical conceptions of Deification, could but transmit the traditional vagaries of a recidivating past.

The Lord said: In that aion (age), unmistakably and unequivocally pointing down to the end of the Christian dispensation, now ending, they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels in heaven. He attained to the resurrection from his birth, as the firstfruits thereof, neither married nor was given in marriage, and from this state of Devachan he progressed to the state of personal absorption, which culminated his personal career in Nirvana. He, then, is the true promulgator of the law—not the man who could not make the attainment, as the death-defeated Buddha.

"In that age they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels." The angelic state is a state of degrees lower than the Sons of God. We will find in this age—the age into which we are passing, and of which it is said: "Behold, I make all things new"—two classes that will attain to the state of the resurrection. The married (according to the common form) and the unmarried or virginal. They may both come into the resurrection; the former by unmarried or disannulling the marital bond. Of this class Paul said: "There remaineth [cometh] a time when they that have wives be as though they had none." He alluded to this incoming aion or age when men and women begin to awake in their forty-second embodiment, wherein they will have attained to the culmination of the aggregate experiences of the dispensations bringing them down to the fruition of the Tree of Life. The other class comprise those who remain unmarried, and are thus prepared to enter into Sonship through the processes of overcoming.

The Flaming Sword.

Devachan and Nirvana are scientific culminations terminating in material achievements, the last of which, Nirvana, is the transcendental atomic condition reached by Enoch, Moses, Elias, and Jesus, wherein mind had attained such perfect control of matter as to be able to decompose it by a rapid combustion or conflagration—the beginning of that fire which Jesus said he came to bring, and willed that it should be already kindled. It was the inception of that final conflagration prophetically annunciated, verbally communicated, and transcribed in the formula: “The elements shall melt with fervent heat.” The battery of organic disintegration is being formulated through the application of the science of Koreshanity; its magneto-electric currents are beginning to vibrate the atoms of dissolution, and the solvent potencies of alchemico-vital tension will enter upon the general reagency of materio-spiritual metamorphosis in the near future. The vortices are charged, the fountains of the great deep have conserved their energies through the chastity of more than 100 years, the pneumatic and psychic reservoirs of potential force have awaited the fulfilment of the hour when, by surcharge and contraction, the ventricle of the Heart of hearts should pulsate its pure river of the water of life into the great arterial trunk of human destiny in God.

The hour for deliverance is upon us; the conflict of Gog and Magog, in which the old shall terminate in segregation, mobilizes for the great battle. Capital (so called) and labor, with their inherent and cultivated distinctions and animosities, make broad, deep, and impassable the chasm of differentiation which forms the dividing line of social and commercial continuity. This impassable chasm, in the coming social earthquake, will form a gap so broad and deep as to engulf, in its overwhelm, the contending factions in this unholy warfare. Capital and labor, as they are now distinctively classified and nomenclatured, are preparing to make honorable and renowned the predictions of the end, with fiery indignation and noise of contestants. “Behold, I will send my Messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the Messenger of the Covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner’s fire, and like fuller’s soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi [conjunction with God] and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.”

“Then shall the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers [Christian so called churches that adulterate the truths and goods of religion, making the law of God of none effect by their traditions], and against false swearers [Jesus bore witness of himself, that he was born of God, and his testimony was true; professed Christians bear witness of themselves, that they are born of God, and their testimony is false; they are, therefore, false swearers], and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless [the church without a husband, and the people without a God, who are therefore fatherless], and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.”

The condition called the resurrection was typified by the Israelites after their passage of the Jordan, just before the fall of Jericho and their possession of the land of Canaan. The Israelites were, typically, in the womb of generation (Egypt); from this matrix of generation they were born into the wilderness, where they were to be born again through regeneration. “Marvel not that I say unto you, ye must be born again.” Through this matrix they passed the forty-two stages of regeneration as indicated by the forty-two encampments of the children of Israel, which represented the forty-two reëmbodiments essential to the attainment of the typical resurrection, and as also designated in the statement of Matthew, wherein are numbered the generations in this formula: “From Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.”

In the above Scriptural quotation there are mentioned forty-two generations—as many as there were encampments in the wilderness. This is a typical setting forth of the law of reëmbodiment, or one phase and plane of transmigration of soul (metempsychosis), a setting forth corroborated in this declaration: “The Word of God came to Nathan, saying, go and tell David, my servant, thus saith the Lord, thou shalt not build me an house to dwell in: for I have not dwelt in an house [living, human temple] since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day; but have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another.” Tents refer to prophets, and tabernacles, to priests. Thus the Lord had transmigrated from personality to personality until, in the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, he found a temple or house to dwell in.

After the passage of Israel through the wilderness, a consummation in which but two of the original Israelites in Egypt remained to pass over Jordan, they found themselves across the river (typical of death), on the border of Canaan—the land of promise. Though they had passed the river and stood upon the shore of their typical haven, they had yet to conquer its inhabitants and possess the land. Circumcision had become obsolete. The mark of recognition ordained in the covenant with Abraham, for a perpetual token of the divine favor, and in commemoration of the law of the destruction of lust, was not upon the integument of those Israelites. Though standing upon the borders of Canaan (on the objective side of the river) and in the typical resurrection, the inheritance was not theirs until, conformable to the provision of the covenant, the rite of circumcision should again secure to them the divine favor and God's acknowledgment of their obedience. As Joshua (savior) made sharp knives and circumcised them the second time at the hill of the integument, before the walls of Jericho should crumble at their presence, so now, in the antitype, those who have reached the final embodiment will stand in the presence of the Joshua of their final deliverance, and will attain a more glorious circumcision than did those baptized apostles and disciples of the Lord, who declared themselves to be the circumcision because receptive to the Holy Spirit from the Minister of circumcision—the Lord Jesus.

Startling Phenomena of the Future.

Manifestation of the Gods in the Natural World; the Greatest Revolution of the Ages and the Cumulative Forces Which will Produce It.

THE WORLD is about to awake to the experience of phenomena more wonderful than the wildest visions, dreams, and supernatural imaginings the human mind ever formulated. These manifestations will not come contrary to the due course of the eternal laws of progress, but by laws and principles not yet conceived of and applied by the world at large, though they are revealed to the chosen few of God's selection, and are to be utilized by the fittest to survive. The ten principles of natural being—with the two primary principles of spiritual life, which comprise the twelve eternal categories—constitute the foundation of the spiritual, moral, social, and civil changes about to revolutionize our economics.

The law of evolution is not marked in its career by an ever gradual and uniform progress from stage to stage, but is interrupted by revolutions at every point of metamorphosis of fixed to progressive types. At every point of revolutionary progress there is a residuum, a rust, so to speak, deposited from the friction of revolutionary action, and a determination backward—a retrogression of the degenerating or retrogressive type. We are now at the verge of revolution and catastrophe, and the authority and power of the progressive order will be energized in its potentiality and sustained in the purposes and possibility of accomplishment, by an application of the science of the higher or supernatural law. We employ the term supernatural for what the etymology of the term involves, and not according to the perverted definition and use of it as employed by a class of materialists, naturalists, and spiritualists who go into spasms whenever they hear the word spoken.

There is a natural or material world; within (above) this natural there is a spiritual world. Natural laws govern the natural world, and spiritual laws govern the spiritual world. As the spiritual world is within (above) the natural, the laws governing it are super (above) natural; that is, above or within the natural. It is through a knowledge of these supernatural, spiritual, or higher laws that the higher order of naturo-spiritual beings will be enabled to discomfit the masses who have no knowledge of the source of the power of God's chosen people. Moses was no myth; his power was supernatural. The Lord Jesus was no myth; he performed his work of inaugurating the Christian system, through his superiority over the laws of spiritual existence. At this time, there will be the cumulative forces of all the ages. The Koreshan Unity has the secret spring of this reservoir of potential energy, and will use it to the end of the destruction of the plutocrat now grinding to powder the masses of people he holds in slavery. Not by the slow process of moral growth, through so called civil liberty, but by the power of the Spirit, will these changes be wrought.

There can be but one science of life. No one outside of Koreshanity is teaching the principle of immortality in the body. People may entertain vague and fallacious conceptions of immortal life; it may be claimed that immortality in the body is a state or condition to be reached, but there can be no immortality in the body except through the application of the science of immortality. We maintain that this is not known outside of the Koreshan cult; we alone possess the knowledge of the processes by which immortality in the body is to be acquired.

The World's Opportunities and Possibilities.

The Making of Great Nations Through Proper Training of Offspring; Present Methods of Education and Prevailing Vice and Crime; Contaminations of Selfish Loves.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

A NATION'S OPPORTUNITY is its children. In its children rest all its possibilities of perpetuation as well as the character of its national life. The one-time savagery which exposed the new-born weakling to death, to the end that physical infirmity be not fastened upon the people, was wise to a certain stage. Such drastic measures enabled a nation to reach the physical summit of its degree; but in the principles which prompted those acts was secreted the recoil which ultimately in destruction.

As a people, we send many men and many millions to dominate the ethics of the pagan. This should speak in evidence of the practice of a superior regime at home. A boasted Christian nation, our code presumably drawn from the Record of the Son of God, should we not stand able to sound the principal fountain of our natural existence? Should we not cleanse and guard it with a divinely wise and jealous care? We superabound in edifices correctional. A step, and the delinquent has passed from the reformatory or the Bridewell to the penitentiary; but where rear the capitals and domes of the fair palaces whose occupants enter not in tears? where they dwell not in sorrow? where the need of undoing is undone? Does the reformatory reform? Does the penitentiary make penitent? Does the wise gardener stunt the early growth, and later bend himself to make void the mischief? Does a wise nation permit a pernicious early training to render worthy citizenship an impossibility?

The larger embraces the lesser. The parent possesses the child; the nation possesses child and parent. If it is besieged, the parent becomes the unconsidered particle; the youth is offered up for the general integrity. If his soldier offspring prove a traitor, paternal tears may not save him; if as a civilian he trips, consanguinity may oppose no bar to the dungeon. But the government is manifestly inconsistent in demanding a slightly and sound superstructure where it has neglected to lay the preparatory foundation, which, in case of personality, is such a training as will bring to the surface and develop to the utmost all the desirable inherent attributes of the being.

Who should follow the vocation of training the infancy of humanity,—this highest estate of the instructor? Not the unloving, nor the selfishly loving; not the cruel, the sordid, the narrow, the ignorant, nor the criminal. If by chance the darlings of our respectable citizens were exposed to such understood peril—well, imagine the white caps of indignation upon the tumultuous billows of rescue! And herein are seen the narrowness and short-sightedness of a selfish love which snatches "my child" from contamination, and leaves its fellows to grow into the labyrinthine entanglement of perniciousness which must soon or late more or less closely environ the object of this much solicitude. Herein is the evidence that the respectable citizen fails to present the highest credentials of ability for the guardianship of his child.

If the well-intentioned are wanting, in what relationship to the best interests of the rising generation and to humanity as a whole, are they who willingly consign their offspring to vice? If we turn to the annals of crime, we cannot close our eyes to the facts that we are lamentably interspersed with undesirableness; and it is not shown that these are less prolific than the more desirable. It must be seen that the supposed sacredness of a relationship which makes the constant close proximity of the parents to their young indispensable, in nearly all cases commits the most susceptible years of life to injudicious and often to vicious training.

The evolution of all the child involves occupies small part in the educational plan, except in the case of the most advanced instructors, who are too few and too expensive to be reached by the preponderating masses. Even those who attain these more felicitous opportunities have already been dwarfed in the home nursery or at the home fireside; for parents little understand the processes of successful mental evolvement; few parents, relatively speaking, fathom and act upon the fact that early lax habits create a handicap upon the later processes of reaching the acme of possibility, and fewer yet are conscious that infantile disobedience is planning the man disloyal to God.

At some certain period in life, after a mischief past calculation has been perpetrated, maids and masters are placed in educational institutions where their molding proceeds under the eye of those who are at least unbiased by the narrowness of a selfish love—a love which discriminates between mine and thine. If this is salutary, why not begin early and reap the entire benefits? And if it is good for the few, why is it not good for the many? And why does not a progressive nation practice the ounce of preventive—the mental and moral training of its combined youth, and thus eliminate that lamentable failure—the pound of cure in form of correctional institutions?

God alternates between the amplitude of Deity and the infancy of his Divinity; from the Son of God merging into the Father, and from the Fatherhood merging into Sonship.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE CONSENSUS of opinion seems to be that the tariff is the main issue before the country today, and one that demands immediate attention. It should not be approached in a partisan spirit, but dealt with according to ethical principles. The Dingley tariff is highly protective and it must be revised. What is a tariff? It is virtually legislation in favor of monopoly by setting a price upon the natural resources of a country. Soil, climate, and natural distribution, as well as the genius of its inhabitants, combine to determine what commodities each country can best supply. Great Britain, for instance, is deficient in food, fibers, ore, and coal; Germany in timber, fibers, and fuel, while France lacks metals, fibers, and fuel. Common sense and reason dictate free interchange of necessities between nations as between compatriots. Nothing is really gained by the imposition of high duties, because each country must have recourse to importation along some lines, and the policy it adopts toward others will govern their conduct in return. If it is too early in the development of the race to hope for free trade, which means international co-operation, broader lines of policy must be followed than a system of petty retaliation. As matters now stand, it is possible for any country to discriminate against the exports of another with which it is at variance or for reasons of commercial jealousy. War can be waged with the tariff as effectually as with Gattling guns, and the monetary resources of a great nation may be reduced by boycotting its exports as surely as by a protracted campaign. If the European powers combine against American industries, the United States treasury may be drained as the struggle with the Boers has drained the treasury of England. Uniform rates that cannot be changed on national pretexts, should be adopted. The tariff—a term coming from an Arabic root that means to know—is an index to the relations of any country with its neighbors, as well as one that shows the prevailing sentiment of commercial justice. In order to pay the indemnities asked by the Allies, China desires to increase her revenues by putting higher duties upon opium and rice, but Great Britain objects for obvious reasons. International rates would settle these questions and prevent undignified wrangling. As soon as this government ordered restrictions against Russian petroleum, that country retaliated by imposing higher duties upon American resin and bicycles. Let us have commercial justice, not petty reprisals.

If any new demonstration of the rottenness of the entire social fabric was needed, it has been furnished by the state of affairs disclosed by the strike at Dayton, Ohio. The complications which have arisen between capital on the one hand and labor as represented by union and non-union employes on the other hand, point emphatically to the impossibility of adjustment under present conditions. The case is an extreme one and presents peculiar features. Mr. Patterson, the president of the National Cash Register Company, in creating a "model factory" which furnished its workers with many appliances of comfort and luxury, did not attempt to pose as a philanthropist. He frankly said that he proposed to supply such enjoyments because he believed that it would pay—that is, because he could get more work and better work out of men and women in good environment. He found that it did pay, and his factory became a model of organized selfishness, a term that accurately defines plutocracy. In motive value, it was no better than one which seeks to attain the same object by cutting wages and curtailing expenditure in everything that pertains to the personal welfare of its employes. The aim of capital is to lay up more capital—to pull down its barns and storehouses and build greater. Though its methods are many its object is one. The fiat of divine justice coming down through the ages from former times and the most ancient peoples has never been repealed. It needs not the authority of a Justinian nor a Napoleonic code to support it, for it rests upon the supreme authority of the King of kings by virtue of which it is written: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." A workers' paradise of physical well being is only a Utopia of deceit, subtly intended to repress the free motions of the subject class toward redress of grievances.

The Bible records that after the resurrection, when the Disciples were assembled and the doors were shut, Jesus suddenly appeared in their midst. In explanation of this phenomenon, the Individualist says that the Lord was not actually present in bodily form, but simply in the apprehension of his Disciples—"in the same sense that he is now present everywhere and always." Such an exposition ignores the full text of the narrative, which expressly relates that Jesus refuted the doubts of his Disciples, who thought that he was a spirit. He had power to materialize and dematerialize at will. This was not an example of astral projection, as theosophists claim. The corporeal form of the Lord was not at the time asleep in some other place while his double appeared among his followers. The attraction between him and that little band was strong enough to enable him to transit every physical atom. For the time being the Disciples struck the same spiritual vibration with their Master, and they drew him to them. It is a great misapprehension of the Christian world, to believe that Jesus is present everywhere and always. He told his Disciples that he would go away, and they saw him disappear in his translation. A cloud received Him out of their sight, and as they watched, an angel told them that this same Jesus—a visible, tangible man, should come again in like manner, that is, as a man. The cloud which received him refers to the church or the Disciples who absorbed him. A cloud also relates to the descent of truth into the natural degree. Of His second coming, it is said that he cometh with clouds, the truths or doctrine of life.

"I am Omniscient." This startling device appears in large characters upon the cover of a metaphysical magazine devoted to "practical Christianity." Such teaching is very popular, because it appeals to pride. It is a gratification to many to believe that the natural man is independent in his wisdom, instead of dependent upon the radiations of truth from the mind of the Messiah. The Founder of Christianity did not tell his Disciples that they knew all things. He took a little child and set him in their midst, saying: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye cannot see the kingdom of God." It is noticeable that those who proclaim in the light of their "omniscience" that there is no sin, sickness, nor death do suffer from these calamities as plainly as the rest of the world. They die and see corruption like other men. Jesus did not see corruption; the grave could not hold him, and he converted his body to spiritual energy, passing out alive in the presence of his Disciples. That was practical Christianity. His Disciples must follow him. Before they can reach the Throne of intellectual supremacy, they must be converted to spirit and pass out alive, entering into the higher sphere of immortality as little children. He alone knew this truth.

We are indebted to the Adept for a piece of information which shows significantly how astronomical theories have originated. That of canals on Mars, started with a mistranslation of a report made by an Italian astronomer, who observed what seemed to him like depressions on the surface of the planet. His mind was, of course, imbued with the idea that the planets are solid bodies. The translator by employing the word "canal" gave rise to the belief that artificial water-ways had been discovered, and the astronomical world has been agitating the subject ever since. Koreshan Science teaches that the visible planets are merely reflections of discs that circulate in the earth's crust. A knowledge of cosmic form and function supported by the laws of analogy, enabled the Founder of Koreshan Science to define and locate the planetary system.

The Koreshan System calls into play the reasoning faculties and stimulates original experiment. Indolent persons who want to do their thinking by proxy and are content with second hand opinions can never become Koreshans. The very name implies intense central activity, which in man is cerebral activity, corresponding to the commingling and elaboration of energies in the solar vortex. The concept of a cellular universe is so startling and original, that it acts like an electric shock upon sluggish minds. People are not willing, as a rule, to be called eccentric, and they will not risk the acceptance of a system so daring unless thoroughly convinced that it is true. Such a conviction implies mental alertness.

According to the symbolic language of the Bible, which has been grossly misunderstood by a materialistic age, the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and while he slept a rib, meaning strength, was taken out of him to form the woman. The Man is Christ, who sleeps in the race till the end of the age, and while he sleeps the woman, that is to say the church, is taken out of him and gathered into the spiritual heavens as the New Jerusalem, the Bride who is brought down to meet her husband, Christ, in the resurrection. Our word church is derived primarily from the Greek kyrios, Lord, from the root kyros, might or strength. The church, then, is the strength of the Lord Christ.

Why not call things by their right names? Here is a writer who draws a delightful picture of society rejuvenated and order restored. He says that "voluntary co-operation will provide a more normal and satisfactory relationship than that which is the fruit of the club and the bayonet." This is all very good, but he is writing upon anarchism, and there is no jugglery with words which can change anarchism into voluntary co-operation. They represent opposite poles of thought.

Koreshan Psychology substantiates its claim that the spiritual world is in man, by proofs from analogy. Biology shows that the life of those corpuscles of the human body which die, passes over to more vital and progressive cells. In a corresponding manner, as it is reasonable to conclude, the life of all persons constituting as they do the corpuscles of the body social, must at death pass over to the remaining cells still vitally active.

The seven Messianic manifestations which recur in a grand cycle are the seven words which God speaks. It is written, that "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." The golden apple is symbolical of immortality, the fruit of the Tree of Life. The Hebrew word here rendered picture, means imagery, hence a picture of silver is an image of Truth, or a man in whom is immortal life, made in the image of God.

Jesus was called the brightness of God's glory and the express image of his person, yet he was man, so weak that he fainted under the burden of the heavy cross of wood. He was wearied by his journey as he sat by the well. In Him the strength of God was made perfect in weakness. The mind of Deity was clothed in human flesh.

According to the law of polar opposites, when the science of being is taught the negation of being will also be taught.

Knowledge of truth brings with it humility and reverence, also a great pity for human need.

The law of the Messianic manifestation is the key to the Scriptures.

The crowning miracle of creation is the God-Man.

The truth is not entrusted to Pharisees.

The Mission of Elijah.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.—(1) I would like you to interpret for me Joel iii: 21. (2) Also II Kings iv: 38-41. (3) Please explain J. A. Dowie's statement as declaring himself to be Elijah.—S. S. G., Ruthven, Ia.

(1) "For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed," Joel iii: 21, refers to the cleansing of the sanctuary at the end of the age. The sanctuary is the man in whom God dwells or tabernacles. The Lord comes up out of the race as a man, born in sin and shapen in iniquity like other men. The first step toward setting up the kingdom of God in earth is the process of purification, accomplished through the application of truth to life, by which the Lord puts off the sins acquired in his age-long descent into humanity. The blood is the life; and the Hebrew word rendered cleanse, means to make free or innocent. Freedom from the curse of the law and cherubic innocence are states which pertain to immortal life.

(2) The incident related in II Kings iv: 38-41, has reference to the accomplishment of Elisha's mission as the successor of Elijah. Dearth or famine in the land signifies the devastation of the church through error, and the wild vines gathered by Elisha's follower or prophet, typify the various forms of belief which induce the natural mind to continue in the lines of sensual generation, subject to death. The disciples who surrounded the man of God were receptive to higher doctrine, and they could not eat of the lower nutriment; they saw that it meant death. Elisha, or the spirit of Elijah acting through him, furnished meal by disseminating higher truths suited to the comprehension of the people of that age—truths which prepared them for a succeeding baptism from the Lord Jesus. Elijah came again as John the Baptist, the continent of spiritual entities which passed over to Christ. He appears now at the end of the age as the Messenger of the Covenant, the forerunner of the Sons of God. He inculcates the doctrines of restraint and chastity by which men may shun death and eat of the fruit of the Tree of Lives.

(3) Dowie is one of the false claimants to Messiahship, concerning whom the church was warned. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Has Dowie formulated the science of immortal life, and will he make a practical demonstration of his knowledge?

The Strong Delusion.

(1) Is there any one particular delusion meant in the 11th verse of II Thess. 2d chapter? If so, what is that strong delusion, the lie that they all shall believe and be damned, who believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness? At what time was it that they "believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness," for which their delusion and damnation seem to be the punishment?

(2) In THE SWORD of April 20, 1900, on page 5, the statement is: "The king of Babylon looked into the liver; he studied divination; he made his arrows bright, and he consulted with images." Where is it so stated in the Bible?—J. L. T., Mobile, Texas.

The doctrine of faith without works is the strong delusion that prevails in the church at the present time. Nineteen hundred years ago, when Jesus proclaimed the truth at the close of the Jewish dispensation, those who were not receptive to his doctrine and did not acknowledge him as the Messiah, had no part in the baptism shed upon his followers. Their interior loves were toward unrighteousness, or the delights of self, and not toward the Lord. Therefore as reem-bodied today, though they be nominally members of some Christian sect, they are damned (condemned or judged by the declaration of the truth) as regards any possibility of attaining to immortal life in the body, through the final baptism soon to come from the Messenger of this age. They will reach the status of divine Sonship later on, in some other age, when they have ripened sufficiently to accept the truth.

(2) The passage of Scripture quoted in THE SWORD of April 20, 1900, is found in Ezekiel xxi: 21.

Explanation of John xvi: 23.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Will you kindly explain the following passage in John xvi: 23?—AN INQUIRER.

"And in that day ye shall ask me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." The Disciples were questioning among themselves as to the import of the Lord's words. Their attitude toward Him was that of learners in the presence of their Master. They were slow of apprehension and they could not understand the divine truths which he taught them in parables. Jesus knew that he was to baptize them with his own spirit, and he looked forward to a day at the end of the age when in the resurrection they should be perfected in wisdom, having reached the Sonship. Then all truth being clear, they would question Him no more.

"Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." Name in this passage means character or renown. When they come into the renown, or the righteousness of Christ, through conjunctive unity with the Father, the disciples will inherit all things, being heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. This time has not yet come, hence the Lord continues: "Hitherto have ye asked nothing, in my name."

Modern World Uncivilized.

Christianity and Education Have not Reclaimed the World from Barbarism.

We pride ourselves on our refinement, but we are not nearly reclaimed from barbarism. A hundred years hence our descendants will consider us and our institutions with the same contempt we vouchsafe to the people of the middle ages, or upon the refractory Chinese of today. This is not a paradox; I am past juggling for an audience.

Despite our self-satisfied bumptiousness, mankind is still piteously groping after real civilization, like a tangled mass of larvæ tumbling and crawling out of some dark, slimy cavern toward the light that will give them wings. Only few men have forged ahead and stand in the full sunshine of Truth. The progress of the mass is slow enough to strike with despair those of us who are past mid-life; for we must now admit to ourselves that we will see but a few of the changes we have hoped and worked for.

An undeniable increase in material comfort and equipment must be credited to the nineteenth century; but that alone does not constitute civilization. Better food, fast steamers, telephone and electric lights—all that is only the accessory part of human development, means to happiness, certainly, but not happiness. Has the telephone diminished the hunger of the hungry?

Our brains are still befogged; our private and public life is still based upon vile, exasperating ignorance. Reason, now proclaimed by a hundred prophets in every country, has everywhere the greatest trouble to penetrate through the thick folds of inane prejudice that enwrap individuals and institutions.

The evils we suffer from, and the evils each of us perpetrates, have no doubt been lessened in a measure; but it seems to me that they have for the most part merely changed their aspects and their names. There were times—not so many generations ago—when in every country men and women were tortured by inquisitors—religious or not. Now most countries, we think, have grown beyond that. But are not the newspapers filled with revolting cases of children tortured by their parents, of wives who are long-suffering martyrs, of students who find cruel delight in bullying some poor, ill-gifted companion? And do you know what frightful things take place—I will not say in Turkey or Siberia—but in the penitentiaries and insane asylums of the most advanced nations?

There were times, to be sure, when political and religious fanaticism fettered all development, sought to extinguish science, and burned the scientists at the stake. We are certainly past that stage. Yet today Tolstoi is excommunicated by Rome. I was before him, and so were Catholics and Protestants, Darwin, Huxley, Renan, and most of the harbingers of tomorrow's truth. Why, I have it direct from eminent American professors, that in most of the universities of the United States they would not dare express their real convictions on religious, political, or economical questions, because their resignations would surely be demanded at once! It is the same in England and Germany. And in France Jean Jaures, one of the geniuses of the age, was recently refused a chair in the College de France to lecture upon Socialism. Your own admirable Henry George, if I remember well, died a pauper after having been jeered at his whole life long; and the lofty German apostle, Liebknecht, was an exile for years, hounded out of Germany as Victor Hugo had been out of France.

Yet with what contempt we regard that historical council that compelled Galileo to kneel and say that the earth did not move! But, on the other hand, for such devastating forces of retrogradation as Bismarck, Chamberlain, and Gen. Mercier, the world seems at a loss to find adequate honors and adulation; even their most severe judges feel bound to temper their censure with admiring reserve.

It is useless to delude ourselves. You may tinker all you please, there will be no true civilization until the present social system is radically modified. Have you not learned that there are every day thousands—not hundreds, thousands—of men and women who die of want, of cold, of disease unattended, and that, too, frequently after these miseries have given twenty, thirty, fifty years of their labor to the making of all that we enjoy?

Can you forget that children—little children precious as yours—are this minute suffering famine and absorbing the germs of all vices? Can you forget that in every hospital, prison, factory, tenement, there are crimes that cry for vengeance to heaven?

Ah, the sadness of it all! To think that throughout the length of the century just finished great men have vainly cried these things, have pondered during long years of abnegation over these problems, and vainly pointed out the remedies. But they were mistrusted, misrepresented, and mocked by childish crowds, proud of their numbers.—EMILE ZOLA, in New York World.

Spain's Coat of Arms.

Analysis and History of the Development of the Emblems of the Spanish Armorial Ensign.

In the year 711 of the Christian era, the Spanish territory, then in possession of the Goths, was invaded by the Moors. It cost the Spanish people eight hundred years of warfare to drive them away. The first portion of the Spanish territory declared free and independent, was that situated in the Austrian mountains, where a small kingdom was formed in the year 719, known in history as "Asturia and Leon." Afterwards, in different parts of the Spanish territory, several independent kingdoms were made, named in history as follows: Navarra, Aragon, and Granada kingdoms, and the Catalonian earldom.

All these kingdoms were ruled by different royal families until 1492, at which time, by the marriage of Fernando "El Catolico," King of Aragon, Navarra, and Catalonia, with Isabella, Queen of Asturia and Leon, all these small kingdoms were combined and became one. Then the actual Spanish coat of arms was formed.

The upper left-hand corner of the coat of arms represents a castle, and the upper right-hand corner a lion, which mean the old Asturia and Leon kingdom. This kingdom was the first to proclaim itself free and independent from the Moorish yoke. The emblem of the castle was selected because of the many castles built for the protection of the territory, and that of the lion as a memorial to the bravery of their soldiers, who preferred death to surrender.

The Catalonian earldom became independent in the year 874. Its motto, the four stripes appearing in the lower left-hand corner of the coat of arms, was adopted in perpetuation of the memory of the battle of Tolosa, in which battle the life of Carlos "El Cabro," the French king, was saved by the Catalonian Count Lain, who thereby risked his own life and was badly wounded. It is an historical fact, that when Count Lain heard from his sovereign that in consequence of his bravery his country would be free and independent of the French kings, he took his own gauntlet, soaked in his own blood, and made four stripes with it on his shield saying, "Hereafter this will be my descendants' motto."

The Navarra kingdom gained its freedom and independence in the year 734. Its motto, a string of chains, found in the lower right-hand corner of the coat of arms, was adopted by reason of the mountainous country in which it was located.

The kingdom of Aragon became free and independent in the year 754. It has no representation in the Spanish coat of arms, because of its having previously lost its identity by being merged into the kingdom of Navarra.

The pomegranate flower at the extreme bottom of the coat of arms represents the old Granada kingdom, which was the last foothold of the Moors in Spain. When, in January, 1492, the Spanish king, Fernando "El Catolico," took the city of Granada, which at that time was called the garden spot of Spain, he adopted the pomegranate as his motto on account of its being the most plentiful plant in the city.

In the year 1700, when the Spanish kingdom passed to the Bourbon family, they set in the Spanish coat of arms the sign of the French royal family, to which they belonged; namely, the "Flor de Lis," which can be seen in the center of the coat of arms.

The columns on either side of the coat of arms, known in history as "Gercules' Columns," bearing the words "Plus Ultra," signify that before Christopher Columbus discovered America, Spain was the last land seaward or toward the West. The large crown at the top of the coat of arms is emblematic of the consolidation of all the old Spanish kingdoms under the one head.—FRANCISCO G. DE PERALTA, in Havana Post.

The Great Steel Trust.

The New York Journal Finds the Foundation of all Capital in Labor.

All the steel work of the country is in one company, in the directing hands of one set of men. The universal railroad trust is coming. Every day brings us nearer its completion. Legislation against trusts is about as effective as a broom against the ocean. It is settled definitely in America that the stage of competition is past, and that hereafter every great industry is to be managed under a single financial headship.

We ask you today to consider earnestly the giant trust from a new standpoint. We shall take the steel trust—first born of the billion dollar class—for individual study. Who is the real head, the permanent head, of the steel trust? Do you say J. Pierpont Morgan? Wrong. He arranged the financial deal which sold to the public various steel concerns for ten times what they cost. He was paid a commission of $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 for his 40 days' work at organizing, and that limits his headship of the steel trust.

Do you say John D. Rockefeller? Still wrong. Rockefeller's genius for monopoly undoubtedly conceived the great trust. Only his financial strength could have carried out the great undertaking. Morgan acted as Rockefellers' agent, and Rockefeller's pocket controls the trust's future in so far as mere finance can control it. But not Morgan, nor Rockefeller, nor all the power of all the banks and of all the great fortunes controls the steel trust now that it is born.

The ruler of the steel trust is the man who can control the tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of human beings engaged in the production of steel. The great financiers have congratulated themselves on putting all their eggs in one basket. They view with delight a situation which puts at their mercy all industries dependent on steel. But they deceive themselves, and an awakening is ahead of them.

They have staked $1,100,000,000 on a single set of workingmen. To pay interest on their vast capital they must earn more than $75,000,000 a year. Their trust can only exist, they can only pay those dividends, so long as their army of workmen consent to make steel. They have put all the steel plants into one organization. They have also put all the steel workers into one organization.

The capable leader of that vast army of men may not be visible today. But he is bound to appear. Great opportunity always finds the great man. When the man shall appear capable of acting as leader of the steelmakers, you will see the head of the steel trust, and not before.

When one hundred concerns made steel, a strike in one concern meant little. Ninety concerns were at work. But Rockefeller's genius has forced every able steel-maker into one great organization. How will Rockefeller's genius reply when he shall find himself confronted by a leader able to say:

"Mr. Rockefeller, I represent all the men in America capable of making steel. I am, therefore, as you will readily understand, the head of the steel trust, and hereafter, unless you want your one billion one hundred millions to melt, unless you want your dividends to stop, unless you want such a panic as this country has never seen, you will please take my instructions as to the steel trust management. My orders are those of the real steel trust, of the men who make the steel."—New York Journal.

Edison's Latest Discovery.

A New Process which Promises to Revolutionize the Building Industry.

The public is unaccustomed to getting concrete facts from electrical wizards, but here comes Edison with the definite statement of his ability to make a "Portland cement" at such a small cost as to revolutionize the building industry.

Considering the present cost of cement, the extent to which it has entered into modern construction is marvelous. All great public works that call for enduring material that will resist the wear and tear of the elements are built largely with concrete. It is the principal material used in the construction of river dams, government forts, bridge abutments, and foundations for large office or mercantile structures where the framework is steel. Its cost, however, has precluded its use to any large extent in private dwellings.

Through his discovery of a new process for making cement, Mr. Edison, however, promises to place it within the reach of the builder of the humblest cottage. It will be as cheap as common salt, and when mixed with sand and broken stone in the proportion of one part of cement to three parts of sand and five parts of broken stone, it will supply a concrete mixture so cheap and so durable that it is certain to supplant pine, brick, or stone in all building operations. Houses, in fact, according to Mr. Edison, will simply be "poured" instead of being built. A form, patterned after a design furnished by an architect, will be made of wood or steel, and into this will be poured the concrete mixture. After the concrete solidifies the owner has a dwelling in which he can defy the elements and the tooth of Time.

The "concrete problem" is an old one. Hundreds of inventors have tried to devise a process for cheapening its manufacture. If Edison has solved it he may not only stop the ruthless devastation of pine forests by furnishing a much cheaper building material, but will place homes within the reach of thousands who cannot now afford wood.—Record-Herald, Chicago.

Developing the Faculty of Sight.

According to a Vienna medical journal, the Wiener Klinische Wochenschrift, at the last meeting of the Medical Association, Herr Heller, the director of one of the local blind asylums, gave an interesting account of the means by which he succeeded in enabling a blind boy of seven years of age to distinguish objects and even to read. He claimed that this was the first instance in which it had been found possible to impart elementary instruction exclusively through the sense of sight, to a child previously incapable of seeing. He apparently attributed this result to a great restriction of the field of vision and sight in the case of a patient who manifested considerable sensitiveness to light.

The method adopted was as follows: The boy was first exercised in localizing a point of light in a room which was otherwise perfectly dark. Articles with which he had already become acquainted by touch were then placed within the narrow illuminated circle and he was called upon to distinguish them by sight alone. When the light was passed through colored glasses, the child noticed the difference. By associating the names with the various colors he was gradually taught to recognize them. After he had acquired the power of distinguishing geometrical forms, he learned to recognize letters and numerals.

In the second stage of the treatment, the use of the sense of touch was entirely excluded. At present, after fourteen months' practice, the boy is able to read with the naked eye and to recognize, localize, and distinguish colors, forms, and objects at steadily diminishing distances. A demonstration illustrating these results was given in presence of the Medical Association.—London Times.

Another Edition Ready.

The Fourth Edition of the Cellular Cosmogony Completed and Ready for all Orders.

We are glad to announce that after some delay, a new edition of THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY is just off the press. The Guiding Star Publishing House is now able to fill all orders for this book, for which there is great demand. A new chapter by KORESH has been added in the form of an Addendum, illustrating some simple principles of geolinear and distal foreshortening, which greatly enhances the value of the work.

This new edition affords all our friends and propagandists opportunity for renewed efforts in the work of getting Koreshan Universology before the people. Thousands of COSMOGONIES are already distributed throughout America and Europe—and yet it is only the beginning of the great conflict and contest of systems. Let further and numerous orders give the great work another impetus in the direction of ultimate success and triumph.—EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.

Capital and Labor.

"Times are hard," said the Picked Chicken.

"Why," said the Rat, "this is an era of prosperity, see how I have feathered my nest!"

"But," said the Picked Chicken, "you have gotten my feathers."

"You must not think," said the Rat, "that because I get more comfort you get poorer."

"But," said the Chicken, "you produce no feathers, and I keep none—"

"If you would use your teeth—" interrupted the Rat.

"I—" said the Picked Chicken.

"You could lay by as much as I do," concluded the Rat.

"If—" said the Picked Chicken.

"Without consumers like me," said the Rat, "there would be no demand for the feathers which you produce."

"I will vote for a change," said the Picked Chicken.

"Only those who have feathers should have the suffrage," remarked the Rat.

Altruism in Factories.

Give Labor Fair Wages and It Can Get Along Without Charity.

The wage scale having been fairly adjusted, the employer need not worry himself about what altruistic measures he will adopt for the benefit of his employes. Once the interest of the latter in the success of the enterprise becomes established, suggestions regarding methods which will be to the common interest of employer and employe will come fast enough from the men. Conveniences which good men need to do their work well and keep them in prime condition, mentally and physically, are of advantage, and they are bound to come, but they have their time and place of coming, which are after more important things are settled.

It must be remembered that kind words, rest-rooms, libraries, lectures, and other so called altruistic measures, although excellent in their proper time and place, do not in themselves bring happiness and contentment, for they do not supply food and clothes and house rent and home comforts, and the latter are what men work for. Of such things, therefore, until the proper time arrives, the men become suspicious, as they partake of the nature of charity, and honest workmen resent anything of such a nature. The men must be mentally happy and well advanced in modern thought and methods before such things can be introduced.

Nor should an employer allow the announcement to become current that he has a "model shop" when he has made his business a success by adopting the methods outlined above, and added such conveniences as he finds are of common advantage to his business and his men. Intelligent workmen are sensitive to being referred to as adjuncts to anything "model."

An attempt to advertise an enterprise by proclaiming that philanthropic principles dominate its management may be effective for a time, but men lose respect for such philanthropy and its projectors. There is no philanthropy about it; it is pure business. Nor should a manager announce to his men or to the public that he incorporates advanced ideas in his system of management "because it pays." No advantage can be gained by such a course. It will, in fact, be found that it does not pay. He should no more think of making such a statement than of saying that he keeps his own hands and face clean, or changes his linen daily "because it pays."—H. F. J. PORTER, in Cassier's Magazine.

WORTH.—Don't worry because someone criticises and abuses you, but be thankful that you have made yourself worthy of abuse by succeeding at something. Remember that a boy would not throw stones at an apple tree if no apples were on it.—Light from Far East.

The Saturday Evening Post.—The first magazine article written by M. Loubet since he became President of the French Republic will appear in The Saturday Evening Post for July 13. This important paper, entitled Young Men and the Republic, after touching upon our pleasant relations with the French Republic, continues with a significant reference to the attitude of France toward the other Powers. The masterly summing up with which the article concludes is a fine expression of the strong republican spirit which reigns in France today. THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Ultimate Product of Progressive Evolution.

False Hypotheses upon which Modern Evolutionists Build; the Goal of Evolution is the Race of Immortals; the Powerful Momentum of Supreme Aspiration Toward Godhood.

THE DOCTRINE OF PHYSICAL EVOLUTION assumes that there has been a progressive and distinctive development from the lower to the higher conditions, ending with the present supreme stage of living manifestation. The premise of this assumption involves no predication of a creative power at any time in the progress of unfoldment, superior to the stage of life prepared to shoot forth into a more richly endowed physical organism and functional capacity. The evolutionist may or may not positively deny the existence of a supreme intellectual creative function, but he does contend that there exists no necessity for such a force in Nature, as the inherent tendencies of matter are sufficient to account for all the varieties of form and function that exist. We do not dispute the general claim of the evolutionist that there is operative a series of specific creative functions, beginning with the lowest condition of active development and ending somewhere at a point of limitation in the series. While we do not question the general fact of the law of evolution, we do deny the right of the evolutionist to assume a premise, and upon the basis of that assumption to reason out a fabric, the conclusion of which involves all the elements of assumption which the premise includes, and then insist that the theory is so sufficiently grounded in certainly as to be worthy of acceptance as a truth.

Evolution is a fact, as undeniably indicated in Nature and just as positively pronounced in the teachings of the foremost Biblical writers. While discussing a subject which to the world in general remains a problem, we cannot justify ourselves in predicating our argument upon so flimsy a statement as that made by Darwin—that when an hypothesis explains various large and independent classes of facts it rises to the rank of a well-grounded theory. He says that in scientific investigations it is permitted to invent any hypothesis. The great difficulty with which the so called scientific world has had to contend, is the lack of determining the relation of various large and independent classes of facts to a positively asserted and demonstrated premise, rather than to a previously assumed theory where everything like a premise has been ignored. In attempting to reason on a subject involving all that is embraced in this question of life and death, it would be unpardonably criminal to lead the world into a settled conviction of the truth of a theory of being, which had nothing but assumption on which to rest. We have denied the right of any man to assume either a premise or a theory, with the purpose of establishing in the general mentality of the race a fixed conviction as to fallacy or truth. We, therefore, will first state, then prove our premise, when we shall proceed to argue our points.

Aspiration Toward a Higher Existence.

There exists in the human intellect an aspiration toward a condition of development supremely beyond the present existence called human life. If there could be adduced no other proof, the fact that we can and do formulate the language of such a desire, is an absolute demonstration of the fact of the aspiration. We need not stop here, for we find the statement, written almost thousands of years ago, "That to all them that believe in his name gives he power to become Sons of God." Here is positive testimony to the fact of an aspiration in the human soul, for an attainment beyond the general tendency and conviction of the race. We discover here the language of desire expressed in the formulation of a specific aspiration of the mind, a determination to become the offspring of Deity himself. It is admitted by the school of agnostic evolutionists, that creation progresses in the order of development by distinctive series and groups, marked by well-defined divisions into what have been distinguished as kingdoms and species of Nature. No man has dared to assume that the principle and law of graduated development cease with the present stage of its progress in the kingdom called man. No evolutionist has ever advanced any reason for a conviction that there may not proceed, in the work of evolution, the projection of another kingdom as distinct from the ordinary humanity, as this humanity is distinct from the animal kingdom below it. The aspiration for such an attainment is proof positive that the attainment is possible.

Every stage of progress in the order of evolution is the result of the desire—the conscious or unconscious aspiration—to unfold into something beyond the given point of development. We will attempt to give a reason for this aspiration, so obviously plain that the man who runs may read. It is a generally and well understood fact that the human embryo, in the progress of its growth, passes through the various stages of embryonic existence in the same order that is claimed for the universal progress of evolution. If, as it has been declared, the individual is the microcosm, or the universe in its least form, and like the macrocosm, or the universe in its greatest form, then the order of progress should be identical in the two. There is no reason to believe that the two systems do not correspondingly progress in their development in evolution. Now, it cannot be disputed that the microcosm, the universe in its least form, progresses through its distinctive degrees through the inherent aspiration of one degree to become the characteristic form and function of the succeeding one; nor can it be denied that this aspiration became inherent by virtue of the fact that there were parental forms and functions which were transmitted through the germ and sperm to the embryo, and that because of this transmission, the various stages of the embryonic progress had their aspirations, and through them attained the life of the independent human form. The desire of every stage was implanted through the germ and sperm from the parents, into every stage and degree of embryonic progression.

Inconsistency of the Modern Evolutionist.

The ordinary scientist assumes the impossibility of what is denominated miracle. He evidently means by this, that he does not believe in the performance of any function contrary to the natural order of law, and assumes that what he does not know about law, no other man has any right to know. If the "scientist" would allow himself to think outside of his common ruts of mental effort, he need not be troubled over this bugbear of a term. Miracle is a Latin word, and is equivalent to the word wonder or surprise. Every time a man admits astonishment, he acknowledges the possibility of miracle. But the "scientist" is more ridiculous than this in his absurdities, for he confesses to the possibility of the development of one kingdom of a superior order from the kingdom of an inferior degree, and then ridicules or absolutely ignores the idea of the law of evolution progressing to the development of a kingdom of Nature, or of arch-nature, above the now existing humanity.

According to the doctrines of evolution, inert matter, that is, matter dead and immovable, began without inherent life to act. It could not move by virtue of energy, for energy, according to the physicist, is but a mode of motion, and before matter moved there was no mode of motion, hence there could be no energy. Now, who can be so vivid in his imagination as to believe that matter, which the physicist asserts is inert, had the power to "get a move on itself" without energy, when energy is as essential to motion as motion is essential to energy? No sensible man could believe thus. However, the scientific evolutionist assumes to know that matter did "get a move on itself" without the aid of inherent life, and that this move was no miracle, no wonder, no astonishment. He believes, further, that the mineral kingdom arose from the original status of homogeneity, that the elements of matter developed from this primeval state, and then denies the existence of miracle. He still further advocates the philosophy that the vegetable evolved from the mineral kingdom, and yet he denies the fact of miracle. But more than this, he declares that the animal kingdom developed from the vegetable, and yet there is no miracle. This is not the height of his absurdity, for he affirms that the human kingdom arose from the animal, without imparting to the world the discovery of the connecting link; and he still protests that there is no miracle.

Climax Not Yet Attained.

For argument's sake, let us admit that the order of development is according to the affirmations of the physicist,—that each kingdom develops from the preceding one does he know that evolution has expended its forces in the creation of man in his present condition? We not only declare evolution to be a fact, but we further declare that no phase of life has its origin in any other phase, without the lower phase having derived the possibility of evolving the higher form from a previous existence of such a form and quality of life. We state this proposition on the positive observation of facts applicable to this law. When we see the order of progress in embryonic development, and know that this order derived its powers and inherited its possibilities from a completely organized form with a corresponding complication of functions, we know that the same order derived its powers and possibilities from a thoroughly organized universal form, having a corresponding complication of universal function.

Universal form and function proceed from universal form and function. We mean by this, that the universe is inherently self-preserving and perpetuating, because its form is perfect and absolute, and because it has a corresponding and adequate function. It is therefore eternal in its absoluteness, in its integralism. Because man has not attained to the corresponding perfection of his character in anatomical structure, in physiological function, and in social and economic adjustment, there must be added another phase of progressive unfoldment. Man is ripe enough to reproduce his kind, but he cannot progress to a higher and distinctive life without the influx of higher elements of life; nor can the evolution of a higher character obtain without the involution of the archetype of the genus to be derived from the existing plane.

With the facts all pointing toward another and superior genus of beings, with the knowledge of the fact that nothing can unfold that has not been infolded, we assert that before a new genus can proceed from the human race, there must be—if there has not already been—the involution of the archetype, the firstfruits of the coming genus. With this postulate founded upon absolute knowledge, from an array of scientific facts, we have the testimony of the Christ himself, with the corroborative evidence of his Disciples, that the Son of God was involved from the present race, and that the race was fecundated from a superior source in order to develop, by involution, the first product of a new order. Not only are these facts before us, but in the aspiration for a higher life we have the assurance that the seed has already been planted for the new order. This argument cannot appeal to those who have not these aspirations, or at least in whom they cannot be awakened.

Coming of the Arch-Natural Genus.

We reach the conclusion that there will be developed a new race of men, which we will denominate the arch-natural genus—the Sons of God. We have herein set forth better reasons for this conclusion than have ever been given for the theory of evolution now in vogue. Our argument has been predicated not on hypotheses, but upon premises demonstrated, the premisses founded upon the facts extant—aspirations for a higher racial development, and that evolution is not complete in the individual until the individual partakes of all the characteristics of the universal, and that the aspiration for a life beyond and above the present attainment, and the formulation of its propositions, could not exist without a derivation of those factors from the parent of the conception. The conclusion is inevitable, then, that there will be Sons of God. It is also inevitable that these Sons of God will be the product of the implantation of the Son of God in the race; and we may not only determine the fact, but the time of their appointment. We may also determine and direct the processes of the attainment.

Upon the basis of what we know, we are enabled to declare the enunciation of a coming genus of men as distinct from our common humanity, as this humanity is above the lowest animal. As no evolution can obtain without a previous involution, it follows that the firstfruits of the genus to obtain must inhere in the existing genus, from an implantation derived from the archetype. It is therefore reasonable to assert that the archetype was planted back in, or was absorbed by the race which it is purposed to further unfold. If we will examine the testimony that has been authoritatively given in great abundance, we will discover that it agrees perfectly with the great array of facts of history, of prophecy, and of science. We have had the testimony of many, that the Son of God came forth as the involved product of both God and man. We have the further testimony that this Son of God was taken into the race through absorption, which is in confirmation of all the principles and laws of evolution.

Jesus' own testimony is to the effect that he was the bread that came down from heaven, which if a man eat he should live forever. "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day," the end of the age. "Go and take the little book  and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey." The Lord, the Word, was the little Book. He was partaken of by his followers, through his translation, by which means he was absorbed by his church. His descent into the hells of human existence was the bitterness of the transformation. From this

The Flaming Sword.

Word, the Book will be evolved, opened; this is the testimony of the Scriptures, for they declare that the Book will be unfolded, and the names written in the Book of Life will be manifest. These names to be observed are the Sons of God, the personality of each constituting the name of each.

Labor-Saving Machinery Under Competism.

Control of Inventions by Corporations Belongs to the Order of Industrial and Commercial Imperialism ; Relation of Capital and Labor ; the Impending Revolution.

THE INVENTION AND UTILIZATION of labor-saving machinery have thus far been devoted to the exclusive purpose of enhancing the facilities for the accumulation of riches by those who, either through commercial wisdom or other fortunate inheritances, have been enabled to control it, regardless of results upon the great wealth-producing class. Facility of production is one of the essential demands of this progressive age, and the invention of machinery is one of the provisions of a wise generation to meet the requirements of the occasion. Labor-saving machinery should have in view two factors in its application; these are, first, the reduction of labor to the point of recreation; and second, the increase of production to the extent of a normal relation of the producing classes to demand and supply. The present application of labor-saving machinery is preposterously illegitimate in the normal sense, but decidedly legitimate in a commercial one. We do not contend that this is a new thought regarding labor-saving machinery and its uses, but we do affirm that the laboring masses of the United States and of the world are very generally ignorant of the relation of production to what is called capital, and the ultimate uses of productive possibility. If this were not true, the attitude of the laboring masses toward so called capital would be of a decidedly different character. If it were not true, there would be no labor-unionism, for the laborer would understand the nature of capital, its source, and his rights regarding his title to the products of his toil.

All capital is the product of industry in what is denominated labor. The present differentiation given to capital and labor is founded upon a radically defective conception of human rights, predicated upon the basis of the competitive system of activity. On the basis of competitive industry and commerce, there can be but one tendency, namely, the accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few, and the control of the masses by the money power in such a concentration of wealth as to constitute an imperialism which is not only universal but heartless. We object decidedly to the aggregation of wealth in the hands of a small class of people who have no sympathy nor fellowship with the masses, and whose differentiation distinguishes the two classes as superior and inferior.

If the system of competism be allowed, then the right to control labor-saving devices must be conceded also; and we have no right to complain because those skilled in the manipulation of men have subjected men and machinery to their own personal uses. In the competitive system there is one inevitable tendency, with its disastrous consequences looming in the not distant future. Monopoly will not only control the wealth of the world, but through this control the masses will become the abject slaves of the owners of all capital. We cannot consider for a moment, the question of a permanent monopoly and occupation of the wealth of the world in the light of the intellectuality of the twentieth century. Under the facile peculiarities of a democratic system of government, with the opportunities for mental improvement which the century affords, there will be a rapid awakening of the people to their industrial and commercial rights. There can be no honest disputation of the right of the industrious man to his production; and when the mind of the working and clerical masses awakes to the urgency of the situation and to the fact that the producer owns the product of his toil, there will arise in the arena of politics and legislation, an arm of justice that will change the complexion of the principles of government.

We are not anarchistic; we thoroughly believe in and advocate the principles of law and order. We declare, however, that to the producer belong the products of his efforts, and we will do all in our power to educate the people up to this standard of righteousness. The masses have no right, by a violent revolution, to destroy government, to confiscate and destroy property, nor to violate the laws of order. Notwithstanding this fact, the time is at hand when the lawless will attempt—on a large scale—to subvert the ends of government by a violent revolution. Nothing stands between the hoarded wealth of the billionaire corporations and its distribution to the people, but the prevailing ignorance of the producers of these billions. There can be no question of the right of the citizens of a country to conduct its legislation in the general interest. Could wisdom and righteousness walk hand in hand, in the aggregation of a popular multitude, legislative enactments would be instituted which would put an end to the unequal conditions which have arisen as the legitimate fruits of the system of competition.

The wealth of the world will be equitably distributed; its distribution will obtain through the legitimate power of the people to provide for their happiness. The equitable distribution of wealth and the adjustment of labor-saving devices and machinery so as to insure to the producer their benefits, will not accrue by a process of gradual evolution. The perverseness and obduracy of the human heart preclude the possibility of any such termination of the industrial conflict. The breach will widen until the crash of revolution comes. The catastrophe cannot be averted; from the debris will arise the power of reconstruction. In the new adjustment of machinery to the performance of industrial uses, it will be so provided that labor-saving devices of every description will be employed to destroy labor, not merely in name, but in fact. Labor and labor-unionism will be relegated to oblivion, and in the place of these will be the establishment of an industrial system from which both competition and labor will have been expunged, and industry will have become a recreation.

The Koreshan System is the best friend of the working man and of the millionaire. Were it possible, we would save them both from the catastrophe of their ignorance and cupidity. We would say to the hoarders of hundreds of millions: "See the inevitable, and equitably arrange wealth and industry in the form of such a government as will provide against the time of retribution. Aid in the destruction of the competitive system, and inaugurate a system where industry will be a pleasure, and in which there will be an equitable collection and distribution of all industrial products." We would say to the laboring masses: "Do not form yourselves into organizations for the violation of the principles of individual liberty, but rather organize into such a social unity as will involve the right and power to legislate the world into equity." We do not give this advice, however, because we know too well that no power of persuasion has potency enough to avert the coming crisis. The world must have its discipline; after this will come the adjustment.

In the public ownership of public utilities, in the equitable distribution of the products of labor, and in the utilization of labor-saving machinery and its application to the relief of labor, with its reduction of hours to the minimum, there is no special difference between the views of Koreshanism and socialism. At this point, however, there begins a radical divergence of conviction. Whether it be a godless phase of socialism, or that phase which attempts to establish itself on the ruins of a defunct Christianity, our deviation is radical and defined. Shall we build an organic structure from a rotten fabric? Shall we take the material of a dissipated and obsolete Christianity and, without renewal or transformation, construct a system after the old pattern, or shall we renew and transform the substance and emplace our fabric? The institution of the Christian dispensation was not the renewal and re-establishment of the Jewish age. There was a revival of the soul of the personalities who were to constitute the substance of the new structure. It was a new dispensation; it was initiated in a radical revolution. While it was founded upon the principles of the law of Moses, and was the result of the Lord's obedience to that law, it added the elements of nearly two thousand years of progress, and—from the involution of progress and increment—a specific baptism without which there could have been no re-adjustment of human relations.

Christian socialism will not answer the demand of the present age. Christianity is effete; it is without soul; it cannot be revived. This is the beginning of a new dispensation, and it will have its organization under new auspices and with its new name. "Behold, I make all things new," is a declaration specifically applicable to this present time. It is a new age; it demands a new baptism, and it will be inaugurated with a name as new to the world as was the name under which the now recidivating dispensation took its initiative. The new age, the Aquarian dispensation, will not be known as Christianity. Christianity is dissolute, and its garments threadbare; they will be cast off as useless.

Change the soul by a renewal of the life! Let the new breath of a resurrected Deity overshadow and permeate the race! The true Elijah (God, the Lord) will focalize his power, and in the midst of all the false christs and false prophets will signalize his name and his authority. When the human soul becomes permeated with the divine respiration, and the soul of man becomes the soul of God, then, and not until then, will all the devices of men for the increase of facility for production be adapted to their legitimate use. Labor-saving machinery will be employed for the saving of labor, and not, as now, to deprive hundreds of thousands of the means of subsistence.

The love of the neighbor wrought into actual and practical use, leads unmistakably to an equitable distribution of wealth, and consequently to an equilibration of labor.

The Constitutional provisions for the American citizen to express his wish through the ballot, render it possible for any set of principles to be submitted to the tribunal of public sentiment, and acted upon through the constitutional right of balloting.

Pan the Great Cellular Deity.

The Pan-American Exposition and Its Significance in Relation to the True Pantheism of Koreshanity ; the Koreshan Exhibit at Buffalo ; the Prophetic Symbols in Empire State.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE SALVATION of the God race, to be brought forth by the Bride or church of Jehovah, is to be worked out by the performance of the uses of life in obedience to the laws of divine life. The Theocratic kingdom, in which the God race will be manifest, is preëminently an industrial order or kingdom of uses, in which all uses are performed in obedience to the law of love. The time has come for the Gentile earth, the womb of Nature in which the seed of the Lord's body was sown, to yield her increase, the fruits of her labor, to the Almighty—her rightful Lord. That church in earth is the lawful Bride of the Lord God, which best represents his wisdom and understanding of the science of the law in application to life, for the reproduction of his life in harvest form. This church or body is the ordained continent of all there is of the God-Man, pneumatic and psychic, therefore of the God of the body or Bride of Christ, to be perfected in his image and likeness and crowned with glory and honor, being the holy Temple of the Elohim.

Because the body of this God was regarded as the continent or container of all things, he—its inherent Deity—was called of old, "great Pan." Great Pan, in the most universal sense, is God of the hollow globe—the sphere or womb of his eternal gestation of worlds or cosmic orders in Nature, the realm of time, within which he presides as the "Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace," or equilibrium. It is he who holds the balances of all power with the hand of Libra, the chief executive of his eternal justice, blind to all but the science of the will of her Lord. Great Pan lives again, for the immortal God has power to lay down his life and to take it again in due season, by the mighty forces involved in truth—the science of the laws of his being.

As the science of truth, He now lives again as an intercessor for mortal man, to establish his final covenant with the Lord his God. In the fulness of His Godhead, he reunites all things evolved from himself within the confines of his habitation, this cellular universe of ours, of which he—as the fulness of the Godhead bodily—is the incubated origin and destiny. Great Pan lives again in his awakened consciousness of the knowledge of the form and functions of the universe, and of the origin and destiny of himself as its King of kings and Lord of lords. He has awakened as a strong man out of the sleep of earth's night, as a man made strong by reason of the wine of his life, the blood of the covenant of his Almighty Godhood.

Unwittingly, the Pan-American Exposition celebrates the awakening of great Pan from his long sleep of death in the natural world, to all that was God-like in Jehovah Jesus. The quickening powers of his awakened intellection and affection will soon awaken earth's millions, dead in trespasses and sins, and thousands will be made alive to the righteousness of all those laws of God, obedience to which brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. These laws, made void by the death of Pan, have made the earth without form and void because of the darkness which covers the deep—the sea of multitudes, peoples, nations, and tongues. The science of Pan, the science of Universology, takes its humble place at the great Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, there to declare to the representatives of Pan-America, with the divine prophetic voice of its publications, the absolute truth of God concerning the origin and destiny of man, and the forms and functions of his universe.

The end of the present cosmos is the chaos which now is, and a new cosmos is due—a new heaven and earth. The Christian dispensation has reached its termination, and the Koreshan has found its foci of beginning. The vivifying forces of Koreshan Universology have been operative in earth for over thirty years, and the worlds in transition have been getting the material benefit of their radiations from reflecting minds, unconscious of their personal source, but greedy for their benefits. These rapidly multiplying benefactions, now abused to heap up riches for the spoilers of the people, must ultimately be surrendered to the God from whom they emanated, and by his personal direction be distributed to those who are learning to delight in his laws and to do his commandments.

Universology attends the Feast of Booths at Buffalo, because Buffalo leads the world in honoring the name of Pan, and locates the beginning of his natural empire. The Buffalo symbolizes the end of the old, and in cyclic orders the end of the old is the beginning of the new. So to Buffalo, in the empire state, belongs the honor of expositing to the world of the industrial arts and sciences, that supreme science and art of Universology, the science and art of giving life to the world by the obedience to law in the performance of uses to the neighbor, without money and without price. The empire state has been honored beyond all sister states, in being the birthplace of the greatest scientist ever born into the world of mortals, to give it the science of the laws of immortality and eternal life.

To the victor belong the spoils. For him great Pan has harnessed the white horses of mighty Niagara, to roll the chariot wheels of his imperial industrial powers. The absolute scientist of universal law represents the labor of the Gods for 24,000 years, to give to mortal man their holy name and place and power, and the labor of man for 24,000 years, to attain the name or personality of the Gods. The white horse, symbol of the restraints and adjustments of commerce by the wisdom and understanding of chastity, is the power that enables his rider to establish equity, and to rule the world in righteousness. The white horse of the five great waters of the United States of America, represents those natural sciences hereafter to be used for the honor and glory of God, which constitute the perfection of man as a colaborer with God.

At the chief harbor of the noble empire state stands the great statue of "Liberty enlightening the world." She stands there in the order of law, because the empire state has given birth to the greatest Light of the new world which is to illumine all worlds, the Light of absolute science. From the establishment of this imperial power in the minds of men, proceeds the genuine liberty of the Sons of God. It is for New York to lead the world, if she will, in revising the order of the old and dead way, which instituted the stoning of prophets, and do honor to him for whose name and sake she will be honored as long as science rules the thoughts of men.

Jehovah Jesus gave his life for the world he ushered in, that it might reproduce his light and life. His light has come as absolute science to be sown for the righteous, in the darkness of the mortal mind, that men may have life, and that death may be swallowed up in victory. Through Koreshan Universology the hope of immortality and eternal life—begotten in man by Jehovah—is to be brought to fruition. Faith must now give way to science, and science must impulse to action. Water, the universal solvent, and electricity, the universal consumer, well symbolize the mighty mental forces that will unite to renew the life of the world.

Every lover of truth, every patriot who believes in the royal destiny of the Pan-Americas to become the seat of universal empire, should wend his way, if the Gods permit, to the Exposition at Buffalo, and not stop till he reaches that which may seem to the careless or uninitiated, the least of all the expositions at the great feast of booths, but is greatest in that it declares, in the midst of all, the most wonderful of all discoveries to be recorded in the history of Mazzaroth, since the decline of the Golden Age, when the world began to sing, "great Pan is dead." The little booth in the Pan-American Exposition presents to the Pan-Americas the source of their future imperial greatness. The Koreshan Cosmogony, the foundation of Koreshan Universology, furnishes a demonstration of its fundamental principles as expressed in foundation facts which are irrefutable. Every seeker for truth should remember the instruction of the Gods, to "despise not the day of small things." The square and the plumb-line of mechanics are small things, but they can tell great truths in the hand of the genuine Scientist who ignores no law, but demonstrates his knowledge. The New York Prophet, who heads the College of Life, the school of all true prophets, declares with the plumb-line what the world of Pan cannot gainsay.

My Father worketh hitherto, and I work, said Jehovah Jesus. Jehovah works until the salvation of his race, the Elohim, is accomplished, and they are saved by the love of the truth. The man who has the truth is "the mighty one of forces," to whom men are attracted, and by whom they are delivered from these vile bodies of death. When their salvation is accomplished, their God rests from his labors in them, and a Sabbath of rest for His people is instituted. Science harnesses all the forces of the universe for the service of the God-Man. The devil (mortal man) is God's servant; in the absence of Pan, he thinks himself God, as he works by the reflexed light from the spirit world of Pan—and unwittingly prepares the way of the Lord. When the Lord comes, destruction is the beneficent portion of the devil and all his works, and his disintegrated forces recede to their own place, there to labor in subjection in the sphere of mortality till they reach the terminal point of transformation in the lowest hell.

Trusts and combines for the conservation and the orderly economic use of power are all—in the order of law—servants of the Most High; and the productions of their labor revert to Him, their legitimate Heir, whose joint heirs are those who confess his Name and establish his empire—the kingdom of divine uses. This great and final trust or combine, in which each man is emplaced in the order of law according as his work shall be, eliminates from its organization the factor of usury, instituted by the devil of greed, and substitutes the spirit of God, the love of use to the neighbor.

The buffalo or bison signifies also the love of life or Haveh, the divine wisdom of the law of love. If men would become the sons of Haveh, they must apply their hearts with the wisdom of the law, and, taking heed thereunto, come out from the old order, the sphere of competism, and enter the sphere of coöperative industry. No better place in earth, we think, than Buffalo could be found for the institution of coöperative industry as applied to the arts and sciences of the God kingdom. Niagara, harnessed, stands ready at her door to serve the great Knight of divine labor, the servant of all, whose FLAMING SWORD guards the way of the Tree of Life, and who presides over the kingdom of divine uses, which is destined to make America the seat of an empire involving the universe in its protective sphere. Westward from Buffalo, the course of natural empire may take its way round the world, to finally focalize in that zenith of its zone of glory, the New Jerusalem, whose north gate is already opened at Estero, Florida, and whose twelve gates will open into the chief city of the God race yet unborn, the Most Holy living Temple of which will be the Mother of the Gods and the Glory of the Lord, who becomes the Light of the world and gives light to the whole House of Israel—God's universe.

The consequences of sin will be removed as soon as man ceases to do violence to the law of life.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

SHAKESPEARE AND NAPOLEON are representative characters, each in a special line of development tending toward the Messianic personality. Both focalized entities in the median line of progress. The world has paid ample homage to the genius of Shakespeare, eulogizing him as the poet of humanity, an inimitable creator in the psychological field, one whose power seems miraculous, being the product of some transcendent law whose operations have been veiled in mystery. To him alone the Homeric adjective "myriad-minded" has been applied with more justice and exactitude of speech than was apprehended. How did Shakespeare attain such wonderful knowledge of human nature? Why is it that he was able to depict every phase of character so that whether he chooses a scullery boy or a royal prince, an Englishman or a Moor, men and women drawn from his own day or from remote history, all are instinct with life? They are his brain-children, begotten not made; they think and talk and act, each a consistent personality. What is the secret of his power and breadth? Such are the questions which a world in marvel and delight, has asked and found no answer. Shakespeare could delineate so broadly because he involved so many entities whose experience he was able to reproduce with a power surpassing that of other writers. His mind was more retroactive and more broadly constructed. Every mind is made up of thousands of spirits—persons who have died in the natural world,—but he was a focal point of higher poetic energies. Such a manifestation of force on this line was necessary in order that there might be an ingathering of entities on all lines at the present time in the Messianic personality. In the physical cosmos energies on their way to the central sun meet those descending, and a rapid metamorphosis ensues. A certain star is visible in great brilliancy, then fades away as conjoining forces are transited to other points. The electro-magnetic combustion with resulting materializations and dematerializations prepares these forces for entrance into the central vortex. It is not claimed that Shakespeare was in unison with his interior life. His lapses from decency are due to the fact that he portrayed humanity in all its rottenness. Forces of a different character centered in Napoleon. He was a military leader and an organizer. He knew how to appeal to the dominant aspirations of the heart and make them subservient to one end—the construction of a great empire. By the institution of a judicious system of rewards, he aroused courage, zeal, and personal devotion. As some recent orator has reminded us, every private soldier in his army carried a marshal's baton in his knapsack. Ambition was keenly active but subject to discipline, restraint, and adjustment. The merit system prevailed. He recognized the futility of ambition divorced from love at St. Helena, when the caged lion said: "Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne, and myself founded empires. But on what did we rest the creations of our genius? upon force. Jesus Christ alone founded his empire upon love, and at this hour millions of men would die for him." There are rewards and penalties in God's kingdom, but the former come in fulfilment of the first commandment. Sought for themselves and not attained through the outflowing of the interior love, they become penalties. The race in its childhood obeys through fear. When it becomes a man it puts away childish things. Each phase is necessary. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, but "perfect love casteth out fear." This perfection is only manifest with the Sons of God in the Holy Empire founded upon supreme love.

The Rev. Washington Gladden writing upon the "Outlook for Christianity" in the June issue of the North American, touches upon the subject of Biblical criticism. He says there is reason to hope that the Bible may yet prove, under the new theories of its origin, a better witness for God than ever before, "It is well that He should not any longer be held responsible for the human crudities and errors which it contains." The function of the "higher criticism" is apparently that of a benevolent society to exculpate the Creator and lift from his shoulders the onus of scientific inexactitude. If God tried to find men suited to his purpose and failed, why of course it is not His fault. He is not answerable for the "mistakes of Moses." The Creator would have been glad to set forth the Copernican system and show that He understands the universe as well as modern astronomers who say that larger and larger telescopes show us only new suns and solar systems. Not being able to find anyone to indite His messages for him, he did the best that he could under the circumstances with the result, as Dr. Gladden says, that the different parts of the Bible are not of equal value. Where it does not conflict with the dicta of modern science, it is true. Where it does so conflict, it is false, and the honor of this discovery rests with the higher critics unto whom are now committed the oracles of God. But there are difficulties connected even with these views as put forward by the "new theology." One of them arises from the fact that astronomers and "scientists" are beginning to disavow many of their own theories. Later investigations have convinced them that many of their claims are false. Now if modern science is so undecided, who shall tell us what portions of the Bible it is safe to keep as truth, and what should be discarded as error? Does not this dilemma imply a necessity that the mind which wrote the Bible should explain itself? After the early church had been baptized, St. Paul wrote: "We have the mind of Christ." The early Christians must have understood the Bible, but if present-day Christians are in so much doubt concerning its veracity, the mind of Christ can be no longer in the church. Is not the time ripe for a new revelation of divine wisdom? Does not this argue the necessity for another baptism?

Beauty in the physical world culminates in the sky, with its magnificent cloud effects. Artists and poets have tried to paint upon canvas or portray in words the hues of sunset and the glorious tints of dawn. Here it is permissible to lay on the colors with a lavish hand. It is only necessary to imagine what the world would be without these prismatic refractors of sunlight, in order to realize how much pure joy can be found in watching the shifting masses of ethereal cloud-form. A great price is set upon the works of the "old Masters," and they pass over to the galleries of the rich where only a few can see them, but the wonderful pictures of Nature are free to the poorest waif. Everywhere in the cosmos beauty is associated with use. The mystery of the early and latter rain is enfolded in the cloud. The common theory of cloud formation is incorrect according to genuine science, because it does not involve alchemical change. Vapor does not rise, collect in masses, and condense in drops. Being heavier than air, the smallest atoms of water cannot ascend as claimed. Vapor or moisture is engendered in the air. At the junction of the air and water surfaces, as well as at the junction of our atmosphere with the sea of hydrogen above, combustion takes place with a creation of levic and gravic energies. Wheresoever these ascending and descending energies meet, clouds are formed by alchemical union. They do not seem to rain continually as is the case, because the particles are sometimes metamorphosed into energy again as they fall, and the precipitate does not pass below the edge of the mass of vapor. In other words, clouds result from a swift metamorphosis of energies in a vortex. It is fitting that the most beautiful of natural phenomena should be used in the Scriptures to symbolize the culmination of divine history. "He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him," is the image under which the dazzling phenomenon of the reappearance of Christ in the Sons of God in glory and power is depicted.

The art of civilization is to destroy the instincts of the natural man and create those of the Deific man. Universal arbitration does not imply perfect civilization, because so long as the necessity for such a court exists, the animal passions are not exterminated. Luxury and magnificence only tend to multiply the material desires so that man is tenfold the slave of self. History shows that hideous barbarities, such as gladiatorial combats, tortures by fire and rack, exposure of the sick and aged to die upon an island in the Tiber, wage slavery and degradation of woman, may accompany increase of comfort and super-refinement of taste in certain directions. The art of civilization is to transform not to reform humanity. The science of transformation is the key to the social problem. The Indian is not civilized by wearing American clothes instead of a blanket. Neither is the woman who buys a necklace like Marie Antoinette's while the populace is starving. To make civilians of men is to bring them to a point where they find genuine pleasure in subordinating private interests to the interests of the state. True civility does not consist in exchanging the amenities of society while the heart is corrupt. It is the spontaneous outflowing of love to humanity which has but one origin—love to God. The close of the iron age shows the climax of barbarity. Civilization comes in with the Golden Age.

When the end of the school year comes with the long, hot days, the children in the public schools are so tired that their teachers who are also weary, can hardly hold them to the tasks in hand. From five to six hours a day for ten months they have sat in the schoolroom, receiving instruction on a great variety of subjects. Now they are mentally and physically exhausted. This lassitude is very dangerous in the case of delicate, highly organized pupils. Sometimes they never rally from the effects of overcrowding during the years of growth, when Nature's efforts to develop the individual require the most judicious aid. It would be better to shorten the school year so that work may end before the heated term begins, or to curtail the average number of hours of attendance so that the mind may expand gradually without forcing, and instruction become a genuine means of re-creation.

Is there progress in heaven? Hearst's Chicago American proposes this query in a recent Sunday edition, and discusses the subject in consonance with the theory of a limitless universe. Koreshanity reasons logically, that limitless progress is impossible since the divine mind itself, being the container of all knowledge, is limited by that sum just as a circle is limited by its circumference. When God reaches the amplitude of wisdom, he knows all things. The limit of progression being reached, the Ancient of Days becomes the child Jesus; the Father becomes the Son. This concept involves that of the fourth dimension of matter, the point of terminal transformation to opposites. A law in one domain has a correspondent action in every other. Herein the coherence of the Koreshan System is apparent.

The love of God is the Comforter, the Holy Spirit. The Lord's loving desire to comfort the church, which means to endow it with strength, was so great that he endured the cross—not simply the physical agony of crucifixion, but the crossing of his pure life with that of sinful humanity. The love of the Lord led him to sacrifice every earthly tie and every material desire for the welfare of his people. He asked none of his Disciples to drink from a cup more bitter than the one he drained. He made himself of no reputation and despised the shame. He went away in order that the Comforter might come. The reciprocal longing between Himself and his Disciples was so strong that, added to the hate of those who denied him, it consumed the physical atoms of his body and converted them to Holy Spirit.

The press chronicles another victim to the gold fever. Joseph Ladue, the founder of Dawson City, upon whose land gold in the Yukon region was first discovered, has just died of consumption contracted in the severity of the northern latitude. With a rich harvest from the gold fields, so that his estate is worth millions, he brought back the germs of death. All that a man hath, yea, life itself will he give in exchange for fortune. The early Christians braved death in the most cruel forms for the sake of their religion. The Christians of today will sacrifice all in the exercise of their cult—the worship of the Almighty—not God, but the Dollar.

If the term individual be taken in its actual not in its accepted signification, it refers to the undivided or biune state—that of Deity where the male and female principles are blended in one form. It is commonly used as synonymous with the term person, to designate ordinary men and women who are not individuals in the true sense. The familiar phrase individual responsibility is really a solemn promise or engagement entered into again (re-sponsio) by the undivided Being. The promise of conjunction is the agreement between God and man. They are mutually interdependent, so that neither could dispense with the services of the other.

It does not require an alarmist to note the insecurity of the United States in its foreign relations. The attitude of all the great powers is menacing, because this country has risen in commercial importance like a constellation blazing out in fresh splendor. There is danger at home and there is danger abroad. Let us lose no time in consolidating reciprocity treaties with other nations, and establishing relations of friendship and international agreement. A single rash move might involve us in a disastrous war with our neighbors. Civil war must come. Let us beware lest both be precipitated upon us at the same instant.

When the curse is lifted and industry is substituted for labor in the new age, child labor will be no more, but the performance of various uses suited to their years will be a means of healthful enjoyment to the children. In some kindergartens useless and flimsy toys are made, when by the exercise of ingenuity on the part of the teacher, objects of utility might come from the children's hands. The waste in every department of society will cease when the divine economic order is instituted.

Who shall say, "I am holier than thou," when all have sinned and come short of the glory of God in seeking the glory of self?

The love of heavenly things and divine uses must be implanted in man from above.

Individual responsibility is God's promissory note.

Understanding generates compassion not scorn.

Continuity of Life in the God World.

Do we suffer for ages in attaining perfection only to remain in the God world a certain time, and are we ultimately swept back into matter to circle around again?—AN INQUIRER.

No. You will awake to your eternal consciousness. Upon reaching that state, you will find that what you have attained will live in the God world without any break in the continuity of being. This is eternal life, dwelling in life without any future interruption. If life is eternal in the future without end—then that life is without beginning; hence it is said, without beginning of days or end of years. The activities in the God world result in friction and waste—the waste being precipitated into the lower lives by grades. The first precipitation is into the highest angelic heavens; the second, into the second angelic heavens, the third into the third heaven, and the fourth into the common life. This is true on general principles, though each heaven has many degrees of descent. Absorption of your ascending life into the eternal consciousness is no loss of identity, and from it there is no more descent of the egoistic consciousness. The Sons of God precipitate germs of regeneration. This is done at the time and point of conjunction. —BY KORESH.

The Passing of the Old World.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—There are two passages in the New Testament that I cannot quite explain satisfactorily to myself; if you can spare time and space, I will thank you very much for explaining the same:

(1) Mark xiii: 29-31: "So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be done. Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away."

(2) Second epistle of Peter iii: 10: Is this dire prophecy to be fulfilled literally or only typically? A full answer to the above questions will be greatly appreciated. Respect.—H. C. C., Springfield, Mass.

(1) The prophetic utterances of the Lord in this chapter are brought to a focus in verse 26, where he specifically declares that then,—that is after the events which he has foretold, "they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory." The glory and power of the Lord have not been manifest during the Christian age in the declension of the church. They will not be manifest until he comes in the Sons of God. In verse 30, the word generation means this bringing forth, and it refers to the Lord himself who was the first-begotten from the dead, the first-born of every creature, generated during the entire Jewish age.

This generation (meaning Himself) shall not pass, (Greek, come, go along, draw near) (in the Sons of God regenerated from Christ) till all these things be done. Heaven and earth shall pass away; heaven refers to the spiritual heavens gathered as a scroll into the Lord and disseminated as Holy Spirit in his translation, and planted in the church. At the close of the Christian age the spiritual heaven, or the New Jerusalem, is gathered into the Messenger, the forerunner of the Sons of God, and draws near in him. Earth refers to the Messenger himself, in whom the heavens are enclosed as the spherical heavens in the cosmos are enclosed in the cellular earth.

The Messenger shall come with the doctrine of life, but my words (logos) shall not come until later,—when the time is ripe, when all signs have been fulfilled. The words of Christ are those who become the Logos as he was the Logos. The ultimate interpretation of the Lord's sayings is here given. In a secondary sense, it may be said that verse 26 refers to His coming on the day of Pentecost in the baptism of that age; also that verse 31 refers to the Lord's passing away in his theocrasis, when he entered into the church. Both the primary and secondary renderings are correct, but each should be kept distinct.

(2) This prophecy is to be fulfilled literally, but in the domain of humanity, the human world. The physical earth is continually burning, and the physical heavens are continually passing away. In an exterior sense this is true of humanity, but a specific conflagration is here meant when the Messianic personality of this age will be theocrasised as Jesus was theocrasised. Those who believe in his doctrines will be literally consumed in an electro magnetic combustion, which has been scientifically set forth in THE FLAMING SWORD and in all Koreshan literature. —BY LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

New Slave Market.

Familiar Scenes from the Field of the Competitive System; Slaves Sold to Lowest Bidders.

We are all familiar with the process whereby the Negro was put upon the auction block and knocked down to the highest bidder, but not so familiar as to how the competitive slave is compelled to bid himself down to be purchased at the lowest bid. But here is the picture:

Behold a slave market of the competitive system. A throng of idle, anxious-looking toilers. In the center a well-dressed citizen. "Listen," he says, "I want an employe. How low do I hear you offer yourselves? Put yourselves down! There are 100 of you. I want only one. What do I hear you bid?"

A man comes forward, a man of middle age, yet sound in life and limb and well skilled for the task. He has a wife and little ones to support, he must therefore consider them in his bid—his bid must be high enough to take in their support. He offers himself for two dollars per day.

"Two dollars per day is bid," says the man dealer; "why, this is preposterous. Two dollars per day is outrageous. You must come down lower than that; this is a good job. You can get something to eat and wear out of this job. Thousands would jump at this job. It is a grand opening for a young man. Going at two dollars! Do I hear a dollar and a half?"

"Dollar and a half," bids a slave, a young man who has but lately married, and who has but himself and wife to support.

"A dollar and a half," cries the man dealer. "Remember it is your last chance. The rolling mill shut down last week, harvest is over, building is dull, manufacturers complain that sales are light and that the people are not buying their goods. This is your last chance. Get down lower than a dollar and a half."

A young man, unmarried, and devoid of encumbrances—encumbrances is a term wherewith rent, interest, and profit designate the family of a poor man, for individualistic selfishness, opposed to life, is opposed to families—having no wife, no children to support—bids one dollar per day.

"Now you are coming down to business. But you can get down lower than this. There will be a few more lockouts next week; a general strike may be ordered along the line; get down if you want to get through the winter. A dollar a day, I am bid, do I hear a half?"

A swarthy-looking man from a far-away land, friendless and alone in a strange country, whose needs are extremely pressing, whom oppression has accustomed to extreme economy, bids seventy-five cents per day.

"Now I hear you talk. You are coming down to cents. But you can get down lower than that. You would not get a tenth of that in some countries. Going at seventy-five cents."

Then a little yellow man, with receding forehead and protruding jaw, with his hair plaited down his back into a long, rattish looking tail, and the corner of whose eyes are relationally perpendicular, speaks in foreign accent, saying:

"Me catchum job at fifty cents per day; me no wifey, no chillem, no Sunday—no nothing. Me sleepum floor, eatum rice,—live all same rat. Takem me fifty cents a day."

"Gone!" cries the man dealer.

Then the wretch with the wife and family, the young man with the young wife, and the unencumbered man walked away out into the streets, past the stores, with their windows temptingly decked and arrayed with the comforts and necessities of life—comforts and necessities which they and theirs want and need so much. And the competitive shopkeepers watch them going by and wonder why they do not come in and purchase. When the morale of all this is examined into, it will be readily seen that each slave is put into antagonism with his fellow slave, that the slaves of each country are not only thus arrayed against the slaves of their respective countries, but that the slaves of one country are thus arrayed in hostile conflict against the slaves of another country, until the barriers of hate are raised up between man and man.—From "Civilization Civilized."

One Literary Catastrophe.

Destruction of China's Encyclopedia by Looting Christians, an Irreparable Loss.

News comes that the Orient has been robbed of its most famous collection of knowledge, the monumental "Encyclopedia Maxima." A writer in an English magazine briefly describes this splendid Chinese encyclopedia, whose destruction, he says, "is the most appalling literary catastrophe the world has ever seen." In 1403 the third Emperor of the Ming dynasty, Yung Lo, issued a commission to Hsieh Chin, the leading scholar of the day, for the preparation of an encyclopedia. With the assistance of 146 colleagues, Hsieh Chin finished his work in a year and four months, and laid it before the throne.

It did not at all satisfy the Emperor, who thereupon issued a new commission, in which Hsieh Chin appears as one of three commissioners, with directors and a staff of assistants, making 2,169 persons in all. The idea was to collect together all that had ever been written on the Confucian canon, history, philosophy, and general literature; and by the end of 1407 a compilation was submitted which immediately received the stamp of imperial approval, and was named the "Great Standard of Yung Lo."

This work ran to no fewer than 22,877 separate sections, and was bound up in 11,100 volumes, each half an inch in thickness; so that, were all the volumes laid flat one upon another, the column thus formed would reach a height of 450 feet, or nearly forty-six feet higher than the top of St. Paul's. Each section contains about twenty leaves, making a total of 917,480 pages for the whole work.

Ever since Pekin was first opened in 1860, all applications from foreign scholars to be allowed even to view such an interesting relic have always been curtly refused. China has now lost her treasure through the misguided violence of her own sons; while the only hands stretched forward to save it from destruction were those of the foreigners from whom it had been so jealously withheld.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Another Edition Ready.

The Fourth Edition of the Cellular Cosmogony Completed and Ready for all Orders.

We are glad to announce that after some delay, a new edition of THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY is just off the press. The Guiding Star Publishing House is now able to fill all orders for this book, for which there is great demand. A new chapter by KORESH has been added in the form of an Addendum, illustrating some simple principles of geolinear and distal foreshortening, which greatly enhances the value of the work.

This new edition affords all our friends and propagandists opportunity for renewed efforts in the work of getting Koresan Universology before the people. Thousands of COSMOGONIES are already distributed throughout America and Europe—and yet it is only the beginning of the great conflict and contest of systems. Let further and numerous orders give the great work another impetus in the direction of ultimate success and triumph.—EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

The Arena.—Prof. Frank Parsons opens the July Arena with an essay on the Great Movements of the Nineteenth Century. They fall, he says, into two opposing groups, one tending to universal good, the other to the selfish exaltation of a few persons. A panegyric upon the intellectual and material progress of the world follows. In regard to women, the writer admits that "under most governments they are still classed with infants, idiots, and criminals," but he thinks that upon the whole, in spite of new developments in monopoly and fraud, justice along all lines has been greatly extended in the past hundred years. The remainder of the issue is devoted to thoughtful reviews of leading topics. 25 cents a copy; $2.50 a year. Alliance Publishing Co., 569 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Cosmopolitan.—Six full-page illustrations show examples of recent art. The stage is represented by a study of Ellen Terry, and The Balcony Scene in Romantic Art. Bret Harte contributes a story of Western life: A Mercury of the Foothills. J. Holt Schooling discusses the progress of population under the caption: When Will the World Be Full? This article embodies many interesting points, and is a valuable addition to the "fiction number." The Great Texas Oil Fields are described by Edward R. Treharne. 10 cents a copy; $1.00 a year. Irvington, New York.

Two Famous Yachts in Colors.—Public interest in the great international yacht race, to be held in September, broadens as the date for the contest approaches. The issue of Leslie's Weekly, dated July 13th, and out next week, will contain a beautiful double-page drawing in water colors, of our cup defender and the Shamrock II., racing at full tilt off Sandy Hook. The drawing is by the famous marine artist, FRANK H. SCHELL, and is handsome enough to frame.

Leslie's Monthly.—The midsummer number offers much variety in the way of fact and fiction. The Great Log Jam; Historic Fort Monroe; The Abbey of Gethsemani, and Leaves from the Autobiography of a Russian Student are among the descriptive articles. Eden Philpott's novelette is concluded, and the serial by Samuel Mervin continues. 10 cents a copy; $1.00 a year. Frank Leslie Publishing House, 141-147 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Suggestion.—The first of a series of articles on the Frauds of Spiritualism appears in the current issue. The writer, Rev. Stanley L. Krebs, believes that some of the phenomena of spiritualism are genuine, but his experience has led him to uncover some of the tricks that impose on a credulous public. 10 cents a copy; $1.00 a year. Suggestion Publishing Company, 4026 Drexel Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Journal of Magnetism.—This is the official organ of the Psychic Club, a group of persons interested in healing, thought-transmission, and all matters connected with psychic research. The July number has an excellent dissertation on Legalized Quackery. 10 cents a copy; $1.00 a year. Magnetic Publishing Company, The Auditorium, Chicago.

The Interpreter.—The cover design adopted by this magazine is the soaring eagle, a type of the rational mind. The fact that the Interpreter is devoted to the presentation of the Cellular Cosmogony, should commend it to readers of THE FLAMING SWORD. Published and edited by Major Ogden Whitlock, 1645 Lawrence street, King Block, Denver Colorado.

Men and Matters.—This little periodical is published monthly, and contains portraits of leading business men, current topics, and a story or two. 10 cents a copy, $1.00 a year. 320 Magazine street, New Orleans, La.

The Pope's $500,000,000.

The wealth of the pope is estimated at $500,000,000, and his personal income at $2,400,000 a year. These figures are probably not very wide of the mark. The pope's various jubilees have brought him gifts from the faithful all over the world, of the estimated aggregated value of $50,000,000. His holiness has from time to time invested his surplus income in United States government bonds, and his present holding is estimated at $6,000,000. The cash reserves of the holy see are estimated at $50,000,000, invested for the most part in American, British, Italian, Belgian, and French government securities. The interest on all this capital has for the past 23 years been accumulated and invested in various directions, with the result that the holy see was never in a more satisfactory financial position than it is today.—Exchange.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland floss, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Cosmogony the Basis of All Science.

Scientific Lessons Taught by Koreshan Astronomy; the Tangible Seed of Universal Life; the True Geometry and Its Application to Earth Measurement.

THE CHRISTIAN AGE began with the specific and pronounced manifestation; namely, the baptism of the Disciples and followers of the Lord with the Holy Spirit. It was the divine proceeding from the Father in the Son; the Son was the direct source of the vivification. It was the essence of fecundation; it could not have been disseminated had not the Lord been made visible in the flesh. Jesus was the matured Seed of the universe. He was the culminating point not only of the entire spirit of the universe, but the culminating point of all the forms of matter as well.

Every tree, every kind of animal life as well as universal life, reaches its terminal points in the material seed before the possibility of reproduction occurs. Any tree may be taken as the type of the great universal tree. The tree cannot reproduce another tree until it has produced its material seed. The spirit of the tree has no power of reproduction until both the form and the spirit of the tree unite in the production of the seed. The seed has within itself the force of reproduction. The universe is like the tree; it cannot reproduce itself within itself until it has matured its own seed, which, when produced, is the universe in its least form. The Lord was the entire Seed of the universe. The material form of the universe, with the entire spiritual life, had unitedly culminated in the production of the microcosm, which was both material and spiritual. This manifestation was the material germ of reproduction.

We have been pronounced in our emphasis of the fact that the Lord Jesus was the Son of God, and that as such he constituted the material germ of creation, because, in our study and comprehension of the laws of form and function as they obtain in the alchemico-organic (physical) universe, and correspondentially in the organo-vital, we are enabled to observe the relation of the Son of God—as the central anthropotic Star—to the astral nucleus of the alchemico-organic field. In that comprehension of the anatomical structure of the alchemico-organic body which defines the location and function of its astral nucleus, we have determined the exact form and function of the supreme and central star. The geometry of the universe is the exact commensuration of the cube and the sphere, not only in their forms, but the exact limitations of these forms as they constitute the limitations of the universe itself. These facts can only be made comprehensible through such a study of the cosmogonic form as to reduce its conception to the limits of the human reason and understanding.

Thus far, the human mind has been passing through the puerile stages of its progress. Its development in relation to God (its Parent) has been like an infant in its relation to its parentage and the things surrounding it; the child does not comprehend the things which to the conception of the parent are the most simple and comprehensible. When the human mind looks out on the mysteries of the universe it conceives them to be eternally incomprehensible; but we ought to consider the Creator omnipotent, omnipresent, and omniscient. By this, we mean that the Creator is all sufficient to create, is everywhere present in the works of his creation, and all-knowing as to their forms, limitations, and functions. Mankind makes the mistake that because it does not comprehend the character and wisdom of its parent, it is forever to remain ignorant of the mysteries of being.

Man is the offspring of the universe. As he progresses toward the maturity of his development, he partakes more and more of the character of the central mind, more and more of the forms and functions of the universe as a whole, until finally he becomes so perfect in his creation that he is the universe in its least form. When this attainment is reached, the mysteries of being have all vanished, and he has awakened into the perfection of his being as the Son of God. Such is the destiny of all those who are progressing through the processes of regeneration to human perfection.

An adequate mensuration of the alchemico-organic world, that is, a measurement which comprises a practical geometry of the form and size of the earth, must begin with a first geometrical step which embraces a positive demonstration. If we are to comprehend the character of causation, we must be able to read the language of expression as it is presented in the most material forms and functions of creation. Everything we observe is the result of causation. It is the language of cause projected into effect. What is more reasonable than to believe that if we can read and interpret effect, we can obtain a knowledge of the cause? To successfully read what the wisdom of causation has projected into being, we must take the first step positively; we must know the form of the universe.

Application of True Geometry.

True geometry is the accurate measurement of the universe. Is it flat, square, round and convex, or round and concave? So far as modern cosmogony is concerned, there have never been any active measures taken by so called scientists to determine the shape of the earth, which could lead to any positive results. A process of triangulation instituted for the purpose of determining the amount of curvation, can in no wise determine the direction of the curve. Triangulation may proximately determine not only that the earth curves, but that it curves a definite amount; it cannot determine the direction of that curve. It is not sufficient to assume that the earth is convex—we must know whether it is convex, flat, or concave. To ascertain that knowledge we must institute some accurate kind of mensuration.

Aside from the application of the principles of analogy and optics, there is a simple mechanical means of determining the contour of the surface of the earth on or in which we live. Simple mechanical application has determined that the earth is a concave body, but the question is often asked: "What difference does it make whether the earth is convex or concave?" It makes this much difference, that the truth regarding the structure of the world in which we live is a better foundation for a working hypothesis for universal knowledge and its application to human life, than a fundamental error. The very men who propound the question seem to think that it is important they should adhere to the Copernican system.

A true knowledge of cosmogony must constitute the basis of our knowledge of Deity, because what Deity has expressed in the form of the most external manifestation comprises the language of causation—whatever that causation may be. Whatsoever we observe is the product of cause. Can we reason from effect to cause? Can we determine how much of cause is projected into effect, and is it possible for causation to ultimate in effect and become the cause? According to a reputed declaration of the Almighty, made through John the Revelator, cause and effect are one and the same. "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end." This is a plain declaration that first cause and final effect are the same and identical. This implies that when cause has ultimated in its full results in the germ of re-creation, re-generation, it is in the form and character of the man, and that this man is the Son of God.

Rational Processes of Nature's Interpretation.

We may begin the process of the interpretation of Nature by taking the first mechanically positive step in that interpretation. We have asked the question, Can we determine a rectiline by any simple process? If we can, we are in a fair way to settle questions which have never been determined by the professedly scientific world. If we can determine a straight line, can we relate this mechanical rectiline to the plumb-line so as to determine a right angle? We have invented and applied an instrument by which we not only can, but have projected a straight line from a perpendicular adjusted by the plumb-line and level, and we find that the line projected at right angles with the perpendicular will extend into the earth at a distance proportionate to the height of the perpendicular. If the surface of the earth were convex, a line extended from the top of a perpendicular post would not extend into the ground or into the water, but the curve of the earth would depart from the straight line proportionately to the extent of the line. The reverse would be true if the earth were concave.

We find that a line projected at right angles with a perpendicular extends toward the earth, also that the ratio of curvature is definitely determined, and that this ratio is eight inches to the mile. The first mile curves toward the rectiline eight inches, the second mile thirty-two inches, the third mile six feet. The same ratio has proximately been determined by the process of triangulation. We perform what the system of triangulation cannot do; namely, we determine the direction of the curve, thus establishing the fact that the earth is not convex but concave. We are as absolutely certain of this as we are that up is up, and down is down. In determining the contour of the earth we have taken one step toward a positive science, which is bound to lead us to a final knowledge of causation.

We have not instituted our geodetic surveys to assure ourselves of the character of the anatomy of the universe, but to furnish a simple process of observation, the principles of which are within the reach of the most common comprehension. There can be no doubt of the fact that the systems of triangulation instituted and conducted by the international geodetic survey, covering a great area of territory, in which thirty-five or more years of time as well as thousands of dollars, have been expended, have served our purpose as well as if we had expended the money and the time. Triangulation has determined for the world the fact that there is a curvation of about eight inches to the mile; that is all it has determined. It might be argued that as we have only extended our observations over a small space of the earth's surface, we have not established our proposition. In fact, this is the argument of the flat-earth theorists. Triangulation disproves the flat-earth theory, but it does not prove the convex theory.

Why We Emphasize Cosmogony.

What has this all to do with the bread and butter question? "What do we care," says the hungry man, "about the shape of the earth? Can you tell us how we are to get our bread, and how we are to feed our wives and children?" This is just what we propose to do in urging the truth regarding the anatomy and physiology of the physical universe. We propose to tell the world all about God from the basis of our proposition; and knowing God, we can quickly determine his relation to us and our relation to him. This settled, we can easily determine our relations to one another. In presenting to the world our system of Cosmology, we have in view the ulterior purpose of settling the question of the societal and commercial relations of the entire world. Modern astronomy can have no practical bearing upon the human race further than to breed atheists and agnostics—another name for know-nothings.

In determining the fact that the earth is convex, we have defined a specific circumference related to a definitely located center. Upon the basis of the law of correspondential analogy, we have positively determined the fact of the existence of the central nucleus—an astral center which is the focal point of the space environed by the shell called the earth. It is not the purpose of this article to enter into the detail of the laws and principles by which we know of the existence of a central star, about four thousand miles from the inner circumference of the shell; this must be gained by a study of the Koreshan literature.

There is an exact correspondence between the astral nucleus of the physical cosmogony and the astral nucleus of the human race, which is the correspondence of the physical cosmogony. In the settlement of the question of the existence and location of the astral nucleus of the physical world, we have settled upon the fact of the existence of an anthropostic correspondential Star—the personal humanity of Deity. The geometry of the alchemico-organic cosmos shows the character of the astral nucleus, for the congeries of the activities of all the forms and functions of the cosmogonic structure are composited in this central star. All the functions and forms of the universe are inversely minimized in the central star. This star is to all the space to which it relates, what the seed of a tree is to the tree which it is capable of unfolding. Every quality of form found in the universe as a whole, is duplicated in its least form in the nucleus. This is true of the concentration of function also. We have demonstrated the existence of a central anthropostic Star. We may determine the time of His manifestation, and define his character from a knowledge of the character of the supremely central star of the physical cosmos, which is the throne of force, energy, function, and form.

There are two principal factors in the regulation of economy; the first is production, the second, distribution. Money is not required for either of these purposes. What, then, you will ask, will be the incentive to exertion? We answer, primarily, the love of the brotherhood. Every industry will be conducted on the basis of its love, the end of that love being the use of the industry to the neighbor. Labor for self is the most sordid, abnormal impulse imaginable. This is well enough in theory, you say, but practically impossible. Is the purpose of God aborted and the Christian idea a fabulous myth? or will the Lord's prayer meet its answer in the fulfilment of righteousness in the earth?

Anomalous Prosperity of Americans.

A Nation of Vast Wealth, yet a Nation of Poverty for its People; Gigantic Robber System which Makes Money and Misery.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

NEVER IN THE LAND for which our forefathers staked fortune, reputation, and life, has the goddess Fortune been so presumably bounteous in her bestowings. The seed will be returned in many-fold multiplication to the granaries whence it was distributed, and never before in our history has the per capita of money attained the footing of $26.50 in actual circulation among the people of this broad country through! One instinctively listens for the sharp little collision of coin in the fingered pocket of the host, or the rustle of crisp notes under the comforting touchy consciousness of possession by the multitude. Surely the dilapidated residence of the cobbler will soon present a less gallingly distinctive appearance; the wife and children of the hod carrier will bud into respectability of attire. The means for these and kindred transformations will abide; for the tintinnabulation of the coin transferred from the pocket of Smith to that of Jones, has its chink, clink, tinkle immediately replaced by a transference from Brown. Oh, the chain is as endless and merry as the roundelays of childhood!

He who should know, because of his hand supreme upon the helm of state, declares that in all our history never have we had so much to do as we have now; never have we had so much business—domestic and foreign; never so much of the good things of natural growth and of mechanical production; never have we sold so much as we sell this year. Our productive capacity has become so great as to require a foreign market for our surplus, and consequently we of the Occident turn to the open door of the Orient for an outlet for our products and labor; we must expand our market. And here comes a flow of counsel upon the theme of prudence in our prosperity. We are to be wise; we are to save while we can, thus shall we be strong in the storms that will come now and then. Whatever comes, continues our magnanimous adviser, let us be fortified by the practice of economy while we are so well employed.

Some days ago, we stood for a brief time where the huge steel plant of South Chicago fouls God's pure heavens, and prejudices one's lungs with the evidences of the fiery environment in which is earned bread by the sweat of the face. An unconscious touch here and there left one to wonder at one's soiled hands. Smudge was upon all the surroundings; but most particularly and painfully was it, or the smut of kindred callings, upon the crowds of workers who filed into the streets and cars. The enclosed acres devoted to the enormous machine and repair shop, the ice house, huge grain elevator, and roundhouse of the Baltimore and Ohio R. R., also teemed and swarmed with busy life. Addressing an intelligent-faced Scandinavian woman we remarked: "You are a busy people here; you must be growing rich." "Growing rich!" she ejaculated; "with a family to take care of, a man does not grow rich on a dollar and a half a day. When the rent and the water tax are paid, and the coal and groceries brought in, there is little enough left for clothes; and then sometimes we must pay a doctor's bill."

The remuneration mentioned, though not the highest rate, is a pretty fair average for the unskilled masses. Meats make a rapid advance, and many other food-stuffs sympathize more or less, but the wage remains unchanged. Meanwhile, the needs of domestic life, in the case of young families, are constantly increasing, with but one avenue of relief—that of forcing childhood into the arena of strife for existence. And this is but a faint hint of the desolation accompanying the practical application of our present industrial system; it is just a little concerning a limited center of operation. It does not involve the reeking dens of extensive areas, where a still more despairing humanity—young and old—must find final relief in death.

Yet, in the face of this milder stage, how heartless seems the mockery of the words which advise economy! Envied by this condition, would President McKinley speak of economy? Would he believe himself in position to prepare for a storm? Would he not consider himself already enveloped in a blackness capable of little deepening? In such straits, what were his chances to beat away death from the bedside of his beloved wife? Yet he, though the exponent of the people's executive power, holds no monopoly of affection or fidelity. Many an humble laborer, with agony as keen as the President can entertain, sees his poverty consign his loved one to the jaws of death; for Mrs. McKinley does not constitute the sum of suffering womanhood whose life would lengthen under the ability to meet the needs of that life.

The United States is a robber's den. Beneath the folds of "Old Glory," the protector of systematized and unblushing robbery, millions are withering their lives in the creation of a boasted exuberant prosperity too narrow to cover its creators. If the flag of the United States fulfilled its vauntings, a single case from existing millions would become theme of indignant inquiry and speedy redress. Let him who needs the lesson, visit the home of the labor which lies at the base of the wealth which spoils the many to make the few. He will find that the adjuration of our executive Nestor, entering the abode of toil before uttered, has performed a mission consonantly in advance of its author's conception—it has held together the soul and body of the toiler!

Reading the Signs of the Times.

What Human Events Portend and the Physical Heavens Declare; Division of Time into Dispensations; Remarkable Symbolism of the Bible and Its Scientific Interpretation.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

JESUS THE MESSIAH was the great sign of the times, whose star had been seen in the East, heralding his coming; and yet the people of his time, whom Jesus rebuked for not watching, had not seen—recognized it. The place to look for the signs of great events and great personages is the physical heavens. "And God said, let there be lights in the firmament of heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and for years." When the Pharisees importuned Jesus for a sign from heaven, he said to them that to an evil and adulterous generation which sought for a sign, no sign should be given save that of the prophet Jonas. "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

It is the human earth of which the Bible generally treats. This tarrying of Jesus for three days and three nights was only typified by his burial in the tomb of Joseph. The real tarrying was the one in "Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified"—the sinful humanity into which the Holy Ghost, the divine Seed, went after Jesus' translation, where God "hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." "Not seeds as of many, but thy seed, which is Christ."

As Jesus explained seed, all seed, even God's holy Seed, had to fall into its ground and die in order to its reproduction. In order to die, this holy Seed had to become unholy—was "made to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

Jesus said, "I bear witness of myself; my Father beareth witness of me." These two witnesses were slain and their dead bodies lay "in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." "And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet. * * * And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud." This death of the two witnesses—the Lord, in the street of the great city—the fallen Babylon, was the death of the divine Seed preparatory to its reproduction—regeneration, which Jesus, the Seed and the Sower, said would be in the harvest—the resurrection of the dead, which would be in the end of the Christian age, falsely rendered the end of the world.

If the Seed of God—Christ, was sown in human hearts in the beginning of a dispensation, and the harvest of that seed came in the end of the same, then the period of gestation or generation of that seed is an age. This is the generation of which Jesus spake, when he said of things still future in their fulfilment: "This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled."

"The evil and adulterous generation" which Jesus declared to then exist and to look for signs, still exists, is more than ever anxious to see signs from heaven, and probably never was so adulterous as now. Nothing that can be adulterated long escapes. Every form of truth and good has been corrupted, until there are but few people who know the difference between the genuine and the counterfeit—between the truth and a respectable lie. And the mass of men have come to believe that one is about as good as the other—provided one actually believes it.

Jesus did not so believe and teach. When He was to eat the last passover with his Disciples, "He sendeth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him." Generally, the facts of the Bible are literal facts; but they are at the same time symbolical of other facts which are yet in the future. Jesus had said to the evil and adulterous generation, that they should have no sign save that of Jonas the prophet. He told his own Disciples, in the language of symbolism, what would be the sign in the physical heavens when he came again according to his promise, in the end of the Christian age. In the symbolic language of the Bible, city means doctrine, the New Jerusalem—the holy city which John saw come down from heaven, adorned as a bride for her husband; it was the new doctrine of the new age—to be ushered in by the resurrection of the dead—the ripened harvest of the Seed which Jesus sowed in the beginning of the Christian age.

In symbolic meaning, Jesus bade two of his Disciples go down to the beginning of the next age, when the truth which had become so adulterated that men no longer recognized it, or gave it any heed, would again return, as it always does, in a man, of whose presence in earth the sign in the physical heavens, the sign Aquarius, the man bearing a pitcher of water, would be the sign for the new dispensation.

Water, being transparent, symbolizes truth. The sign of the new age upon which we are entering will be—in the physical heaven—a man (Aquarius, the water-carrier) with a pitcher of water, which he is pouring out to the nations, symbolizing the truth which a man living in the earth in the beginning of the age is now pouring out to men. This truth will bring in new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, which means a new church and a new state. Jesus was the man who, nineteen hundred years ago, brought in the Piscatorial or Fish age, as it was called. He chose fisherman for his Disciples, and said he would make them fishers of men. The sign for the age was Pisces—fishes, as the almanac indicated down to 1839. The signs are not now given because the constellations lap, as do the ages. When we get beyond the period of the lap, the sign for the dispensation to come will be Aquarius—the man with a pitcher of water.

There was a good reason why the closing age was called the fish age. Jesus was the ripened fruit of the Tree of Lives spoken of in Revelation. Only ripe fruit can propagate its kind, from itself. This ripened fruit was virginal, having—like the Adamic race—the two sex principles in one form. Its propagation, like that of choice grafted fruit, is not the ordinary seedling process, but depends upon the insertion of a germ of the higher, perfect life into the circulation of a seedling of the lower quality. Jesus said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." In pursuance of this promise, after His translation, which was his being borne across, as the word signifies, from the form of matter to that of spirit—the Holy Ghost, which was the divine Seed, this Spirit—the Comforter which he said he would send them, entered them, being both the Father and the Son, and made its abode with them, forming conjunction with their spirits. Peter calls this a begetting-again by the Spirit for a birth of the body, which Paul was anxiously awaiting, when "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality."

Because of its fecundity the fish is the symbol of proliferation, hence the dispensation in which this higher (divine) Seed would be generated, or regenerated from the seed generated during the Jewish age, was fitly called the fish age. The Disciples of the divine Man, God manifest in the flesh, "fulness of the Godhead bodily," whom Paul preached to the heathen Athenians as the God who made heaven and earth and all that in them is, appropriately taking the first letters of the Greek appellations given to him, which spelled the Greek word for fish, called themselves fishes. Corresponding to and confirming all this, was the fact that during the whole dispensation the sign in the physical heavens has been Pisces—fishes, and the time of the age has been measured by the precessional movement through the sign Pisces. If the sign Pisces in the physical heavens has, for the dispensation now ending, proclaimed the advent of the divine Man who, in the beginning of the age, established the human institutions of the age, now that they have become wholly corrupt, as He warned the world that they would, now that the age-long sign of the Christian age is disappearing, it seems to us it behooves the wise watcher for the signs of the times to consider carefully what is to follow.

The sign that Jesus really gave of the time of his coming again, is already becoming the sign in the physical heavens, and signifies that the divine Man—commissioned of God to establish the new institutions of the new age of Aquarius, is already in earth, as Jesus promised that he would be. At the beginning of the fish age Jesus was born. At the beginning of the Aquarian age, which was 1839, the man bearing a pitcher of water, was born. The Jewish age did not fully end till after the destruction of Jerusalem. It was subsequent to that that the power of Christ in the outside world began to be felt, and to subdue the world. At a time corresponding to that of the destruction of Jerusalem—and preceded by like tragic events, though world-wide in their scope—will come the full end of the Christian age, the passing away of the old heavens and old earth with a great noise, and the coming of new heavens and a new earth—a new church and a new state, wherein dwelleth righteousness—little of which yet remains in the earth.

When the divine Man of the ages came before, he was born holy that he might be the divine Seed. When He went away, he went into the sinful humanity as the divine Seed, and became sin that he might die in it in order to reproduction. When He comes again he will come out of the humanity, but, like other men, will be born in sin and shapen in iniquity, so that he will have to "overcome" in order that God may write his "new Name" upon him. In the beginning of every age He has two comings; the first, by reincarnation, as a man who comes "as a thief in the night," not known to the men who meet him, like Jesus; but after he has disappeared they find that the things in which they trusted are somehow gone, and the conditions of their supposed prosperity are no more. His second coming in the beginning of the Christian age was in the form of Holy Ghost, the Comforter, whom people vainly imagine they have now, but the spirit they have now works in just the opposite manner from that Spirit, making millionaires instead of communists. That Spirit, being seed, had to die as Jesus explained.

In this age His second coming will be in the "clouds of heaven," not in the clouds of earth. In the Bible the wicked are said to be clouds without water. The righteous, then, would be clouds with water. Water symbolizes true science—the truth. The "clouds of heaven," then, will be the Sons of God, whom John saw on Mount Zion, the 144,000—the product of the Seed which Jesus was and which he sowed in the beginning of the Christian age. These will constitute the resurrection of the dead—the kingdom of God in earth, for the coming of which Jesus taught us to pray. They will constitute the government of the new, the Aquarian age, whose sign is already taking its place in the physical heavens. The wise man will be looking for it and will understand what it means.

The destruction of the lust of money, or the accumulation of wealth, is the point upon which all forces of attack must be concentrated.

Before the true Brotherhood can be manifest and the divine kingdom set up, there must be a universal preparation of heart.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE RESEARCHES of geology discover the remains of mysterious forms of organic life. The bones of a dinosaur were recently unearthed in Colorado. These massive skeletons present many scientific problems, solved by the application of the laws of involution and evolution. Certain types of animal existence, corresponding to the qualities predominant in one age, become extinct. They suddenly reappear in a succeeding age, being generated from the crossing of common existing types, because their life has been involved or infolded in the animal life of the past. The new animal is a miracle, a marvel. It seems to have no parentage, for there is nothing like it in the earth, yet it is the product of an implantation derived from the species that became extinct. The spirit of the lost genus was absorbed by the animal kingdom, to come again in the order of cyclic development. The understanding of this principle settles the whole question of the "missing link" which has baffled inquiry so long. Thus Koreshan Science by the enunciation of simple axioms, demonstrates cosmic harmony. This is but the application in a lower domain of the law of the generation of Jesus Christ. The same law which bridges the gulf between the various kingdoms—animal, human, and divine, also bridges the gulf between the different genera, and accounts for the origin of species. Natural selection and environment are not adequate to explain the radical divergence of animal types, without the intervention of the law of the conservation and heaping up of energy operative in involution. All the researches of anthropology have been taxed to the utmost in searching for pre historic man. As a result of long investigation, paleontologists, geologists, and anthropologists concur in pointing to the cave dweller. They show him with his brute instincts, his rude weapons, and his coverings of skin, among the glaciers with the cave bear and the mammoth for his companions. They say that he knew no god, no laws of societal grouping; whether he had a language is problematical. The picture is unattractive and it stands in striking contrast with that which Koreshan Science has drawn from the same subject. It goes back to the golden age for pre-historic man and depicts him in the nobility of the Sons of God, the crown and glory of creation. He is there surrounded by a civilization which mocks the splendor of the Cæsars; order reigns in earth and art has reached a development exceeding what is known or thought today.

Some valuable diagrams and statistics appear in the July Cosmopolitan, relative to the increase of population among the various nations. The writer, Mr. J. Holt Schooling, estimates that according to the rate of growth during the nineteenth century, which he says has been that of one person per hundred a year, it will be necessary, three centuries and a half hence, to hang out a sign that the world is full. In the year 2250, there will be at that ratio, one thousand persons to every square mile of land in the earth. It is pertinent in this connection to forecast the future and consider the laws which govern proliferation. The science of being declares that an equilibrium must be maintained between the natural and the spiritual worlds through the agency of the great law of re-embodiment. The principle of chastity is the restraining factor which will act to prevent the continuance of the present rate of increase in population. It is by means of this principle that reciprocal action between center and circumference is sustained. The greater number of persons there are in the natural world, the harder the conditions of life. At the close of the iron age, while the sign is in the constellation Pisces, the maximum is reached. The doctrine of chastity, which has thus far been confined to isolated communities, is now proclaimed to the whole world, preparatory to the consummation of human destiny and the climax of Deific replenishment. All will hear this doctrine, but only those who are ready to culminate from the stages of human progression into arch-natural life will accept and apply it in the highest degree. The application of this principle is destined to initiate the Golden Age, during which it is supremely manifest in the neuter genus, exalted above the possibility of impurity, and in many lower orders and degrees. The restraints of chastity on the lower plane lead to the joys of divine conjunction. God takes the initiative in every sacrifice. Supreme love brings Him to sacrifice the delights of innocence in the marriage of love and wisdom, in order to plant himself as the seed of chastity in the race. He only asks humanity to follow him in the sacrifice of the marital state on the lower plane, for a brief period in order that it may enter into biunity, the perfect wedlock of the heavenly state.

The enormous growth of American capital testifies not only to the shrewdness and enterprise of our merchants, but it shows where the inverted principle of accumulation is located. If the money power is centralized here in the United States, this in turn indicates the point where the opposite pole, the wealth of divine truth, must be located. The effect of the anti clerical movement in Europe will be to transfer the center of religious agitation to America. The moment that the French anti association's bill, directed against Catholic orders, was passed, the tide of ecclesiastical monasticism began to set toward this country. The bill forbids the existence of any association whose head or superior officer resides abroad. The present feeling against the church in Spain, Portugal, Italy, Austria, and several other countries, which has been christened the "Los von Rom" or away from Rome movement, is so strong as to be practically revolutionary. The cordial relations between the Pope and the Administration at Washington, and his conciliatory policy toward American workmen tend to draw hither Catholic subjects of persecution. The death struggle of the Papacy, the war between labor and capital, and the battle between science and error will take place in the chosen land set apart for the accomplishment of the greatest events of human and divine history. The future of America is assured. It will be more glorious than any forecast which has yet been made outside of sacred prophecies.

From time to time distinguished foreigners have visited America and have published their impressions of the country. Most of these reports have been superficial or inspired by national bias. Too often these visitors come but to verify preconceived opinions. Mr. Frederick Harrison, however, has apprehended the wonderful assimilating power of the United States. His comments upon the rapidity with which the native population absorbs and incorporates foreign elements are just. It is time that in spite of the constant influx from every quarter of the earth, in the second or third generation "all exotic differences are merged." There is a reason for this ingathering which neither Mr. Harrison nor the world at large has apprehended. America is destined to be the center of a degree of progress and civilization defined by the "coming of the Lord," and it is written that unto Him shall be gathered all nations. This prophecy is to be fulfilled in various degrees, and the drift of immigration toward our shores is one of the signs of its speedy accomplishment. "America for Americans" may be our watchword, but the Anglo-Saxon people is the product of a process of race infiltration which began with the dispersion of the twelve tribes and has been going on through the ages. All the nations of the earth are food for the American race, and that in turn is food for the Gods. One of the functions of the United States is that of assimilation.

Why does Koreshan literature adopt a Latinized vocabulary? Why do Latin and Greek derivatives preponderate over Anglo-Saxon in the writings of the Founder of Koreshanity? Obviously for the reason that most scientific inventors resort to the classics for their nomenclature—because these languages furnish greater exactitude and concision of statement. The spirit of the Latin race has passed over to the Anglo-Saxon people and become our letter. The essence of that spirit is multum in parvo. By the use of verb-formations such as the term responsibility, we incorporate the vitality of the past, the verb being the living principle of speech. The letter killeth. The application of Koreshan doctrine means the destruction of the lower tendencies in man's nature, through the appropriation of spiritual entities from the past gathered into one nucleus and transformed to immortal flesh. Hence the logical necessity for a corresponding terminology in inditing the doctrines of life.

While the Koreshan attitude is that of vigorous and determined opposition to every species of error, its sentiment toward humanity has no savor of contempt. The multiplication of sects, creeds, false prophets, and delusions is an index to the mental distress of the race, and distress inspires divine compassion. Jesus saw the multitudes that they were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd. Men need a leader when every bond of unity is broken; when dissent has invaded the church, and disruption threatens the state. This leader must bring essential evidence of his commission in the shape of a definitely structured system of science applicable to every domain of life, the whole complexity resting upon a simple premise, mathematically and mechanically demonstrated. Koreshanity offers such a system and points to such a leader.

The recurrence of the national anniversary is marked this year by the inauguration of civil government in the Philippines. The United States has extended its jurisdiction over another people of a different race, and it is bound by every law of national honor to fulfil in righteousness the obligations which it has assumed. The Filipinos are our dependents, and it rests with us whether they become intelligent and prosperous or the victims of political oppression. Is there moral stamina enough in the present Administration to be true to its engagements? Will it resist the temptations to which England succumbed in dealing with her territorial dependencies?

One of the most notable items in the celebration of Independence day was the arrival of J. Pierpont Morgan and a brace of millionaires on the steamer Deutschland. Wealth is power as society is organized. The millionaire has made himself independent of his fellows by robbing the laboring people of their birthright. It was eminently fitting that the only representatives of what now constitutes American independence should come back to their native land July 4. The time is near when a new national holiday will be instituted, and America will celebrate the interdependence of all men, instead of a farcical display of liberty and justice.

A writer in the current issue of the Arena, mentions an establishment in one of the Eastern States where, a few years ago, women were paid thirty-six cents a dozen for making shirts, and it was one of the rules that the day's labor should open and close with prayer. This is a good illustration of the extent to which the doctrine of faith without works has deceived even the elect. The whole church has embraced it so thoroughly that it does not see the incongruity of words without works.

Inquiry in the realm of causation brings proof of the Koreshan axiom: Whatever is, is necessary. This must be carefully distinguished from the fatalistic notion that whatever is, is right. Various forms of erroneous belief must exist, not because they embody fragments of truth, but in consequence of the law of polar opposites.

An influx from the hells if faced and conquered is succeeded by the heavenly vision. After his temptation in the wilderness, there appeared angels ministering unto the Son of man.

Shallow minds distort the image of greatness until it becomes as grotesque as the human countenance reflected from a concave lens of metal.

Glacial epochs correspond to the crystallization of truth into mathematical shapes or doctrines.

Interdependence of Natural Kingdoms.

How does the spirit of the animal get into the human kingdom?—DR. W. J. T.

When you have fully mastered the thought that there is but one substance in the universe; that variety embraces modifications of that one substance; that matter (atom, molecule, or mass) is a condition of substance which was once spirit, and is capable of being again converted to spirit, then you may begin to comprehend some of the channels through which animal spirit enters into and is transformed to human life. The spirit of the human or animal mind is let down into, and forms the atoms of matter which go to make up the animal body.

Human life is constantly in process of appropriating the life of the animal kingdom as food, consequently the spirit of the animal gets into the human kingdom somewhat as the spirit of the sun gets into vegetable life,—by natural attraction and assimilation.

If you can grasp the law or principle of transmutation (convertibility of energy to matter and matter to energy), you may readily understand at least this one channel of the transmission of the animal to human life. This is not all; the spirit passes over by influx. That part of the affectional nature of animal life attracted toward the human, is absorbed by the law of natural attraction to the human.

The transition of animal life to human life is accompanied also by modification of quality, for animal quality is transited to human quality.

Human life may become of so low a grade as to have a greater attraction toward the animal than the human, as in the recorded case of the man in the country of the Gadarenes. The evil spirits in the man besought the Lord that he send them not away into the deep, but that they be permitted to enter a herd of swine. He drove them out of the man and they entered the swine. This is a case where the opposite law was operative.

Human spirit is as continuously flowing into animal life, as animal spirit is continuously flowing into human life.—KORESH.

Relation of Thought and Thinker.

What is the relation of a thought to the thinker, and the distinction between them? I understand you to teach that a thought is a living entity, and that every mind is an aggregation of thoughts.—G. F. H., Marshall, Texas.

The relation between an entity in the subjective world and the brain which it inhabits is a reciprocal one, whose specific character depends upon the degree of development represented by both. It corresponds to that which each cell of the body bears to the whole organism, varying according to its location in any part, and the function of that part; it also corresponds to the relationship between each person,—man or woman, in the divided state of ordinary humanity—and the whole mass of human life. This is a cellular universe, and the law of analogy extends to every domain. The laws of attraction and repulsion operate to determine the habitat of every entity, and the duration of its association with the particular brain with which it forms conjunction. It may act upon the man with strong impulsions, which he will follow or resist according to the principles just defined.—LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

Faithfulness Unto Death.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I shall be grateful if you will give me an exposition of Rev. ii: 10.—INQUIRER.

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." This passage is erroneously cited in support of the belief that immortality is to be reached through physical death. It refers to the death of what St. Paul calls the "old man"—that is, to the voluntary surrender of the sensual nature through the substitution of higher thoughts and aspirations. This is an essential factor in the attainment of immortal life. By patient continuance in well doing, the old man with his deeds, or the old proprium, is put off and the point of conjunctive unity with God through theocrasis is reached. When a man is entirely dead, when all the evil tendencies in his nature are eradicated, he straightway becomes alive.—LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

Another Sign of Prosperity.

A showman in Indiana who found that his cotton advertising signs were taken by a poor woman, whose husband, working for 75 cents for ten hours a day in a factory, could not provide her children with clothing, has since been wondering with the rest of us what more untruthful device than that of prosperity the politicians have to spring on a confiding public.—Social Democratic Herald.

Modern Society's Shams.

The Prevailing Pretenses of Reformers and Religionists; Hypocrisy of the Would-be Wealthy.

A friend of the writer said years ago: "The worst enemies of modern progress are not the wealthy as much as the would-be wealthy." By modern progress he did not mean our present industrial system or anything of the kind, but one which should embody radical concepts of freedom and ethics for all, one which should give to every child of God a full opportunity for the development of a full manhood, one which should not keep the bulk of humanity in bondage to any set of people, however fine and polished in their personal dealings, however honest in their individual life, because what can be in God's eyes the value of individual honesty as long as we keep a dishonest industrial system in full bloom, perverting the media in which we all have to live? And the larger we make the circle of honest individual people in a given nation which refuses to extend honesty to all industrial relations, but prefers to intensify all that is wrong there, the greater the force for evil in its most fatal manifestation, in wrong enactments, in vicious, selfish legislation.

Besides the wealthy and would be wealthy, as obstacles to all healthy progress, we have a large number of people intensely attached to their little patch of wealth, or larger wages or salary or somewhat more important position than the many below. They are afraid to lose that, to be dislodged from their little higher pedestal where they can play the actors on a vaster theater, where they have a few more admirers, where they can pose as fellows of a higher grade, built up with better clay and so with more chances to be prominent in the life beyond, as they have been in the life below. Spiritual greed on top of material greed! That is perhaps one of the dreadfully low moral ideals that yet pervade humanity today, inherited from heathen religions and which actually make modern Christianity an out and out heathenish Christianity, the antithesis of that of Christ, essentially distinct from it in all moral and ethical aspects anyhow, the most important of any religion that may claim to evolve joy and manhood.

As a matter of actual fact the bottom principles of our philosophy of life, backed by our choice people, those who have from time immemorial converted nations into dens of iniquity, have always claimed that the perpetuation of evil, and hence that of social and individual deformities, is to be the order of the day for a long, long period of human growth. That was already the doctrine of the ruling classes in India when Jesus, the grand reformer, told them, "Either make the tree good and his fruit good, or make the tree corrupt and his fruit corrupt." Jesus did not accept the diabolic conception of our fine teachers about any social organization partially good and partially bad deserving some respect from sensible, honest men. Such a corrupt social tree as that of today deserves nothing but contempt. It must necessarily be still more corrupt than that of 19 centuries ago repudiated by Jesus because evil is bound to grow as long as it is allowed to live, since the law of life, for good or evil, is a law of growth. The sins of our old age are more contemptible than those of youth because of our greater experience, knowledge, and opportunities to suppress evil. The same applies to every old organized society and hence to the organized greed we may see fit to develop, promote, stand by or refuse to attack, to hate, to detest. And we love evil if we don't hate it and fail to do our best to kill it in any form it may appear.

One of the factors that make our civilization stand self condemned is the existence of classes and masses, as distinct as ever, if not more so; also that eternal exclamation of how to save the masses, how to convert them, how to rescue them from their own bad habits, and, as the churches, with all their wealth and power, acknowledge their incapacity in that direction, we have to have pauper churches, called missions, and there again we hear of prayers to God to save and convert the masses! Well, if the rich churches had at least converted the classes, the masses would have long ago been converted too. Instead of that we find that the classes, with their love for class legislation, are the greatest obstacle to the establishment of equity in industrial life and insist upon the worst laws through which most wealth may be rapidly shifted from those who produce it to those who don't.

All modern ideals rest on the principle of how to get $5, $10, $50, $100, from the general fund of wealth for every dollar we may contribute to that fund. And how often some contribute nothing while getting in five or ten years the wealth that the best worker could not produce and save in 10,000 years of steady work under the best conditions! And this is considered as correct by most of our religious and civil teachers, with the classes back of them, they all hating the economic concept of "equal rights to all," which is simply the golden rule applied to social life, just where its absence is most fatal.—JOSE GROES, in The Toiler.

Hours and Wages.

A Hartford Daily Discusses the Difficulties of the Industrial World.

In the great labor strike for a shorter workday, a Hartford manufacturer and official who shut out all his employes on the opening day of the struggle, gave his case plainly away in an interview regarding the situation, when acknowledging that shorter hours were bound to come and there should be no objection to them, and then the wages would have to be advanced provided they remained at the same rate per hour as at present, because the men couldn't live on less than they are now receiving. Here are the words as found in the report of the interview:

"But after the nine-hour day the same pay would, naturally follow in course of time, as the men would have to have about the same money to live on as when working ten hours."

Exactly. This is the logic of the situation. And, being so, isn't it somewhat inconsistent to object to the demand for "ten hours' pay for nine hours' work," as the thought is phrased? If the men will have to have about the same money to live on while working only nine hours a day as they did when working ten, where is the logic in denying them that amount, as they must live in order to be able to work?

How much simpler the matter would appear if the question were only divided! First, let the hours of labor be settled. Is or is not nine hours for a day's work sufficient? It is generally so conceded, and we are told by those who have made a study of the subject, that even four hours' labor, if all would work who can, are sufficient to give to the world all the necessities and luxuries of life. Now, that part of the problem settled, the next question is simply as to the reward in dollars and cents that that day's labor is entitled to. And without at all going into the depths of the question, it ought to be self-evident that he who performs the day's labor is at least entitled to a decent and comfortable living, and his share of the dollars and cents involved ought to be sufficient to guarantee him as much.

So when we speak of ten hours' pay for nine hours' work, we only befuddle the question. There is no such incongruity in the demand, for there is no such thing in existence as an absolute "ten hours' pay." The ten hours' pay of one man may be one thing, the ten hours' pay of another vastly different. And with the same man it may be one amount today and another tomorrow.

But the immediate question involved is the difficulty of the employers adjusting prices so as to be able to meet what they regard as increased cost of product. This may be a reality in some cases, but not in all. Even were it so, it is a matter for the employers to see to, and not for the men to take into consideration. It is entirely out of the latter's jurisdiction. However, even within the employers' own immediate confines, can't the matter be adjusted to some extent? Won't the salaries of some of the officials bear a little modification? If $2 or $3 a day is considered sufficient recompense for the man who works with head and hands to produce the product that brings the dollars and cents to all concerned, why must the man who works with head alone be considered as deserving from 2 to 20 times as much? Or, in other words, if $5,000, $10,000, $20,000, or $30,000 a year is only sufficient for a decent and comfortable living for one man, how are the others to get along on the comparatively insignificant amount first referred to?

Surely the wage question and salary question are all wrong, from beginning to end. And the industrial system at the bottom of it must be all wrong too. It is the basic cause of nearly all the sin and suffering in the civilized world, if the word "civilized" can be properly used in this connection. It begets the pauper and the millionaire, the thief, the drunkard, and the prostitute. It has millions of people forever on the ragged edge of suspense for the morrow that the few may roll and rule in luxury if not riot in dissipation. It has the great majority of humanity ever in trouble for the want of enough, while the few are in trouble because of having too much. There can be no lasting peace and happiness in the world until something better takes its place as the basic structure of our civilization.—Hartford Examiner.

Another Edition Ready.

The Fourth Edition of the Cellular Cosmogony Completed and Ready for all Orders.

We are glad to announce that after some delay, a new edition of THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY is just off the press. The Guiding Star Publishing House is now able to fill all orders for this book, for which there is great demand. A new chapter by KORESH has been added in the form of an Addendum, illustrating some simple principles of geolinear and distal foreshortening, which greatly enhances the value of the work.

This new edition affords all our friends and propagandists opportunity for renewed efforts in the work of getting Koresan Universology before the people. Thousands of COSMOGONIES are already distributed throughout America and Europe—and yet it is only the beginning of the great conflict and contest of systems. Let further and numerous orders give the great work another impetus in the direction of ultimate success and triumph.—EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.

The Stars and Stripes.

A Short History of the Origin and Development of the American Flag.

Of course, every patriotic American flings the banner to the breeze on the Fourth of July and proceeds to make a great deal of noise about it. It seems to him the most beautiful banner, the most appropriate emblem in the world. In this place it is appropriate to recall the events that led up to the adoption of this flag. We take the following from the St. Louis Republic:

The first flag was not of the present design. After the battle of Bunker Hill, in the months when Washington was trying to gain recruits to an army that suffered for "the want of wood, barracks, and blankets," the necessity for a distinctive banner became apparent. Yet the courage required to fling the furls of a new flag to the breeze over the rude entrenchments that hemmed in Boston, was of a superior sort. The army was at that time one of little more than protest. The St. George banner was beloved by all of the soldiers, though the deeds in its name were hated. So, when, January 1, 1776, the banner of the American colonies was placed above the troops, it was not yet spangled with stars, but showed thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, in the field, and the united red and white crosses of St. George and St. Andrews on a blue ground in the corner.

It was not until June 14, 1777, that the flag of the United States was formally adopted by Congress. Conditions had changed, and the allegiance to the mother country was thrown off. By the resolution of Congress, the law decreed "that the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternately red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white, in a blue field, representing a new constellation."

An auspicious event marked the first unfurling of the new flag. Washington had been hovering on the flanks of Lord Howe's army in New Jersey. Though Howe's army was twice that of the colonies, there was much discontent because Washington did not see fit to brave a pitched battle. Samuel Adams declared that he could not see the benefits from a "Fabian war in America." To all these complaints, Washington only replied that he had one fixed purpose in view, and that he would try to accomplish that purpose according to his judgment.

Events justified him. May 28 he moved from Morristown to Middlebrook with his 7,500 men, only nine miles from Howe. Nearly a month was taken up with skirmishes which harassed the British so that on June 30 Howe evacuated New Jersey, "never again to step on its soil," as the historian says.

Proper enough occasion for rejoicing. Congress led in the celebration in Philadelphia. Bells were rung and the boats put on gala decorations. For the first time the new flag was unfurled amid the acclamations of the happy people. The "new constellation" had a glorious christening. From that time on, the old St. George and St. Andrew banner was discarded, and the flag remained as at present, with only the addition of stars that added luster to the Union.—Word and Works.

The Earth a Hollow Shell.

Current Newspaper Comment Regarding the Progress of the Koreshan Cosmogony.

Many of our readers will remember Dr. Teed, whose colony of Koreshans still exists in Lee county, and will be interested to know that his peculiar theories on astronomy are engaging the attention of the scientific world. We give herewith the following editorial from the Times-Sun, a Denver daily, of last week.

"Considerable space is given in the Literary Digest to an illustrated discussion of the theory of Dr. Cyrus R. Teed, of Chicago, that the earth is laid out on the inside of a hollow shell, which contains the solar system in all its detail. Dr. Teed's theory is a philosophical piece of occultism [Not true; Koreshanity is a system of Science, and contains no occultism or mysticism—ED. SWORD] if a term may be coined, and bears much resemblance to the ancient Hebrew conception of the world. The revival of this old theory has created great interest in scientific circles, and has advanced from its once faddette stage to a basis of much reason, although scientists are not yet prepared to admit that there is anything either new or reasonable in it, even as propounded by Dr. Teed. The revived theory is based on an occult interpretation of the Bible. Its chief points are that the whole universe is a stationary hollow cell only 8,000 miles in diameter, the map being laid out on the inside instead of on the outside of the shell, so that the people of New York, for instance, might look across to the people in Europe but for the intervening mass of clouds, sun, moon, planets, and stars which form the inner nucleus of the shell, less than 4,000 miles away. All life is cellular, according to this theory, beginning with the protozoa and ending with the universal cell, which latter theory possesses great value in the minds of some thinkers."

However the earth may be constructed, its revolutions, if it revolves, or its stationary condition, if it remains stationary, are not dependent, fortunately, upon the correctness of theories. It's a natural condition, and so long as the shell doesn't crush itself with its weight, we may all be reasonably happy in the general thought that beefsteak is not a luxury as yet.—Remarks and quotation clipped from The Champion, Arcadia, Fla.

Reading the Flaming Sword.

A Western Editor Studies Koreshanity and Battles with the Koreshan Vocabulary.

The editor of Harmony has been reading THE FLAMING SWORD, and from it has learned that there is such a thing as involution—the co-ordinate of evolution; but he does not yet comprehend the fact that the highest involution occurs in humanity;—that such an involution is the world of man involved in the natural. The involved product of humanity is the seed or Messiah, the personality of Deity.—THE FLAMING SWORD.

Yes; we have been reading THE FLAMING SWORD for several months, and do not hesitate to pronounce its pre-eminence as a literary production over all publications of that character; and as a promulgator of new ideas, culminating in a philosophy called Koreshanity, it caps the climax. We admit that we are not always able to understand Koreshanity and its "highfalutin" terminology, but are pegging away at its theories the best we know how, and find many good points suitable for digestion, and some not so good or well founded; but we are all liable to make mistakes—none infallible. But how will our readers be able to know whether we make a mistake or not? Guess at it, eh?

However, we will not admit having learned the doctrine of involution from THE FLAMING SWORD, for that is no new theory. It is as old as the pyramids which stand as witnesses to all coming generations, that involution and evolution are the true processes of creation, and that the pyramid builders understood and practiced the highest type of occultism ever obtained by man. KORESH, please give us something a little more comeatable. Humanity today is composed of plain, common, every-day, nineteenth-century people. The most progressive ones we advise to subscribe for THE FLAMING SWORD, and commence cracking nuts. It is issued once a week, at $1.00 a year. Address 313-17 Englewood Avenue, Chicago, Ill.—Harmony, Ponca City, Okl.

Tyranny of the Doctors.

Editor of Religious Journal Sees Fraud and Misrepresentation in the Medical Profession.

The so called divine healer, John Alexander Dowie, is proving himself to be more than a match for the Chicago newspapers, judges, juries, and doctors, all of whom have been waging a relentless war upon the presumptuous modern "Elijah." The doctors seem to be in the lead in the persecution, and the others are their willing tools; and all of them ought to know that of all the people in the land to persecute faith-healers, the doctors should come in last. So much power has been placed in the hands of the doctors, and in some quarters they have become so presumptive and tyrannical, that there is springing up all over the country a sort of secret resentment against the medical profession. To some extent this may be unjust, but the mistakes our doctors themselves have made have brought this sentiment about.

It is too generally conceded that the practice of medicine is mainly, or largely a matter of guess-work, for the doctors to ask that the people shall always appeal to them in times of affliction. We could very easily and readily grant that Mr. Dowie is a colossal fraud, which we do, and yet that does not prevent us from saying there are also colossal frauds in the practice of medicine. There is no infallibility in either case, and for that reason there should be no extravagant assumption in either case. No doubt medicine has been beneficial in saving life in many cases, but it has hastened death in many more. So also the faith-healer has relieved disease through his manipulations, and others have died under his hand, for whom medicine might have brought relief. We do not believe in Dowie, nor do we believe in all the doctors claim for themselves. Use common sense about health, is our rule.—Baptist Flag.

Castor Oil in the Social Glass.

Mr. Perry was an old Southern gentleman, exceedingly polite. He would go out of his way at any time to avoid offending a neighbor or a friend. One day, a neighbor met him on the street with "Hallo, Mr. Perry; I was just going in to get a drink. Come in, and take something."

"Thank you, Mr.—, I don't care for anything," was the answer.

"But come in and take something, just for sociability's sake."

"Now I want to be sociable; but I can't drink with you."

"All right if you don't want to be sociable, I'll go without drinking," growled the friend, and he silently walked along in the direction in which Mr. Perry was traveling.

Presently, the pair drew near a drug store, when Mr. Perry broke out with, "Mr.—, I'm not feeling at all well today, and I think I'll go in this drug store and get some castor-oil. Won't you join me?"

"What? a dose of castor-oil?"

"Yes."

"Now; I hate the stuff," saying which a chill went over the man as visible in its effects to Mr. Perry as if the ague had seized him on the street.

"But I want you to take a glass of oil with me just to be sociable, you know."

The friend still refused, when Mr. Perry said:

"Your sociable whiskey is just as distasteful to me as my sociable oil is to you. Don't you think I've as much reason to be offended with you as you have with me?"

The pair heartily shook hands, the dialogue was circulated in Covington, and Mr. Perry was never invited to drink again.—Courier-Journal.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

Saturday Evening Post.—Twenty-five years ago, when "Elbow Room" and "Out of the Hurly-Burly" were the successes of the day, Max Adeler suddenly ceased writing. For a quarter of a century he was proof against the blandishments of editors, but within a few weeks he has completed a new series of humorous stories which show him at his best. Tales of Old Turley, which will appear in early numbers of The Saturday Evening Post, are wonderfully droll stories of the quaint characters in an old-fashioned country town before the war. Local politics, school committee fights, church squabbles, and women's clubs lend themselves admirably to Max Adeler's humorous touch, and form the basis of some of the cleverest stories that have been written for many a day.

New Departments

Bureau of Equitable Commerce, of the Korshan Unity.

Under the Korshan System of Co-operation, the cost of production is reduced to the minimum; and we offer to our friends more goods and more work for a given sum of money than can be obtained in the competitive world. We have established four new departments to our work. Orders promptly filled by mail or express. Correspondence and patronage solicited.

Our High-Grade, Hand-Finished Razor Strope.

A good strop is indispensable to one that uses a razor. A good razor is of little use unless it has a fine edge, and that cannot be obtained in any other way than with a good strop and a knowledge of how to use the same and keep it in condition. A strop in poor shape means a razor in poor condition. Full directions with every strop.

We manufacture our celebrated High-Grade Razor Strope, the best strope manufactured. If you shave, you need one; you would be delighted with one of these. The prices are low considering the superior quality of the goods and workmanship.

Single, horse-hide, 50c. Double swing shell and canvas, several grades from 75c to $1.25. Extra fine material and finish, 1.50. Packed in neat box. Also strope at 10c., 25c., and 40c.—send 8c. for postage on orders less than 50c. Mail orders a specialty.

Jewelry Department.

Superintended by a practical jeweler and watchmaker. Clocks, watches, and jewelry at wholesale prices. Example: Serviceable American watch, good timekeeper, 8.50. Improved alarm clock, rotary hammer, $1.00; postpaid. Watch repairing a specialty. Watches repaired and returned in good condition; by mail, for 1.00. Extra charge only in case of serious breakage. All work guaranteed.

Department of Electricity.

This department is in charge of a practical electrician. Orders filled for all kinds of electrical supplies: Telephones, telegraph instruments, doorbells, switches, novelties, learners' instruments, batteries, dynamos, lamps of all voltages, amperemeters, wires of all sizes, batteries and static machines for medical purposes, etc. All kinds of electrical work done. Medical batteries repaired; magnets and armatures rewound. All work guaranteed. Prices retail and wholesale, given on application. Watch for "our prices" in comparison with the regular prices on articles.

A good family Medical Battery is very useful. We will send you a first-class Battery, consisting of 1 dry battery; 1 sponge; 1 foot-plate; and electrodes, for only $7.50. Price, by others, $10.00.

Musical Department.

Supplies all kinds of musical merchandise, at inside prices—for less than can be obtained from your local dealer. Examples: Fine Mandolin or Guitar strings, 25 cents per set; fine Violin strings, 50 cents per set. Mandolins and Guitars made to order. First-class repairing—all instruments. Mail orders a specialty.

The Literature of Koreshanity

Uncovers the Mystery of Ages.

THE LIBRARY of the Koreshan System contains brief expositions of the Universology of KORESH, in its unique interpretation of the Laws, Phenomena, Forms, and Relations of Being and Existence, and in the scientific revelation of the character of God and Man and their relations. This Unique Literature is specially adapted to meet the demands of the truth-seeker and to satisfy the commendable curiosity of the modern mind.

A glimpse of Koreshan Universology, in its application to human thought and life, preparatory to the establishment of the Social Theocratic System, called the Kingdom of God, may be obtained by a careful study of fundamental principles.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

The Koreshan Science of Alchemy.

Part II.

Non-Vital Alchemy or the Physics of the Alchemico-Organic World; the Physical Universe and its Substances of Energy and Matter; Planes of Gravity and Source of Lunar Energy.

NON-VITAL ALCHEMY relates to that field of activities including the metastasis of all substance, whether included in the field of energy or in the field of matter. Every quality and manifestation of those phases of substance called energy, is convertible to every other quality. In other words, every energy is convertible to every other energy; every energy is convertible to matter, and every form of matter is convertible to every other form. No energy can be converted to energy of another quality except through the medium of matter; hence to convert electricity to magnetism, it must first be converted to matter, and vice versa. This is true of every energy. No atom of matter can be converted to another quality of matter except through its conversion to some quality of energy. We call the attention of the reader to the foregoing axioms more especially because, in the consideration of vital alchemy later on, the application of the principle of correspondent analogy will enable the student of the Koreshan System to so apply these principles of the alchemic law as to observe the real purpose for which the study of alchemy is pursued.

The form of the alchemico-organic cosmos is a sphere, with center and circumference; we mean the form of the so called physical universe. It is composed of the complex shell or rind, with its metallic and mineral laminæ or plates; there are twelve of these—seven of the former and five of the latter. These laminæ comprise the outermost rind of the system. Within these are the superimposed geologic strata, and the waters of the earth's surface. Within these are the atmospheres, and, central to the atmospheres, the astral nucleus. This will be found illustrated in other pages of Koreshan literature. Between this astral center and its circumference there is a constant efferent and afferent flow of energy. This energy is as complex as the variety of matter entering into combustion to produce it. This energy (substance, equally with matter) has two primary sources or origins, namely, the positive energies originating at the circumference—the negative limitation, and the negative energies originating at the center—the positive limitation. This is the substance that the so called scientist denominates luminous ether. Its existence depends upon the reciprocal activity of the two extremes of relation; namely, the center and circumference of the universe.

Cosmic Non-Vital Alchemic Solution in General.

The term non-vital, as here employed, is merely relative, for nothing exists that does not embrace some degree of vitality. Every atom of matter is deposited from energy, and is the continent of energy. Non-vital energy is derived from vital energy; non-vital force is the product, indirectly, of mental force. The lowest form and quality of material substance were once the spiritual energy of the highest mind. Mind is constantly active; through its activity it is subject to constant waste, for which there is a perpetual supply. In the friction of mental activity the substance of the mental energy is precipitated, and through modifications is let down through every degree of alchemic solution, from mental qualities to corresponding non-vital qualities of alchemic solution, to the non-vital alchemic elements.

The stratum of gold comprising the circumference of the shell, rind, or pediment of the cosmic ovum, was once energy or alchemic solution of the vital and mental quality. The element of gold, like all others of the seven primary strata, is constantly yielding its alchemic solution to the common ether, while at the same time it is receiving in deposition atoms of matter precipitated from the alchemic solution as it flows from center to circumference.

Alchemic radiation is not unbroken in its solvent currents. The radiations of alchemic energy from the center to the circumference of the cosmic form flow in many tensions or degrees of tenuity. They have termini and inchoations as they proceed outward toward circumferences. An alchemic ray of a given tension belonging to a specific dimension, in passing through atmospheres, fluids, crusts, and laminæ, meets with the resistance offered by each of these material deposits of coördinate character, and the ray is modified to suit the condition of atmosphere, fluid, crust, and lamina, as it proceeds; but notwithstanding this fact, the picture planted at the initiation of the ray is projected through all the modifications of the ray, and planted upon the outermost projection as perfectly at the terminal as it obtains at its inchoation.

The laws which govern radiations also govern subtensions. There are almost innumerable tensions of radiation, but radiations of a given tension find resistance only in their own field of radiation. A radiatory ether flowing through aboron, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen, and being coördinate with these, is radiating through its normal field (its own field), and is broken in its continuity at the point of every specific difference. A radiation of a more refined tenuity, more esoteric, inflowing through its own and normal field, is untouched by the condition of the exoteric field—the field abnormal to it.

Solar and lunar energies differ essentially in their qualities. Solar alchemic solution is primarily derived from the astral center, and is radiatory from the solar limbus. The alchemic essence originating at the center and flowing toward the circumference may be direct or reflected. The flow of the lunar solution is generated at the circumference and is convergent, that is, flowing toward the center. This may also be direct or reflected. The solar alchemic solution is gravic; the lunar alchemic solution is levic.

The moon is a magneto-electric sphere of alchemic force, reflected from the circumferences comprising the laminiferous shell of the cosmic structure. The flow of the alchemic energy toward the center passes through the earth's surface and plants the photograph of the surface of the earth upon this photosphere of lunar energy. Lunar energy will penetrate opaque substances of various kinds, and it can be artificially produced. It would require a solution of the seven primary metallic substances, with the primary minerals to create a perfect alchemic lunar solution. This would include mercury as an eighth principle.

Source of Lunar Energy.

Lunar alchemic solution is derived from the action of esoteric solar influence upon the mercurial planetary disci. The actinic radiations from the sun penetrate the earth's crust, the mineral plates, and the metallic laminæ. In permeating the laminæ at the point where the mercurial disc floats between the laminæ, by the peristaltic action which causes the disc to move rapidly through the sphere of the metallic layers, the solar radiation strikes the disc. The radiations are partly reflected, but a greater proportion of the energy is rushed off laterally toward all the sides of the disc, and directed through the influence of conspiring energies toward the tropical poles of the ecliptic. They thence flow in currents to the north polar magnetic center, and to the south polar magnetic zone, whence the lunar sphere receives its energy successively through the seven planetary spheres.

Alchemico-organic energies are generated either at the center, the circumference, or at any intermediate space in the atmospheres, water, geologic, mineral, and metallic strata. At every point of contact, or where ascending or descending energies meet, deposits are made as the result of the union of the anodic and cathodic fluxion. Not only are deposits made of new material atoms, but in the operation of the alchemic union the old material atoms are destroyed as matter and transposed to both the anodic and cathodic energy. As an illustration of this universal activity, we may note the change which is operative at the place of contact of the common atmosphere and the water surfaces of the earth. At the surfaces of contact there is a meeting of the anodic and cathodic energies. These energies unite in the destruction of both as energies, and the deposit of matter; at the same time and place a new quality of ascending energy is created for the upper stratum, and, correspondingly, a new descending energy for the precipitate. By this operation the anodic light or electricity passing through the water, becomes qualitatively changed to meet the requirements of its passage through the atmosphere. This law holds good at every point of contact, and through every stratum of air, water, earth, and solid lamina.

A radiation of energy generated at the water's surface, where necessarily the surface of the water is in contact with the under and contiguous surface of the air, if cathodic (descending), has its foot at the point of its generation, and its head in the direction of its flow; hence to the passage of that cathodic ray toward the water would be down to it, and toward the bottom of the water would be up. The opposite would be true of the anodic (ascending) direction of the pencil of energy. The alchemico-organic energies, either ascending or descending, are not sentient entities.

When an alchemico-organic energy—generated at the astral center of the alchemico-organic cosmos—radiates from its starting point for the circumferential limitation of the sphere it is modified at every point of contact, for at every place of meeting its coördinate ascending energy blends with it in the creation of new qualities of energy and matter at the place of union. This radiation of energy, originating at the astral nucleus and terminating finally only at the outermost rind of the shell, in the outermost lamina or stratum of matter, is not a spiritual entity, but it is its correspondent; for energies in the alchemico-organic field correspond to spirits in the organo-vital field.

The stellar nucleus which comprises the primary source of all radiation of energy of every kind and quality, is the point of the congeries of afferent subtensions. The resource of this constant inflow is necessarily the processes of combustion occurring at the circumferences of the cosmic system, where material deposits are perpetually made. The astral center is not so solid a body as any of the deposited laminæ of the rind which comprise the shell of the Cellular Cosmogony. Whatsoever solidarity it assumes is derived from the blending of the afferent fluxion of convergent energies—the solidarity being of such a character as to be easily combusted and transmuted to the efferent flow. The astral center, then, is in constant process of materialization and dematerialization, coördinating the changes which occur at the circumferences, where atoms of matter are deposited from the extremity of radiatory energies, and where the anodic energy is derived from the dissolution of the atoms of matter.

The New Kingdom of Human Life.

Revelations of Koreshan Cosmogony Concerning the Destiny of Man; the Evolving Cycles of Universal Progress and Tangible Fruit of the Tree of Life.

BERTHELDINE, MATRONA.

THE ASTONISHING FACT is this; that the sun, the moon, the planets, the stars, and the atmospheres of the universe are all within the hollow globe or shell, which is the firmament beneath the feet of man—its most potential inhabitant. The celestial focalizations of the inherent energies of the universe, which are seen within the atmospheres, serve the highest purpose of their existence, when to the enlightened mind of man they illustrate the operations of those laws, the science of which declares to him the sublime grandeur of his origin and destiny, and the nature of his righteous relations to his fellow man. The Supreme master of the science of cosmic form and function, and of the laws of correspondent analogy, is necessarily the supreme Ruler of the destinies of men.

The construction of the physical cosmos furnishes to the scientific mind a pattern of the perfect social order the mind of God demands of men in righteous relations to himself. The existence and nature of the astral center announce to the enlightened mind the first law of the theocratic kingdom: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength."

The physical cosmos is demonstrated to be so constructed that the vital energies of everything in the universe are ultimately polarized and focalized in the astral center of the solar sphere. What we denominate the sun is the visible center of all the radiations of energies, visible and invisible, which unite within its astral nucleus of substances in transmutation by combustion, to energies which meet the demands of every form of existence in the universe, for vitalization, that its existence may be perpetuated both in the sun and in the earth, by alternating processes of generation and regeneration.

The visible celestial planets are but little planes of visible radiance, resulting from the meeting of specific focalizations of energies ascending from the great planes or metallic strata of the firmament beneath, and energies descending from the astral nucleus within the sun, to which they correspond in quality of kind. The visible stars, likewise of varying magnitudes, are the radiations from the focalizations of the energies of specific forms of existences—terrestrial and celestial, which on the natural plane are periodically formed and reformed by generation and regeneration from the precipitates of stellar combustion in the firmament of the celestial spheres.

The highest, finest, and most complex combinations of stellar energies within the universe are revealed to men,—in men as minds of men,—those inherent intelligences of human form differing in powers and glories, but all luminous and wonderful when finally perfected in and by the ultimate astral nucleus of the “Son” of anthropostic being, their final focalization and involution. Man—revealed as the fruit of the Tree of Life, is the highest possible visible expression of all the inherent intelligences of planetary, lunar, stellar, or solar energies in existence. Man, the Lord of all, represents in form and comeliness, in intellectual and affectional might of power, the highest and holiest sum total of the combined activities of the entire universe, and is the one legitimate object of Godly worship.

The Man of Divinity involves the three degrees of divine existence in unison—the celestial, the spiritual, and the natural, therefore He is called the Son or outshining of Eloah, in whom he declares himself “well pleased,” and who is his Beloved. The first manifestation of this form of universal being in least but most potential form, which marks the beginning and ending of a Mazzarothic cycle, is called Jesus, Jehovah, the Logos or the Word made flesh, and the holy Seed in whom all fulness dwells. This form of being is biune in sex or life-producing potencies. As the externalized masculinity he infolds His bride or matrix within himself; this bride or Haveh is the holiest sphere within the veil of his flesh. From her potencies he reproduces the fulness of himself—the solar sphere of his existence called the divine sonship, or order of Melchizedek, the Morning Star of divine harmonies, upon which every form of circumferential life in the universe depends for recreation.

The earth, writes the inspired prophet of God, is God’s footstool; ultimately, his feet—the feet of man—must rest upon it as the feet of God, as those of its King and Creator. The stars as we see them now, represent the embodiments of man’s stellar or intellectual energies, essential to their progress toward their final embodiment in Haveh, the motherhood of Abraham, the great father of the multitude. From thence they will proceed into the astral embodiments of the divine sonship—the God race possessing all the powers of their Eloah Jehovah, their origin and destiny. This race of the God kingdom will rule and reign in earth in absolute righteousness, and will transform it to the most glorious expression of their powers, which no mortal eye hath seen, nor mortal heart conceived.

The present hells, their own precipitates, represented by the seven planets of the firmament beneath, in the strata of mortal existence, will be brought by the Gods into seven visible forms of social order as symbolized by the seven-branched golden candlestick. These will be transfigured by the light of the holy oil in the golden bowl, to reveal in earth the seven kingdoms of the heavens in their triune degree of glory—the arch natural. These seven spheres or planes of life, yielding up the energies which first focalize in the seven heads of these social orders, are spiritually discerned as the seven spirits of God, which manifest their powers in a central luminary, a personality called Jehovah, the Lord our righteousness. These seven spirits are manifest successively in prophetic Messengers of covenant relations, conjoining God and man in successive degrees of developing Elohist and Jehovistic life, and in simultaneity in the ultimate or harvest of the grand cycle of the Immortals, when they shine forth in the heavens as the seraphim which irradiate the throne of God throughout all eternity.

The awful slush of the rotting forms of fallacy now inundating the world, makes of it—to the Eye of God—the scientific Prophet, a formless mass of “miry clay” which corresponds somewhat to the “slimy ooze” from which the modern evolutionist has been so fond of having things—material and visible—create themselves. This “slimy ooze” is all the evolutionist has for a creator since he turned his back on the supreme involution of the universe, the man Christ Jesus who by the potency of his own Godhead sacrificed his life in the flesh—his holy Seed, that the universe might bring forth her many Sons in his image and likeness.

These Sons of God involve the many evolving cycles of universal life, of which they are the Gods many and Lords many, in the eternal primal unity of all the God-like powers of intellection and affection which can be expressed by Eloah Jehovah. These worlds or cosmic orders and their Lords of Godliness are eternal verities having actual cycles of manifest material and inherent spiritual existences within this hollow globe of ours, 8,000 miles in diameter and 25,000 miles in circumference, according to our natural mortal methods of reckoning size. This physical womb of cosmic constructions is vitalized, for cycles of proliferation of specific kinds or forms of life, by its inherent seed men, which are produced in the fruitage or harvests of specific cycles.

“There is no Savior but Jehovah.” Jehovah is therefore the Seed of the universe, whose cosmic orders produce the God kingdom. He appears in the fulness of time as the seed of all spheres and from the resources of his vitality, his hidden manna or bread of heaven, recreates all things, and then recedes from all visible forms of life, regathering their vital energies into his storehouse for the remanifestation of his glory—the Motherhood of his kind, whose precipitates revitalize and reformulate the forms of life of every kind.

A student of the Koreshan Cosmogony who can read even the primer of the great book of the alchemico-organic universe intelligently, that is, in the science of the laws of its form and functions, can also read with profit its translation into the language of that greatest and most profound Book of the anthropostic life of the organo-vital universe, the Scriptures, recording the book of the generation of the living Word or Son of God.

The False Monetary System of America.

What Evil have the Greenbacks Done that They Should be Destroyed? Bankers' Reasons for Foisting Gold upon the People.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

BANKERS SAY the greenback is a public debt, just as their shinplasters (as the people used to call them) are a banker's private debt, and by criminal ex post facto legislation, they have made it so in form. Such was not the design nor the act of the people in its creation. It was not made redeemable in any other money, because it was not intended to be redeemed in any other money; it was intended to be actual money—as our Supreme Court has declared it to be. The idea of creating one kind of money to be redeemed in another, is a banker's device to juggle with the people's instrument to effect exchanges, and so cheat them out of their senses preliminary to robbing them of their substance.

John Stuart Mill says that in France—the country that has the best money sense of any that exists today, “paper money actually means inconvertibility.” Such practically, with some variation, is the working of English monetary law; but the effort of our Government—run by bankers—is to narrow what is professedly the base of our currency to the most grasped after, and hence the most shifting and unreliable of all commodities—gold, which shall be our only debt-paying money; by that, we mean money that has the legal power to pay debts. Upon this shifting and crumbling base, the most unreliable that could be constructed for a secure and uniform currency, they have based, not the people's “lawful money,” nor even the people's promises to pay money—credit, (they could not so easily control them and hence “control wages,”) but bankers' credit—which they can control.

This will be first-class condition to make panic whenever they desire to do so, which in pursuance of their nefarious schemes they often do; and when the panic comes the whole column of money, which makes prices, will suddenly shrink to the meager dimensions of the gold base, which, being the commodity most of all in demand, will suddenly flee the country, leaving the distressed people with nothing to pay their debts, to buy what they must have to keep them from starving, and to clothe their nakedness. Of course, most of the people's property, under such circumstances, passes into the hands of bankers whose harvest time is a financial panic. This is not mere theory; it has been the sorrowful experience of the masses of people every few years, in most countries of the world.

Greenbacks Detrimental to Bankers' Schemes.

One of the great sins of the greenback is, that it is legal tender, hence actual money with which to pay debts in time of panic—which bankers' credit is not. Another of the mortal sins of the greenback is, that it keeps the Government in the banking business to the detriment of bankers; but these righteous bankers forget to object to governments making and supplying to the so called national banks their bills, now substantially free gratis, and doing many other things for them that belong to practical banking. It is quite true that the Government ought not to be in the banking business, much less ought banks to be in the governing business—as we have shown, and shall further show to be the case. The fact is, the banking business is simple piracy, and worse; and it must be utterly suppressed and destroyed by a government that meets the end and obligation of its being—protects the lives and property of its subjects.

We propose to point out a few of the bankers' many sins against the greenback, which is the people's credit. The first and greatest one, the insertion of the exception clause in the law creating it, has been described in a previous article. The law that forbade the further destruction of greenbacks strictly commanded the Secretary of the Treasury, when greenbacks were paid in, to pay them out again in the same denominations. A banker Secretary, in defiance of this law, substituted higher denominations for the one and two dollar bills, thus in effect demonetizing them, so far as the masses of the people are concerned, with whom money of small denominations is the kind that is chiefly needed.

As Alison in his history shows, the retirement of the £1 and £2 notes was one of the agencies producing frequent panic in England, while in Scotland the opposition in parliament to an attempt to do the same for that country, roused mainly by letters of Sir Walter Scott, published in a country newspaper, prevented the success of the attempt and allowed Scotland to retain the £1 and £2 notes, and with them exemption from the frequent panics which devastated the neighboring island. Observe, these notes were not simply bankers' credit,—like our national bank bills and all the paper money that bankers are willing that we should have, which is a sham and a lie, and not money at all,—but full legal tender—money, such as the greenback is in part, and would be in full, but for the infamous crime of bankers in securing the addition of the exception clause.

The Profits of a Perfect Currency.

Gladstone said, in accordance with the dictates of sound reason, the profits of a perfect currency “ought to be the profit of the nation.” Such is the fact with the legal tender greenback; but with bankers' credit as currency, all the profit goes to a greedy gang of conscienceless cormorants called bankers. When the national bank scheme was ready for business, to prepare for which the greenback was partly demonetized, and was then and always sought to be destroyed, those hated greenbacks were in the people's hands with this endorsement on their backs: "This note shall be receivable at its face value for all debts, public and private, except interest on the public debt and customs dues." Observe, that debt then had no existence; but bankers, in accordance with the advice of British bankers, for their own selfish interests, were hell-bent on creating it, in which fell purpose, unhappily for all men, not even excepting themselves, as they will sometime learn, they succeeded but too well.

The Flaming Sword.

Now comes what we shall call repudiation number 1, of the rights of the people in the interest of bankers. Secretary Chase had sold $10,000,000 worth of the bonds which were to be the capital of these banks, and reported that he could not get enough greenbacks (gold and silver were not in circulation) to pay for these bonds out of the hands of the people, who did not wish to exchange greenbacks, which they wanted for money, and which cost them no usury, for bonds which were not money and would cost them 6 per cent usury. The plighted faith of the country to them was not to be allowed to stand in the way of this bankers' robber scheme.

Wall street induced Congress to pass the law of March, 1863, which provides that legal tender "Treasury notes, in spite of the express contract on their backs, shall not be receivable for bonds after July, 1863, four months thereafter. This infernal act of repudiation, together with the speeches made at its passage, made the people fear that unless they speedily exchanged their greenbacks for bonds, they would be repudiated and lost to them altogether. Under the influence of these unfriendly acts, these notes, in spite of their crippled condition, had not fallen more than two and one half per cent for gold.

In his report for 1864, Secretary Fessenden said: "In the course of a few days the price of this article [coin] rose from $1.50 to $2.85 in paper for $1 in specie, and subsequently fell in as short a period to $1.87, and then again rose as rapidly to $2.50; and this occurred without any assignable cause traceable to an increase or decrease of paper money." He attributed this fluctuation to the "unpatriotic and criminal efforts of speculators and probably secret enemies to raise the price of coin." The act of 1863 was designed to, and did damage the Treasury note so that bankers might buy bonds with it at forty cents on the dollar in coin, which they held. When this devilish purpose had been sufficiently carried out to furnish cheap bonds enough for the base of the currency of John Sherman's new banking swindle, in 1865, the soldiers were to be paid off, and they would have nothing but greenbacks. A law was accordingly passed repealing the clause in the law of 1863, forbidding the Secretary to receive legal tender notes for bonds. The design of this law was not to benefit these notes, but to lessen their amount.

The same hand that secured the law of 1863, which provided $50,000,000 in fractional currency to take the place of the silver coins that had deserted the people, which was the most convenient money the country ever had, and which cost nothing but the trifling sum required to replace it, in 1875 secured another law replacing it with $50,000,000 in fractional silver at an annual cost, if you reckon the amount annually lost, and the loss by abrasion of the coin, with the usury, of some $6,500,000; a nice little plum to usurers, of course, but an added burden to the people who did not ask for it because they did not want it, since it inflicted upon them heavy losses in business. The celebrated florist, James Vick, estimated his loss by it at $10,000 for the first year.

Daring Acts of Public Robbery.

The climax of robbery and repudiation by Congress—in the interest of bankers, and by their instigation—was reached in what was called the Credit Strengthening Act of 1869, while the greenback was yet crippled by the exception clause, and hence at a heavy discount. The law creating the Treasury note made no provision for paying it in anything; did not design to have it paid or redeemed in anything except as any other money is redeemed or paid. There was no more propriety in providing that it should be paid in specie, as this infamous ex post facto enactment did, than there would have been in providing that gold be redeemed in greenbacks. In the law providing for the national banks, the greenbacks are called "lawful money," and made the specie base of the same, which is required to be kept in the banks as security for their circulation. If they are not money, and require to be redeemed in something else which is money, then are the users of that so called money deceived and cheated by it. But this was only one iniquity of this monstrous law.

This same law provided that the many hundred millions of bonds, bought by Treasury notes depreciated by law to 40 cents in specie, should be paid in specie, when to do so was to give a sheer donation to these banker-bondholders of over $500,000,000 after they had been paid many times the amount they had cost them, in gold interest, for many years prepaid. This unrighteous and forever infamous law is entitled to be called repudiation numbers 2 and 3. What shall we say of the patriotism of bankers who cause such acts of robbery to be done? The holders of the black slaves of the last generation saw more than every dollar they had wrung with the lash from the black man, repaid with terrible interest by the ravages of war that left their country desolate, and themselves bankrupt and bereaved of more than half a million of their best beloved. Can these greedy usurers who have reduced black and white laborers, by the advice of British usurers, to the condition of wage slaves whom, when they are worn out in their service, they will be under no obligation to support, but can turn out to starve, look for less terrible retributive justice than that which overtook the enslaver of the black man? To further illustrate the patriotism of bankers, we shall devote another article to an inquiry into what constitutes patriotism.

Liberty is not the goal of human ambition and achievement. It is but the instrumentality, or the mediatory stage of progress, and may be exercised either toward the rearing of the divine kingdom, or in the consummation of chaos. Liberty is but a stage of revolution; man's final achievement is beyond it.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE DOCTRINE OF INDIVIDUALISM has been variously construed, but it is most frequently defined in the language of the American Declaration of Independence as the inalienable right of every person to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It is easy to show how the citizen is thwarted at every turn in the effort to exercise his rights under the present phase of democracy. The doctrine of individual rights as promulgated by Koreshan Science comprehends the right of every person, man or woman, in the culminating line of human progress, to become an individual or an undivided being. It claims that such completion is prerequisite to the attainment of life, liberty, and happiness. Humanity in the divided state is not alive, spirit, soul, nor body; whether in the natural or the spiritual hells, man is mortal, that is, dying. Life is the state of unbroken continuity in consciousness which is enjoyed only by those who have become united to their higher principles in the Lord. Life, as pertaining to the lower phases of existence, has not been defined in a satisfactory manner hitherto, because the character and relationship of the three stages of human progress—mortality, immortality, and eternal life, have not been understood. Immortality is the stepping stone to eternal life. When immortality is reached through the electro-magnetic combustion known as theocrasis or translation, the two sex principles have been reunited in the one form, the neuter being, hence individuality is already attained. There is no liberty in the condition of mortality, because man in the divided state is under the law. He is subject to incessant conflict between the desires which sweep in like a flood and the voice of reason which bids the winds and waves of selfishness be still. He may arrogate to himself liberty in the form of license by plunging into sense-gratifications, but the sufferings entailed by the penalties exacted, show him conclusively that he is hedged in by every form of law. If he touch a wire along which electricity is speeding, broken physical law puts him in bonds; if he steal his neighbor's goods, society demands redress; if he love self and forget God, his trespass against spiritual law holds him captive. Individual liberty belongs to the Sons of God, in whom love and wisdom find equilibrium. It comprehends the right to establish a Theocracy in earth: to control and wisely animate the currents of human destiny; to meet the aspirations of lower orders and renew their own life by uplifting these. It does not require a course of syllogistic argument to prove that happiness cannot be found in the segregated condition. There is always the sense of incompleteness, the desire for fuller companionship and comprehension; add to these a longing for righteousness, and the harrowing sense of failure that attends every effort toward its expression in conduct. Individuality, then, brings humanity into the rights from which it is alienated in the divided state. It brings joy, freedom, and completion.

A short sketch was given in one of the Chicago newspapers last Sunday descriptive of the founding of a new church whose object is to teach and practice "Manology" instead of theology. It is distinctly stated that man and not God is the power looked to for the success of the new faith; its creed is comprised in the one word, justice, and any one who believes in a personal or supernatural God is barred from holding office in the board of the church. It is not strange that such a movement should arise in protest against the irate and vengeful deity of Calvinism—a being so much worse than man that he could create millions of creatures foreordained and predestined to endure the torments of endless hell in the spiritual world after suffering the griefs and disappointments that fall to the common lot here. Such a god ought to be ruled out; the omnipotence ascribed to him formally convicts him of cruelty, and the human heart finds no tribute of love to offer such a personification of justice devoid of mercy. But it is useless for man to attempt to emancipate himself from the idea of God and fall into the gross error of self sufficiency. He finds himself surrounded by mysteries, and the questions which he cannot answer are proof that he needs the aid of some higher intelligence. The problems which he cannot solve confess his weakness. The logical outcome of evolution implies a plane beyond the human. What the world needs is not "Manology," which it is avowedly too ignorant to teach, having failed to settle the matter of man's origin and destiny, but a scientific exposition of theology. The most reasonable and beautiful concept which the mind can entertain is that of the reciprocal relationship between man and God as shown analogically from the Cellular Cosmogony. The doctrine of the interdependence of man and God responds to the deepest longings of the soul, while it satisfies every mental aspiration to learn that man is destined to inherit the throne of intellectual supremacy. The church of man would make orphans of the race. The church of God has represented the Creator as a tyrant; but the church that teaches the rebinding of man and God with the scientific details of the process, supported by proof, is advocating pure religion.

The announcement of a new book entitled the "Life of the Bee," by Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian author, suggests that it may be interesting to Koreshan students to learn that the queen bee represents the principle of parthenogenesis or what is termed the doctrine of the immaculate conception. As the human kingdom embraces every principle pertaining to lower degrees of life, it is reasonable to conclude that parthenogenesis must be manifest at some specific epochs in the anthropostic domain. The term anthropostic is here used to denote not only common humanity, but the latter in its relations with the higher human, the perfect manhood of Deity. Koreshan Science teaches that this is not the age of virginal propagation. The law was manifest in a solitary instance nineteen hundred years ago. Mary was born according to natural law from common humanity, but through her chaste mind the Holy Spirit, transmitted immaculately from the mind of Joseph, her betrothed, could operate. The thoughts of the mind are entities which in natural generation descend into the body to become the germs of reproduction. The Angel of the Annunciation said unto her: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God." In a future age the principles of parthenogenesis will be more generally manifest. Allusion is made to such a period in Genesis, where a different order of intellectual giants is mentioned—a natural genus endowed with higher qualities. Entomology has therefore some new facts to assimilate in regard to the bee. It is not aware that the worker or neuter bee is a type of the biune character of the Sons of God—the coming race. The larvæ of the neuter bee, placed with the larvæ of the drone bee in a queen cell, will produce a queen bee, illustrative of the principle of parthenogenesis.

The term culture is derived from the Latin cultus, originally the coulter of a plow. The office of the steel blade or revolving disk attached to the beam of the plow is to cut the sod before it is overturned. Hence culture implies the use of the knife to break up old habits, destroy the natural growth of weeds in the soil and prepare it for seed. It does not imply cruelty on the part of the husbandman, but gives evidence of the tenderest care. The roots of prejudice have been cut away in the cultured mind, and it is therefore accessible to the introduction of fresh truth. It is in a condition of preparation or readiness to receive. This presupposes humility. Matthew Arnold defined culture as a knowledge of the best that has been said or written, and the definition has passed current, knowledge being supposed to bear fruit in conduct. The consensus of opinion furnishes lists of the world's best books as a guide to culture. It is notable that such lists are usually headed by the Hebrew Bible. Is it not true that none of the works in the world's extant literature, from the latest discoveries in cuneiform tablets that aggregate the wisdom of Babylon down to the speculative flights of German philosophy, can give to man the art of living? Nor does he discern it in the Bible. Must not the best that can be said or written unfold the secret of life, thereby furnishing the knowledge essential to a higher degree of cultivation on a plane beyond the human? Cult, meaning worship, is from the same root as culture; and worship, though defined as love and attraction through love, also involves the use of the knife. No man can love God supremely until the heart soil has been cultured to receive the divine implantation which is Himself. An English writer has said that we can ill spare the term cult, the word religion having lost its original meaning. Both terms scientifically expounded refer to the same process of reconnection under a different image.

The application of science to industry ought to afford every man an opportunity for education, for travel, and for recreation. It is a shame and a disgrace to the age that wage slavery and poverty and crime should co-exist with the wonderful devices patented in the way of labor-saving machinery. Under any equitable system of distribution, the enormous increase in wealth by this means would be ample to supply the toiling millions, not only with the necessities and comforts but with many of the luxuries of life. Let justice be meted out to the monopolist and his victims. Those who are watching the signs of the times with bated breath, asking in anxious whispers, "What next?" find that the latest outrage threatened against the people is the bread trust. Its promises recall the miracle of the loaves and fishes. It is going to make eighty-five pounds more of bread out of a barrel of flour at the same price. Who will believe that it is working for the good of the people? That is not according to the nature of trusts. Some trick is hidden by these specious promises. Our petition for daily bread should include a plea for protection from all harmful ingredients costing less than flour. Human life is held so cheap in comparison with gain, that no citizen is safe. Poison may lurk in every article of diet furnished by the market, and the poor man who must buy cheap goods is the first victim.

Charge is brought against Christianity by the agnostic contingent that it is only a summary of beliefs founded on the supposed revelations of a deity to man; that it has no actual facts to support it, resting as it does upon the story of the fall of man in Adam's transgression, and the one of his redemption in the death and resurrection of the only begotten Son of God. Are these charges true? What would Koreshanity give in place of Christianity? It aims to give the world a religion that can stand the test of science. While the religion of Jesus Christ has plenty of facts to fall back upon, it has lost understanding of the gospel narratives, and in place of primitive truth, it presents an accumulation of erroneous beliefs. Take the story of the fall of man. What church can be found, teaching that Adam's transgression was the going across of the pure spirit of the perfect man, from the divine to the human plane? Yet the fall of man was really the fall of God into the race, where He plants himself in order to redeem it. All these conclusions are derived from laws scientifically demonstrated and determined. The law of the cross is found in every domain of existence. The proof of the destructibility of matter involves that of the translation of Jesus Christ.

It is significant that the revival of the true science of Alchemy, which means the light or wisdom of Egypt, is coincident with a fresh impulse toward the reawakening of the land of Egypt from its sleep of thirty centuries. Modern engineering has furnished means of refertilizing the country which preserves the monument of the greatest engineering feat that the world has conceived in the shape of the great Pyramid. The "miracle in stone" was wrought by those whose knowledge transcended that of the present day—a race of mental giants. The meaning of the word pyramid has puzzled philologists. Amelia B. Edwards says that the Egyptian term per emus, which is evidently identical with the Greek puramis, signifies "going forth from the large," referring to the vertex as rising from the base of the structure. Koreshan Science would derive the word from the Greek root pur, meaning fire, the apex being symbolical of the ascending flame. All energies, both mental and physical, have their origin in a process of combustion. The great Pyramid would therefore typify creation or transmutation, the lost secret of Egypt.

England and America are trying to find a basis of agreement in regard to the Nicaragua canal. The United States has every right to the exclusive control of the great waterway which is to link two oceans, thereby furnishing her with the means of enlarging her commerce indefinitely. All the waterways contiguous to this nation should be under its jurisdiction, nor should it be hampered by treaties that are liable to involve it in serious complications in case of war. Does this seem the policy of self-interest? Koreshan arguments are founded upon a knowledge of the invisible forces which are even now gathering together and augmenting daily—forces so tremendous that through their agency the whole course of human affairs is to be changed. The natural groundwork and location where the new order is to be established in earth, is right here in our own country. The future destiny of the United States involves that of the ideal government.

There is one factor which has an important bearing upon the race problem, but it is entirely overlooked by ethnologists and sociologists. While the Anglo-Saxon is bound by every law of brotherhood to consider the rights and interests of the Negro, the Malay, and the Indian, he is not under obligation to attempt the impossible nor to disquiet himself unnecessarily over the ultimate destiny of the colored races. The operation of the great law of re-embodiment provides for their progress as well as for that of the white man. Terrible crimes are committed against them in the name of civilization, but the sure reckoning of the ages will bring justice to victim and oppressor. Education is not confined to one embodiment. While the white man is divesting himself of race prejudice, the Negro will be growing in intellectual capacity. There is no cause for alarm because statistics thus far show only 2,414 colored graduates from collegiate institutions.

It is a question how far the working day may be reduced, and time be allowed for producing what society requires. When a system of Equitable Commerce is established, Koreshanity proposes to shorten the number of hours during which the citizen will perform uses to the state, to five. With the aid of labor-saving machinery this will give ample time to carry on all departments of industry, besides affording to every man the means for self improvement and enjoyment. Five hours of congenial occupation a day will be only a delight as contrasted with ten hours of wage slavery.

When the world recognizes the North Pole as now located in humanity, some of the expeditions sent out to discover its correspondent in the physical cosmos will be successful.

Mission of John the Baptist.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Will you kindly explain why it was necessary for Jesus to receive a baptism from John? Might not these spiritual entities have constituted His interior from birth?—INQUIRER.

The Lord Jesus was the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He was the first-born from the dead, raised up from the human race by processes of reincarnation extending through the age. The spirit of the Father or the pneumatic force was carried by Joseph in lineal descent from Abraham. By the law of attraction it passed over to Mary, and the Lord was born of the Holy Spirit as the result of her quickening. Mary brought forth the body of the Lord by the transmutation of spirit to matter. The Word was made flesh. John the Baptist came in the spirit and power of Elijah, as the vehicle of transmission for the psychic or feminine energies of Deity. Therefore he saw the spirit descending like a dove and lighting upon Jesus. The dove in the higher sense signifies the chaste marriage of the masculine and feminine principles in the holy or neuter being. It was necessary that Jesus should receive this influx in order that all fulness might dwell in Him. Hence his words when John forbade Him: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." Had it been possible He would have received this baptism earlier, but he was not sufficiently attractive or receptive to it previous to that hour. It is said that during His youth he increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man. According to law there are two poles, a north and a south, one positive and the other negative, one electric the other magnetic, one pneumatic the other psychic. John was the psychic pole. The polation of both currents in the one form characterizes the biune genus, the Son of God who, by virtue of this unity, could say later: "I and the Father are one."

John was the focal point of a spiritual and psychic sphere. These spheres had to flow into the biological nucleus—Christ the Lord, to not only complete his character as the Son of God, but to conserve those spheres as they were rolled together as a scroll. This was the departure of the heavens that were expanded during the Jewish dispensation. The old heavens departed, and new heavens began—focalized in the Lord. During the Christian age these new heavens, having their nucleus in the Lord, expanded until they have grown old and are ready to depart again. In these heavens the dragon is in power until Michael rises up to dispossess him and cast him out. In every age of the world the heavens in departing are rolled together and become infolded in a personality, who is baptized by that influx.

Rain in the Anthropostic World.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Please explain Psalm lxxii: 6, 7.—A READER, Bonham, Texas.

When the Koreshan concept of rain formation is understood, this passage is found to refer, under one of the most beautiful and expressive similes, to the baptismal outpouring soon to come through the theocrasis of the Messenger of Truth. Just as rain is precipitated from the alchemical union of levic and gravic energies brought together in a cloud, so the New Jerusalem, which constitutes the nucleus of spiritual energies descending from God out of heaven, meets in mid-air, or in the personality of the Mediator, the purest language of those who aspire to conjunction with Divinity. The energies that unite in the cloud are the product of two previous combustions, one taking place at the junction of the celestial with the spiritual heavens, the other in the spirito-natural realm, or where the lower spiritual heavens conjoin with natural life. In the same manner, the levic and gravic energies meeting in the physical cloud result from disintegration and combustion of elements above and below—at the junction of our atmosphere with the sea of hydrogen and with the water surfaces. The cloud being formed, intense attraction causes union, the personality of the Messenger is consumed, and He (the Lord in his second coming) descends in the spiritual energies generated as showers that water the earth (expectant humanity), bringing forth the Sons of God. Hence in the seventh verse it is said that in his day shall the righteous (the perfected genus) flourish and abundance of peace, so long as the moon endureth. The moon here refers to the manifestation of the Femininity of Deity in the Golden Age. The sun and the moon conjoin, the former or the masculine principle becoming interior, while the feminine is exterior, manifest as the Divine Shepherdess.

Who Are the Two Witnesses?

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—A correspondent to the Baptist Flag asks, Who are the two witnesses spoken of in Rev. xi: 3? In response to this question, the editor of that periodical mentions several different and conflicting interpretations of this passage: "Some hold that the two witnesses are Moses and Elijah, who are to be resurrected in the latter days and testify for Christ; others say they are the Old and New Testaments, and apply their death to the French Revolution; other theories make of them the two ordinances, baptism and the Lord's supper; and again, they are referred to the church and the ministry." The editor himself inclines to the latter view. I should be grateful if you would inform me through your columns how you regard the subject.—A TRUTHSEEKER.

Jesus said: "I bear witness of myself, and the Father which dwelleth in me he beareth witness of me." Here we have direct and conclusive testimony in the Lord's own words, that the two witnesses are the Father and the Son, or himself, in whom they are one. His crucifixion on the literal cross of wood and his burial for three days and three nights in the tomb of Joseph, were but types of his crucifixion in Sodom and Egypt (the church), as declared in verse 8, and his death as the two witnesses in the streets of the great city of Babylon, which is also the church in its declension, for 1260 days (years), in the dark or medieval ages. This period extends from the time when the church allied itself with paganism, under Constantine, to the Reformation. The two witnesses were given power to prophesy—that is, their death was prophecy of a resurrection to come in the future. They were clothed in sackcloth or in the mourning garments of sin.

Anomalies of Society.

The Hardships of Modern Prosperity and the Burdens of Labor-Saving Inventions.

Why are children put to work in factories when they should be in school? Is it because they want to work? Or because their parents prefer them to work and miss school? Not a bit of it. Their parents do not receive enough wages to maintain the family, and the little ones are forced by the poverty of the parents to work. It is absurd that it should require the work of a human every waking hour to get enough to eat and wear and a place to sleep. Years ago, when man had no machines to help him, he made enough to support the family in as good condition as today. It now takes one twelfth as much time to make as much wealth; why should he not live as well for one hour's work per day? Is mathematics a lie? Has the multiplication table lost its meaning? The more men work the richer the other fellow becomes, and not one working man out of a hundred leaves anything for his family. There was a time when they did leave a little, but now they cannot live well on what they receive. The old-time shoemaker or wagonmaker or smith was one of the best livers in the community. He educated his little family, lived well, and left some property for them when he passed out. Now the same workers can make twelve times as much wealth as they did then and live poorer—and leave nothing. Something has gone wrong. You had better hunt it up. You cannot get rich by working harder and living poorer—and why should it be necessary to work hard and live poor all your life? Is that all life is for? What has machinery been produced for, if not to benefit the people who use it? If you owned the machine you would get the benefit, but as others own them, they get the benefit. Now if the public owned the machines —all of them—you being a part of the public would get your benefit with all others, and it would operate as if you individually owned the machines you work with. Is that not plain? "Profit" is taken by the employers of labor on the claim that they are entitled to it because they furnish the capital—the machines, etc. Well, if the public owned them, the public would get the profit, and as all men compose the public, all men would get the profit. What is the use of working under rules that make a few enormously rich and the millions poor? Why not rules for the benefit of the majority?—Exchange.

Extinct Animals.

Some Beautiful Species Which Have Been Exterminated Recently.

Prof. Lydekker, one of the custodians of the British Museum, contributes to a recent number of Nature an interesting notice on the species of animals that have been exterminated by man during the century that has just closed. These are, perhaps, not so numerous as is generally supposed, and the forms are mainly such as are known more particularly to the systematist and collector. Among the fewer common types which collections and books of travel have made familiar, one of the most deplorable cases of extermination is furnished by the quagga, the beautiful zebra-like animal of South Africa, which in the first half of the century could still be met with in thousands covering the grassy veldts. At that time it formed a staple food of the Hottentot farmers of Graaf Reinet district. The extermination of this animal, antedated seventy years by the destruction of the blaauwbok or blue antelope, appears to have been accomplished in 1873, and yet, singularly enough, most writers on natural history are seemingly under the impression that the quagga is still an abundant member of the African fauna. It is a remarkable fact that of this animal, which was frequently driven in harness at the Cape in the eighteenth century, and was afterwards the object of much unsuccessful effort at domestication, only a single stuffed specimen exists in all the British museums. Burchell's zebra, although still plentifully represented by subspecific forms in various parts of the continent, has disappeared in its type form, probably the most strikingly handsome of African fauna. The other animals referred to by Prof. Lydekker are mainly birds, such as the black emu of South Australia, the water hen of Lord Howe and Norfolk islands, the diabolon or burrowing petrel of the Antilles, two species of the Nestor or kaka parrot of the Pacific islands, a species of cormorant from Behring sea, and the great auk, of which the last pair known to be living was destroyed in 1844. Prof. Lydekker refers with satisfaction to the status of the Indian fauna, for, as he says, "it has not lost a single species of mammal, bird or reptile, either during the nineteenth century or within the period of definite history." The animal whose early destruction is considered most like it, or which at least requires "most careful watching," is the Indian rhinoceros. The Asiatic lion has had its range very materially narrowed during recent years, but it is still extant.—Exchange.

Carnegie's Blood-Money.

A Striking Example of Modern Philanthropy and Source of Wealth.

In speaking of the $750,000, which Carnegie has offered San Francisco for library purposes, The Star says in part:

"Mr. Carnegie's income runs up into millions of dollars a year. This is not the result of his enterprise or industry, but of the special privileges which he enjoys. The United States government 'protects' him in his business ventures, for instance, by paying him twice as much for armor plate as he charges the Russian government. We do not blame him for taking advantage of a condition if thrust upon him, but we do blame him, in his greed, for endeavoring to perpetuate unjust conditions. We blame him for his inhuman attitude toward the men by whose sweat and upon the marrow of whose bones he has waxed fat. We hold him responsible for the wanton murder of the men at Homestead, whose despairing cry and piteous appeals for wages enough to sustain life he would not hear—or, hearing, answered with Pinkerton guns—claiming that the profits of the business would not warrant it, although at that moment he was drawing fabulous dividends from it, and resolutions were being adopted by a dozen communities lauding his 'benevolence' for donations of money that had been earned by the very labor he was exploiting then, and has exploited ever since.

"We may be flying in the face of public opinion, and taking a most unpopular stand—that we have done before—but nevertheless we protest against the acceptance of this Carnegie gift by San Francisco. No matter what other communities have done, or may do, let us decline it. As we have said before, we say again: When Carnegie can restore to the orphans and widows the husbands and fathers who were massacred at Homestead, in the strike caused by his greed; when he makes glad the hearts he has broken, brings sunshine to the homes he has desolated, and atones for all the misery he has caused, then, but not until then, should any self-respecting community accept his gifts, which represent the stored-up earnings of labor plundered and the laborer crucified."

Justice to all; work for all, and to the laborer the just product of his toil.—Exchange.

A War on Absinth.

French Legislators Intend to Combat That Most Dangerous Liquor.

The French chamber of deputies has begun a war on absinth by passing a resolution calling upon the government to prevent the manufacture and sale of the dangerous drink. For a number of years medical societies and experts in insanity have uttered their warnings against this liquor, but to no effect. The consumption of it has gone on increasing at an enormous rate, having nearly doubled since 1894, and now amounts to about 10,000,000 quarts a year. It is without question the most dangerous liquor ever put upon the market, and its frequent use is sure to result in a complete wreck not only of the body, but of the brain.

Absinth, according to the best definition, is a liquor prepared from alcohol mixed with volatile oil of wormwood, oil of anise, and other ingredients. It has peculiarly intoxicating effects, which are due to the oil of wormwood, the state resulting from its use being very different from the result of alcoholic poisoning. Trembling, vertigo, fearful dreams, and epileptiform convulsions are among the severer consequences. Absinth drinking is one of the most dangerous forms of stimulation yet invented, the more so because its immediate consequences are usually more agreeable than those of alcohol.

While the use of absinth is by no means as common in this country as in France, yet its consumption here has been increasing at an alarming rate. Some of it is imported, but no doubt the most dangerous portion of it is made in this country, and of the very worst ingredients. If France carries out its plan of stopping the manufacture and sale, the United States should follow suit and should also put a ban on its importation from any foreign land.—Baltimore American.

Illiteracy and Immigration.

Americanizing Foreign Elements by Rapid Assimilation; Decrease of Illiteracy.

Neither illiteracy nor immigration is to be feared in our Western states on the showing that is made in the latest census returns. Taking the three states, Indiana, Iowa, and Kansas, we find that the percentage of illiteracy is increased by immigration, but that the percentage in the total population is so small that it is hardly appreciable. The aliens must be isolated as a class to obtain a percentage that looks at all ominous; and when we have said that 15.7 per cent of the people in Kansas are illiterate, and 10.7 per cent in Indiana and Iowa, anxiety is prevented by a glance at the statistics on persons of school age.

Nearly all such persons are native born, which means that they entered the public schools as soon as they were old enough. The foreign born are only 3 per cent in Iowa, 1.9 per cent in Kansas, and 1.2 per cent in Indiana. If, therefore, all these children were left outside our educational system, if they were all the children of the illiterate aliens referred to, they would have very little effect in reducing the standing of the states for general intelligence.

The figures demonstrate how small is the distinctly foreign influence in the country, and how marvelous are the country's powers of assimilation. Immigrants come by the million, but are absorbed by the millions among whom their own children are soon numbered by virtue of their American birth. Later, the children passing through the public schools become American in their every attribute. Their ideas, speech, and manners are formed by a larger environment than that of the home, so that in them the many races become as one. It is in this assimilative process that our public schools are doing their greatest work.—Record-Herald.

Another Edition Ready.

The Fourth Edition of the Cellular Cosmogony Completed and Ready for all Orders.

We are glad to announce that after some delay, a new edition of THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY is just off the press. The Guiding Star Publishing House is now able to fill all orders for this book, for which there is great demand. A new chapter by KORESH has been added in the form of an Addendum, illustrating some simple principles of geolinear and distal foreshortening, which greatly enhances the value of the work.

This new edition affords all our friends and propagandists opportunity for renewed efforts in the work of getting Koreshan Universology before the people. Thousands of COSMOGONIES are already distributed throughout America and Europe—and yet it is only the beginning of the great conflict and contest of systems. But further and numerous orders give the great work another impetus in the direction of ultimate success and triumph.—EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.

Attitude of the Church.

Catering to the Wealthy Classes and no Longer a Friend of the Poor.

Where does the church stand today? Does it stand for the poor and oppressed as Jesus did, or does it stand for capitalism and class privileges? What per cent of the ministry stand for economic justice? Do you think one per cent of the ministers stand for the oppressed poor? It is probable that ninety-nine per cent of the ministry stand for and vote for capitalism and industrial slavery. There is no profession in the country that serves the purpose of the capitalist robbers better than the ministry.

It is seldom that the minister mentions the militant doctrines taught by Jesus. They fear the capitalists in their congregations. They continually tell the people to be good, but never support any movement that proposes to remove the cause of evil. They seem to want to pull men out of the ditch, but never propose to fill up the ditch in which men and women fall. They propose to keep the people out of hell, but never stand with those who propose to establish a system that will keep hell out of the people.

It is no surprise to intelligent people when they see the working class deserting the churches. The church does not stand for the working class, and under capitalism it would seem that the mission of the church is a failure. With its support of capitalism it is dying of dry rot. It is becoming a mere admiration society—a place where rich robbers display their stolen wealth and where the poor find no consolation in this life.—Social Economist.

A Butterfly Farm.

An English entomologist, William Watkins, was the first to raise butterflies on a large scale. For a dozen years the establishment which he founded for this purpose has furnished millions and millions of insects to private collectors, and Mr. Watkins himself has established at the Zoological Garden of London a very interesting entomologic station, where may be found the most beautiful butterflies of the entire world. The butterfly farm of Eastbourne, near the southern coast of England, and in a place well sheltered from winds, covers an area of 4,000 square meters. It is a garden filled with flowers and rare trees, and surrounded by a very high trellis, and here flutter at liberty many thousands of butterflies of various species. From all the countries of the world the farm receives eggs, which are submitted to a special mode of incubation. Then the caterpillars issuing from these eggs, receive nourishment suitable to their evolution. A certain number of the most perfect insects are preserved as reproductors, while the others are asphyxiated and mounted. Some of the rarer insects fetch enormous sums.—Union Label.

Blow to French Religious Schools.

As most of the religious orders in France have obtained legal recognition from the government since the laws enacted under President Grevy in March, 1880, an amendment appears in the Waldeck-Rousseau law decreeing that all persons who have not been educated in the public schools of the State shall be deemed unfit to occupy any military, naval, or civic position drawing a government salary. This will be the most fatal blow to the educational institutions of the religious orders, because French parents will hereafter send their children to the State schools instead of having them sent to colleges controlled by Jesuits and others, to the danger of their careers in life.

The religious orders are afforded twelve months in which to readjust their affairs. They cannot get around the section of the law about foreign superiors by transferring such control from Rome to Paris, because Leo XIII. is a strong centralist, and is not likely to permit such removal. The amount of property affected is variously estimated at from $750,000,000 to $800,000,000. It has been predicted, while the bill has been under debate, that Jesuits will emigrate without waiting for the expiration of the one year of grace.—Boston Transcript.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHIAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic; and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is enmeshed at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Koreshan Propaganda at the Pan-American.

Thousands Learn of Koreshanity at the Exposition; Exhibits of Apparatus and Charts Lead to Inquiry and Discussion; Cosmogony Presented as the Basic Science.

CROWDS OF PEOPLE are hearing the gospel of Koreshanity at the Pan-American. It would be impossible to determine to what extent retentive impressions are being made upon those who seem to evince an interest in the discussion of the Koreshan Universology. We do know, however, that there is an agitation of the subjects which we are placing before the world for its consideration. Many people wonder why we are here, and upon what commercial basis we are conducting our demonstration. It is impossible for the ordinary business man to conceive of the possibility of the presentation of the truth for the truth's sake. There is no mercenary end in view, we can assure our readers. We have developed Universology, a system of science predicated upon the basis of a demonstrated premise, in which every factor of uncertainty has been removed. We have come to the Pan-American to place before the visitors of this wonderful Exposition, a demonstrated premise in opposition to the assumed premise of the so called Copernican system of cosmogony and its "scientists."

We find some indifferent to the influence of the assumptive scientific thought of the times regarding spiritual, moral, and social life, but this is because it is not generally understood that the character of what is called science determines the tendencies of these factors in life. The atheism, infidelity, and criticism of sacred relations and obligations, as founded upon the instructions of inspired and illuminated men, originate in the power which fallacy exerts upon the deeper students and profound thinkers of the world, and their influence on mankind. The entire system of modern science is predicated upon assumption, and the honest men of scientific research do not hesitate to confess this weakness of the present schools of thought.

What has astronomy or cosmogony to do with my obligations to God and my fellow men? Every great religion of the world has had for its foundation, some form of cosmogony. The Hebrew system, that upon which Christianity was founded, begins with a description of the order of creation, and it must have been regarded as of enough importance to be presented foremost and introductory to all that follows, as the exposition of Judaism. The physical universe—we have denominated it the alchemico-organic—is the expression of Cause; it is the language of Deity. It stands out in the characters of universal hieroglyphics—the exposition of the character, form, and function of the Most High. It is important that we know how to read this language. We cannot read it from the basis of pure assumption. There should be something that may constitute the key-note by which the language of the universe may be rendered into comprehensible usage. We have sought and found this first principle of interpretation, and are enabled to render it into comprehensible terms.

The cause of the forms and functions of the universe must necessarily be expressed in its manifestation, for no cause can unfold what has not had a place in its powers and possibilities. The interpretation of the universe as expressed in its manifest and manifold forms and functions, is a revelation of the mysteries of Godliness. We are told that the gospel of the Lord is so plain, that a wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein. The Christian world never made a greater mistake. The Bible contains no such absurd expression. It does say that there shall be an highway of holiness for the ransomed to walk in, and that wayfaring men—the men in the way—though fools, need not err therein. When the ransomed man gets in the way, though he be an initiate in the way in which he walks, he cannot get out of the way. This highway was and is the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God. He said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." If a man be ransomed, he is in the way and cannot err. The difficulty here is, that the people who think they are ransomed are being deceived by the sophistry which has crept into the exposition of the Christian religion. "Blessed are they that DO his commandments, that they may have right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Koreshanity is the new gospel. It comes at the end of the dispensation, and involves the confirmation of the declarations of Scripture wherein it is announced, "Behold, I make all things new!" The old earth and the old heavens shall pass away; this means that the old church and old state shall pass away, which will be accomplished in like manner as every other dispensation has given place to the succeeding age.

In the expressions of Nature we behold the purposes of the Almighty. There can be no question but that Nature is a true unfoldment of what was contained in the germ of its propagation. If correctly rendered into the terms of common language, she will reveal to man the true character of the causes of her being. If she contradicts the language of the prophets, of the Lord and his Apostles, then we may dispute their authority; but we must predicate that dispute upon something better than the preposterous assumptions in which modern science rests. God is in his universe, but he is in it in its most consummate potency—as the universe is infolded in its archetype, the personal Jehovah. We are asked, "Is God a personal being?" We answer, Cause cannot project what it does not contain. If it does not consist of material form, then it cannot project material form; if it does not contain personality, then it cannot project personality. The very fact that Cause can produce person, demonstrates conclusively that person existed in the Cause. We cannot give to the individual character of the Deity a better name than God. One great mistake of the Christian world resides in the fact that it has confounded the title God with the title Jehovah. God refers to the invisible individuality of the Deity, while Jehovah refers to his personal and visible humanity. Such a manifestation we had in the Lord Jesus, nineteen hundred years ago.

We are accused of denying the Lord and Savior of the world, by some who visit our booth, but it is because we do not coincide with the modern views of Christianity. We cannot accept the interpretations of any of the modern expositors of the Scriptures. Whom shall we believe? Will it be Martin Luther, or Melancthon, or Zwinglius? Shall it be Knox, Wesley, or Campbell? Or shall it be the conflicting testimony of the popes of Rome? There is no key to correct Biblical interpretation but that contained in the language of causation as we find it in Nature. It is important, therefore, that we start with something absolute as the first step in the discovery of the mysteries of being. There are conclusive agreements between the expressions of Nature and the Bible, if they are both from the same source. Modern science is in open conflict with the Scriptures; of this there can be no doubt. They are not in agreement; they are diametrically opposed. Nature cannot make a universal mistake; she is true to her source of being. We say that the Bible is as true to its divine authority and source as Nature, but that fidelity to truth must be gauged by some definite means of interpretation—and that resource is Nature herself.

If we examine the foundations of what the world calls science, we are astonished at the flimsiness of the premises upon which science, so called, rests; and we are more astonished at that upon which science depends to establish its claims to acceptance. The proofs of the convexity of the earth are the mere whims of consummate ignorance, and their hold upon the general mind is due to the fact that they never have been subjected to examination, and they depend upon the early impressions of the juvenile mind. Suppose we examine some of the proofs given to the youthful mind, of the earth's convexity. If we sail around the world in one direction, we return to the place whence we started. The child reads this because it is found in the books, and what is in the book is supposed to be true. It is a fact that we may sail around the world. We may start from one place and return to the same place from which we started—on a convex surface, on a concave surface, or on a flat surface. The earth being a concave cell, it affords the same possibility of circumnavigation as if it were a ball or globe.

The earth being a concave sphere, and China being over our heads, we can travel around the world as well as if it were a globe. Equally well could we start from a given point, keeping the north star at a given altitude, sailing in a circle of a uniform radius from the star, and return to the place from which we started. Draw upon a flat surface a number of circles, beginning with a small one, and enlarge them from the central one. You may also place a number of parallels of latitude related to an elevated point a few inches above the surface. This point may be a little ball placed upon a peg. Now, move around the inner circle. The point on the peg, which may represent the north star, will sustain the same altitude to the circle all the way around it. You may then take the next circle, extended on the same plane farther distant from the peg. From the second circle the ball looks lower, viewed from the point on the circle, which represents the sailor. It is not because the flat surface is convex, but it is because the distance has foreshortened the peg, and the ball on the peg appears to be nearer the earth or the surface which represents the flat world. You keep the star (the ball at the top of the peg) at the same altitude, for this is your guide, were you not depending on the described circles, and you come back to the place from which you started. It will be seen that if the world be convex, flat, or concave, the results are the same. It will be seen, also, that the apparent approach of the ball to the flat surface does not depend upon curvation, but upon foreshortening. This proof, then, resolves itself to no proof of the convexity.

We are not confronting difficulties in scientific facts in our effort to present our system of science, but merely the prejudice and ignorance of the public and opposing mind. The scientific world offers no proof of the convexity of the earth in the fact that it has been circumnavigated, nor can we conclude that the earth is flat because it is not proven to be convex. We have certainly vitiated this assumed proof of the globular form of the earth. As the central peg is receded from, in the adoption of the increasing size of the parallels of latitude on the diagram, the ball on the peg drops lower toward the surface, as viewed from the point on the circle. This is no proof that the ball is dropping over a convexity, yet it is the proof given for an identical appearance as we travel south and observe the north star recede from our vision. The pretended scientist absolutely ignores the fact of foreshortening in his calculations, in his endeavor to maintain the Mohammedan idea of convexity of the earth, originating in the dark ages and belonging to the Saracenic age of the world. Well may the Mohammedan system be called the system of the false prophet, for the convexity of the earth was maintained for fourteen hundred years before Copernicus accepted the major premise of the Ptolemaic school. When we consider the fact that modern science is developing the atheism of the age, are we not justified in declaring the power that projected such a monstrosity, the acme of antichrist and the veritable false prophet?

It does not seem an exaggeration to say that we have answered the question of the disappearance of the ship's hull, as she recedes from view, at least five thousand times, and yet there is no let up to the inquiry. We tell them it is due to perspective foreshortening, and then we institute a class in optics to educate the investigators in physics; and though we meet people with all kinds of appendages to their names, we meet none who have ever thought of geoliner foreshortening as affecting the appearance of the hull of the ship as it recedes. It is a fact that the disappearance of the ship and also the sun, when it appears to set, is the result of perspective foreshortening; but it is not the purpose of this article to enter into the details of our Science. The Koreshan literature will have to be studied to ascertain the principles of the Koreshan System.

That we are making headway in the promulgation of Koreshanity, there can be no doubt. We are also disturbing the equilibrium of the "wise men;" we know this from the data which constantly come before our consideration. The Pan-American furnishes a great field for Koreshan propaganda, and our friends may rest assured that we are not slow in putting in some wholesome work. Pan, the God of the Hollow Universe, is awake and on hand at the Pan-American.

The suspension of the heavenly bodies in space, it is claimed, is dependent upon the laws which govern their motions. Axial and orbital revolutions maintain the equilibrium of the solar system. If such be the law of equilibrium in the solar system, to carry out the hypothesis it becomes necessary to acknowledge another remote center around which our system revolves. This center also must have not only an orbital motion of still greater magnitude, but Aleyone, with his and all corresponding systems, must be related to a still more remote center. So soon as one admits the existence of a center distinct from the sun, governed in the maintenance of his position in space by the law which it is claimed is essential to the equilibrium of the heavenly bodies in general, he denies the possibility of ever reaching an absolute center; for this reasoning precludes the possible existence of a final static point in space, and the law of centrality is denied which we claim is due and essential to its part. This argument alone overthrows the present astronomical system.

The Koreshan Science of Alchemy.

Part III.

Koreshan Science in Contrast with the Speculations of Modern Scientists Concerning the Sun ; Solar Light and Heat Conserved ; Non-Vital and Biologic Alchemy.

EVERY STRATUM of metallic substance is the terminal place of radiations of its own specific quality. Each stratum entering into the arrangement of the metallic shell is deposited from energy—the quality of its substantial existence before becoming material at the terminal point and conjunction of the cathodic and anodic current of energy. The deposition of the new atom is the product of the union of the positive and negative currents. When the new atom is deposited, the old one is transmuted to energy. It is thus that the interflow of the ether from center to circumference and from circumference to center is renewed and maintained in perpetuity. If the reader will carefully compare this presentation of science with the uncertainties of the so called scientific men of the present and the past, he will notice the infinite distinction between assumption and positive knowledge. Professor Proctor, in "Our Place Among Infinities," says:

As soon as we inquire into the adaptation of the sun's powers to the work which we have regarded as specially assigned to him, we recognize a mystery of mysteries in the seeming waste of his gigantic energies. [Is this "seeming waste," his "mystery of mysteries," scientific understanding, or is it ignorance?] Our earth receives less than the two thousand millionth part of the heat and light emitted by the sun; all the planets together receive less than the two hundred and thirty millionth part; the rest is seemingly scattered uselessly through interstellar depths. To other worlds, circling around other suns, our sun may indeed appear as a star; but how minute the quantity of light and heat so received from him, compared with the enormous quantity apparently wasted. The portion which seems squandered is scarcely affected at all by such small uses; and that portion is more than two hundred and thirty millions of times as great as the portion used to warm and to illuminate the solar system. And then consider what is the actual amount of energy thus seemingly wasted.

I have computed (adopting Sir J. Herschel's estimate of the amount of heat poured by the sun upon each square mile of the earth's surface) that the sun emits in each second as much heat as would result from the burning of 11,600,000,000,000,000 tons of coal, and of this enormous amount of energy the portion utilized (that is, the heat received by the various members of the solar system) corresponds only to that due to the consumption of about 50 millions of tons—only 50 millions out of 11,600 millions of millions. * * The force wasted is, in fact, very nearly the whole of the inconceivable amount expended.

Professor Newcomb is equally uncertain. He informs us that:

A constant "dissipation of energy" is going on in nature. We all know that the sun has been radiating heat into space during the whole course of his existence. A small portion of this heat strikes the earth, and supports life and motion on its surface. All this portion of the sun's heat, after performing its function, is radiated off into space by the earth itself. The portion of the sun's radiant heat received by the earth is, however, comparatively insignificant, since our luminary radiates in every direction equally, [It is evident from this that Professor Newcomb does not comprehend the laws of combustion as they pertain to the influence of the sun,] while the earth can receive only a part represented by the ratio which its apparent angular magnitude as seen from the sun bears to the whole celestial sphere, which a simple calculation shows to be the ratio of 1 to 2, 170,000,000.

The stars radiate heat as well as the sun. * * Thus we have a continuous radiation from all the visible bodies of the universe, which must have been going on from the beginning. * * This radiation cannot go on forever, unless the force expended in producing the heat be returned to the sun in some form. There is no known law of radiation, except that it proceeds out in straight lines from the radiating center. If the heat were returned back to the sun from space, it would have to return to the center from all directions; the earth would then intercept as much of the incoming as of the outgoing heat; that is, we should receive as much heat from the sky at night as from the sun by day. We know very well that this is not the case; indeed, there is no evidence of any heat at all reaching us from space except what is radiated from the stars. Since, then, the solar heat does not now return to the sun, we have to inquire what becomes of it, and whether a compensation may not at some time be effected whereby all the lost heat will be received back again. Now, if we trace the radiated heat into the wilds of space, we may make three possible hypotheses respecting its ultimate destiny:

(1) We may suppose it to be absolutely annihilated, just as it was formerly supposed to be annihilated when it was lost by friction. (2) It may continue its onward course through space forever. (3) It may, through some agency of which we have no conception, be ultimately gathered and returned to the sources from which it emanated. The first of these hypotheses is one which the scientific thinkers of the present day would not regard as at all philosophical. * * The second alternative—that the heat radiated from the sun and stars continues its onward course through space forever—is the one most in accord with our scientific conceptions. We actually receive heat from the most distant star visible in our telescopes, and this heat has, according to the best judgment we can form, been traveling thousands of years without any loss whatever.

If the hypothesis now under consideration be the correct one, then the heat radiated by the sun and stars is forever lost to them. There is no known way by which the heat thus sent off can be returned to the sun. It is all expended in producing vibrations in the ethereal medium, which constantly extend out farther and farther into space. The third hypothesis, like the first, is a simple conjecture permitted by the necessary imperfection of our knowledge. * * We may regard it as good as an observed fact, that the sun has been radiating heat into void space for thousands or even millions of years without any diminution of the supply.

The above entire batch of hypotheses, which no scientist can or will deny are founded on assumption, is full of contradictions and inconsistencies which should never find a place in any literature honored with the dis-tion of science. If it could be supposed for a moment that heat could radiate through space, claimed to be ten thousand-fold more frigid than the North Pole, billions and billions of miles—to say nothing of the comparatively small distance of 93,000,000 miles, the so called distance of the sun from the earth, it would constitute an assumption in contradiction to all the preconceived opinions held to by the so called scientists.

Suppose we take, for instance, the argument employed to prove that the earth is a mass of molten fluid, surrounded by a comparatively thin geologic crust. In penetrating the earth we find, so it is stated, that the deeper we penetrate the crust the more heated it becomes. Taking the ratio of this increase of temperature, we can determine the point where the heat would be intense enough to melt into a state of igneous fluidity any known rock, mineral, or metallic substance; hence it is concluded by the geologist, that the interior of the earth is a molten fire. By this process of reasoning we might equally determine that—because in the ascension of a balloon toward the sun there is a depression of temperature at a given ratio, which is a rapid one—we can prove that the sun itself, 93,000,000 miles from us, as claimed by the astronomers, is congealed into an iceberg as much colder, as the most frigid portion of the Arctic regions is colder than the molten mass which they say is beneath our feet.

It in no wise follows, because radiations of energy from the sun produce heat at, near, or under the surface of the earth, that the energy proceeds through space in the specific quality of heat. In fact, it is absolutely certain that the radiation of energy from the sun through space is not heat at all, but is transmuted to heat by the operation of the law of the correlation of energy. Light is merely one degree of the phenomena of electric action, but while identical in substance with heat, it is not the same in its present quality as light. Light is convertible to heat, or, stating it differently, the energy which produces the phenomenon of light, through correlation, will produce the phenomenon of heat. Heat is produced in our own atmosphere through the meeting of the descending or cathodic, and ascending or anodic currents of energy—one generated above, the other generated below.

In considering the differentiations and analogies of non-vital and biologic alchemy, it is of the utmost importance that the mind of the student divest itself of all mental predilection induced by a careless perusal of expressed opinions, in works regarded as authority, wherein are found the promiscuous conglomerations of thought derived from both schools—that of transmutation and that of atomic persistency and inconvertibility. Either all things—including matter and energy—are interconvertible, or matter is persistent and atomically eternal and unchangeable. Unfortunately for the progress of scientific development, the thoughts of both schools are so intermingled that comparatively few people are aware that the so called school of evolution, which embraces the nebular hypothesis, is strictly a transmutation school of thought; and it cannot consistently hold to its views on evolution, and at the same time entertain the modern chemical idea. Chemistry and evolution do not belong together.

All transpositions of matter, either atomic or molecular, are due to and depend upon the correlation of matter with energy. The strata of metals constituting the outer crust of the cosmic shell pass alternately through every phase of metallic quality. The gold stratum comprising the most circumferential lamina, before becoming stratified as gold occupied the space and quality of the silver lamina, and before being deposited as gold from its condition as silver, was first transmuted to energy. The anodic current from gold, meeting the cathodic current from silver, results in the double transformation of silver to gold and gold to silver, the process of deposition and sublimation being operative in both laminæ. This is true of all the laminæ comprising the complex rind.

Through non-vital solutions of interflow, ranging from center to circumference and from circumference to center, in which are contained the solvencies of substance, are determined places and forms of stratification and their relations, thence the determination of form itself in its universal aspect. Alchemy, therefore, becomes the science which must comprise the foundation of our knowledge of metamorphosis and the mutations of function. The laws or principles of alchemy are not confined to what are usually denominated physical things, or to what, in Koreshanity, is denominated the non-vital or the alchemico-organic field of thought, but, by the application of the great law of analogy, are transposed to the biologic or the anthropostic field;—correspondential laws being operative in the biological or, what is denominated in Koreshanity, organo-vital alchemy.

As fundamental properties of being we have quality, space, and time. With each of these three properties we entertain the concepts of inception, duration, and limitation. If we examine quality as a fundamental property of being, we entertain the ideas of high or low, interior or exterior, refined or gross, with their two extremes or limitations; the highest, most interior, most refined or subtle, and the lowest, most gross or exterior, with all intermediate conditions. If we examine space as a fundamental property of being, the mind rests upon a center as one limitation and a circumference as the other.

The Mission of Elijah the Prophet.

Biblical and Etymological Proof of the Lord's Personality; the Work of Elijah the Tishbite; Re-embodies as John the Baptist; the Elijah of this Age and the Great Harvest.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET is a term which falls upon the ear of humanity with less than its true weight of meaning. In the King James' version of the Scriptures, one is referred from the name Elijah to the margin, where it is noted that the word is Hebrew. Perhaps little would be gained by the English rendering, which would read God the Lord. Our incredulity springs from ineffectual effort to reach some unwilling minds with various information, parcel of which is that Lord God has been the appellation of more than the recognized One. More or less roundabout in manner of evasion, more or less snarled in sophisms, according to temperament and resource, are the usual rejoinders of the mind shut against the truth. But our Hibernian friend was plain, simple, and without apology. We had slowly enunciated the closing words of the sixth verse of twenty-ninth Deuteronomy: "Ye have not eaten bread, neither have ye drunk wine nor strong drink: that ye might know that I [Moses] am the Lord your God." The eye, bent to detect some trick, took on a ludicrously puzzled expression. Almost snatching the Book, he scanned the text with unfeigned astonishment and ejaculated: "Well now, mum, I jest don't think them wur-r-ds mane exactly what they say!" and he retired unapproachable behind this wall of rebuttal.

Humanity in its state of incubation, as little as the chick of such degree, is not cognizant of the phases of its progress, neither the attendant phases of Deific progress and manifestation. It is equally unappreciative concerning the twenty-four-thousand-year cycle, in which, each in its order, the entirety of these coincidentals ultimate. They ultimate, as so many steps of advancement, in the perfected race which through conjunction, having become one with God, now constitutes the fulness of the Godhead bodily. Without the knowledge of Deific progress in the race, God the Lord, or Elijah, without raiment other than the girdle of skin and the sheep-skin mantle, is not a reverence-winning picture. God the Lord, author of heaven and earth, flying before the wrath of a woman; hiding himself in a cave; satisfying his hunger at the hand of the Arab (raven), or from the oil and meal of the widow's multiplied store, does not fulfil the pictures of ignorant imagery regarding the grandeur of God. In the common acceptation, his departure was the one point which in the spectacular, accords with Deific estate; yet, even Elisha's exclamation—"My Father, my Father"—when he saw him depart, fails of wide-spread conviction concerning his Divinity.

Earnestly we desire to bring into strong relief this truth: that the manifestation of Elijah the prophet was the appearance in the flesh, of God the Lord; moreover, that this flesh was of a quality to admit the perfecting process, after which it was consumed by the an-titype of the typical fire which he caused to descend in view of the prophets of Baal. We are free to confess our wish to present for consideration the rugged guise of the Man; for we recognize a purpose in the Biblical record of the scant vesture and severely homely life of Elijah the prophet, and the recital of kindred circumstances when John the Baptist is chronicled. "And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey." But, by the Lord Jesus, this same John was twice declared to be Elijah—God the Lord. (Matt. xi: 14, and xvii: 12.) By the same author these words were also pronounced: "Verily I say unto you, among them that are-born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." "My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all." Jno. x: 29. "My Father is greater than I. Jno. xiv: 28. This Father Spirit, God the Lord, was John's possession at birth, and made him "greater than all." When the Lord Jesus received the typical baptism of John in the waters of the Jordan, the antitypical baptism immediately followed; that is, the baptismal substance—Elijah—left John and went to the Christ in fulfilment of John's prophecy: "He must increase, but I must decrease." By this transmission the Christ became greater than John.

The essence of the mission of Elijah to the earlier stage of the Mosaic period, was to vitalize the line in which was being generated the righteous One, the perfected Seed of the universe. He mainly made possible the coming of the Christ through his baptism of Elisha with his double spirit—his ascending and descending degrees, which Elisha transmitted to the avenues of the generation of the Only Begotten. Nineteen hundred years ago Elijah again appeared to complete the work impelled through Elisha, and to fulfil his promise made through Jacob to Judah, contained in which were the words: "Thy father's children shall bow down before thee." His brethren, his father's children, when Judah had become the Christ, truly bowed before him as his Apostles.

And yet another character is to receive the adoration of these children of Jacob. "For behold we were binding sheaves in the field, and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and, behold, your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance to my sheaf." It must not be forgotten that as between Judah and Joseph, the latter received the greater promise. The Shepherd from Judah appeared nineteen hundred years ago, but that coming did not fulfil these words: "From thence [Joseph] is the Shepherd, the stone of Israel." That promised Shepherd is here, and his coming fulfils the promise to Joseph. He is Joseph, and environs Elijah the prophet who was promised to come before the great and dreadful day of the Lord. (He comes to close the work of the cycle; he comes attired and subsisting as other men.) The Lord Christ overcame and, conjoined to the Father, sat down in his Father's throne. "To him that overcometh ["the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death"] will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." This promise will be realized by Joseph, who, conjoined to God the Lord—Elijah—will perform all God's pleasure. Nineteen hundred years ago Elijah perfected the Seed—the one generated Son who was sown in the race. Now he comes to perfect the harvest of that planting, the 144,000 regenerated Sons, and his brethren, the sons of Jacob, will bow to him from whose theocrasis they will reap immortal life.

Can Bankers be Patriotic?

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

IN SPITE of all the fallacies that bankers teach for their own interests, and inspire others to teach, there is no substance in the universe which intrinsically possesses the qualities of money. Its sole quality, as the term itself teaches, is the fiat of the people expressed in government. Whatever government does rightly, then, is done in the name of, and by right of the people; and whatever that authority effects belongs, not to the individual but to community. As Gladstone correctly says, all its advantages belong to the people, not as individuals, but in common. The individual can rightfully have nothing more than the use of it, for the purpose for which it was created; that is, in effecting exchanges of products to supply his needs. For men to make it their calling to heap up this, which is not an ordinary commodity, but a convenient instrument created by the people solely to effect the exchange of commodities, in what are called banks, and make it plenty or scarce, as bankers do, selling it at high or low price as they choose, or withholding it from sale entirely, as they see that their own selfish interests dictate, is for them, not to coöperate with the just efforts of government to protect impartially the interests of the governed, which is its bounden duty, and only excuse for being, but, by the use of a power created only by government to render such impartial government of the people impossible.

The word patriot, in its root, means father, and unmistakably indicates that the only right and just government is in its nature paternal. But what kind of a father would that be who should provide means by which a very few of his children might, without work, become very rich, and necessarily in the process reduce the great mass of them to wage slaves and paupers? Patriotism is defined to be love of one's country; but a country that does not provide for the well-being of all its subjects has no right to their love—hence no right to be. Love of a country that suffers the few of its subjects to rob and enslave the mass of them is not pure patriotism, or, indeed, in the proper sense, patriotism at all. Love of country is love of its people. Love works no ill to the neighbor. The man whose acts necessarily work ill to the great mass of the citizens of his country cannot love his country—be patriotic.

We have abundantly shown that such are the acts—is the very calling—of bankers, hence they cannot be patriotic. But, says the objector, the world could not exist and do business without banks. If history tells us the truth, it managed to live quite comfortably down to some 600 years ago, and carry on weighty business affairs without them. It is safe to say that when the great mass of men come to know how much they cost, and that they render righteous government impossible, they will discover some better method of doing business. God made no mistake when he denounced and forbade all usury or increase for the loan of money, or anything that is loaned for usury or increase; and His law commanded the rich man to lend to the poor, not exacting usury of him, and forgiving the debt if he was not able to pay it at the seventh-year jubilee; and Jesus did not err when he commanded to lend, hoping for nothing again.

What Jesus performed as an object lesson and type when he overturned the tables of the money-changers, driving them out of God's typical temple, pouring out their money into the street, and calling their place of business a den of thieves, will soon find its antitypical fulfilment on a world-scale. In the new heavens and new earth, new church and new state, in which shall dwell righteousness, real patriotism will be possible—but there will be no bankers there.

Let us suppose the sun to be the center of the solar system. If the system has a center, then it also has a circumference. This is a fundamental law of form. The sun would be the center of the space embraced in his system. Either this center or its correlate circumference would be the origin of the activities engendered in the system. If the sun is the point of positive activity, then he would be the beginning or head of the system as to space; and though he had existed from all eternity, and is to be perpetuated to all eternity, during all these processions he would still be the beginning.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

DO THE PHYSIOLOGICAL and the psychic represent each a universe within itself so distinct that every effort to render the two convertible must fail? At the same time, are the correlations so close that the psychic activity is manifested only through the physiological? These questions present two of the most interesting subjects of inquiry to the student of psychology. The brain cell is the nexus, and if it can be forced to yield its secrets, answers may be found. Here in the laboratory, the finer portions of the arterial blood sent up from the body meet the nerve fluid. Here, thought or mental energy coming from thousands of minds flows in to meet the particular quality of one mind. Mental energy should be distinguished as pneumatic and psychic, belonging either to the spirit or to the soul; the former is the general term for the intellect, the latter for the loves as embraced by the will. If thought or mental energy simply manifests itself through the physiological agent, the brain cell, what is its origin? No satisfactory answer to this question has been found. But suppose that the destructibility of matter and the possibility of converting every form of matter to a corresponding quality of spirit, and vice-versa, has been proved already by methods that appeal to the senses and the reason. This is just what Koreshan Science claims, and its basis of proof is further corroborated by the testimony of the Scriptures, where it is stated that God, who is spirit, became flesh in the person of the Lord, who reconverted that flesh to Holy Spirit and baptized his Disciples on the day of Pentecost. Is it not reasonable to conclude that thought, or the pneumatic and psychic energy, is actually generated in the cell by alchemical combustion? The uniformity of law is generally admitted, and the discovery of the great law of the correlation of matter as supplementing that of the correlation of energy furnishes a key to the deeper mysteries of life. It disposes of the theory expressed in the opening question, showing that no departments of the universe are unrelated. It is the operation of this law that binds all existing things into a universe. In reply, therefore, to the question, "What is mind?" the true psychology makes answer that it is formed by the transformation of the material substances of supply taken into the body. Food is converted to blood and nerve fluid. In the brain cell they are further transformed to spirit and soul, or the substances of intellect and love. A recent writer in discussing Physiological Psychology, says that it cannot be settled whether the matter consumed in the brain cells is supplied by the blood directly or is part of the brain cell. The friction of thought wears away the matter of the cell, and in the alchemical combustion the atoms are destroyed and converted to spirit.

Koreshanity is not a system of mysticism. This statement is made with emphasis for the benefit of those who are seeking information in regard to its doctrines. It exploits the mysteries of the universe and furnishes a scientific explanation for all phenomena, but its statements appeal to reason and are predicated upon the principles of geometry and physics. It does not advocate going into the silence, sitting for development, nor the cultivation of what are termed occult powers. The word occult simply means hidden, and while Koreshanity reveals the laws that govern things hitherto unknown by the multitude, it shows the danger attending the methods employed by the various schools of mysticism that flourish as never before. It fulfils the purpose for which the Society for Psychical Research was instituted, and in which it has failed beyond the fact of indicating the genuine character of certain manifestations. A few simple laws and axioms of universal application suffice to admit the student to the secrets of being. To know God, man must study the physical cosmos which Koreshan Science denominates the alchemico organic world, looking upon it as part of an organic whole, maintained in perpetuity by the law of alchemy. While it calls out the deepest affections of the human heart in reverential love toward God by showing his true attributes, it opposes every form of emotional religion which makes feeling not science the arbiter of conduct. Mysticism claims subjective illumination and special revelations from other spheres. Koreshan Science points to laws and facts objectively proved, and invites the logical mind to reason from this basis. Some persons are disposed to look upon the doctrine of correspondences as mystical and puerile. This is a mistaken notion. Natural objects are the correspondents of ideas, otherwise they could not exist.

The origin of commerce is found in the interchange of vital energies between God and man. Its correspondent in the physical world lies in the reciprocal activity between the central sun and the environing crust of the cellular earth. As the fuel to supply the solar fires comes from the levic energies sent up from the circumference, holding all the material substances of the universe in solution, so God derives from man the spiritual substances of renewal. Human life is exalted and dignified by the thought that its office is to contribute to the completion and happiness—nay more, to the very existence of Deity himself. The lowest forms of animate creation are on their way to mingle with the ethereal essences of love and wisdom uniting in the Godhead. The degraded savage with his brute instincts will pass from embodiment to embodiment, until he is morally and intellectually ripe enough to furnish nutriment which God may assimilate. His progress from one stage to another is dependent upon successive baptisms by which he receives an influx of good and truth from the Lord. This is commerce. In consideration of its divine origin, all the operations of secular commerce should strictly conform to the principles of equity. It is evident that commercial law is wholly exclusive of competition. All the substances of the physical cosmos send up their tribute to the sun and it in turn sends back wherewithal to supply the need of each. Even thus, in the kingdom of our Father, none are left out, none are neglected. There is no necessity for competition, no possibility of entertaining such an evil.

The proposal to institute a universal peace propaganda to abolish war is evidently futile in view of the animal instincts of humanity. Who can glance over a single edition of one of the great daily newspapers and note its record of vice, rapacity, and crime without realizing that peace is possible only through the transformation of the desires? Who are the peacemakers, and where can they be found? Study the conditions that prevail in every country and determine what nation has evolved to a point of superiority that fits it to fulfil the office. Did the white race show its mildness and sweet reasonableness in China? Do the race wars of America with their attendant lynchings indicate that the ethics of Christianity are practiced as well as preached? When the church joined itself with paganism under Constantine, the spirit of the meek and lowly Savior, who exclaimed in the hour when he was given over to the hands of his enemies: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," had so far declined that its members no longer refused to bear arms. The peacemakers are to be called the children of God. If no existing race is found worthy to bear the title, it must apply to some higher genus yet to come. Koreshanity is teaching the laws that govern the reappearance of such a genus. Hence the universal peace propaganda must be the Koreshan movement.

The art treasures of the world should be given to the people for their enjoyment and refinement. The palaces of the old world are being rifled by millionaire collectors who consign objects of historical value and world wide interest to private galleries accessible only to those who have ample means for travel; persons of this class have visited foreign countries and seen these treasures before. The laboring man who needs such a means of education and can never go abroad, is excluded from participating in what really belongs to him. Is he not heir to the best that the civilization of the past can furnish? Who deserves it better, or needs it more? In many cities the finest museums are free to the public only upon certain days, usually limited to two in the week. If the capital which the workman produces was not diverted from its legitimate uses by the money kings, he might take of the fruit of his labors in the shape of national museums, theatres, and concerts maintained for his benefit, like the parks. Those who heap up wealth know how to evade taxation, so an immense stream of revenue is prevented from flowing into the coffers of the state. When the human system becomes so thoroughly congested that all the currents of life are obstructed, death is near. The congestion prevailing in every part of the competitive system, by which all the streams of justice are impeded, argues that its end is near. There is something better in sight.

A deeper spiritual meaning lies buried in the myth of Atlantis, the lost continent. The name continent, has been given to the larger divisions of land upon the habitable surface of the concave shell of the earth. It means to hold with, or that which contains, referring to the earth as containing life. The lost continent is typical of the loss of the Holy Grail, the receptacle which contained the wine of the last supper. The blood of Christ, of which the wine was a type, is the life of Christ, and the continent of this life, the arch natural body as the receptacle of divine truth and good, has been lost ever since the Lord converted his body to spirit. In a corresponding manner, all idea of the earth as containing man has been lost under the Copernican hypothesis, which locates him upon the convex surface of the sphere. The lost continent, or the truth concerning the earth, is being raised up in the Cellular Cosmogony, from the deep where it was submerged by the waters of fallacy. At the same time, in the going forth of the doctrine of immortality in the body, the spiritual continent, or the arch-natural body, is being resurrected from the church where it was buried. In the classical myth, Atlantis was the happy land in the far West.

If it is only necessary to die and pass into the spiritual world in order to know all truth, why is it that the revelations which purport to come from those in subjective spheres never convey scientific knowledge beyond what is known in the natural world? The answer is clear; either the truth is not to be found in the world of spirits, or the communications that profess to come in this manner are fraudulent. In either case they are valueless, and the logical inference plain—that truth is to be sought here and now. Delays are dangerous. He who postpones the search for knowledge, saying, "I shall know all that when I get to heaven," may find a different region beyond the tomb.

It is written that the way of the transgressor is hard. In the ultimate sense, Christ is the transgressor for he goes across from the covenant relation where he rests above the law, to the state of subjection to it, by planting himself in the race and entering fully into all the states of sin. No man treads a path so thorny; no man knows the sorrows and the labors of the Son of man until experience brings him to the same exaltation of sacrifice, whereby he descends to sound the same deeps of mental and physical agony.

The riches of Christ are called unsearchable because they cannot be explored until the veil—that is to say, his flesh—is taken away. So long as man is in the mortal body he can form little concept of what it will be to come into the character and condition of Him in whom all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge lie hidden. When the physical body has been converted to spiritual energy and immortality is attained, the things which God has prepared for them that love him, may be known.

The ship of the future is the air-ship. When the ideal government is realized in earth, even the ship of state, now so badly foundered, will be able to soar.

Love is the "open sesame" to the divine kingdom.

Meaning of Abraham's Temptation.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Will you please give your version of the story of Abraham's temptation, Genesis xxii: 1-14, this being the subject of the International Sunday School lesson for August 25.—A READER.

The covenant which God made with Abraham stipulated that he should become the father of many nations. In token of this agreement between himself and Almighty God, his name was changed from Abram (ascending Father) to Abraham, meaning the Father of a multitude of nations. Again in Genesis xxii: 18, the promise reads: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Abraham was the inceptive point of the Jewish dispensation. Christ was the promised Seed. He was Abraham reincarnated, and in him all the spirits of the Jewish age were resurrected; but the advent of the Messiah was not the fulfilment of the covenant. The seed which was involved or generated from Abraham to Jesus must be planted and bring forth its harvest at the end of the succeeding age (the Christian age), when all the nations of the earth (the church will be blessed in the manifestation of the offspring of Christ, the Sons of God with the immortal body. Then, and not until then, will Abraham, who was Christ, become the Father of many nations.

Now, in order that the covenant might be established and the promised Seed produced, Abraham was commanded to sacrifice the love of natural offspring, or the love of begetting on the lower plane, in order that he might beget the spiritual son by the higher laws of generation. Every animal represents some affection of the human heart, and the ram is symbolic of the love of propagation. On the higher plane it refers to the Lord's desire to reproduce himself in the Sons of God regenerated from the human race. When Abraham had testified his willingness to sacrifice the lower desires which had brought him into the land of Moriah (rebellion against God), he lifted up his eyes and beheld the ram that God had provided. He saw the Messiah who was to come, in type. The Lord Jesus is called the Lamb or the Ram of God, by virtue of the fact that his supreme desire was to beget many Sons into glory.

The Heart of the Fathers.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Will you kindly devote a little space in your columns to explain what is meant by the passage, "He shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse"?—I. E. B., Chicago, Ill.

The preceding verse shows that this passage refers to the office of the Sign of the Lord's coming: "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." The Sign is the Messenger, whose mission is to announce and effectuate the consummation of the covenant. Knowing what is involved in the covenant, it is evident that to turn the heart of the fathers to the children is to conjoin those who are coming up in the resurrection to their higher principles, or to enable them to awaken into their eternal consciousness after ages of experience in sin and suffering. The heart refers to the loves or the will, and it is by turning together the ascending and descending degrees of affection that conjunction is effected between the celestial heavens, the order of Melchizedek, and lower humanity. The Gods reincarnate themselves in their offspring, and come forth from the invisible center into a visible and tangible bodily expression in the natural world. In an antithetical sense, to turn the heart of the fathers to the children is to perpetuate the processes of natural generation according to which the fathers are re-embodied in their offspring by the attraction of consanguinity. This is the draconic power—a reflex of the conjunctive office of the Messenger.

Water a Symbol of Science.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—What is the birth of water spoken of in John iii: 3? Were those who received the Lord's baptism at the end of the Jewish age, born of water?—INQUIRER.

Nineteen hundred years ago, at the time of the Lord's advent, the sign Aries was just passing into the zodiacal constellation Pisces. The fish signifies proliferation; during the Piscatorial dispensation, the process of regeneration by which the Lord multiplies himself in his offspring, begotten spiritually when he overshadowed the church in his theocrasis, has been going forward. Water corresponds to science—divine natural truth. Those who are born of water will be indoctrinated into the science of the physical earth. The Lord Jesus, though he involved that knowledge, did not bring it into outward expression. His Disciples were born into spiritual but not into natural truth. Now the passage of the sign into the constellation Aquarius, the Water-Carrier, marks the time for the birth of water. Those who accept the science of immortal life, which pertains to the physical earth or to the natural body, will experience the new birth into the immortal body and will see the kingdom of God by entering into the perfection of his attributes—spirit, soul, and body forming the holy triunity.

What Constitutes Success?

It Lies in Performance of Uses and not in Accumulating Millions.

Why is it that the only men who are eagerly interviewed and importuned to write articles on "The Secret of Success"—the one article that never lacks interest—are multi-millionaires? asks the New York World.

Are there, then, no successful men but multi-millionaires? There are not over 5,000 of them in the country. Carlyle once described England as "inhabited by thirty millions of people, mostly fools;" and our own country, if none in it have succeeded but the multi-millionaires, may be described as "inhabited by seventy-six millions of people, mostly failures."

Do we not make a grand mistake in fostering the idea that only the Rockefellers, the Morgans, the Carnegies, the Schwabs, the James J. Hills, and the men of that ilk—the men who are chiefly distinguished as having "made big money"—can tell the rising young manhood of America "the secret of success"? "Success" is a glittering word, capable of many meanings. A man is not necessarily a failure, however, because he has not made a million, or a half, or a quarter of a million—or not even $100. Some very successful men have never tried to make money. They preferred to make something else, and if they achieved their desires they succeeded—from their own standpoint, at least.

Agassiz would not accept $500 a night to lecture. "I have no time to make money," he said. Scientific inquiry and discovery were objects in his life—and he succeeded in pursuit of them. Wellington, after conquering Mysore, was proffered a gift of $500,000 by the corrupt East India Co. He refused to touch it. Piling up "big money" was not his idea of success either.

When John Hancock, one of the signers of our great Declaration, was sitting in the constitutional Congress, a letter was read from Washington suggesting the destruction of Boston by bombardment. Hancock was one of Boston's largest property owners, but he rose promptly to his feet and said: "All my property is in Boston, but if the expulsion of the British army from it require that it be burnt to ashes, issue the order immediately." There was another man who did not believe that "success" was only another name for "millions." Charles Sumner refused to lecture at any price. "My time belongs to Massachusetts and the nation," he said. Big money was not his idol.

Thomas Jefferson died insolvent. Was he, therefore a failure? Abraham Lincoln died a poor man. Was he, also, a failure? Grant died so poor that his opinion on "how to succeed" would have no value to this money-mad generation, even if he had not left it. Soon or later, there will be a reaction in this search for "the secret of success" among the trust kings and the sudden-rich heroes of the stock ticker. "I know of no great man," says Voltaire, "except those who have rendered great services to the human race." Judged by that true standard, the mere makers of big money cannot tell our young men the "secret of success." They do not know it themselves.—Kansas Agitator.

Low Fares for Workers.

European Railways that Give Reductions to Laborers.

There is some interesting information in a recently published parliamentary report containing the replies to a dispatch which Lord Salisbury sent to the British representatives in Bulgaria, France, and Germany, asking for information concerning the facilities for locomotion and the special fares accorded to workmen in the neighborhood of the large cities. It appears that on the Belgian state railways a single journey ticket good for six working days for any distance within three miles or a little more costs a trifle over 10 cents. Beyond that the prices increase in a slightly decreasing proportion. For instance, the charge for a 7½ mile journey is not quite 3 cents per trip, or about 17 cents for six.

For return tickets the corresponding prices are rather less than double. Seven-day tickets can be obtained, but Sunday traveling is slightly discouraged by a rather higher rate. There is a special tariff for greater distances, the maximum being about 62 miles. A workman, however, can travel 25 miles daily from Monday to Saturday for about 40 cents a week. To claim these advantages he must be engaged on manual, not artistic work, under the order of others. Similar reductions are made by most of the private railway companies, and the fares on light railways and tramways are also lowered—at any rate, before and after certain hours of the day.

In France and Germany also the genuine workman obtains passes valid during certain hours at a considerable reduction, amounting sometimes to as much as 80 per cent. In France tramway companies are not bound to lower their fares for work people, and as a rule have not done so, but the running of special cars for them has been made obligatory in some recent charters. Similar principles are adopted in Germany, and special cheap trains for workmen have been run on several of the London suburban roads for a long time with satisfactory financial results. In this case of course the concessions of the companies are voluntary.

It is plain that the only practicable way of relieving the congestion of the tenement districts in great cities is by enabling the workmen who inhabit them to live at a greater distance from business centers, in localities where space is more ample and rents more reasonable, by providing them with cheap, regular, and moderately rapid means of transportation. Private railroad enterprise cannot be expected to compete in cheap service with those which are controlled or subsidized by the state, but there is a vast discrepancy between the 5 cents minimum of our transit systems and the continental rates.—New York Post.

Another Edition Ready.

The Fourth Edition of the Cellular Cosmogony Completed and Ready for all Orders.

We are glad to announce that after some delay, a new edition of THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY is just off the press. The Guiding Star Publishing House is now able to fill all orders for this book, for which there is great demand. A new chapter by KORESH has been added in the form of an Addendum, illustrating some simple principles of geoliner and distal foreshortening, which greatly enhances the value of the work.

This new edition affords all our friends and propagandists opportunity for renewed efforts in the work of getting Koreshan Universology before the people. Thousands of COSMOGONIES are already distributed throughout America and Europe—and yet it is only the beginning of the great conflict and contest of systems. But further and numerous orders give the great work another impetus in the direction of ultimate success and triumph.—EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.

An Educational Folly.

School System Forces Children to Study Uncongenial Subjects.

Harold E. Gorst has radical ideas on the subject of education. He is quoted in Current Literature as saying: "Our existing school system consists in lumping together masses of school children in what are called classes, and stuffing into their heads collectively a quantity of knowledge based, not upon the individual bent of each child, but upon a fixed code and curriculum. The principle is to set forty or fifty children doing and thinking precisely the same thing. The result is inevitable. There is a top of the class and a bottom of the class. Those who reach the former are regarded as the clever ones; those who remain at the latter are looked upon as dunces.

The classification is wholly unfair and grossly idiotic. All that it really reveals is the perniciousness of a system which creates stupid children by forcing upon their brains subjects for which they are not receptive. The fool of the Latin class might distinguish himself in natural history, but the pedagogue goes on stuffing him with syntax and grammar, regardless of the fact that his mind is absorbed in beetles, and that he never attends school without a pocketful of mice. Not only must this method of teaching 'en bloc' be abolished altogether, but teaching in itself, as we understand the term, should be rigorously avoided. Every encouragement ought to be given to pupils to learn. There should be less reading and more reflection. The pernicious custom of learning by rote ought to be inscribed upon the penal code. Hanging would be too light a punishment for the teacher who destroyed the minds of his charges by making them commit 'Casabianca' to memory."—Exchange.

Cost of the Steel Strike.

According to an estimate made in the Pittsburg dispatch to The Record-Herald yesterday, the steel strike to date had cost nearly $7,000,000, apportioned as follows:

TO THE COMPANIES.

American Sheet Steel.....	$1,200,000
American Steel Hoop.....	1,680,000
American Tin Plate.....	1,080,000
Total.....	$3,960,000

TO THE MEN.

Fifty thousand men for twelve days.....	$1,800,000
Twenty-five thousand men for twenty-four days (since July 1).....	900,000
Total.....	$2,700,000
Grand total.....	6,660,000

It must be evident to the least initiated that the only figures in this estimate entitled to credence are those that give the losses of the men. Here the data is definitely known. So many men idle at $3 a day for twelve days, and so many for twenty-four days is easily calculated. The result, $2,700,000, therefore approximates the loss to the strikers.

But there is no such positive data by which to estimate the losses of the companies. Here all is self-evident guesswork. All the companies have lost is the profits they might have made during the time their works are shut down. They have saved the wages not paid to the strikers, and when they resume work they can catch up to their orders.

The strikers can never get back the $2,700,000 in wages which they surrendered in the effort to unionize all the steel mills of the country.—Record-Herald.

Wage-Slaves in Moravia.

An official report just issued by the Austrian minister of the interior at Vienna, on the button-making trade in Moravia has created a sensation. The report in part follows:

Average hours of work for men, nineteen; average hours of labor for women, seventeen; for children over ten years of age, twelve, and for children under ten years, eight.

The average earnings of a man are 30 cents weekly; of a woman, 20 cents weekly, and for a child, 8 cents weekly. The average earnings of a whole family varies from $22 to $30 yearly. The maximum sum which a full-grown man can possibly earn is 50 cents weekly, but this requires superhuman effort and is rarely accomplished. The children have to begin when three years of age, and work day and night when they are five. The report states this as a typical case:

A family composed of father, mother, and three children live in one room, which is both home and workshop. The room is ten by ten feet and six feet high, has one small window and contains four chairs and a table. The inmates have never seen a bed. Their total collective earnings are $40 yearly, and their expenditures for the last year have been: bread, $25; rent, $5; rent of plot to grow potatoes, $2; flour $5; petroleum, $2; milk, 50 cents; miscellaneous, 50 cents. They never eat meat and cannot afford beer or tea, coffee or tobacco. Clothes are not mentioned in the items of expenditure.—Social Democratic Herald.

Subtle Influences of Evil.

"There are persons in this city, and in other cities, who pass from man to man and from woman to woman, repeating evil words which are deadly in their results, and yet you cannot evaporate the truth from the falsehood, and point out the slander which lurks therein. Perhaps words were not used, for words are not necessary to the destruction of some brother or sister. A drop of the lip, an arched eyebrow, the shrug of the shoulder, even an emphatic silence may do the deadly work. You congratulate yourself that the days of persecution are over; and so they are, as to the crucifixions of the flesh. You never burned a human being alive; you never rejoiced over the death shriek of someone who was suffering the quick or slow process of physical death; but did you never rob some man or woman of friends, or take away from them their good name, or gleefully repeat some miserable gossip, or purposely misinterpret their acts or words? We live by that on which we feed. If we feed on gossip, we become slanderers. If we feed on evil speaking, we become vicious."—Exchange.

Experimental Chemistry.

Empirical Methods, Apart from Theory, Which have Benefited Agriculture.

"Undoubtedly one of the most wonderful discoveries of modern chemistry has to do with the soil," says The Saturday Evening Post. "It has been ascertained that the most barren land can be made rich simply by adding to it certain mineral elements which cost but little. On this basis it is estimated that the United States will be able eventually to maintain 500,000,000 people—more than one third of the present population of the world. It is merely a question of supplying the requisite quantities of nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash. The last two are readily obtainable at small expense, whereas the first may be supplied either by furnishing to the soil condensed nitrogen in the shape of slaughter waste, or nitrate of soda, or by planting clover, beans, or peas, which have an affinity for nitrogen and absorb it from the atmosphere. It is now known that nitrogen is the most important plant food, and inasmuch as this element composes four fifths of the atmosphere, the question is merely to absorb it into the soil. It has also come to be understood that only 2 per cent of the material of plants is derived from the soil, the remaining 98 per cent being drawn from the air and from water."

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland floss, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

We have established four new departments to our work. Orders promptly filled by mail or express. Correspondence and patronage solicited.

Our High-Grade, Hand-Finished Razor Strops.

A good razor is of little use unless it has a fine edge, and that cannot be obtained in any other way than with a good strop and a knowledge of how to use the same and keep it in condition. A strop in poor shape means a razor in poor condition. Full directions with every strop.

We manufacture our celebrated High-grade Razor Strops, the best strops manufactured. If you shave, you need one; you would be delighted with one of these. The prices are low considering the superior quality of the goods and workmanship.

Single, horse-hide, 50c. Double swing shell and canvas, several grades from 75c to $1.25. Extra fine material and finish, 1.50. Packed in neat box. Also strops at 10c., 25c., and 40c.—send 2c. for postage on orders less than 50c. Mail orders a specialty.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communitistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Koreshanity's Revelation of Universal Mysteries.

The Dawn of the New Age of Progress ; the Reading of the Language of Causation as Expressed in Cosmic Form ; the Purpose of Koreshanity in Relation to Human Redemption.

THAT WORD KORESHANITY is a puzzler to many of the Pan-American visitors. What does it mean? It means that the world has reached the end of the age, and is now entering from the Piscatorial era into the Aquarian dispensation. That class of people engrossed in the ordinary activities of the world involving its speculative tendencies,—it comprises a great majority,—has no conception of the significance of what is meant by dispensations as pertaining to the progress of the world. Human progress is defined by cycles, and these are determined by the movements of the sun, moon, planets, and stars in their relations to specific points on the earth. All cycles are partially recurrent until they are complete in the culminating cycle of all the series, when there is a return to the initial or absolute beginning point of everything in creation. There is no creation in that sense of creation or beginning generally believed in by the so called Christian world at large. In such a sense, the universe never had a beginning. It has been here from everlasting to everlasting.

The universe is a complete whole, involving all of the properties of a thing. Every specific thing constitutes a part of the general whole. There is a material universe; the term means one turn, from the Latin uni- versum, unus, one, and vertere, to turn. It is the to pan of the Greek; the mundus of the Latin. It involves the idea of one great thing having a specific and universal form, in which the functions work in one harmonious whole. We may therefore say that the universe possesses all of the properties of form. As one of the most distinctive properties of form is limitation, we can declare, without fear of successful refutation, that the universe has this property, and consequently is limited. We do not dwell in an illimitable universe. This conception is due to ignorance. The ordinary mentality is so puerile that it cannot define the form and function of the universe, therefore it says it is illimitable—as the easiest way out of an unsolved problem. When the would-be scientist declares the universe to be illimitable, he places its study beyond the jurisdiction of the human mind, and denies himself the right to entertain any but assumptive conclusions regarding its forms or its functions.

The universe is one, and it is material in its form. Limitation is therefore one of its characteristic and distinctive properties. When a man says it is illimitable, he simply declares himself incompetent to pass upon any one thing belonging to it as a whole, and calling it scientific. Every subordinate form of the universe is relative to the universal form. No subordinate form is understood until its relation is known to every other subordinate form, and the whole is known as the universal form. Function and form are coördinates—co-equal and co-eternal. Reason—founded upon the demonstrated premise of Koreshanity—determines that the universe in its material existence possesses the properties of all subordinate things, and that it is limited because it exists. Its form not only possesses limitation, but that limitation is determined by the laws of geometry. A knowledge of the form and function of the universe gives us the power to define the laws of recurrent cycles, and enables us to denote the character of the end and the beginning of the ages.

The universe contains the massive mentality of the universe, in the aggregate mental force of the human race. This aggregate mentality has a focal point in the race, as the mental nucleus of all intellectual and affectional forces. Mentality does not, nor can it exist independently of brains; therefore brains have existed eternally for the purpose of performing the functions of the mind. It is for this reason that there must be recurrent points of mental focalizations, in which creation has its recurrent beginnings. "In the beginning the Gods created the heaven and the earth." We have employed the term Gods, because this is the original Hebrew, and we have no authority to pervert the Scriptures for the support of religious creeds. "In the beginning," involves no indication of a purpose to define a time when the world had no previous existence. This may be illustrated in the laws of motion and function which determine the cycle of Mazzaroth, which is the cycle of the movement of the sign through the ecliptic; this embraces a period of twenty-four thousand years.

The sign moves about fifty seconds of a degree every year, and it requires a definite period of time to complete this cycle. When it is completed the end of the sign has come, and the time of the beginning is reached. As the sign is moving on the ecliptic, there is a corresponding movement in the progress of human life; and when the end of the cycle is reached in the physical heavens, the end of the cycle of human progress is also reached. Nineteen hundred years ago the sign Aries culminated in its own constellation Aries, hence came the end of the cycle and the beginning of the new one. The end was defined by the manifestation of John the Baptist, and the beginning of the new cycle was represented by the Lord Jesus. The life of John flowed into the Lord, who constituted the end and the beginning, because he was the beginning of the creation of God, as it was expressly declared of him: "I am the first and the last, the beginning and the end, the Alpha and the Omega."

The Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, was the beginning of God's creation. This beginning can come at any time when the proper cycle is complete. It may be plainly seen that the beginning referred to in the Bible does not signify a time when the world did not exist, and that then the Lord God went to work to create a world. The beginning of the creation of God was when the Lord planted the germ of his own life in the human race, to generate himself in the race for the purpose of raising up from that race the Son of God for two distinct ends; the one, to perpetuate the throne and altar of God; the other, to raise up from that Son's planting the Sons of God at the end of the Christian dispensation.

Koreshanity is to the Christian dispensation what the Christian dispensation was to the Jewish age of the world. When the Christian dispensation was ushered in, the sign Aries was moving out of the constellation Aries into the constellation Pisces or Fishes. The Christian era began with the movement of the sign Aries through the constellation Pisces. The sign is now reaching its culmination in the constellation Pisces, and is moving into the constellation Aquarius. This is the scientific constellation of the twelve Zodiacal constellations, and represents the scientific age or dispensation of the world's progress. This is because water is the universal solvent, and as the Water-Carrier has the solution of all scientific questions, he initiates the age, in the revolution of science. It is not reasonable that a power that has been opposed during its existence, to all the principles of the Christian faith, should be the power in the world to determine the premise upon which universal science is predicated. It is a fact that the present premise of the Copernican or Newtonian system of astronomy was given to the world by the Mahometan power. The premise of modern astronomy is the assumption that the world is convex. This assumption of Copernicus was derived from the Ptolemaic system.

The stress that we are laying upon the constitution of the physical universe, is not that in itself it is so important, but that a knowledge of the laws of the forms and functions of the physical (alchemico-organic) universe must constitute the foundation of the knowledge of theology, of all human relations, and hence of the laws of the organic construction of the social fabric. The science of religion must be derived from a knowledge of the form and function of the alchemico-organic world, because the world is the utmost expression of the creative power and constitutes the language of expression. If we can read this language we can understand causation. We may define the character of Deity if we can thus correctly read. This reading must define the limitations of the language of cause.

It is within the province of Koreshanity to bring down the New Jerusalem, to define her location, and to build her habitation. Her first descent is into the Prophet who represents the end and the beginning of the age. Her second degree of descent is into the Sons of God, who will constitute the Order of Melchizedek, the hundred forty and four thousand who will stand on Mount Zion; that is, in the state of righteous integrity at the end of the old and beginning of the new dispensation. From this, she will occupy the beautiful city which will follow in the wake of the artificial cities that are following one another in rapid succession, as if for the purpose of furnishing a contrast of what God can do as compared with the best that men can do to display the ingenuity and constructive skill of human possibility. Koreshanity will build the Capitol city of the world; it will be located at the point where the vitellus of the alchemico-organic cosmos specifically determines. The position of the sign which marks the head of the coming dispensation, will define the location of this greatest of cities. The world will be governed from this Capitol.

Koreshanity is the science of all sciences, in which is involved the science of religion, the science of theology, and these include the science of immortal life. Immortal life will obtain in the body now at the end of the Christian age of the world. This mortal will put on immortality here in the body; this corruptible will put on incorruptibility now and here. The time is at hand when there shall be no more death with those who accept the Lord in the fulness of the significance of his mission to the world. The world has waited for thousands of years to reach the science of immortal life, and now that science will be applied to accomplish that for which the human race has waited. Immortality to the race will be the result of the application of the higher physiological laws to our lives. This science is of the will and the intellect. It will proceed from a perfect understanding of all the laws of life, and thence a thorough application of those laws.

It is not the purpose of this article to specifically define the laws of immortal life; we will say, however, that they are contained in the scientific comprehension and exposition of the ten laws or principles of Moses. This exposition is given in the scientific publications of the Koreshan Unity, and cannot be found in any other literature of the world. We are giving to the world the science of immortal life, and we will make it possible for that portion of the race which is attaining its first fruitage, to come into life. The Christian world does not generally know that the prayer, "Thy kingdom come, and thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," means that the kingdom of immortality is to be established here in the natural world. This is one of the hard facts for the consideration of the race. Man reaches immortal life at the end of the Christian age now at its close.

Koreshanity is the name of the new church and state, the name of the new heaven and the new earth; the old heaven and the old earth shall pass away. This literally signifies that the old governments and old church will come to naught, and that there will be established a new church and a new government, wherein will dwell the righteousness of God. The Christian dispensation is at its end. It is unmistakably disintegrating, and it does not require the eye of a prophet to discern this obvious fact. There is nothing left in the Christian church to recommend it to the favor of the world. It has completed its mission in the bringing forth of the new church and age. Then let it pass. "Come out of her, my people," before her desolation carries you down in her inevitable ruin. "Blessed are they that DO his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

The Koreshan System of Social Theocracy.

The Two Extremes of Modern Government; the Evils of Democracy and the Fallacies of Democratic Socialism; the Coming of the Great Universal Empire.

THE PHYSICAL STRUCTURE of organic existence, when deprived of its animus, is in all respects the same as when moved by the forces of functional activity, except that in the former condition it is deprived of its spirit; that is, so far as the form is concerned, it is precisely the same. We speak here of the ordinary vidual man, as an organism inoperative and operative. The spirit moving the organism is animal and mental force. What is true of the vidual body is also true of the mass. The vidual possesses and is moved by a definite head, and that head, by a central corpusculum in which the fibers of the mass have their terminus. The body does not control the head, but the head controls the body. When the body loses that relation to the head in which the functions cannot and do not control the activities of the physical mechanism; when every corpuscle or cell begins to act independently of the central control, then the body passes to dissolution because the disintegrating forces, which are in a state of chaos (anarchy), resolve the body to the elements of inorganic nature, whence they may be reorganized into living form.

There are two extremes of general government in the world today—the autocratic and the democratic. The so called civilized nations have forms of governmental organization all the way from these two extremes, and the advantages to the people governed are about equally discriminated. The vidual (individual) under the restrictions of British law is as well protected and possesses the same liberty as the vidual under the power of the laws of the United States. The male population of the United States is more generally electoral than the male population of the British government, but the government itself is more autocratic than the government of England, and a thousand-fold more corrupt.

The Flaming Sword.

The causes of the corruption in government differ somewhat under the two forms of control. We shall speak especially of corruption in our own democracy. The people vote—that is all. The primaries so called are slums, and are controlled by the political demagogues because the masses of the people are too busy being robbed by the speculators in the blood and muscle of the masses, or too busy sucking this same blood. The intriguing and professional politician is left to perform the duties of the otherwise busy populace. If our democratic politics has its initiation in the slums, it does not require a philosopher to indicate its terminal activity. Our government is corrupt, because its people are corrupted.

It is not our purpose in this article to enter into an analysis of the various phases of corruption which mark the dissolute character of our present degradation; but as a matter of illustration, we will offer the character of the rum and beer traffic in the United States. This will afford an object lesson of the hopelessness of any expectation of reform, independently of some spirit to actuate the masses besides that which controls humanity at large today. The legislation which controls the whisky traffic, so far as the general finance is concerned, is one branch merely of the struggle to maintain the treasury of the government. The people want the whisky, and the government wants the money that the consumption of the whisky procures. It is seen that the relationship between a rapidly growing multitude which drinks the vile poison, and the treasury department is reciprocal. There are some people who do not nominally endorse the rum and beer traffic, but there are none who vote at all in either of the great national parties, that do not vote for it. What is true of rum is true of a thousand other things; but as an indication of our hopelessness on common lines, this illustration is sufficiently broad and analytic.

Suppose we transform the present form of democracy to a social democracy, with the same kind of people, actuated by the same kind of spirit—is there prospect of improvement? The prevailing sentiment of the people of this country and of the world is competitive. That proportion of the mass which desires a social revolution is in the minority, and greatly so. Shall we transform the tyranny of republican despotism to the despotism of labor-unions which, in a so called free country, mash the brains of a brother laborer because he exercises the right of a free man whose liberty is guaranteed in theory by the Constitution of the government of which he is a citizen? Are the tyranny and despotism of the commercial slave driver more to be dreaded than the social mob? Is the unionist who kills his brother with club or pistol a better man at heart, in the ranks of a social democracy, than when impelled by the spirit of labor-unionism? Is the socialism of today—outspoken in its denunciation and rejection of the Messianic Spirit in Christ the Lord—a better exposition of a common brotherhood and a more perfect illustration of the spirit of communism, than the life and propaganda of the Christ and his Disciples? Not if indications count for anything.

We will admit that the advocates of a social democracy contend that, given a change of environments, a change in individual character will necessarily result. We know that the hope of a better day for the people, a day that will in no wise militate against the happiness of the now favored few, and that will increase the enjoyment of the unfavored, is in the working out of the law of evolution. But the man who is ignorant of the principle of organic unity is also ignorant of the laws of evolution. The physical universe, structured as a whole, furnishes the pattern for the structuring of the social fabric; and every law operative in the physical macrocosm has its correspondent in the processes of human evolution. The laws of retrogression and progression are distinctly defined in the archaic records of the past, as unerringly inscribed upon, and indelibly fixed in the tabulations of the geologic ages, and they are, correspondingly, as inevitably indicated in the history of human careers. Progressions, retrogressions, revolutions, and upheavals are the specific denotations of human development. The laws of organic unity, not the laws of social chaos, must be applied to insure the conditions essential to permanent social enjoyment. Liberty is not the end for which humanity struggles; it is but the means to an end, that end being the creation of riches (wealth) for the many, not the few.

The stars are held in their courses through the liberty of being subject to the laws of their emplacement and motions. The liberty of motion, governed by the laws of obedience to that motion, fixes them in their relations to the organic whole. As the stars conform to law through the liberty of function regulated by the organic laws of Nature, so in the completion of social evolution into the quality of organic unity, there will obtain a centralization of organic structure which matures beyond the social chaos into which the social democracy plunges the race.

It is not merely the question of the theories of social democracy with which we have to deal, and with which to a great extent we most emphatically agree, but, what is the spiritual force by which the human race must be actuated to accomplish the practical results, and by which theory it may enter into life? In the gestation of offspring in the matrix of its prenatal development, it passes through the various phases of evolution up to a certain stage. As the evolution can progress no further until, through a vital revolution, an independent life is imparted by a respiration essential to its progressed and independent state, so in the gestation of the race as a whole, it passes through the gestative degrees of its evolution, holding to the old state and church (to the old organism) until fitted to maintain another existence. It is born suddenly into its new career, breathing from its own functions of respiration a new atmosphere fitted for its higher life. Such a condition was manifest in the birth of the primitive church through the respiration of the Holy Spirit. And again, when the kingdom is ripe enough to be born, there will come the revolution of the new birth—"a nation will be born in a day." In place of the spirit of selfishness and competition now actuating the world, there will be substituted the spirit of righteousness, which is the Spirit of God. This is the one thing needful. In this, we differ from the spirit of social democracy. The final goal of human evolution is the kingdom, not the democracy of righteousness. "Thy kingdom come," is the prayer, not "thy democracy come."

The Pre-Eminent Science of All Sciences.

The Koreshan Science of Religion Meets the Intellectual Demand of a Scientific Age, and Arouses the Deepest, Loftiest, and Noblest Passions of the Human Soul.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE SCIENCE OF RELIGION, preëminent among the sciences offered the world by the Universology of Koreshanity, meets a mental demand of every mature mind which naught else can supply. Koreshanity comes in the age of science to meet primarily the demands of the rational faculties which must, as the highest potencies of man, control him in his noblest estate. It comes as the fruit of the Christian dispensation, which began with a religion, a retying. Religion (re-ligare) is a retying or remarriage of parties divorced. At the beginning of the Christian dispensation a spiritual marriage took place, spiritually uniting a supreme Lord and his Bride, an Ecclesia. Heimpregnated this Ecclesia with his Holy Spirit, that She might bring forth in due season his many Sons in his image and likeness.

The fruit of a dispensation cannot ripen until its harvest time or termination. Christianity was brought forth at the termination of the Mosaic dispensation as its highest involution of Deific potencies, a product which was personified in the Lord Jesus, the Messiah of that age—the Alpha and the Omega of the God race. Races progress and retrogress in clearly defined dispensations or cycles of evolution and the coördinating involution of the supreme eternal potencies, ruling the dispensations by both their voluntary and involuntary determinations.

During specific great cycles, indicated in the Zodiac of the physical heavens by the movement of the sign Aries through the constellations, the various races rotate in representing—in the sphere of anthropostic life—the median line of Deific progression and diabolic retrogression. Authentic history, the Book of Life written in the symbolic language of the physical cosmogony of the universe, continually indicates the median line of racial progress toward the divine image and likeness. At the beginning of the Christian dispensation the sign Aries—the Lamb of God, passed into the Gentile body of Lo Ammi or lost Israel, called of God to become the earthly Bride of Eloah—God the Lord. The median line of racial progress has consequently been manifest during the Christian era in those peoples, nations, and tongues who have called Jehovah Jesus the Christ, the Head of their church and Lord of their destinies, and have aspired to a conjunctive unity with his spirit in his image and likeness.

When Jehovah consumed the sacrifice of his inheritance,—his body, which was born from above, from the descent or overshadowing of the begetting spirit of the Jewish church, manifest in the chastity of the Virgin Motherhood of the Lord,—he breathed out an energy of Godliness which was inbreathed by his earthly Ecclesia. This inbreathing brought the Lord into an interior degree of marriage with her, which so affected her life that a spiritual religion, or the holy bond of a spiritual matrimony, was made manifest in the fruits of the spirit of the Lord Jesus, which were denominated and recorded by his Apostles as those of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, patience, meekness, etc. These qualities effected the practical communistic relationships of those baptized by one spirit into one body, corresponding to those of the physical members of the physical vidual body.

The Jewish church, organized and baptized by Moses in its external or natural of life, was so far divorced from the rightful Lord and Savior of her holy seed, that she had retrogressed so far into the degradations of fornication and adultery with diabolism, that she had become but "a form of Godliness, denying the power thereof," and was called by her rejected Lord "a whited sepulcher, full of rottenness and dead men's bones." Her fate was that of the unrepentant adulteress. As a church, the old Jerusalem was as a house left desolate; and in her fall, which followed the rejection of her Lord, she was literally stoned to death by the rising power of Rome. The Lord Jehovah turned from her to found a New Jerusalem in a new world, and to prepare a new earth for her inheritance.

When the Lord Jesus went out alive, he ascended from the altar to the throne of his own Godhood, which he found awaiting him in the Apostolic head of the body of his Gentile Bride. This throne is now manifest—to such as have eyes to see it—as the intellect of a master mind—the mind of the Messenger of the seventh covenant, the Shepherd from Joseph, the Stone of Israel. Israel signifies the strength or wisdom of God, which is the science of law. To this throne he gathers all the lost sheep of the House of Israel, who have been so guided by the love of the truth that the force of her attractions has effected the final conjunctive unity of throne and altar—of wisdom and love, which has produced—through the mediumship of the master mind of our race—the mind of the Sign unto the Gentile Bride or body of Eloah—the light of genuine science. This light of science, shining from its astral center, the biunity of wisdom and love, is to be ever known to those who seek and walk in it, as Koreshanity.

Koreshan Science reveals the fact that the uses of the bond or covenant obligations of true religion are divine and eternal. In the seed times and harvests of races and nationalities, the religions established perpetuate the retying of man to his God origin, all through his racial progressions during the days of creation in which the Gods operate to create and recreate him as their own image and likeness. In this image and likeness alone, is man in full conjunctive unity with Deity, possessing the mind of God, which imparts to him the science of his own divine being, and enables him to walk in obedience to his laws of life and immortality.

Man as he is, in the mortal and corruptible state, shows a total lack of the science of life in every condition and relationship of his existence, all of which conditions and relationships now hasten him to his grave, and to the corruptible dissolution of his body, soul, and spirit. We may perceive the pneumatic and psychic energies of a defunct mortal, partially reëmbodied in the children and institutions of his generation to which he was closely related; but his personality is not, nor is the psychic sphere of his former inheritance apparent in the place that once knew him. The spirit that returns to the God who gave it, does so by migrating in its passage from sphere to sphere of ascending and descending angelic existence, whose continuity is broken till it reaches the sphere of the divine Ego, into whose consciousness it is consciously absorbed; for this is the home of the soul which is poured out unto death, that the spirit of its life may be given to the mortal, that he may put on immortality and incorruptibility.

“God only hath immortality.” The mortal, vidual existence of the mankind we see widowed or divorced from God, hath no immortal soul or eternal life apart from God. The science of true religion teaches mortals how to become one with the immortal triunity of God, and how to obtain his eternal life. Because of this, its holy service is esteemed the preëminent science of all sciences, and men are urged above all things to give heed to its instructions. The Scriptures, held sacred by the Stars—the wise of the Jewish and Christian ages, in which the Jewish and Christian churches have been the productive spheres of racial progress toward that estate in which the Gods walk with men, are records of the illustrated teachings of the science of universal law, in the language of symbolism. This language of symbolism can be scientifically interpreted only by the science of religion as taught by the science of universal forms and functions, which involves and expresses all life—celestial, spiritual, and natural, in both mortal and immortal forms.

No mind apart from the mind of God, the one fully informed scientific mind, can interpret the living Logos to men, or the symbolism of the records of its generation. Men are brought by the Anointed Messenger of this mind into progressive degrees of conjunctive unity with its powers, and thence into conjunctive unity with the final body of its inheritance, its own glorious glorified body; that is, within the veil of his flesh of divine human form. A God-begotten humanity even now awaits the final conjunction, to be effected by the mind of God operating in the minds of men. When the scientific degree of the divine mind is imparted to mortal man by a mental illumination, man will know his God and yield himself to his absorbing love, which is a consuming fire. This mental illumination is given in its fulness by the final baptism of a Spirit to be imparted by the seventh and final personality of God, as the Father or impregnator of the chosen generation which is to put on his image and likeness by confessing his origin and destiny, and his sins, by obedience to law. By confession and obedience will man enter into the rest of God, and find in his divine personality complete justification for the sum total of all human experiences by which he learned to know good and evil, and to become as God.

The seventh baptism or overshadowing of our humanity by the Spirit of a Deific personality, establishes throughout the world the power and the life of the scientific religion, which is all that is needed to restore to humanity its longed-for Golden Age. Gold is symbol of divine good, and silver of divine truth. In unison they produce a fine brass, which fitly symbolizes the arch-natural life of science and art, triumphant over all Nature. True religion is the tie that awakens and arouses all the deepest, loftiest, noblest passions of the human soul. He who experiences the slightest touch of its vitalizing energy, hastens to approach the throne of its dominion in the act of self-surrender, that the fulness of its power, salvation to the outermost—even the putting on of the Son, may be known in and through and by obedience to the mandates of Him who said: “Let love be without dissimulation.”

The distance to Alcyone is supposed to be incalculably great. He must thereby occupy a position in space beyond the limitation of the sun's attractive force and cannot therefore exert any influence upon the sun, for to exert such influence, the sun—to Alcyone—must possess a reciprocal action. In view of these facts the present system of astronomical physics (not science) falls to the ground.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE ART OF JOURNALISM consists in furnishing the public with a clean, wholesome sheet that details the news without catering to a prurient curiosity. The office of the press is not only to report but to educate, therefore it must inculcate ideals of righteousness in every department of human life. The press should not be muzzled, for free discussion serves to correct abuses, but its freedom should be limited by the laws of kindness and decency. It is not uncommon for one of the great dailies to lend itself to a scheme of blackmail instituted to serve the ends of personal spite or political animosity. A candidate for office is not necessarily a villain, but the service of the state has fallen into such disrepute that the terms are held synonymous. No wonder that citizens of worth refuse to enter the field, and shrink from a political campaign as from a criminal indictment, knowing that it will subject them to every form of libel! It is time that truth and justice, terms now obsolete, should be revived. The mass of the people confine their reading very largely to the newspapers. The laboring classes must earn their bread—if they can, and be grateful for the chance of working ten hours a day. They have little time to profit by the free libraries that are built with money stolen from their earnings and ostentatiously dedicated to their upliftment in the name of charity, while praises redounds to the dishonest donors. The business men of the country are too busy making money to read books, and they depend upon the papers for general information. The dignity of the press should be commensurate with the extent of its influence and the importance of its functions as the arbiter of public opinion. Like the department stores, it furnishes an immense variety of wares to its readers and it must deal honestly with them. Neither too conservative nor too radical, it must keep the middle of the way, careful to discriminate between fact and theory. When a new movement presents itself to public attention, it is the duty of the press to investigate it thoroughly by means of several representatives in order to avoid personal bias. The habit of looking at every subject from a monetary point of view and of asking: "How many dollars will the success of this scheme take out of my pocket if I endorse it?" has become so universal that a fair presentation of a new system is exceptional. The newspapers that live and have their being in the competitive system are naturally slow to forward scientific and religious teachings that involve its annihilation. All honor to the few that dare to be independent and welcome the advance guards of co-operation and equitable commerce as logical consequents of the Cellular Cosmogony.

It is reported that Prof. Briggs of Union Seminary, in an address recently made in Scotland, said that all the types of the church presupposed unity, and the wonderful thing to an American was that the Scottish churches could keep from rushing into each other's arms. The inference would be that church unity is a feature of America, but that can hardly be asserted—indeed, to an unprejudiced observer, division rather than unity would seem to be the rule. Even small towns of less than a thousand inhabitants often contain three or more sects, each trying to maintain its own church on scanty means, with a thin congregation. Yet they will persist in the effort, year after year, under the most disheartening circumstances, rather than yield petty doctrinal points. If the Presbyterian minister chance to call upon his Baptist neighbors, he is suspected of trenching upon his fellow pastor's province; and should the Episcopalian rector be found in a Congregationalist sick-room, he is accused of seeking proselytes. If Scotland can furnish stronger examples of bigoted exclusiveness than America, it must be in sorry case. It is just to say that the division of the Christian church is world-wide rather than confined to any nation, though America seems to take the lead in the multiplication of denominations. There are as many different opinions concerning the teachings of Christ as there are members in each sect. If there is no schism in the body of Christ, as declared by the Scriptures, and the church of today has split into innumerable factions, it cannot therefore answer to the description. Where, then, is that body? Koreschan theology affirms that the material body of our Lord was converted to Holy Spirit by a psychopneumatic combustion corresponding to the conversion of the zinc plate in a battery to electric energy. It also asserts that Christ's body thus transformed to spiritual energy was planted in the wills of his Disciples, who constituted the early Christian church, and that a new church must spring up at the end of the age as the product of that planting. This church will be marked by unity in every point of doctrine as well as by agreement in natural science, and, thus unified, it will constitute the new or the resurrection body of the Lord. Every member will be clothed with immortal flesh, pure and immaculate like that of the Lord before his translation. This is quite a different type of church unity from that presented by the spectacle of Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant clergymen sitting together on the same platform or exchanging pulpits.

Life must come from life. This is the law on every plane. The chemist learns that protoplasm is the basis of life, and he ascertains that this closely resembles white of egg. So he sets to work to make protoplasm by combining oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, and carbon. Seen under the microscope, the result has the same apparent structure as the real substance, but it is only an imitation. The vital principle is lacking and no living creature can develop from the mass. Why is it that man cannot make living substance by artificial means? Will he ever be able to do this? Haeckel predicts that the problem will some day be solved and the artificial production of life will become an accomplished fact. In reply to the first question the law stated in the beginning may be cited: Life must come from life. Man cannot command the forces of life because he is not alive. He can create, which means to beget, upon his own plane, but he has no power to control the vital processes of the universe. Being mortal or subject to death himself, life cannot emanate from him, and his offspring is born into the same condition of mortality. Is Prof. Haeckel right in his predictions? When man is born into the God kingdom; when he becomes a living soul, having life in himself; when he can say "I am the resurrection and the life," the arch-secrets of creation will be revealed to his mind. By the law of alchemical transmutation, Jesus could make loaves and fishes to feed the multitude out of his own psychic emanations. The story is prophetic of wonderful things to come. Who shall say what mysterious powers to direct the activities of lower animate creation, may accrue to the coming race of immortals? While such powers must be exercised according to law, in the lines of order, who shall say what laws remain to be discovered along what seem extraordinary lines of research? But the chemist, ignorant of the central law of transmutation, will never succeed in producing life by any combination of what he calls elements. The artificial production of life, in the sense that Prof. Haeckel comprehends it, can never be accomplished. Every atom is either masculine or feminine, and the source of life lies in the union of the two principles. To produce protoplasm instinct with vitality, either animal or vegetable, implies knowledge adequate to supply the needed principles and to consummate the marriage. When man comprehends the two sex principles in himself, in one organism, such arcana may be shown.

The sensation of the hour is Dr. Koch's new theory in regard to the immunity of the human system from animal tuberculosis. Dr. Virchow believes that Dr. Koch is mistaken. He says that the latter, finding certain animals inoculated with human virus did not suffer, simply assumed the opposite as a general law. Had Dr. Koch's experiments been sufficiently numerous and comprehensive to determine that human disease germs of any kind are not communicable to animals, then he would have been safe in inferring the opposite in accordance with the general law of reciprocity on all planes of life. But since it is well known that other maladies are communicable, why not consumption? Disease of any kind is a downward tendency acting toward the animal plane. Swedenborgian physicians maintain that it is occasioned by an influx of evil spirits, and the use of animal and vegetable remedies tends to carry them out of the human organism by the force of counter-attraction. This is reasonable and in accordance with the axiom that life on every plane is maintained by the debris of the one beyond. When the human spirit becomes so vitiated that all its attractions are downward, it must seek another level. Witness the Biblical narrative of the spirits that asked permission to enter into the herd of swine. Spirits that descend are, of course, the lowest relative to the plane they leave, and vice versa. But although the highest relative to its own plane, it does not follow that an influx of animal spirits may not be exceedingly harmful to human beings. This is evident from rabies. In these cases, the system is for some reason peculiarly open to such an invasion and, the fortress being weak in any spot, the enemy enters through the gap. The value of all medical experiments of this nature is modified by the variations of individual temperament. Nothing absolute can be determined by such means.

What is meant by the current phrase, "cosmic consciousness," employed so often in the literature of the day? It cannot be synonymous with the Buddhistic idea of absorption into Nirvana, for this implies loss of personal identity, while the former term indicates enlargement of consciousness or a fuller sense of personality. In his present phase of development, every man is the center of the universe to himself. He puts self in the place of Deity, and his consciousness is limited to the brief years of one natural embodiment. The sense of personal identity is dependent upon memory. By and by, man evolves from this stage of being. When his consciousness becomes cosmic, he finds himself in God. He remembers himself as co-existent with the center of the universe. To enter into the cosmic consciousness is to become a Son of God.

The great problem before the world is that of waste. In the astronomical field, there is the question of the enormous waste of the sun's energies without any visible means of supply. In the theological field, there is the problem of the origin and independent existence of Deity, always the subject of controversy. In the department of sociology, there is the lamentable expenditure of energy by the laboring class, which all goes to support capital without affording the necessities of life to the workers. While the world is grappling with the problem of waste, Koreshanity is quietly teaching the doctrine of compensation. It indicates new and unexpected methods of supply, in every domain, showing that there is no waste in a universe where the transformation of one kind of substance to every other kind is possible.

Activity of one kind at the positive pole, occasions activity of an opposite kind at the negative pole. The amalgamation of races in the highest domain, is the great event of the hour, toward which celestial forces are conspiring. Race war, which seems to stir up and call out the most brutal instincts, is consequently prevalent. The newspapers teem with horrors calculated to destroy all faith in the possibility of improving humanity. But it really argues that the higher race will shortly appear.

The most noxious things have also their specific use. More often the dreaded bacillus acts as a scavenger, to preserve rather than destroy life in the human organism. And even when it produces fatal malady, its mission toward society as a whole may be the same—to destroy its pests and remove effete matter.

When man finds his environment in God, he comes into eternal life; then perfect correspondence between the organism and its environment may be maintained in perpetuity.

In consideration of the rights of the people, the Lord will establish a kingdom, not a democracy in earth.

Koreshan Science promulgates truths from the Center, not assumptions from the circumference.

When the spirit of love moves upon the face of the waters, Communism will succeed.

Editorial Discussions and Miscellany.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

The Great Light of the World.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Since the Reformation every man has been free to read and interpret the Scriptures according to his understanding. The result has been a multiplication of sects and great confusion of thought. The more men study the Bible the darker the world seems to become, and every kind of fanaticism finds an excuse for itself in the pages of Holy Writ. How do you reconcile these facts with Psalm cxix: 105?—INVESTIGATOR.

There is no authority beyond tradition for the popular but erroneous theological dogma that the Bible is the Word; on the contrary, the Scriptures specifically declare that Jesus was the Word, which became flesh and dwelt among us. "Thy word is a light unto my feet and a lamp unto my path." The Lord—the Word, was the head of the Christian dispensation. He was planted in the church: The sower sowed the Word; and now at the end of the age he reappears as the feet or at the foot of the dispensation. Coming again, first in the truths of the scientific degree of the Word, now as then, he is the Light of the age, or of the church—not the old church that prefers darkness rather than light, but of the new body composed of all those who received the Word nineteen hundred years ago, and recognize it in the pure doctrine as it flows from the Throne of mental illumination. Private judgment in the interpretation of the Scriptures is one of the causes operative in the great declension. Uniformity of doctrine must characterize the new body. The Word sown in the old church had to die. "Thou fool, that which thou sowest, is not quickened except it die." The light which was in the church became darkness. How great is that darkness may be gathered from the confessions of weakness, and ignorance of the true intent of the Bible, emanating from all the pulpits of the world. Koreshanity does not bring the charge. It simply takes the modern expositors of the Scriptures at their word, as it is written, "By your words ye shall be justified, and by your words ye shall be condemned." It is God that justifieth, and He that condemneth. If they are condemned by their own words, it is because the Word of God or the pure doctrine is not in their mouths.

The Inheritance of Abraham.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Kindly explain Genesis xv: 15. "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace." The orthodox people tell us that it teaches the doctrine of immortality after death. A. L. A., Chicago, Ill.

The covenant with Abraham was a promise of the ultimate union of man and God. In the first verse of the fifteenth chapter of Genesis the Lord says: "I am thy exceeding great reward." Now if Abraham was to possess the Lord and come into the immortal or deathless state simply by going to his ancestors in the spiritual world, after the corruptible dissolution of his natural body, what would be the necessity for the promised seed, and what part or recompense would the personal Abraham derive from the resurrection? The orthodox church says that he will have no part beyond the fact that through faith in the Messiah to come, he was justified. But if the promise was made to the man Abraham, personally, is it not reasonable to conclude that he was to share personally in its consummation? The interior life of Abraham, brought down through the ages by re-embodiment, was resurrected in the Christ. In him Abraham was conjoined to the Lord spiritually. Now in the final resurrection—that of the body, he will go to his fathers who constitute the order of Melchizedek eternal in the heavens, in peace.

The Interior Solar Projection.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—What is the use of the interior projected sun since it is invisible?—A READER.

The interior focalization of the central sun is at the junction of the middle atmosphere with that of aboron. Hydrogen means the water-producer, and aboron signifies the waters beyond. Waters in symbology represent humanity. The angel said unto John: "The waters which thou sawest are peoples and multitudes and nations and tongues." Water being also significant of truth, and the wicked being termed clouds without water, the expression, waters beyond, may be appropriately referred to the humanity in whom the truth is inresident, meaning those in the higher angelic heavens in whom truth has been separated from fallacy. They constitute the New Jerusalem. The interior projected sun at the junction of these two atmospheres would correspond to the Lord as manifest in the spiritual degree as the instrument of judgment there, or the Light-bringer. Its object is to generate electro-magnetic energies of a very subtle and penetrative character—what may be termed esoteric radiations of physical energy.

American Possibilities.

Ratio of Increase of Population and the Vast Resources of the Great American Republic.

"In the present state of the arts in the United States, how many people could be supported, and how many more people could be provided for by an increase in invention?" It is not possible to say how much land would be required to support a single individual anywhere. The census of the United States for 1900 shows in New York state, 152 persons to a square mile, or about one to four acres; in Massachusetts, there are about 348 to a square mile, or about one to two acres. In Ohio, 102 to a square mile; and so on down to Nevada, which has two square miles for every inhabitant—or over 1,200 acres for each man, woman, and child in the state. In the whole United States there are 22 inhabitants to a square mile, or over 30 acres to each.

The New York average, covering the whole country, would raise this number about seven times—that is, would establish a population of about 560,000,000. This would include New York City. The Ohio average would probably be a fair one; and that would raise the population of the United States to about 400,000,000. It does not seem to be an unwarranted assumption that the United States can, by proper attention to intensive or scientific farming of the soil, and by conformity to such laws as sustain equability of temperature and moisture, reach a population of from 400,000,000 to 500,000,000.

China remains an object lesson to demonstrate an increase quite beyond these figures. Under the best existing conditions in the United States, two acres are required for each individual; ten acres for a family of five. In China, we have found that under best conditions two people can subsist to the acre. Will a wiser conservatism of Nature's forces not slowly increase our chance, until, with vastly greater knowledge of the earth's resources than our Turanian neighbors, and multi-fold easier access to them, we shall be able to sustain a population even larger to the acre, or mile, than they are now doing? Among the more civilized races there is a constantly decreasing ratio of lands to families. At present the United States, especially the Eastern states, furnishes a fine illustration of this law of civilization.

Intensive farming is displacing extensive farming, and this means that, by improved methods of culture, a family may get better crops and larger profits from ten acres than from one hundred acres by the older and less scientific culture. Not only is population increasing in this way, but the comforts are multiplying. Soiling has taken the place of pasturing, and the growth of mixed crops has supplanted the cultivation of one or two crops on a large scale. The advantages are keeping the land at its best, and decreasing waste.

With intenser culture, and brains, we believe a family of five can get a good living from five acres; or about 130 families from a square mile. This, of course, is not up to the Chinese standard; for at the best few American farmers fail to waste a good deal in manures, in harvesting, and in storage; while the standard of living requires larger income. A family of five requires in the United States for food, clothing, comforts, for repairs of vehicles and tools, and wages of help, not less than $1,000. If you wish to get at the requirements of a single individual, you will find that he must be taken strictly as a factor in a family.

Following the above line of argument, we find that the state of New York, with 30,000,000 acres, can support 6,000,000 families, including 30,000,000 individuals, distributed over the whole area. The United States with 1,800,000,000 acres can sustain, by the same estimate, 1,800,000,000 individuals, or 360,000,000 families. But this does not mean taking into our reckoning arid lands, mining lands, irreclaimable swamps, very rocky or mountainous land; lands robbed of fertility by bad tilth, and sections too rough or otherwise unfit for homes. We shall probably not go far astray if we reckon under these one fourth of the whole land; although more conservative estimates are 600,000,000, or one third. If this be so, we once more come to the conviction that the possible population of the United States is, under present conditions, 450,000,000 of individuals, or 90,000,000 of families.—New York Independent.

PROGRESS OF LIBERTY.

Let Liberty run onward with the years,
And circle with the seasons; let her break
The tyrant's harshness, the oppressor's spears;
Bring ripened recompenses that shall make
Supreme amends for sorrow's long arrears;
Drop holy benison on hearts that ache;
Put clearer radiance into human eyes,
And set the glad earth singing to the skies.

Let her voice thunder at the doors of kings,
And lighten in black dungeons. Let her breath
Stir the dry bones of peoples till there springs
Life's fruitful vigor out of barren death,
And, roused, vast millions clap triumphant wings
O'er the mean devils which have hindered faith;
And men's tall growth of excellence express
Invincible, puissant nobleness.

But let her do all worthily; let not
The foul contagions of our selfishness
Stain her immaculate purity, nor blot
The brightness of her vesture, nor make less
The marvelous divineness of her thought,
Nor the rapt wisdom of her utterances,
Nor that orb'd splendor of her perfect light,
Which is God's morning promised to the night.

And ye, O sovran people of the land,
Crowned with her benedictions, lifted up
From chaos and low tracts of shifting sand,
And owlish places wherein ye did grope,
To the delectable mountains which command
Far visions of your sanctuaries of hope—
Be yet to Mercy and to Love as true
As Love and Mercy have been unto you.

Child Labor in The Factories.

Shop Competition Employs Child-Labor and Dwarfs the Mental Faculties.

We feel great sympathy for the little boy in the story who, when his father had beaten him as he thought unjustly, replying to the question if he understood why he was whipped, said between his sobs: "Yes, 'cause yer bigger'n I am." Our feelings are generally not so outraged at injustice, when it touches those who are able to defend themselves, or at least make some effort in that direction, but when that injustice touches the lives of little children and blasts them body, soul, and spirit, we feel every fiber tremble with electric force of righteous indignation which, if concentrated upon the source of evil, would shrivel and consume it instantly in the white heat of its purifying fire. How long, O ye blind worshipers of Mammon, will it be before ye will see that it is through the conditions of childhood, that nations rise and fall; that by that standard ye are weighed in the balances every day? Here are these little human plants God has given us in sacred trust, to cherish and train upward in his sunlight, and in the beauty of an ever uplifting life! Are they worth nothing but to lay at the feet of those whose hearts through the love of money have been turned to stone, harder than the flinty rock, and as impervious to the impression of any softening influence. Our American factory system with its increasing employment of children, will go down in history as one of the most damning evidences of our degeneracy as a people; of a leprous disease which, attacking the springs of life, soon dismembered the nation, and left it for burial in the potter's field, or else through an awakening of the people to their danger, aroused such a feeling of public indignation that the foul uncleanness was burned away, and a new flesh came upon our national bones like the flesh of a little child.—Co operator.

Emancipation of Labor.

Chauncey Depew's Mistake Regarding the Triumphs of Industrial Genius.

At the recent dedication of the Hall of Fame in New York City, Hon. Chauncey Depew, one of our numerous millionaire senators, made the following statement in his eloquent speech:

"The emancipation of labor has been followed by its recognition and the dignity of its function in human affairs." He also said: "The triumphs of industrial genius have created conditions by which millions can live in comfort and hope, where thousands dwelt in poverty and despair. They have made possible gigantic fortunes which are the wonder of our day."

The distinguished senator and aristocrat exhibits either duplicity or dense ignorance when he speaks of the emancipation of labor as an accomplished fact. If he doesn't know, he surely ought to know that labor has not yet been emancipated. As the years go by and monopoly gets a stronger and stronger hold on the sources of production, labor becomes more and more a slave to the individuals and the corporations that are the recipients of legalized privileges. Labor cannot apply itself without first obtaining the consent of the earth lords. And that, too, on such terms as the lords of the soil may see fit to impose. Hence, labor is by no means emancipated, but far from it.

Mr. Depew is correct in saying that the triumphs of industrial genius have made possible gigantic fortunes which are the wonder of our day. But he fails to state who get and enjoy those large fortunes. He knows, but carefully conceals the fact, that the fortunes are not enjoyed by those who really produced them by their own labor. The truth is, that labor earns the fortunes and greed appropriates them.

An industrial system with equal rights for all and special privileges for none, as its fundamental principle, would abolish monopoly and emancipate labor.—RALPH HOYT.

An Editor Commends The Sword.

THE FLAMING SWORD is a uniquely remarkable production, representative of Koreshanity, which system or school of thought seems to embrace the whole field of new thought. Its articles are strong, massive, fearless, its doctrines and theories are new, suggestive, and startling. One of its strong points is Cosmogony, and the theory advanced that the earth is a cell or hollow globe containing all the other worlds, constituting the universe, is at least a startling one. I have tried my level best to get into the heart of that thought, but I must find relief in the conclusion that my mind is too small to compass so large a conception, and so I content myself with simply trying to imagine myself trotting about inside the shell instead of outside; and it ends there. I can get no further; but that, of course, is my fault.

I have believed for a long time that the universe was a cell, consisting of sky-walls, enclosing all worlds; but to put me inside everything, instead of outside something,—well that beats me. Nevertheless, I would really like to understand the thing, and I have the profoundest respect for THE FLAMING SWORD and its magnificent corps of contributors. Issued every Friday. $1 per year. Liquor in Boer Army.

Burgers Find They Get Along Better Without it.

In the Boer army, liquor drinking has been prohibited from the beginning, and smuggling prevented as much as possible. The rule worked well. Our men have been in the saddle hundreds of miles at a stretch, and in all sorts of weather, yet none "caved in." We had no hygienic uniforms, many had not even warm overcoats, yet the cold nights and hot days did not hurt the men. I have asked many medical men about the matter, and nearly all attributed the remarkable physical endurance of the Boers to their abstemiousness.

It has been said that liquor will assist one in bearing fatigue. Not a word of it is true. Once during the campaign on the Tugela, I, with a few comrades, reached an abandoned farm. The sun was sinking. We had been in the saddle since daybreak, without food or drink. Nothing eatable was in the house, but one of the men found a bottle of Cape brandy. Every one shared the find except an old cattle Boer. And the result? All who took a drink were in a raging fever half an hour after. Despite all the hunger and thirst I had experienced, I never felt so bad during the whole campaign. Had we met any Britishers when we continued our ride, the old Boer who refused to drink would have been the only one able to fight.

It is absolutely false that liquor raises the courage. The only result it has is to make the men more careless. This may have been of some value in the old days of hand to hand fighting. But what is wanted today is iron nerve, a clear eye, quick decision. I will only add that the Europeans on the Boers' side felt no bad effects from being deprived of liquor.—Fritz v. d. Straaten in Sud-Afrikanische Korrespondenz, Translation Made For Literary Digest.

Babylonian Explorations.

Discovery of Great Temple Library of City of Nippur.

Prof. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania, the Babylonian explorer, has discovered the Great Temple library of the ancient city of Nippur, which was destroyed by the Elummites in the year 228 B. C. For eleven years the Professor has been exploring the mounds of ancient Nippur, the city that antedated Babylon by centuries as the capital of Babylonia. Within the past year he has found among those prehistoric ruins the library of the Temple of Nippur. This is the first Babylonian temple library that has ever been discovered, and it contains the oldest and most important records of the earliest civilization of which even an echo has come down to our own age. Already 18,000 volumes have been taken from the ruins, and it is expected that many more thousands will be recovered.

Inscribed on clay tablets in the cuneiform characters which the explorations of Nineveh and Egypt have made familiar to archaeological students, these literary works of men who lived 5,000 years before the Christian era began include dictionaries, architectural plans, historical and chronological data, legal and commercial as well as religious literature, that bear witness to the "form and pressure of time" in which Abraham lived. They also show, says Prof. Hilprecht, that ages before the reputed appearance of Adam, man was not only existing, but that he developed a high state of civilization, comparable in all its essential points with that which we ourselves possess.—Exchange.

The Spirit of Courtesy.

The Selfish Dignity of the Wealthy, and Good Manners of the Middle Classes.

"It is not wise as a rule to make comparisons between classes, but I am inclined to think that if it comes to the spirit of courtesy which lies behind all manners, that respectable working people, say our artisans and their wives, will make a better show than their masters and their wives. They will be less concerned about their own dignity—which is always a sign of vulgarity; they will have more regard to the claims of other people; they will be more anxious not to hurt another's feelings, and they will be quicker to render services in the little exigencies of life; and all this is the fruit of courtesy. Were any woman (and I count this a perfect test) travelling with a young child and some articles of luggage, it would be better for her as a rule to take a place in a third class, rather than in a first-class carriage. The chances are that among richer people—unless they gathered from something she said, or from her name upon a dressing-case, that she was a person of distinction, in which case they would take any trouble in exact proportion of their own meanness—that they would eye her with displeasure, convey to her that her child was a nuisance, ignore the struggle with her luggage, and make her glad to leave the compartment. Were she to travel with an artisan and his wife, they would bid her welcome, and make her feel at home, and anticipate her wants and encompass her with observances, because she was a lonely woman with a child. And the service of a woman and a child is more than manners—is the climax of courtesy."—IAN MACLAREN, in British Weekly.

Reforms in Spelling.

The United States Government appointed a board to decide on the uniform orthography for geographical names, and the recommendations of this body were generally in the direction of increased simplicity—Bering Straits, for example. The spellings thus officially adopted by the national Government were at once accepted by the chief publishers of school text books. And these makers of school books also follow the rules formulated by a committee of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, appointed to bring about uniformity in the spelling and pronunciation of chemical terms. Among the rules formulated by the committee and adopted by the association, were two that dropped a terminal "e" from certain chemical terms that enter into more general use. Thus the men of science now write oxid, iodid, chlorid, etc., and quinin, morphin, anilin, etc., although the general public has not relinquished the earlier orthography, oxide and quinine. Even the word toxin, which came into being since the adoption of these rules by the associated scientists, is sometimes to be seen in newspapers as toxine.—International Monthly.

Wages Falling In England.

Last year it was quite the usual thing in England to see each month that numbers of workers varying from 100,000 to 300,000 had obtained substantial increases of pay, whilst those who had sustained slight reductions totaled up to only a few hundreds. In November, however, the figures began to tell a different tale. The number of those who had received additions to their wages were, it is true, still as many as 137, but the reductions had risen to 11,036. In December the increase had diminished to 18,383, and the reductions were 8,216. But it is January that shows whither we are drifting. During last month only 3,016 workers received increases of pay, whilst on the other hand, the decreases had risen to the large total of 51,631.—Justice, London, England.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland flax, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

Bureau of Equitable Commerce, of the Koreshan Unity.

Under the Koreshan System of Co-operation, the cost of production is reduced to the minimum; and we offer to our friends more goods and more work for a given sum of money than can be obtained in the competitive world. We have established four new departments to our work. Orders promptly filled by mail or express. Correspondence and patronage solicited.

Our High-Grade, Hand-Finished Razor Strops.

A good razor is of little use unless it has a fine edge, and that cannot be obtained in any other way than with a good strop and a knowledge of how to use the same and keep it in condition. A strop in poor shape means a razor in poor condition. Full directions with every strop.

We manufacture our celebrated High-grade Razor Strops, the best strops manufactured. If you shave, you need one; you would be delighted with one of these. The prices are low considering the superior quality of the goods and workmanship.

Single, horse-hide, 50c. Double swing shell and canvas, several grades from 75c to $1.25. Extra fine material and finish, 1.50. Packed in neat box. Also strops at 10c., 25c., and 40c.—send 8c. for postage on orders less than 50c. Mail orders a specialty.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

Celibacy.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Relation of Cosmogony and Religion.

The Cellular System Reveals the Character of Cause Through Scientific Analysis of the World of Nature, and Locates the Great Anthropotic Sun.

THE INQUIRY IS OFTEN MADE regarding the effect of the Cellular Cosmogony upon the religious sentiment. It is a most natural inquiry, because every great religion of the world has some form of cosmic conception as a foundation or an accompaniment of religious conviction. Even the vagary called "the higher criticism" depends upon the Copernican system of astronomy for its existence, and this is the great stronghold of modern atheism. Both of these are modifications of the religious idea. Religion is what the term signifies; namely, a re-bond of unity. If it be a true religion, it is a bond of unity with God. One of the first principles of a true religious conviction is a true conception of the character of Deity. The first principle of the Decalogue is found in its first statement: "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me." The true God can only be known through a perfect understanding of the works of his creation, because this is the expression of his power in the language which God has declared in the hieroglyphics of material and natural existence.

Cause, whatsoever that may be, has expressed itself in what has been defined as Nature. If in this impartation of the language of expression mentality and personality have been projected, it may be regarded as a certainty that these had their residence primarily in causation. No reasonable man will deny that whatsoever may be found in effect, obtained originally in the cause of that effect. Cause can only put forth that which belongs to and obtains with it. The acorn puts forth the oak because the oak is involved in the acorn. The oak tree is the evolution of the acorn, as the acorn is the involution of the oak. What is true of the acorn and the oak, is true of the universe. The universe as a whole has its germinal point of recreation; to determine this point is one of the functions of reason, and of the mental force of exploration.

The supreme expression of causation is the consciousness of mentality as found associated with and obtaining in the human form. Personality is one of the pronounced factors of the function of causation. One of the prominent things of being is personality. How can men be so idiotic as to inquire, "Is there personality in causation?" Cause has projected mentality, and in that mentality is the aspiration to know all things. A pronounced characteristic of the mental integrity is its association with the human form, in which is included person. The very fact that we find personality and mental power in the results of causation, is the only proof required that they resided in the cause of these factors of being. We may conclude—in conformity with the principles of reason a posteriori and a priori—that both mentality and person are concomitants of causation. This consideration only remains: Is God individual or multiple?

The study of the principles of Cellular Cosmogony leads directly to the fundamental fact that the cosmic structure has a center and a circumference, and that these are correlated in a reciprocal unity which constitutes them interdependent and one. There can be no question but that the alchemico-organic (physical) universe is one with the humanity which resides in it, and that the race of men is the coördinate and eternal concomitant of the physical cosmos. In this view, beholding the unfoldment of life in the cosmic shell, we must necessarily conclude that the life generated from and in the cell or egg conforms to the laws which determine the form and function of the cell itself. The cell has an absolute center. The relation of this center with the circumference which comprises a part of its integralism, is of so reciprocal a character as to constitute it the central pole of universal activity. It is the primary point of rest, the most active center of function and the consummate arrangement of form, universal in its microcosmic continuity. There is no specific form in the universe that is not converged into this nucleus, nor any function of alchemico-organic being that is not congeried in this stellar nucleus.

The friction of the atoms which comprise the foundations of the alchemico-organic world, reduces them to a condition in which they lose their properties of matter; they are thence changed to the spirit of that matter. The shivering of the atom is the creation of its energy. All of the energy of the universe is the product of the annihilation of the atom. The atom is the product of the materialization of the energy, the spirit materially derived. Matter and spirit are correlates. Neither could exist without the other. The cause of all energy is the destruction of matter as such, and the source of all matter is the destruction of energy as energy. The law of the conservation of matter resides in the fact that for every atomic dis-solution there is an equivalent reinstatement from the energy whence matter has its resource. The conservation of energy has its law in the restoration of wasted energy from the matter into which it has its precipitation. The law of the correlation of both matter and spirit accounts for their conservation in eternal equipoise, and the relation of center and circumference maintains the integralism of the universe.

As the Science of Koreshanity determines the location of the stellar center of the alchemico-organic cell, so correspondentially it determines the central Star, the organo-vital nucleus of being. It thus defines the character of the Son of God and establishes, on scientific principles, the laws of his true worship. The Son of God is the Creator of all things; he is the nucleus of the anthropostic field of being. From Him all creation proceeds; this is because every form of life—having its origin in the universal life—can only recreate as it takes the form of the material germ. No form of life ever reproduces except through its material germ. The universal form of life and being constitute the man. He begins again his creation when universal being produces its germinal archetype, and this germinal beginning is the personality of the Son of God in material and human form. This is the form of the Deific personality; this is Jehovah—the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. This manifestation, then, is the true object of worship, and the law is determined in the Science of the Cellular Cosmogony. The Science of the Cellular Cosmogony constitutes the basis of the Science of Religion.

When the man is manifest who has sufficient wisdom in himself to discover the location of the man of sin, that location being himself instead of another, and through making such discovery he sets himself to destroy the man of sin by destroying the old and sinful nature in himself; or in other words, when he removes the beam from his own eye that he may see clearly to remove the mote from his neighbor's eye, then the man is manifest in whom is the fulness of iniquity, who will overcome his sins, and upon whom will be written God's new Name. This number, six hundred three score and six, is the Name to be received, "that no man knoweth saving him who receiveth it."

The practical application of the principles of life is the sure means of demonstrating and insuring progress in its order. Koreshanity is bold enough to assert that there can be no harmonious action without the cognition of an acknowledged Head and Center. If it be the divine kingdom, in that Head must reside the absolutism of God. There must be an acknowledgment of infinite superiority and supremacy, a free and un begrudging service, a following replete with devotion both to person and principle. One worthy to lead, and precious in the estimation of those who follow, must combine the rare virtues of the genuine love of service to the race and sacrifice of self.

The Absolute Essentials of Salvation.

Acquirement of Immortal Life Through Obedience to Divine Law, which Involves the Principles of True Worship and Performance of Uses.

“GOOD Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?” This question was propounded by a young man of great wealth, to one who, of all men, had the authority and ability to make the unequivocal, positive, and enduring answer, a reply that holds the same force today as when uttered from the immaculate lips of the Jehovah Eloah—Jesus the Christ of God: “Keep the commandments!” Can it be possible that while the Lord regarded the law of God as the all-important thing, those who are self-appointed to represent him in every pulpit of the land declare that law abrogated, and a blind faith to be the all-essential prerequisite to immortality?

The Lord from heaven came in his own divine Human to keep the law, and he fulfilled it even to the very sacrifice of life—which the law itself includes. He did not fulfil the law that other men might be released from its obligations and responsibilities: his fulfilment of the law of God entitled him to the covenant relation, into which he entered through obedience. It is not generally known that the so called commandments are such to those who are under the law, but to those who have come into obedience they become the indenture of a covenant relation with God; this means that they are conjoined precisely as the Lord Jesus was conjoined according to his declaration: “I and the Father are one.” “As I am in the Father, and the Father in me, I in you and you in me.” The world, having failed to come into obedience, so far, cannot yet claim the covenant or promise.

The Son of man learned obedience through suffering. He was the first-begotten from the dead, the first to fulfil the law, and from the dead, to come into life. This does not imply that Jesus was the first to arise from the natural grave, for Lazarus and others were resurrected before He arose from the tomb of Joseph. It means that He was the firstfruits of the immortality of the body; the first one to come from death into the fruit of the immortal flesh, after the fall of Adam, he being the same Adam in his return to obedience, therefore the second Adam. He learned obedience through the succession of embodiments through which he passed in the generations bringing him to his Sonship as the Son of man—the Son of God. The Lord from heaven fulfilled the law in person; he fulfilled it in the body, in a life generated in the world. Having fulfilled it He was made the Seed of redemption to the race, being planted by the operation of the Holy Spirit—this Spirit being the substance of his personal form—and manifested through the dissolving of his body in his theocrasis. He was planted in the race that the entire humanity receiving that Spirit might, through regeneration, be brought in this world to the quality of life attained by him; that is, that they might also be made as perfect as he was, being enabled to fulfil his word—“Keep the commandments.”

The church has passed its age of grace or mercy. This age was essential because the world had not ripened to the possibility of ever comprehending the purport of the commandment and covenant, to say nothing of the possibility of keeping the law of life inviolate. The science of the law of God is now manifest; the time for man to keep the law has come. “Thou shalt have no other gods before me” involves a true, unquestionable conception of God’s character; because to keep the commandment involves the principle of true worship, which is true love, and no man can love that which he does not know. Who is the true God, whom to know is eternal life? What may have been His persona manifestation at the beginning of the Christian age, does not settle the question of who the Lord is, and the new Name in the beginning of the Aquarian dispensation. “I will write upon him my new Name.” This is declared of the one who shall overcome as the Lord Jesus overcame. True worship in this age depends upon a recognition of that Name when written, and to confess that Name is the fulfilment of the first commandment.

As one person may put forth thousands of personalities, so one personality may project himself down through the line of anthropostic life and aggregate to himself the spirits of all the personalities thus put forth. This is reincarnation, if it is in the line of the reproduction of the will or the affectional principle. The will and the wisdom principles are two distinct qualities or properties; when the will is embodied, we denominate it the flesh, that is incarnation; when the wisdom is embodied, that is insanguination. The one is the manifestation of the flesh; the other, the manifestation of the blood. One is the flesh and the other is the blood of the covenant. In Koreschan nomenclature and classification, these two conjunctions or unities between man and God are kept perfectly distinct. Elijah represented the blood; Jesus represented or constituted the flesh.

Reign of the Christ and Binding of Satan.

WHAT IS IT to reign with Christ? They who have part in the first resurrection "shall reign with him a thousand years." What is the first resurrection? The Lord Jesus was the "first begotten of the dead." "He was the first-born from the dead." "He was the firstfruits of the resurrection." The first resurrection, then, is Christ himself, whether in the past or present age. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

It is well to examine into the reign of the Lord, and to know the quality of it. This reign is certainly not a peaceful one, for during its progress He is subjugating all enemies, the last of which is not subdued until his coming, this one being the greatest of all—death. This is the reign of the Christ during the militant, not the triumphant state of the church. His reign, then, is one of turbulence and turmoil during which period the saints are reigning with him, being priests unto God, that is, sacrificing during the entire lapse of the thousand years or millennial duration. During this time satan is bound.

Now when, we may ask, has satan been bound? He was bound during the undisputed sway of the papal power over its subjects. This bondage was the abject fear in which the brutal passions of men were held in check through the authority of the ecclesiastical and secular dominion. When did the angel loose his bondage? At the end of the thousand years when, through the so called Reformation, the restraining power of the church began to weaken through what has been denominated human liberty.

We have come to the end of the thousand years, and already the forces of Gog (the capitalist) and Magog (the laboring class) are massing their armies for the final conflict. The reign of the thousand years is ended; the battle of the great day is upon us. Desolation cometh, but quickly succeeding it comes the righteous kingdom.

Demands of Justice Concerning Money.

Koreshanity Advocates the Entire and Complete Destruction of the Present Perverted Medium of Exchange; the Cleansing of Earth's Augean Stables by the Great Hero.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

PROF. EMERY, of Benton Harbor, Mich., moved by our recent articles on the patriotism of bankers, which incidentally dealt with the money question by way of illustration, suggests that we write an article on state and territorial currency. THE FLAMING SWORD advocates nothing short of the entire and complete destruction of money—which the Bible declares, and all thinking men freely admit, is the root of all the evils that afflict men today. We are approaching the time which John foresaw when he heard one declare: "Behold I make all things new." In this time, no patching up of the old worm-eaten, rotten garment that has clothed the masses of men in literal rags while robing their spoilers in purple and fine linen, will any longer answer the demands of offended justice. Already too long is she "fallen in the street and equity cannot enter;" but now that the Light has come and is beginning to shine into "the dark places of the earth," which "are full of the habitations of cruelty;" when the Lord is waking out of his long sleep in humanity, and is beginning to see the abominations that have so long desolated the earth, he is proceeding to say: "Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." The time is at hand when men shall call upon rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from "the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come."

Earth's Augean stables, whose defilement has been rank and smelled to heaven for ages, must at length be cleansed, and the Hercules—the mighty Hero, whose peerless task it is, is girding himself and forming the battery to generate the force which shall make victory certain. Having the knowledge, he has the power to triumph over the supreme efforts and most cunning inventions of the god of this world—age, and all his aids and abettors, engulfing and choking them in the Stygian waters. Now that the mighty leader is come and the fight is on, the time is here for real heroes to fall into the ranks. The great masses of men are always cowards. In the great slavery conflict, the early abolitionists sometimes illustrated the position of most of the teachers and preachers by a story of frontier life. A sturdy pioneer and his wife had pushed on into the woods and hewed them out a log cabin, which was not yet chinked. One day a bear made his appearance; the man fled to the upper story of the cabin, and from his safe retreat, looking out between the logs he saw his intrepid wife seize the ax and meet the attack of bruin, felling the monster by her unerring blows. While peril was imminent he continued to sing out from his safe retreat: "Pay on, Lucy! Pay on, Lucy! But when the danger was ended by the death of the enemy, crawling down he strutted around saying: "We will teach these bears that it is not safe for them to come about here." That, especially the last part of it, is just what the teachers and preachers did.

The great church of which my honored father was an acceptable minister, when he opened his mouth to plead for the poor slave who had no defender, drew him before its conference and sought to make him agree not to speak for the legally dumb. But when to be an abolitionist became an honor, this same church wanted to claim the lion's share of the glory of the triumph of liberty when it came. In all great world-conflicts, when the forces of truth and error, as now, are in deadly conflict, the man who seeks to save his life shall lose it. The only place of safety is in the deadly breach. Nineteen hundred years ago, when the rabble-backed by the scribes and Pharisees—cried, "Crucify him! crucify him!" and it seemed the only dictate of safety to follow at a safe distance, if at all, the shrinking followers were safe; but the rich and haughty aggressors soon lost all, with life itself, in the war which destroyed their country, ending with the destruction of their holy city and temple.

But we do not have to go so far back for an illustration. The indescribable destruction and humiliation which befell the slave oligarchy, and the perennial glory of the immortal few who counted not their lives dear unto them, so that they should fail to imperil them for the cause of truth and freedom, must forever furnish illustrious examples of the binding nature and certain fulfilment of the law. Jesus laid the ax at the root of the trees of evil, which meant that he would yet grub them all out, so that none of them should any longer vex and trouble his Father's children. Think you, he will not utterly eradicate that one—money, which he declared to be the root—fountain, source, support, of them all? He roots out trees of evil where they grow—that is, in the natural earth—human earth, not in the imaginary future spiritual world which has no existence, and, of course, in which nothing grows.

The Lord's mission and teachings were not to save men from future spiritual loss in some future spiritual existence, which would be free from the temptations and entanglements of this present, physical existence, which world exists only in the imaginations of theologians, but to save those who were already lost, spiritually—hence also physically. Through that mission "this mortal must put on immortality." Before this is reached, everything which corrupts and destroys this mortal must be cast out—money must go.

Present Struggles and the Coming Rest.

The Warfare of Monopoly and Labor; Offense and Defense in the World of Competition; Destruction of the Factors of Oppression and the Recreation of all Things.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

OPPPOSITION IS the pedestal of the total of today's organization. The last analysis will discover oppression and defense as the motive, and in joint attendance upon all such demonstration. If oppression is dominant, defense is its handmaid; if defense bears the leading role, oppression waits its opportunity to leap to the forefront. History tears away the robes of defense to expose the vestments of oppression worn flauntingly whenever opportunity waits upon desire. All too often just cause exists for assuming the defensive. According to time and circumstance, resistance calls to its assistance a noble energy; but the qualities that coerce and trample, and for self's sake put others out of ease or out of life, inhere in the humanity to which all men belong; hence no man can deny his inheritance. Until selfishness, the fundamental property of the human heart, is eradicated, man deceives himself if he thinks he can claim wholeness of purpose.

The infant apex of all organization belonging to the order about to culminate and pass, in fulfilment of the promise, "Behold, I make all things new," is resolved into apices—capital and labor. In their intertwinings these two embrace and engross all functions and activities. As we near the last rally, the final effort of mass interests which have suffered severance in as many fold as there are breathers, the relentless oppression and the defensive effort will become the objective of all thought power. Means bestow ends: New heaven and a new earth—a new church and state—as a following of its travail, are to be born to the universe of man. When capital has solidified to itself all the means of life and completed its intrenchments behind its power of purchase seduction; when labor knows its constitutional rights subverted, its power of redress through lawful channels a thing of dreams; when this land of prosperity yields the son of toil more frost bites and hunger twinges than means of frugal comfort, then these fully-organized colossi will interlock and the competitive system will become but history.

Capital and labor may be taken as representative of the human form segregated and ultimated in the male and female sexes—the finger-board of death. All proceedings from such source will avail naught. Neither co-operation, socialism, nationalism, nor any other specific can find life and nurture in the heart that beats in a divided form. The segregated human body is an ungodly body with a heart of like quality. It is the seat and generator of the divisions of human interests, or the competitive system. When these interests are thwarted, from this same heart springs the appeal to arms. But nowhere more than here appears the conclusive proof that competition is suicidal. M. Jean De Bloch, Russian Imperial Councillor, who enjoys recognition as foremost authority on modern warfare, is author of the statement that progress in the art of war has been so great of late that the new improvements "tend to stultify themselves by producing a deadlock in the realization of the objects of war." M. Bloch points to the fact that this tendency makes it almost impossible to bring wars to a decisive conclusion. Of this latter the British army in South Africa must have gained an appreciation some horrible months ago.

There exists today an organization belonging to the new order, the order of the new heavens and new earth promised in Isaiah lxxv: 17. The Father, through the Lord Christ, instituted this order in the spiritual world nineteen hundred years ago. It is the kingdom for whose coming in earth the Disciples were taught to pray. "Elias [God the Lord, the Father] truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you that Elias is come already. * * Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist." "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." II Cor. v: 17. "Behold I make all things new," of Rev. xxi: 5, is the promise of the new heavens and the new earth, the new church and new state, the kingdom brought into visibility and outward activity. The key to the character of this organization lies in these words, showing it to be the body of Christ: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." The Lord sowed himself ("He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man. The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom." Matt. xiii: 37, 38.) in the world, the humanity. He was composed of the spiritual children of the kingdom who will transform and bring into life each vidual in which they were planted. They will compose the spirito-natural grand or macrocosmic man. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free." I. Cor. xii: 12, 13.

The world is in death. The body of the Christ, which is concrete organic unity, in its antitypical resurrection will bring life to the world. The body of Christ, the kingdom to come, is life, for in his form were blended the male and female principles. Of life there is but one law, and that is the law of organic unity. There is but one law of organic unity, and that is the law of love. "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Humanity has no promise but in keeping the law. "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Matt. xix: 17. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. xxii: 14. "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments: For this is the whole duty of man." "Ecc. xii: 13. All hail the coming ability to keep the law through which will appear the Deific superstructural organization that will crown the foundation being laid in the natural by Elijah the Prophet!

The Problem of Human Government.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

IT IS BECOMING more and more evident that to great masses of their citizens, governments are becoming obsolete institutions in which they take no interest. What Tolstoi says of Russian peasants, who in numbers mainly constitute the Russian state, is fast proving true of the disinherited millions, the result of human greed in every nation. He says:

And what have we to do with legal guarantees? I answer that question by telling you that for the mass of the Russian people, the law does not exist at all. They either regard the law as I do, as a matter wholly external to them, with which they have nothing to do, or despise it actively as a fetter which retards the development of their internal life. * * * It is not their submission to, but their neglect of the law which makes our people so peaceful and long suffering. And that neglect of the law is also what makes our officials the greatest knaves in the world.

Tolstoi says that conscience has become the rule of conduct for the peasant, but to the educated man of the ruling class conscience is non-existent. The majority of the former class cannot read, but familiarity with the traditions of the life of Jesus has made them more Christian than the corresponding class of the other nations, who are better educated than they. Equally outside of the pale of the benefits of government, as Carlyle says, are the great masses under British rule, and the same is fast becoming true in our own and every other country.

If the masses of any country come to see that their government has nothing but burdens for them, they will inevitably lose all love and loyalty, if they do not become its active enemies. If it provides conditions under which the few become very wealthy out of the labor of the many, or, as monopoly is now doing, by depriving them of a chance to labor, it is destroying the very foundations of government, and must, soon or later, cease to cumber the ground, giving place to a better. That everlasting law recorded in the Scriptures, applies to governments as well as to vidual men. "To him that hath shall be given: from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he hath." The government that has not the capacity or disposition to govern impartially all its subjects, will certainly lose its ability to govern any of them.

The increasing paralysis of governments is seen in their growing disposition to give over to individuals or great combinations and trusts, what little remains to them of actual government. Unconsciously and unintentionally, these great individual and trust powers of monopoly are teaching and preparing the way for the people as a whole to manage their own affairs and enjoy all the benefits, in the new heavens and new earth—new church and new state, which will soon appear upon the ruins of the unrighteous and well-nigh effete governments of the present.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THERE ARE two great issues before the world—Democracy and Socialism. The former has practically demonstrated its incompetency to provide stable and legitimate government. Instituted in America under the most favorable auspices, including a virgin continent to develop, insulation by distance and by water, together with special qualities of integrity in the character of its founders, no test could be fairer; yet few would deny that the outcome of the experiment as now manifest is a disappointment. The people are not wise enough, they are not pure enough, they are not unselfish enough to govern themselves under free representation. Seeing this, the hopes of many are turning to socialism in the belief that it will succeed where democracy has failed. Socialism looks to governmental and municipal ownership, and the establishment of a co-operative commonwealth upon a secular basis. It would substitute this for competition, and it has formed a new party, hoping soon to carry the day at the polls. To the philosophical mind the weakness of Socialism lies in its failure to see that secular unity could never be consolidated and maintained apart from religious unity. Every historical precedent goes to show that such is the case. Religious dissent has ever been the most fruitful cause of disorder in the body social. The religious instinct is an integral part of man's nature, and no hope is vainer than that of eradicating or repressing it so that he will rest in a state of easy indifference in regard to the great questions that it involves. Agitation of these questions always produces intense friction. It is therefore evident that the pacification of society demands the unity of church and state—that socialism, which is so strongly pushed and so ardently desired, leaves an open door for divisions, persecutions, and wars to enter. The coming government must co-ordinate the two functions in order that society may become a unit. The hope of religious unity is only to be found in the dissemination of absolute and convincing truth—not fragmentary but integral, not unverified but proven, not resting upon metaphysical subtleties but upon a substantial basis of material fact. Unless religion can be built up from a foundation of knowledge, controversy will never cease. Socialism is on the wrong track, because it aims to dispense with all the adjuncts of religious culture. It does not believe that these influences are necessary to refine and ennoble society; nor does it recognize the dangers incident to leaving every man free to choose his own creed out of a multiplicity of conflicting views. Who shall show us a more excellent way? It is right here that Koreshanity comes to the rescue with its plan for the unification of society which offers novel and attractive features different from every Utopian project launched upon the world. Democracy has failed to give the poor man his daily bread. Socialism would supply his physical needs, but it makes no provision for the hunger of the soul. Both material and spiritual needs must be met in an adequate manner. Koreshanity aims to establish a new social order, founded upon the science of government and religion that will be adequate to the demand of the age.

The financial magnates are showing how incompetent they are to deal with the forces which they have arrayed against themselves. They lack foresight, and are working against their own interests because they have no conception of the gravity of the situation. Their trust is in the power of the inconceivable wealth they possess. Though their fiat be sufficient to move nations as well as municipalities, yet they are but children in prescience and knowledge. Having eyes they see not the handwriting upon the wall. How shall they dare to disregard the lessons of history alone upon whose pages are written the doom of those who in all times have heaped up wealth against the rights of men. They show their incompetency by their arrogance and their arbitrary methods of treating with labor. If they force the issue through the resistance which they have generated against themselves, theirs is the fault. Prof. Wili, writing in the current issue of the Tribune, calls to mind the fact that all the monopolies of Rome fell in a single day, and they fell into the hands of the Emperor—not of the people. This is a foreshadowing of things to come. It was prophesied of old that a nation should be born in a day, and now, these many years, a prediction has stood before the world that when labor and capital are matched in the last great conflict, the sudden fall of plutocracy and the disability of labor will throw the resources of power into the hands of the imperial Head of the new System. As it was in the days of Rome so it will be now, albeit with a certain great and wonderful difference—the Head of the coming government will be endowed with divinely unselfish capacity and wisdom to use these treasures for the good of the people. If God is going to set up a kingdom in order that his will may be done in earth as it is in heaven, and if men of all classes have thoroughly demonstrated their inability to govern themselves in righteousness, reason must conclude that God will come himself in Theocratic relations to inspire and to rule.

A monument has just been erected to mark the tragic close of a brilliant and romantic career. Margaret Fuller Ossoli was one of the most gifted women of the century, and her literary achievements have been a source of pride and inspiration to American students. Her mind was of such capacity that she could take in a prodigious amount of information and hold it at command, ready to impart. The list of her linguistic acquirements at the age of fifteen, ranges from the classics to old Italian and Castilian poets. It is almost equal to that of some college professors. She was thoroughly conversant with philosophy and literature; at the same time she took an active part in the care of her father's household and superintended the education of the younger children. A few years later, she was holding afternoon conversations in Boston, which were the delight of such men as Emerson and Channing. Her work on the New York Tribune under Horace Greeley showed her ability in the field of social reform. The story of her marriage, which brought her into connection with the old Italian nobility, and her devotion to Mazzini and the cause of Italian liberty, is well known. During the siege by the French, she joined the Marquis on the breastworks, exposing her life with the utmost daring. And yet, with all her remarkable qualities, Margaret Fuller was not happy. At the time when she was immersed in study, trying to satisfy her intellectual cravings, she writes pathetically: "But the life—Oh, my God! will the life never be sweet?" She voiced the sorrow of the age. Its life is bitter, and it has sought in vain to sweeten the cup. Lacking this, all its information is pointless. The woman of the future will be the woman who knows! But her knowledge will not leave her with an aching heart, for it will embrace the secret of life, which is the secret of happiness.

It was recently stated in one of the leading reviews, that if the researches of the nineteenth century had given us nothing more than the great law of the conservation of energy and the conclusive establishment of the undulatory theory of light, it might well demand the right to stand uncovered in the presence of the noblest scientific eras of preceding ages. As defined by one of our best lexicographers, the undulatory theory of light specifies that "the form of energy called light and radiant heat is propagated through the ether by a wave-motion imparted to the ether by the molecular vibrations of the radiant body." Has this theory been "conclusively established" so that it ranks no longer as hypothesis, but may take its place in the category of facts? Koreshan Science, as founded upon the law of alchemical transmutation, maintains that light and heat do not set out from the central sun as such and radiate through space. This theory is confronted with the insoluble problem of waste. What becomes of all the light and heat radiated, and how is the supply kept up? Koreshan Science avoids the difficulty and accounts for the supply by the reasonable conception that light is generated within our atmosphere by the union of anodic and cathodic energies, which enter into combustion at the point of meeting. Generation of substance through combustion caused by the union of anodic and cathodic currents, is the secret of the universe—it is the law that makes the universe. The undulatory theory involves too great a difficulty to call itself established in any sense of the word. The corpuscular or Newtonian hypothesis, which supposed the propagation of light to be by an actual transfer of material particles, was abandoned as untenable, but the latter theory presents as grave objections.

The social romance has become a prominent feature of modern literature, and in this sphere it is very successful. Books of such a character meet with phenomenal sales that testify the interest felt in any scheme to relieve the tension of suffering under the old order. All of these projects reach a delightful climax in the field of imagination, but in the sphere of reality they are notable failures. The true social romance remains to be lived, and it is going to be a thousandfold more interesting than any depicted in the pages of fiction. Neither Bellamy, Howells, nor Zola, whose latest work lies on the reviewers' table, has painted so bright a picture as the world will present when the new order of things is inaugurated. The experiments which succeed in books but fail in life, presuppose the spirit of divine brotherhood, whereas nothing higher than mere human brotherhood is to be found even among those who think that they are fitted for co-operation. The quality of fraternal unity that prevails is illustrated in the family where brothers fall into contention hourly upon the smallest pretext, and their father's death is a signal for a general contest over the inheritance. Successful co-operation implies a different psychological and physiological basis for conduct. To insure the co-ordination of intellect and will, the human brain itself must be changed. An anatomical transformation must precede the ethical. New sets of cells must be opened in order that higher mental faculties may be developed.

The Chicago American publishes a short article from the pen of the Chinese minister, bringing out points of resemblance between the Jews and his own nation. Confucius was their Moses, and he laid the foundation of Chinese ethics in the fifth commandment of the Mosaic law. The Chinese rigidly adhere to the letter of the command, and he who fails to pay due respect to his parents is cast out from among them, while ancestor worship is the strongest feature of what they call religion. We should say that it tied man back to natural relations instead of spiritual. According to the scientific rendering of the Decalogue, to keep the fifth commandment is to acknowledge the Father-Mother Deity and worship the Lord in his true character as embracing both love and wisdom. Natural relations yield to death every day; they have no character of perpetuity. The fondest devotion cannot ensure health nor life to parents nor children. Is it harsh or unreasonable to believe that God demands the sacrifice of lower relations at specific epochs, just as the country demands it in her times of need? Is it not rather a beautiful revelation of the divine character, to know that provision has been made for inducting man into higher and heavenly relations which cannot be severed by death? The law of substitution turns sacrifice into joy.

Language is the expression of life. Before the language of a people can be reformed, its life must be brought into conformity to truth. It is thought that the organization of a national academy would be the best means for perfecting the English tongue. When certain changes in orthography and syntax were lately demanded in France, with a view to the simplification of the language, the Minister of Public Instruction, supported by the Superior Council of National Education, was suddenly checked in his efforts by the discovery that, according to a statute of Louis XIII, drawn up in the seventeenth century and confirmed by a decree of Napoleon I, the consent of the Academy must first be gained; so a special committee chosen from the "Immortals" was appointed to consider the matter, and the report of this committee was unfavorable. The practical effect of a national academy was to perpetuate tradition. This is necessarily the result where the canons of taste are derived from precedent and do not conform to absolute truth. Knowledge must break the fetters of tradition. Will America have an academy in the future? Yes, and it will be composed, not of forty but of one hundred and forty and four thousand Immortals.

Before the seven qualities of energy radiating from the central sun reach their point of transformation and orderly deposition in the seven metallic strata of the earth's crust, they must traverse the five conditions of chaos represented by the geologic strata. In a corresponding manner, before the mental energies or entities that radiate from the Sun of humanity can reach the point of orderly emplacement and ultimate in the divine kingdom in earth, they must pass through stages of chaos in five races which correspond to the five geologic strata. The Theocracy to be established in the organic unity of society is in the form of man—the Grand Man. It is written that God formed man out of the dust of the earth.

One of the terms for Deity among the Jews—that referring to the Lord in his Humanity, was held too sacred for utterance. Once only during the year, upon the great day of Atonement, the High Priest breathed it, alone in the holy of holies. Profanity argues contempt for Deity, and its prevalence shows that the name and character of God are held in derision. The kind of deity with which people generally are acquainted, does not inspire reverence. To break the third commandment in a higher sense is to claim to be born of God,—to be his offspring, which implies participation in his attributes, while in reality no man has attained to that character.

All the standards of criticism are to be changed by the declaration of truth in all domains. A revolution in style must follow a revolution in thought. This is a period of transition; idols must be broken and prejudices destroyed. No matter how exquisite the rhythm, if the sentiment of the poem be false it will come to lose its beauty in the eyes of those who have seen a vision of heavenly things. The literary works which are the product of the old order and voice the doubt of a decadent age, cannot endure. In so far as the poets have expressed eternal verities their thoughts will live. But the Golden Age will keep nothing of a lower strain.

The divine right of the majority is a false and dangerous principle, unless it comprehends the truth that God and one make a majority.

A man's reputation is what his neighbors see in him; his character is what God sees in him.

The introduction of absolute truth institutes judgment in all spheres.

God sets humanity the example of tolerance.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

Selfishness and Self-Indulgence.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Though true that the mental science idea of gratifying desire in order to attract experience is a subtle argument to license selfishness, is it not equally true that the development which enables one to appreciate higher joys than the lower self gratification could not have been attained without that self gratification with its inevitable concomitant of suffering and death to contrast and transmute its selfish, ever dying, divided love—hell's life—the heat and light of lust, to the supernal joys of perfected life, united Love and Wisdom in the higher, perfected self whose form is truth? (2) Please define selfishness. (3) When one awakes to knowledge of the hell he is in and his own devilish nature, yet without strength of intellect or will to reach the higher self, must faith alone lead for a time, or should no step be taken without the reason clearly seen? (4) What is the difference between a Son of God and the Son of God? I don't mean difference in manner of attaining to Godhood, but is a Son of God as truly the personality of God as the Son of God?—M A P., Antioch, Ohio.

Self-gratification is not to be sought for the sake of the experience which it brings. It is thus that desire excuses itself. While it is true in one sense that no man is under condemnation since all alike are fulfilling their destiny, it is equally true that all men are under the curse, in the old proprium, and Jesus did not hesitate to denounce the hypocrisy which attempted to justify itself along the lines of fatalism. It was not the part of harshness, but of genuine kindness to brush away the cobwebs of self-deception and let the light of truth shine into the darkened understanding of those who made necessary the plea for self-indulgence.

(2) Selfishness may be defined as the rule of desire over intellect. It is the condition of servitude. Omnipotence is the perfect subjugation of the desires by the intellect. It is the condition of freedom. Vincit qui se vincit,—this is the glory of God, and it is written that all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. No one can boast himself above his fellows. Through obedience to the commandments, man passes from selfhood to Godhood. Before the Decalogue can be obeyed, it must be understood. Koreshanity is teaching the science of the Decalogue.

(3) Faith without works is dead, and this is the status of the old church. To awaken to a knowledge of this condition is the necessary antecedent to transformation. It is the precursor of the resurrection. When a person realizes that he is in hell, common sense and reason will naturally impel him to inquire how to escape from it as soon as possible. When he finds a system of doctrine instituted for the express purpose of showing the way of life, he will be swift to follow its teachings. Koreshanity appeals to the reason, and its gospel as often reiterated is the gospel that faith must be shown by works. "Blessed are they that do his commandments." Confession of weakness is the second step in preparation for the transforming baptism. The Lord encourages his people—and to encourage is to fill with heart—by telling them that he has chosen the weak things of the world to fulfil his purposes and confound the mighty.

(4) The Order of Melchizedek has its Center and Archetype, related to the universal structure as the brain and masticating apparatus are related to the ordinary human structure. Every organism must have its head, but the same life actuates the body, and every corpuscle is in reciprocal harmony with the central corpuscle. The structure is integral—one personality composed of many members in unity of consciousness. The head can do nothing if severed from the body, and the body is lifeless without its animating and controlling center. In the universal body, love and wisdom co-ordinate as perfectly in one corpuscle as in another, though each performs its own service and bears a specific relationship to the whole.

The Abolition of Poverty.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—You teach that society is to be reconstructed in such a manner as to secure the happiness of all classes. How, then, are we to understand the Lord's saying, "The poor ye have always with you?"—INQUIRER.

It is certain that the Lord never meant to encourage the construction that has been put upon his words at the present day. This passage is continually quoted in support of the competitive system and the division of society into two classes—those who give what they have wrongfully acquired and do not lawfully possess, and those who take in humble subjection what is theirs by the divine right of industry. It is upon this assumption that the vast system of charity, with its privately endowed colleges, libraries, hospitals, and reformatories, has been founded. Had the Lord intended to promulgate such an idea he would never have taught his Disciples to pray that his kingdom might come and his will be done in earth. He would never have enjoined them to pray for an impossibility. "The poor ye have always with you; but me ye have not always." In the latter clause the Lord refers to himself in his visible and personal manifestation. In the same sense He said also: "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you." The personality of the Lord was dissolved in his translation, but the Holy Spirit to which it was transformed entered into the Disciples and formed conjunction with their natural, human wills. Jesus became sin in the race and thus, he who was rich, for our sakes became poor,—spiritually poor, yes, dead in trespasses and sins. Speaking of Himself in this sense, he could say to the little band who were to form the nucleus of his church: "The poor ye have always with you."

Offensive Advertising.

Movement on Foot to Suppress the Poster Nuisance, Which Owes its Existence to Competition.

It is gratifying to note that the press of New York state is unanimous in its demand that some plan shall be devised whereby the advertising-sign nuisance may be mitigated in some degree, if not entirely suppressed. The plan most in favor is that which has been strongly advocated by the New York Tribune, of imposing a stamp-tax upon posters, bill-boards, and other public signs, sufficient in size to add a considerable sum to the revenues of the state, while it serves at the same time to bring within bounds a great and growing evil. The Tribune, the Evening Post, and the Evening Sun are among the metropolitan papers doing good service in urging remedial measures.

The Tribune has rendered specially valuable aid by printing in detail the laws and regulations relating to this subject in force in France, Belgium, and England, and the various steps taken by an influential body of public spirited men and women in the last-named country, to arouse and educate popular sentiment on the same question. These articles in successive issues of the Tribune have thrown a flood of light upon the whole problem, and pointed the way for reform in our country.

The demand of the newspapers in this matter is sustained by the best and strongest public sentiment. People generally are weary and disgusted with having thrust upon their attention, in street-cars and other public conveyances, and on byways and highways, upon trees, fences, rocks, barns, roofs, and every other conceivable place that the human eye can rest upon in earth, sea, and sky, flaring and obtrusive signs sounding the praises of nostrums and many other things which they do not want and would be glad never to hear of again. A person need not be heavily charged with æsthetic feeling nor refined sensibilities to revolt against this miserable business of daubing over everything in sight with the monstrosities of the advertising brush and paint-pot. The same instinct that leads men and women to avoid "talking shop" in their hours of rest and recreation, also prompts them to feelings of just resentment when they find the public conveyances in which they ride, the trees by the country wayside, and almost every other object around the horizon, plastered with invitations to buy somebody's pills, to invest in some dyspepsia cure, or in the equally doubtful wares of some cheap bargain-store. It is an outrage upon the commonest rights and decencies of life that the people should be thus pursued wherever they go by the creations of the artists of the billboard.

Surely some limit ought to be imposed upon a nuisance of such aggravated and exasperating character. It is demanded upon grounds of public morals, of æsthetic sentiment, and of legitimate business. As to morals, the nuisance is degrading; as to sentiment, it is repulsive, and as to business, it is grossly unjust. Street car companies and other corporations owning valuable public franchises of the same kind, often granted at little or no cost, have no more right to convert their property into traveling bill-boards and advertising agencies on wheels than the custodians of court houses, schools, and other public buildings have to convert these places to similar uses. Street-cars and elevated coaches are quasi public structures, constructed, chartered, and operated for the one specific purpose of conveying passengers with the largest possible degree of safety and comfort; and they go entirely beyond their strictly legal and chartered privileges when they subject their patrons to the nuisance of sign advertising for the sake of additional revenue. In so doing they also take an unfair and unjust advantage of the extraordinary facilities at their command to invade a field of business which does not belong to them, and thus to work grave injury to honest and legitimate lines of enterprise where advertising is the chief, if not the sole, source of income.—Leslie's Weekly.

Control of Thought.

Good and Bad Investments of Mental Substance and Their Moral Effects.

The direction of our thought is too often determined by accident. An untoward circumstance in the morning starts the association process, and one is for several hours the unhappy victim of a useless and futile train of thought. There ought to be more mental self-government, more deliberate projection of ideas in desired directions. While we cannot absolutely create good thoughts nor destroy bad ones, the mind does possess the power of selection. By giving attention to the good suggestions they grow of themselves, while other ideas, denied attention, fade and die. This is the essence of the will, and the giving or refusing of attention is probably the only really moral act.

In the world there are multitudes of impressions, suggestions, and ideas that appeal to the mind. The great question is, which shall have the right of way? The salvation of most people is their work. The necessities of daily life monopolize attention, give direction to thought, and exhaust brain energy. There is not much opportunity for vagrant thoughts to work their evil effects. Yet there ought to be in addition to this an intelligent control of the mind. As each one of us has a definite income and just about so much money to spend, and gives a great deal of thought to spending it wisely, so, while we cannot measure it as well, it is doubtless true that each has his limited amount of intellectual energy and ought to be equally careful to employ it in the most profitable way.

It would, for example, be a foolish investment of thought to spend it upon dime novels. Even worse is such literature as Poe's Prose Tales, for these fill the mind with morbid fancies and facts which make us uncomfortable in the dark. The thorough reading of the daily newspapers seems to me a useless, injurious, and immoral proceeding. Millions of people were faithful to duty yesterday—kind, just, and good. What they did is not news. Why should I give my attention to the deeds of a few feeble, wicked, and vile wretches who have killed, robbed, and committed nameless crimes? The moral excrescences of humanity are as injurious to contemplate as the physical.

So the trivial and annoying occurrences of daily life, commonplace and foolish theories that are being advocated, should receive only the attention their importance deserves, and this usually is extremely small. Open-mindedness is, of course, necessary to progress, but this hospitality of the mind should not extend to the petty nothings which now invade our psychic privacy. From the mind that which is undesirable should be deliberately shut out. Yet most men are so flooded, overwhelmed, with the thoughts of others that they have few of their own.—REV. GEO. R. DODSON, in Thought.

Capitalists and the Steel Strike.

I wish to say, and the manufacturers will be forced to bear me out in my statement, that I never wished this strike. I have been president of the Amalgamated Association for three years. In that time I have sought to perfect the organization in a business like manner. For three years our assessments have been coming into the treasury, and because of the universally peaceful course that we pursued nothing has been spent in waging war against the mills.

The treasury of the association has plenty in its coffers and to spare. As soon as the strike was announced I was in receipt of thousands of letters and telegrams offering assistance. The various branch organizations wrote asking to be assessed, but I refused.

I tried so hard to avoid this strike. None will know how many sleepless nights I have spent over it. I know what long drawn out strikes mean. I have seen women and little children suffering when the fathers and husbands were out on strike. I thought of all the possible suffering that might ensue, and after that sat down and wrote out the proposition to the manufacturers.

I never thought they would refuse to sign it. It was conservative and fair. I went to the conference on Friday, believing in my heart that my plan would be adopted. To my surprise it was refused. Then the strike followed.—THEODORE J. SHAFFER.

Tariff Wall Protects Monopolists.

The Industrial Commission need not look far to find the evidence that at least one of the trusts—the steel trust—is selling its products cheaper abroad than in this country, for the Baltimore Sun says: "That the monster steel consolidation, with headquarters at Pittsburg, is using the tariff wall for all it is worth, is shown by the following paragraph in the Engineering News, which knows what it is talking about: 'The contrast between trust prices for iron and steel to the home consumer and to the foreign consumer has often been set forth, but so frequently denied that some actual figures may be of interest. A recent cable dispatch from England states that American wire rods are offered delivered in Manchester at $29 30 per ton. Market quotations in the United States are $39 per ton. Adding cost of freights, etc., it is clear that the wire rod maker is netting at least $15 per ton more profit from his American consumers than from his foreign sales. It is not strange that the iron and steel magnates deprecate any interference with the tariff.' The trust, no doubt, effects economy of production; but the trust and the foreigner, not the American consumers, get the benefit of cheaper production. The trusts naturally think the present tariff satisfactory, but the taxpayers object to it so long as foreigners are favored at their expense."—Exchange.

Absurd Views of Honor.

Hideous Absurdity and Injustice Imposed by the German Code of Military Honor.

Soon or later the code of military honor, as at present existing in Germany, will be so discredited by the hideous absurdity and injustice of many of the decisions made in accordance with its supposed regulations, that it will be impossible to sustain it in the face of an outraged public opinion. Then it will be abolished, and there will be general wonderment how it managed to survive so long in the light of modern civilization. Meanwhile, it is made the excuse for one iniquity after another.

The latest illustration of its possibilities would be ludicrous if it were not so tragic. A young lieutenant, overheated with wine, so far forgot himself as to strike one of his brother officers. With the morning came reflection and repentance. Knowing that he had been utterly in the wrong, he went to his insulted comrade, confessed his fault, and tendered a frank and manly apology, which the other as frankly accepted, and a perfect reconciliation was effected.

Here, surely, in any reasonable community, the matter would have ended. But in Germany there is the "Court of Honor" to be dealt with, and in these tribunals common sense seems to be regarded as one of the most disgraceful forms of cowardice. It is an attribute at all events most carefully excluded from their proceedings. On the first review of the case, the regimental court of honor held that the course taken was the proper one, but the General in command declined to approve of the settlement, and referred the whole matter to a second court, composed of officers of another regiment, who decided that the insulted officer—not the original drunken offender—must be dismissed from the service for his failure to exact reparation in a duel. And this abominable decree actually has been enforced against an officer of irreproachable character. His colonel, in announcing it, confessed himself bewildered. The regulations, he said, forbade dueling, but, nevertheless, a challenge with sword or pistol seemed, in a case of this kind, to be imperative. The only salve for wounded honor, apparently, is a sword thrust or a bullet.—Exchange.

Women as Inventors.

Some of the most valuable as well as important inventions have been patented to women, among which may be numbered the first cook stove, a permutation lock having three thousand different combinations, a machine for making screws (invented by a little girl) which revolutionized that industry, and the valuable Burden process of making horse-shoes, which resulted in a saving over the old process of many millions of dollars per year. The first patent to a woman was granted in 1808, and since then the number has increased to many thousands.

These facts are interesting, not only because indicating the rapid and almost marvelous growth of women's intellect, but also from the fact that the inventive genius of woman invades fields in which one would scarcely credit her with any interest, much less knowledge. We are not surprised that a hat-pin, corset, glove-fastener, etc., should be invented by women, but when we learn that such inventions as telescopes, making marble from limestone, and dams and reservoirs, are evolved, people began to be interested. In Canada women are becoming interested in inventions, as is evidenced in the large number of women applicants seeking patents through Messrs. Marion and Marion of Montreal.—Citizen and Country.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science: the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era of Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity, not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is enmeshed at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Attempted Assassination of President McKinley.

The Appalling Event of the Pan-American ; Popularity and Magnetic Power of the President ; Dangerous Exposure of the Head of Government ; the Spirit of Anarchy.

THE WORLD IS APPALLED at the attempt of an assassin to murder the President of the United States. There can be no doubt of the fact that the effort to take the life of Mr. McKinley is but a link in the chain of a conspiracy to eliminate, as factors in the conduct of human affairs, all men in authority, beginning with the heads of government. It is the universal sentiment that if personal character could exempt any man from the hatred of another, the present incumbent of the Presidential chair is entitled to this immunity. In his social life, in moral character, in his religious devotion, as the world regards religion, and in the application of the principles of charity, he is unrepined. There are certain factors in his Administration that have made him the most popular man in America. He was quick to perceive and take advantage of an opportunity offered to but few men in the progress of human events; and availing himself of the moment he revolutionized the traditions of a nation, and in its humiliation, severed the bonds of a people in agony of desperation, and launched a new national life upon the sea of progressive evolution. Another popular stroke in the policy of progress was the fearless execution of the principle of expansion, which must constitute an essential factor in the career of the world-power, now the marked characteristic of the great Republic. Before the assassin's shot was fired President McKinley had added fifty fold to the esteem in which he was held when elected the second time to the Presidency. These elements of personal character and public renown are not the greatest factors in consideration, when we contemplate the event which has caused the agitation of our country and the world. Behind this villainous purpose to destroy a human life, are the machinations of a subtle power, world-wide and venomous, having its origin in the barbarous enforcement of tyrannical authority not altogether confined to the limitations of the recidivating medieval ages.

Arbitrary and unmerciful authority has instituted a reaction that will inevitably more than appall the world. While the world stands aghast at the threatening attitude of the avengers of centuries of oppression, as they, red handed and gory, intimidate the nations, a new and greater danger threatens the stability of government and the liberties of the people. It is well that Providence, or fate, provided that time should elapse between the assassin's climax and the crisis of his victim's calamity during the nation's suspense. There is no justice in a retaliation which indiscriminately embraces the innocent with the guilty. Far better that many guilty men escape, than that one innocent man suffer at the hand of an infuriated vengeance. While we pray for the recovery of our President from the effect of the assassin's bullet, may we also pray for the spirit of deliberation in the effort to deal with the gory hand of a power inimical to the existence of organic life.

An Unwarrantable Exposure of the Head of a Great Republic.

It does not take much of an observer to discern the anxiety of the politicians to exploit the personal magnetism of President McKinley. May we obtrude the inquiry, To what extent did the cheap political jugglery which accompanies our national progress, enter into the exploitation of our chief Executive's person at a time when all men ought to be aware of the existence of a conspiracy to forcibly dethrone the heads of kingdoms, and to destroy the executives of Republics? The danger of the exposure of the President's person could in no wise be compensated for in the pleasure it might afford the rabble. May the time arrive when it will not be considered the duty of the President of the United States to literally shake the hand of the populace. The day before the attempted assassination, when the President stood upon the floor of the pavilion where he addressed the people, we made the remark: "He is in danger! What a target for the hand of the anarchist!" We had an intuitive sense of the lurking danger. We were not the only one in our little group to feel the vibrations of the destroyer's purpose.

Mr. McKinley is the President of the United States, not the President of a Party in Power.

A dangerous point in our history has been reached when the advocates of a political conviction denounce everything as anarchistic, which differs in political sentiment from the incumbent Administration. While it is one of the fundamental principles of our Constitution that the majority shall rule, it is also fundamental that the minority shall be protected in their rights. Men may honestly and righteously differ in opinion. There are those who justly entertain the conviction that communism will ultimately supplant all of the present forms of government. It will not, however, obtain through any violent effort to dispossess the rich of their accumulations. The spirit of vengeful retaliation may go too far in its sweeping purposes. Already, democracy, socialism, anarchy, and communism have been bunched together as enemies of government, and relegated to one common plane of disrepute, with the further purpose of relegating them to an ignominious oblivion. The time will come when those who now revel in the luxuries of an unworthy appropriation, will comprehend the great truth that the interests of the producer and the accumulator of wealth are identical, and when it will be regarded as essential to the welfare of all concerned to voluntarily, under a new organic force, institute an equitable distribution of the accumulated wealth of the world.

There can be no better time than now, to differentiate between the various forms of social anarchy and the power of organic unity, which we prophetically declare will obtain throughout the world in the very near future. There is coming an equitable distribution of the world's wealth. It will mature when the spirit of Communism, which was planted by the Son of God and which actuated the early church, has passed through its stages of regeneration and shall rebaptize the race. Organic unity is essential to the integralism of the world. God will breathe anew upon the world; the bosom of the human race will heave with the delights of a Deific respiration, and there will be one fellowship, wherein there will be no rich and no poor as distinctive conditions of humanity. There is coming an overwhelming baptism. The breath of God will revivify and rejuvenate the race of men. Those who are now distinctively rich will come under its influence and, as of old, lay their possessions at the feet of the new Communism.

The Fateful Shots End the Festivities.

The Executive of our nation had been invited to enjoy the festivities afforded through the wonders of the Delightful Pan-American. He had evidently enjoyed everything designed for his entertainment. The wonderful display of electric power, beyond anything ever before presented to the world and beyond human description, delighted his Excellency, the President; and later, the exuberant pyrotechnic display was fully appreciated and enjoyed. His entertainment during the hours preceding the moment of calamity, was one round of pleasure for himself and his entertainers. The moment of his darkness and the solicitude of the nation and the world came upon his entrance to the Temple of Music.

We were moving leisurely toward the door to note the coming of Mr. McKinley, who was just then expected to extend his reception. As we passed a booth near the door looking out upon the beautiful work of art, one of the demonstrators said: "He has gone into the Temple." The Temple of Music is about one hundred and eighty feet from the Graphic Arts Gallery. We walked over to the entrance of the Temple, and while about ten or fifteen feet from the entrance, heard what seemed a crash. We could not believe pistol shots had been fired in that sanctuary. The door of the Temple was instantly closed. We walked back to our booth, wondering what had occurred; a moment later we were asked if we knew that the President had been shot. Five minutes from that time we saw our Chief Executive lifted into the ambulance, having been stricken down by the bullet of the assassin.

The reports of eye witnesses differ as to the details of the event. It has been reported that some one immediately preceded the man who held and fired the pistol, and that this man held the hand of the President unusually long and was ordered to move on. The assassin, it is said, followed this man. This is denied by responsible eye witnesses, those in whom we have great confidence. It is also reported that a negro grabbed the assassin, and finally struck him and knocked him down. This is also denied. A woman with a little girl immediately preceded the wretch who committed the dastardly act. An artilleryman was the first to grapple with the culprit, and Mr. Foster, a secret service officer, struck him in the face, knocking out his teeth and otherwise mutilating his physiognomy. The assassin was immediately surrounded and pinioned. The President was taken to the Emergency Hospital on the grounds, not far from the Temple of Music, where the fateful shot was fired. It was at the Emergency Hospital that the operation was performed, as we understand, by Dr. Mann.

The outside world might imagine that there was great excitement. There was some excitement near the point of contact, but a pall settled over the entire Exposition grounds, and over the entire city of Buffalo. The oppression was too deep for excitement. At the present writing, September 10, all announcements regarding the President's chances of recovery are hopeful, but we do not yet concur in the opinion, that he is out of danger. We trust for a speedy recovery, and with it an augmented popularity. The seat of Government of the United States is now virtually and practically in Buffalo. It is a remarkable and portentous fact.—KORESH, at the Pan-American.

The Coming of Elijah the Prophet.

A Discussion of the Character of the Tishbite and His Work at Mt. Carmel; the False Claims of Dr. Dowie; the Advent of the True Prophet.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

WE AGREE that this is the time for the manifestation of the Elijah mentioned in Malachi, and when a man claims to be that personage, as Dr. Dowie does, if we are rightly informed, it is not only proper, but our bounden duty, carefully to consider those claims and see whether or not they are well founded. We need, first, a clear understanding as to who Elijah was, and what was his mission to men. Our first knowledge of this very remarkable personage—who is described as a hairy man with a leathern girdle about his loins—is, that he appeared before Israel's corrupt and very wicked king, and declared that there should be neither rain nor dew for three years, except according to his word. The Word of the Lord, which as we shall see was in himself, told him to withdraw and conceal himself by the brook Cherith, where he would be fed by the ravens—the black Arabs, to which race he belonged.

When the water supply failed, Elijah was commanded to retire into the country of Zidon, to be fed by a poor widow woman. When the prophet asked this woman for a morsel of bread, she said that she had nothing but a handful of meal in a barrel and a little oil in a cruse, and she was gathering two sticks that she might go in and dress it for herself and son that they might eat it and die. Elijah, whose name means God the Lord, told the widow to fear not; that the meal and oil would not fail until the rain came. Thus as Jesus increased the bread and fish that fed the multitudes, Elijah increased the oil and meal that fed these three persons "for many days." "And it came to pass after these things, that the son of the woman fell sick" and died. Observe that the prophet did not, when he was sick, make an effort to heal him, as this modern professed Elijah would have done, but took the dead child and restored him to his mother alive, when the woman said: "Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is the truth."

Elijah's Visit to the King.

When Elijah went to show himself to Ahab he met the master of the king's house, Obadiah, who, when Jezebel slew the prophets of the Lord, rescued one hundred of them and fed them on bread and water in a cave. In the sore famine, he and the king were searching the country for grass to save the horses and mules alive. Allaying his fears of the king's wrath, who had searched for him in vain through all countries, the prophet sent him to tell Ahab that Elijah would see him that day. Going to meet this one for whom he had so long searched in vain, Ahab said: "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" Elijah answered, "I have not troubled Israel; but thou and thy father's house." This truly kingly man commanded this corrupt and tyrannical figurehead of royalty to gather together, at Mount Carmel, "all Israel * * and the prophets of Baal, four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves, four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table." These representatives of the old corrupt church and state were assembled at Carmel, which as Swedenborg says, in the language of correspondencies, means "the good of the church; the spiritual church; the celestial church." That is, the old dead church, as always happens in the end of an age, met the new church and state of the new age, when the old was destroyed to give place to the new, true, and righteous church and state. The new had come down from heaven in Elijah. Before that great and terrible day of the Lord, "I will send you Elijah the prophet."

When the two forces were assembled, Elijah proposed a test to determine before all Israel which was the true and which was the false. The God which answered by fire was the true God, and as a result the old rotten and persecuting church was destroyed in the persons of all its prophets, and the old effete and tyrannical state, in the person of its most despicable king, his most devilish wife, his seventy sons, and all their relations and friends, was soon destroyed according to the word of Elijah expressed in minute particulars. Before the accomplishment of these things which required some time, Elijah again fled into the wilderness to escape the threat of this terrible woman, Jezebel, upon the death of her eight hundred and fifty false prophets.

The Prophet Prepares for the Contest.

Before this, however, Elijah went up to the top of Carmel to look for signs of rain. Now recall the meaning of Carmel, and remember what rain (water) means. In fact, he was looking for signs of the reign of righteousness to cover the earth in the new age—new heavens and earth, which he was ushering in. After sleeping under the juniper tree, which means bitterness, and being strengthened by the food which the angel of the Lord provided, he traveled forty days and forty nights, until he arrived at "Horeb, the Mount of God," which Swedenborg says means "the divine truth in externals, for Horeb is a mount round about Mount Sinai, which signifies divine truth." Bringing down the spiritual into the natural sense, it means that Elijah arrived at the divine truth, became its personality, as Jesus was, so that he could say, "I am the truth."

Now the word of the Lord that was in Elijah said to him, in the cave whither he had gone (cave meaning "such an obscure state of good as exists in temptations"), "What doest thou here, Elijah?" He was commanded to "go forth, and stand upon the mount before the Lord. And, behold, the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks, before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake: and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice. And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle." Mantle means "the divine truth of the Word." Jesus was one of the seven Words of God, so now Elijah became a Word. This was Elijah's final and complete preparation for the work he had yet to finish in the destruction of the old age, old heavens and earth, and the bringing in the new. The whirlwind, the earthquake, and the fire were the agencies to destroy the old corrupt human conditions.

To complete this mighty work, in which the Lord was not, the Lord commanded Elijah to anoint Hazael to be king over Syria; and Jehu, the son of Nimshi, to be king over Israel; and Elisha, to be prophet in his room. "And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay; and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay, yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth that hath not kissed him." These constitute the nucleus of the church of the new age. Departing thence he met Elisha, who was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen. Upon him Elijah cast his mantle, and following him he became the prophet's servant.

"Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in." By another passage we will see who this Messenger is, who is also the Lord. "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." That great day is the judgment day which ends every dispensation. That is where the world now is, and that is the explanation of the many claimants to the honor of being the Elijah. The true Elijah will make the same challenge to a false and corrupt church and world that the Elijah of old did. His instructions as he stood on the Mount before the Lord, showed him that the destruction of the old required fire; but God was not in that fire. The fire that destroyed the victim, thus revealing which was the true God, was not the real divine fire in which God was.

The Fires of Destruction and Translation.

When the son and successor of the wicked Ahab was sick and had sent a messenger to inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, whether he should recover, Elijah met him and told him that because of his preferring to consult the false god he should certainly die. The king sent out a captain with fifty men to command the prophet to come down from the hill upon the top of which he was sitting. Upon the captain's making known the king's command, Elijah said: "If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty." A like destruction overtook the next captain and his fifty. When the third detachment came up its captain, kneeling, besought the prophet to spare him and his fifty. The angel of the Lord commanded Elijah to go down, and he arose and went to the king, and declared to him that he should die because of his desertion of the true God.

"And it came to pass, when the Lord would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with Elisha to Gilgal." Gilgal means a circle, a wheel, a cycle; and the passage means that they went down to the end of the age—dispensation. "Elijah said unto Elisha, tarry here, I pray thee; for the Lord hath sent me to Bethel. And Elisha said unto him, as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they went down to Bethel." Bethel means "the divine in the natural principle," and in the natural degree of the Word, it means the man who has that in him—the house of God. The meaning, then, is that Elijah became God's house.

Again Elijah said to Elisha: "Tarry here, I pray thee; for the Lord hath sent me to Jericho," but Elisha answered as before, and they both went on to Jericho, which was the city of palm trees, and meant victory. Elijah had overcome and was ready to have the new name of God written on him. On each of these occasions, the sons of the prophet had asked Elisha, who was yet only a servant, if he knew that his master was about to be taken away from his head, to which he replied that he did, telling them to hold their peace. Once again Elijah said to Elisha: "Tarry, I pray thee, here; for the Lord hath sent me to Jordan." Again Elisha refused to tarry, and they went on. By the waters of the Jordan being divided and Elijah passing over on dry ground, was signified "the removal of evils and falses, and the admission of those who were principled in goods and truths;" and on the natural plane it signified the man who had become the personification of good and truth—God-man, as Jesus was.

The Baptism of Elisha.

Fifty of the sons of the prophets had taken their stand to watch results. Elijah and Elisha stood by the Jordan, when Elijah took his mantle and folded it together, and struck the waters, which divided, and they went over on dry ground. When they had gone over, Elijah bade Elisha ask what he should do for him. "Elisha said, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me." This in the Hebrew means, let thy double spirit—the whole of thy spirit, both intellect and will, be upon me. Elijah said: "Thou hast asked a hard thing: nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee." As they walked together, it is recorded that a chariot of fire and horses of fire—this was the real divine fire in which God was—came along and parted them and carried Elijah up into heaven. Then Elisha saw who the wonderful man, whose servant he had been, really was—God the Father, and he cried out: "My father, my father! the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces."

According to promise, Elisha had received Elijah's whole spirit, which came from his body, soul, and spirit going away to spirit. As a result of such reception, he rent his clothes into two pieces. The clothes are the garments—the physical nature which clothes the inner man, the spirit. Elisha had been a common man, born in sin and shapen in iniquity; but the reception of Elijah's spirit, which was biune, male and female in one form, as was Jesus and the Adam before the fall, caused him to rend his garments into two parts—made him biune, male and female in one form, as is every seed which is to reproduce its kind.

Now comes the proof of the above. When Elisha smote the waters with Elijah's mantle, they divided, just as when Elijah smote them. When the sons of the prophets, who had been on the watch, saw, "They said, the spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha." Corresponding to this is the meaning of the words: Elijah signifies God the Lord, and Elisha means God his savior—the savior of God the Lord. To the same purport are all the subsequent acts of Elisha. As Elijah and Jesus had done, he multiplied material substance, as in the case of the little oil in the cruse, to prevent the usurer from enslaving—contrary to God's law—the poor widow's two sons. There is no record that he healed the ordinary sick, as this professed modern Elijah makes great boast of doing, but he raised the dead son of the Shunammite, and restored him to his mother. He cured the Syrian general of leprosy, which is supposed to be little less difficult than raising the dead; and, unlike what is yet known of this modern Elijah, he utterly refused to take anything of the priceless fee that royalty sought to induce him to take. There was not a miracle which Jesus wrought which was not duplicated by both Elijah and Elisha. There is not an act done or approved by either of them that is not directly opposed by the present hell-born competitive system, by which Dowie's people—under his supervision and approval—are said to be amassing great riches.

The Final Contest of Prophets.

In conclusion, some of the reasons which make it impossible that John Alexander Dowie can be the Elijah of this age, are these: he is an entirely different man from any Elijah who has yet appeared. Both the original Elijah and the Elijah that appeared in the time of Jesus—John the Baptist, were men with a leathern girdle about their loins. The leathern girdle "signifies an external band receiving and containing the interiors;" on the natural plane, it signifies a man of like continence as Jesus was—one of those eunuchs who are self-made for the kingdom of heaven's sake. Of course, this class of men have no wives, or if in form they have them, they live as though they had them not. Dr. Dowie, as we understand, is not of this class. He approves of, and practices usury and banking, both of which are in direct defiance of God's law, of which the Elijah is the embodiment.

When the real Elijah comes he will understand the true system of the universe and reject the present one, which is based upon somebody's guess. He will know perfectly man's relation to that universe, as the power that controls it and operates through it. He will understand perfectly man's relation to God, and will "know God and Jesus Christ"—the anointed Savior, "whom He hath sent." He will know the right and just relation of man to his fellow man, which, as established by Jesus, was simple communism, not a so called

"Zion" whose elect constitute a partial and privileged sect under the hell-born competitive system.

As a supreme test of who is the real Elijah of this age, when, as of old, the sacrifices are set in order, the God that answers by fire and consumes the offering, which will be the Elijah himself, will be the true God; and the spirit—Holy Ghost, that results from that combustion will be the seed whence shall spring all the blessed new conditions of the blissful Golden Age so long foretold—the kingdom of heaven in earth, for the coming of which Jesus taught us to pray. As Dr. Dowie knows nothing of, nor does he desire this blissful reign of righteousness in earth, he cannot be the central personality, the Elijah, God the Lord, the perfected Adam, the God-Man and Man-God through whom it will come to this suffering, sinning earth.

The Golden City and the Temple of the Sun.

The Coming Age of Civilization and its Wonderful Architecture; the Triumph of Genuine Science and Art Co-ordinates with Man's Victory over Death.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE GOLDEN CITY! The city which hath foundations, and whose Builder and Maker is God. "Here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come," wrote an apostle; and in the general epistles we find such expressions as "the world that then was," and "this present evil world;" and the Christ used the term, "the world to come." A world or cosmos is an order of things for a given cycle. The world that now is, is a dying world, and its end is near. The autumnal glories of its cycle flush it with brilliant hues and beauties, prophetic of its dissolution, and also of the resurrection of its life—the life of the Christ laid down to give it life. As its ascending energies pass out from its body of death they enter, through the transmuting mediumship of new forms and qualities of life, the heavenly sphere of the world to come.

The world that now is was conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity. All that we now see with the eye of the natural mind, of the products of the present cycle of human development, is manifestly the result of the sin of adultery. This present evil world has been denominated by historians, the Christian era. They synchronize its existence with the birth of the divine Human, the Lord Jesus. In obedience to the law of sacrifice for salvation, the man Jesus, who knew no sin, was made to be sin—that is, to take upon himself the sins of this present evil world. "The wages of sin is death." "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The holy Seed sacrificed will therefore bring forth in due season the more abundant harvest of his kind, and reproduce itself—the holy Seed of the Tree of Life. The holy One has died during his era, both as a God and as a sinner. Like a God he will arise from the body of death, the man of sin in which he was sown. The God race constituting the organic unity of the divine kingdom, will build the Golden City of the new world or order of things to come in earth.

The man of sin, in the microcosmic and macrocosmic forms, now stands revealed, in accordance with the descriptions of prophetic inspiration, as the tree of knowledge of good and evil in fruitage. Its fruit is ripening for the eating of men who would be as Gods, knowing good and evil. In the day they eat thereof the men of sin will die; they will be dead to the old order of the iniquities of adultery, and alive to the new order of the Man in Christ Jesus, its holy Seed. The old family tree so long and so devoutly revered, is reserved unto fire. The new family tree is the Tree of Life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, and whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. The burning of the old family tree, which is consumed by its own lusts, generates the fires of Gehenna which must burn from age to age. They are lurid and deceiving and attractive to the unwise who see all things "as through a glass darkly." The glow of this dissolving life is often taken for that of healthful prosperity. The descending elements of the body of death take on and reflect the bright hues of the focalizing energies of radiant, resurrecting life; and in forms prophetic of the life or order of things of the world to come, they forewarn and foretell, and bid aspiring man to lay hold on the powers of the world to come, the powers of genuine Science, the God of Day.

The material universe which we inhabit is the eternal sphere of existence, occupied by both spiritual and natural heavens and hells of high or low degree, according as the works of man shall be. The enlightened mind perceives, in the efforts of man in his present degraded state to make the things of God—the beautiful uses of Nature and the triumphs of science and art—to serve the purpose of the devil, and to gratify the love of money, wonderful prophecies of the speedy destruction of the now reigning powers of hell, and wonderful reflections of the final state of all earthly things to be attained in the service of the new heavens of the world to come. For instance, the prescience of genuine Science regarding the great national and international expositions of the products of industry and the triumphs of art, during the past thirty years, perceives in the struggling aspirations of men enslaved to the devils of their own lusts, an effort to realize even in their perverted states, some of the harmonies of constructive coöperative effort which belong, in their perfection, only to the divine order of the God kingdom and dominion.

Both the White City and the Rainbow City have furnished many materialized symbolic prophecies of that crowning City of all ages, that harmonizer of all civic harmonies, which we may wisely denominate the Golden City of the New Jerusalem. The celestio-astral form of this City, the Eloah of Jehovah, has aggregated to himself its Victor, Builder, and Maker, in the brain of his personal Messenger of his seventh covenant, which completes his conjunction with his humanity. The Holy City has been dreamed of, sung of, and prophesied of for ages. It is now ready to descend. Its radiance streams from the Stone most precious—the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel. No man not begotten by the God of love would dare stand forth in the radiance of this Light; but those who love the Lord because he first loved them and gave his life for their ransom, dare all things in his name. It is for these fearless ones to offer themselves as a reasonable service on the altar of their love. The law, in its Theocratic power of science, can slay to make alive the entire man of sin. “All the wicked will God destroy.” He destroys but to recreate in progressive orders. All the great slums of iniquity, the wicked cities of Christendom, the cities of a crooked and perverse generation, will be destroyed to be rebuilt to the honor and glory of the Gods. Renovated, they will stand as will the God-men stand—without spot or blemish in the light of the genuine science of the laws of civic construction.

The man who now possesses the knowledge of genuine science is a citizen of no mean city. He represents the New Jerusalem, and is here to be the architect and builder of its Golden City, the great metropolis of the world to come. The Golden City will be the city of the Brazen Serpent, the All-wise, who unites in himself the silver and gold of doctrine and life in every form of truth and good, of the arch-natural supremacy attained by the God race. There will be nothing that can hurt or destroy the divine-human perfection of man within the precincts of that holy City; and it will impart the light of Life—Haveh, to every nation under the sun. The Rainbow City symbolizes the seven spirits of God as manifest in the bow or covenant of Joseph, the bow of promise to abide in strength in the hands of him who is made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob, who chose science rather than flesh-pots. This Archer, this mighty Nimrod, who seeks and finds the degenerate animal life of God to slay it and to make it alive in God’s image and likeness, infolds the seven potentialities of generation which ultimate at the end of a given cycle, now at hand, in the perfections of Deity manifest in the Grand Man and in his constructive organization of perfect human institutions and their functions.

The promise of the rainbow follows in its fulfilment the blessing of the latter rain which floods the world with the science of truth. Following the rain, first in order is the great out-shining of the Sun of Righteousness in the power of his glory, the constructive potency of the divine Motherhood, whose head is the Messiah of the age. “She shall be called the Lord our Righteousness.” She is the Mother and the holy Temple of the builders of the Golden City of her kingdom and universal empire. The Golden City is not far away in the realms of time, nor distant in its location in space. Its architect and builder is present, veiled as the Prophet of the Most High.

The plans of the City are all drawn, its location scientifically defined, its light generated, and its altar fires kindled. The Prophet needs naught but co-workers; for he who was rich became poor that we, through his poverty, might be made rich. We must surrender our forces to the Captain of our salvation, and, taking the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, fight in the battles of truth against error. The man of sin universal is asleep in death, and his eyes are closed, blind to the presence of the Lord. It will require the final judgment of the Lord to awaken him to righteousness. Catastrophes and cataclysms are at hand to execute sentence of destruction on works of evil. The hearts of men must fail for fear and generate the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom. “Fear him,” it is written, “who is able to cast both soul and body into hell.”

When man has been led to Christ by the forces of the law which operates to that end in the case of every man begotten of God, he will walk humbly with his God and be led in green pastures and beside still waters. The soul of Christ will be restored to him, and he will build him an house and dwell therein. His house shall be the Temple of the Sun, and from it will radiate the Golden City. The Temple will be white, yet radiant with all the hues and glories of the rainbow, and glistening as the polish of gold and silver. The stones of the Temple are men purified in doctrine and life—men who have believed that the love of money is the root of all evil, and whose hate of its sordid power has wrought its destruction. There can be no Golden City till the golden calf is melted and its worship made vain. The Brazen Serpent must take the place of the golden calf. No rich men, those who are to “weep and howl” when destruction cometh, can enter the Golden City, save as the followers of that Lord who was rich, yet became poor.

The Lord surrenders all for the common weal or wealth of his humanity, and every man is debtor to the Lord until he has surrendered his last farthing to the Lord’s treasury; and he must remain in hell in the torments of mortality, the conflicts of competition, until he is ready to do the works of him who holds the keys of the kingdom—the works of the law. The day of grace ends when the Sign of the Son of man appears in the clouds of heaven. The Sign lays the foundations of the City in the righteousness of the law. Without the City, it is written, are dogs and whoremongers, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. Every coin and interest-bearing certificate in the world is a lie, for it represents the fictitious value of gold given it by the Shylocks of greed, the emissaries of the devil. Whosoever endorses or favors the systems of fallacy which produce and uphold the coins and bonds of the usurer is a lover and maker of lies. Remember, to be without the Golden City is the portion of liars.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE CONCEPT of the humanity of Deity is one that appeals to the logical faculty as convincing and reasonable. It exalts man at the expense of the animal proclivities. The introspective processes of experimental psychology are sufficient to prove to any honest thinker that he is dominated by varying impulses, some tending to drag him down, others urging him to higher efforts. Every person thus becomes a vortex of centrifugal and centripetal forces. The very fact that two contending elements meet within his nature, shows that there is as much above him in hope as there is below in retrospect. He sees the lower kingdoms of Nature and the depths of human-animal depravity. There must be corresponding heights to scale. To contend that man is never to follow in the direction of his nobler impulses is to deny their use. It leaves them without any raison d'être, and reduces his mental constitution to an absurdity. To admit that the victory must be won at some time and by some means, is to acknowledge that it is possible for man to become God. Complete mastery over the animal tendencies sums up a logical idea of Divinity. Admitting the possibility of such attainment, by what means is it reasonable to conclude that man will reach the acme of development? How does the animal kingdom rise to the human? Not simply by the force of its own aspiration, but by coming in contact with the human plane and supplying there a vital need. Man raises the animal by assimilating and incorporating it in order to supply the demand of his own system for nutriment. Analogically, man cannot rise to the status of Divinity by sheer force of will. He cannot go to God unless God is impelled by the necessities of his own being to assimilate humanity and transform it to his own substance. This involves an interchange of the energies of affection of a higher quality. It is reasonable to believe and to postulate that man would feel no attraction for the animal plane and no inclination to appropriate its life, unless he had arisen from it and held within him corresponding elements. So unless God had evolved from humanity, he would feel no attraction toward that plane. Psychology affords evidence, as seen above, that perfected man is God. It is also demonstrated by the true Cosmology according to the laws of analogy. Contrast the reasonable doctrine of the humanity of Deity, with the idea of an all-pervading spirit diffused through infinite space. This practically removes him from the sphere of human conception, and makes of him an extra-cosmic deity—out of touch with the harmonious order of things.

The current of the nation's thought sets toward its chief Executive, feeling that the blow which felled him was a dastardly thrust at its own integrity. Yes, the nation itself has been wounded in the person of its representative! Whatsoever the line of policy to which President McKinley stands committed, he is nevertheless the choice of the people, and he holds his office by virtue of their desires. The philosophical mind, instructed to look forward to social upheaval, while it recognizes such a necessity does not condone the fault. "It must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh." The mental energies of a great country polate in its head. Three times now within the last half century that head has been stricken. There is an immense sphere of chaotic force which represents the revolt against authority. All its motions are unruly and disorderly. The name by which it is called, exactly defines its character. Anarchy, as said before in connection with the assassination of King Humbert, means without a head. The anarchistic power is destructive but not constructive. It cannot bring in the new order, because it has not located the center of influx that will constitute the head of the new dispensation. Koreshanity believes and teaches that this Head must be divine—that the time has come for the unfoldment of that kingdom which has thus far been interior. The forces long pent up and seeking to find outlet in sudden acts of violence directed against centers of government everywhere, are tremendous. Nothing short of the energies of Almighty God brought down into the natural world, massed and consolidated as they have not appeared for twenty-four thousand years, can meet the emergency. Thanks be to Him who giveth us the victory, the issue of the combat is not doubtful. Truth and righteousness shall prevail.

The susceptibilities of many have been wounded by some recent attacks upon Christian hymnology. Some critics have qualified all the hymns of the church as doggerel, making an exception only in favor of Cardinal Newman's stanzas, "Lead Kindly Light." Whatsoever has served its purpose must give place. Is it not written that the heavens themselves shall wax old as a garment,—that they shall be rolled together as a scroll and pass away? This refers to the spiritual heavens, not to the cosmic, though both are subject to the laws of disintegration and renewal. The Lord says: "Behold, I make all things new." We are standing upon the threshold of an age to be known in history as the Koreshan era. The inception point of the new church is already located. The epoch at hand represents the climax of progress engendered by the conspiracy of divine and human activities. Who would wish to keep the songs that breathe of doubt and discouragement? Let the Church Triumphant discard that which pertained to the church militant. It was sweet to sing: "Lead kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom," while the night lasted, but when the Day Star has arisen and its wondrous beams are flooding the whole earth with radiance, let pæans of joy resound. "I would not live away, no, welcome the tomb," was the language of those who thought to find the summit of human aspiration realized by means of death. How unworthy the lips of those who have learned that it must be reached by overcoming death! For them there is a new song written in heaven: "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, unto our God forever and ever."

It is no wonder that a world which is weary and heavy laden should revolt against the burdens of ecclesiastical authority. It is not strange that it should denounce with bitter emphasis the shams of an unfaithful and hypocritical church. Society has suffered too much from its encroachments to submit further to the dictatorship of cruelty in the name of Incarnate Love. The lament of Mary rings out in pathetic accents from many voices heavy with tears: "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." The personality of the Lord Jesus is lost, and those who seek in vain for some tokens of his presence amid the corruption which fills the whited sepulcher that calls itself the receptacle of his Spirit, cannot be blamed for turning to what they term the "Christ principle," in despair of finding more tangible and definite expression of his life. Koreshanity brings no word of blame for those who suffer, no harshness for those who mourn. It speaks, the rather, comfortable words to the heavy-hearted and good tidings of great joy to the distressed. The "Christ principle" in the true sense, as it explains, is the heaven that has been working in the church until the whole mass is soured and vitiated. Or, to use another figure, it is the personal Christ converted to Holy Spirit and sown in that soil nineteen hundred years ago, where, like every seed thus planted, it has gone to decay. The death of the one seed implies its resurrection in the many seeds. The "Recovery of Jesus from Christianity" involves his resurrection in many visible and tangible personalities—Saviors like the original seed.

"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." The office of Shepherd embraces that of tender care and gentle leading. It also devolves upon the Shepherd to take his flock home at night and gather the sheep into the fold. In the accomplishment of his mission the Lord Jesus was smitten and the sheep were scattered abroad. Is there no one to bring them home? Has the church in its desolation no right to the cheering words of the Psalmist? From age to age they still endure. Before the Lord went away he commissioned one of his Disciples to feed his lambs. This was Peter, and now that the church suffers for lack of food, he comes with the bread of life—the pure doctrine that is to show the way and guide the weary home after long wandering in the wilderness of sin. "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." The words are to become a pæan in the mouths of those who recognize the Shepherd and see the rest in view.

The disappearance of the subjunctive mood is noted in an interesting manner by a contributor to the Record-Herald of Chicago. He says Brander Matthews found the subjunctive mood was used only about 160 times in an examination covering nearly two million words, and in most of these instances it was with the verb "to be." "If it be," and "if he were," are simple forms of frequent occurrence, but, as the writer contends, "One may ignore the subjunctive without losing literary caste, and there are said to be writers who make a practice of avoiding it in order to hasten its disappearance from the language." Now, as every student knows, subjunctive means "under the yoke," and this is the age of bondage when the verb, the word, the expression of being, is under the yoke of oppression. May not the passing away of the subjunctive mood be taken as an evidence of the emancipation of life? Small tokens mark great events.

Medical science has generally agreed that the vermiform appendix was of no anatomical use, though it would seem to be an organ which Nature, in league with the doctors here, designed for the express purpose of putting money in their pockets. But the rectitude of Nature should be above suspicion, and her complicity in the case must not be conceded before circumstantial evidence. It is not like her to waste good material in a physically useless organ, and all her works bear witness against the folly of such an assumption. Many years ago, the discovery which is now agitating medical circles was anticipated, and the Founder of Koreshan Science stated that the function of the vermiform appendix is to send a secretion from the nerves centering there to the bowels. The name appendix indicates supplementary material of too much value to be omitted.

One cause of discontent with modern educational methods lies in their failure to take account of individual temperament. Pupils cannot be graded en masse. The diversities of physical and mental inheritance are too great to admit of successful training where fifty children are crowded into one class, all obliged to follow the same course of study with no variations. Culture implies individual pruning. The nature of the plant renders one shrub awkward and another graceful where all are cut to the same shape. A weeping willow and a poplar tree would lose their natural beauty if trimmed to the same outline.

Koreshanity is emphatically opposed to methods of violence. Its mission is to herald the peaceable kingdom of righteousness, and the introduction of mental harmony through the rest of spirit accruing from the reconciliation of science and religion. The conflict of thought caused by the opposition of these two fundamentals, is the source of extreme disquiet in outward spheres. There remaineth a rest for the people of God, which is to be found through the acceptance of truth so absolutely demonstrated that it is no longer subject to dispute.

It is the function of Koreshanity to explain—to smooth away the difficulties and make the ground level. It was said of old that every mountain should be removed. All obstructions are to be cleared away from the intellectual path.

When words cease to be the expression of human emotion, they are dead; the spirit has departed, and the body must be destroyed by cremation in the fires of criticism.

One truth from the center of being will destroy thousands of errors from the circumference. One heart-throb of eternal love will compensate for years of agony.

When the human mind expands to embrace the universe and understand its mysteries, man becomes the microcosm.

Every truth is a cell correlated with every other, as the cells in the human body correlate.

He that ruleth his own thought-world is better than he that taketh a city.

Relation of Mind to Minds.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—The September issue of Riches quotes THE FLAMING SWORD as saying: "Let the reader grasp emphatically and absolutely the idea that the thoughts of the mind are actual, substantial things; that the mind itself is veritable substance. Let it be also known that as the mind thinks out, the substance of thought flows out." Am I to understand by the above, that the individual mind and thoughts, regardless of circumstances, opportunities, and surroundings are responsible for individual conditions in life—physically, spiritually, and financially?—J. E. A., Student in Koreshanity, Hosford Park, Indiana.

There are many factors which enter into the consideration of this question, but it may in a general sense be answered in the negative. Every mind in the universe flows into every other, as the light from one star in the physical heavens shines into every other, star. No corpuscle of the great body social is independent of that body and able at will to remove himself from relationship with it. A man may try to create for himself the environment which he desires and which he thinks that he deserves, but he cannot by the exercise of will in certain directions emancipate himself from conditions incident to the development of the race at a given epoch. The physical brain is the laboratory where the substances of mind, love and intellect, are generated. Just as one star differs from every other star, so each mind attracts from other minds a different quality of thought, and in the processes of alchemical union in the cell, transmutes this to its own quality, which flows out as its own substantial product. The individual mind, using the term individual in its scientific acceptation as referring to the undivided or biune genus, evolves to become the creator of the anthropostic universe in the sense of begetting or putting it forth; but like the central sun of the physical cosmos, it is still in relations of reciprocity. It is not independent in its motions. God is both origin and offspring.

Inspiration and Illumination.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Please explain the difference between inspiration and illumination and oblige—A READER.

Inspiration means to breathe in; illumination means to shine in. There is an order of marsupials which impregnates through the breath. Analogically, by virtue of the same law operative in a higher domain, the Lord vitalized the church by imparting to his Disciples a new respiration. He breathed into them the Holy Spirit which renewed their wills and baptized them spiritually. The Christian age was that of inspiration or of philosophy. The early church was inspired with the love of wisdom. Illumination refers to the impartation of science; it is the quickening of the intellect. The desire for knowledge which was implanted nineteen hundred years ago is to be gratified by the shining in of natural truth. How to transform the natural body is among the truths now taught. With this end in view certain laws must be obeyed—something must be done. Hence the propriety of saying that the Piscatorial dispensation was the age of faith, and the Aquarial dispensation is the age of works.

The Progress of Deity.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Is there progression among the highest order of beings, the Elohim, in the eternal state?—INQUIRER.

The law of growth and renewal is operative in every domain; there is no exception. Koreshanity does not admit the exception which in popular opinion is said to prove the rule. The state of immortality is like a gate which swings both ways. In precipitating the germs of regeneration which go down to the plane of mortality, the Arch-natural order of immortals ascends to the more interior state of eternal life; but they enter this supreme realm as infants relative to its acquirements. Here they progress until a given cycle of spiritual development is complete and they embrace all wisdom in that sphere. Like the rays which go out from the physical sun, their mental radiations have reached the point of terminal transformation, where a deposit of solid matter is made in the circumference. The Elohim polate in humanity. The man in whom they center is the Christ, the Savior of the higher order, and of the human race because he is the seed-man from above, who plants himself in the soil (humanity) beneath. When the personality of the God-Man is dissolved, he enters into conjunction in the ascending degree with the Elohim who constituted the celestial degree of his mind. The Elohim have then no visible, personal expression, any more than the life forces in the seed appear while it is buried in the soil. When the harvest time comes, the Elohim who have been far interior to the sinful states of humanity, having fulfilled another cycle, come again into polation in a different manifestation in a natural man—the High Priest of conjunction. He brings up the substance of nutrition which the Gods require to renew their life from humanity, and the Elohim again come forth in the Arch-natural order.

Sultan's Unhappy Life.

Abdul Hamid's Constant Fear of Assassination; his Crimes and Broken Promises.

LONDON, July 20.—In the Paris Français, M. Ch. Saglio gives an account of the inner life of Abdul Hamid, which forces one to the conclusion that the Sultan's life is by no means a bed of roses. He is afraid to trust the care of his health to any doctor, and has, therefore, studied medicine. The drugs he uses are prepared for him in his own presence by his chemist, Bekir Effendi, and tasted by the chemist first. They can, however, do nothing to assuage the disease which has hollowed the cheeks and emaciated the body of the Sultan, for this disease is one over which no drugs can gain the mastery—abject fear. Month by month the Sultan reduces the extent of his morning stroll, on which he is always guarded by three men at least, although it takes place in the gardens of his palace, a palace guarded by legions of police and a whole army corps, and fortified against artillery. His restless eye peers into every bush and thicket as he passes, and his hand is never out of the pocket in which he carries a loaded revolver. If anybody appears too suddenly in front of him he fires, and Abdul Hamid never misses. One day he killed an old gardener who had not seen the Sultan until he was quite close to him, and who stood up to salute him as he passed. Another day he killed a twelve-year old slave, who was playing with a weapon which Abdul himself had forgotten to take in from the garden the day before.

After his morning walk, which he takes at 5 a. m., the Sultan dyes his beard with henna and dresses for the day. His dress is very simple and is dark in color. Its only peculiarity is the number of pockets, of which he has at least thirty in every robe he wears. These are of various shapes and are made to contain revolvers, knives, and daggers of all kinds, and also for the purpose of pocketing various secret papers which he fears to entrust to his secretaries. When he is dressed, Abdul has his coffee prepared and his cigarettes made for him. He watches their manufacture fearfully for fear of poison. At 10 he lunches on eggs, milk, and a varied assortment of cold dishes. These are served to him on a tray, which is wrapped in a large cloth and sealed with a special seal by the superintendent of the kitchens. The Sultan breaks the seals himself, and before eating has each dish tried by one of the attendants, or tasted by the dogs and cats which gather round him when he takes his meals. His favorite dishes are pilaff, and sheep's trotters with a peppery sauce.

He works hard for several hours each day, but troubles himself little with affairs of State. His chief preoccupation is the investment of his fortune, which consists of about 1,500,000 pounds in lands, and 4,000,000 pounds invested abroad. In spite of his enormous wealth, the Sultan pays his debts as rarely as he can, and fights over every penny of a bill. He amuses himself with carpentering, clock-making, and ceramics, and is an expert in wood carving. The panels of one room in the Kiagtoe Kiosk are entirely his own work. At six o'clock he dines with the same precautions as are taken at his luncheon, and soon afterward he retires to rest, though rarely to sleep. He rests upon a sofa, never on bed, and a mulatto servant, Hassan Agba, sleeps before his door. The Sultan is desperately afraid of darkness and of silence. Throughout the night special readers read to him, whether he wakes or dozes, and the palace is kept brilliantly lighted all night long. His favorite books are books of horrors, tales of murder ("Montepin" and "Pouson du Terrail"), and he fears his own sons and brothers with a deadly fear.—Sun.

America's Working Women.

Organization Perfected and Demands Formulated; Rules of the Organization.

The Working Women of America have elected officers and adopted a wage scale, says a Chicago dispatch to the St Louis Globe Democrat. The rules governing the demands are as follows:

Rule 1.—Work shall not begin before 5:30 a. m. and shall cease when the evening's dishes are washed and put away. Two hours each afternoon and an evening at least twice a week shall be allowed the domestic as her own.

Rule 2.—There shall be no opposition on the part of the mistress to club life on the part of the domestic. Entertainment of friends in limited numbers shall not be prohibited, provided the domestic furnishes her own refreshments.

Rule 3.—Gentlemen friends shall not be barred from the kitchen or back porch. Members of the family of the house shall not interrupt the conversation arising during said visit.

Rule 4.—Domestics shall be allowed such hours off on Monday as will permit them to visit the bargain counters of the stores and enjoy on that day the same privileges enjoyed by the mistress and her daughters.

Rule 5.—All complaints shall be made to the business meetings of the union. The question of wages shall be settled at time of employment, and no reduction shall be allowed.

Three hundred members belong to the organization. The officers are as follows: President, May Murphy; recording secretary, Stella Wendt; financial secretary, Margaret Keehn; treasurer, Hannah Johnson. This is the scale of union wages of servants: Cooks and housekeepers, $5 to $7 a week; general and second girls, $4 to $5 a week; young and inexperienced girls, $3 to $4 a week.

Housekeepers who were at first inclined to make a jest of the union are now beginning to see that the matter is a serious one. The other night the girls met for business. The officers were elected, but their addresses are kept secret and will not be divulged until the organization is 1,000 strong.

A Word to Subscribers.

Directions Concerning Remittances and Letters to Business and Editorial Departments.

We publish every week on page 2 of THE FLAMING SWORD, directions to be followed by subscribers when making remittances or sending communications. The following of these directions is essential to order, promptness, and accuracy in the Editorial and Subscription departments of our Publishing House.

Remittances may be made by money order, express order, bank draft, or registered letter; any one of these methods is safe, because if lost it can be traced, or amount recovered by issue of duplicate orders. Remittances sent in any other way are at the sender's risk. For amounts less than $1.00, stamps are usually acceptable.

Please do not send us personal checks on banks; we have to pay the cost of collection and this lessens the actual amount, for our use, of such remittances, and sometimes checks are subject to question by banks, as to whether they are "good" or not.

Make orders payable to The Guiding Star Publishing House, according to directions. Do not send money for orders to the Editor; the direct route for remittances is to the Publishing House. Communications intended for the Editor should be made to him direct—not written on sheets containing orders to the Business Department.

The Power of the Trusts.

The trusts are so powerful that they can make or break the fortunes of any man; but not only that, they can found cities and likewise destroy them or denude them of prosperity. A writer in the Scranton Truth, under the caption of a "Ramble through the Forsaken Workings of what was the Industrial Pride of Scranton," says: "It was once the scene of the very greatest activity. Its massive machinery, in its majestic revolutions, shook the earth, and its fiery furnaces illuminated the city and hailed the midnight visitors when the trains that were speeding toward us were yet many miles away. It is now idle, to roll rails no more. Where once the thunders of industry were heard, now a painful solitude and silence prevail. Where brawny men of muscle labored by the hundred, now a lonely watchman, with a clock on his back which must be wound up hourly to show he did not sleep, plods his weary way. The one-time mammoth mill will soon be but a memory. Its equipment is being fast taken apart and shipped to Lake Erie's distant shore."

This scene is being repeated in many places. Citizens by the tens of thousands are being ruined by the loss of value which the dismantling of their industries causes to their property and business. The giant steel and other trusts tear down the values in many places and build them up in places where they and their friends have previously bought the real estate. It is confiscation by indirection, but none the less confiscation. Gloom pervades what were once a thousand happy homes. The workmen will have to leave, and the cottages they have built with their savings will be unsalable and worthless. And yet Hanna and the republican leaders are hand and glove with the trust and will not aid in legislation to deprive them of their monopolies. —Saunders Co. (Neb.) Journal.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland flax, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlated; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

Evolution of the Fifth Universal Kingdom.

The Attainment of Immortality as the Gateway to Eternal Life and Consciousness; the Processes of Divine Evolution from the Central Personality.

THE LORD JESUS attained to immortality in the flesh, as the firstfruits of a new order of human life. In His declaration, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," he called the attention of the world to the fact that his attainment of life and his method of a final departure, by the theocrasis which took him out of the visible and personal presence with men, were to be the ultimate future of as many as received him at the beginning of the age. The Lord disappeared through the dematerialization of his body, through which that personal life became the Holy Spirit. In this power to sublimate His personal form and convert it to the energy of spiritual life, he became the gate of entrance into the Holy City.

The goal of human destiny is eternal life through the attainment of immortality. The Son of God secured his consciousness with the invisible Godhead, by first reaching the immortal state in the flesh. Immortality is not a permanent condition, for when it is attained it constitutes the doorway into the realms of bliss—spheres of existence which are beyond the ken of the natural sense and perception. The Son of God, raised up in this life from the human race, was a creation, a generation from men, and the involved product of human development. The Lord was the reincarnation of those who had gone before him, and especially was he the resurrection of the prominent characters in Jewish life, the foremost being Abraham, Moses, David, Elias, and the prophets. The hundreds of thousands who had died looking for the appearance of the Messiah were gathered into Him when he appeared, and he constituted their resurrection and their life. It cannot be comprehended how "He gathered the Lambs with his arm and carried them in his bosom," until the law of conjunctive unity is comprehended. This law operates with thousands as well as with one. The law of conjunctive unity—operating in the conjunction of the Son with the Father—determines that blending of consciousness through which the Son becomes the Father.

The invisible God, Eloah, is the central nucleus of the entire human race. He is the focal point in which the mentality of the world has its congeries. This complex center of invisible consciousness would lose its powers of perpetual identity, were it not for the fact that it is replenished from the external human race. It is for this reason that the process of involution—which is the coördinate of evolution, for let it be remembered that there is no evolution without its correspondent, involution—raises up the Son to be absorbed into the consciousness of the invisible and Eternal.

God, being the center of the human race and perpetuated through his reciprocal relations with the constantly recurring humanity, inherently obtains with the most perfect of the sons of men. When the perfect Son is manifest, God becomes visible in Jehovah, who constitutes his perfect Tabernacle. The Lord was the Tabernacle of the Temple of God; he became the fulness of the Godhead bodily, as it is declared of him. The Father was completely in him, as he was one with the Father. The Son of God was absorbed into the invisible and central consciousness of the central man, who is the eternal God. It was thus that the Son of God—generated from men—became one with the Father and sat down in the throne of God. Jesus the Lord, like Enoch, walked with God and was not for God took him. That terrible absurdity held to by the Trinitarian church, the leading phase of which is found in Roman Catholicism, that there are three persons in the Godhead, was derived from the union of the church with paganism, and is the result of the declension of the church that was predicted of it in the beginning. There is but one indivisible consciousness in the Godhead. The Son, who was personal while in the flesh, lost that personality when in the theocrasis he was absorbed into the Father.

The personality is but the covering, the persona, the mask. The person is the visible Jehovah; the Son of God was this person. The person is lost when the absorption takes place, but the individuality remains in the internal and central consciousness. The Lord comes again in person, but that coming is the involution of another form, a form raised up from men to be again absorbed into the invisible Godhead. When the Lord was absorbed into the unity of the central Godhead and became one and indivisible with the throne of God, he was also radiated into the human race for the purpose of regenerating the Sons of God from men. The radiating influence of the Son of God was the dissemination of the spiritual energy which has been called the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit was the product of the dissolution of the body of the Lord; it was the divine proceeding from the visible Son and the invisible Godhood who was in him. The Holy Spirit (Ghost) was the seminal essence of Jehovah, by which the church was impregnated and from which the Sons of God are to be regenerated. The planting of the Seed took place in the beginning of the age; the regeneration progresses during the age, and at the end of the dispensation the Sons of God mature.

Jesus the Lord was the promised Seed; as seed is for the purpose of planting, it follows that He was planted in the race. He was declared to be the Word made flesh. It is also declared that the Word was sown; it therefore follows that He was sown, and that he was the Holy Spirit disseminated in the church. When we consider the fact that He declared himself to be the bread from heaven, eaten—appropriated, for the life of the world, it is easily understood how, through his conversion to Spirit, his life could be absorbed by his people. It is only through such a process that He could regenerate the Sons of God, who are to proceed from him at the resurrection of the dead in the end of the dispensation. In His ascent he was absorbed into God; in his descent he was absorbed into the race, whence he will arise in the multiplication of the Sons of God. "The earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. * * * Explain to us the parable. * * * The good seed are the children of the kingdom; the field is the world [church in which the seed was sown], and the harvest is the end of the world." By this is meant the end of the age or dispensation, when the old church passes away in the manifestation of the new church, which comes at the close of the age.

The old heavens are now passing away. The old earth and the old heavens have performed their mission, and are about to be dissipated to give place to the new heavens and new earth, by which are signified the new church and new state. This is the kingdom for which the church was taught to pray: "Thy kingdom come." The Almighty is about to establish a kingdom in the earth. It will not come in the quiet order of evolution, but through a sudden destruction in which the heavens will depart with a great noise—the noise of the great guns of the nations of the world. The end of the dispensation will not arrive through arbitration and the quiet settlement of human differences. We are approaching the great catastrophe. That spirit which actuates the trust and determines the robbery of tens of thousands and reduces them to penury, slavery, and to the ignorance of the wage slave, will not change its character by simple evolution.

On exhibition at the Pan-American Fair, there may be observed all of the modern improved methods of killing people. It is claimed by some of the optimistic, that these improvements are for the maintenance of the peace of the world, and that with the increase of the destructive power of the implements of war, the nations will be afraid to become engaged in warfare. If implements of warfare are necessary to deter mankind from fighting, it looks as if the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus, in the Christian nations of the world, had gone through some modifications since he was led like a Lamb to the slaughter, and that the slaughter only began with his crucifixion.

The human heart is full of hell, and it is not found alone with the millionaire trust, but equally with that other trust, more tyrannical and dangerous, the labor-union trust. The love of Christ is not found with either, therefore the conclusion that the conditions of reconciliation do not exist, and therefore the principles of arbitration will not settle the conflict of "capital and labor." The end will come as it has been predicted. Before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, God will be manifest in Elijah the Prophet. "For behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. He will come as a refiner's fire. His theocrasis will baptize the world with a new baptism, and the great conflagration, which the world will not escape, will dematerialize the tens of thousands who are prepared for the consummation of the age.

When at the end of the dispensation, marked by the movement of the sign Aries from the constellation Pisces into the constellation Aquarius, the old heaven and earth disappear, it is most fitting that the old astronomy, born in the dark ages and bringing into the world the spirit of atheism, should be dissipated. It is proper that in the dissolving of the old heavens and earth the old astronomy should be relegated to oblivion, and the new astronomy should come to fill the place of the pagan fallacy. Thus it is ordained of God, that with the new religion and socialism of Koreshanity there should be a new astronomical definition. There will be a revolution in all things, now at the end of the dispensation. This revolution begins in cosmogonical science. It will terminate in the manifestation of the Sons of God, who will stand at the apex of human development, constituting the genus Theo-Anthropos—the evolution of the fifth kingdom. This is the order of Melchizedek, of which the Lord Jesus was the High Priest, and for which he was sacrificed.

The Tyranny of the Great Oil Trust.

A Review of the Birth and Development of the Standard Oil Company, and an Exposure of its Methods; the Spreading Blot and Blight of Conspiracy.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

SOMEWHERE ABOUT 1860 a corporation or combination of men—about whose operations most things have borne an air of mystery, including their number, organization, business methods, and even name, for they operate under about as many aliases as a gang of burglars—was organized. To begin with, they were not oil manufacturers; they had no oil lands, wells, nor factories, nor, so far as appeared, anything to set them up in the oil business. At the time of their starting in business everything was flourishing in the oil region; many men were getting rich, and much greater numbers were making a fair living and were prosperous. In the course of time, it became obvious that blight and mildew were stealthily getting in their deadly work.

People found that their gains were slipping away because of excessive freight charges by the railroads. At length they learned that of the double rates they were all suddenly required to pay, as figured out on the year's business by a member of Congress—which would amount to $750,000,000—$600,000,000, after it had been collected from all, would be paid over to the oil trust, the Southern Improvement Company. Such contract had been signed by the Erie, New York Central, Lake Shore, Michigan Southern, Pennsylvania, the Atlantic and Great Western railroads, including all their connections. When this conspiracy to break up all the oil concerns, except this one, which had an effectual pull before which no competition could stand, was brought before the courts, the railroads were required to abandon these contracts and charge freight to all alike; this they professed to do, but the practice of discrimination continued. The policy of the roads, which was real robbery of their owners, seems to admit of but one single explanation. When asked for the list of their directors, only a part of it was given; and the rest were refused, leading under the circumstances to the belief on the part of many that the suppressed names are leading members of the oil trust, which were probably but four in number.

Armed with a deadly rebate the oil trust, in accordance with the policy that had been hinted at in rumors which said "that they intend to wipe out all the refineries in the country except their own," began the dance of death. One of the Cleveland manufacturers, who had sold, was asked by the New York legislature why he did so. "The Southern Improvement Company," said he, "or someone representing them, had a drawback of a dollar, sometimes seventy-five cents, sometimes more, sometimes less, and we were working against that difference." After going to the railroads and being assured that there was no relief for him there, and being the only man who would buy, he went to the head of the oil trust, who offered him fifty cents on the dollar for his business, and told him it was that or nothing. They would destroy his business. For a business that was producing $30,000 to $45,000 a year, these robbers paid $65,000, which was reckoned to be fifty per cent of its actual value.

The Rapid Development of the Monopoly.

By every conceivable contrivance to evade and defy the law, and to wipe out the equal rights of citizens, this conscienceless octopus continued to swallow up and crush out all competitors in the oil business and, subsequently, other related businesses. The Supreme Court of the United States said of it: "The understanding was to keep the price down for favored customers, but up for all others; and the inevitable tendency and effect of this contract were to enable the Standard Oil Company to establish and maintain an overshadowing monopoly, to ruin all other competitors and drive them out of business." The Court declared that the course of the railroads was one of "active participation in the unlawful purposes" of the oil company.

It was inevitable that this great corrupter of men and government should enter the field of politics on both a state and a national scale. Take one instance: When a proposition was before Congress to appoint a committee to investigate the charges that "many industries were threatened with extreme prostration" by the discrimination of the railroads, and to report a bill for the regulation of interstate commerce, and for its consideration unanimous consent was required, Henry B. Payne, of Cleveland, said, "I object." Ten years later when in pursuance of its policy to conquer its competitors the oil combine wanted a subservient Senate which would readily confirm disgraceful treaties negotiated in their interests, and when, in the state of Ohio, the democratic party was in the ascendant, in the canvass before the people for the legislature, the favorite statesmen, George H. Pendleton and General Ward, were named as candidates of the party. When the legislature elected to choose these assembled, the people soon woke up to the fact that the man who had betrayed them ten years before had become their Senator. A storm of wrath broke out that included all parties, and sworn evidence of bribery in great quantity was offered, being presented by two prominent members of Congress; but neither the legislature nor the Senate could be induced to right the colossal wrong and prevent the untold villainy.

Everything attempted in the interests of the people was by some unseen process turned to the account of this monster combine of oil and railroads. To protect the people from accidents as well as extortion, the states appoint oil inspectors. In many states the salaries of these are or were paid by the oil combine, and the stencils of the inspectors have been found in the hands of the combine, to brand their several products according to their own sweet will. The railroads, which obtained their right to be on the plea that they were the people's highways, upon which all men have equal rights, have—by means of the deadly rebate—become the pernicious engine by which—as we learn in "Wealth Against the Commonwealth" a book by Henry D. Lloyd, which uncaps the rascality from the beginning, in all its ramifications—"property to the extent of uncounted millions has been changed from the possession of the many who owned it to the few who hold it: 1. Without the knowledge of the real owners. 2. Without their consent. 3. With no compensation to them for the value taken. 4. By falsehood, often under oath. 5. In violation of the law."

He rightly adds that conduct which men call "trade" is, in reality, "lying, stealing, murder." The great "captain of industry," as we facetiously call such in this time, through whose capacity, not to work, but to organize and use the rebate through which this strange work became possible—because, forsooth, he leads in prayer and helps to send the gospel to the heathen and founds great so called Christian universities—is lauded to the skies as a public Christian benefactor. When he or his fellows were asked in Court or elsewhere, if they used any methods to the detriment of competitors (although they resorted to every means, even to cutting rival pipe lines and setting fire to the freed oil to the great danger of other men's property and even lives, to prevent competition), their uniform reply was, "Oh no; we live in perfect peace with our competitors." This was after the fashion of those other world-conquerors, the Romans, who were charged with first making a desert and then calling it peace. These men destroyed all competition and then, of course, did not quarrel with competitors. The facts show that all their claims about cheapening prices and improving quality of oil, by which they seek to justify their high-handed acts of oppression, are false. Both at home and abroad the alchemy of Standard Oil worked the lowering of the flash test of oils, with the results everywhere, as is shown by the report of the State Board of Health, of Michigan, "That as the standard was lowered, fires and death from explosions increased." The New York Daily Commercial Bulletin says: "It has been claimed that the oil trust has been a benefit to this country; that the economics which it has introduced, in the transportation and refining of oil, has been shared with the consumer, and that the enormous wealth which it has accumulated during the past ten years has been widely distributed. Not one of these claims has any substantial basis in fact."

Zaccheus and the Standard Oil Magnate.

The Christ and the Bible must be laid under contribution to whitewash the acts of the Standard Oil combine. Recently, we listened to what purported to be a baccalaureate sermon, of which the preacher was the chancellor of a great state university, who had once made himself prominent by his opposition to monopoly. The text was the story of Zaccheus, the Roman tax-gatherer, which the preacher strangely distorted to make it suit his purpose. The statement which the publican made to the Lord, he said, should read—not "Behold, the half of my goods I give to the poor: and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him four-fold," but—"I have always given half of my goods to feed the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I have always restored him four-fold." To say nothing of the improbability of the truth of the first statement, the idea that a man should deliberately, for he could have done it in no other way, get property by false accusation, and then, self-prompted, restore four-fold, and do it habitually, is a little too much for the belief of the ordinary man who is not a chancellor. And then, in spite of his remarkable benevolence and justice, this diminutive Jew, having somehow become very rich, became also very unpopular—indeed, an object of much hate. Of course, the hate was that which the unreasoning poor always exercise toward the very rich. Jesus, seeing how this righteous rich man was oppressed by these wicked poor, did not hesitate to throw round him the shield of his own personal power.

Let us see, as miners say, how this explanation will “pan out.” If, as Jesus said it did, salvation came to that house that day, it must be true that Zaccheus was among the Disciples who, after Jesus’ translation, were all together, and “had all things common.” Certainly, then, Zaccheus was no longer very rich, and the proof is unanswerable that Jesus did not, in this case at least, approve of rich men. Still another proof in the same line: The world, in spite of the teachings of modern chancellors, will soon find out that Jesus did not come to save men from being lost in some future spiritual hell, but men that are already lost in this, the only real world, which is now hell. The first of these salvations, which was the type of the one just ahead of us—the resurrection of the dead, the establishment of the kingdom of heaven in earth—was the salvation of the Christians from the destruction which overtook the disbelieving Jews in the destruction of Jerusalem. In a destructive three years’ war, all the cities of the Jews had been taken by the Romans, and their wealth confiscated or destroyed. The remnants of their inhabitants had been gathered into their capitol—their holy city, Jerusalem.

After Titus, the Roman general, had surrounded the doomed city by double lines of circumvallation, for some reason unknown to history, for three days his forces were withdrawn, during which every Christian went out to a small town in the mountains, and so escaped the destruction which overtook the unbelieving Jews. If living, as one to whose house salvation came in the person of Jesus, Zaccheus must have been of this number; but he could not have been a rich man, since they were all communists, and besides, had been plundered by the Roman soldiers, who made no distinction between them and other Jews. No word or act of Jesus can be produced to show that he approved of a state of affairs in which one man is rich while the mass of his fellows have to live in poverty. All the acts and words of his life are in perfect accord with the command which he gave to the rich young man: “Go sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and come and follow me.”

Given, as this unique baccalaureate discourse was, on an occasion of the great university, which owes its founding, and all that it is, or hopes to be, to the Standard Oil millions, the intelligent hearer could not fail to see in its special pleading an apology for, if not defense of, the great Standard Oil magnate—an attempt to wipe out the grease spot of standard oil. All the waters of all the oceans can never wash out that spot! At no bidding will this plague-spot ever out! Whatever it touches will be tarnished, corroded, destroyed by it. The greedy hand which gathered these accursed millions, with the hand—power which they constitute, can never be sweetened, so as not to smell of blood, by “all the perfumes of Arabia.”

Humanity Defaced by Corroding Evils.

The Wide-Spread Effects of False Education; the Condition of the Uncultured Classes; the Eve of Change; the Uplifting of the Masses in the New Age of Enlightenment.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

“WITH GOD all things are possible;” the impossible is not a thing. The Almighty, component of law, is powerless to reduce the least function of the universe to other than the existing procedure, which is the eternal method of law. Forever the seasons and the day and the night succeed each other. Forever the grand or twenty-four-thousand-year cycle of universal progression embraces the exact correspondence of the three hundred and sixty-five-day year, both with regard to alternations of heat and cold, and with respect to degrees and alternations of light and darkness. The vidual of the race, who sustains the broken continuity resultant from the operations of death, realizes but the shorter year; the individual, the perfected or God-Man, who in phases of visibility and invisibility continues from everlasting to everlasting, beholds the longer year, with all its analogous characteristics, as the larger enfolding the lesser. We are on the eve of change as swift as the breaking of winter into spring; as the dissipation of darkness by the first rays of sunlight. The hour approaches for our transition from the corruptible flesh of the sensual man to the likeness of the incorruptible person of the sinless Son; from mental, moral, and religious murkiness to the splendor of the kingdom of Jehovah.

The parentage of the race is always in dualistic compact with the environing phase of man’s grand timic cycle, in which paternity and maternity run the gamut of the degrees of quality from the most brutish to the supreme excellence manifested in the culmination by the Fatherhood and Motherhood of God. The period approaches for the decisive step in developing humanity into lines removed from the existing status. Ends are the result of means. Primary and farthest reaching, after the dissemination of the doctrinal truths by the Messenger of the conjunction of God and man, will be the baptismal endowment descending upon those who believe and yearn. The recipients will constitute a supreme and central genus who will become the inspiration of the people who, until such manifestation, will be incapable of yielding a receptive intelligence to the voice of Truth. Secondly, and entirely referable to the uplifting of the mass which does not constitute the Sonship, will be the rescue of the children from the bane of false education and pernicious surroundings. At present, the thought bestowed upon the fads of fashion and inconsequent ephemera of the hour is startlingly out of proportion with the lax attention granted to the development of the beings who, worthy or unworthy, in a few years are to constitute the all of existing humanity.

Remote consequences are impossible to the enfeebled vision of a backslidden age. The means to further the mental, moral, and religious development afforded by the humblest surroundings, are not made to yield tribute to the sum of human attainment. Young life is not led on to keen observation and contemplation of its surroundings. Observation and contemplation would beget the possibility of knowledge. Had the universe of children been taught to discover and logically value the palpable properties of matter, the greater number, if not all, would have realized the fact that matter presupposes form; that form presupposes limitation, involving center and circumference. What then? Why, men would never have dreamed that the universe is an illimitability, or have sacrificed to the false god of such conception. But so far have the children of men wandered into the domain of befogged mentality, that it is impossible today to convey the simple truth concerning the limitation of the aggregate of existing matter to a dozen people in an avowedly cultured and intellectual five hundred!

Our schools, a ripening from such conditions, can never undo the mischief of the maladministration of the fireside, any more than they can replace a half dozen perverted years. Wise teachers have indeed given a praiseworthy direction to a life after the more impressionable period was past; but how much greater the effect if equal wisdom had also radiated upon the earlier opening petals of mentality! During these years the mass of our young humanity is in the hands of parents too busy and too weary to bestow care, to say nothing of instruction, beyond the barest necessity. But as greater obstacle yet in the child's progress, is parental inadaptability which neither discerns the necessity nor the means to meet it. The warping influence of ignorance is not infrequently connate with a spirit of domination amounting to tyranny. Alcoholism often visits its violence through a crazed brain; but sober parents also shock the public with evidences of brutality which calls for legal intervention. Of such atrocities only the more glaring are chronicled; the unwritten record would afford a sum greater than is generally supposed. In connection with this aspect it must be remembered that children often, very often, appear as uninvited guests at the family hearth, and are keen sufferers thereby.

The alphabet and grammar of vice are inculcated as addition to inheritance wherever exists the prolific criminal. Among the non-criminal classes, vendettas, animosities, personal dislike toward people equally worthy, neighborhood gossip, unworthy caprice, and multiple things inexpedient are duplicated, triplicated, and in some rare cases multiplied by a score. To repeat somewhat, the greater number of parents bestow little thought upon character formation. Undue values are attached to affairs of injury, affairs of merit, and the everyday happenings which make the domestic world, with the child's future ever to settle the score. The babe is the acknowledged prey of not only the members of the household, but all comers and goers who choose to make it a plaything. It continues the recipient of the surrounding overflow of affectional gush, until, as it views the situation, its place is usurped, when it experiences a change which, in some cases at least, sets up and sustains the jealous passion. There are indeed commendable exceptions to this, and also to the rule that this youngest member has his naughty traits given hilarious appreciation until such time as they no longer afford amusement to the adult mind. But the adage concerning the bent twig's enfoldment in the tree's inclining, though trite, is almost wholly lost to application.

This may seem overdrawn. In the writer's opinion it is not, nor are all the dark corners exposed. It is an evil which will not disappear through condonement. It is a corroding evil, and as wide-spread as the existence of the human rooftree. Have the combined churches and clergy any panacea to offer? Can they say how a world scarred by the hellish competitive system and its sequent anarchy can train its babes and juveniles into a people devoid these perilous characteristics?

WHEN, in the consummate purpose of God, the male and female are reunited and made one flesh; when the two forms again become the united being, as before the disintegration of the Adamic genus; then is manifest the fruitage of the Tree of Life, wherein man, the soul man, that is, the nephesh man, involves the power to disappear and re-appear at will. He may become visible or invisible as he desires. He is the nephesh, because he is like a breath which gives energy and form also, to the blood and heart. The spirit (pneuma) of the ordinary man enters the lungs. It commingles with the psyche of the blood. In this unity, the pneuma or breath life becomes the psyche or blood life.

In the ripening of the fruit of the Tree of life, it becomes food for the Gods, and they descend to ultimates and pluck, absorb, and appropriate it. In the absorption there is thrown off a precipitate. In this precipitation or declension, is the beginning of the fall of man. This fall is but the planting of the seed of the fruit of the Tree of Life, that the principle of regeneration (reproduction) may be successively perpetuated. The perpetuation of God's existence, through the planting of the seed of the Sons of God in the soil of its propagation, namely, the animal life of the human race, depends upon the way of the Tree of Life, made secure by guarding its approach.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE DEATH of President McKinley emphasizes the fact which THE FLAMING SWORD has long made prominent, that the end of the old order is at hand. It is a significant and terrible tragedy in the drama of human events. A nation mourns for its Chief Magistrate suddenly cut down by violence. He was in a specific sense the exponent of the will of the people, and from all sections of the country tributes of praise and grief redound. North and South forget their prejudices and join reverently in placing upon his brow the crown of martyrdom already won by Lincoln and Garfield. The affections of the majority centered in him as the man of destiny and the representative figure in American history. He was indeed a powerful factor in the divine hands for the progression of the race toward its ultimate development, and his tragic death concerns all nations, touches every life. His career, from first to last, has been in many ways exceptional; no stain was found upon his private character when the searchlight of public scrutiny was cast upon it during two Presidential campaigns. His conception of the office which he filled rendered him a willing instrument to execute the wishes of the people who elected him. It has been said that no closer student of the will of his constituents ever occupied the White House. During his Administration and in consonance with his policy of territorial expansion, the United States has become recognized as a great world-power. The wise and deliberate utterances which characterized Mr. McKinley's speech at Buffalo, on the day preceding his assassination, will be long remembered; so will his noble and lenient words, a plea for mercy upon the misguided assassin, uttered as soon as the President could speak after he was shot. The Pan-American Exposition was instituted with a view to the consolidation of continental interests. The death of the Chief Executive in this place and in such a manner conspicuously marks the dividing line between the old and the new. It is an historic punctuation in the language of current events. When Washington died, there were less than three millions of American citizens. Now, the hearts of seventy-five millions own and honor the stars and stripes which mantle the bier of their dead Chief. From that bier, seventy-five millions send united prayers for the prosperity and upliftment of this country. The import of the situation cannot be fully grasped by the unenlightened mind. The divine prescience alone is able to gauge its influence and bring good out of all the machinations of evil.

There are two great motic forces—love and fear. Any form of religious belief that tries to exercise the constraint of fear is spurious, because religion is the principle that rebinds man to the great source and origin of love. Primitive Christianity was the product of the spontaneous outflowing of the beautiful spirit of Him who taught the world to bless and curse not—to pray for the enemy and the persecutor. The instant that the church begins to coerce, it has already fallen. Constantine on accepting Christianity, gave orders that the soldiers in his army should be baptized into the faith. This was the signal of declension. The reign of love ended and the reign of fear began; in its wake followed torture of mind and body. The rack and the stake are but symbols of the doctrine of endless punishment and unpardonable sin. There was no spirit of bitterness in the Son of man, and he communicated to his Disciples the gentle and gracious impulses that brought them into communistic fellowship. A religion which claims to be the product of the divine planting will show the characteristics of the type. A gorgeous system of ecclesiastical ceremonial designed to dazzle the eyes of the people while holding them in subjection through fear, cannot fulfil the expectations of those who have long waited for signs of the Lord's coming. His service is perfect freedom; his yoke is easy, and his burden is light. What constitutes religious freedom? The Pilgrim fathers left their homes and sailed across stormy waves to settle in a wild, strange land with this in view. But the event showed that the spirit of persecution and fear followed. Koreshanity holds that men should be free to follow in the direction of their highest loves, which are the fruit of the divine Seed, Jesus the Lord, sown in the church at the beginning of the Christian age. But man finds himself in a mortal body, with the will of the flesh striving against the higher will. Religious freedom is emancipation from the limitations of mortality and rest in unison with the will of God. Jesus was the perfect expression of this Will. In the beginning of Genesis, God says that his spirit shall not always strive with man. That is a promise of the final unity of man and God, which constitutes religious freedom. That is the perfect love which casteth out fear.

The integrity of commerce is maintained in the Heart Center of the world. The unexampled rapidity with which this country has risen from obscurity to a position of eminence in commercial relations, is by no means indicative of a speedy fall. Under the auspices of Almighty God it is destined to sweep on in a career of power and glory exceeding the most brilliant historical epochs. In fulfilment of His purposes, all the nations of the world are being gathered in and assimilated to form a new nation strong with the intellectual brawn and sinew of the race. In the unfolding of the divine plan certain crises will inevitably develop; but they will be of short duration, and each succeeding storm that spends its rage will bring the twin land inherited by the descendants of Ephraim and Manasseh nearer to the realization of the beatific visions of all the seers in earth. The scope of the divine purpose is broader than man can ask or think, and it includes a complete vindication of the character of Deity from the aspersions of cowardice, tyranny, and cruelty cast upon Him by agnostics and scoffers. The event will surely show that the Lord's hand is not shortened that he cannot save, neither is his ear heavy that he cannot hear. The coming of the Lord in the clouds of heaven, concerning which conjectures have been rife, is His coming in a new order of beings, the crowning product of evolution through long processes of ethnic blending. The splendor of the kingdom is to be revealed shining from the thick darkness where God is hidden. Then every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that he is mighty—yet the burden of the song will ever be that God is love.

An eminent scholar writing upon the subject of "Human Immortality," says in controversion of the materialistic position: "All one need to do, if the ordinary materialist should challenge one to explain how the brain can be an organ for limiting and determining a certain form, a consciousness elsewhere produced, is to retort with a tu quoque asking him in turn to explain how it can be an organ for producing consciousness out of whole cloth." Though it scarcely appears from this excerpt, the writer takes the ground that the brain is the medium through which the divine light shines for a season as man's self-consciousness. Such a theory is unscriptural since it makes every human being an offshoot of Divinity, thereby annulling the Messianic law. These two theories represent the opposite poles of modern thought. Truth lies between them. Taking thought as synonymous with consciousness, for the purposes of the present argument, in consonance with Descartes's famous postulate: "I think, therefore I am," it can be reasonably shown how the brain neither produces thought out of nothing—"out of whole cloth," nor simply transmits it like a pane of glass from God, the light behind. Thought can be generated in the brain by alchemical union, but the substances that enter into this union and furnish fuel for the fire may come from without; thought is the product of the combustion of matter taken into the system in the form of food. Mental energy radiates from one brain to another, but it is not simply transmitted without change, it is transformed to the specific quality generated by each mind.

The problem of life has been the subject of fruitless inquiry for ages. Human thought clings to it with a strange fascination, and one can hardly open any periodical without finding it presented in one aspect or another. Every day the mourners go about the streets, and every day the mystery of birth confronts us. Admitting that what is called life is in verity its opposite,—that humanity is here in the hells, in a state of mortality or death, it is evident that the secret of life pertains to a higher phase of development than that reached by the ordinary mind. It may be said that what is paradoxically termed mortal life is the result of two qualities of motion—pulsation and respiration, corresponding to two qualities of mental energy which constitute the light and heat of the hells or the inverted love and wisdom. Reasoning by analogy in conformity to the Koreshan axiom, that the science of natural things is the key to spiritual mysteries, it is clear that life in the heavens is the product of divine love and wisdom. The difference is simply that in the natural world light and heat are turned toward self, and death is the product of their union, while in the celestial world they are turned toward God, and this is life eternal.

While Koreshanity does not deny the testimony in favor of local floods, borne by geology and archæology, it finds in the account of the Hebrew historian, both record and prophecy. As all events recur in cycles, these statements have a universal application. Noah meaning the breath of God or Rest, as modern lexicographers derive the name, was the Messianic manifestation suited to that period. He built the Ark by founding a church to save the world or the people of his day from an inundation of error. From this refuge he sent out first a raven, typical of the Arab race, a dark skinned people descended from Noah through Shem, Abraham, and Ishmael. The dove on its thrice repeated mission may be said to represent the Holy Spirit going out from the Noatic church in three lines of descent, through Japhet, Shem, and Ham as representative of the celestial, spiritual, and natural. Why should the raven precede the Messenger of peace? In token of the fact that humanity in its natural darkness constitutes the channel of transmission for the spirit. In a more specific aspect, the going forth of the dove looks forward to Isaac, to Christ with the olive branch, and to His final coming in the new order.

The worm in its chrysalis is the object lesson by which Nature teaches immortality and the correlated fact that it is to be attained by metamorphosis of the natural body, not by the decay of that body. There are three stages of insect life; first the larva as it hatches from the egg, a worm that crawls and grovels, a despised shape, a wretched object, yet, withal a creature with a destiny. Among the Romans the larva was primarily a specter or a ghost, generally meaning that of a vicious spirit disquieted by memories of evil deeds; then the term was applied to a mask, or a covering for lower propensities. It is interesting to compare this with the word persona, also a mask, which the Romans borrowed from the Greeks. The second stage of the insect is the pupa or the larva in its cocoon, insulated from the outer world, in process of transition or metamorphosis to the third stage, that of the perfect insect, termed the imago. Now it has the adjunct of wings, which correspond to knowledge; it lives in the air, a new creature, bright and beautiful.

The inexhaustible variety of natural resources ought to relieve the most timorous from any apprehension in regard to the future of the race. Neither famine nor flood will prevail to destroy the inhabitants of a universe that perpetually renews itself by the operation of laws that are fixed. Wonderful possibilities are constantly unfolding in connection with the discovery of higher laws and their application to life. The progress of invention has been marvelous, but the future transcends the past. Hope, not fear, is the watchword of the present.

Which does the world prefer and which will it have, a declaration of independence of God, or a declaration of interdependence between God and man? There is no hidden spot, no secret corner of the cosmos exempt from the law of reciprocal activity. The smallest cell in the human body has its nucleolus. From least to greatest all things conspire to proclaim the interdependence of center and circumference.

"Mental" science says that man is the creator of his environment; Koreshan Science says that he is both the creator and the product of his environment.

It is love to God which opens the heart to love the neighbor.

Geologic Ages and Extinct Animals.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Deep in the strata of the earth we find the remains of animals unlike any of today. (1) If they disappeared, why may not men disappear? We find no bones of men with these animal remains. (2) How can you say that men existed contemporaneously with them?—INQUIRER.

The laws of involution and evolution appoint to every type its development in specific cycles. These are both subjective and objective in alternation. All types are not visible in the natural world at the same time, but no type is lost. The vegetable kingdom offers the example of the seed which is not externally visible when it is planted in the soil where the old husk dies, but the spirit of the organism is preserved and is formulating a sprout which presently pushes its way above ground. In a manner precisely analogous to this example, orders, genera, and species disappear, but they come again when the time is ripe and all the conditions of cyclic development have been fulfilled.

The American bison is fast becoming extinct, so is the Indian; but in the progress of another great astronomical cycle of 24,000 years, both will reappear. At the beginning of the Christian era, there was manifest a new type of being, the Immortal genus. The life history of Jesus of Nazareth, told simply and reverently by the men who lived in that day, shows clearly to those who accept it just as it stands, that he was of a different order from ordinary humanity. His life is marked by phenomena that can be explained upon no other basis. But He went away; yet the law of analogy argues that, like the seed, his life will be manifest in beings of the same genus when the periods of germination and unfoldment are complete.

This is the great analogical basis upon which Koreshanity founds its arguments in regard to the second coming of the Lord in his offspring. All the seeds produced by a given tree are the offspring of the one seed from which the tree sprang. Science and religion find a common ground by this method of reasoning, in accordance with the postulate that a law in one domain has its correspondent in every other.

(2) The variation of the angle with which the plane of the ecliptic cuts that of the equator, renders certain portions of the inner surface of the concave shell of the earth where we live, unfit for human habitation at given times. Alchemical changes, also, operative in the strata, conspire toward the elimination of human deposit in recognizable form. No chemist can detect the difference between organic and inorganic calcium. Again, no geologist has examined strata beneath the ocean beds. Who knows what the strata of the molluscan age might yield were a thorough examination possible in all localities? Human life has never been extinct, and it never can become extinct.

The Primary Cause of Death.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—What is the cause of death, and what becomes of the body after death, according to the Science of Koreshanity?—A READER.

The primary cause of death is the descent of the thoughts of the mind into the body, there to be transformed to the germs of reproduction. The corruptible dissolution of the physical body is the natural consequent of the downward tendency of the desires as serving to maintain the processes of ordinary generation. The desires being toward sense life, provision for re-embodiment is made through the seed sown and the offspring produced. Attraction toward the new cell is sufficiently strong to overcome the cohesion of mental and spiritual entities in the parent cell. In other words, the heart has formed a graven image which it now bows down to worship. This is death. The scientific necessity for destroying this attraction by a counter force is apparent. It is not an arbitrary fiat that the lower loves must yield to a higher and purer affection. It is by virtue of law fixed in being itself. Why rail at the discoverer? He did not voluntarily ordain such law.

When death ensues, the ego passes over to its own sphere of highest attraction in the spiritual world, located usually, in the brain of its offspring. Beside the transit of the central ego, there is a general radiation of mental entities. The atoms of the body are transformed to energy, which is transmitted to the physical star whose quality corresponds to the mental quality of the personality. When the ego is re-embodied there is a partial rematerialization of these energies to form the new body.

The Coming of the New Kingdom.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—What kingdom does Christ refer to in Matthew xxv:32? Please answer this question through the columns of THE SWORD.—E. Y., Rush City, Minn.

A scientific understanding of the Gospels shows that our Lord's instructions point to the end of the Piscatorial age, marked in astronomy by the passage of the Zodiacal sign Aries from the constellation Pisces into the constellation Aquarius, as the time of his second coming. At that time, it is reasonable to conclude, the kingdom for which He taught his Disciples to pray will be established. Some of the characteristics of this kingdom are determined. The will of God is to be done in earth as it is done in heaven. The Son of man is to come in His glory. This signifies the complete triumph of the intellectual principle as manifest in the outer or scientific degree of the Word. "The new kingdom is both body and spirit." "Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." To sit down upon the throne, is to ensure the perpetuation of the divine wisdom in externals—that is, in many personalities like Himself, gathered out of all the nations of the earth.

The Failure of Chemistry.

The Editor of the Scientific American Predicts a Revolution in this Branch of So called Science.

It has happened more than once, that just as we had firmly established our sciences upon a basis which seemed as unyielding as the Biblical rock, and had toilfully formulated theories that explained all phenomena with unvarying simplicity, some obscure experimentalist made a discovery which by no possibility could be twisted and molded to fit the existing system and, indeed, even challenged the truth of all established doctrines. Thus it was that Young and Fresnel overthrew the old emission theory of light with their experiments in the phenomena of interference; and thus our theories of chemical interaction, and even our conception of matter, may be modified by the researches made within the last few years in the field of the radio-active substances.

What chemist formerly would for a moment have thought of attacking the law of Avogadro—the law which tells us that if the temperature and pressure be equal, equal volumes of different gases contain the same number of molecules? And yet a modern chemist, Lord Rayleigh, did find it necessary to test the truth of that law by precise determinations of the densities of well known gases. If he had never studied the behavior of nitrogen, or if he had considered the discrepancies which he observed in determining the vapor density of that gas, as errors due to defective observation, as many a chemist before him had done, argon and the other newly discovered constituents of the atmosphere might still be unknown, and many chemical doubts never aroused.

Roentgen, too, found it necessary to revive theories of radiant matter which we thought we had long since refuted, and he supplied us with rays which we cannot yet explain. Becquerel increased our perplexity with his thorium and uranium rays. But when M. and Mme. Curie exhibited to our astonished eyes the results which they had achieved with radium and polonium, we were completely mystified, and were compelled to admit that there are more things in chemistry than our philosophy had dreamed of. Other chemists have also experimented with uranium, following methods different from those of the Curies, and have obtained additional active substances.

Still another supposed element has been found to mock our periodic system. It has been discovered that thorium, when subjected to the action of acids, yields helium, and that thorium is often associated with radio-active substances. Helium and its gaseous companions on the one hand, the radio-active substances on the other hand, are mysteries which have so far completely baffled our chemists. And uranium and thorium, elements with which we once considered ourselves thoroughly familiar, are now to us as curious as if they had been but the discovery of yesterday.

If the eccentricities of uranium, thorium, and helium, and the mysteries of Roentgen rays cannot be adequately accounted for by our existing chemical system, the question arises: Can our system be wrong? Chemistry is an exact science—at least we had flattered ourselves that it had been at last raised to that eminence. But an exact science is infallible, and will hear nothing of exceptions. Some day a chemist will be found whose mind, broad enough to grasp the scattered facts unearthed in the course of a century of research, will elaborate an [al] chemical system which may prove as revolutionary in its way as the theory of Young; but which will embrace in its comprehensiveness those puzzling gases and radiant substances so utterly inexplicable at present.—Scientific American, Sept. 7, 1901.

The College Trust.

The Influence of the Liberality of Millionaires Upon the Liberty of the Teacher.

To control higher education, American wealth owners may do one of three things: First, they may build their own schools, colleges, and universities. Examples are the institutions constructed by the "liberality" of the Vanderbilts, Armours, Stanfords, Rockefellers, etc. In such institutions it is essential constantly to proclaim that the widest liberty of teaching is encouraged, and that the sole object of investigation is the truth and the truth only. To permit the impression to go out that the teachers were interested or gagged and the jury packed, would hopelessly discredit the institution and destroy its influence, thus defeating the object of its existence. Second, our ruling class may look with compassionate eye upon the swarm of little, struggling, starveling colleges with which our land is sown, and minister to their distress. Manifestly, such institutions may be expected to possess sufficient gratitude and business sense to refrain from biting the hand that feeds them. Third, they must control the state educational institutions. Public colleges and universities have from the first been objects of dread to the enemies of our popular liberties: hence the defeat, to this day, of the National University project, though indorsed by Washington and Jefferson and supported by an overwhelming weight of fact and argument; hence also the subversion of Harvard from a state to a semi-private institution, the defeat of other state college efforts in the East, and the practical triumph in that section of the private college and university principle.

The people's colleges and universities may at times pass into the control of the people's friends, and the tremendous enginery represented by these institutions be wrested from the grip of those who make of it a commercial asset and be employed in the interest of the people themselves. A few such instances have occurred, and the fury of the dispossessed and their masters, incredible otherwise, can be understood only by those who appreciate the potency of light and the direct bearing of higher educational institutions upon the problem of "social control."

In the state educational institutions, the policy of the proprietary class is to secure control, place in charge only "safe men," i.e., men in sympathy with private wealth or afraid to voice other views, employ professors who have been educated in "safe" institutions and come with the indorsement of those institutions, inculcate their views as "scientific," and scout all contrary opinions as "unscientific" and "partisan," use text-books, if any, that are also "scientific" in the same sense (though these text-books are at times grossly partisan and false), insist that their representatives must permanently continue in control whatever may be the vicissitudes of state politics, any other policy being gross "spoilsism," and terrorize into silence and submission all teachers whose views may not square with their own.

With Jesuitical adroitness this policy has been pursued until, with rare exceptions, the higher educational institutions of America have been silenced or enlisted in the service of wealth, the natural opponents of this policy continuing for the most part ignorant of it or indifferent and apathetic, weakly accepting as "scientific" or "partisan" whatever was so labeled by the controlling interests and raising no hand to rescue their colleges from this pitiful thralldom.

The situation, meanwhile, for the teacher of the social sciences has become grave. On one hand he sees position, assured income, "scientific" standing, promotion, and opportunity to work undisturbed in his chosen field. On the other he sees discharge, disgrace, proscription, the stigma of "unprofessionalism" and "partisanship," and—the black-list; for in offending privilege and wealth he has roused a foe that never forgives nor forgets, a demon that never sleeps.—T. Healed by Humbug.

Physicians Often Called Upon to Cure Fancied Ills and Hallucinations.

"Yes, I have had some strange patients in my time, as, indeed, every doctor of any experience must have had," said a medical man. "And I have performed some wonderful feats of curing by methods which would not be recorded in the Lancet.

"Only a month ago a man called to see me in a state of great distress. He assured me that he had got a 'frog in his inside.' He had swallowed it in a condition of infancy in a glass of impure water some months earlier, and it had grown to an enormous size. He was sure that it would be the death of him if he could not get rid of it. In vain I pointed out that the frog existed only in his own fancy; he grew furious at the suggestion, and said that I was as incompetent and unsympathetic as all the other doctors he had consulted. At last, to get rid of the man, I said: 'Very well, you may be right after all. At any rate, come here again at this time tomorrow and we will see what can be done.' He came at the appointed time, and I told him that an operation would be necessary, to which he gladly consented. I made him lie down on a couch, administered chloroform, and when he recovered consciousness was able to show him a very large and frisky frog as the result of the operation. His delight was unbounded, and he went away blessing me for saving his life. Of course, he had no suspicion that the frog had been specially imported for his benefit.

"Another of my patients has to thank me for his preserved eyesight—at least, so he is kind enough to say. He informed me that a tin-tack which he had been hammering had sprung up and lodged in his right eye, causing him infinite pain—and certainly the man's eye, from constant rubbing, was in a state of great inflammation. I examined the eye carefully, but could find no trace of any foreign substance in it; and, as for there being a tin-tack 'buried in it,' the idea was preposterous. However, as I saw the man was convinced the tack was there, and was making himself ill with anxiety about it, I suggested a small operation. A few minutes' preparation was all that was necessary. Fortunately one of my boys had a magnet, which I discovered, and attaching this to a battery I held it in proximity to the man's eye. Within a few seconds my efforts were rewarded, for I was able to show my patient a very vicious looking tin-tack (which I had taken from the drawing-room carpet), and I had the satisfaction of sending him away happy, to advertise my 'skill' among his friends.

"One good lady, who is a small and constant annuity to me, vows that I am the 'cleverest doctor in town,' and has sent me crowds of patients. She is one of those people who are always imagining they have some new ailment; indeed, I think by this time she must almost have exhausted all the 'ills that flesh is heir to,' and will have to begin again. Of course, there is nothing whatever the matter with her, except indolence, which is the mother of all kinds of disorders, real and fanciful. Fortunately for every ailment I am able to provide a specific, which never fails to cure her within a few weeks. The curious thing is that, with a slight variation in coloring and flavor, the medicines are always the same, and contain nothing more potent than a little sugar, with a tablespoonful of wine or spirit. Some people would say that it is wrong to deceive a patient in this way; but I cannot see it. Such women are never happy unless they are 'under the doctor's hands,' and if one man won't doctor them another will. My medicines certainly do them good, if only in imagination; and in this particular case do not cost my patient a tenth part of the money she spends on her pet dogs.

"You did not know that it is possible to turn a man's head completely round without killing the patient, did you? Well, it is; for I have done it, and ought to know. About a year ago a man called to ask me if I could do anything for him. He told me that by some means, which he could not explain, his head had got twisted completely round, so that the back of it was in front and his face behind. This was a serious state of things, though I admit the man's appearance seemed to me quite normal. However, I was quite equal even to this emergency, and invited the man to call again at an appointed time, prepared to undergo an operation. By an arrangement of mirrors the man was only able to see the back of his head, a fact which, of course, confirmed him in his hallucination. The lights were then turned out, and in the darkness I gave my patient a series of electric shocks from a powerful battery, during which my assistant gave his head a series of violent twists and wrenches, until the poor man begged us to desist. With a final shock and twist the lights were relit, and to my patient's delight he saw his face in the very mirror where only a few minutes earlier he had seen only the back of his head. The cure was complete, and the patient is firmly convinced that during that awful period of twists and shocks (and juggling with mirrors) his head was actually twisted into its proper position again."—Tit-Bits.

The Curse of Competition.

Waste and Warfare that have Wrought Ruin of the Happiness of Humanity.

When a celebrated General was asked what he thought about war, he said: "War is hell." Competition is war, therefore, competition 'is hell,' according to the philosophy of this general. As has been asserted in these columns, competition does not belong to enlightened civilization. It is a relic of savagery and has been accepted as correct for the reason that the intelligence of the masses has never before reached the point that the evils of competition were understood. The early Christians saw plainly that competition destroyed brotherhood, and hence made an effort to establish communisms, that the early church would not be burdened with a system that makes men enemies instead of friends. Under intensified production and distribution, the capitalists soon discovered the evils of competition. They observed the waste and warfare that worked ruin to many of their class, and organized the trust to eliminate the evils of the system.

There is no real friendship between nations or individuals which compete against each other for trade, business, or employment. There has hardly been an international war for a hundred years that has not been the result of competition. We have an army in the Philippines, England is waging a war in South Africa, France has an army in Africa, Russia is taking possession of Manchuria, and only awhile ago, the United States, England, Germany, Russia, France, Italy, and Belgium had armies in the Chinese empire as a result of competition; each nation competing with the others for Chinese trade. The United States wants a gateway into the Orient, that the capitalists of the country may find a market for the $2,000,000,000 so called surplus wealth that our own people need. All these wars may be truly called competitive wars, as they have all been the result of competition. Each nation today is struggling for commercial supremacy. Great and expensive navies and great armies are being equipped by the commercial nations to prevent one nation from infringing upon the so called commercial rights of the others. This is all waste and a burden upon the working class, all of which has resulted from the competitive system.

Commercial competition being competitive warfare, establishes race hatred and war. The Englishman does not dislike the American because he is an American, but because he is forced to compete with him in the markets of the world. The hatred of one nation for another comes from the enmity engendered by competition. The American soldier had nothing personal against the Filipino, but the capitalist class demanded the subjugation of the Filipino, that he might find a market for his goods and wares. The English soldier could have had nothing personal against the Boer who never wronged him and whose habitation was thousands of miles away, upon another continent. But the English capitalists had the wage-slaves of England organized and armed to shoot their brother workers of South Africa, that the capitalists could find new markets and grow richer through the ownership of the mines and labor of the people of South Africa.

The organized workingman has nothing personal against the unorganized worker, until he gets into a strike and the unorganized worker proceeds to take the place of the organized worker. Then the war commences between the organized and unorganized workers. This is competition for jobs. This is the struggle. This is war. This is the social hell engendered by competition. The competitive system makes nations murderers, makes business men liars, makes men who work hate each other and struggle for material promotion and advantage. It makes of some scabs and outcasts—Ishmaelites,—and society is made one seething hell in which there is no real love or happiness among men. Competition produces poverty, the corner stone of crime; it subjects the weak to annihilation; it produces strikes and wastes labor and effort; it produces the marble heart and casts out love and mercy; it brutalizes the race and arouses the savage instincts of past ages. The ministers become mere politicians and compete with each other for care of the rich churches and big salaries.—Social Economist, Bonham, Texas.

The Saturday Evening Post.—"A Most Lamentable Comedy" is the title of a powerful novelette by Mr. William Allen White, which begins in the September 21 issue of The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia. This absorbing serial is a study of political hysterics—the story of a State gone mad. The scene of the novelette is a Western State laboring under the burdens of a panic year. The central figure is a grocery store demagogue, whose harebrained oratory captures the State convention. The story rises to a height of dramatic power and intensity rarely equalled in the fiction of the day.

Leslie's Weekly.—The notable feature in the issue for Sept. 14, is the extra sheet filled with illustrations relating to the recent catastrophe. The last photograph of President McKinley, taken at his request at one o'clock on Friday, only three hours before he was shot, gives value and interest to this number, making it a desirable souvenir. Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland flax, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

The Law of Sacrifice and Martyrdom.

National Crimes Expiated Through the Shedding of Blood; the Great Sacrifice of the Age; the Causes of the Martyrdom of Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley.

ACCORDING TO THE JUDGMENT of the world, a great and good man has gone to his rest. The grave of the martyr contains the remains of the nation's idol. Deeply obscured in the mysteries of Providence, are the causes for the sacrifices made in atonement for national criminality, hard for the world to recognize. The martyrdom of the Christ was regarded, in his day, as but the reasonable execution of a disturber of the peace of the community in which he dwelt. The world was not conscious of the fact that in the death of a "malefactor" there were hidden the mystery of the pollution of the human race and the atonement for the sins of the world, in the sacrifice of the Son of God. If the history of the Christ be critically examined from the view-point of the common rational criticism, what do we find? The Lord taught doctrines that were in direct contradiction to the public opinion concerning religion, morals, and social life. In religion He made himself a God and the true object of worship, and therefore the proper target for the animosity and vengeance of the Jewish church. He said: "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. * * They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world [cosmos, order] and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage." When in his enthusiasm Peter declared to the Lord, "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have therefor?" The Lord answered: those of you who have left father and mother and children and husbands and wives and brothers and sisters and houses and lands, for my name's sake and the gospel's, shall have all the corresponding things in the heavenly degree of these relationships. If you have not left all to follow me, then you are not worthy of me. "Leave everything and follow me," was the demand made by the Lord in his day. This was in direct opposition to the sentiment of the age regarding the obligations of love, as the world had interpreted it.

The public interest had provided for the merchants and money-changers in the courts of the temple. No one supposed he was desecrating the sanctity of the temple because he was adding to the convenience of the populace in providing exchanges and sacrifices for those devotees who came from abroad and procured their sacrifices at the hands of the merchants in the temple. The desecrators of the temple were not merely those who provided the means, but equally those who made the purchases and the sacrifices. When the Lord made his whip of small cords and entered the temple and drove out the money-changers, he furnished a lesson both to those who bought and sold—to the merchant and commoner alike. The temple had been made a house of merchandise and a den of thieves, by common consent and by authority. The laws of the municipality regulated the uses made of the temple for the purposes of merchandise.

The Flaming Swora.

Jesus was the violator of the common law and of the municipal statutes. He associated with questionable people. The Jews were expecting a king; He declared himself the good Shepherd, the promised Messiah. The church and the world hated and murdered Him. The few only, recognized the Savior of the world. Those whom He had offended on all the lines of his active opposition to customs and conventionalisms, were the first to instigate the movement which ended in the catastrophe of his career, but it was a cataclysm which was to end in the resurrection of the new genus of men. The people of that age and condition of pollution could not discriminate between the divine Communist and the common anarchist. He was taken for the typical anarchist because the money power of the age was in danger, and the money power said he must be destroyed. The moral and religious world saw only the criminal; but God saw the sins of the world, even the world that murdered him—the world to be saved by his grace. How little did the world of ordinary religious, moral, social, and commercial obligation comprehend the underlying principles of the Lord's crucifixion and sacrifice! A common man had suffered the penalty of the law. It was the event of a moment, as ephemeral as the morning dew. God saw the sacrifice of his "First Begotten;" he saw also the sins for which that offering was made.

Did God know the reason for the martyrdom of Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley? A critical analysis of Lincoln's martyrdom will reveal some things which have been hidden from the scrutiny of the common people. The American people had enslaved a race. That law which had declared, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's bullock and thy neighbor's ass," had been violated by a people who had declared all men free. The bullock is the symbol of liberty. The nation had prostituted its first principle of life, it had fallen short of its standard of religious, moral, and civil liberty; it had to be judged by its own standard of obligation. It had destroyed the liberty of a race through its covetousness. That there is no remission of sins without the shedding of blood, had its verification in the great sacrifices of the North and the South, equally, in that thousands of the best of the land were given for this great sin. The sacrifice culminated in the martyrdom of the great Lincoln, the innocent center of the consummation of the atonement. The people were executing vengeance, impelled by the hatred which was inherent and manifest with every breath. Lincoln would have said, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." The martyred Lincoln would have forgiven, and God does forgive and save to the uttermost.

The ass signifies the burden-bearer. The Afro-American slave was the burden-bearer of the white race, and he became the subject of the covetousness of those who enslaved him. The North and the South were equally to blame, and both received the penalty of the crime. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's ass," means that thou shalt not deprive thy neighbor of the results of his industry. It is not enough after robbing a race—for generations—of its industrial career, that it be given its liberty and told that it may now shirk for itself. God demands a restitution. The American people have not dealt justly with the black citizen of these United States. Does God demand more atonement for the sins of his people? Was Lincoln without malice in his heart? Then God took him for his sacrifice.

What of Garfield? It was the purpose of decree to hurl the great Republic upon its career of imperial destiny. Imperialism was in embryo; conservatism stood in the track of imperial progress, and Garfield was the innocent center of that obstruction. There must be a sacrifice for the blindness of the nation to the functional potency of the people that shall rule the world. It is in the destiny of the American nation to bring liberty to all people, and it shall be disciplined and purified by fire to the end of accomplishment and the fulfilment of its destiny.

In the midst of the agony of a people and the sympathy of the entire world, we enter upon the consideration of the third martyrdom—for the sins of a people. The nation is fully launched upon its new career. Nothing shall retard the progress of the new world-power which has arisen, yet unsanctified, to establish liberty, insure equity, to bring peace, and to restore humanity. God will discipline until the chosen nation shall have been purified for his service in the emancipation of the world. Prosperity shall not be only for the few; liberty, equity, peace, and prosperity belong to all the people, and God's will is not insured until this be accomplished.

Mr. McKinley said: "God's will be done." His death means more than the martyrdom of a President at the hand of an anarchist. It is the initiation of the world's climax. Jesus said: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." Mr. McKinley said: "Do not hurt him, men." In the magnanimity and grandeur of his character, and from the inmost depths of his soul he breathed his emotion of forgiveness. It is not so with the world. With it, it is vengeance for vengeance, blood for blood. The sacrifice is not complete, nor will it be, until the sacrifice shall culminate in God himself, in his humanity. This latter sacrifice and greater crime will be placed at the door of chaos.

The nation and the world mourn. Does the nation know for what it wears its weeds of mourning? The populace is full of anarchy. The anarchist hates the law; he works for its destruction. For one anarchist whose vengeance slew a man, there arose ten thousand anarchists who were only restrained from the execution of vengeance through the officers of the law, and these, had they not been in authority under the discipline of Government, might have been found with the mob. How many tens of thousands are there today who, out of friendship for the martyred Hero, would defy the law were a leader of the mob to arise with a courage equal to the animosity of the populace? May God deliver us from the hour which shall deprive us of the protection of the powers of Government, and the law and order which it insures.

If the martyrdom of the Hero who has led our army and navy through the double crisis of the war with the Spanish nation, and the world emotion of Chinese revolution and massacre and the imbroglio of the world, can soften the human heart and mollify its vengeance, then God's will will have been accomplished, and the sacrifice has its virtues. If not, there comes a sacrifice of still greater import.

Anarchy and the Spirit of Vengeance.

The Seeds of Anarchy in the Soil of Animosity; Pernicious Exploitation Through the Daily Press; the Inevitable Result of Centuries of Oppression; Anarchy in Church and State.

THE LITERATURE of anarchy is written and published for the express purpose of being distributed throughout the world. Comparatively few people read it in the regular anarchistic publications. From spite and in the spirit of vengeance—a function of anarchy—the sensational daily press is selecting the salient announcements of the propaganda of anarchy, and exploiting them for public perusal and study. It is brought to the attention of millions of people who would not be reached but by its pernicious exploiting through the daily papers of the country. Whether it is worse for this propaganda to be displayed to few people by the circumscribed facilities and methods of anarchy, or through its enunciation by the far-reaching influence of the great universal and daily press of the world, is a question for the judicial mind to consider and settle.

All that anarchy requires for its propagation is the dissemination of its seed, because it is easier for weeds to grow in any field, than it is to cultivate the products of the garden. There is no better field in which to root the spirit of anarchy than that soil of animosity where is manifest the determination of men to violate and ignore the law, wheresoever and whensoever the mob is aggrieved, and is therefore active in the execution of its vengeance by lynching its victims. Anarchy is hydra-headed, and nowhere is it more pronounced than in some of the law courts of America. Every district attorney should seek to know the truth regarding a suspected man, rather than to forge the chain of circumstances which will convict an innocent one. If anywhere in the world there requires to be a revision of the laws of the land, that revision should be first in the application of jurisprudence in America.

"Vengeance is mine, and I will repay," saith the Lord. In the present situation, the populace is stirred to the core; it ought to be in grief, it is in revenge. Genuine grief from the soul of pure love, untainted with selfishness, is without revenge. The Lord pitied those who would destroy his life; may we not pity those who aim to institute reform in the exercise of hate and the execution of its will? Anarchy is the legitimate result of hundreds of years of authoritative oppression. The anarchist, like the civilized Christian mob, has no discrimination; he cannot differentiate between the power of a good and a bad government.

It is not a Christian spirit that would seek to destroy all that is not republican in politics; but it looks today as if it would be dangerous for a man to express an opinion in opposition to the republican Administration, as from that point of view it would appear disrespectful to the memory of our martyred President. It has fallen to the lot of the republican party to enforce the circumstances which have proven popular in America. There is danger that the republican party will become too popular; and if, as the New York Journal suggests, voicing the sentiment of tens of thousands of the American people, "The President who begins the Nicaragua canal will have a monument so colossal that it will dwarf all his errors and make his name immortal," such a glory will redound to the glory of the republican Administration. Too much renown to one class of the present conditioned humanity would make it intolerable for the subordinate class. The safety of our present Government resides in such a universal division of sentiment as that no class, either in religion or politics, becomes too numerically superdominant. This is because anarchy is the crowning element in the human soul.

The Christian world everywhere teaches—outside of the Roman Catholic church—that the law of God cannot be kept by his people. The Christian world is taught that the ten commandments need not be kept, nor can they be; and that God will save men without the keeping of the law. This is in direct opposition to the teachings of the Bible, for in its final chapter the declaration is made: "Blessed are they that DO his commandments, that they may have right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." The doctrine of the church, that the commandments need not be kept, is the rankest anarchy, for it is rebellion against the law of God and against his kingdom.

Mistakes of Newspapers and Doctors.

THE CARTOONIST, through the New York Journal and Chicago American, has been instituting and conducting a long hunt for "Teddy." After a series of difficulties and disappointments, the hunters with their bloodthirsty hounds brought up before a kettle of soup in which the "Sozodont" teeth of what was supposed to be the "strenuous" "Teddy," appeared above the rim of the kettle. The last we saw of the hunters and their hounds, they were gloating in satisfaction at having found the object of their search so near home and in a kettle of soup. They thought he was on the shelf, and that the chef had put him in the soup dish. They were dead sure of this, but it turns out that the hunters made another mistake. It wasn't Teddy at all; it was merely one of Oppen's nightmares. Oppen was dreaming. Roosevelt was not in the soup, he was not on the shelf. The Chicago American has discovered where he is. The President of the United States has three and a half years of strenuous life before him, and as he is a mighty hunter, may it be before the Lord he will do the hunting, and the other fellow with the hounds may be in the hole. We bemoan the catastrophe which has made Mr. Roosevelt the incumbent of the White House, but rejoice that a man in whom the world has confidence takes the helm.

In the nation's catastrophe the people have learned the lesson, that the opinions of the doctors and the prayers of the Christian world are not infallible. The prayer of the righteous man availeth much. How much did the prayers of the Christian world avail, including "his Holiness," the Pope of Rome? Not much. What, then, are we to conclude? To what extent the doctors are responsible for the statements of Mr. McKinley's recovery up to the day of his collapse, we have no means of ascertaining. We know, however, that there was not one indication of improvement from the time he was shot until his death—according to the bulletin reports regarding temperature, pulse, and respiration. We watched these indications as reported, and found them invariably indicative of a steady course to the dissolution which finally told of the extent of the disaster. Is it possible that on the 10th of the month, four days after the assassination, and from that time on until the collapse of the President, that they did not know that Mr. McKinley was doomed? They did not know of the wound in the pancreas, nor of the fracture of the kidney, but they did know of the temperature, pulse, and respiration. They knew, also, how to employ digitalis—the greatest heart depressor known, and how to employ the calomel. The digitalis, calomel, and salt injected into the blood, together with the prayers of saints ascending to heaven, did not avail. There must be something the matter somewhere.

Koreshan Solution of the Fourth Dimension.

The Word Space and Its Meaning; Illimitability Inconceivable and Illogical; the Mathematics of Form Necessitates a Fourth Dimension; the Point of Terminal Transformation.

IT IS AN EASY matter to understand and apply the mind—in the common realization of length, breadth, and thickness—to the forms and modifications of matter as tangible and appreciable properties and realities. It is easy enough to observe the universal law of limitation as belonging to every shape assumed by matter, both in its natural and artificial modifications. It is impossible to observe any of the forms of matter as limited by the definite extremity of their outlines, and not appreciate the law or principle of limitation as being a property of dimension.

Space is from the Latin spatium, or Greek, span. According to Webster, it is "that which makes extended objects conceivable and possible;" "a quantity or portion of extension; an interval between any two or more objects." To say that space is illimitable would be to contradict every conception and definition of space. If the mind could conceive of such a property as illimitable extension, it would be compelled to apply to it a nomenclature from which the idea of space, both as to quality and name, were expunged. The Greek word span, equivalent of space, means to reach to extremes; that is, to limitations.

Illimitability is inconceivable, and that which cannot be conceived has no existence. The three conceived properties of space or dimension as acknowledged by the mathematician, namely, length, breadth, and thickness, are necessary properties of form and therefore of space, and enter as three cardinal factors into the determination and purpose of knowledges.

In the estimate of the three essential and already universally recognized properties of dimension, we discover the first element of triangulation, and in the score of such triangulation, the primary element of trigonometry, its mensuration or definition. The determination of these three points of the qualitative triangle of matter, by that score or circle of consciousness circumscribing it, does not complete the mathematical problem of equation.

Mathematicians know very well that there must of necessity exist a fourth dimension; and though some have gone so far as to conceive the possibility that the spiral may somehow enter as a factor into the property, they cannot yet apply it because they have not discovered the law of the spiral. Men have entertained the conception of centripetal and centrifugal energies as determined by attraction and repulsion; also the common law of rotation as the modification of these coördinate motions in conjunction. Just how these three motions combine to establish the fourth, that is, the gyral, they have not defined to us; yet the gyre is a fourth motion, and is as much a correlative of matter as the other three, and as it is the product of the combination of the three, it must complete their equation.

As motion cannot exist independent of matter, and as space can only apply to matter and is one of its properties, the fourth motion must apply to a fourth property of space in extension. The gyre is therefore the fourth limitation of dimension. The laws involved in the helix furnish the only possible clue to the solution of this final great and last factor to the problem of life. Insulated counter currents, resulting in the destruction of one kind of energy and its conversion to another kind, (terminal transformation,) supply us with that correspondential analogy with which the law can easily be determined. If the hypothesis of the correlation of the forces is an actual truth, then the limitation of an energy as a mode of motion must be defined by the destruction of that quality of motion in its terminal transformation to another kind. If "a mode of motion" can be defined by its action upon matter, its quality determined by that which we call phenomena, the limit of that action as defined by its phenomena must terminate where, and only where, the specific quality of motion ceases to exist. This certainly must be one of its limitations.

As motion is a correlative of matter, and there must be as many correlates between motion (as activities) and matter, with which it acts, to manifest its phenomena, so matter must possess a corresponding termination; namely, a point or quality of terminal transformation. By this we mean property of convertibility from one kind of matter to another kind. We call this transmutation of matter, and the science which governs it, the science of alchemy. The energy of transmutation is gyral or helical energy. The general term by which it may be designated as applicable to every domain of procedure, is revulsory revolution. Helical energy is the energy of transformation, through insulation, and involves atomic dissipation or that subtle procedure of energy by which an atom of matter is whittled down by friction or agitation to its geometric point, a point beyond which it no longer exists as matter, but beyond which it becomes energy.

The quality of mind called materialistic cannot embrace this special confine or limit of matter, and cannot therefore comprehend the environment of the fourth dimension. When the mind reaches the comprehension of the confine of the fourth dimension, it ceases to be agnostic or materialistic. It comes into or is born into the science of spiritual phenomena.

Fruits of Lawlessness and Rewards of Obedience.

The Imperialism of Divine Anarchy and Order in Contrast with Modern Anarchy and its Chaos; the Supremacy of the Gods and the Self-Government of the Perfect Man.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE ELOQUENCE of his Excellency, President McKinley, terminated with these words, breathed into the ear of his beloved wife: "Let God's will, not ours, be done." There is one imperial Will in the universe to which all other wills must yield. It is inevitable that the anarchy of mortals be dominated by the science of the law, ere the anarchy of the Immortals can prevail. The Lord Jesus was an imperial, law-abiding Anarchist. He so fulfilled in himself the righteousness of all the laws of divine Being, that in the estimate of the Almighty, the Eloah within the holy Temple of his flesh, he was above all laws of mortal origin, and free in the liberty of a Son of God. The records of history furnish the story of just one Man with the moral right to be called an Anarchist in the divine sense of the term—one above the law. The Lord knew no sin; and because of his inherent power to lay down his life and take it again, he needed not the protection of the powers of constitutional government.

Until men are born Sons of God, in the image and likeness of God, there will be no legitimate anarchists—that is, men who can live righteously without a constitutional government to establish their relations and define their duties to their fellows.

Jesus taught his Disciples to pray: "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." When He walked the earth, heaven in earth was manifest; the Son of man was in heaven—that is, exalted to the state or condition of Deity. He said: "Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world. * * I proceeded forth and came from God. * * Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." But one Man has been born from above, in the image and likeness of God; all other men are born from beneath, and do evil works continually. Anarchistic or lawless individuals are a most dangerous and destructive variety of the devil's offspring, needing wholesome military discipline. Many of the most dangerous anarchistic individuals do not call themselves anarchists; the Lord might class them externally with the "scribes, Pharisees, and hypocrites," who tithed mint, anise, and cummin, and forgot the weightier matters of the law.

The law is a schoolmaster to bring men to Christ—the apex of universal creation, in which God and humanity meet on a plane of equity, liberty, and happiness. There is just one way to reach this high plane of divine Anarchy—the divine lawfulness of Imperialism. "Good Master," said a wealthy young man of the Jews, "what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments," said the Lord of life. The first commandment or covenant of promise indicates the nature of the divine government: "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me." Just one supreme Being is recognized; all other beings are emplaced dependent on his will. One being commands, by virtue of the supremacy of his governing qualifications, the self-surrender of every other being to do His will—to keep his commandments. This must be done in the power of a love that represents a man's whole might, mind, and strength.

The one supreme Being is represented by the sun; all other beings are represented in their own order by the moon, planets, and stars of various degrees of glory and distance from the sun. A great multitude is before the throne; and there is one on the throne whose right it is to be there as King of kings and Lord of lords. "Thy will, not ours, be done." The Lord Jesus, the express image of God's person, was the embodied will of God, as conceived by the Holy Ghost—the Spirit of Truth which gave him life. Whatever Jehovah inaugurated in earth must be fulfilled, or reach its harvest form, ere the inhabitants of the earth know aught of the heavenly state, of which he was the King and involved kingdom.

There is no remedy for misconceived, malformed, chaotic, and damnable anarchy, as there is no remedy for any other form of sin but that offered by Jehovah and demonstrated by him to be reliable—obedience to law. The captain of our salvation was made perfect through generations of suffering the consequences of disobedience to law; He learned obedience by suffering, and reached the state of conjunctive unity with Deity, in which he delighted to do and to be the divine Will. He was the ultimate and justifying production of all the operations of universal law.

Men seek science; they vivisect the bodies of chief rulers and paupers in their search and experimentation in darkness, if haply they may find it. They search the bowels of the earth, analyze the stars, measure the power of winds and waves; and derive but the dust of inexplicable facts, which they must heap up as mountains of appalling testimony to their ignorance. Men have no scientific comprehension of their origin and destiny, hence they grope in darkness and beat about the seas of life as ships without rudders. Genuine science is now to be had for the asking; but for this world to ask and to receive, means the downfall of all scientists falsely so called, and of the institutions of their creation. It would mean the introduction of inquirers to an imperial bureau of information, a secret service of the Most High, which would detect every error of irrational or lawless judgment, and leave them no place of rest but the chair of divine electrocution for their self-destruction. It is a fearful thing for men, wise in their own conceits, for men unlawfully a law unto themselves, to fall into the hands of the only living and true God, the power of genuine science—the power of one who knows, and knows that he knows!

The prayer, "Thy will be done," uttered by the Apostles of the Lord Jesus—uttered by their descendants, and echoed when voiced by the dying Chief Magistrate of our nation, and by the millions of this nation and its sympathizers—will be answered, and the foundations of the new heavens and a new earth—a new church and state—will be laid in the righteousness of the law, and expressed in the constitution of the strongest government of God in earth, ever to be recorded in the annals of time and written in the eternal verities of cosmic construction. He will rule the nations with a rod of iron; he will dash the old kingdoms in pieces as a potter's vessel, that he may preserve the kingdom of the Gods.

The Theocratic kingdom is imperio-republico-regal in organic form. The ingathering of the fragments of the Bread of God, of which there are twelve basketsful, will furnish the raw material for a government divine with the majestic forms of law and order. Divine law and order must and shall prevail; otherwise there is liberty for none, but the license of destruction for all. Who knows the laws of God? Who can define justice? Can man ignorant of his origin and destiny, ignorant of the laws of his own being, of his own anatomical construction and of his environment, know law and define justice? May the Gods end the reign of such blasting ignorance in earth, and raise up among men one having wisdom and understanding—one having within him the mind that was in the personality of the Lord Jesus! All the signs indicate that the "last days" foretold by the great Hebrew prophets and Christian Apostles, are upon us. Evil men and seducers grow worse and worse; there are wars and rumors of wars that are the defamation and disgrace of nations. The strong oppress the weak with the power of organic unity to that end. The bond-slave of the wage system continually cries out for the equitable distribution of the products of industry; the worshipers of the golden calf have forgotten the Godhood of humanity and the humanity of the fulness of the Godhead.

The sign in the heavens indicates the end of this present evil world; and the Sign in the earth, standing in the sun, is reasoning of righteousness and coming judgment. It is time for all rulers of men to ask themselves if they represent the will of God concerning equity, as did Jehovah. If they do not, while naming the name of Christ, let them denounce themselves as false to their trust; for they claim to represent Christian nations, trusting in the God who was in the Lord Jesus to reconcile the world unto himself by imparting to them his delight in the keeping of the commandments of the Lord to do them. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," said the Heir of the universe, defining the neighbor in the eternal language of symbolism. A Christian nation should take its Christ as the plumb-line of national integrity; it should keep the laws of his being, to become as a nation a Grand Man like him. The multitudes, touched by the spirit of His soul which he poured out unto the death on the cross, sold all their possessions and laid the price at the feet of his appointed Apostolic rulers, who in turn appointed deacons to attend to the equitable distribution of the commonwealth, according to the needs of his people.

The American nation, now but nominally Christ-like, nominally a unity, and nominally a commonwealth, will be genuinely what it now but nominally represents, when born again of water and of fire into the realm of day by the illuminating power of the science of the laws of cosmic form and function. The electrifying Light is generated, as is all light, from a center of combustion; the focalization of combined energies will draw all men to the magnetic Center of its imperial power—every man in his own order, the Christ or Messiah being the firstfruit, and afterward, they that are found to be his at his coming, to formulate in earth his Theocratic kingdom and universal empire.

The divine kingdom will have an aristocracy—the Sons of God, the Elohim of the order of Melchizedek. This order of the Gods forms a crown of rejoicing for their Head, the High Priest of their cycle. They represent the imperio-regal power, and they will rule and reign in the hearts of all men who will constitute their universal empire, recognizing the throne and altar of their origin and destiny. The coming order of kings and priests will be comprised of divine anarchists—above all man-made laws; and in innocence of all evil they will do the will of God. The visible anarchists of the last sad state of the man of sin are sin's dark reflections of the holy order of Melchizedek, to be born from above. The dark reflex is also manifest in the kingdoms and republics of this world—all conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity; they are the opposites of those regal republics that will prevail when the knowledge of the Lord, who is the fulfilment or product of man's obedience to the science of the law, shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and the will of the Lord be done in the new earth as it is done in the heavens of his new creation.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THE UNITED STATES is indebted to the republican party for the instigation of measures which, under the ordaining influence of the great Origin of human destiny, conspire toward the climax of history. The impartial mind looks at party issues from the broadest philosophical view-point. While contending for the right of every freeborn American to denounce corruption wheresoever it is apparent,—and this is everywhere,—those who believe that events are hastening to the end most desired by all, recognize the inherent necessity for the predominance of certain phases of thought and action. This necessity exists quite apart from any consideration of the intrinsic quality of such measures per se. Without posing either as the defender or the apologist of the present Administration, one may say that a logical review of the immediate past shows immense progress in the direction of commercial and territorial expansion. This is in the divine order. It has been wisely said that a foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds. The McKinley tariff was stringent. The President who has just died, recognized the necessity for tariff modifications greater than those already introduced, and he did not hesitate in his last speech to recommend what he once opposed. Free trade and reciprocity are principles of order that never change in their relations to the whole body of truth, but the laws of cyclic development ordain that nations and persons should pass through different stages of progress in advancing toward a final intellectual expansion sufficient to bring them into rapport with these principles. Revolution and bloodshed are factors of preparation in consonance with the statement of Scripture, that God maketh the wrath of men to praise him. While using every wise precaution to prevent the recurrence of any species of violence, let no one lose heart in the face of a period of storm and stress that is but transitory. Had the democratic party come into power at the last election, its victory at that time would no doubt have delayed the trend of public sentiment toward expansion. While that party stands today, as it has always stood, for issues that demand attention, the voice of the people which the Romans called the voice of God, pronounced in favor of a policy destined to accelerate the course of events foretold for ages, in accordance with the principles of foreshortening. The Ship of State with God for her pilot, will never be wrecked on the shoals of error. But alas for those who are unwilling to take Him on board!

It was Socrates who said that so long as there was one suffering soul in the universe, the pain of that one would react upon society collectively and prevent the attainment of happiness by any member of the body. George Eliot, who is broadly humanitarian in her sentiments, takes the same ground. Upon this basis the final abolition of evil has been argued as the necessary initiation for the "millennium." The latter period, as scientifically defined, is already past, but evil is still rampant. The belief that it will be universally destroyed when the promised reign of righteousness begins in earth, takes its origin in the errone ous idea of equality, which has no analogy in Nature. All her processes of growth and renewal are simultaneously operative. Look at the forest; one tree is decaying while another is just pushing its first leaves from the sod; and a third is now showing a harvest of perfect seeds, the multiplied product of the one from which the tree itself came in the order of evolution. The condition of the seed which is suffering the throes of dissolution, hidden in the dark ground, in no wise detracts from the perfection of the seed now hanging upon the living tree. The division of humanity into corresponding orders is sometimes overlooked. Each order has its alternate cycles of interior and exterior existence, like the seed; now it hangs on the Tree of Life, now it moulders in the soil. When the kingdom of heaven comes visibly in earth, the hells become more interior in the intensity of their activity. Today they are broadly manifest in their objective career.

The Cellular Cosmogony has many features to recommend it, some of which may be enumerated for the benefit of those who ask how anyone can be contented inside the earth. First of all, it is not a theory but a fact; it is true because it has been proved geometrically, and there are always rest and pleasure in knowing what is true. In the second place, it completes the chain of evidence by which science has postulated that all life develops ab ovo; thus it vindicates the continuity of Nature instead of upholding the exception which disproves the rule. It puts the universe upon a permanent footing, and shows beyond a doubt that the "end of the world" does not mean the destruction of a cosmos that constantly renews itself. It satisfies the intellect, because examination shows it to be in all points reasonable; it does not leave any dark corners full of mysteries to be cleared up in the future; there is plenty of light inside, with the central sun and its two reflections; there is plenty of room, too, so that nobody who requires large space for his activities need to feel cramped. It is a mistake to imagine that the Cellular concept detracts from the logical value of the universe, or that it really loses in grandeur by incorporating the idea of perfection; it is an integer. The Copernican hypothesis of infinity—an unfinished product—spreads out into chaos, for what can the idea of a world that is without limit, hence without form, be called if not chaos?

Is the atom a substance? Is the atom eternal? Has the atom life? These three questions are proposed for discussion by one of our exchanges. From the view-point of Koreshan Science, the first may be answered in the affirmative as implied in the definition of the term, an atom being the smallest possible reduction of matter. In reply to the second, it has been stated that a friction match is an incontrovertible proof that atoms may be destroyed and converted to energy. Has the atom life? Not in the sense of being self-conscious. Every atom in the human body shares in the life of the organism, and has its own degree of consciousness corresponding to its quality. Every atom in the mineral is impressed with the quality of the mineral. An immense amount of energy that might be as useful as the current of Niagara, now that it is employed for the generation of electricity, is fruitlessly spent in trying to prove that matter is only spirit in another form. Koreshan Science knows whereof it speaks in saying stoutly that matter is utterly destroyed—burned up in order to produce spirit.

The power of the spoken word is one that fails to be realized. The multitude is engrossed with the motic forces represented by electricity and the various compounds of nitro-glycerin; no one comprehends that he is constantly wielding high explosives that are no less dynamic in quality. Education along this line, which will promote wise reflection and restrain impulsive and unguarded clamor, is the need of the hour. In every form of abuse it is by education, not by arbitrary fiat, that results are best attained. The tendency to foolish or hasty speech, like the appetite for liquor, has to be outgrown. The extended influence of a single thought forcibly uttered may be fraught with momentous consequences for good or ill. The subject of suggestion has very opportunely engaged public attention. Its value as an educational as well as a curative agent has not been overestimated. It is worth more than all the drugs in the pharmacopœia. A winged word strong with the motic force of love and truth may put to flight a host of evil.

The sacrifice of reason to faith is the stultification of human intelligence. It is claimed that the Founder of Christianity demanded such a denial of all the fundamentals of scientific thought. This is untrue. When it is said that the Christian age was the age of faith, it is understood that the faith which looked forward to the redemption of the body was founded in reason. The Disciples found a legitimate ground for their hopes in experience. The same absurdity which sprung from theology, extended into natural science. Pascal wrote that he thought it was better not to pry into the Copernican system—in other words, it was better to swallow it whole, and that is just what the world did with the great hypothesis. Reason was left out of the question so completely that everybody forgot to inquire how there could possibly be a universe having a center but no circumference; or how it could have form without limitation.

The intrinsic value of any literary work is in proportion to the quality of truth which it presents. For instance, a treatise upon electricity that discloses a new law capable of universal application, can hardly be compared with one that merely recapitulates what has already been done in the field of discovery and invention. Koreshan literature is promulgating a great scientific law—that of the transmutation of matter to energy and of energy to matter. It is hardly possible to realize all at once how important is the subject nor how wide are its bearings. From the simplest departments of common use to the supreme attainment of a higher stage of existence, its application extends.

The crowning science of the ages is the science of immortal life. The term physiological psychology, which is of comparatively recent origin, expresses a new conception of the relations between mind and matter. At the center of the brain is a small cone-shaped gland called the conarium. Upon the extirpation of this gland depends the attainment of the new life. Immediately corresponding to the destruction of the central nucleus of the brain, is the substitution of an electro-magnetic zone of light for the astral nucleus of the physical cosmos.

The unsearchable riches of Christ comprehend all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge which the Scriptures declare were hidden in him. When the divine personality was dissolved and sown in the church, the truth was lost by its amalgamation with the errors of the natural man, just as the rich possibilities of reproduction in the seed are lost while it lies in the ground and decays. But the seed is multiplied in the harvest, and the truth bears fruit in a complete system that is both a vindication and a reconciliation of science and religion.

The orderly distribution of the products of industry would ensure comfort to the masses and dissipate the sphere of discontent whose outbreaks take the form of unreasoning violence directed against individuals. The spirit of love to the neighbor finds expression in voluntary offerings to supply his need. The most acceptable offering is to relieve him of all anxiety in regard to the future, by the establishment of those divine principles of righteousness which actuated the early church.

The concept of the humanity of Deity is the profoundest thought that the mind can grasp. It is the central idea of creation, and from it radiate all degrees of energy. There is power in a sense of rapport with the motic force of the universe; security in the overshadowing of the angel of His presence; light in the beams of pure intellect; joy in the innocence of divine love, that is still warm and human in its pity for sin and sorrow.

May the requiem which has just sounded for the departed President be swiftly followed by a declaration of "peace on earth, good will to men." Would that he might be the last victim of error! Would that the old order, with all that it entails of human misery and degradation, might pass away in a night, giving place to the glorious kingdom of righteousness promised by our Lord Jesus Christ!

The Superintendent of Public Schools in Chicago has set a wise example in the address which reached a quarter of a million of prospective citizens. The object of this address was to show the children that it is folly to mistake license for liberty—that the latter must be gained in obedience to law, not by destroying law and order.

Before there can be a cosmopolitan language, all nations must be consolidated in the Word. The declaration of truth ultimates in the new life, whence originates the new Word as its complete expression.

He who works for the upliftment of humanity should direct his efforts toward the establishment of peace and order.

Wheresoever they may be, those who love the Truth have the dignity of a great cause to maintain.

Misdirected zeal only enlarges the boundaries of chaos.

God's Consciousness and Personality.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD.—In an article by KORESH in FLAMING SWORD of Aug. 9, headed, "Fall of the Church from Primitive Purity," there is reference made to the "personality" of God as distinct from his "identity, individuality, and consciousness," and that he exists independent of the former—the "persona." I wish to know how this statement consists with the statement that "God is in the generation of the righteous." If He is in them, do not they constitute the persona for the time, until He shall assume the "body which thou hast prepared me?" (2) Do you teach that God dies? If He dies, then do not those who are absorbed into Deity die? And if so, then how can that Scripture be fulfilled which saith: "Neither can they die any more"? (3) What are angels? In what bodies do they exist? Or do they not live in bodies? Are they capable of progression as men, and do they finally become Gods? (4) Where was the body of Jesus during the forty days after his resurrection?—S. F., Frostburg, Md.

(1) There is no discrepancy between the statement by KORESH: "God has identity, individuality, consciousness, and all the spiritual qualities of mind, but he has no personality except as he becomes personal in the Son," and the Scripture which declares that God is in the generation of the righteous, because the Son is the righteous man in whom God dwells. He becomes personal, first in the one Son and then in the many Sons—144,000 personal exemplifications of righteousness. They constitute the body of Deity. Toward the close of the same article, KORESH writes: "The personality was disseminated for the purpose of the resurrection of many personalities at the end of the dispensation." The present theological belief, that those who accept Christ by faith are already justified and constitute the righteous habitation of Deity, is unfounded.

(2) Comparison of the teachings of Scripture establishes the truth that God dies, strange and paradoxical as it may seem to those who have been trained in the theological tenets of orthodoxy. Jesus was the Word; in explanation of his parable concerning the kingdom of heaven, he told his Disciples that the sower sowed the Word. In recalling this great lesson the Apostle exclaims: "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die!" God has no other means of exalting humanity and reproducing himself; seed sowing and harvest operate on every plane, so God, as manifest in the personality of the Lord Jesus, precipitated himself into the race. But there was at the same time an ascension. The death of the seed is, in reality, a combustion incident upon its exposure in the ground. Light, heat, electricity, and magnetism of various qualities are generated. Those who are absorbed into Deity in the great conflagration at the end of the Christian dispensation, both ascend and descend. They precipitate germs of reproduction destined to die in the race; at the same time they rise into conjunctive unity with the invisible Deity, thus constituting the order of Immortals.

(3) The Greek word angel means a messenger. It is written: "Behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee." Jesus quoted these words concerning John the Baptist, who was sent in the spirit and power of Elijah as the Sign of the Lord's coming. In every age there is one sent to make straight the paths of the Lord. The Messenger of the Covenant is the angel of conjunction sent at the end of the dispensation to prepare the church, dead in trespasses and sins, for the baptism; hence the angels are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation. Those who received the Holy Spirit from Jesus are to inherit the earth—the new body—as joint heirs with Christ to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled. The term angel is also used to designate the inhabitants of the subjective heavens. There are no spirits, angels, nor demons who have not existed as men in the natural world. The laws of involution and evolution, or of progression and retrogression, preside over all planes of existence. The origin and destiny of all are the same—conjunctive unity with God. There are no disembodied spirits floating through space. Those in subjective spheres are clothed upon with a body corresponding to their inherent quality. "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body." The location of the spiritual world is inside, not outside, of humanity—in the brain of man.

(4) The body of the Lord was subject to the voluntary operations of his will. He was able to transmute every atom to spirit and rematerialize in the presence of his Disciples, the doors being closed. Peter, James, and John were the three receptacles prepared for the first outgoing of the Holy Spirit in its three degrees. During the interval succeeding His resurrection, when the Lord chose to pass into the subjective world, he naturally followed the line of greatest attraction. He was at that time the unique representative of the Arch-natural order. In His theocrasis he passed in the ascending degree, from the immortal to the eternal stage of existence.

Seeking a Prison Paradise.

The Peasants of Italy Prefer Prison Life to the Conditions of Prevailing Poverty.

The following incident shows more vividly the condition of Italy than pages of statistics:

"The Prætor of Ugento has a pitiful story to tell about the eagerness, with which destitute peasants look forward to a term of imprisonment. Three young women from Allisto were brought before him, charged with stealing olives on an estate belonging to the municipality. The pinched and starving features of the defendants, the eldest of whom was barely twenty-five; their ragged clothes, and their half-hopeful, half-despairing expression excited the sympathy and pity of the kind hearted magistrate, who, though unable to acquit them, sentenced them to the minimum penalty—viz., three days. Then a tragic scene took place. Bursting into tears, the prisoners flung themselves at the magistrate's feet, imploring him to give them the shelter of the prison for at least three months.

"With the touching ingenuousness of children, they told how the theft had been a preconcerted affair in order to escape the terrors which the winter (a particularly bitter one this year) held in store for them, and how they had even consulted a lawyer, who had planned the whole scheme, assuring them that, according to the penal code, they would be sentenced to three months at the very least. And now the poor girls saw their dream of prison-paradise—with its bed and blankets, and its daily soup, and bread and meat twice a week—a princely fare, vanishing like a mirage before them just as they thought themselves on the point of entering the blessed portals. They were ruthlessly thrust back into the world of honesty and squalor to slave and starve and suffer, and they made one last desperate stand against their fate.

"The poor magistrate actually had to sustain a judicial discussion with the would-be victims, who were led away sobbing in a broken-hearted manner, as if they saw stretching before them the long vista of weary winter days, with its attendant train of cold, hunger, and dishonor. For it would be useless to deny that the present famine exercises a most demoralizing influence upon the peasantry, favoring the revival of long-forgotten medieval rights and customs (I allude to the jus primæ noctis), which the petty lords of the land are nothing loath to exact from their serfs and tenants in return for pecuniary aid or loans in kind.

Irrigation, discouragement of vine-growing, development of corn-growing, suppression of usury, of red-tapeism, and emigration are the remedies which the writer suggests—"Famine and its Causes in Italy," in Monthly Review, reprinted in American Monthly Review of Reviews.

Development of the South.

The Remarkable Growth and Prosperity of the Southern States Presage a Great Future.

The prosperity of the Southern states is spoken of generally in the future tense, as if it were fast approaching but was not already here; as if the situation was one of promise and not of fulfilment. This is only partly true. In certain directions and in certain departments of industry, the prosperity of the South is a reality of the present, a thing accomplished. Take, for example, two such important and leading factors in the industrial world as the products of iron mines and cotton-mills. In a recent speech before a banker's association, Mr. Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, made the statement that the iron production of the South now equals the iron output of the entire country so late as 1879. The same section now produces more coal than the entire bituminous product twenty years ago.

But perhaps the most notable and significant industrial gain of the Southern states has been in the cotton-mill industry. Before the Civil War, the South was only a producer of raw cotton; cotton manufacture was confined almost exclusively to the Northern states. But the South has long since ceased to be thus dependent; it now turns the products of its cotton-fields largely into its own mills, and thus keeps the profits at home which before went into other hands. In twenty years, the South has increased the number of its cotton spindles from 667,000 to nearly 5,500,000, and now runs nearly one third of all the spindles in operation in the United States.

And the gains along this particular line are increasing in geometrical ratio. It cannot be questioned that before many years the South will not only be the greatest cotton-producing, but the greatest cotton-manufacturing center in the world. It has all the facilities necessary to gain absolute and complete control of the cotton business, and it will reach that point of domination in a very brief period. The cotton trade naturally belongs to the South, and it ought to reap the benefits of that trade to the largest possible degree.—Leslie's Weekly.

A New-Thought Fable.

The Ultimate Predicament of a Superstitious and Unstable Mental Wanderer.

* * She tasted all the various brands of mental science, theosophy, spiritualism, etc., and then took a plunge into christian science. At each stage of her progress she was sure that she had found the ter-ruth, but when she entered the Eddyite camp she was more certain than ever that she was up against the real thing. It reminded her of old times, for she again found something to be afraid of. She made the acquaintance of a new devil. It was called malicious magnetism. It was much worse than the old devil who had scared her in the old days. She learned that all was good and good was all; all was ter-ruth and ter-ruth was all; all was love and love was all. And she also learned that all was malicious magnetism and malicious magnetism was all. She learned that all of the above things was all, whether said backward or forward.

Up to this time she had been given to talking about the superstitions of her old faith, and particularly about her emancipation from the devil idea. She spoke of the "gross superstitions" of those whom she had left behind, of their "material" planes, and much more off the same piece. She classed her old friends as believers in goblins, bugaboos, etc., and was proud that she had turned her back forever upon such childish imaginings. When she became an Eddyite, she still kept up this sort of talk, although she now included all of the non-Eddyite people in her list of blind disciples of error. She used an Eddy spoon, and took large doses of ter-ruth. She grasped the fact that Eddyism was all, and all was Eddyism, and that all that wasn't all was mortal mind.

But the malicious magnetism idea proved more attractive than the other parts of the ter ruth, and the aching void left by the departure of the devil was at last filled. She began to have "beliefs" and "claims" of all sorts, and began to require the frequent services of healers to exorcise the evil thoughts sent by her enemies. The healers understood their business, and chased away the evil thoughts as fast as they were sent (at $3.00 per chase), but her enemies kept on sending them in hot from the bat and, toward the end, her time (and that of several healers) was occupied in evil thought chasing.

After awhile, her "belief" of money departed, and with it that illusion of mortal mind denominated healers, and the woman was left alone, a prey to the malicious magnetism. She stood it as long as she could, and then hearkened to the voice of a traveling Adventist, who restored to her the devil of her youth, and she was comforted. The oldone filled the bill, and was much cheaper than the newone. Her belief in new thought is gone—and so is her "belief" of money.

Moral:—Never swap devils while crossing a stream.—Suggestion, Chicago, Ill.

Skilful Adulteration.

Flowers Imitated and Sold as Genuine; Ingenuity of the Spirit of Fraud.

Many persons have been rudely shocked to find that a flower for which perhaps they gave a considerable sum and which they took to be genuine, proved subsequently to be artificial in every particular. Within our own experience, not long ago the attention of a gentleman sitting at dinner was drawn to the fact that his shirt front and coat were gradually being covered with streaks of a brilliant red color. He was wearing a bright carnation in his buttonhole which at quite a short distance, as it appeared subsequently, deceived perfectly. Even the perfume was admired. The "flower" had just been watered to freshen it, and it was then seen that on the water drops detaching themselves they were of a brilliant red color, while the "carnation" gradually assumed a faint, variegated appearance owing to some of the coloring matter being washed out. General incredulity was expressed that, at first sight, the flower could be anything but real. A laboratory examination, however, soon brought the whole truth to light, and the results are remarkable and certainly a credit to the ingenuity of the designer.

There was not the vestige of a carnation about it. The "flower" consisted of slices of turnip neatly cut and dyed with acid magenta; the stems and leaves were of twisted cloth dyed a dark green with chromium; the bloom was a very fine starch powder delicately dusted over the stems and leaves; and the support to the whole fabric was a concealed iron wire. A synthetic amber-colored oil known as "oeillet" completed the deception in giving a perfume wonderfully imitative of the genuine carnation. Altogether we can hardly conceive of a cleverer deceit, and it is satisfactory to be able to add that so far as our observations went it is free from positive harm except to wearing apparel. On carefully searching the various materials for irritating substance and poisonous metals, we could not obtain the slightest evidence that such were present. It is clearly possible, however, that the colors used for artificial flowers may contain substances injurious to health—such as, for example, arsenic. London Lancel.

Lincoln on Labor and Capital.

The following is an extract from Abraham Lincoln's annual message, read December 3, 1861. Read it and when you have comprehended its full meaning, read it to your neighbor:

"Monarchy itself is sometimes hinted at as a refuge from the power of the people. In my present position I could scarcely be justified were I to omit raising a warning voice against this approach of returning despotism.

"It is not needed nor fitting here that a general argument should be made in favor of popular institutions; but there is one point, with its connections not so hackneyed as most others, to which I ask brief attention. It is assumed that labor is available only in connection with capital; that nobody labors unless somebody else owning capital, somehow by the use of it, induces him to labor.

"Labor is prior to and independent to capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital, and deserves much the higher consideration. No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toiled upward from poverty; none less inclined to take or touch aught which they have not honestly earned. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them till all of liberty shall be lost."

A Race to the North Pole.

After the disastrous failure of some attempts a few years since to reach the North Pole, it was predicted that efforts to penetrate the polar mystery would be abandoned. So far from this prediction being realized, there are now more expeditions than ever in the Arctic, on the way there or preparing to start, each having the Pole for its real objective, although not all are avowedly bound for that point.

Seven nations are competing for the chilling honor of "highest north." Peary represents the United States, and there is a bare possibility that he has already won the prize, though whether he will return to prove his claim is uncertain. Evelyn B. Baldwin also represents the United States, and has set out with a firm purpose to push on to the Pole. Admiral Marakoff is also on his way with the formidable ice breaking steamer Ermak, which flies the Russian flag. The German Capt. Banendahl is somewhere near Spitzenbergen, and the Swedish explorer, Otto Sverdrup, is in Ellsmere land, both of these experienced Arctic explorers being ready to avail themselves of any favorable opportunity to make a dash to the Pole. The other aspirants for polar honors are Capt. J. E. Bernier, of England, Dr. Frithjof Nansen, of Norway, and the Duke of Abruzzi, of Italy.

Possibly one or the other of these may solve the mystery of the Pole. It may be that the failure of some of them to return may add more mysteries to those which darken the pages of Arctic exploration.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell: we INhabit the Earth. KORESHIAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

Celibacy.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

The Force and Phenomena of Gravity.

The Newtonian Hypothesis Fails to Explain the Mysteries of the Solar System; the Difference Between the Popular Theory and the Koreshan Conception of Gravic Energy.

AMONG PHYSICISTS we hear a great deal about Newton and his law of gravity. It is a question that the Koreshan has frequently to confront in his effort to promulgate the physical and mechanical basis of the Koreshan Universology. "Newton's law of gravitation," as commonly stated, is, that "Every particle of matter in the universe attracts every other particle with a force whose direction is that of a line joining the two, and whose magnitude is directly as the product of their masses, and inversely as the square of their distance from each other." This is called Newton's law. This is not the statement of a law, it is merely an attempt to account for phenomena on the assumption of the convexity, rotation, and orbital motion of the world and heavenly bodies.

Law is that power which determines the forms, functions, and phenomena of all existence. It is inherent in causation, and is the result of the attractive and repulsive coördinates of the highest human will. One of the supreme and fundamental factors of law is order. It must be understood, however, that order is a distinct thing from law. The general order of the motions of the universe, so far as we may observe them, from a superficial sensation, is the apparent revolution of the heavens around the earth, the earth appearing to be stationary as the geocentric center of the universe. This is so obvious that even at this late day it is a question in dispute, whether the earth is stationary and the heavens are moving in orbits around it, or the earth is revolving around the sun.

It will at once appear obvious to any rational mind not biased by the influence of a false education, that a mathematical formula attempting to explain phenomena, which leaves out of the question not only the causes of attraction, but the causes which prevent the action of gravity, upon the basis of Newton's formula, from solidifying into one common mass where the heaviest mass exists in space, is not a statement of law. Things were heavy and were known to have relative weights before Newton was born. Newton did not pretend—nor has any scientist since his day pretended—to give a reason for what has been called the attraction of gravity. That different things have different relative weights according to their qualities and densities, is very commonly known; but the reason for this has not been given. A statement of the law of gravity must involve a knowledge of its cause. This is the primary factor in the phenomena of gravity.

Anomalies and Contradictions in Modern Physics.

When Sir Isaac Newton attempted to account for the revolutions of the heavens on the predication of the earth's convexity and the law of attraction, comparatively nothing was known of that field of physics now denominated electro-magnetics. We now know that bodies are attracted or repelled according to their electric and magnetic fortification and bombardment. It is a fact known to belong to physics, that everything in motion will generate energy, and that magnetism and electricity are generated by motion. Were the earth in motion, as claimed by the astronomers, rotating upon its axis at the rate of twenty-five thousand miles in twenty-four hours, as it would be at the equator according to the Copernican system of astronomy, it would generate an incalculable amount of magnetism and electricity. It would generate a greater quantity in its orbital motion, yet the generation of the energies known to be operative throughout the universe, has not been attributed to the motions of the heavenly bodies.

Astronomers have reduced the various hypotheses of the source of the sun's energies, to Helmholtz's theory of contraction. It is admitted that this is only an hypothesis, but so far regarded as the most reasonable one. This is founded upon Lane's "law," that a gas contracting by the force of its own gravity will rise in temperature until it ceases to be a perfect gas. There are no known conditions or circumstances under which a gas will contract by its own gravity; hence Lane subjected the gas to pressure, or its equivalent, which he assumed to be equal to its own gravity, according to the operations of gravity as found to obtain under artificial conditions.

Helmholtz's "law" is that the sun contracts by the force of its own gravity; and it is maintained by men as prominent as Newcomb and Young, that the sun is rising in temperature. It does not radiate its energies equal to the increase of temperature, and therefore the sun will continue to increase in temperature for thousands of years before there will be any diminution of its radiations. Let us see how this "law" looks in good colloquial English. The sun contracts by its own gravity; it gets colder by contraction, for cold contracts and heat expands. As the sun contracts and therefore gets colder, it becomes hotter. This is obvious, for an increase of temperature is an augmentation of heat, Professor Comstock to the contrary notwithstanding. Now as the rise in temperature increases the size of a body, it follows that the sun is increasing in size while it is diminishing in bulk. We employ the term bulk, as meaning the same as size. The sun grows hotter by growing colder; it grows larger by growing smaller; this in plain English is a fair statement of the "scientific" theory of the sun's energy.

Now, as no motion can obtain without the generation of energy, would we not better account for the energies of the physical universe on the known fact that motion is the only source known for the production of energy? If we take the ordinary static glass generator we develop magnetism, which is reduced to electricity, and this may be reduced either to light or heat, or to both. Why does not this law apply in Nature? It is not an assumption to say that the motions of the heavenly bodies, the motions which we observe throughout Nature, including the heavens, produce the energies which they radiate.

Importance of Explanation of Orbital and Axillary Motions.

Will the astronomers attempt to tell us where the energy is derived that moves the heavens, including the earth, and what becomes of the energy originating in these motions, according to the Copernican system of astronomy and Newton's law of gravitation? In the generation and motion of electricity there are two distinct fluids—one positive, the other negative. One of these currents is acid and the other is alkaline. They move over the wire in two opposite directions. One is the core of the motion, the other is the sheath. They move over the wire without generating visible heat, but when they move through a resisting medium, as in the carbon tips, combustion takes place and the substance which furnishes the resistance is consumed. This principle has a universal application.

We are constantly confronting the question: "Why does the earth increase in temperature as we penetrate its surface? The question is generally propounded upon the assumption that the center of the earth is a molten mass, therefore the question is propounded on the basis of ignorance. It is claimed by the later investigators, that this is an untenable hypothesis; it is an exploded theory. We answer this question by stating the fact that the energies generated in the earth, which are anodic, meet the energies generated at the center and moving toward the earth, which are cathodic, and that as the substances of the earth furnish a resisting medium, heat is consequently generated. It does not follow that the heat continues to increase to a sufficient distance to produce combustion. So far, it has never been claimed that the modus operandi of gravity is known. Does the force belong to the mass, or does it belong to the medium through which the mass is passing? Is it a pull or is it a push? It is not pretended that any of these questions have been answered. It follows that the law of gravity is, therefore, unknown to the so called scientific world.

If we apply force to an enclosed cylinder and thus exhaust the air, we produce what is denominated a vacuum. It is impossible by any means yet applied, to create a perfect vacuum. To exhaust the air, it requires a certain amount of applied energy. The assumed pressure upon this vacuum is in exact proportion to the amount of applied energy to create it. The physicist calls this so called pressure of atmosphere upon the vacuum, weight or gravity. The pull of the air-pump has deprived the air of a specific force which acts upon the vacuum in physics correspondentially to the deprivation of a human being of his vital force, when his weight is sensibly increased. Admitting the existence of an atmosphere of hydrogen above our own atmosphere, it is like taking a certain amount of common atmosphere and carrying it up into the hydrogen above us and weighing it relatively to the hydrogen atmosphere, or as if taking water from its own level into our atmosphere and weighing it relatively to our atmosphere. In creating a vacuum, we destroy the normal relations and activities of the air and obtain very different conditions from those naturally belonging to the atmosphere. All of the power exerted in exhausting the air with the air-pump, is pulling just as much while the vacuum remains, as during the action of the pump.

The theory of gravity founded upon such a flimsy assumption as this, does not furnish a very satisfactory basis for the predication of a universal system of science. That Newton's so called law of gravitation accounts for the motion of the heavenly bodies, even on the basis of the commonly accepted astronomy, is the veriest humbug, for there can be no question of the fact that the power which acts to prevent the solar system from collapsing, as it would on the basis of Newton's ridiculous formula, is just as constant as the law of revolution. This law is the essential coördinate of gravity; it is as persistent as gravity, and has never been defined outside of Koreshanity. The Copernican system of astronomy is totally abrogated by Koreshanity, therefore all phenomena must be interpreted on altogether new principles.

The Source and Destiny of Gravity.

An analysis of the law of gravity must define its source, determine its destiny, expound its cause, and determine its relation to its coördinate law, that of levity. At the points in space where the metallic and mineral substances in Nature have no weight,—these are their relative normal positions and their planes of rest,—there is the greatest activity. This activity produces the waste and the supply of the plane. For instance, let us take the gold stratum, the outmost lying stratum of the cosmic rind. It is vital by virtue of the fact that its molecules are constantly changing to gold energy. As soon as the molecule has performed its function as a molecule of gold, it is converted to its own energy—spirit, so to speak, and it immediately takes its flight to its own levic center. The descending energy rushes in to fill the place of the disgorged molecule. The descending energy materializes as rapidly as the liberated energy gives place to the new deposit. Between the energy flowing down to fill the vortex and the energy making its escape, there are induced electro-magnetic resistance and repulsion. The levic energy is pushed and pulled toward its own center of levity and attraction. A corresponding and coördinate action is taking place at the positive end or pole of the gravo-levic axis.

The energy of every distinct substance is en rapport with its material coördinate, and through every molecule of matter found out of its norm, and tending by its weight toward its plane of rest, there flow the two kinds or qualities of energy—the ascending and descending. The ascending energy heaps up a resisting force in any body of matter through which it passes, and this pushes the molecule toward its own plane of rest. The descending energy adds its force to the momentum of the molecule in its gravic direction. As there are both gravic and levic gold energies, so there are gravic and levic energies belonging to every other substance in Nature.

Irrational Conclusions of the Spectroscopist.

Professor Comstock says: "This important principle of the spectrum analysis is most readily appreciated through the following experiment: listen to the whistle of a locomotive rapidly approaching, and observe how the pitch changes, and the note becomes more grave as the locomotive passes by and commences to recede. During the approach of the whistle, each successive sound-wave has a shorter distance to travel in coming to the ear of the listener than had its predecessor, and in consequence, the waves appear to come in quicker succession, producing a higher note with a correspondingly shorter wave-length than would be heard if the same whistle were blown with the locomotive at rest. On the other hand, the wave-length is increased and the pitch of the note lowered by the receding motion of the whistle. A similar effect is produced by a wave-length of light, by a change of distance between the source from which it comes and the instrument which receives it, so that a diminishing distance diminishes very slightly the wave-length of every line in the spectrum produced by the light, and an increasing distance increases these wave-lengths, and this holds true whether the change of distance is produced by motion of the source of light or by motion of the instrument which receives it. This change of wave-length is sometimes described by saying that when a body is rapidly approaching, the lines of its spectrum are all displaced toward the violet end of the spectrum, and are correspondingly displaced toward the red end by a receding motion."

The Doppler principle is applied to determine not only the direction of the motion of a heavenly body, whether it is approaching or receding, but to denote the rapidity of the motion. Examine carefully the illustration given in the whistle of the locomotive. Suppose there were a number of whistles pitched on different keys, located at the same distance, at the hour that Professor Comstock or any other Professor was expecting a regular train, for the occasion and to test the Professor's auditory acumen for scientific purposes. The train is supposed to be approaching, the whistles are sounded from one of the lowest pitch to one of the highest; will the Professor say that the whistles are approaching? He certainly will if he exemplifies the law as the scientific world is now applying it. Different intensities of combustion and different substances in combustion will affect the spectrum as different pitch of tone affects the whistles. The illustration proves too much for the Doppler principle. There are two things that will change the nature of the sound—distance and pitch. There are two things that will change the character of the spectrum—change of element and change of intensity. The spectroscopist has not yet learned to define the principle by which he may determine to which of these conditions the change of the stellar spectra is due. Until he has made this differentiation, he should be very careful not to insist too much upon the accuracy of his conclusions.

Three Degrees of Humano-Divine Life.

The Church of Noah and the Three Great Lines of its Manifestation and Development; Shem, Ham, and Japheth in Symbolism and Ethnology; the First-born of Egypt.

THE RELATIONS of the three degrees of man's nature—the celestial, spiritual, and natural, in the universal man, are symbolized in the Shemitic, Japhetic, and Hamitic lines, from Noah down through the ages. Originating in Noah were three peoples. Noah means "the breath of Jehovah." From this breath or influence of the divine mind or divine affection upon the race, came these three peoples. It is usually supposed that Shem, Ham, and Japheth were simply three individuals, the descendants of Noah, and that at one time they with their families constituted all the inhabitants of the earth. The destruction of the world by the flood was not a universal destruction of the natural inhabitants of the earth. It was an inundation of fallacies (false doctrines) which swept over the earth and inundated the people who were in fallacy and a life of evil.

Noah attempted to develop the people, through instruction, out of their darkened condition, and he prepared an ark, so called, which, as presented in Scripture, was a symbolic representative of the three degrees of man—the superior, middle, and interior. He was simply preparing a church, a new dispensation, into which the spirit of the past could flow, that from the old church, which came to its consummation or end, the church which preceded Noah, there should be derived a new church which should continue another era or dispensation, reaching down to Abraham.

Noah was the beginning of a church which went out in its three lines or degrees, manifest in the three races; one developed through Ham, another through Shem, and another through Japheth. That through Ham was called Egyptian, and represented the animal nature, not necessarily the sensual animal, only in the inverted sense, but the divine animal nature. The Shemitic church represented the spiritual nature, and the Japhetic, the celestial. These are the three degrees of man's being, and pertain not only to the individual, but also to the universal man, because the universal is constituted or made up according to the same law or principle that the individual is.

Egypt—being the natural or scientific man (in his outward degree)—reaches further down through the ages, and comes to his maturity later. When he reaches his maturity he is the basis or foundation of the new order of beings; that is, the highest or celestial being is a product or outgrowth of the scientific or natural. In the destruction of the first-born of Egypt, (inasmuch as it was a symbolic expression or type, it had to be manifest in these differentiated degrees; namely, Egypt as separate entirely from Israel outwardly, and Israel separate from Japheth,) it would seem to be the destruction of a certain definite class of people distinct from the Israelites; but when the fact is comprehended that Egypt represents the outer degree, and Israel the middle degree of the one man, it can readily be seen how the spiritual degree may develop from, or come out of the natural by the destruction of the natural. Egypt is simply the natural part or body of man; Israel is the spiritual part of the same man, the more interior degree, and Japheth, the point of union between those two, constitutes the celestial. These are the three degrees of one being. The destruction of the first-born of Egypt represents the destruction of that in man which comes to maturity first; that is, the animal man.

We have two origins; one from above, the other from beneath. This is not only demonstrated in every principle and department of Nature, but in all the teachings of the Bible. Jesus said: "I am from above; ye are from beneath." He was the outgrowth of a process of development that had been progressing for a long time through the ages. He grew to be the God-Man; he descended from above, but he both ascended and descended. He came up from beneath, but he came down from heaven. He came up from below, in the order of development upward from the lowest forms of being. He came down from above by the influx of Deity into the various degrees of man in his development; that is, man develops to one degree, and there is a degree of influx which is the lowest degree of Deity, of God's descent into man. Through that he arises into another degree, where he eliminates that which belongs to the lower degree; and as he continues from one degree to another, he eliminates or throws off what he has derived from beneath, so that ultimately, while born from beneath, he is the product of that which has been continually descending from above. His desires are all changed when he reaches that point; before, they were natural; now they are spiritual.

We hear of certain paradoxes in Buddhism like this: "You shall hate your own self above all things." "Above all things love yourself." This is apparently a radical contradiction; but while man must hate the one self, he has a perfect right to love the other self, which can be done by developing or involving into that higher self, which is Deity. Man has a perfect right to love himself in that line, but it must be the divine, not the sensual self. When man is perfected in this higher nature (as Jesus), he has come up out of Egypt; he has come up out of the natural into the divine man. "I have called my Son from Egypt." The Son had to first come down into Egypt in order to be called out of Egypt in the type or symbol. While that was a fact, it was a figure of something greater and grander.

The destruction of the first-born of Egypt, as applied to the destruction of the natural man, bears directly upon the present time, not so much to the resurrection of Jesus, as to the coming resurrection at the end of the Christian dispensation. It means the absolute destruction of the natural man—the leaving behind of the natural, and the putting on of the new man. The blood that was sprinkled upon the door-posts and lintels was the blood of lambs and goats without "wrinkle, spot, or blemish;" no defect or deformity—representing the divine animal nature. It was a type or symbol of what man was before the fall, and of what he will be in the restoration. The sacrifice or killing of the lamb represented the destruction or killing in man (through the fall) of the divine nature, culminating in the manifestation of the Messiah in any age of the world, and then of the Sons of God who will come forth in the resurrection at the end of a succession of cycles, or the end of the grand cycle.

In Koreshanity we make a distinction between the divine and the human animal nature, or the divine animal, which is human, and the sensual animal, which is inhuman. We maintain that the animal nature of Deity is as absolutely pure and divine as God himself. God has an animal nature as well as man. His animal nature is symbolized by the white horse, which represents one principle of the animal nature; the lamb, the goat, and the bullock represent still other principles. Every one of these animals, without spot or blemish, is a type or symbol of the divine nature in man before he fell. The destruction of the animal is in agreement with the destruction of the animal nature in man.

Possibilities of the Growing Generation.

Mental and Moral Culture of Children; Present Haphazard Methods and Results; the Making of the New World Through Moulding of the Lives of Children.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

MANY PRINCIPLES not now understood must finally be brought to bear in the rearing of children; but before the accomplishment of a righteous standard in this respect, two elements governing human action must be shorn of their power of active operation: One of these is the selfish love for the child; the other is the need of the service of the child. Parents, many, study only the present happiness of their offspring. Vigilant to provide some pleasure, and neglectful to lead the expanding intellect into the paths of reciprocal service, which lead to the gateway of genuine gladness, they overflow the waking mind with the belief that all benefits are issue of bounden duty. Accustomed to the forefront of consideration and subject to the inflow, from its doting parents, of a thought-substance which engenders only selfishness, its life is structured upon the plan of a monstrous little ingrate. This startling fact breaks in upon the unconscious cause of it only when the demands made pass the bounds of reason. About this time too, the ugly truth presents itself, that there exists no desire to return an equivalent for the sacrifices demanded.

On the other hand, (we present the extremes in both cases,) is the spectacle of the fatherhood and motherhood who demand with little desire to bestow. Such a pair crops up in a niche of the writer's memory. The father, in a dominant, rasping voice, was wont to inform his children that they "were only passengers on this boat." This was his terse way of informing them that they occupied at his board and hearth by a grudging tolerance. Years glided on, and from the same lips came the plaint that "the children had no interest in anything that concerned the old farm; and that they preferred strangers before their own father and mother!" They left the old farm as soon as possible, and joined in the struggle of a world that regretted them little when they had finished with it. But shall we be severe upon this father and mother who marred their offspring, and through their offspring wrought evil upon the world? Full, indeed, must be our measure of blame if from it we can bestow a little upon all the baleful causes which preceded the direct modeling of this unhappy father and mother, for indeed they were very unhappy.

The earth's fauna and flora stand for the conditions of the period in which they exist. When, in the repeated rounds of the grand cycle of 24,000 years, extinct forms of animal and vegetable life reappear, there will also be repeated the extinct conditions under which these forms alone could exist. The polar oceans, subject to like degrees of temperature, but modified by distinctions attending locality, produce, in the main, identical forms of life. The distinctions between like species sundered by thousands of miles of rocking waters, are attributable to the opposite polarity of the two regions. The sea of humanity maintains a direct analogy to this, always transposing the quality of polarity from geographical locations in the earth to polarization of the humanity in the antithetical qualities of good and evil. In the Golden Age, humanity is polarized in Good or God. There accompanies this an ameliorated climatic and attendant condition, and the issue is a quality of humanity loyal to man in process of progression toward perfection, and loyal to the Lord God of earth and heaven—the perfected Man.

Man, polarized in evil, recognizes the acme of loyalty to the race to be the laying down his life in the extermination of the enemies of his country. He deals with death. Polarization in Good opens up vistas in which genuine loyalty finds scope in lifting up the standard of life, not in sole connection with some subdivision of the universe which gave him birth, but with reference to the universal. His dealings are with life. Polarized in Good, of necessity he is guided by the Good, even by Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me." Coming to the Christ is becoming Christ-like, and involves the means that brings one to that state. In the throngs of earth, God alone will be able to discriminate the rarer and most perfect gifts of love and wisdom, and into the keeping of such will be given the little ones of a fallen humanity. Little by little, in the sunshine of a wise and loving nurture, even as we see forms of vegetable and animal life expand through generations of culture, into greater beauty and larger usefulness, humanity will, through such ministrations, emerge from its groveling.

We find Isaiah prophesying the coming of Christ's kingdom. One of the striking points of dissimilarity between that kingdom of evil now occupying in the earth, and the one to be established, is outlined in the words: "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." This blissful state will proceed from science or knowledge in conjunction with endeavor or use. In the masses composing the periphery of humanity,—the stratum which will produce sensual offspring,—the reproduction of the conditions which constitute the Golden Age will be brought about through moulding the lives of the children. All that is foremost as means of culture, will be the property of infancy in the myriad public homes with which the new regime will dot the land; and a century hence will see no neglected child upon the broad face of the civilized earth!

A Futile Effort to Destroy Religion.

"The Church of this World," in a Western City, Battles Against Apostate Christianity and Imagines that it is Destroying the Fundamentals of the Primitive System.

PROF. O. F. L'AMOREAUX, A. M., PH. D.

"THE CHURCH OF THIS WORLD" is situated in Kansas City, Mo. As we learn from The Philosopher, which is published in that city, this new "church" is a "powerful organization, composed of Kansas City's cultured, wealthy, and influential citizens," whose pastor, Dr. Roberts, is described as a "calm, dignified, intellectual giant," whose great efforts have been directed against religion in a determined effort to destroy it. His admirer and probable parishioner, the editorial writer in question, after five years of these efforts, says: "Now while the worthy Doctor has, from every logical point of view, destroyed the faith, he has not to any marked extent stopped the mad, rushing, stumbling, sprawling flight for religion; the thirst for religion has grown like the thirst for liquor, coming down through an environment of years and decades of years. They ache for it, itch for it—clear down to their finger-tips; they are not particular as to quality, and not hard to please in quantity, but they must have it, and as demand necessitates supply, they have their fill—it is served up to them in hundreds of different ways, no limit to variety, all tastes are suited, all are satisfied."

If, as is presumably the case, this man's title of Doctor is theological, we have here a man seeking to pull down the very foundation upon which he is builded and rests. What is a church if it be not a religious body? Of the wonderful destructive power of this athlete's mental enginery, this admiring writer says: "How surely has he torn to shreds every vestment of the Christian religion, exposing the artful imposture, dissecting the fraudulent scheme, laying bare the cunning devices of a crafty priesthood, who gloat and glut at the expense of ignorance and superstition! Beautifully done, and so complete, the work of ages upon ages—the great religious structure torn down, piece by piece, and the foundation blown out, leaving not one stone upon another!"

When it dawns upon this man that it was only the old dead body of the great apostasy, which early usurped the place of the true Christian religion, upon which he has been plying his artillery—of which apostasy all priests, himself included, if he is one of the church doctors, constitute a part—it probably will not appear so strange that he is not more successful in destroying all religion, with its foundation. As the sturdy blows of the sculptor, skilfully directed, serve to chip away the rough block and reveal the lovely statue that seems slowly to rise out of its rough environ, so this ruthless destroyer will yet be surprised to learn that he has only been sweeping off from the only true and righteous foundation ("For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ"), an effete and outgrown religion, to give place to the new and truly glorious and free one that shall soon rise in its place. Sappers and miners are useful and necessary people in their place, but they have no understanding nor appreciation of the glories of the things for which they prepare the way.

In order that logic be effective in exposing and destroying false systems, its premise must be true.

Starting out from a false premise, the most logical argument infallibly leads to a false conclusion. When these wise people who think that they have utterly destroyed Christ and his truth, find that their very foundation—the supposed science in which they trust—is only the most shifting sand, some of the measureless conceit which they manifest will probably be driven out. It is noticeable that these people who are so exceedingly anxious to exhibit their prowess, manifested in destroying Christianity, as they think, have little thought left for the distressed conditions of the great mass of men, which are the result, not of real Christianity, but of the apostasy of which they themselves are part.

In the true Christianity which Jesus established, there were no suffering classes,—no rich, no poor,—only people who had all things common. When it comes again, as it certainly will, it will be in spite of such people, not by their means. In the Bible, "this world" always means this age. The "church of this world" must worship the god of this world or age. But we learn from the Bible that the god of this world is the devil. As he is "a liar and the truth is not in him," it is not strange that his worshipers do not find the truth. A false religion never did and never can destroy the true.

THE TESTIMONY of many prominent students of science concurs in the assertion that the nature of gravitation is quite as far from being understood as it was a hundred years ago. It is candidly admitted that Newton's law is not a law because it has never been proved that two particles of matter actually attract each other with a force directly proportional to the square of the distance between them. The whole subject is open to investigation, and presents one of the most interesting fields of research in regard to which some fresh considerations may be urged. The cause of motion is the first question to be settled, and the most reasonable conclusion points to mental energy as the primary, and electro-magnetic energy as the secondary agents of impulsion. The former is the highest type of activity known or conceived; the latter is its physical analogue. The voluntary operations of a central mind whose faculties are in perfect balance, translate themselves into the orderly movements of the solar system and ordain to every physical substance its plane of static repose. As everything in the universe has its polar opposite, it would be a mistake not to take into account the fact of levity; and the admission of this as a counterbalancing force introduces some important changes relative to current motions on gravitation. It is evidently true, as conjectured, that all force must be either of the nature of a pull or a push, since the former is attraction, the latter repulsion—two universal factors. The beautiful concept of the Cellular universe, with a constant generation of electro-magnetic energies at center and circumference,—those from above having a gravic determination, attractive to all below, repellant to all above in their progress toward their own plane of deposition and materialization in the shell of the earth, while levic energies as constantly rise,—provides for all observed phenomena. The subject hereby is grandly conceived, yet it develops itself with simplicity. The invisible forces which fill the air, ascending and descending like the angels on the Patriarch's ladder, are the product of all the different kinds of matter transformed, each to its own spirit. Gold energy starts out from the central sun; when it reaches the gold stratum in the shell, it materializes. Here gravity ceases to act. Gold has no weight on its own static plane where it is homogeneous with its environment. The gold environ of the cosmic egg is perfect in itself, and is an integral part of the cosmos. Gravity simply means weight. When a body is at rest its weight is its mass, as generally supposed, but experiments have shown that if a ball is thrown down from a certain altitude and allowed to fall upon a balance, it will weigh more than when at rest, because the momentum or the force put into it is also weighed.

The Zodiacal light which extends along the Zodiac, is projected upon the sky as a triangular pillar of light, inclined to the horizon at the same angle as the ecliptic. It is visible after sunset in the West and before sunrise in the East. In each locality it is more conspicuous during certain months; thus from September to January it is better seen after twilight. With a clear atmosphere on a dark night, it is visible later than nine o'clock. The latest theory regards it as sunlight reflected from a cloud of meteoroids revolving about the sun. According to the Cellular Cosmogony, the phenomena of sunrise and sunset are due to the passage of the projected sun beyond the visual horizon, according to the laws of perspective foreshortening. According to the Copernican System, they are caused by the daily axial revolution of the earth in its yearly circuit about the sun. The Cellular concept has been proved mechanically and geometrically, to the satisfaction of many logical thinkers. The Copernican theory never has been proved, as its adherents admit. It would seem, therefore, that the preponderance of evidence favors the explanations rendered by the proven system rather than by the hypothetical one, in regard to all phenomena. The theory that the Zodiacal light is caused by meteoroids reflecting the solar rays, is no more susceptible of proof than the system to which it pertains. On the basis of the Cellular Cosmogony, it is an electric glow reflected from the electro-magnetic belt in the earth's crust which constitutes the real Zodiac. The Gegenschein, or the counter-glow, visible at night on the ecliptic 180° from the sun, has also been attributed to asteroids, from the convex basis. In the cellular system, it is explained as the reflex of the concave hemisphere of daylight. The Zodiacal light and the Gegenschein together complete the girdle of the sky.

It is said by some of the most widely diffused of the organs of Orthodoxy, that it is proper to make a distinction between religious truths that concern personal hopes or duty, and theological questions which were never understood, never can be understood, and show no reason why a person should desire to understand them. The doctrine of the Trinity is classed among the latter. Is such a distinction valid? What does it import to know whether Deity is "three persons and one God," or one person with a triunity of attributes? All the difference between the vague, the mystical, the absurd, and the clear, the practical, the rational. If I am commanded to love God with all my heart, soul, might, mind, and strength; if I am told that my eternal salvation depends upon keeping this law, does it not import to me personally whether He is compounded of the wrathful Father, the clement Son, and the "Divine Proceeding," an incomprehensible and impersonal oversoul? If I can know and locate Deity in the personal Lord Jesus Christ, visible and tangible in human form, yet perfect in holiness and integral in structure; if I can understand that, being the Son, he converted his body to Holy Spirit by the laws of alchemy and quickened the church; if I learn that he is to come again as the Father in the offspring thus begotten, and has actually come in the truths of the Word, will it not influence my conduct most vitally? Theology in its declension has denied religion, but the two are one in essence. Theology means a word about God, and a knowledge of the characteristics of the divine Being contributes vitally to the rebinding of humanity to its Source.

Socialism desires to put all upon the same level. Anarchy is the great opposing force to organic unity. The patterns of all things were given to the Hebrew Lawgiver, from on high. So the types and ideals of divine order are to be found above, and whosoever will look up to the starry firmament may see them written there in characters of living light. Unto every star and planet is decreed its own orbit, where it is free to run its course in the joy of liberty and service. No anarchistic revolt can disturb the grand and eternal cosmic order. The music of the spheres rings out as gladly now as when the Psalmist joined his voice to theirs in praise of the divine harmony. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. The desire to bring down every human being to its own status of development is characteristic of the unregenerate heart. Nay, more, it loves to slander and belittle the divine attributes, vainly trying to hold Deity himself to the same low plane. The leveling instinct lurks in every breast and rebellion against authority in every will that does not flow in sweet accord with that of heaven. Whosoever would say unto his neighbor, "I am holier than thou," let him look within and see his bosom serpent closely coiled. When Jesus came and showed the world what holiness and purity can dwell in human form, the Scribes and Pharisees would not admit the qualities they could not compass. "Let us throw mud upon him until he is as black as ourselves" was their secret thought. But the Lord went up to heaven visibly in the presence of many witnesses, while they were left in their sins.

In the character of Hamlet, Shakespeare has shown the man outside the garden upon whom the curse has fallen. He is debarred from eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Hamlet illustrates the fruitlessness of the broadest human intellect that is not illumined by divine truth in the rational faculties. Various courses of action are presented to his mind, which embraces them all in their logical outcome, seeing in each its reflex. So heavily do the disadvantages contingent upon any decision weigh upon him, that he is practically reduced to a state of inertia, and allows himself to drift with the tide. He cannot decide whether to be or not to be is the better part. Intellect divorced from divine truth is the barren fig-tree. The tree of the knowledge of good and evil is the man who has come to the point of discrimination, where he is enlightened to choose the good and reject the evil. Having involved the power of choice, which is wisdom, this man becomes the fruit of the Tree of Life, dying simultaneously to the lower life in accordance with the statement of divine law in Genesis: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The curse is no arbitrary fiat of an outraged Deity. It is derived from the Latin crux, a cross, pointing directly to the crossing of the divine and human. The Lord, who is the perfect Man in the image and likeness of God, becomes thereby the man of sin.

Students of Koreschan Science who find that the bee is illustrative of certain higher laws directly concerned with the Messianic manifestation, will be interested in Maeterlinck's defense of the insect. Sir John Lubbock argues against the little creature's intelligence, because when it is put into a bottle laid flat, with the closed end against a window pane, it will persist in its struggles to escape through the glass until it dies, while the common fly will soon find egress. Maeterlinck, who knows the bee from twenty years' study of its habits, says that this experiment shows the insect's love of the light and the play of its intelligence in recalling by the laws of association that it has found issue from every prison, where the light shows clearest; hence its action is logical, whereas the fly flutters out by accident. It is stated in Koreshan literature that a spirit from heaven flows directly into the bee and controls it, while other insects are merely born into the instincts common to the species.

How is man going to keep up with the progress of mechanical invention? All sorts of wonderful possibilities open before the children of the future. The air-ship and the one-rail electric roads, with a speed of two hundred miles an hour, seem destined to eclipse the wildest flights of Jules Verne's imagination. But the children of the present are so weary! The progress of drug medication and surgery does not seem to extend the term of human life appreciably, nor set man free from the inroads of disease. In order to enjoy what a command of Nature's resources puts before him, man needs to be made over. He needs a new body that is not subject to the encroachments of his great enemy. The incorruptible body is but a dream to a race tortured by pain. But the most sacred records of history afford an example of such an achievement right here in the physical earth, not in the spirit world.

It has been said that for those who will not accept the church dogma of the creation, evolution is the only possibility left. But there are some who will find the latter theory as unsatisfactory as dogma. To such the more scientific exposition of evolution, in conjunction with its natural complement, involution, will prove acceptable. Prof. Rudolf Virchow, while he disclaims bitter opposition to the Darwinian hypothesis, takes the ground that it demands the actual production and unmistakable verification of the "missing link." The doctrine of involution accounts for the disappearance of certain species. The missing link between the divine and human kingdoms appeared in accordance with the laws of involution and evolution nineteen hundred years ago, in the person of Jesus the Christ.

The testimony of archæology and anthropology corroborates the idea of race amalgamation as constantly operative in preserving ethnic types. From the heads of ancient men and women depicted upon stone, Egyptologists now consider that they represented a European race interblended with the Negro. In the earliest graves, figures of the bushmen type have been found, similar to those discovered in France and Malta.

Atmospheric refraction is not confined to the physical world. We misjudge our neighbors because we see their best qualities through a dense medium—that of our own beclouded minds.

Loving kindness and compassion grow in the valley of humiliation and repentance. Their perfume is sweeter than lilies.

The products of experience are more costly than all the gems of Golconda.

Koreshanity supplies the missing link between science and religion.

Man of God and Man of Sin.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—If you teach that (1) the theocrasis took place immediately upon the ascension, why did not the descent of the Holy Ghost take place until so long afterward? (2) In one issue of THE SWORD there was a statement that Jesus went to John to be baptized, confessing his sins. What Scripture is there to sustain the idea? Does not the Scripture say that He was holy, undefiled, and separate from sinners? That he was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin? That the Father's attitude toward him always was: "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased"? (3) Do you interpret the words—"was made sin," to mean that He sinned? Many say it meant—was made a sacrifice for sin. Kindly answer and oblige—S. F., Frostburg, Md.

The dissemination of the Holy Spirit, which was the product of the electro-magnetic combustion of the personality of the Lord Jesus, took place according to the laws of orderly emplacement and deposition that regulate all things. The first descent was into the few Disciples who constituted the focus of attraction for those energies. At the time of the theocrasis they were the only possible recipients. While they were assimilating the baptismal inspiration, others were coming to a degree of preparation which enabled them in their order, to bring down, by force of strong desire, the full outpouring on the day of Pentecost. From the first group as centers of efflux the spirit went out in ever widening circles, being received by each mind according to its own quality. Wheresoever it went a measure of pure love toward the neighbor awakened the desire to impart to others of the precious gift. In every case, love looks down to meet aspiration, and the time is directly in proportion to the reciprocal forces generated.

(2) There is a general statement to the effect that the baptism of John was the baptism of confession. In each instance, it is said that the multitudes were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. They confessed their need of the Messiah. The Lord Jesus was created pure and holy. He said: "I am from above; ye are from beneath." But He was generated by the law of involution as the perfect Seed, out of a sinful race. Both statements are true. In a retrospective aspect it might be said that His baptism was a confession—not of sins committed since he was born "that holy thing" of the Virgin Mary, but of his previous subjection to the laws of re-embodiment. (Please note in every instance the issue of THE SWORD to which questions refer.)

(3) There are two senses in which the Lord Jesus was "made sin"—the one figurative, the other literal. During His lifetime he was subject to the malicious attacks of vicious calumniators and detractors, who tried in every way to blacken his character and make him appear as vile as themselves. All manner of evil was said against Him falsely; but the machinations of his enemies, many of whom professed to be his friends, could not prevent him from entering into his glory and consummating his mission. Death and hell could not prevail against Him. His resurrection and translation were a triumphant vindication of his divine character, though he was "made sin" in the eyes of men, while living a life of holiness and purity that conspicuously rebuked the world. In His theocrasis, in the descending degree, he entered into amalgamation with the race. Here, in the declension of the church, He has literally become sin in the hearts of men where he was planted.

Peril of Great Britain.

W. T. Stead Declares that England Must Render Justice to the Boers, or Fall.

"It may be superstitious, but I believe in my God and my country. My faith in the latter has weakened of late, seeing the way in which it has been led, but I am still unable to believe it has been abandoned by God and that it must go down to utter ruin. Our only escape lies along the road of repentance, and we shall repent only after we have been forced into dire tribulation. God has not deserted Englishmen, but he is disciplining them.

"Our situation is like that of France in the second empire. We have had in South Africa the same swash-buckling desire the French jingoists of that time had in Mexico. The war out there was ended half a dozen times, but still the jingoes were not satisfied. So they kept on till Maximilian was shot and the French had to clear out of the country. Still the French did not learn their lesson. So a few years later the same spirit carried them up against a real power, a stronger and greater than themselves, and they suffered the mortification of seeing a German emperor crowned in the palace of their kings at Versailles, and a German army in possession of Paris.

"We shall go the same road if we fail to learn our lesson. If we had sense enough to know it, the burghers have given us some invaluable instructions; but I fear we do not appreciate them, and that as a result some day we shall meet a foe strong enough to strangle us. In one way or another we must descend into the valley of humiliation in expiation of the crimes of our leaders. It does not matter much by which road we go down. When it is over we shall be a contrite and more godly people, even if our flag doesn't then float over such a large part of the surface of our earth.

"South Africa is irretrievably lost to the British Empire. But that will prove a blessing in the end. This end should have come sooner. That is what I complain about. We have sacrificed too many lives, endured too much suffering, for that which was inevitable from the start. It is a great pity that Kruger did not take advantage of the conditions which prevailed in that 'black week' of December, and march straight down to the Cape. That would have brought the end quickly enough, and saved a lot of bother. But now people say the war has gone on so long, we have made so many sacrifices, that we must see it through, and have our way. They say it doesn't now matter much whether we were right or wrong at the start. But I say right or wrong does matter. It is the only thing of vital importance now or at any other time.

"The only end I see is that we lose South Africa. We may in time whip out the Boers. That is not the trouble. The trouble is that we shall be utterly unable to control the Outlanders. After we have whipped or killed the Boers for their benefit, they will be able to do as they please. The Outlanders live in the cities, and they will run the governments. If we had a loyal agricultural population to depend on, we might manage them, but the agriculturists will be our bitter enemies. The Dutch will never be reconciled. The Outlanders—many of them not British at all—many of them unscrupulous adventurers, with no permanent interest in the country—will never be satisfied.

"With the Outlanders on the one side and the Dutch on the other, there will be trouble all the time. When worst comes to worst, the Dutch will help the Outlanders throw off British authority. We can't go to war with them, because so many of them are of our own blood. At first we'll try holding them down with garrisons, but when Outlander for ambition and Dutchman for revenge join hands the garrisons will be swept into the sea and South Africa will go to the devil, so far as the British Empire is concerned.

"We will be lucky if we save Cape Town and Simon's Bay out of the wreck. But these we must have, because Cape Town is the keystone of the imperial arch. It guards the ocean route to India, and everyone knows the Gibraltar-Suez route will go to pieces in thirty days after we go to war with a first-class naval power. We have lost South Africa, and all the people in it. But you can never make these English understand it. They'll not get a glimmer of the truth till after it's all over. Our troubles will only have begun when we have annihilated the fighting Boers and ended the war. Before the war it took only 5,000 British soldiers to guard our interests in South Africa. Chamberlain himself says that after the war it will take 50,000 men to keep the British flag flying down there.

"Kruger has always hoped the British people would repent. That is his hope today. That is what he is waiting and fighting for. It is true that it is only by repentance that we can be saved, but there are few signs of contrition at the present moment. The British masses have become so besotted, so drunk with blood and conquest, that if to-morrow news was to come that by outlawry, rapine, and murder the last Boer had been wiped off the face of the earth, a wild, hoarse scream of joy would go up from British press and people. They would say: 'Well, this is something like business at last.'—Walter Wellman's Interview with Editor Stead, in Chicago Record-Herald.

A Lesson on Microbes.

A German Scientist Concludes that Bacteria are Necessary to Health.

Pasteur surmised that bacteria were not only useful, but necessary, to the body. The Centrblatt fur Bakteriologie, July 12, contains a critical review of the work of a large number of investigators upon this subject, with the results of experiments made by the writer, Dr. J. H. F. Kohlbrugge, who carried his investigations along the line suggested in Pasteur's query, paying special attention to the bacteriology of the digestive tract and its fluids. There are bacteria in the mouth, the stomach, and the intestines; but the point to be determined is whether they are merely brought in with the food, or whether certain kinds are normally present and are of use in the processes of nutrition.

In the experiments described by Dr. Kohlbrugge, newly-born animals were kept in sterilized air and given sterilized food, allowing no opportunity for bacteria to enter the body, while others, of the same age, kept for comparison, breathed unsterilized air and ate unsterilized food. Those kept away from bacteria were weaker than the others. Chicks were kept in sterilized environment from the moment of hatching, but although they lived several days, they grew very little, and at the end of twelve days showed an increase of only 25 per cent of their original weight, while another set of chicks, kept under usual conditions, gained 140 per cent of their original weight.

Functions of Bacteria in Nutrition.

The experiments and observations made, gave evidence that the digestive tract has its own bacterial flora. There appears to be an advantageous interrelation between the digestive organs and certain bacteria, similar to the relation frequently found between free-living organisms, by means of which the life activities of each one are carried on more successfully than they could be by either organism alone. This pseudo-symbiosis is vigorous, even in animals only from one to three months old, but only certain types—Bacillus coli communis, and similar forms—are tolerated. Some parts of the digestive tract have more bacteria than others, and the kinds vary in different regions. This relation between bacteria and the digestive organs is more stable in animals than in man, and more stable in adults than in children.

But these organs and their fluids have a bactericidal action, giving them the power of auto-sterilization, a power which is greater in some parts of the digestive tract than others, and is exerted against antagonistic bacteria concealed in the food or entering the body in other ways. It was found that feeding animals with tainted meat produced the increase of bacteria if the acidity of the stomach was unimpaired, but that they increased greatly if it was not acid, showing an important use of the 1 per cent of hydrochloric acid in the gastric juice. Although we take in injurious bacteria through the lungs and in our food, they are almost always destroyed in the body.

Triumph of King Cotton.

King Cotton made his best record in the fiscal year just closed. The figures of the treasury bureau of statistics show that the value of the raw cotton exported in the fiscal year 1901, was more than in any previous year in the history of the country and that the total value of cotton and its products exported averaged $1,000,000 for every day in the year. The total value of raw cotton exported in 1901 was $313,673,443 against $290,712,898 in the best year ever before known, 1891, and the total value of cotton, cotton goods, cottonseed oil and meal, and other products of that plant exported was $365,405,707. In quantity the exports of the year were not so great as in 1895, 1898, or 1899, but the price was so much better that the value exceeded by many millions that of the years of the greatest movement as measured in pounds. This brings the export value of cotton and its products above that of all breadstuffs or all classes of provisions, and only about $100,000,000 less than breadstuffs and provisions combined,—the year's exports of breadstuffs being $275,594,618, and of provisions $196,958,878. The aggregate value of the cotton exports in the past decade is over $2,000,000,000.—Grand Rapids Chronicle.

Inherited Wealth Kills Happiness.

"My life was never destined to be quite happy," William K. Vanderbilt is quoted as saying. "It was laid on lines which I could foresee almost from my earliest childhood. It has left me with nothing to hope for, with nothing definite to strive for."

"Is great wealth a handicap to happiness?"

"Inherited wealth, yes," was the decided answer. "It is certain death to ambition, as cocaine is to morals. If a man makes money, no matter how much, he finds a certain happiness in its possession; for in the desire to increase his business he has constant use for it; but the man who inherits it has none of these. The greatest satisfaction, the building of the foundation of his fortune, is denied to him. He must labor; if he does labor, simply to add to what may be an over sufficiency."

Sale of Snow in Sicily.

Snow sells in the north of Sicily for about one cent a pound. It is a government monopoly, and the prince of Palermo derives the greater part of his income from it. The snow is gathered on the mountains in felt covered baskets, and is sold in the cities for refrigerating purposes.

No Continental Alliance Against America.

In a recent private letter to the Editor of this paper, the Hon. James Bryce, the English statesman and publicist, referred to the rumored trade alliance of continental Europe against America as an absurd and impossible thing. Sir Charles Dilke, another profound student of European affairs, has made practically the same observation. While we believe the statement quoted to be true, as to the impossibility, we cannot refrain from thinking that under all the smoke rising from European courts around this proposal there must be at least the fire of a purpose.

We suspect that the London Spectator is nearer the truth when it says that the continental nations would probably venture to form such an alliance were it not for the fact that, with England left out, as would necessarily be the case, American products would find their way at once into European markets through English hands, with only a slight commission on them, and their second state would be no better than their first. And another, and a still better reason why the alliance will not be formed, is that the continent needs America full as much as America needs the continent for market purposes.

The truth is, that the trade relations of all civilized nations are now so involved with each other, and the reciprocal benefits are so many, that any attempt to institute trade boycotts between one nation and another must prove vain and disastrous. Generally speaking, any effort to turn trade aside from its normal and legitimate channels, at home or abroad, can be comparable only in its results with the effort of Mrs. Partington to roll back the Atlantic with a broom. It is against nature and cannot be done.

Preacher in Trouble.

Slander in the Pulpit Instead of the Gospel Leads to Jail.

In New Canaan, Conn., is a Baptist church; its pastor is named Edward Bell. He made remarks recently, about a local justice which led the latter to bring a suit against him for slander. As he was unable to obtain bail he was taken to jail. In jail he accepted and signed and engaged, if released, to read out loud in church a retraction of the words which he was charged with having uttered. He did read them out loud, with the statement that he did not think the words were those he had used. His adoption of the retraction is better proof that he did use the words than his doubt about using them. The report is that when he read this retraction "he was moved to tears," whereupon, the report also says, "many women in the church also wept." It was an affecting occasion, but if he had preached the Gospel instead of a showy substitute for the Gospel, he would not have been put in jail; neither would he have "been moved to tears," nor need "many women have wept." An experience which teaches clergymen that the law is for them as well as for others, and that slander in the pulpit is just as bad as slander out of the pulpit, should not be unsalutary anywhere. It might almost lead to "a Gospel revival," that is, to a revival of the preaching of the Gospel instead of something else. One does not read that any men "wept" when Pastor Bell squared himself with the law.—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

The Arena.—The October review opens with an address on the Value of Ethical Ideals in American Politics, delivered at Harvard University by Hon. Wayne MacVeagh. The Spirit of Modern Christianity, by Charles Brodie Patterson, is a vigorous attack upon the commercialism that pervades the church. In A New England Poet of the Common Life, B. O. Flower gives a pleasant study of Sam Walter Foss, comparing him with Riley in his hold upon the appreciation of the masses. Electricity as the Handmaid of Literature sets forth some of the possibilities of the future. Alliance Publishing Company, 569 Fifth Avenue, New York. $2.50 a year. 25 cents a copy.

Leslie's Monthly.—A Day at the County Fair is a delightful sketch from real life, that shows the motley crowds, the droll incidents, and the varied attractions that characterize this high festival. A special feature of the October number is Tolstoi on America, with a fine cut of the Russian writer in peasant garb, after the portrait by Repin. Frank Leslie Publishing House, 141-147 Fifth Avenue, New York. $1.00 a year. 10 cents a copy.

The Hesperian.—Apropos of the undermining of the historic edifice by modern railway enterprises, the Hesperian publishes a timely essay on St. Paul's Cathedral. This periodical always contains interesting notes on Science, History, and Literature. 7th & Pine street. St. Louis, Mo. 50 cents a year. 15 cents a copy.

The Adept.—Devoted to Astrology, Evolution, and Monism. 417 Fifth street, Minneapolis, Minn. 50 cents a year. 5 cents a copy.

National Suicide and its Prevention.

A. M., Ph. D.

Many readers of THE FLAMING SWORD will be glad to know that there is yet another opportunity afforded for obtaining copies of this notable work on the money question. A few hundred copies, stored away some years ago and overlooked, have been found in good condition.

Price, postpaid, (cloth) 50 cts. per copy, —a reduction of 50 per cent from the original price. This work is a scholarly review of the social conditions of our country, an able dissertation on and exposure of the existing money system of the Government, with the evils which it has entailed. It should be in the hands of every student of sociology and finance. Address, Guiding Star Publishing House, 313-317 Englewood Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland floss, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

New Departments

Bureau of Equitable Commerce, of the Koreshan Unity.

Under the Koreshan System of Co-operation, the cost of production is reduced to the minimum; and we offer to our friends more goods and more work for a given sum of money than can be obtained in the competitive world. We have established four new departments to our work. Orders promptly filled by mail or express. Correspondence and patronage solicited.

Our High-Grade, Hand-Finished Razor Strops.

A good strop is indispensable to one that uses a razor. A good razor is of little use unless it has a fine edge, and that cannot be obtained in any other way than with a good strop and a knowledge of how to use the same and keep it in condition. A strop in poor shape means a razor in poor condition. Full directions with every strop.

We manufacture our celebrated High-grade Razor Strops, the best strops manufactured. If you shave, you need one; you would be delighted with one of these. The prices are low considering the superior quality of the goods and workmanship.

Single, horse-hide, 50c. Double swing shell and canvas, several grades from 75c to $1.25. Extra fine material and finish, 1.50. Packed in neat box. Also strops at 10c., 25c., and 40c.—send 8c. for postage on orders less than 50c. Mail orders a specialty.

Jewelry Department.

Improved alarm clock, rotary hammer, $1.00; postpaid. Watch repairing a specialty. Watches repaired and returned in good condition, by mail, for 1.00. Extra charge only in case of serious breakage. THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is employed at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

The Great Purpose of Koreshanity.

The Principles of the Religious, Social, and Moral Life of Koreshans; the Highest Orders are Celibate and Communital; Place and Purpose of the Marital Order.

THE MARITAL ORDER of the Koreshan Unity has certain distinguishing differences from the ordinary monogamic system of marriage, in that it aims to perfect the marital state. There are religious, moral, physiological, social, and economic questions involved in this phase of Koreshan life. It is commonly reported of the Koreshan movement, that it aims to disrupt the family tie and relation. Whatsoever charges are brought against Koreshanity are invariably the result of ungrounded prejudice originating in ignorance of our principles, or malicious enmity against innovation, and can generally be traced to religious bigotry rooted in the very groundwork of modern Christian "civilization." False and malicious reports are being circulated for the purpose of destroying the influence of Koreshanity, regardless of the constitutional rights of the citizen. Persecution has never resulted in eliminating from society a people moved by religious conviction. Religious bodies, whether true or false, thrive under persecution.

One of the fundamental doctrines of Koreshanity is the unity of the Godhead in personal manifestation. It involves the doctrine of the triunity of attributes in the unity of the one personality. God is individual, but not personal until the personality is manifest. As an instance of personality, we cite the manifestation of the Son in the beginning of the Christian dispensation. The personality of God is Jehovah. Jehovah is the Son of God—God manifest in the flesh. Fatherhood is the attribute of begetting, residing in the Son, for God only begets from the Son. The process of creation begins with the begetting function, and is inherently in the Son of God. Worship is the confession of the fulness of the Godhead in the Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, and the performance of the uses of life to the neighbor. If a man says that he loves God, and at the same time does not love his neighbor as himself and is not willing to perform the uses of love, he is a liar. Christianity was not a faith, merely, independent of works, but a unity of faith and works. Koreshanity is the practical unity of faith and works, faith founded in the absolute knowledge of the laws of organic life.

The Theological System of Koreshanity.

The Messianic function is the function of the personal power of God; and at the end of the Christian age this function is revealed in Elijah, the prophet of God, who is the Messenger of the Covenant. His recognition is the first step in the revival of the scientific application of the principles of religion. His recognition and obedience to his mandates constitute the fulfilment of the first commandment: "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me." It is declared: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." The word Elijah is a Hebrew word, and rendered into English, is God the Lord. "Behold, I will send you God the Lord." God sends God the Lord by sending himself, precisely as a grain of wheat sends another grain by coming in that grain.

Elijah the prophet comes through the posterity of Joseph and in the line of Ephraim. A knowledge of the principles of the coming of the Son of man, includes a thorough knowledge of ethnological progress for the past three thousand years. "Joseph is a fruitful son, even a fruitful son by the fountain, whose daughters scale the wall; the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: but his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; from thence is the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel." Wheresoever the posterity of Joseph is found, there will be found the people through whom the Messiah of this age will come. The two tribes of Joseph, with the other eight, were taken to Media, under the Assyrian power, where they were absorbed through intermarriage with the Medians, Persians, and Assyrians. This intermarriage resulted in the production of the Germanic race, the Anglo-Saxon being the most advanced projection of this ethnological infiltration. The ultimate projection of this family of the ethnological tree is in America, where the greatest world power will develop, and there the true Messenger will be found. The coming of the Son of man is not toward the East. This fact is definitely settled by the Lord's own words. As the light proceedeth from the East and shineth even to the West, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. His coming, according to the Scriptures, will be in the direction of Western civilization and progress. Those who look to the Eastern countries for the Son of man, are doomed to disappointment.

In the Godhead there are three attributes—the Father, the begetting principle and power, the generating, the gestating, this is by the power of the Holy Spirit, which is the divine proceeding, the seminal essence of Deity. The power to beget and reproduce Himself in the Son, embraces the triunity of the Godhead. God is also two in one. "He who hath the bride is the bridegroom." The biunity of the Godhead is not dualism; God is not dual, he is biune. The Motherhood of Deity, residing with the Father in the Son, constitutes one of the fundamental doctrines of the Koreshan Universology.

Koreshan Ideals of Refinement.

The moral obligations of the Koreshan System include the recognition of and conformity to law and order. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you, is a good moral axiom that every genuine Koreshan aims to fulfil in his relation to the social world. He will not indulge in the use of intoxicants, tobacco, profanity, nor vulgarity. Refinement is one of the urgent concomitants of the Koreshan life. This applies as absolutely to the marital order of the Unity as to the celibate order. The marital order is not the highest order of the System. This should be thoroughly understood by every professor of the Koreshan faith. No person can pass from the marital state to the Sonship of Deity. The celibate order is the channel through which the Sonship is reached, and this is the only road to the highest life. Celibacy is the stepping-stone to immortality. Through immortality, eternal life shall be acquired.

The highest plane of marital life is far short of the attainment of Sonship. Every one who may claim to be an initiate of the first degree of the Koreshan System, after entrance to the investigative Court, will conform to the first moral obligation of the order; namely, there shall be no exercise of the propagative animal propensity and instinct but for the purpose of propagation, and this only under the knowledge of the astrological functions of the universe and in their application. The marital order of the Koreshan System will not be perfect in its sphere until after the baptism, therefore a man is not strictly in the marital order of Koreshanity until the spiritual baptism fits him for the Koreshan life.

It is a physiological fact, that abstinence from sensual indulgence tends to conserve the vital stamina and to maintain the vigor of the constitution. Sex indulgence is the cause of physiological degeneracy. It is the source of the inability of the physiological forces to resist the inroads of disease. It collapses the brain cells and hastens the degeneracy of the constitution toward that condition called old age, which in many people is manifest at the age of fifty or sixty, where the constitutional powers are constructed on the basis of a longevity of one hundred years. If the medical profession would devote its energies as exclusively to the higher principles of physiology and the sources of its violation as it does to the microbe hunt, it would be of service to the human race. Where there is a conservation of the physiological energies as the observance of the laws of physiology, there is a force of resistance to the encroachments of pathological efforts. The fundamental violation of physiological law is in the dissipation of the sex energies and prostitution of the life through sensual gratification. Every man and woman in the universe, after acquiring a knowledge of this fact, has the physiological right to contend for immunity from the prostitution of the waste of the sex energies—these being the very resource of life itself. The violation of sex and the prostitution of its energies constitute one of the greatest of crimes, and the marriage license does not mitigate the moral and physiological criminality.

Social and Marital Orders of Koreshanity.

Socially and economically, every Koreshan is bound by the obligation of fellowship to advance the interests of the universal body. A Koreshan in the marital order is not necessarily in any of the communities of the Koreshan order, though it is better to be socially united with some Koreshan group. The principles of the social order are more easily conformed to in one of the groups than independently of such a relationship; and the economic application of the principles can be much more readily exemplified than disconnected from aggregations into close fellowship. The Koreshan Unity is the product of the planting of communism in the church in the beginning of the age; it is therefore an organized Communo-coöperative System.

The equitable distribution of the products of industry is a function of Koreshanity. This work will ultimately be accomplished through another baptism, ten thousandfold greater in the extent of its influence than the operation of the Holy Spirit in the beginning of the dispensation. Independent action is not conducive to the best interests of society, nor to individual success. The Lord constituted a kingdom in its least form, and from the implantation of his life in the world there will proceed the evolution of the kingdom in its greatest form, to conform in every principle to the enunciations and practical application of the doctrines set forth in his own practical life.

It must not be understood that in our cognition of a marital order we encourage the institution of a marital system in opposition to the monogamic, now in vogue throughout Christendom; but we would apply the principles of righteousness to the marital order. We do maintain that those who are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage. When the Lord made this declaration he did not have in mind a time when the principles he inculcated would be universally considered worthy of practice. He enunciated a doctrine. This principle had its application then and with those people. It was as if he should say: "I am gathering from the world a people worthy of the baptism which I am about to shed upon the church of my ordination. I must call a people who desire to know and perform my will. Coming under the influence of my Spirit, in the baptism to proceed from me, you will be worthy to come into the resurrection, to stand again in the flesh at the end of the dispensation. Those of you who are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are [now] as the angels in heaven." There is nothing more plain than that the Lord intended that those who would follow him should forsake all, or they were not worthy of him.

It is in the divine purpose to provide for all the world. There are natural degrees of culture and discipline, we employ the word discipline in its broad sense, in the sense of all methods of instruction, and such as are not fitted for the higher life and its concomitants, can only attain to the conditions of the degree of their own delights. There are some who are ripening to Sonship, some whose loves will lead them to aspire to the acme of attainment. Such will become the firstfruits unto God. One of the indications that they belong to this highest order, is that they rest not in the conviction that they will attain without effort, but that they are energetic to overcome by a strenuous life in the lines of overcoming. "He that overcometh shall sit down with me in my throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." According to the Lord's own words, the attainment of immortal life must be through the accomplishment of power to control the inner resources of life, through the restraints which God enables men to place upon their inherent possibilities, with a union of the forces which will be given them through the influx from the baptism by which the new church will be overshadowed.

The Great Crisis and Culmination.

There are certain principles which characterize every dispensation of the world's progress. Every dispensation has its inception, its development, and its declension. The Jewish dispensation began with Abraham, and in its declension, its departure from the early and fundamental adherence to religious and moral requirements and obligations, marked the progress of its career until its fall. In the culmination of Jewish decline, the Lord Christ came to restore—not the old church, but to make all things new so far as the church was concerned. The world required a new baptism, because the Jews had departed from a knowledge of the laws of God through the traditions of the church. It was declared of the doctors and lawyers, that they had taken away the keys of knowledge. The Christian dispensation will be found to have followed the same law of human development that has characterized every previous career of dispensational progress. It was declared that the end of the age should not come except there be a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed. The prediction has been fulfilled, and the church has correspondingly fallen. There will be a great revival, but that revival will be accomplished through Elijah the prophet, the Messenger of the Covenant, who comes to end the old and begin the new dispensation.

The Lord was the fruit of the Abrahamic age—the inception of the new church. When the old church had produced Him it proceeded at once to murder him. The fact that the Jews had so far fallen from their conception of the character of the Divinity which they professed to worship as not to know Him when he appeared, shows to what an extent they had departed from the original truth concerning God. The end of the Christian dispensation will be marked by similar conditions of the human heart. The Elijah of this age will be as hard to recognize as was the Christ of old. The church has always martyred its prophets, and in the appearance of the Son of God, the church was true to its record. It will be true to its record now, at the end of the dispensation.

Veritable Truths in the Lord's Parables.

Analysis of the Word Parable; Examples of its Wonderful Significance; Elements of Fiction Excluded; A Flood of Light Thrown Upon the Sayings of Jesus.

KORESHANITY MAINTAINS that omnipotence resides in the intellectual control of the aggregate human will. By this is meant the affectional or love principle or substance, which is simply desire itself. In the inverted order of being, the will reigns supreme over the intellectual principle; but in the vertical order of arrangement, the will is subjugated and made subservient to the intellectual element, rendered luminous from the Word—even the Lord Christ. The following is a simple statement of the potency of desire, when regulated by the rational faculty and moved by the divine influx: "Verily I say unto you, if ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, be thou removed [speaking of Himself as the mountain to be removed by the fire of dissolving, called translation], and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done."

The doctrine of the Lord Christ, as suggested in the foregoing, is as applicable today as nineteen hundred years ago, and embraces the conservation and appropriation of the human will, brought into complete obedience to the Word that is to effect the accomplishment of the end prescribed in the covenant of eternal life. The energy of this potency is made manifest, through the intellectual faculties of man, in the understanding of the Word; Word here being employed to designate the divine nature as the manifest offspring—in the ascending degree—of the human race, and thus the very speech of God.

In a critical examination of the saying of Jesus, called a parable, the first important step is to analyze the word parable. The New Testament, as given to us, is translated from the Greek, hence we will seek a definition from Greek roots. The Greek word para, primarily signifies to or from, by or in the side of; bole signifies to throw or cast, as for instance, to shoot from a bow. The teachings of the Lord were all founded upon these two concepts; namely, love God with all the heart, mind, might, and strength, and love thy neighbor as thyself. We have the word of Jesus himself, that upon these two articles of the covenant hang all the law and the prophets; and also, that the second is like unto the first; hence no exposition of his parable, nor any exposition of the word parable, can be correct that does not agree with the doctrine of these two primary concepts of the law or covenant.

As Jesus is the Word, we will take him as the pivot or center of our argument—the very premise of what we have to say upon the subject. It is said that Jesus was made perfect through suffering; being made perfect, he became obedient to the law, hence the proper expositor of both the law and prophecy. He said, love God with all the heart, might, mind, and strength. He fulfilled this precept, hence God, through this obedience, became his neighbor. God having become his neighbor by entering into him and making him, Jesus, the fulness of the Godhead bodily, he necessarily loved God as himself; that is, as being himself, not so much as himself, but as himself. (Be careful to grasp this thought.)

Love is the attribute and potency of attraction, and whatsoever a man loves with all his heart is absorbed, appropriated, and assimilated until it becomes his very self. If a man loves God with all his heart, God becomes his by inherited right, and they are conjoined and thus made one. Jesus fulfilled, in the supreme degree of the Word, all the law and the prophets; therefore God, his neighbor, was within him. After having attained to such a state of exaltation, He simply purposes to bestow upon those who desire him the same gift, in all its fulness, which he by inheritance received from the Father.

Man was created both in the image and likeness of God. Jesus is declared to be the image of God. As the manifest affectional element of the Word, He was the image, but the wisdom was hidden within him in the discrete degree of the Word; this is the likeness. And God said: "let us make man in our image and likeness." The Hebrew reads thus: Vay-yomer Elohim naaseh adam (man) bezalmano kidmoothanu. The word bezalmano (a better pronunciation is betzalmano) is from the root tsalal; shade. Tselem from the same root is shade, shadow, image, likeness. Jesus was therefore the shadow or covering of God's glory. The word tsalay is from the same root, and means rib—because it is the side protection. When Jesus is glorified this covering is removed, the likeness is manifest, and they who receive the Word himself become the shade or shadow of God, hence, his side.

If we put the two words or roots of the Greek, para, with the side, or by the side, or the side of, with bole, from ballou, to throw, we have this—cast to the side. The second signification of the Hebrew root tsalal, is to roll or tumble down, or to be thrown down of one's self; and the Greek word ballo has nearly or quite the same signification.

Now if God was in Jesus as the manifest Word or speech of God, and this Word was to be thrown or cast down—literally—as the communication of Word transmitted as the Holy Ghost or Spirit, to fall upon the Disciples of the Lord as the covering or shadow of that Word, then the transmission of himself as Holy Spirit was to throw or cast himself to the side, which was his church. The Disciples became obedient to the same law which He fulfilled before them, and by loving God with all the heart, they made the same appropriation which he had made; thus they loved God, their neighbor, as themselves, and thus they received the Word of God or Word (speech), which was God, in para, in the side of, bole, to throw down. If we use the word para with the preposition in, and bole, to throw, we would have, to throw or cast into, or in the side.

In the foregoing view we have the supreme literal definition of the word parable, as related to the substance and method of the Lord's communication of himself to his church. Having thus settled the point, that the word parable does not literally imply comparison, fable, nor fiction, we are prepared to enter into an exposition of this special relation of Jesus. We will here add, however, that the Hebrew word which is usually translated parable, is mashal, to be made like. It is also to rule, to bear rule. These two ideas, to rule and to be like, are expressed in Hebrew by the same word, and linguists and philologists are unable to give a satisfactory reason for the expression of these two distinct thoughts by the word mashal.

There are two elements of dominion manifest as the two beginnings of word—affection or love, and wisdom or truth. The priesthood is the type of the will or affectional center, and royalty, of the intellectual principle. The element of potency is the will, and energy, or power is the intellect. This is the seat or domain of truth, and truth is always referred to, in Scripture, as the side, and those who are in the truth of the Word, especially as distinct from the life of it, are in the side of God. As truth is the royal element of the Word, (love being the sacerdotal element,) and as royalty implies dominion or rule, and as to be in truth or to rule, which in the Word is the same thing, the two thoughts came to be expressed by the one word, mashal. So whether we take the Greek or Hebrew for parable, it literally signifies in the side of; and as the side of means (in the Word) truth, speaking in parables signifies, supremely, speaking in truths and not speaking in fables or fiction. It would be a strange thing for Jesus to speak in fiction, when he came to speak the truth.

Transformation of the Degenerate World.

Coming Stupendous Changes in the Affairs of Men; Revolutionary Factors in Society, Church, and State; the Science of the New Order.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

THE ORGANIZED POWER of the great corporations must be brought from death unto life by the greater power of coöperation. The industrial world of the competitive system is a huge body of death, in which the disintegrating forces of disease operate for its final dissolution. The industrial world of the coming age is to be a coöperative order for the perpetual creation of a genuine common wealth, to be equitably distributed throughout the body politic by the governing center of equitable distribution through all lines of government transportation. The chief service of government, in a scientific social order, should be the collection and distribution of the products of the people's industry, proportionately to the people's needs. Organized labor should produce sufficient brains for its body, to make it sensible to the fact that equity and equality are not synonyms and never can be, if life be as the science of universal laws reveals it to be—both progressive and retrogressive eternally.

The gift to the world of a scientific system revealing to the brains of both capitalist and laborer the eternal laws of organic unity for the perpetuity of life that is life indeed, is the latest beneficence of Providence. The critical student of such a system, if he be of the progressive order, cannot fail to perceive that it is the redeemer and transformer of both capital and labor. The dissolution of the old order will find for its elements, in the science of the new order, a solution of absorbing and transmuting power which will precipitate a form like unto the Son of man, who was the Son of God—a form of social organization imperial in its brain power or exercise of scientific wisdom; republican in physical strength, and regal in the tout-ensemble of its majestic force and excellence. The Almighty—the Truth, is a present Savior in every time of trouble if heeded. The present distress of nations is a consequent of the birth-throes of the new social order; a nation is to be born in a day—the day of the Lord, an epoch defined by the presence of a Messenger of Truth, in whose day or time both the mysteries of iniquity and the mysteries of Godliness are fully revealed. In this time judgment is set. It is written that men shall judge Messengers; they shall determine according to their development of ability whether or not they be of God. With what judgment they judge, they are judged. Men determine themselves to be progressive or retrogressive by this judgment.

The new social order proclaimed and anticipated by Koreshanity, is the harvest promised by Jehovah when he planted the Seed of organic, imperial socialism at the beginning of the Christian era. The Lord organized a circumferential government in a central imperial Head, without whom—he told his people—they could do nothing. The Lord made his official servants channels of the distribution to the people, of their common wealth, of which he was the conservator and saving substance. The servants of the primitive church ministered to the necessities of the saints in all things. The members of the ecclesia were members of the Lord's body, who performed their functions or uses according to the diversity of their gifts or callings, in obedience to the law of love, of which their Head was the fulfilment and Seed of their reproduction or re-embodiment in his image and likeness. The Lord's body was the incubated body of a universe to be brought forth at the end of a given cycle; a new world or order of things prefigured in his anatomical construction, to be vitalized by the forces of his brain, which neutralize, specialize, and precipitate the life of every element in the universe. Jesus said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away" till all be fulfilled. All that He involved of promise of a new and divine order of human life, must be made manifest in its greatest and grandest form—the harvest form of a Theocratic kingdom in earth, with a new earth as its seat of empire.

The millions who today proclaim themselves Christians while upholding the competitive system—incorporated by law as the lawless one, free from the necessity of obedience to the Decalogue or law of God—constitute the grand man of anarchy, the man of sin, dishonoring the name of Jehovah and putting him to open shame before the eyes of the Christian nations. Anarchus issues a decree by imperial fiat, that gold alone—the most basic of all elements, shall rule the world and make void the law of God. The spirit of Anarchus, the love of money, is responsible for the downfall of Jehovah and the exaltation to the throne of His rightful dominion, of the almighty dollar of a fictitious or false money power—false because it fails to represent the love of the neighbor as the guard or criterion of all commercial uses.

"The love of money is the root of all evil" in humanity; and likewise, of all good, when the money or medium of exchange is an exact expression of the love of God. The Lord says: "I make peace, and create evil." The love of money as the root of all evil must have originated in the Lord, the Creator of all things. The Lord, who is the Seed of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and likewise of the Tree of Life, involves or knows all things. The love of money as the source of all good proceeds from the rod or stem of Jesse, who rules the nations with a rod of iron—the moral force of the science of the law of love, the only legitimate money in the kingdom of righteousness which he establishes in earth. Righteousness exalteth a nation. The name Jesse signifies flat or leveled land. This is the land or humanity which is leveled so as to square with the plumb-line of commercial integrity, the life of our Lord Jehovah. The serpent is the symbol of commercial wisdom—the law in its relation to commerce, the central principle of life. Commercial wisdom and the law of love are one. The strength of sin is in the law; it is the downward way taken by the root of Jesse, who precipitates that form or seed of God which descends into and becomes sin or the miry clay of humanity, which the touchstone, or wisdom-stone of the upward way gained thereby, must touch and transmute to the fine gold of Ophir; "the gold of that land is good"—the embodiment of goodness.

All men love money, all men are in sin—in miry, crumbling clay; they are incontinent, lovers of vain pleasures more than lovers of God; they are in trouble, diseased, deranged, and degenerate. They need transmutation and transformation to make them as good as the gold of Ophir. The Elixir of Life is in the stem of Jesse's rod, the righteous Branch of the True Vine, which bears the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, in which is the hidden manna, the wisdom-stone, the seed of the woman, which is the seed of the Tree of Life—Haveh, the Mother of all living. This Seed was planted in humanity to produce the stem of Jesse's rod, the righteous Branch of the True Vine, that he might be exalted to the throne of his father David, as the antitypical Solomon of intellectual power and dominion. It is he who builds the Temple of the Sun by the science of the square and the plumb-line, and squares or makes righteous the universe or circle of his environment with the plumb-line of his integrity, the science of the laws of Jehovah's being. Order is to be brought out of the present and increasing chaos of lawlessness.

Under the new order there will be no laborers nor money kings. Covenant relations with Deity will be entered into, signed with the blood of bulls and goats, and nations will learn war no more. Up to the date of the final covenant, destruction and construction will go on simultaneously. Judgment is set, and a standard is lifted which is attracting the intellectual perceptions of many who will yet rally around it in orderly array. They will come, bringing all the essentials for temple-building, in hearts and hands willing to do God's good pleasure. Thousands who have loved the appearing and kingdom of the Lord will separate themselves from the old and dead order, and assemble themselves in the order of the new and living way, as the new church, desiring a new covenant relation with Deity, which will make it the Church Triumphant in earth. Such assemblies must be for practical, persistent efforts to coöperate in industry for the production and equitable distribution of the common wealth, according to the science of the laws which perpetuate eternally the perfect form and functions of the universe as the handiwork of God.

A primary nucleus of such a church has started out to walk in this light of science. It invites the coöperation of its kindred of every nation and clime, to gather in the United States of America for the purpose of establishing a quality of righteousness that shall exalt this nation into an organization that shall deservedly be called the kingdom and dominion of the Most High. Anarchy is spreading like wild-fire—not under the name of anarchy, so much as in the forms of mob violence and moneyed despotism which would make game of anarchy, which is but the miserable fruit of the sin of ignorance, hunting it to hades. Ignorance is the result of ignoring the Messengers or Messiahs of God who come as the seed fruits of the Tree of Life, as the Alpha and Omega of cycles of life's progressions and retrogressions. Ignorance has a cycle of dominant existence in every sphere. Ignorance of the science of the law in its application to the uses of natural life is now ending, and devils will believe and work out their salvation with fear and trembling. The rich and the poor will worship or perform uses together, revering human life in God's image and likeness as the guard and criterion of all commercial uses; and God, who is the Maker of them all, will clothe them with his image, shelter them under his wings, and feed them with the hidden manna.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

FROM LEAST TO GREATEST, from first to last, in every domain of the universe the law of attraction operates. This law constitutes an irrefutable proof of the existence and character of God. It shows the weary toilers in earth's hells that heaven, too, exists because the central sun creates its own celestial atmosphere around itself, and shines out bathed in its own effulgence. What is the character of that mysterious force which draws together any two atoms? What can it be but love founded upon likeness of quality, that makes union a joy and happiness a reality? The heart of the atom hides the arch-secret of creation, for God is love and heaven is joy. The law which operates in its least degree here, ultimates in the central consciousness where Christ sits upon the right hand of the Father;—the Son, by virtue of his love for humanity, is invested with the power of Fatherhood; he becomes the Father in reproducing himself. Here the highest functions of love and law unite. When the Son "goes up" to the Father, he is absorbed into his own offspring by attraction. The beautiful story of the ascension is no fable, but an eternal verity attested by physical realities that none deny. Read again the story of the atom. Whensoever it joins with others in alchemical union, it ascends in the levitic energies of light and heat,—the offspring created,—to seek its own place and replenish the solar fires. At the same time the material precipitate goes down to accomplish its gravic mission. Both products are an earnest that the atom will come again in the fulness of time, according to the same laws of metamorphosis and attraction. Who can regard the physical cosmos with the eyes of understanding, and doubt that the Lord who was transmuted will come again in like manner, or that He will ever cease to come in recurring cycles? God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son. The Father or the Divine Interior sacrifices his personality, the manifest Messiah. What is the similitude of quality that constitutes the force of attraction between God and sinful man? How can what is holy, just, and pure be overwhelmed with longing for what is corrupt and vicious? The magnetic force of conjunction is in him who stands at the nexus between the two kingdoms—Son of God and Son of man.

One of the most practical aids to students may be found in the essay on Mnemonics, furnished by Koreshan literature. It goes without saying that a ready and retentive memory is a great desideratum to successful work on all lines of effort. The various causes of defective memory may be summed up under the head of dissipation. Besides the grosser forms of error that directly contribute to the decay of this faculty, there are numerous minor ways in which mental energy is wasted. Here the power of selection should come actively into play. Crowding the mind with unimportant details, excessive and indiscriminate reading without the corresponding exercise of thought and expression,—these, together with anxiety and fear, are fatal to the preservation of mental vigor. During his excursions into the spiritual world, Swedenborg noticed that those who had cultivated the memory merely for purposes of display, not with a view to the performance of use, found great difficulty in apprehending spiritual and celestial truths. He saw that such remained in their natural ideas, which formed as it were a callosity by which the brain was surrounded like a bony substance or a skull. The dissipation of this callosity was attended with pain. It is therefore essential that the motive for increasing the activity of the memory should be subject to the higher will. The great law by which it may be strengthened, as set forth in the scientific treatment of the subject in Koreshan literature, is the law of organic classification.

The "sick man" of Europe is having a fresh attack of the plague, and it may well serve to draw the attention of all nations to a center of infection and disease that calls for the most stringent methods of sanitation. Here is a case where the old adage, "charity begins at home," is in point. The Turkish empire is a receptacle for all uncleanness. It is a kind of international sewer. The only reason that it was not wiped off the face of the earth long ago, is because each nation is afraid the others will get too large a share when the bird is carved. Let each reform, and all unite to deliver the earth from this foul spot. It is a libel upon civilization, Christianity, and decency to hear that Turkish brigands demand one hundred and ten thousand dollars ransom for an American woman. Does this nation propose to submit to the extortion? Koreshan Science teaches that cerebral revolution, which means immortality in the physical body, is intimately connected with changes in the vital gland guarded and held by the Turkish saddle formed by the four osseous processes of the sphenoid bone. Is it not time for a revolution against the barbarities of the "Unspeakable Turk"?

There has been much discussion regarding the relative size and weight of the brain in man and woman. The outcome of the experiments made seems to be that there is nothing in the cerebral structure to warrant the inference that woman is inferior to man in natural intelligence. Sex determination begins in the brain, the distinctive difference being that of polarization. One is polarized in the cell, the other in the fiber. Woman is constructive, the cerebral tendency being to unite many cells into one. This faculty presides over art in all its domains. Man, on the contrary, is broadly disseminative, the tendency being to separate the one cell into many cells. There are numerous interesting facts in regard to this subject, brought out in Koreshan literature. Students of Psychology will find here results of original research conducted upon lines that are new to the world. Brain culture, as involving physiological changes leading directly to the transformation and unification of the divided being, is a subject of thought apart from ordinary concepts. It opens a new vista of possibilities looking toward heaven.

"This is the heir, come let us kill him that the inheritance may be ours." In every age this is the voice of the children of disobedience. It is the cry of the natural heart which seeks to use, for the purposes of material gain, the knowledge that constitutes the unsearchable riches of Christ. It hopes for opportunity to make money by the removal of the container and dispenser of the heavenly treasure. Is it not marvelous that God in his loving kindness has made provision whereby the natural feelings may be changed into love for the neighbor? It was through the heaping up of malefic force directed against the personality of the Lord, that the theocrasis was made possible, and the Holy Spirit was imparted which kindled a glow of pure love in the weak and erring Disciples. All had their share, even Peter who denied Him three times with an oath. No doubt there were some who looked askance at him and who thought that he, at least, had cut himself off from all part in the blessing, but it extends to every man in his order.

The art of life comprehends the legitimate grouping in societal fellowship of related parts. It is under the supreme control of angelic wisdom, and no satanic efforts to disrupt the spheres thus formed according to divine order and prescience can avail. The establishment of organic unity out of manifest chaos is no mean task. It depends upon the concurrence of heavenly powers strong enough to resist the encroachments of evil. Step by step, the kingdom of the Lord advances. The mutinous and rebellious may fall out of line, but the army will still march on victorious. Impatience and discontent are factors of progress which serve to aid, and never can thwart the purposes of Almighty God. In their retroactive effects, they but remove those who are only obstacles to the great work. Trust in the leadership appointed and raised up through processes of involution and evolution, with a view to this emergency, is the only source of security and repose.

Astrologers are calling attention to the sinister aspect of the moon's nodes at the time of the last Presidential election. The points where the moon's orbit cuts the ecliptic in its passage north and south, are known as the Dragon's head and tail. The old serpent has the power of death. It is the tendency of the race to remain under the laws of natural generation. The Draconic power is especially manifest in a false and perverted commercialism. When principles ultimate, they reach the point of terminal transformation to opposites. The activity and predominance of the agents of death and oppression are immediate precursors of the reign of Christ in earth. He is the divine serpent, the Head of the church bruised by the woman's seed. Was He not wounded and bruised? But He will utterly destroy the power of death in those who long for his coming and love his laws.

There are three great subjects concerning which the world needs enlightenment and instruction. All minor issues are comprehended in these—knowledge of God, of immortal life, and how the human heart may be vitally and radically changed. Upon these fundamentals, it is the special province of Koreshanity to speak. It brings to the world new and wonderful hope in the promise of a baptism to come, not in some distant age, not upon some remote planet or star, but here and now, amid the actual conditions of distress. The prose of existence is to be transformed to poetry. As it was in times past when the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, there will be light. Is it not best to investigate the only System that can give satisfactory answers to the three questions that are of greatest import?

One of the distinguishing characteristics of the biune genus or the solar angels, is their delightful innocence. Hence they appear in interior manifestation in the form of little cherubs. They are not in the love of the natural sense life, which represents the complete inversion of the sphere of innocence. In its Latin significance, the word means harmless. The quality of innocence precludes the possibility of injury to another even by thoughts of suspicion or of malice. The present world has no conception of the blessedness of the pure in heart who see God. They have discerned Him in the righteous man, and by obedience to the mandates of chastity have followed on to enter into his image and likeness.

The great mistake of those who hope by various therapeutic agents to enable man to resist disease entirely, lies in the fact that they consider him as an entity already organized. They do not take into account the segregate quality of human existence. Men and women are not integers, and until they come into organic unity of the visible structure, there is no possibility of rendering the body wholly impervious to attacks of illness. The stronger and more reasonable the hope of anatomical transformation awakened, the greater will be its effect upon the bodily conditions. Discouragement is a gravic force that only adds to the malady.

If the Messenger who brings divine truth and good to a darkened world were not overwhelmed with love for them himself; if he did not see with clear vision, beyond all possibility of doubt, the glorious triumph of the principles which he represents, he could never face the obloquy cast upon him by those who love darkness rather than light. If regard for self in every phase of interest were not swallowed up in compassion for the race, he could never carry the burdens laid upon him. Voluntary submission to the great commission is the supreme test of patience—and patience is the crown of Divinity.

It is one of Nature's paradoxes that the state of highest activity is the state of rest. When every substance reaches its normal plane, where it is at home, where it is in a state of balance, there it finds constant and pleasurable activity, being maintained in this poise by means of incessant materialization and dematerialization of particles. So when the great Sabbath of rest comes, happiness accrues through the delights of service. Thus it is evident that in the solar world there are cyclic change and progress, both factors of rest.

The language of causation, written in the physical cosmos, will—if read aright—reveal doctrine that is broad enough to satisfy the most charitable, and original enough to please the most radical. The discovery that waste and supply are equal in every department, and the law of the correlation of matter and spirit give the lie to the cruel dogma of lost souls shut forever in an endless hell—a theory that is directly responsible for a vast amount of insanity.

According to the higher psychology, intellectuality is the possession of knowledge, and intelligence its communication. In the perfected state the two qualities co-exist in simultaneous activity. In their root meaning, both words signify to pluck off, as fruit from a tree, referring directly to the powers of intellection exercised by those who, in becoming the fruit of the Tree of Life, have power to pluck and eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

Slowly and patiently, from age to age, God waits—and works. Noise and bluster are not in conformity with His methods, which are strong with the strength and quiet of assurance.

Many persons now manifest charity after the fashion of Rabelais, whose last will and testament ran as follows: "I have nothing. I owe much. The remainder I give to the poor."

The enjoyment of use is the antithet of the perverted principle of self-protection which leads to hoarding.

Patience is the outcome of knowledge.

Difference Between Faith and Belief.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—(1) Is there any difference between faith and belief? (2) Please define faith, and tell where it belongs in the Koreshan dogma and life. —READER.

(1) The term belief is from an Anglo-Saxon root that signifies dear. It is of later origin than the word faith, which has come into our language from the Latin fides, a substantive derived from the verb fido, to trust. In the English version of the Hebrew Bible, the root that expresses the quality of steadfastness or stability has been rendered by the term faith. In the translations of the New Testament, faith and belief wheresoever found are renderings of the same Greek verb, pisteuo, to trust, and its derivatives. In early English then, belief and faith were used synonymously. In Middle and Modern English a distinction is made by lexicographers who refer belief to the intellect, and faith to the will. Such a distinction is marked in its bearing upon the separation between truth and good, as well as the inversion of language that has characterized the declension of the church. It indicates the lines drawn by theology in its divorce from religion. Cardinal Newman says that belief is purely intellectual, faith is properly spiritual—a direct inversion of meaning as referred to the two radicals. Trust is a rational conviction founded upon intellectual processes by which the credibility or the trustworthiness of the object of intellection is established. Such a conviction or faith should be dear in every instance; but as the doctrine of faith without works has completely subjugated the church, belief has come to be founded merely upon the approval of the desires in revolt against intellect.

(2) "Faith is the substance of thing hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Its place in Koreshanity has been well defined by the Apostle James, who wisely declares that faith without works is dead, and exhorts the members of the primitive church to show their faith by their works. As stated above, it is a conviction of truth founded upon reason ultimating in the works of righteousness. Such faith manifest in obedience to the scientifics of the law, is the actual substance or quality of mental energy from which immortal life is to be created. It enters into that which is within the veil. The outer curtain that guards the holy of holies from the sight of profane eyes is "His flesh." The mortal body of the personal Guardian who holds the secret of the higher life, must be consumed by the polarization of the most intense desire made strong by absolute conviction of the power and possibilities vested in him as the Archgerent of immortality.

The Called and the Chosen.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—Please interpret Matthew xxii: 14. Who are the called in this age, and who are the chosen? —INQUIRER.

The chosen or the elect of this age are those who received the Holy Spirit from the Lord Jesus nineteen hundred years ago, and are therefore re-embodied and prepared at the present time, for another baptism which will transform their corruptible bodies into the likeness of His glorified body. Relative to the whole mass of humanity their number is few, being limited to 288,000 persons. Outside of these who are to reach the acme of human destiny, which is immortality in the natural body, the call extends to many who committed the "unpardonable sin" in the Jewish age by rejecting the Spirit. Having found no opportunity for salvation in that age nor in the Christian age which followed, great numbers will now become subjects for a baptismal influx corresponding to their present aspirations. They will culminate from the human kingdom into the divine kingdom at the end of future cycles. This is the most general interpretation of the passage, as pertaining to the present crisis. Considered in a more specific aspect, the 288,000 constitute the many who are called to the supper of the great God, since each person is a composite of thousands of entities. Some are good, some are evil. The wicked are to be utterly consumed. "He shall burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." The number of the Sons of God who will form the new creation generated in the great biological combustion is restricted to 144,000, the few who are chosen heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ.

The New York Commercial says there is one cottonmill in Georgia that cleared 93 per cent dividends during the last year, which represent hunger, suffering, and tears of hundreds of helpless women and children who have no votes with which to overthrow the capitalist system. Evidently the cotton barons of the South are not satisfied with their profits, for a Baltimore dispatch states that all the large mills are going into a trust to be capitalized at about $100,000,000.

A Study of Poverty.

A Tour of the New York Division of Hades, by Edwin Markham.

"I believe in a hell. I have spent nine hours in New York's dreadful sweat-shops." This was the statement written for the St. Louis Sunday Post-Dispatch by Edwin Markham, author of "The Man With the Hoe," after investigating the unsightly places in which some of the clothing worn all over the country is made. The story of the poet-reformer's visit to the East Side in New York is thus told by himself:

"Oho! This is the New York Greek colony, eh? Whew! What dirt, what disorder!" This was my cry as three of us—Sir Youthful, and Sir Grayhead, and myself—began picking our way through Roosevelt street. Everywhere were little clumps of children or little groups of noisy tradesmen. Everyone seemed to be busy, but all things were confusion—no order, no beauty, no high intelligence. Was it to such that St. Paul preached on Mars Hill? Was it for such as these that Socrates drank the hemlock? No, since then there has been a thousand years of the "Unspeakable Turk."

"Look out, or you will step on these half-naked little fellows. A man's big foot would flatten one out like a fly." We stop a moment to look at seven little tots, all crowded in the cranny of a wall. The least one of these little fellows was eating with great satisfaction a penny's worth of miserable ice cream. This little one was a great tragedy, with its chalk like face, pinched features, and starved expression in the eyes. It was one of those terrible babes that are old at birth.

On all hands there were the indications of watered milk and adulterated food. But there were also the remains of the old and classic beauty. The Greek outline, the small Attic features, the fawn-like eyes that do not think but feel! In the midst of all this squalor rises the imposing front of a Greek Catholic church. At the sight of it there burst upon the mind the memories of the great Constantine and the splendors of the Byzantine era.

My guide directed me to a place in Crystie street. "This is a sweat-shop," said my guide. And at the words, with the glance that followed, I thought of the bloody sweat of Christ—the eternal martyrdom of man. We had to step softly through the dark, winding, and slippery passages that led into this human hell. Soon we were on the third floor, looking out on the neighboring roofs, covered with refuse and garbage, broken bottles and sloppy pools. Deadly odors were continually blowing through the work-shops. The work people were bowed to their work with a strained intensity in every movement. Anxiety was written on every feature. Hunger rode a-straddle, spurs on his heels, as if death came riding hard behind!

Every worker in every room was more or less misshapen; those who ran machines had great humps on their shoulders, hideous and abominable distortions of the majesty that God made. Out through all this horror would sometimes break a crackling rill of laughter. Truly it was a Dantesque circle.—[Here follows description of numerous sweat-shops visited in the course of the day. The conditions found were practically the same in all.—EDITOR.]

At one of the houses we entered, the old lady thought we were intending to purchase the building. Her face suddenly brightened. She led the way through winding halls. She gave a guttural cry as she reached the back yard, and a dozen young ragamuffins scampered to a dirty wool sack in the corner. She saw nothing but virtue in the old rookery. "See this finely-lighted hall!" she cried, as we passed into one dimly lighted by a little dirty window. "See what sunny rooms!" All of them were dingy and dark. Perhaps the mole, too, finds joy in his unlit chambers below ground. But the mole gets his rent for nothing; but these wretched families are forced to pay $7.50 a month for one wretched little room. And this room, this rathole, this den of dirt,—is a home.

So, after all that I have seen, I am certain that I have found the "hoeman" taking root on our American soil. Certainly the decadent of labor is here in the making. Give us time enough and we will be able "to point with pride" to a fascinating horror equal to the older lands. As we passed out to the open air, someone remarked that Colonel Ingersoll was always insisting that there was no hell. What fatuity, thought I. While theologians have been debating whether or not God ever made a devil, men have built up a devil in the industrial industries of the world.

In these last days society is confronted by two gigantic evils—the trust and the sweat-shop. These are typical of all the rest. They are the two giants destroying the industrial life of the republic. One stands for congested capital; the other for emaciated poverty. They are the reductio ad absurdum of the competitive system. They spring from a failure to justly distribute the products of labor. They both show the power of co-operative principle. They are the modern Titans who are shaking the public safety so that everywhere the voices are beginning to cry: "Let us consider the new duties of new occasions—let us build the New Republic!"

Co-operative industry, then, is the hope of the New Time. In the ever-enlarging realization of the principle of fraternity is the hope of social progress—in this age, and in all ages.—EDWIN MARKHAM.

Greatest Problem in Physics.

A Scientist Concludes that Gravity is a Mystery and Newton's Theory Unproved.

The nature of gravitation is quite as far from being understood as it was a hundred years ago. While we have learned to create and to destroy other "fields of force," electric and magnetic, and to direct and control the lines along which these forces act, we are helpless in the omnipresence of gravitation, which we can neither create, destroy, nor control in any fashion.

The beautifully simple law of Newton, that two particles of matter attract each other with a force directly proportional to the square of the distance between them, has not yet been proved by actual laboratory experiment. It rests on astronomical observations, and in that respect is very much in the same condition as was our knowledge of the velocity of light before the time of Foucault, Fizeau, and Michelson. This law means that one gravitational field of force does not interfere with or modify another, and while no one has yet made an experiment which, upon final examination, discredits it in the least degree, it is not safe to say that a better knowledge secured by more accurate investigation may not reveal departures from it.

Newton found that gravitational attraction was not "selective" in character; that gold, silver, lead, sand, wood, water, wheat, etc., were all equally subject to it; but his apparatus and methods would be regarded today as very crude and indecisive. Within a few years several very interesting attempts have been made to ascertain if gravitation was "directive," especially in crystalline bodies, but all results have thus far been negative in character. Physicists have found it difficult to imagine one mass of matter influencing another across an absolutely empty space—that is, a space void of all means of transmitting energy—and Newton himself declared such a condition to be unthinkable. Many, indeed, have declared that all forces must be of the nature of a "push" and never a "pull," and this has made it necessary to provide some method or medium by means of which a push may be communicated.

That we have been able to create such a beautiful (though yet incomplete) scheme as is comprehended under the term "ether physics," with all the accompanying marvels of experiment and practical application to the betterment of the physical condition of man, while we stand dumb in the presence of the simple phenomenon of a stone falling to the ground, is one of the wonders of the age. This, then, is the greatest of all problems in physics, the solution of which may be the pass key to innumerable of Nature's storehouses of knowledge, now locked against the most cunning investigator. There are indications that brave effort to solve this problem will characterize the early decades of the new century, and already one or two theories have been advanced, by which it is attempted to refer gravitational phenomena to electrical conditions of the ultimate constituents of matter, a line of examination by no means unpromising.

Physical research in the future is going to be tremendously assisted by the utilization of means that have grown out of the practical applications of hitherto discovered physical principles. The physical laboratory of today possesses facilities for producing the very lowest and the very highest known temperatures; in it one can study the behavior of matter in the most intense magnetic fields; electric currents, powerful up to almost any desired limit, may be made use of; machines for producing almost any degree of mechanical stress are easily available; and in this way applied science will pay, in some measure, the great debt it owes to our research. Never before were there so many persons actually engaged in physical research, and never before were the conditions by which the philosopher is surrounded so favorable as now. While there are still problems enough "to go around," and to spare, there can be little doubt that the future will bring much concentration of effort upon a few of those mentioned above, on account of their fundamental importance, and we may be tolerably sure that the new century will see them well advanced toward solution.—Prof. T. C. Mendenhall, in Hearst's Chicago American.

Medieval Geographical Relic.

A curious sample of seventeenth century manufacture in the shape of a large geographical copper globe, has recently been placed in the building of the Academy of Sciences at Tsarskoe Selo. It is eleven feet in diameter, and weighs three and one half tons. Its construction was commenced in 1654, but it was not completed until ten years later, in the reign of Duke Frederick of Holstein. It was presented to the Academy of Sciences in 1725, but until now has stood in the Zoological Museum at Tsarskoe Selo. The outside represents the earth and the interior the celestial spheres of the world. There is a door giving access to the interior, where a table which will accommodate twelve people is placed. By means of an ingenious mechanism the globe can be made to revolve on its axis.—Ex.

Perpetual Motion Machine.

An improved automatic or self-acting gravity wheel is the modest title of an invention by Herbert Rose of Australia, which has recently been patented all over the world, and which, if the claims of its inventor are realized, promises to supersede steam as a motive power.

The invention relates to the construction of a gravity wheel, with concentric rings, secured to arms radiating from the center. These arms or weights act as balance and driving levers and are so nicely arranged—those on the downward grade being two thirds heavier than those on the upward grade in action—that a natural falling of the weights on the former grade insures perpetual motion.

A cessation of the driving force can only be effected by preventing the weights from falling, and this is done by a very simple contrivance in the form of a spring which acts on all the weights simultaneously. Taking a 40 foot wheel three feet wide, it is estimated that it will carry 1,050 weights, and that the driving power will be equal to 1,443 3-4 tons from the center of the wheel. The cost of construction is about one sixth the cost of machinery for steam power, and it is also claimed that the new motive power will reduce the working expenses 95 per cent.

The working model has been subjected to continuous tests, as it is apparently capable, like the brooks, of "going on forever," which of course is what is expected of an invention which claims to constitute a solution of the secret of perpetual motion.—Exchange.

President McKinley's Evil Omen.

In January last the Sphinx, a periodical with a red cover and a disposition to discuss things occult, published an article entitled "Will the Moon's Nodes Affect the New Presidential Term?" Here are some of the things the writer had to say about it:

To the superficial observer this A. D. 1900 election triumph looks like a sufficiently fortunate event to entitle the victor to a serenade of "Praise God from whom all blessings flow!" But whether or not this election is a blessing to President McKinley remains to be seen; for from a certain standpoint this presidential term is both inauspicious and very peculiar in more ways than one.

In the first place, as an ill-boding omen, let us note that the moon's node, astrologically known as the Dragon, was at the time in the sign Sagittarius, under which the November elections take place, and when the President is inaugurated next March the Dragon will be in Scorpio, the sign accursed.

Now, in the nation's career, there have been three others elected or inaugurated when the Dragon was in immediate vicinity of that sign; and these three were Garfield, Lincoln, and Harrison, all of whom died in office. * * *

The node, or Dragon, has a cycle of nineteen years, and is about nineteen months in passing through a sign; hence it follows that at intervals of nineteen years the reptile spends something over a year and a half in the sign which holds a presidential election every fourth year.

Now a rather uncanny fact is that the A. D. 1900 election is the fourth in an unbroken series which, at the regular interval of twenty years, have been under some malefic influence, as will be seen from the following: Twenty years ago (1880) Garfield was elected, and was assassinated in 1881; twenty years prior to that (1860) Lincoln's election led to the splitting of the Union, the shedding of a sea of blood, and finally to the assassination of Lincoln in 1865; twenty years previous to that Harrison was elected in 1840, and died in about a month after his inauguration; all of which fatalities we attribute to the malignant presence of the Dragon in vicinity of those elections.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

The Cosmopolitan.—The October number opens with a sketch of an unknown artist's leap into fame, with illustrations from the work of Charles Schreyvogel. "Are There Two Rudyard Kiplings?" is a question discussed by Mr. Charles E. Russell, whose criticism will attract much attention and will probably stir up the Kipling lovers. Among other articles are, The Daring of John Paul Jones, by George Gibbs, and The Mine Worker's Life and Aims, by Mr. John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America, who presents some interesting facts. Fiction and the stage have their usual prominence. Irvington, New York. 10 cents a copy. $1.00 a year.

The Saturday Evening Post.—How Tammany Nominates, is the subject of a timely article by Paul Latzke in the issue for Sept. 28. American Exports and German Tariff is another topic of interest presented by Charles R. Flint. He finds no cause for alarm in the schedule of duties imposed by Germany, even though our trade with that country should be cut off entirely, since it represents only about one one-thousandth of one per cent of our entire trade. General news and fiction make up an enjoyable number. The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. 5 cents a copy.

Review of Reviews.—In subject matter and in illustrations the October Review of Reviews is unusually valuable. The tragic events of the past month are treated with sympathy and dignity. As a memorial issue it is excellent, and a character sketch of President Roosevelt with family portraits adds to the interest of the number. An essay on Signor Crispi describes him as the "best loved and the most hated statesman of modern Italy." 13 Astor Place, New York. 25 cents a copy. $2.50 a year.

Twentieth Century Wraps.

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland flax, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we INhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism—the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

The Manifestation of the Man of Sin.

Unanswerable Arguments from a Biblical Point of View, Concerning His Identity and Mission; the Sowing and Death of the Promised Seed; Coming of Elijah the Prophet.

"That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed."—2 Thess. ii:3.

UPON THIS AND OTHER corroborating passages of Scripture, the conception has obtained that there is to be a revelation of the man of sin, at the closing up of the dispensation. Many who are looking for the coming of the Lord, maintain that the Lord will be preceded by some person or some body of people involving the fulness of iniquity, and that the time is ripe for such manifestation. A certain would-be prophet of Chicago has analyzed the situation and solved the problem of this significant Scriptural mystery—the man of sin is none other than Free Masonry. For the benefit of the readers of THE SWORD, we will herewith set forth from Biblical interpretation, an exposition of the man of sin that cannot be questioned. We will show that the man of sin is personal, and also that the time is not only ripe for his appearance, but that he is manifest and his character defined.

The Bible expressly declares that the Lord Jesus took upon himself the sins of the world—that he was made to be sin. He could not possibly take upon himself the sins of the world, and not take upon him the sins of the world, at the same time. If the Biblical testimony is true, if it be accepted and taken as the basis of the argument, the statement shall be taken as fact. Then the Lord took upon himself the sins of the world; this cannot be disputed. If He who knew no sin in his day was made to be sin, then he was made to be sin, not in imagination, but in reality. It remains only to analyze the character of this appropriation.

How did the Lord take upon himself the sins of the world, and how was he made to be sin? We will state our proposition at the beginning of the argument, and establish the truth of our premises. Proposition: The Lord himself, because he took upon himself the sins of the world and was made to be sin, is consequently the man of sin. The revelation of the man of sin is the revelation of the Son of God. It must be taken for granted that our argument is with those who do not question the truth of the Scriptures, hence the argument is from the basis that the Bible is not disputed, and it need not have any weight with the infidel or atheist. Our appeal is to the professed Christian.

The Lord Jesus the Christ of God constituted the two witnesses. "I am one that bear witness of myself, and the father that sent me beareth witness of me." These are the two witnesses, and they are not two distinct persons, but two attributes and factors of the one person—the Lord. The Son was one witness and the Father was the other. Can any one dispute this Biblical presentation? "I am one that bear witness of myself, and the father that sent me beareth witness of me." These, in one, are the two witnesses. These constitute the Word of God. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. * * * And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."

Let us make another Biblical statement, and let the Christian deny it if he will. The Lord Jesus declared that the sower sowed the Word. The Scriptures declare that the Lord was the promised Seed. The purpose of seed when planted is to reproduce, that is, to regenerate—regeneration signifying reproduction. The Lord came into the world to regenerate the race; not only so, but to regenerate himself, for he declared "That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." It would not be possible to follow Him in the regeneration, unless he was to be regenerated. His regeneration is the multiplication of the Sons of God through his death, reproduction, and multiplication. He was the High Priest of the order of Melchizedek, and through his sacrifice, implantation in the church, he will bring forth the fruition of the order, which is the 144,000 Sons of God who stand on Mount Zion, which means in the perfect immortal life. There will come forth from the planting of the Lord in the race, the church, the cubical evolution of the cube root to its greatest power. This is the mathematical four square of the Word, and constitutes the ultimate sum of the order of Melchizedek.

Death and Corruption of the Seed Sown.

"Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Jesus was the Word; the sower sows the Word. Jesus was not only the Word, but the sower. He was also the promised Seed. He was to be sown, he was sown; therefore he must die, not only on the material cross but on the cross which that material cross represented. His real cross was the cross of the Spirit, the Holy Spirit, which was himself, and which was sown in the church for the purpose of regeneration, that is, reproduction, with the spirit of the church in which he was sown. This latter sowing was after His resurrection from the tomb of Joseph. Death is the result of sin. Nothing can produce death but sin, according to the declarations of the Bible. There remained enough of the taint of sin in the Lord, derived from his human parentage, to effect his death on the cross. This taint was from the involuntary, not the voluntary power of the Deity. This taint of sin was not enough to prevent His resurrection without the corruptible dissolution of his body. He eliminated this remnant of involuntary sin in his death on the visible cross.

But there was to be another crucifixion. The Lord Jesus was to be crucified through his descent into the church which was to fall, the head of the church to fall with it. It has already been shown that the Lord constitutes the two witnesses. It is declared (future, from the time of the statement) that the two witnesses lay dead "in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." It must be remembered that when this was written it predicted something to come, though written in the past tense. It was in the vision of John, when he saw things which were to come to pass. The great city here referred to is the fallen church in which the Lord was killed, and in which he lay dead. The reason it is called Sodom, is because the church had appropriated the people of Sodom; and it was called Egypt, because the church had taken Egypt into itself through the appropriation of the ten tribes, including the tribes of Joseph, which constituted Egypt because the tribes of Joseph had absorbed Egypt through marital infiltration.

The Lord descended into the church through the operation of the Holy Ghost. At the time of the theocrasy of the Lord, he both ascended and descended. He went into the throne of God by his ascent, and down into the church by his descent. In His descent into the church, he took upon himself the sins of the world.

How Did the Church Eat His Flesh?

The Lord came into the world to be eaten, that is, appropriated, and he was eaten. We will not only show the fact from the Biblical proof, but we will show the science of this process of eating. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." The last day, here, means the last day of the age; and the eternal life comes when the resurrection raises the dead, not before. Will any man dare dispute the plain declarations of the Lord, that his flesh and blood are to be appropriated by the church? This is His own statement, reiterated for the purpose of giving to the fact his supreme emphasis. "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life." When? "I will raise him up at the last day."

The Lord Jesus was eaten. How was he eaten? This question can and will be scientifically answered. The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one. The question cannot be answered on the basis of chemistry, but it can be, on the basis of alchemy. God is Spirit; God was made flesh and dwelt among us. God, who is Spirit—as the Bible declares, could not be made flesh but by the law of mutation; and as it is possible for the Spirit to become flesh, it is also possible for the flesh to become spirit, hence we have the law of transmutation, which is the law of alchemy. When God was made flesh, God became the Lord; that is, the Eloah became the Jehovah. The atoms of matter comprising the Lord's body were susceptible of dissolution to spirit. This fact is not only true of the molecules of the body of the Lord, but it is true of every atom of matter in the universe.

The destruction of an atom of matter as matter, is its conversion to spirit or energy. The laws which conspired to reduce the Lord's body to spirit, were his desire to enter into his invisible life, his desire to enter into and baptize his church, and the desire of his church to be baptized by him. This was also to be associated with the power of His enemies to destroy him. This was the combination of the energies which were to conspire to the end of His alchemical dissolution. A corresponding operation of mental energies will conspire to effect the dissolution of the Messianic center of this age. Without the hate of the world there can be no theocrasis. This hate is engendered by the simple dissemination of the truth. After the Lord was resurrected, and in the presence of some of his Disciples, his body was dissolved in an electrical fire—the fire which he declared was already kindled. His body was dissolved, converted to Spirit, and as Holy Spirit he was absorbed by his church, thus fulfilling his own words: "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. * * Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day," at the end of the age.

The Fall of the Word into Sinful Flesh.

The Lord was planted as the Seed of regeneration. This was accomplished by the operation of the Holy Spirit. He became the Holy Spirit through the electro-magnetic combustion which reduced his visible presence to the invisible Spirit. By this process the Lord, in his descending degree, went down into the church by which, also, he went down into the hells of regeneration, the hells of the church in its declension. The church descended into the dark ages of its existence; with this declension the two witnesses—the Word, the Father and the Son, lay dead in the church, the great city, in "Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." His descent into the church was his declension with the church in its fall. He fell with the church, and took upon himself the sins of the world; he was made to be sin by this fall—his fall in the church. In this fall He took upon himself every condition, even the sin of common, sensual propagation; thus at the end of the age he comes into the world by the law of common, sensual generation. In all particulars, from the condition of being the Divine humanity at the beginning of the age, He becomes the sensual humanity at the end of the dispensation. He is therefore born in sin and shapen in iniquity at the end of prophetic time. Like all other men, He is brought back into the world through the law of sensual propagation. Now, He begins the process of overcoming. By this process the declaration is fulfilled: "He [not they] that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my Son."

The process of regeneration will bring forth the Sons of God; this will be the multiplication of the Son of God. But before this manifestation, God the Lord will appear. "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet [Elijah is a Hebrew word which, translated into plain English, is God the Lord] before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." Elijah the prophet is the man of sin, because he is the re-incarnation of God through the law of sensual generation. He comes at the end of the age, born as any man.

Time of the Advent of the Polluted Sanctuary.

We come to the time of the birth of Elijah the Prophet. The first decree went forth to rebuild Jerusalem four hundred and sixty one years before the birth of the Lord. And at the end of "two thousand and three hundred days [years], then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, how long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" The sanctuary and the host constitute the Lord himself. At the end of two thousand three hundred years from the first decree to rebuild Jerusalem, comes the cleansing of the sanctuary. The first decree went forth 461 years before Christ; add this to 1839, and we have 2,300 years. This brings the time down to 1839, for the beginning of the cleansing of the sanctuary. As the sanctuary cannot be cleansed until he appears, at that time—the time of his birth, the process of cleansing begins.

The Elijah of this age was born in 1839, a fact which cannot be disputed if the Bible is taken as authority. This was the time set by Miller, as can be shown by his own statement, though he was somewhat in doubt as to which decree was intended—the first or the second. Miller gave the midnight cry without any question, and he pronounced the fulfilment of the time for the coming of the Lord, without a statement of the method or the character of that coming. According to the indisputable declaration of the Bible concerning the Lord's coming, he should have been born in 1839. This is the birth of the man of sin; the birth of the Spirit which took upon itself the sins of the world. It is the same Spirit in a new garb, for it is written: Upon "him that overcometh * * I will write my new name." Though it is the same Spirit, it is a new personality. Thus Elijah the prophet comes as the man of sin, because it is the Lord God awaking out of sleep as a mighty man, and as a strong man by reason of wine. Wine in this instance means the truth of the Word.

The Mysterious Handwriting on the Wall.

Numerical Interpretation of the Message to Belshazzar; from Manuscript Written by the Founder of Koreshanity in A. D. 1876, and Now Published for the First Time.

And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN. This is the interpretation of the thing: MENE; God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it. TEKEL; Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting. PERES; Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians. Then commanded Belshazzar, and they clothed Daniel with scarlet [authority in the spiritual, adultery in the material domain], and put a chain of gold about his neck, and made a proclamation concerning him, that he should be the third ruler in the kingdom. In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain; and Darius [the successor in wisdom, or he who seeks information] the Median [he who numbers or finishes] took the kingdom. Daniel v: 25-31.

BELSHAZZAR was third in descent, or grandson of Nebuchadnezzar. He was therefore the repetition of Nebuchadnezzar, and is called son in Scripture. In Belshazzar, then, must be fulfilled the vision of Nebuchadnezzar, for in that system of computation which belongs to rationalism, 1 repeats itself in 3, which completes a cycle. If this is a primal trinity (not unity), it closes in 4 as its product. If it is a secondary trinity it closes in 8 as its product, for 4 repeats itself in 8. That it is not a primal trinity is known from the fact that 5, 7, and 8 comprise the number of the natural man, and consequently his end.

Belshazzar's vision was the fingers of a man's hand. The fingers of a man's hand radiate toward the extremity. The writing which he saw upon the wall was just what the fingers of a man's hand indicate—the ultimate or consummation, therefore the end; and its interpretation comported with the indication: "God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it." "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." "Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians." But this, in Belshazzar, was the fulfilment of the vision and dream of Nebuchadnezzar. Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream "a tree in the midst of the earth." * * The tree grew and was strong, and the height thereof reached unto heaven [which is the spiritual man, and is the number 7; it begins where the natural man ends, and ends where the natural man begins], and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth." 4 cannot begin the second trinity, for it is the repetition of 2 and belongs to the square, not to the circle. The second trinity begins, then, with 5, which is the number of one digital extremity. In the second year (period) of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, he dreamed dreams, and the revelation of the dream, with its mystery by Daniel, is as follows:

Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and arms of silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands [without extremity or limit], which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. * * And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people [as all natural kingdoms are] but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Dan. ii: 31-34; 41-44.

The fulfilment, then, of Nebuchadnezzar's dreams and visions was in his second period, which was consummated in Belshazzar, and includes both hands and feet, for it was the writing of one extremity (ultimate), and pointed to the other extremity (ultimate). The second trinity begins with 5, not 4, and ends in 8; but 8 belongs to the square and not to the circle, and is the coördinate of the first 2 and 4; and the second 2, which is 6, gives the square of the final product 18, and the circle of the final product 5, which is not the number of a man, but of the beast; for this 5 is the number of the five natural senses, which are material and animal. These cycles open and close, not in themselves, but in something else, and are eccentric and concentric curves, and belong to time—not to eternity.

The kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians. In the Persian religious system there were three periods—one of monotheism, one of dualism, and one of magianism (fire-worship). Their monotheism was a unit, or a fraction of a unit, not a unity. It recognized God as a unit, but not as a unity with man. Its number was 3, not by the addition of 2, the second 1, but by the segregation of the first 1, which became dualism, ultimating in 3, which is the destruction of 1 and 2, for it is the consuming element—fire, and the product is the nothing. The Median religious system had two periods: the first, the worship of images; the second, the worship of God. It was through this that the iron came that was mixed with Persia, and which gave it its strength. But this acknowledgment of God completed the 5 of the two kingdoms; and as 5 is the material, the Median worship and acknowledgment of God were purely natural, and thus constituted the legs and feet. It contained in it no unity, and must come to an end.

5 repeats itself in 10. The number belonging to the curves or cycles has become, by the process of mutation, the number of the square. By this mutation the natural female has become the natural male. This kingdom, then, is the inverted Greek, and is coincidental with the Egyptian dualism, whose worship was the two elements—the spirit of evil or death, and the spirit of good or life, which were always in conflict, and are consummated in the male and female spirit of lust, which produces the form of death, which is 5—the natural man, born to die.

The kingdom under consideration had a head of fine gold, which by mutation has become iron and clay, and remains iron and clay until consumed by the lusts of the flesh; for it is the repetition of 5 by mutation and inversion, not by addition, and remains 5. 10 is the coördinate of 5, and in antithesis must repeat itself in 5—the hand of the right side, and in 5—the foot of the left side, masculoid and feminoid, which are falsely called the spirit of death and the spirit of life, for it is the form of death and the spirit of death. These two 5's or 10 are the ten kings that now receive the kingdom one hour with the beast. By comparing Revelation xii; with Daniel iii, it will be seen that Revelation xiii fulfils the first half of Daniel iii—that is, the making of the image of the beast and the edict for its worship. The natural or sensual acknowledgment of God, the second period, which is fulfilled in the last of the third chapter of Daniel and repeated in the last of the fourth chapter of Daniel, gives the number 8 as a product. Rev. xvii: 1-11. This is the final product of 7, which closes in 8, and leaves but 5 as the final number for the cycles or curves.

Media received her dualism from Babylon, and Persia received her trinitism from Babylon. They were carried there by the sensual Jew from Egypt. Dualism was given to Darius the Mede. (Dan. vi.) Darius reigned two periods. The first was hero-worship or image-worship; the second, the sensual worship of God. These constituted the second 2, the repetition of the first 2—the image-worship and God-worship of Babylon. The Medes and Persians received the 5, the product, because it was the whole sum of two cycles, which was all that belongs to the natural material man—masculoid and feminoid; and this because the whole number of the square, which is 20 in the natural domain, was not completed with the whole number of the two cycles; and the numbers belonging to the square are taken from 7, the spiritual man, which are the first 2 and the second 2, the sum of which is 4. This being destroyed or mutated, leaves for the final product of the two cycles, the number 5. 5 is repeated in 10 by transmutation, and is preserved—for it is dual, masculoid and feminoid—and belongs to cycles, the curved lines of time; but 4 is repeated in 8. It belongs to the square, and is not completed; it goes to perdition (perdere, to waste) as the seed of adultery; and “mixes with the seed of men.”

The 10 are the ten horns or units (not unities). Their center is the ego and their circumference an elliptical sphere, and is the origin of the Indian discovery of the cypher (0). * * The number by mutation through the square and circle is 333, the number belonging to 5, and is one half of the number belonging to the ten horns, which is 666, the number of the name of the beast with two horns like a lamb, and which spake as a dragon. This is equivalent to 18; it belongs to the square, and marks the end. These numbers are given to Media and Persia. It is “the number of a man,” the end and destruction of Babylon. “God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.” This completes the fulfilment of Nebuchadnezzar's dreams and visions, which are summed up in Revelation xvii. These ten kings are to exercise, in the wilderness, the authority that the beast had, which in Revelation xiii is represented with two horns, masculoid and feminoid. This completes the separation of male and female into two distinct forms, and is the consummation of dualism, the ultimate being the name written upon the forehead of the woman who fled into the wilderness, and which by mutation has become the great harlot. The name is MYSTERY. The number of its name is its end, and is “MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.” This kingdom, with its number, is given to the Medes and Persians.

The seven mountains upon which this woman sits are the seven unities (not units) of God and man. Five were fallen; Jesus was the sixth—Jesus the Head in the natural, the one that is; and the seventh, the Mind which hath wisdom, is the one "not yet come" then (when the vision was given to John); "When he cometh he must continue a short space." He is the seventh. The beast, which is the eighth, and by mutation of the 7, whose number 8, is the sixth adulteration of the Word, or the falsification of the sixth divine unity or principle manifested in form, and its number is 8. We have then, 333, 18, 5; 666, 18, 10, 8, 7, 5 as the final products in the domain of rationalism for the fulfilment of this epoch. These figures are deceptive when computed independently of the spiritual and celestial domains, for they are the inverted products of the six points of unity between God and man.

An Evil Generation and Its Loves.

The Supreme Fountain of Evil is the Perverted Love of Money; the Waste of Wealth and Cost of Crime; Symbols of Corruption and Anarchy; the World's Hope.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

LOVE OF MONEY neutralizes every virtue as irresistible in the human soul. More, it transposes all human energies from the realm of order and virtue to the domain of chaos and vice. Let us contemplate for the moment, two conspicuous lines of the activity of the throng, or more properly, two subdivisions of the main line springing always from the supreme fountain of evil—the love of money. We exist under the methods formulated by one of these classes, for the express purpose of giving to its calling the stamp of respectability. Under a world-wide league of self-protection, this most highly respected guild of esteemedly correct substance collectors puts forth the hand to gather in an unrequited per cent of the brain, bone, and muscle product of the masses. Victims of this class accumulate and heap up millions gained from the exertions of those who, while they toil on and suffer on, yield the sign of good fellowship to such procedure.

In the city of Chicago alone are one hundred and seventy-five people whose combined wealth, four years ago, aggregated more than $600,000,000. The intervening years have not lessened the pro rata of tribute, nor headed off its steady flow into the coffer of the millionaire. Meanwhile each long cold winter and each scorching summer has, through this system emanating from an avowedly and acceptably law-abiding populace, cut short the lives of more than ten times one hundred and seventy-five people. It has mentally crippled thousands of the younger growth, and written the ineffaceable lines of hopelessness upon myriad faces.

The class next to be mentioned is second in order, because it is proximately the outgrowth of the one to which we have alluded. These realize and often voice their conviction that they, in their recognized nefariousness, have a kinship with the body of recognized respectability. Indeed, their ranks are oftentimes swelled by direct influx from this same sphere of the reputable. Gladly would they become even as the party of the first part, and, whenever their wish bears fruit, dame Fortune, with the money lever, is the unerring executive. Criminal annals are punctilious in computing the cost of sustaining the second class. This cost is charged to loss; but it would be unique to find the unearned millions in the hands of the relatively few, established as loss through criminality! In the United States the recognized criminals—the rogues in the retail business on culpable lines—number 250,000. About $1,000,000,000 is annually required to keep these hedged from depredating upon the rascals in the wholesale line, and upon the rank and file who contribute the moral and physical support to these larger frauds who manufacture and set the law-snare for the lesser frauds.

It has been aptly remarked that the black flag of corruption is succeeded by the red flag of anarchy. This, however, were more fitly alluded to as metamorphosis than as displacement. The people are the chameleon—they are the same body, be their colors black or red. The black flag and the red symbolize the existing pathological condition. If the red flag flaunts, the black has made the way for it,—is unitized with it as sign diagnosis of the disease of the body politic; and anarchy is anarchy, whether it exists beneath its confessed emblem or silently lurks in unsuspected places. Anarchy is anarchy whether as the fraternity alluded to by the Almighty ("I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them") it stands one day in seven to declare that God's laws are not to be kept, or, as outcome of this, it stands justly convicted, before the horror-struck nations as a monster parricide.

It is an unlearned-of fact in modern theologic philosophy, that the moral case of the people on all lines of condition and activity, springs from the religious substructure. Yet the admission is nimble that commerce cannot exist as echo of the Sermon on the Mount; that the reverberations of Sinai, vibrating our political structure, would rend it from base to apex; hence, "avaunt, Sermon! avaunt, Commandments!" and the world stands unconscious in hydra-headed anarchy—anarchy that upsprings wherever the sensual human heart beats and the sensual human brain throbs. Such plight is prime factor in fulfilment of the words: "That day [the day of Christ] shall not come, except there come a falling away first." The law of Moses and the standard of the Lord Jesus constitute the test of the true and the false—the religion of a people at one with God, and the religion of a people divorced from God.

If our Lord at his coming had found the religion as taught by Moses existing in its original purity, his work would have been simplified into fitting the righteous teaching of an old age to meet the exigencies of a new age. But the religion of the great Lawgiver had no adherents, either in the country of the Jews or upon the face of the earth. Loud-mouthed pretenders, quasi-learned familiars of the temple whose reasoning He could successfully controvert in his infancy, a multitude of cant and hypocrisy, with a comparative handful of teachable souls in whom to plant himself as seed—this was all that met the Man who was himself the entire life of the Jewish period. "Ye have made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition," said He, and his life was the forfeit of that perverted estate.

The divine communism practiced by the early church is obsolete; the love of the brethren, that sign of life in possession, has passed into desuetude. Our Lord is numbered among the transgressors; "He hath poured out his soul unto death;" "He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin." To produce its fruitage, the seed dies in the earth: to produce the harvest of the ages—the lambs that John saw standing on Mount Zion—He, the Lamb of God, the seed of Abraham, lies dead in the race—the soil of his implantation. At the close of the Mosaic age, this Shepherd from the house of Judah raised into spiritual life all whom the Father gave him; now, at the close of the Christian age, the Shepherd whom God has given us from the house of Joseph, will usher into natural life all in whom the Christ was planted, thus restoring in multiplication the transmuted body of our Savior.

Ever the Eternal rolls away the heaviness from the understanding of keen desire. Through illumination of the one mind prepared for this supreme vocation, the embryo Sons of the Everlasting are being instructed in the way of life; they are being inducted into the possibility of keeping the law; for "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the Tree of Life, and may enter in through the gates into the city;" and, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments."

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

THIS NUMBER OF THE FLAMING SWORD commemorates the birthday of the FOUNDER of KORESHANITY. At this mile-stone in the path of progress, it is fitting to review the work accomplished and glance forward to that which remains to be done. Prospect and retrospect are both cheering. During the past year a great impetus has been given to this cause. It has taken a prominent position at the Pan-American Exposition, where thousands of strangers from all countries have heard the Discoverer of the Cellular Cosmogony discourse upon its many attractive features. They have listened with deep attention to his logical and convincing words. They have seen the final unity of Science and Religion shining out as the bow of promise in the Rainbow City. They have felt the electric thrill of truth in the revival of the law of transmutation, and they have carried the new thought to thousands more in their distant homes. Electricity is the grand motic force of the Pan-American Exposition. It was destined that the science of the application of electro-magnetic energies to the speedy transformation of humanity should here be given to the world in a more public and convincing manner than ever before during its promulgation. Wonderful possibilities now confront the race, and the expectations aroused will center in Koreshanity. The managers of the South Carolina Inter-State and West Indian Exposition, to begin the first of December, have cordially invited KORESH to take part in the Midwinter Fair. Liberal offers of space for the Koresshan exhibits and an opportunity for lectures in the Auditorium are proof positive that the value of Koresshan Science is recognized and appreciated in a high degree. The aim of the Southern Exposition is to promote commercial unity among the principal West Indian Islands—seventy or more in all. Natural and supernatural reasons designate the equatorial regions of the Occident as the site of a coming civilization which will surpass in grandeur all known historical records. Visitors from the West Indies, especially from Cuba, the last stronghold of the Draconic power in the new world, now liberated and rejoicing in hope of the future, may find confirmation for those hopes by coming in contact with Koreshanity. Not only has it located the center of commercial activity, but it understands the only feasible methods of utilizing the products of industry to the satisfaction of society. Upon this happy Birthday, then, let greeting and love go forth to all who are willing in the name of humanity to work for international unity and the upliftment of men and women in every stage of development.

Shakespeare, with his usual facility for presenting both sides of a question and leaving his readers to discover the logical unity for themselves, has made two apparently conflicting statements on the subject of reputation. It may be said in passing, that this quality shows the breadth of the poet's mind and explains the fact that in point of universal quotation his works stand next to the Bible. One of his characters exclaims: "Oh! I have lost my reputation. I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial!" Another, with corresponding vigor, maintains that "Reputation is an idle and most false imposition, oft won without merit and lost without deserving." The latter speech explains itself and few, at first thought, would be inclined to cavil; yet there is the counter statement, and many writers take the ground that a man usually gets his deserts, passing current for what he is worth. Psychology furnishes the key to the enigma. Every personality comprehends a vast complexity of different entities. He is constantly radiating these by thought, word, and act. Those around him receive, each in a different fashion, according to attractive and inherent quality. Hence no man looks the same to any two observers, and the judgment brought against him varies in every case. It is said that God is of too pure eyes to behold iniquity. This refers to interior spheres which have no contact with evil. The Lord, visible outwardly in the flesh, is the instrument of judgment to all offenses. But while man looketh at the outward appearance, the Lord looketh at the heart. All unseen aspirations, all sincere repentance, all kindly outgoings of a loving spirit, all charitable construction of motives—these we are worth to Him "whose wheel the pitcher shaped."

All physical energies fall into two categories, levic and gravic. Those which originate in the grand central laboratory of creation determine wholly toward the circumference. But as they wing their way earthward to replenish its substance, they meet specific qualities ascending. Where-soever the conditions are such as to effect conjunction, metamorphosis takes place with a creation of new energies. These also will be either levic or gravic in their nature. Moreover, these conjunctions are not accidental but in strict conformity to law. No quality that belongs in the circumference fails to reach its destination. Does it go down to the dark earth's lowest stratum there to remain? Is its separation from the bright celestial radiance eternal? By no means. The theology of Nature is a glorious revelation full of comfort and cheer. No gloomy dogmas of unending pain meet those who read her secrets. It is true that the gravic rays go down to destruction. This is the very means of their salvation. After they have figured in the grossest forms of matter, which may well symbolize the most depraved mental states, they are converted to energies having a specific upward tendency. Here is one example of the doctrines drawn from a true understanding of the cosmos. It shows what the harmony of science and religion brings forth. This method of deducing spiritual truths from natural things is clearly endorsed by the Bible. Is it not said that "the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead"?

One of the most interesting departments of Universal Science is the New Psychology founded upon the laws of analogy and corroborated by experiment. The interdependence of mind and matter may be proved by referring to the physical cosmos. All the objects of intellection may there be found. The mind itself in its operations is the subject, and it is conscious of itself under this aspect. The material concept of the universe as a thing apart from mind has no foundation in reality. If mind could be destroyed, the cos-mos would vanish instantly, for it exists by virtue of laws inhering in mind. The obliteration of one means the destruction of the other. It is equally true that mind needs a material basis. It does not exist in an aeriform state. Some persons think of mind very much as they do of hydrogen gas. A disembodied spirit is a reductio ad absurdum. Investigators of psychic phenomena have seen materialized spirits vanish, so they conclude that spirits exist somewhere in a bodiless condition. They saw the conversion of matter to spirit, but the force generated returned to the mind, located in a material brain, that sent it forth or to some other brain. The physical brain is the great laboratory. To study its parts and their functions in connection with the law of alchemical transformation, is to gain fresh perceptions of the universe.

In the Fortnightly Review for September, the charge is brought that scientific investigation of immortality is not encouraged. The writer says that "people do not want to hear about it, and above all they do not want to know about it. For if once they knew, it would be most inconvenient. They would have to act upon their knowledge, and that might upset the habits of a lifetime." A cogent reason for indifference on this subject may be found in the general belief that death is the stepping-stone to immortality. Once convince people that it is not necessary to pass through the dark valley; that it is possible to enter into life here and now by pleasurable experience in the line of their highest development, and they will show eager interest to investigate. The author of the opinions quoted has prepared a set of question blanks by which he proposes to take a census of educated adults who prefer to live after death. Oh, that it were possible to issue a proclamation which should resound throughout the world and gladden every heart! Oh, that all might know, from least to greatest, that the kingdom of heaven is to come in earth—not in some world beyond the tomb!

The United States has cause for congratulation in the successful issue of the negotiations long pending in regard to the Isthmian canal. A new treaty has been concluded without any severance of friendly relations. The whole affair has been conducted in amity, and is an honor to American diplomacy. Great Britain has agreed to our full control of this important American waterway, and a fresh incentive to production is gained. There is no danger of overstocking the market with such increased facilities for exchange. But in order to improve the vast opportunities in sight, it is imperative that labor and capital be adjusted. What a waste of industrial energy that might be applied to building up the commonwealth accrues from the friction incident to competitive methods! The stability of society is contingent upon the protection and contentment of the American workman. It is folly to disguise so obvious a conclusion.

The alarming increase of intemperance, even among those nations where climatic influences would seem to modify it, calls for a philosophical consideration of the subject. To be temperate in all things is to pay due respect to time. The root meaning of the word time is from the Greek, which signifies to cut off. The exercise of any propensity or desire, harmless in itself, becomes intemperance if not checked at its proper limit. The universe as such is carefully tempered. All its time values are exact, and cyclic divisions prevent abuse. Soon and late are relative terms that pertain to the opposite sphere of separation, which prevails in untempered humanity.

The idea of a "spiritual democracy" which has no authorities and recognizes no rulers; has no representative whose dictum is law to any but himself and appeals for sanction to no book, ultimates in license and violence. It is not claimed that many who identify themselves with this thought recognize its logical outcome. They would, indeed, exclaim with horror that nothing could be further from their intentions, than any overt act. But they are like children playing with dynamite, in generating mental forces of this kind.

Literary criticism takes on a new aspect when the value of words as denoting spiritual entities is clearly apprehended. The writer travels to a distant land; he sojourns among the people; he gathers up into himself the spirit of a great civilization that is passing, and he incorporates it into a book in his own language, that is read and admired by thousands of his countrymen. Thus the life of the past is gathered up and passed over. This is one factor in the processes of race amalgamation.

In giving prominence to woman and in promising her full and free admission to national rights and privileges, lies the hope of the future. Her constructive ability is necessary to offset the tendency to break up and destroy every form of unity, whether in church, society, or nation. Through her maternal functions, exercised upon a higher plane, under the control of laws but lately rediscovered, a nobler civilization and a nobler type of manhood are to come.

Evidence is not wanting that the present state of humanity is characterized by the inertia and torpor of death. This platform is not one of severity but of truth. The frank admissions of many witnesses are sufficient without recourse to the authority of Scripture, albeit prophecies concerning the last days of the cycle are clear.

To be strong in the Lord is to possess unwavering confidence that his purposes will ripen.

The angel of His Presence overshadows them that love him.

The Mission of Koresh.

Promulgation of the Everlasting Gospel and Declaration of the Laws of Immortality.

In going before the world with the gospel of everlasting life, the gospel of the new Covenant committed to me from the very throne of the Most High, I deem it expedient in the execution of my commission, to present something definite regarding the results which will follow my goings forth. Subordinate to and correlated with the central religious and, consequently, fundamental principles of my doctrines, are certain possibilities which are to become achievements of special efforts of the mind, instituted for the purpose of attaining to a righteousness of the body above that which has hitherto by the masses been considered essential to salvation.

The aspirations of Paul centered in the hope which should be the persistent expectation of every Christian, and is the most effectively expressed in Paul's own language: "And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit: the redemption of our body." Rom. viii: 21.

The hope of the Christian cannot be consummated until this redemption of the body is assured in its actual confirmation by the redemption itself. As this attainment is to be reached through man's own co operation with God—for man is to work out his own salvation with fear and trembling, God working in him through man's will, reason, and understanding, the laws and processes by which this work is to be wrought must be made known to the workers, else they work blindly and ineffectually. The redemption being primarily the redemption of the body as the Christian's ultimate hope, the operations through which this hope is to be consummated must pertain to the body specially, as the objective point upon which all salutary efforts are to be expended.

My special work is to declare the laws and processes through which the now existing humanity shall attain to immortality of the body. In other words, my mission now is to promulgate the principles through which men and women may avert the catastrophe called death—the corruptible dissolution of the physical form—and substitute an incorruptible dissolution by which the body, through the attainment of immortality, may be suddenly dissolved through the baptism now about to be shed upon the world, the baptism of fire.

Men now are born in sin and shapen in iniquity, hence the relations and acts by which men are thus begotten are necessarily iniquitous. If men are born in sin and shapen in iniquity, and death be the result of sin, it follows that a reversion of this tendency will infuse life. Paul looked forward to the redemption of the body. If the relations and acts which result in the propagation of "the body of this death" be iniquitous, a reversion of these iniquitous relations and acts will assuredly be righteousness as concerning the body, and the application of this corresponding righteousness must necessarily eventuate in the body of life, or the resurrection of the dead. * *

Immortality of the body depends upon the continency of males and chastity of females. These are more than simple restraints placed upon the act of cohabitation. The restraint must center upon the sensual tendency of desire itself. There must obtain a conservation of the force of desire by such education and discipline as will insure its determination toward the new object of the affection's activity.

The Flaming Sword.

Instead of the sensual gratification of desire, which eventuates in the transmission of the germ of death, the germ upon which depends the propagation of the mortal body, the sensual thought must be destroyed, new determination and impetus given to the thought, and a flow of the affectional or love element directed into a new channel. The sexual act must cease with the complete extermination of the desire. This must be the result of the subjugation of the will by the intellect. This, then, is the first operation of the mind in its effort to overcome death in the body. This is the first step in the new discipline. * *

The second step is such an education and a direction of the desires as shall conduce to the conservation and use of the force thus husbanded, and such as will appropriate it to the new object of the affections, namely, the incorruptible flesh with which we are to be clothed, thus changing the corruptible body and substituting the incorruptible one. This second step implies the manifestation of an Educator—one sought for, one sent of God, one skilled in the use of the Word, one trusted, heard, and obeyed as the Sign of the Lord's coming; the Pointer, the Indicator to the world of the Lord's purposes. Upon this Educator sent of God, must be centered every affection of those who look for the Lord's coming and who desire his appearing, as he must necessarily possess every truth of the Word by which the desire for life is to be disciplined and made effectual in the formation of the new, the immortal structure. * *

The new Gospel, to be effectively promulgated, must have such a support and basis of operations as thus indicated [secular orders, communital societies, and industries], from the very fact that an entrance upon such a life as this gospel inculcates enforces a separation from the ordinary society of the world, and impels men to seek relations compatible with the new state. The Apostles of the new Gospel are being fitted for its promulgation, and their active entrance upon the work before them is the signal for the literal tearing to pieces of the old institutions of the world. The old church must soon crumble to dust, and the old state must soon hear its death-knell and go to decay. Upon their ruins shall arise, from the ashes of the old dispensation, such a religious and secular economy as shall provide, by the equitable distribution of God's material and spiritual blessings, for all such as are now, by man's inhumanity, made to suffer the consequences of a poverty which will be unknown in the new kingdom. There are two special objects for which the secular department of the divine economy must be established; the first grows out of a present exigency; the second arises for a future necessity of the world for the provision of states and conditions which must succeed the coming harvest.—HERALD OF THE COVENANT, AUGUST, 1880.

Kingdom of God in Earth.

The New Kingdom is both Body and Spirit; Symmetrical Arrangement and Perfect
Unity of the New Order.

In the establishment of God's kingdom in the new earth there are two important considerations; first, a groundwork—an organic form, must become the receptacle of the new life or heaven of the new earth. This groundwork must be a temporal kingdom; the formation of a body through perfect social, industrial, and political relations. This foundation is not the result of invention, nor is it in any sense an arbitrary arrangement of these relations. It must come forth as the product of unfoldment, from a germinal beginning previously infolded, as the archetype of the kingdom to come, and planted as the germ of a new creation, in the soil prepared for it. This soil is the church of Christ, as it obtained in its primitive condition. There are certain factors which must be related in the process of the development of the new kingdom, and its reduction to order. There is a definite plan to be observed, and that plan must operate through the human intellect.

The new earth to be established is an order. It must be composed of a definite number of genera, and these must have their legitimate subdivisions. These genera are the product of evolution from a germinal beginning. It is the harvest coming at the end of a dispensation, or a series of dispensations culminating in the complete unfoldment of the supreme natural order of creation.

Its industrial system must be perfect; its social system must conform to the interior social structure—the eternal functional entity of Being, because it is to abide forever. The sex relations must be according to the primal source of life, male and female, in an abiding likeness of the eternal archetype of male and female, one in function. There must be no transmission of the life potency of man in the construction of new external forms.

The industrial system is to be a natural arrangement of all industrial operations essential to the perpetuity of the order, perfectly natural, and embracing the useful products of industry. This includes the ornamental so far as compatible with the perfect symmetry of the whole. This natural or outward form is to become a receptacle of life, through which the form, the effect, will be changed by the process of transmutation to the interior of functional being, to become the functional potency of creation. It is by this mutation of effect to cause invisible, that it becomes the eternal kingdom, for to be eternal it must be changed into a kingdom without beginning and without end. In the second place, after the formation of the body or its symmetrical arrangement, it must be given a new inspiration; a new life must be inbreathed, and this must be the result of a higher form of combustion through which this new atmosphere is generated. These relations and conditions are to obtain through philosophic and scientific methods, through rapid, natural, and easy gradations, the laws of which are wrought through the natural intellect, quickened by the operation of the Almighty God.

The time has come when this structure is to be arranged; the stones are cut and fitted with absolute accuracy, and must be brought together. Without the rapid separation of these stones—which are to be made living stones through orderly arrangement—from the pagan systems in vogue throughout Christendom, no flesh can be saved. It is only through this Supreme Order that immortality can be reached. Let God's people take warning and obey the voice of the Shepherd.—HERALD OF THE COVENANT, Aug., 1880.

Philosophy and Science.

The Relation of Love of Wisdom and the Science of Truth; the Form of Jehovah, and the Royal Throne of the Kingdom.

Philosophy is the love of wisdom. Wisdom is manifest in four degrees: wisdom proper, faith, truth, and the ultimate effect in operation or use, to which all truth is devoted. Its love—the love of wisdom or truth philosophy, has also four co-ordinating degrees: Love proper, charity, good, and the ultimate operation or use to which all good is devoted. These degrees of love and wisdom constitute the three heavens and the new earth. The operation of philosophy (the will) and science (the intellect) unite through operation in the fourth or last degree, the formation of the new earth, which is the resurrected body.

These four degrees are the four beasts before the throne. These four degrees are manifest, in the general aspect, in three phases: successive, simultaneous (or horizontal), and vertical. In the successive degrees are embraced four periods or divisions of time, from Adam to the end of the Christian dispensation. In their simultaneous aspect, the four periods are projected into simultaneous existence as the product, in space, of their existence and operations through time. Two of these dispensations are masculoid, and two feminoid. The vertical or perpendicular aspect or phase is the relation from interior to exterior, the interior constituting the vertex, and the exterior, the plane.

The seat of philosophy is in the will; the seat of science (knowledge) is in the intellect. In the universal structure, the philosophic principle unites in one unitary and universal congeries, forming the sacerdotal center and degree of the kingdom of God; this is the divine Will. This primacy has, with its four degrees, two phases—the discrete and concrete. The discrete is the invisible YAHVEH—Love, Charity, and Good. These three unite to form the concrete degree, which is the fourth or outer—the visible YAHVEH, the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the invisible God manifest in his visible form. The will (philosophy or desire) is the flesh, whether referred to as the discrete substance, or concentered into the formulated and visible humanity of God.

The scientific principle, in the universal structure, unites in a derivative center. The derivative center is the seat of knowledge, and is the Royal Center or Throne of God's kingdom. This is Eloah. In his first principles, he has two phases, the discrete and the concrete. The center, whether referred to in his discrete quality or in his concrete, is the blood. The one is the Sun, the other, the Moon; the one is the Orient, the other, the Occident; one is the celestial Luminary, the other, the terrestrial Luminary; the one shines for the eternal heavens, the other for the everlasting earth.

Each of these centers has two ultimate phases. The will, YAHVEH, the seat of divine love, the dominion of philosophy, amplifies, through evolution, into the new earth—the augmented body of the Lord Jesus. This is the incorruptible flesh, generated in the involved concrete form, Jesus; then planted in the human will, and through social and physical evolution economized as the ultimate product, both discretely and concretely manifest as the seven genera, the seven golden candlesticks, with their seven life centers, the angels of the seven groups.—HERALD OF THE COVENANT, 1879.

Mastery Over Death and Hell.

He showed me a book, and when I had taken the book from his hand he said to me, Eat. I ate the book; and when I had eaten, there sprang into my memory, names. First of all, I both heard and saw, spoken and written, the names of the Angels of Life, and then those who should hear their voices, and through them become immortal. After these, the angels of death against whom the Word contends. In the book it was declared: Give these names to the world, for the time now is when I shall smite for mastery over death and hell, and victory shall be assigned to him who hath power to take hold on corruption and make of it incorruptibility.—HERALD OF THE COVENANT, May, 1879.

America the Land of Future Glories.

The land of Palestine was employed literally as a type; Jerusalem was built literally as a type. As types or figures they have accomplished their purposes, and now we approximate the literal realities, not abstractions: the Tabernacle, the humanity of the Father; the Temple, the humanity of the Son; the City of Jerusalem, the Church Triumphant, immortal and eternal; and Philistia, the new earth comprised of its seven genera, at whose apexes stand the seven stars in the neck of the constellation Taurus, and at the sound of whose voices death and disease will be eradicated from the natural degree of the evolved humanity. Let us seek in America for that which is perfect, that we may do away with all that is in part. In the New World, and not in the old, shall we put on the immortal and incorruptible flesh. In the New World, not in the old, shall be consummated the establishment of that glory, proceeding from the insanguinate Word, the blood of the new and everlasting Covenant, which shall clothe the fittest to survive, with his perfected angelic house, not made with hands, eternally in the heavens.—HERALD OF THE COVENANT, 1879.

The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

Word and Works.—Our St. Louis friend, Mr. Hicks, gives quite a startling portrayal of the planetary situation for the month. Cataclysmal possibilities abound, but he very wisely advises the timid to remember that all these perturbations are working the best and most gracious results. If the editor of this periodical did not believe that the sun could be forced more than 3,000,000 miles away from its "mechanical center" by planetary combinations, his predictions would be more satisfactory to Koreskans. Word and Works Publishing Co., 2201 Locust st., St. Louis, Mo. 5 cents a copy. $1.00 a year.

Mind.—"Fear or doubt in some form is responsible for all failure." Thus writes one of the contributors to the current number of Mind, in an article entitled the Relation of Fear to Success. The editor differentiates the "New Thought Movement" to which this magazine is devoted, from christian science, by saying that the former eliminates the personal equation.—Alliance Publishing Co., Windsor Arcade, 569 Fifth avenue, New York. 20 cents a copy. $2.00 a year.

Our Home Rights.—The cover of this staunch little advocate of medical freedom displays Gladstone's dictum: "A man ought to be as free to select his physician as his blacksmith, for he alone is to profit or suffer by his choice. The responsibility is his." 74 Boylston St., Boston, Mass. 5 cents a copy.

Avant-Propos.

CE VOLUME SCIENTIFIQUE devoue en grande partie aux details de la demonstration mecanique de la concavite de, la terre n'est que preliminaire a l'exposition la plus etonnante, la plus etendue que l'esprit humain ait jamais concue et acheve. Sur l'hypothese de la convexite de la surface terrestre, on a fonde cette deception gigantesque, le systeme Copernicien lequel, comme admettent ses partisans les plus ardents, ne renferme aucune preuve positive d'une exactitude scientifique.

En 1870, l'auteur du Systeme de l'Universologie Koreshanne, a la suite des raisonnements fondees sur les lois de l'analogie comparative, annonca la decouverte de la forme du kosmos qu'il declara des lors etre cellulaire et la surface de la terre concave, la courbure en etant de 8 pouces le mille anglais. Telle etant la rapidite de la courbe decrite, il en resulte un diametre de 8000 milles et une circonference de 25000 milles. En faisant application des lois et des principes ordinaires de l'optique, ceux du raccourcissement de l'objet en perspective y etant compris, nous nous sommes rendu compte d'une maniere scientifique de tous les phenomenes des illusions d'optique et nous avons prouve optiquement que la terre est concave quoique les apparences s'y opposent.

Après avoir cherche en vain pendant vingt-sept ans dans l'espoir de trouver un homme de merite et de capacite a comprendre les principes du raccourcissement dans tous leurs rapports illusoire, —un homme sensible aux obligations que la decouverte de la verite impose, nous nous sommes laisses gagner par l'idee de transporter nos efforts d'eclairer le monde sur la forme du kosmos, du domaine de l'optique a celui de la mecanique. Sous l'impulsion de cette idee et, notre homme trouve, nous avons fortement appuye sur le besoin de trouver quelque moyen mecanique de tirer une ligne droite partant d'un point vertical, perpendiculaire a la surface de la terre. Au Professeur U. G. Morrow remonte l'honneur de l'invention qui etablit mecaniquement la concavite de la terre de maniere a ne pas laisser aucun doute quant a son veritable contour dans l'esprit de quiconque veuille examiner sans prejuges les preuves offertes.

Au Professeur Morrow remonte, en outre, l'honneur d'avoir conduit toutes les experiences qui ont contribue au succes eclatant et irrefutable, atteste par la geometrie et par la mecanique, de la demonstration geodesique. Cette oeuvre, pourtant, n'est que la confirmation rendue par la geometrie et la mecanique a une certaine partie d'un immense systeme fonde sur la structure cosmique dont nous avons deja enonce la forme et la fonction. Le kosmos alchimico organique (l'univers physique) est la derniere et par consequent l'expression la plus exterieure de la puissance creatrice. C'est le langage de la causation ecrit en symboles. Connaissant la forme du kosmos avec sa fonction on en connait de necessite la cause.

Dieu, si l'on se sert de ce terme pour designer la source supreme de l'existence et de l'activite, ne peut etre compris avant de connaitre absolument la structure et la fonction de l'univers; donc l'humanite est en ignorance de Dieu avant d'avoir bien deciffré son ecriture. Connaître Dieu qui, quoique le monde l'ignore n'est pas incomprehensible, est, pourtant, le but supreme de toutes les recherches intellectuelles et de tous les progres.

Si nous acceptons la logique du systeme deceptif de Copernic, nous sommes amenes a la conclusion que l'univers et sa cause sont également illimitables et incomprehensibles; donc, l'univers, non seulement se trouverait-il a jamais eloigne de la perspective intellectuelle des aspirations et des efforts humains, mais Dieu lui-meme serait hors de la portee de notre esprit et par consequent de notre adoration.

La cosmogonie Koreshanne reduit l'univers aux proportions convenables et sa cause a la portee de l'esprit humain. Elle demontre a l'homme la possibilite d'atteindre a son heritage supreme, a l'autorite souveraine de l'univers, le restituant ainsi au plus haut point d'exaltation, —au trone de l'Eternel d'ou il prit son origine.

Le systeme dont la forme externe du kosmos n'est que la cellule exterieure, embrasse aussi son correspondant, le macrocosme ou le Grand Homme. A l'exterieur, c'est l'humanite visible en proces de developpement, qui s'avance vers l'etat de perfection n'atteinte jusqu'ici que par le Seigneur Christ qui en etait le germe, —les premices du genre perfectionne.

La cellule alchimico organique a sa forme definie. C'est l'oeuf d'ou s'ecartille le macrocosme humain; donc, il faut que l'humanite, quand elle sera organisee, revete la forme de l'organisme correspondant. D'ou il suit que, connaissant la forme universelle qui regne dans le kosmos alchimico organique (physique), on peut traduire le langage de cette forme en celui de la structure legitime de la societe; l'un est le type de l'autre. Les fonctions et les activites du kosmos se traduisent aussi facilement dans le langage des fonctions et des activites sociales. De veritables relations sociales aboutiront enfin a l'unité organique, developpee par l'application et sous la direction de l'energie intellectuelle. La societe deviendra le correspondant anthropomorphe du monde alchimico-organique (physique). La connaissance de la forme et de la fonction du kosmos alchimico-organique est la base de la theologie organisee, essentielle a la perpetuite du genre humain. Quoique un faux systeme de theologie ait entretenu le monde dans un etat de guerre offensive et defensive, dans l'anarchie et dans le chaos, il ne s'ensuit pas qu'une veritable connaissance de Dieu et de ses rapports reciproques avec l'homme ne soit pas necessaire a la veritable perfection et au bonheur du genre humain. Pour appuyer le contraste, quant au but a atteindre, entre le faux et le vrai systeme de cosmogonie (celui de Copernic et celui de Koresch) nous soutenons que toutes les recherches, tout le temps et toutes les richesses prodigues dans l'interet de la deception Copernicienne n'ont pas de but definitif.

A quoi bon savoir que la terre soit mobile ou stable? Si l'univers est illimitable, il est également hors de la portee de l'intelligence humaine. Pourquoi l'humanite devrait elle perdre ses forces dans l'effort de comprendre ce qu'elle a déjà prononce incomprehensible, inconnu et au dela de toute conception —etant illimitable? Nous avons cherche a connaitre la forme exacte de l'univers parceque nous savions que c'était le langage de la cause; et, sachant l'effet, nous nous sommes assures de la cause afin de pouvoir, en vertu de cette connaissance, y entrer et en devenir le mobile. L'esprit Koresch veut tout savoir parceque la connaissance de toutes choses nous rend capable de servir intellectuellement a l'organisation de la societe, atteignant ainsi a la perfection sociale et individuelle et de la a l'immortalite universelle et individuelle.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell; we inhabit the Earth. KORESHIAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.

A GLANCE AT KORESHANITY.

KORESHAN UNIVERSOLOGY is a complete system of the Science of the great Universe of life; and it involves the knowledge of the Creator and his creation. The name by which it is designated, in contradistinction to perverted Christianity, is KORESHANITY; and the new Religion must supplant Christianity, as Christianity supplanted Judaism. Koreshanity has come to fulfil the hope of the world in the liberation of humanity from the curse, in the establishment of the Kingdom of God in earth, the introduction of the New Era Light and Life, of universal harmony and happiness.

What does Koreshanity teach? We present a brief summary of the System—a few cardinal points, which will serve to suggest the great scope of the System in its completeness. It is the antithesis of all modern theories, of all schools of thought. It is the climax of all mental progress, the ultimate and absolute truth of Being and Existence; it is the revelation of all mystery, the uncovering of the occult; the true explanation of all phenomena, the scientific interpretation of Nature and the Bible.

COSMOGONY.—The universe is a cell, a hollow globe, the physical body of which is the earth; the sun is at the center. We live on the inside of the cell; and the sun, moon, planets, and stars are all within the globe. The universe is eternal, a great battery, and perpetually renews itself through inherent functions, by virtue of which it involves and evolves itself.

ALCHEMY.—The Science of Alchemy is the Philosopher's Stone, the Key to the mystery of life. Chemistry is false; Alchemy is true! Matter and energy are interconvertible and interdependent; they are correlates; matter is destructible; the result of its transmutation is energy. Alchemy is the key to the analysis of the universe.

THEOLOGY.—God is personal and biune, with a trinity of specific attributes. God

in his perfection and power is the God-man or the man-God, the Seed of universal perpetuity. Jesus the Christ was God Almighty; the Holy Spirit was the product of his transmutation, or the burning of his body.

MESSIANIC LAW.—The coming of the Messiah is as inevitable as the reproduction of the seed. The divine Seed was sown nineteen hundred years ago; the firstfruit is another Messianic personality. The Messiah is now in the world, declaring the scientific Gospel.

REINCARNATION is the central law of life—the law of the resurrection; reincarnation and resurrection are identical. Resurrection is reached through a succession of re-embodiments. One generation passes into another; the millions of humanity march down the stream of time together.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.—Heaven and hell are in humanity, and constitute the spiritual world; the spiritual domain is mental, and is in the natural humanity,—not in the sky.

HUMAN DESTINY.—Origin and destiny are one and the same. The origin of man is God, and God is man's destiny. God is the highest product of the universe, the apex of humanity. Absorption into Nirvana is entrance into eternal life—in the interior spheres of humanity, not in the sky or atmosphere.

IMMORTALITY IN THE FLESH.—Koreshanity declares and defines the laws of immortality, and its attainment in the natural world. The first step is recognition of the Messiah and the application of his truth. KORESH was the first in modern times to announce the possibility of overcoming death in the natural world, in the flesh.

CELIBACY.—The saving of human life consists in the conservation and appropriation of life in humanity. To become immortal, one must cease to propagate life on the plane of mortality. The standard of Koreshan purity is the virgin life of Jesus the Messiah. The Central Order of the Koreshan Unity is Celibate and Communitistic. Celibacy obtains in the central nucleus, never in the world at large.

PSYCHOLOGY.—Koreshanity points to the basis of all psychic phenomena—the human brain. It explains the phenomena of spiritism, mental healing, etc., and teaches the science of the relation of mind and matter.

THE BIBLE.—The Bible is the best written expression of the divine Mind; it is written in the language of universal symbolism, and must be scientifically interpreted. Koreshanity demonstrates the truth and scientific accuracy of the Scriptures, and proves its astronomy, alchemy, theology, ethnology, etc. There is no conflict between the Bible and genuine Science; the Bible and the natural universe must agree in their expression of the divine Mind.

COMMUNISM.—Koreshanity advocates communism, not only of the goods of life, but of life itself. It has not only the scientific theory of communism, but is practically communistic in the relations and affairs of its own people. In this it corresponds to the primitive Christian church, where all things were held in common. The bond of the true communism is the true religion, and the central personality of the divine communism is the Messiah.

KORESHAN SOCIALISM.—Our Social System is patterned after the form of the natural cosmos; that form is the natural expression of the laws of order. We demonstrate the fallacy of competition; advocate the destruction of the money-power; the control of the products of industry by the government, and the equitable distribution of the goods of life. Koreshanity will abolish wage slavery, and make it impossible for men to accumulate wealth and impoverish the people.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The true form of government is the divine Imperialism, the unity of church and state; such will be the Kingdom of God in earth. The Koreshan Government is the unity of the empire and the republic, involving the principles of all present forms of government, which are but fragments of the perfect system which existed in ancient times—in the Golden Age of the past. The government of the universe is imperialistic and humanity will constitute a unit only when every class is emplaced at rest and liberty as are the strata, stars, and spheres of the physical cosmos.

A Telling Vindication of Koreshan Universology.

Suspended Plumb-lines Show Marked Divergence, thus Proving Concavity of the Earth; Damaging Testimony to the Accepted Theory of Cosmogony.

IN ANOTHER COLUMN we give our readers the benefit of an experiment for one purpose, that resulted in the discomfiture of the "wise men" of the twentieth century. Four plumb-lines, two in each mining shaft, were suspended more than four thousand feet, and as they hung it was observed that they were farther apart at the bottom than at the point from which they were suspended. The funny thing about the whole matter is, that it is a puzzler to the men of "science." They say it must be due to some principle of gravity, but they cannot tell for the life of them what the principle is. What a pity that the shade of Sir Isaac Newton could not appear at this critical juncture of scientific speculation, and put forth another of his great laws! It seems that he never propounded a theory that two lines suspended from a height would diverge rather than converge, and that this furnishes another proof of the convexity of the earth.

"Why did not these plumb-lines converge as they should have done, and thus have furnished proof of the commonly accepted theory?"—especially now, when the Copernican astronomy is being disputed. "Why should an experiment become so exasperating, at this critical time, as to confirm the absurdity of the Koreshan proposition that gravity is toward the circumference, not toward the center?" If the center of gravity is at the center of the earth, the lines would have converged. They did not; they diverged just in proportion to the amount demanded on the basis of the premise of the Koreshan Cosmogony. We could not only have told them of the result, but could have easily explained the phenomenon. This is perfect corroborative testimony of the concave theory. Just for the sake of the argument, why could not these plumb-lines have hung the other way? This would have saved so much of the vexation that will naturally accrue from this freak of Nature. "Now," say they, "those miserable Koreshans will have another argument to hurl in our faces. We wish Nature would behave herself and not give testimony in favor of such an absurd proposition as that Koreshan Cellular Cosmogony!"

If the men who are puzzled over these plumb-lines will come to us, we will tell them that the discovery was made over thirty years ago, that plumb-lines sus pended from a height would diverge because the world is as it should be—concave. Ten thousand experiments of the kind, fairly made, would determine the same conclusion. We are glad to obtain this testimony, for it is a hard thing for the world to accept anything new except it come through certain authorized channels. Our readers will read with pleasure this certain testimony to the concavity of the earth. It comes opportunely, for now, as at no other period of the Koreshan movement, the scientific world is becoming interested in the discussion of the great question of what is the form of the world in which we live. The students of many of the institutions of learning throughout the world are carrying the subject to their professors, and are determined to compel a discussion of the questions involved.

We have seen our greatest struggle in the promulgation of the principles of Koresbanity. We have fought the battle for thirty years, and have the enemy on the defensive if not absolutely on the retreat. We are not sorry that the battle has been a bitter one; we can better appreciate the power of the truth as it confronts the errors of the groping generations of the dark ages. The Lord comes in the midnight of the world. The future will laugh at the folly of the beginning of the twentieth century, in the realms of what it calls "science."

Communism and the Spirit of Sacrifice.

Divine Justice as Taught in Parable by the Lord Jesus; the Principle of Communism not Applicable from the Standpoint of Competism.

THERE IS A CLASS of people that is everlastingly harping about justice. These people are found in every phase and sphere of life. They have even been found in the Koreshan camp; but when their motives and operations are analyzed, they are discovered to be as void of the principles of justice as their words would imply that they comprehended it. The Lord had them among his following in the beginning of the age. It is the most difficult of all spirits to deal with, because founded upon a narrow consideration of the great purposes of life, and the experiences essential to the perfection of character. The Lord, fully appreciating this phase of weakness in the human constitution, put forth in parable a lesson to be handed down through many generations, which furnishes an important study for such as would learn from the highest wisdom the fundamental principle of penalties and rewards:

The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market-place, and said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way. Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny. And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day. But he answered one of them and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst thou not agree with me for a penny? Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good?

The above is one of the most important lessons ever put forth in parable by the Lord Jesus. At the end of every career, there stands the altitudinal plane of every individual attainment; and not until that plane of awards and penalties is applied, can it be known what are the ends of justice in any individual case. The principle of communism in its application may appear to be the most unjust arrangement possible; because it involves a personal sacrifice which precludes the application of justice from the common standpoint of competism. Men are raised and educated in competism; and though they may imagine they have outgrown its influence on the heart and character, they are liable to deception.

In communism, the man with a thousand dollars is like the man with an hundred thousand, because the wealth passes to one common treasury, and all share upon the basis of fellowship and not upon the basis of what has been contributed to the common fund. If the man who has devoted the many thousands has done so upon the principle of love of the neighbor, the joy which comes to his heart is in proportion to the elimination from his mind of every conception of original ownership. "I have contributed only what did not belong to me; it belonged to the common fund." If he still harbors the feeling that "I have done something large and ought to be specially rewarded," he fails to experience the joy which comes to the one making the complete sacrifice.

In a communistic body there never should be an intimation of injustice from one member to another; every one should be diligent in his own efforts, and should never drop a note of dissatisfaction to an uneasy member of the body. It is right and proper for any member of the body, when he observes what seems to him to be an inequality, to suggest a correction to the official in charge, but never to the one he thinks is neglected or abused. The right methods are conducive to integralism; the wrong methods are responsible for such dissatisfaction and a great deal of the tendency to disintegrate. A word to the wise is always opportune and adequate.

The Personality of God's Holy Temple.

The Art of Deific Construction Applied to Divine Perpetuity; Supreme Aspect of Involution and Evolution Scientifically Exposed; Specific Functions of the Anointing Oil.

BERTHALDINE, MATRONA.

CONSIDER THIS SAYING of our Lord: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me"—the embodiment of Deity—Father-Mother of all being. Many are the sayings of the Lord in reference to himself as the personality of Deity. "Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very work's sake." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." That he embodied the Mother God as well, is evidenced by the saying, referring to himself: "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom." He had inherent the conserving energies of the spirit of truth, the comforter and gestating power of divine being.

The Lord Jesus revealed in himself, one personality, the triunity of Deific attributes—Fatherhood, Motherhood, and Sonship. Divine Sonship in Him found most externalized and visible expression. The Son was the express image and likeness of his Father's person, and was—because of the inherence of the divine creative energies,—the procreator of himself in personal form, even as a kernel of wheat or the egg of a chick is the procreator of itself. The non-christian and nominal Christian of present godlessness worship an unknown, unknowable "Great Spirit," for lack of His known personification—a medium to make him knowable and known to natural humanity. Some say God is everywhere and in everything. He is also said to be infinite, that is, unfinished or incomplete. God is unfinished or incomplete until he has finished the procreation of himself in his own image and likeness. The great spirit of a tree is unfinished or incomplete until it has nucleated all its potencies in the seed of its own entire reproduction—body, soul, and spirit.

It is said by many that the great spirit may be sensed in the sun of the physical cosmos, in the war-rings of the mighty elements of nature, in the breath of the violet, or sparkling of a dewdrop. We say yes, sensed in the degree of development represented by each symbol of the language of the ultimate living Logos, the involution of all things. God may be in all these things, in a degree of his being, and the symbolism of each may be spiritually discerned as related to his personality, if you have known God in the Alpha and Omega of his personal being. Those who know him thus may even rend the veils of his prophets with the sword of the Lord and of Gideon—the science of Messianic law.

God is unfinished in all things save Jehovah, his holy Temple, the increate Logos, before whom let all the earth keep silence. He alone can thus bear adequate testimony to the eternal equity of the laws of the universe, which operate to furnish justification for all the uses of their existence, in Jehovah, God's image and likeness, who is both their covenant or bow of promise and fulfilment. "And it shall be said in that day, lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

If God in the supreme sense, the Spirit of the death-conquering hero, were omnipresent, why should his people be said to wait for him? His appearance in the supremacy of his power is periodical, as is the supremacy of the seed form of each and every kind of life. This periodical manifestation must, from age to age, be awaited by those who believe in God and love his appearing and kingdom in whatever degree of the Word he, in the order of law, is due to be manifest. "Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Savior." His revealing comes in the fulness of times or cycles of which, in the various degrees of his being, he is the Alpha and Omega. He is always with us, according to the promise: "Lo, I am with you always," because the anthropostic sun, or central intellectual and affectional vivifier, is always within the anthropostic universe as a mentality, while only periodically visible to the natural eye as a known personality at the nexus point of the great cycles of age-lasting life.

The most potential form of plant life is visible to the natural eye only when the plant's alpha and omega—its seed, marks the beginning and end of the cycles of continuity of life. When the life potencies of its seed have passed into the form of a developing plant representative of its evolutionary possibilities on the plane of its natural existence, we see the plant as an aggregation of energized corpuscles which yield the ultimates of their power to the involving reproductive product called, in ultimates, the seed and savior of their kind, which kind may be improved to the limit of possibility by the application of the law of the cross, and by the culturing aids of scientific care and corresponding improvement in environment. The precipitates or retrogressive elements and energies resolve back into the most basic elements essential to the reconstruction of their kind.

God reigns eternally where he wills to reign in the order of the laws of his ultimate of being, his Jehovistic or seed form; otherwise he would have no universe, no continent for the perpetuity of his eternal life. He dwells, therefore, in the generation of the righteous, in the people who rally around and uphold the standard of his laws by allegiance to his standard-bearers—the Messengers of his covenant personal relations with humanity. The devil reigns in those who make void the law by traditions of traducing fallacy concerning the personality of God and the purpose of his laws of being. When men like sheep have gone astray and turned, every man to his own way, “God is not in all their thoughts.”

The downward or outward way, the evolutionary way, is the broad road that leads to destruction, to disintegration, and to the vanishing points of terminal transformation and returning of energies. The upward or involutionary way of man is the exalted way of construction and the absorption of the life of all things surrendered in order of law by the processes of evolution and ultimate dematerialization. The unfolding blossom yields all its progressive potencies to the infolding fruit seed. Men wander away from God, as it were, to find him. They get lost, and when they know it they grope in darkness, if happily they may find him; and the wayfaring man—the man in the way of the Lord, finds them, gathers them in and leads them or infolds them in the way, the upward way of life everlasting, the form of God.

The sun is the storehouse of all the known energies of the physical universe. Every element in the universe reaches its static plane in the ordained relations of each cycle and point of terminal transformation, and yields its levic energies to this storehouse and its Stone of transmutation. The Israel of God that becomes in time Lo Ammi, “without God and without hope in the world,” is the description of man’s present lost estate. The world today is practically without a known God.

Thousands await the appearing and kingdom of One of whom they have heard but do not know, in any scientific sense of that word. He must again be revealed in the flesh, in the veil of personality, to be scientifically—actually and practically, known.

It is written that the wicked shall be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God. A wick is for the burning of oil. It is a good thing to be wicked if you have oil in your lamps, and are trimmed for the burning—to give light. The holy oil, the wisdom and love of God, is for the anointing of the wicked, that they may burn well and regenerate in the world the energies of divine light and heat, by the consummation which attends the destruction of their wickedness. The holy oil, in the purest quality of its scientific degree, is the science of the personality of God. “That wicked to be revealed” is the man of sin who, having forgotten God, wants to know him by the application to himself of that science which destroys his wickedness and reveals God within him. “No man shall see God and live,” it is written. Moses saw God and died, and God buried him in the valley of Moab. Moab means the Father’s seed—the seed of Abraham, which seed is Christ. God knew Moses as his own natural personality, and Moses knew God as the law of his divine being, written on his heart, which he learned to obey through the instruction of suffering. Through obedience he became, in the fulness of times, the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

What was true of Moses will be true of thousands of Abraham’s descendants from the seed of Christ. Those who had the seed of Christ planted in them at the beginning of the age, which imparted to them the spirit of the life of the law of Moses fulfilled, will—in the order of law—come to recognize the prophet of the science of that law as the seed of promise in fulfilment. The holy oil with which he will anoint them will burn these wicked, and by the light of this burning they shall see God and die as men of sin, to be made alive in Christ—the Light of the world. The precipitates of these burning men of sin, their natural energies and basic elements which pertain to the flesh from beneath, shall be returned into hell, the spheres of mortality, to subdue and reduce them to order in obedience to the laws of divine and orderly progression. All the levic energies belonging in the order of law to the solar sphere, will be absorbed into it, and shine forth from the wisdom Stone of solar radiance as the righteousness of Eloah Jehovah manifest in his many Sons, the personalities of the Gods. “And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.”

The kingdom of righteousness will not come to the world through any method but that of the coming of the Lord in the divinely appointed order. There will be no improvement in human conditions until God baptizes the world with the fire of purification.

If Christ the man involved the children of the resurrection, as he must have done if he was the firstfruits, then the sowing of himself in the race (church) by the operation of the Holy Spirit, constituted the sowing of the good seed.

The Inevitable Law of Compensational Progress.

All Differences to be Righteously Adjusted by the Lord God; Advancement of the Colored Race in the Order of Law; Solution of Race Question in the United States.

AMANDA T. POTTER.

SAUL OF TARSUS was told that it was hard for him to kick against the pricks. These pricks are the seven polate points of love and wisdom; they are the seven Spirits of God, six of whom had already manifested. Their office is to revitalize the world of humanity through baptismal function. It was through the function of baptismal illumination that Saul became Paul; that he saw, spiritually, the light emanating from the throne and altar of God; that he listened to the Deific voice that remanded him from the path of persecution to the highway of devotion. The seventh baptism is now in order—the dissemination of the seventh Spirit of God, which will free the present time from the throes of opposition to the adjustments that make for the re-creation, and hence the perpetuation of the universe.

Creation is re-creation. The vidual human frame, which is in a measure the analogue of the universal structure is, until its dissolution, in constant process of re-creation. All universal phases partake of the same determination. All universal forces forever combine in new creations; if you will, for though but re-creations, they are genesis to their epoch. Neither evil nor good withholds its tribute to the supreme re-creation—the Sons of God, who enfold and constitute the righteous kingdom. From inception to finish of this ultimate design, whenever the wrath of man interposes, the wisdom of God causes it to praise him. Twenty-four thousand years ago, under like conditions like races peopled the earth. The white race was culminating its onward march, in the Sons. The blacks were becoming the progressive type. We of this day are the product of the then declining white race commingled with the advancing black race. It was the union of a less degenerate physique with a more advanced spirit.

The colored man of America was stolen from the wilds of Africa through the lustful wrath of the white man. To the Messenger (whose afflatus will constitute him the fulfilment of the prophecy: "In chains they [the Ethiopians] shall come over, and they shall fall down unto thee, they shall make supplication unto thee"), the black man shall say: "Surely God is in thee; and there is none else." Again, the lustful wrath of man planted the white strain in the Ethiopie in advance of the moot of what should be done with him. A large per cent of the ebony was bleaching while its presence was yet so precious as to call forth the preserving services of the bloodhound. The question, "What is to be done with the white race in America?" was being practically answered before it was formulated. This co-infiltration covertly begun, will proceed under appreciated law. To argue that the black has a set status beneath the White, that should by law be enforced, is to deny the spirit and letter of our Constitution as affecting our citizens.

Lincoln, honored by both races; Lincoln, to whose genuineness more than to another's the black people owe their freedom, believed that the physical difference between the races would forever forbid their living on terms of social or political equality. He saw in color the righteousness of inferior and superior. His perception was born of its time and teaching; a hither period is fraught with this righteous instruction: "The equality of the now black race with the white, can only come in the free opportunity of the black to acquire that equality through his power of demonstration. Give him opportunity and sustain him in his effort to advance. Let him show himself the peer of his fortunate neighbor, if he can, who should then yield gracefully to his achievement. This is all the black race asks, and this it has a right to demand." (KORESH.)

Some days ago a bright young colored woman, in speaking of the status of her race, remarked to us: "We do not desire the white people to receive us on a social footing. In our own social gatherings we meet persons superior to the white people existing under the same circumstances." At first blush, (and prejudice does not recover from the first blush) this seems unwarranted by evidence. While the writer would not be strenuous in vindication, she will make reference to the discourse of a Bishop to his charge in one of the southern states, as corroborative: He informed his parishioners that the less affluent were neglecting the steps of which the colored people were availing themselves. It was to the effect that the colored mother in poverty, gave her child its portion of corn bread for breakfast, dressed it as she was compelled, and sent it to school, while the white mother in similar stress, allowed pride to deny her child an education. Similar methods, practiced during the last thirty years, are showing their fruitage in both races. He pointed the warning finger to a sequent ignorant, thriftless white class outstripped by the Negro.

The desire for attainment on the lines of culture, refinement, and intellectual power, is intense in the intellect and will of the black race. If this yearning is met in a spirit of helpfulness, results will be more rapid; but in any case the results are a certainty. The hope of the perpetuity of the sensual whites, the hope of the perpetuation of the blacks, lies along the lines of universal law as pertaining to absorption and assimilation. Negro advancement is an important factor in compassing these states. The greater his mental perfection, the greater his power to realize his supreme aspiration—the possession of a white skin. Said a woman whose colored blood but little more than indicated her African origin: "I would endure to be flayed alive if so I might possess a white skin." An intelligent mulatto remarked in our presence that "God never gave another curse so great as a black skin;" and in various degrees of intensity the race echoes this sentiment.

The spirit of selfishness which stole the colored man from the wilds of Africa to wear away his life in unrequited service, would now gladly deport him to the land of his fathers, though it be strange and abhorrent to him. It is wholesome to remember that the colored citizen has just as many rights as the white citizen. The American government has as little prerogative in deporting an unwilling black, as it has in deporting an unwilling white. Fortunately for this less-favored class, Uncle Sam has established no penal colony. Right here in the United States will the destiny of the blackamoor be solved, and the seventh baptism will overcome for us the kicking against the pricks.

In the Editorial Perspective.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

OUT OF THE DIM PAST, silent and grim, looms the Sphinx, a perpetual reminder of a civilization that was mightier than ours. Older than the oldest pyramid, her age no man has told. Once upon a time, according to the ancients, those dumb lips spake, and every wayfarer who lifted his eyes toward that great stone face met the same question. There she stands in the sands of the desert, a monument of mystery. The wise and the simple, the child and the sage, are all intent upon the riddle: "What is man?" The greater number are too busy with their own conjectures to take heed of facts. Since no man has been found to solve the threefold mystery of spirit, soul, and body, God must send a man to solve it for the world. The Sphinx means the strangler, and traditions used to say that the monster devoured those who failed to reply to her questions. One man alone gave the right answer. This was prophetic. The processes of natural generation ending in death throttle every pilgrim in the caravan, until One who is sent from God proclaims man's destiny and expounds the laws of life. The woman is bound to the animal and cannot escape from lower sense life until One comes to deliver her from bondage in the desert among the shifting sands of time's great hour-glass. Science is seeking to uncover the soul and put its finger upon the vital principle, but what is its point of departure? Pathology dissects dead tissue; anatomy examines the framework; physiology watches the processes of organic life, while the experimental psychologists began with the avenues of sense. The real value of their work and the movement begun by Weber in 1846 lies in the conception, albeit vague, of some reciprocal action between mind and body. It is a step in advance of the notion of the soul as some extraneous force. A totally different point of departure is furnished by the law of the correlation of matter and spirit discovered in 1870 by the Founder of Koreschan Science. This reverses the process of carefully tracing the progress of sensations from nerve extremities to the brain. Lacking a comprehension of alchemical law as it inheres in mind, psychology cannot realize its hopes of finding the soul. A human body is maintained in what is termed a state of vitality so long as combustion of corpuscles continues. Each cell is the nexus of metamorphosis where pneumatic and psychic energies are constantly materializing into matter and where matter in the form of the solids and fluids of the body, is as constantly dematerialized and reconverted to soul and spirit. Now let the Sphinx crumble, for a traveller in the highway of Righteousness has guessed her riddle.

There is a general belief that truths are best represented by straight lines. This conception as applied to modern theology has resulted in the idea of man's evolution toward an infinite and incomprehensible Deity, who may be approached but can never be reached. The beautiful concept of the cellular universe, with concentric layers of varying density from the ethereal solar nimbus to the outermost environ of pure gold, gives the corresponding concept of every truth as a perfect cell. The straight line has its office, but it is not an independent one. It serves to indicate relations. For example, the premise of the Cellular Cosmogony is structured upon the chord—but it is the chord of an arc, a definite portion of the perfect circle; the chord, alone, out of relation to the curve would not express completion. The rectiline represents the life of righteousness or the path of human progress toward God, as exemplified by the Righteous Man. Hence he is seen in vision by the seers, with the plumb-line. He is the diameter which joins center and circumference; he is also the chord uniting two units of the circumference. Nothing but purity of life communicated from the Lord will ever form a bond of union between any two members of society polarized in the natural state of enmity, not love toward the neighbor. Every truth, then, is a cell—a sphere, not a hemisphere; so when one half is presented, the mind needs to embrace both. It is dangerous to make the hemisphere the standard of truth.

Sacrifice in itself is bitter and repugnant. As a mental concept, it must be rounded out by the idea of substitution. No man can forsake his old loves until something better takes their place. No one but the Lord can propose anything nobler. The tender provision which renders it possible for man to cut off that which is dearest to him and lies hidden in the very core of his heart, is prefigured in the sacrifice of Abraham. The joy of earthly relationships will be replaced by the heavenly unity of divine order in those who show their faith by voluntary submission, as did Abraham.

The university in its broadest aspect is concerned with every phase of life. President Harper's article in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post is an amplification of this theme. He shows how upon the practical and industrial side, a great institution that provides for the reception of fifteen hundred or a thousand students branches out in every direction. All departments essential to the welfare of a township comprising an equal number of citizens demand attention. There are the building, commissary, and press activities to be organized and developed; each needs a full and efficient corps of workers. The amusement field includes not only athletics but a theatre with concert and lecture bureau. A bank, employment agency, pension system for retired or disabled officers, with a myriad other lines of business, furnish scope for every variety of talent. An institution that rigorously enforces business methods in dealing with practical questions will excel in educational equipment. When the latter phase of work includes the presentation of an entirely new and original system of science, reinforced by proofs so startling as to compel attention, the magnitude of the enterprise is apparent. The educational and industrial possibilities of the Koreshan work in the South invite attention from competent educators and financiers. The vanguard of progress sets toward the equator.

"Thy mercies are new every morning and fresh every evening!" The Psalmist was overwhelmed by the contemplation of the character of the Lord. He saw the great astronomical week divided by seven specific manifestations of the divine presence in visible and tangible form. Each succeeding Messiah represents a different quality of mercy. What is mercy? It is commonly interpreted as a degree of pity or of favor gratuitously bestowed. This view is held in subservience to the popular doctrine of faith without works. It is, therefore, surprising to many to find that mercy refers directly to commerce—that it comes from the classic term for merchandise, and the notion involved is that of exchange of goods. Each representative of the humanity of Deity is the medium whereby exchange of truth and life between interior and exterior spheres is effected. The Lord comes as a merchantman. He does not give away the commodities of heaven. Their price must be paid in full. Yea, let a man sell all that he hath if he would buy the pearl of great price.

The Koreshan chronology agrees with the Hebrew. According to this system time is reckoned on the decimal principle. The Koreshan year begins October 18, the date of birth of the FOUNDER OF KORESHANITY. The ordinary method of computing time begins with the unit instead of zero. Hence a person who is sixty years old is said to enter upon his sixty-first year. When his sixty-first birthday arrives he begins his sixty-second year, and so on. By the Koreshan method, he begins to live his sixtieth year dating from that anniversary, and he does not complete it until the sixty-first birthday arrives. A child is not in his first year until he has celebrated one anniversary of his natal day. Previous to this he has lived only a fraction of a year, zero with reference to the full unit. When his tenth anniversary comes, he has only lived nine full years. This method of dividing time is in correspondence with the ancient tithing system.

One of our exchanges cites the following proposal, evidently made seriously, not at all as a practical joke. It seems that an eminent bacteriologist after years of study and experiment has succeeded in discovering and propagating what he has named the "master microbe," a monster so fierce and voracious that it will at once despatch all lesser varieties of its own species. It is said the man of science proposes to inoculate every child at birth with the master microbe. That the microbe is a scavenger not inimical to health, but having a definite function to perform in the economy of the animal system is a fact that Koreshan Science has repeatedly maintained. The germ theory evidently reaches its ultimatum in this scheme to institute a kind of microbe trust in the human system and secure safety by allowing the greater to swallow up all the smaller corporations.

The remedy for the bite of the fiery flying serpents in the wilderness was to gaze upon the brazen symbol of divine wisdom. The devastation of truth and good in the Christian church now, represents the wilderness state and the heresy of salvation by faith in the blood of Christ without performing the works of the law, is the plague of serpents that prey upon its members. The brazen serpent that is lifted up for healing is the unity of truth and good in the Personality who proclaims the true doctrine of the Humanity of Deity and the necessity for works of righteousness as precursory to that unity.

In order to clearly distinguish between the called and the chosen, let the student remember that God's chosen people are limited to the Sons of God, 144,000 in number, who constitute the bride and bridegroom. The called are those outside the supreme order who come into the marriage supper as invited guests to partake of the bounties richly spread. Having only this share in the wedding feast now, in another age they will come into conjunctive unity in their turn. Then, being wedded indissolubly to the Lord, they are dispensers to many from the tables again spread.

Personal acceptance of Koreshanity involves two revelations. The first is a revelation of God; this is fraught with joy and love. The second is a revelation of self; this is fraught with fear and pain.

To what shall the beauty of holiness be compared and whereunto may it be likened? It is like some snow-crowned peak rising above the clouds, bathed in the bright celestial rays.

Brass is an amalgam of different metals and may well represent the perfection of character resulting from faith shown by works, ultimating in unity with the Lord.

He who is the beginning of the creation of God must be the inceptive point of art and science.

Variety in unity is the expression of beauty.

LUCIE PAGE BORDEN.

The Mission of the True Prophet.

EDITOR FLAMING SWORD:—I herewith take the liberty of intruding upon your time and space again, and imposing upon your patience and forbearance in requesting you to answer the questions herewith asked: (1) KORESH claims to foretell great events that are to take place in the near future. Why should he not correctly foresee minor ones? Is it impossible for him to foretell such events as President McKinley's assassination, how the Chinese war would end, or, in fact, any of the important world events that have recently transpired? When the Chinese war was first inaugurated, KORESH wrote several articles in regard to the situation, giving his opinion of what might result therefrom. Indeed, he seemed to be sure that it was the beginning of the end; but the "haythen Chinees" did not assume an offensive warfare, and now the troubled waters have smoothed down again and the world wags on in the same old way.

(2) I have been trying to figure out how it is that a man claiming the power and wisdom that KORESH does, must needs let any one of his stanchest adherents suffer sickness and pain for a number of weeks. The healing of bodily sickness, even of the worst kind, seems to me a very small thing in comparison to the wonders to be performed when he passes "to his fathers." If KORESH has no more control over mere physical ailments than any other M. D., how can I believe that he will accomplish the greater task of conquering death?

(3) By the way, what means do you employ in the treatment of physical and mental disease? These questions are not asked in a spirit of malice or irreverence, but because I desire an explanation of what at present looks to me like inconsistency.—W. B., Orange, Texas.

(1) Every true prophet has his specific mission, for which he is sent and ordained. The character of this mission corresponds to the need of the world at any given epoch. He will make everything subservient to the accomplishment of his great commission. He will set before the world what is necessary to be known, and events will prove the veracity of his utterances. The mission of the Messenger of the Covenant is to proclaim truth in ultimates,—to teach the science of natural things, and the laws that govern the acquisition of immortal life in the body. He enunciates principles which have a specific as well as a general application. In connection with the declaration of law, he may see fit to show definitely what will transpire in a certain quarter, or he may simply make a general statement to the effect that certain events in consonance with the operation of these principles are in order. He may not know in detail, or he may not see fit to say how much will come to pass. He speaks from one point of view; the world speaks from another. His conceptions are magnificent in grandeur and scope, for he stands in the midst of the radiant beams of divine truth. His language embraces the cycles of eternity, and his eye pierces past and future. The world is swift to say that his predictions come to naught, but the world is near-sighted and impatient. It cannot grasp the intricate relationships existing between things widely remote in time and space. An apparent contradiction sometimes follows immediately upon prophecy to be fulfilled in an absolute sense at a later period. The hearer usually misconceives the whole subject, because his mind has not amplified to embrace it in all its bearings. Fortune telling does not belong to prophecy. Wisdom must discriminate between them. Who shall say that the Chinese war was not the beginning of the end? Who shall say how near that end may be, or trace the import of the train of events set in motion by a disturbance apparently slight?

(2) The healing of the physical body is indeed so small a thing in comparison with the attainment of immortal life that it constitutes no proof of power and ability in the Messenger of the Covenant. There are healers galore whose psychic and pneumatic energies are directed to the restoration of suffering mortals from sickness. But their patients only fall from one disease into another, dying at last as all men who remain upon the plane of sensual generation must die. The Scriptures distinctly teach that the various manifestations of error in the last days will be characterized by the ability to work wonders calculated to deceive the indiscriminating. KORESH has set before him the supreme object of healing the world through "the destruction of iniquity and all the concomitants of sin." Those of his disciples who are able to make an application of the principles of polarization and substitution which he inculcates, experience commensurate relief. Any given case of illness presents factors peculiar to itself. Every human being is to be saved in his order. God himself cannot transcend laws which are the expression of his own nature. He cannot force a person who belongs in one category into another. KORESH claims to understand the interaction of forces between patient and healer, requisite to restoration from disease. Some remarkable cures have been wrought through his agency, where recovery was in the order of law; but his mission is distinctly to proclaim the science of immortal life which he is prepared to demonstrate.

(3) The treatment of disease in the Koreshan body is subject to the patient's choice. He is given the fullest latitude. If he desires material remedies, they are provided, with the best medical attention from regularly trained and licensed physicians. Where he prefers to rely upon spiritual aid, he is advised that scientific mental healing depends in all cases upon his own ability to put himself into such an attitude that he may benefit from the influx of the communistic body. The writings of the FOUNDER of Koreshanity contain an exposition of mental healing as related to specific brain centers that is clear, succinct, and scientific. The whole subject is treated in a masterly way from an entirely original point of view.

Great Plumb-Line Experiments. Silent and Startling Testimony Concerning the Earth's Concavity.

Plumb-lines 4,250 Feet Long Hang Farther
Apart at Bottom of Tamarack Mine than at the Top.

At the Tamarack mine there has recently been conducted an experiment of the deepest interest to the engineering world. In the test made there was nothing new in principle, but the actual facts are such as to make it unique. In fact, it stands alone as an undertaking in mining engineering that may lead to certain new conclusions as to the laws of gravitation. Though to the mining engineer the result was not just what had been expected, discoveries were made that to the scientific world in general may prove of value. A plumb-line dropped a distance of 4,250 feet is certainly something unusual, and a pendulum swinging to and fro 4,250 feet from the stationary point is out of the ordinary.

From the new No. 5 shaft, the deepest perpendicular shaft in the world, it was desired to cross-cut a distance of 800 feet at the twenty-ninth level, or 4,250 feet from the surface, over the lode. Already from the twenty-ninth level of No. 2 shaft, which is 3,220 feet at the surface from No. 5, there was a cross-cut of 2,200 feet to the lode and a drift on the lode, from this cross cut, 460 feet in length. In order to do this, it was necessary to give the men working away from No. 2 shaft the proper direction. Already they had at the mine office a survey, from which it would have been possible to have begun work, but it was desired to verify that. It was made some years ago, and the engineers thought that the opportunity of satisfying themselves as to its accuracy was at hand. They therefore began their preparations, and the dropping of the plumb-line was the first step.

Preparation for the Experiments.

The idea was to drop two plumb lines down the shaft to the twenty-ninth level, then to take observations both on the surface and down in the mine, using the same data. After this had been done at the new shaft, it would then be necessary to repeat the operation at the old shaft, when it would be possible for the engineers to give the miners working away from the old shaft and toward the new one the proper directions to make them meet the men working away from the new shaft and toward the old one. The idea was a simple one, and one that is known to all mining men. It was realized that an unusual line in length was to be experimented with, and so the engineers began to make tests in order to settle upon what sort of a line should be used. No. 24 piano wire was finally settled upon, but thorough tests were made before the real work was begun. The wire selected was of steel and possessed a tensile strength of 350,000 pounds to the square inch. A piece thirty feet long was taken for the test. It was suspended and weights gradually added until it parted after 154 pounds had been fastened to it. This was quite satisfactory to the engineers, and the preparations for dropping two lines of No. 24 wire down the shaft a distance of 4,250 feet went on.

A small two-cylinder hoisting engine, operated by compressed air, was placed at the mouth of the shaft, which is a five-compartment affair, measuring 29.2x8.10 feet. The engine was provided with loose running drums with grooves turned in the wooden lagging for the wire to be wound upon. Pulleys were placed over the shaft, and the wires were lowered after weights had been placed upon them after the manner of lowering any sort of a line.

Method of Dropping the Plumbs.

It was necessary, of course, that each wire have something attached to it to carry it down. It was not thought best, however, that common weights be used, as it was feared they would in some manner get caught in the timbering and ruin the whole experiment. Two balloons were therefore constructed. They were each ten feet long and built entirely of wood, weighing twenty pounds. They were two and one half feet in diameter at the center, tapering to a point at either end, and were made of slats so that a lantern hung in the center cast its light about and the progress of the balloons could be watched from above and from below. Thus equipped, the lines were dropped. In just half an hour the 4,250 feet had been reeled off and things were about ready for the actual test. Absolutely no difficulty was experienced in dropping the lines; they went down without interference from anything, and perhaps the most difficult part of the experiment was the most easily accomplished.

It was now desired to get the lines as far apart at the surface as possible, so eight-pound plumb-bobs were substituted for the balloons. It was feared to lower the lines too near the timbering, for it was not desired to have the balloons come into contact with anything on the way down; for this reason the pulleys over which the wires ran at the surface were not placed as far apart as was possible. With the balloons out of the way, the distance between the lines at the surface was increased to 17.58 feet. When this had been done, fifty-pound cast-iron bobs were substituted for the eight-pound ones, and the wires stretched a distance of fifteen feet. They were cut to the proper length, and then the bobs were immersed in pails of engine oil in order to kill all the vibration possible. Here something unlooked for happened; the wires shortened up twenty-five inches because of the buoyancy of the oil.

Startling Downward Divergence of Plumb-Lines.

President F. W. McNair, of the Michigan College of Mines, was present and he next conducted an experiment with one of the lines as a pendulum. The bob was drawn aside one foot and fastened with a thread. He then set his instruments, and the thread was burned. The great pendulum swung back and forth, but again great surprise resulted. In twenty minutes the bob came almost to a standstill, which was something the observers were not prepared for. It was, however, explained by the fact that water was continually dropping down the shaft and evidently exerted a restraining influence. Thirty-six hours from the time the work was begun, the engineers had finished and the lines had been drawn back to the surface. It required half an hour for the engine to hoist the wires. The balloons were replaced, and the two lines were taken to the surface with no difficulty.

At the other shaft the same phenomena were noticed, and with very little change except that the divergence of the lines was even greater. Lead bobs instead of cast iron were used, but no change resulted, as there was a divergence of one tenth of a foot the distance between the wires at the surface being 12.6 feet, and down in the mine 12.7. Several explanations have been offered for the fact that the wires supposed to hang parallel to each other were farther apart 4,250 feet below the surface than they were at the surface, but no one has suggested anything that seems to cover the question. It seems to be the general opinion that attraction or repulsion somewhere accounts for the phenomenon, but where it is and why it should be no one knows. Were there no disturbing forces at work there should be a slight convergence—Special Correspondence to the Milwaukee Sentinel, from Calumet, Mich.

So Called Lost Arts.

Striking Extracts from a Lecture by Wendell Phillips.

The most popular lecture ever delivered by Wendell Phillips was on the lost arts. It was one of the first of his lectures, he having delivered it in 1838. So great was its popularity that he gave it thereafter for thirty-five years, or until his voice failed him. It was the only one of his lectures that he did not commit to writing and he was constantly adding new matter to it, or shifting the old in sharp contrast with some occurrence of the day. At last it was taken down by a stenographer, unknown to him, and written out as it now stands in his published works. We select the following notable extracts:

"Taking the metals, the Bible in its first chapters shows that man first conquered metals there in Asia, and on that spot today he can work more wonders with those metals than we can.

"One of the surprises that the European artists received when the English plundered the summer palace of the King of China, was the curiously wrought metal vessels of every kind, far exceeding all the boasted skill of the workmen of Europe.

"Mr. Colton, of the Boston Journal, the first week he landed in Asia found that his chronometer was out of order, because the steel of the works had become rusted. The London Medical and Surgical Journal advises surgeons not to venture to carry any lancets to Calcutta—to have them gilded, because English steel could not bear the atmosphere of India. Yet the Damascus blades of the crusaders were not gilded, and they are as perfect as they were eight centuries ago. There was one at the London exhibition, the point of which could be made to touch the hilt and which could be put into a scabbard like a corkscrew and bent every way without breaking, like an American politician. Now, the wonder of this is that perfect steel is the marvel of science. If a London chronometer-maker wants the best steel to use in his chronometer he does not send to Sheffield, the center of all such science, but to the Punjab, the empire of the seven rivers, where there is no science at all. The first needle ever made in England was made in the time of Henry III, and made by a Negro, and when he died the art died with him. Some of the first travelers in Africa stated that they found a tribe in the interior who gave them better razors than they had. The best steel is the triumph of metallurgy, and metallurgy is the glory of chemistry.

"In Boston the Pelham hotel, weighing 50,000 tons, was moved fourteen feet, and they were very proud of it, and since then they moved a whole block of houses twenty-three feet. But there is a book telling how Domenico Fontana of the sixteenth century set up the Egyptian obelisk at Rome on end, in the papacy of Sixtus V. Wonderful! Yet the Egyptians quarried that stone and carried it 150 miles and the Romans brought it 750 miles more and never said a word about it. Mr. Batterson, of Hartford, walking with Brunel, the architect of the Thames tunnel in Egypt, asked him what he thought of the mechanical power of the Egyptians, and he said: 'There is Pom-pey's pillar; it is 100 feet high, and the capital weighs 2,000 pounds. It is something of a feat to hang 2,000 pounds at that height in the air, and the few men that can do it had better discuss Egyptian mechanics.'

"Take canals. The Suez canal absorbs half its receipts in cleaning out the sand which fills it continually and it is not yet known whether it is a pecuniary success. The ancients built a canal at right angles to ours because they knew it would not fill up if built in that direction and they knew such a one as ours would. There were magnificent canals in the land of the Jews, with perfectly arranged gates and sluices. We have only just begun to understand ventilation properly for our homes, yet experiments at the pyramids in Egypt show that they were ventilated in the most perfect and scientific manner."

The wonderful canals in New Mexico and Arizona, built nobody can tell how many centuries ago and which are to this day in a state of astonishing preservation, had not been discovered when Wendell Phillips was before the public as a lecturer. Had he known of them he would have alluded to them for illustration with great effect.

"The railroad dates back to Egypt. Arago has claimed that they had a knowledge of steam. A painting has been discovered of a ship full of machinery and a French engineer said that the arrangement of this machinery could only be accounted for by supposing the motive power to have been steam. Bramah acknowledges that he took the idea of his celebrated lock from an ancient Egyptian pattern. De Tocqueville says there was no social question that was not discussed to rags in Egypt.

"Well," say you, 'Franklin invented the lightning rod.' I have no doubt he did, but years before his invention and before muskets were invented, the old soldiers on guard on the towers used Franklin's invention to keep guard with it, and if a spark passed between them and the spearhead, they ran and bore the warning of the state and condition of affairs. After that you will admit that Benjamin Franklin was not the only one that knew of the presence of electricity and the advantages derived from its use. Solomon's Temple, you will find, was situated on an exposed point of the hill. The temple was so lofty that it was often in peril and was guarded by a system exactly like that of Benjamin Franklin."

On the subject of glass in the ancient world, Mr. Phillips says: "I have heard that nothing had been observed in ancient times which could be called by the name of glass—that there had been merely attempts to imitate it. I thought they had proved the proposition; they certainly had elaborated it. In Pompeii, a dozen miles south of Naples, which was covered with ashes by Vesuvius 1,800 years ago, they broke into a room full of glass; there was ground glass, window-glass, cut glass, and colored glass of every variety. It was undoubtedly a glassmaker's factory. So the lie and the refutation came face to face. It was like a pamphlet printed in London in 1836, by Dr. Lardner, which proved that a steamboat could not cross the ocean, and the book came to this country in the first steamboat that came across the Atlantic."

It was an omission, apparently, that he had so little to say on the subject of glass. The coloring of glass as the ancients practiced the art was among the lost arts. The glorious church windows of the first Christian centuries were only imitated in later centuries by painting upon the surface of the glass. But, since the death of Wendell Phillips, this lost art has been found. It was found by an American, the artist Le Farge, and now this country is making decorative and memorial windows that equal any that are in the ancient cathedrals. The colors are in the glass.

The Central Truth of the Covenant.

The great central truth upon which are founded the hopes of the world, is the unity of God and man. The perfection of the covenant is consummated when the intellect is so amplified and exalted as to comprehend the great truth that God and man are one; and this truth is manifest when God and man are made one in the perfect or everlasting covenant. He who looks for the coming of the Lord and desires his appearing, and cannot behold through an illumined perception the humanity of God, looks yet in vain; he is still an infant in his swaddling cloth.

The Hebrew word which is rendered covenant is berith or beriyth, and has direct reference to the mutilation of sacrificial victims on concluding agreements or compacts. The root word is bara, to cut up or divide, especially in preparation for food. The word literally means to eat together, and as having reference to a covenant between God and man, signifies a correlated (reciprocal) appropriation of the two natures, that the two become absolutely no more two, but one God-man—Theo anthropos. In the ratification of the first covenant or eating together, God and man were one in Jesus; and he being the sign of the first covenant, was the Bread from heaven. When His body was divided in his translation and appropriated by his Disciples, the covenant was effected—that is, the eating or appropriation was performed. That was not the perfect covenant or conjunction, because it did not save the body of the church. When the body is redeemed, then will be consummated the perfect covenant, eating, or appropriation, and God will be manifest in his outward structure, his Angel, in whom he resides as his everlasting habitation.—HERALD OF THE COVENANT, May, 1879.

Wonders of the Spider.

Marvelous Spinnerets which Emit Thousands of Microscopic Films of the Gossamer Threads.

One of the most interesting features in the economy of spiders is their power of emitting slender threads of a silk like substance called gossamer, with which most of them construct mesh-like nets, and a few long, dangling cables, by which they are buoyed through the air with nearly as much facility as though they had been furnished with wings. The apparatus provided by Nature for elaborating and emitting this gossamer is a beautiful species of mechanism. Within the animal there are several little bags or vesicles of a gummy matter; and these vesicles are connected with a circular orifice situated at the abdomen. Within this orifice are five little teats or spinnerets, through which the gossamer is drawn. It must not be concluded, however, that there is only one film of gossamer produced by each spinneret; the fact is, these teats are studded with thousands of minute tubes too small for the naked eye to perceive, and each of these emits a thread of inconceivable fineness. These minute tubes are known as spinnerules, and the films which proceed from them unite like so many strands of a rope to form the thread of gossamer by which a spider suspends itself.

The finest thread which human mechanism can produce is like a ship's cable compared with the delicate films which flow from the spinnerules of the largest spider. The films are all distinctly separate on coming from the spinneret, but unite, not by any twisting process, but merely by their own glutinous or gummy nature. Thus the spinning apparatus of the disdained spider, when viewed by the eye of science, becomes one of the most wonderful pieces of animated mechanism known to man. The animal has great command over this apparatus, and can apply it at will as long as the receptacles within are replenished with the gummy fluid; but as soon as this gum is exhausted, all its efforts to spin are fruitless, and it must wait till Nature, by her inscrutable chemistry, has secreted it from the food which is devoured.—Chamber's Journal.

Two Kinds of Thieves.

The Punishment of Robbers on a Small Scale, and the Social Prestige of Men who Steal Millions.

You say, the law makes war upon thieves and robbers. But what is a thief or a robber? Persons who claim the right to live without being useful, at the expense of society, you will answer. But cast a glance over your society and you will find that it is swarming with capitalist thieves of all kinds, and that, far from punishing them, your laws are made for the express purpose of protecting them. Society punishes laziness in the poor—the tramp is sent to the house of correction, the workman who quits work without having some means starves with his family. But the case is different with the capitalist class. For the rich, laziness is held up as an ideal.

Our present economic system awards the pleasure of doing nothing to those who can succeed, by no matter what means, in living well without being useful. You punish as a thief the unfortunate who, having no work, risks imprisonment to get hold of a piece of bread to satisfy his hunger; but you take off your hat and bow to the millionaire monopolist who, by the help of his capital, has cornered at a bargain some of the things necessary for the consumption of all, that he may sell them back at an enormous profit.

You punish the criminal who victimizes another to gratify his own taste for idleness and debauchery, but who inculcated in him this taste for idleness and debauchery, if not your society? You punish the man who operates on a small scale, but you support a whole army over sea at the Philippines, to operate on a large scale against a people unable to defend itself. And as for the exploiters who not only shorten the lives of working people by overwork, but who exhaust entire generations and cripple others yet unborn—for such exploiters you have the very highest respect and good will, and if need be you put at their service all the forces of your society—the school, the church, the courts, and the military power. Your justice cannot find rigors enough for the thieves in rags, but it protects those who operate upon a whole class or an entire nation!—Social Democratic Herald.

American Periodicals.

Over 21,000 Papers Published in the United States; Table of Growth by Decades.

That the United States is the greatest nation of newspaper and periodical readers in the world is generally conceded. Some interesting facts and figures corroborative of this statement are brought out by Ralph McKenzie in a New York Evening Post interview at the close of a three years' study of the subject, whose complete results are to appear in a history of American journalism. Mr. McKenzie is attached to the periodical department of the Congressional library, and the work, which will contain, besides the historical sketch, a complete compilation of the names and founders of American newspapers, is being published by the librarian.

Mr. McKenzie presents the following table showing the growth of periodicals throughout the nation by decades:

	1900.	1890.	1880.	1870.	1860.	1850.
Daily.....	2,200	1,731	971	574	387	254

Total.....	21,325	17,616	11,384	5,871	4,051	2,525

Mr. McKenzie found the comparison with Europe to be one of the most interesting features of his work. He says that as early as 1830 the United States, with a population of less than 13,000,000, published more periodicals, newspapers included, than all the countries of Europe together; that 50 years later the excess amounted to 600, and that we are still far in the lead. But many of our immigrants cling to their own language, and there is a large showing of American periodicals in foreign tongues. The Italians have 35, the Norwegians 67, the Poles 39, the Swedes 64, the Germans 651, and the French 49.—Grand Rapids Chronicle.

Reaching the End of Old Dispensation.

We have now reached an epoch in the course of events that marks the end of one duration or age. In the universal or general aspect, we have come to the extremity or limitation of the arterial branches of the grand sensual man, to the point where the mutations must take place that are essential to the supply of the interior or functional being, with the forces generated in the changes which convert the blood cells of the universal man to soul-force, to material tissue, and to venous blood. The Flaming Sword's Exchanges.

Leslie's Monthly for November. The publishers of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly are celebrating the twenty-fifth birthday of their magazine by issuing an extraordinarily large and handsome number. The magazine, which consists of 168 pages, is profusely illustrated, no single page being left without a decoration of some kind, while scattered through the issue are several handsome full pages in colors. The text has a number of really notable features: an authoritative article by Nansen, on the half dozen expeditions now racing for the poles, the opening chapters of a new novel by Maurice Hewlett, the first considerable work he has done since the publication of "Richard Yea and Nay," a new animal story by Charles G. D. Roberts, author of "In the Heart of the Ancient Wood," "How Tammany Wins," written curiously enough, by an outspoken spoilsman, "The Great Automobile Race from Paris to Berlin," and "The American Diary of a Japanese Girl," a wonderfully naive and spontaneous narrative which makes a brand new departure in Magazine literature. The number is sold at the usual price of ten cents.

The Arena.—This magazine always discusses leading questions of the day, and touches upon the great vital issues which concern all men everywhere. A symposium on The Gospel of Destruction, opens the November issue. Dr. Felix L. Oswald writes upon its Evolutionary Aspects, and Mrs. E. H. Roberts, the wife of a Congregationalist minister, presents her conception of The Cure for Anarchy. The Arena has discarded fiction for some time, but this month it gives a Negro character sketch by Will Allen Dromgoole, whose talents in this direction are well known. The Ethics of the Land Question and The Failure of Freedom, are among the other subjects treated. Alliance Publishing Co., 569 Fifth Avenue, New York. 25 cents a copy. $2.50 a year.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle.—October 26 marked the sixtieth anniversary of this enterprising sheet. The Eagle celebrated its birthday by presenting its friends and subscribers with an interesting monograph of its progress. When the first number was published, John Tyler, of Virginia, was President. Abraham Lincoln was studying law, while Grover Cleveland was only four years old. The founder of the paper was Isaac Van Anden, a printer. He was a young man without capital, but to his thrift and perseverance are due the evolution and success of this great daily.

Sheet Music.—We have received from the Groom Music Company, Steinway Hall, Chicago, several professional copies of their late music. This company is putting out some good pieces, both vocal and instrumental, and will gladly examine authors' manuscripts with a view to their publication. It sets song words and poems to music on a basis that pays a good profit to the author.

Bureau of Equitable Commerce, of the Koreshan Unity.

Under the Koreshan System of Co-operation, the cost of production is reduced to the minimum; and we offer to our friends more goods and more work for a given sum of money than can be obtained in the competitive world. We have established four new departments to our work. Orders promptly filled by mail or express. Correspondence and patronage solicited.

Our High-Grade, Hand-Finished Razor Strops.

A good strop is indispensable to one that uses a razor. A good razor is of little use unless it has a fine edge, and that cannot be obtained in any other way than with a good strop and a knowledge of how to use the same and keep it in condition. A strop in poor shape means a razor in poor condition. Full directions with every strop.

We manufacture our celebrated High-grade Razor Strops, the best strops manufactured. If you shave, you need one; you would be delighted with one of these. The prices are low considering the superior quality of the goods and workmanship. Single, horse-hide, 50c. Double swing shell and canvas, several grades from 75c to $1.25. Extra fine material and finish, .150. Packed in neat box. Also strops at 10c, 25c., and 40c.—send 8c. for postage on orders less than 50c. Mail orders a specialty.

Jewelry Department.

Superintended by a practical jeweler and watchmaker. Clocks, watches, and jewelry at wholesale prices. Example: Serviceable American watch, good timekeeper, 3.50. Improved alarm clock, rotary hammer, $1.00; postpaid. Watch repairing a specialty. Watches repaired and returned in good condition, by mail, for 1.00. Extra charge only in case of serious breakage. All work guaranteed.

Department of Electricity.

This department is in charge of a practical electrician. Orders filled for all kinds of electrical supplies: Telephones, telegraph instruments, doorbells, switches, novelties, learners' instruments, batteries, dynamos, lamps of all voltages, amperemeters, wires of all sizes, batteries and static machines for medical purposes, etc. All kinds of electrical work done. Medical batteries repaired; magnets and armatures rewound. All work guaranteed. Prices retail and wholesale, given on application. Watch for "our prices" in comparison with the regular prices on articles.

A good family Medical Battery is very useful. We will send you a first-class Battery, consisting of 1 dry battery; 1 sponge; 1 foot-plate; and electrodes, for only $7.50. Price, by others, $10.00.

Musical Department.

Supplies all kinds of musical merchandise, at inside prices—for less than can be obtained from your local dealer. Examples: Fine Mandolin or Guitar strings, 25 cents per set; fine Violin strings, 50 cents per set. Mandolins and Guitars made to order. First-class repairing—all instruments. Mail orders a specialty.

A new book—just off the press—exposing a gigantic and dangerous fraud, by a forceful writer, who has spent several years collecting facts relative to the character and consequences of compulsory vaccination. The book is a startling revelation of what vaccination is and what it does; a warning against legalized malpractice by members of the medical profession.

Thomas Morgan,

This Unique Literature is specially adapted to meet the demands of the truth-seeker and to satisfy the commendable curiosity of the modern mind.

HOLLOW GLOBE.

The great battles of the impending Scientific Revolution are being fought over the shape of the Earth. The Earth is the Astronomical battle-ground: its surface is tangible and is susceptible of test. The concavity of the Earth, in confirmation of the startling Discovery by KORESH, 80 years ago, has been demonstrated by the Latest Geodetic Surveys!

You will want to learn all about such a New World, the great Discovery and the startling facts of Geodetic Surveys and Observations. We have published a Book which tells the story in plain words:

These novel Wraps are becoming very popular, and the demand for them still continues. They are made of Shetland floss, hand-crocheted by our own people, and are light, airy, and beautiful.

The Wraps are circular in form and are suitable for both shoulder and head-wear. When folded through the center and thrown around the shoulders, the upper half can be turned up over the head and so arranged as to form a most graceful drapery, becoming to any face. Made in all colors. The purling or edge may be made of the same color as the body of Wrap, or any other shade to harmonize, as the taste suggests. The silk-edged ones are very popular.

Twentieth Century Weekly Magazine of Universology

VOLUME [XV.]

CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 15 1901. A. K. 62.

NUMBER 52.

THE CELLULAR COSMOGONY

Founded by Koresh (Dr. Cyrus R. Teed),
A. D. 1870.

THE EARTH is a stationary Concave Cell, about 8,000 miles in diameter, with people, Sun, Moon, Planets, and Stars on the inside, the whole constituting the only physical Universe in existence. It is an Alchemico-Organic Structure, a Gigantic Electro-Magnetic Battery, the Central Sun being the Positive Pole, and the Earth constituting the Negative Elements of the Cell. The Universe involves the functions of its own 'perpetuity, and is Eternal. All Life is Cellular—within the cell: we inhabit the Earth. KORESHAN COSMOGONY comports with all facts of Astronomical, Geographical, Geological, and Alchemical research, and International Geodetic Survey, Experimentation and Navigation. It interprets all Ancient Legends, Mythologies, and Bibles, and furnishes the basis of all Reason and Science, the premise of the true Theology, and the pattern of the new order of Human Society.
